Ver. 48. Solomon made all the vessels] He made them all new, except the ark, the mercy-seat, and the cherubims annexed to it.

The altar of gold,] That is, the altar of incense, which stood in the holy place before the oracle.

The table of gold, whereupon the shewbread was,] That is, all the table-work : there being no less than ten (2 Chron. iv. 7, 8). Upon one of which, in all probability, which was more noble than the rest, the shewbread was placed. Unless we suppose the table which Moses made was preserved for that use ; and 49 And the candlesticks of pure gold, five on the right side, and five on the left, before the oracle, with the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs of gold.

50 And the bowls, and the snuffers, and the basons, and the spoons, and the censers of pure gold; and the hinges of gold, both for the doors of the inner house, the most holy place, and for the doors of the house, to wit, of the temple.

51 So was ended all the work that king Solomon made for the house of the Lord. And Solomon brought in the things which David his father had dedicated; even the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, did he put among the treasures of the house of the Lord.

Solomon added the rest for the greater ornament of the place. And (as Josephus writes), the gold and silver basons were set upon them; together with a vast number of phials.

Ver. 49. The candlesticks of pure gold.] He made ten candlesticks, instead of one which was in the tabernacle of Moses: because the place was more capacious; and the vessels were not to be removed from place to place as they were before: and therefore there might well be more of them.

The flowers.] Which were wrought upon the candlesticks.

The lamps, and the tongs of gold.] Wherewith to take coals from the altar of burnt-offering.

Ver. 50. The bowls, and the snuffers, and the basons, and the spoons, and the censers.] The use of these is visible. The first being to keep oil for the lamps; the next to trim them: the basons (which were a hundred, as we learn from the book of Chronicles) were to receive the water of sprinkling, and the blood of the sacrifices which were sometimes brought into the most holy place: the spoons served to take up the oil: the censers were for offering incense; though some translate this word dish-pans, wherein the incense was kept. There were other censers of silver, which received the coals from the altar upon all days but the tenth of Tisri (which was the great day of expiation), when the golden censer received them, and by it the most holy place was incensed. On other days it was not employed, but at the altar of incense; where the coals were poured out of the silver censer (which received them from the altar of burnt-offering) into the golden, to burn the incense: as the Talmudists say, both in Codex Joma and Tamid. Where they also say, that the foregoing word capoth, which we translate spoons, signifies a vessel which contained the incense that was to be offered upon the coals in the golden censer. See Braunius, in his Selecta Sacra, lib. ii. cap. 5, where he hath learnedly explained both these words, caph and machtah, which we translate spoons and censers, where he hath demonstrated the latter signifies the instrument that received the coals from the altar of burnt-offering, and the former that which had the incense in it to be poured upon them.

The hinges of gold.] This shows the vast riches of Solomon, and his great piety, which made him spare no cost to beautify the house of God, and the meanest thing belonging to it. Whereby the people, who were much taken with outward splendor, were preserved from idolatry: for they could go nowhere and see a place comparable to this of Solomon; there being then nothing in the whole world like to it for riches and glory.

Ver. 51.] I observed upon vi. 1. that Abarbinel thinks he would use none of the things that were dedicated by his father; but do all at his own cost and charges. Yet others think these words mean no more, but that all the remaining silver and gold, which David left, and was not spent in this work, Solomon would not employ to his own uses; but religiously preserved in the treasury of the temple. Where the altar of burnt-offering, which Moses made, and some other things, which were now of no use (far better and larger being made), were also laid up, as the tabernacle itself was. For the temple being built, there was no further occasion for the tabernacle; and yet it was fit to preserve it as a place that had been holy to the Lord.

CHAPTER VIII.

Ver. 1. Elders of Israel.] That is, the judges in their several cities.

All the heads of the tribes.] Every tribe had one or more principal ruler in it.

The chief of the fathers.] The principal persons of every family in those tribes.

Jerusalem.] Where the house of the Lord was now fixed.

That they might bring up the ark—out of the city of David.] For thither David had brought it from the house of Obed-edom, and made a tabernacle for it (2 Sam. vi. 12, 17), until a fixed house should be prepared for it, which was now built upon a neighboring mountain.

Ver. 2. All the men of Israel.] All the forenamed persons, with their attendants, which, no doubt, were numerous.

At the feast in the month Ethanim, which is the seventh month.] Here the Targum thus paraphrases, "In the month which anciently was called the first month, but now is the seventh;" and called Ethanim, because more sacred solemnities (which were the support and strength of their religion and government) were appointed in this month than in any other. And among the rest the feast of tabernacles; which is here meant, as Kimchi, and Abarbinel, and others think. And upon the occasion of this assembly the Jews observe, in Seder Olam Rabbah, cap. 15, that "the Shechinah doth not dwell but in the congregation."

month Ethanim, which is the seventh month.

3 And all the elders of Israel came, and the priests took up the ark.

4 And they brought up the ark of the LORD, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, even those did the priests and the Levites bring up.

5 And king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel, that were assembled unto him, were with him before the ark, sacrificing sheep and oxen, that could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

6 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims.

Ver. 3. All the elders] All the forementioned great persons were called elders, and are here comprehended under that name.

The priests took up the ark.] The ark had been carried by the priests three times before this: when they went over Jordan; when they encompassed the walls of Jericho; and when David sent it back, when he fled from Absalom (2 Sam. xv. 29, 30). It was the office of the Levites to carry the ark upon their shoulders, except upon special occasions: and now they could not, because it was not lawful for them to enter into the holy place, into which it was to be carried, and then into the most holy. It is said, indeed, 2 Chron. v. 4, "the Levites took it up:" but the meaning is, that they took it up and carried it to the temple, and then the priests took it up (ver. 6), and carried it into the holy place.

Ver. 4. They brought up the ark—and the tabernacle of the congregation.] Together with the ark, they brought up the tabernacle. But the question is, what tabernacle, whether that made by Moses, which was in Gibeon (2 Chron. i. 3), or that made by David, which was at Jerusalem (2 Sam. vi. 17). I think the latter is never called "the tabernacle of the congregation," as the former frequently is. But it may be probably thought that both of them were now carried into the temple and laid up there; to avoid all danger of superstition and idolatry; and that no worship might be performed anywhere, but only at this house of God, which he now dedicated to him.

All the holy vessels] viz. The altar of incense, and the table, and the candlestick, and every thing belonging to them: which remained in the tabernacle, when the ark was removed from it.

Did the priests and the Levites bring up.] The priests brought up the ark; and the Levites carried the tabernacle, and the vessels of the sanctuary.

Ver. 5. All the congregation—were with him before the ark.] When it was brought into the house of God, and settled there; for it is not likely such a multitude of sacrifices as follow could be offered in the way from Mount Zion to the Temple, as some were when David brought it from the house of Obed-edom to Jerusalem (2 Sam. vi. 13).

Could not be—numbered for multitude.] That is, a vast number; which might have been told, but not easily; as was said before of the weight of the brass employed about the vessels of the house of God, vii. 47 (see there). Here is no mention of Solomon's dancing before the ark as David did; for all holy men were not alike moved by God; their tempers and conditions were very different. Solomon was now in a state of great tranquillity, and constant pleasure; but David had been disturbed by the stroke upon Uzzah, 7 For the cherubims spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and the staves thereof above.

8 And they drew out the staves, that the ends of the staves were seen out in the holy place before the oracle, and they were not seen without: and there they are unto this day.

9 There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone, which Moses put there at Horeb, when the LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

10 And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the LORD.

a little before his great transport of joy, at the safe conduct of the ark to Jerusalem.

Ver. 6. The priests brought in the ark—to the most holy place.] Before the glory of the Lord filled the house, the priests were permitted to enter into the oracle: but afterward none but the high-priest might approach so near unto the Divine presence, which dwelt there: and he but once a year.

Even under the wings of the cherubims.] Which Solomon had made. For the cherubims made by Moses were fixed to the mercy-seat, and inseparable from it: and stood together with the ark under these cherubims.

Ver. 7.] For they were very large, stretching forth their wings from one side of the house unto the other (vi. 22, 24. &c.)

Ver. 8. The ends of the staves were seen out in the holy place.] By the holy place is here meant the most holy, where the ark was under the cherubims: which covered both the ark and the staves. But the staves were so drawn out that the ends of them might be seen: whereby the high-priest was directed in the way he should go just before the mercy-seat on the day of expiation; when he went between these two staves to sprinkle the blood before God. See 2 Chron. v. 9. and Buxtorf. in his Arca Fœderis, where he explains both this and the next verse, and gives a large account of drawing out the staves (p. 96, 97.)

They were not seen without: In the sanctuary.

There they are unto this day.] And in this posture.

Ver. 9.] The very same words, in a manner, are repeated, 2 Chron. v. 10. But it is commonly observed that both these places seem to contradict the apostle's words, Heb. ix. 4. For it is said here in these books, that nothing was in the ark save only the two tables of stone; but there, that the pot of manna and Aaron's rod were also in the ark. For so they generally interpret those words ἐν τῇ, "in which," i. e. in the ark, σάκος χρυσοῦ, "the golden pot containing the manna," &c. Many learned men have endeavored to reconcile these places several ways, which Andreas Sennertus hath collected in a treatise on purpose about it. Which might have been spared by this easy observation, that the preposition ἐν doth not always signify in but by: and so the place in the Hebrews is to be rendered, not in which, but by which. Bochartus hath given a great many instances of such use of the particle beth in the Old Testament (Hierozoicon, par. ii. lib. ii. cap. 50). And indeed it is never said there that the pot of manna was laid up in the ark, but "before the Lord and before the testimony" (Exod. xvi. 33, 34); and the same is said of Aaron's rod (Numb. xvii. 4). Which signifies no more than putting them by the ark (see Huetius Demonst. Evang. p. 322).

Ver. 10. When the priests were come out of the holy 11 So that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the LORD had filled the house of the LORD.

12 ¶ Then spake Solomon, the LORD said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

13 I have surely built thee an house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in for ever.

14 And the king turned his face about, and blessed all the congregation of Israel: (and all the congregation of Israel stood;)

15 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, which spake with his mouth unto David my father, and hath with his hand fulfilled it, saying,

16 Since the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build an house, that my name might be therein; but I chose David to be over my people Israel.

17 And it was in the heart of David my father to build an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

18 And the LORD said unto David my father, Whereas it was in thine heart to build an house unto my name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart.

19 Nevertheless thou shalt not build the house; but thy son that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house unto my name.

20 And the LORD hath performed his word that he spake, and I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised, and have built an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

21 And I have set there a place for the ark, place, That is, the oracle, where they had set down the ark.

That the cloud filled the house] In this cloud was the glory of the Lord (ver. 11), which now filled the temple, as it had anciently done the tabernacle, when it was first erected (Exod. xl. 34). Only there the cloud covered the tabernacle without, and the glory of the Lord shined within: but here the house itself was filled with the cloud, out of which the glory of the Lord broke; and after it had filled the whole house, settled in the most holy place.

Ver. 11.] By this it appears that the cloud filled the sanctuary, as well as the most holy place: for in the sanctuary the priests ministered at the altar of incense. And it appears also by the next verse, that, at the first, nothing but a dark cloud filled the house, which was very astonishing: but afterward the glory of the Lord (as I said) broke out, which was more amazing. Inasmuch that Moses himself was not able to enter into the tabernacle of the congregation, when this cloud and glory first appeared (Exod. xl. 35).

Ver. 12. Then spake Solomon.] When he saw the priests come out of the house of God in great consternation, he uttered these words which follow, with his face turned towards the altar, to compose and comfort them. This shows that the cloud filled the house before Solomon prayed; whereas in 2 Chron. vii.

1—3, it appears the Divine glory did not fill it till after he had prayed. Which Abarbinel reconciles with very good reason:—The cloud, in which was the glory of the Lord, or the fire, came into the temple before Solomon prayed: which made him say here, “the Lord dwelleth in thick darkness.” Which he beholding, prayed to God, who gave such a sensible token of his presence there. Now when he had made an end of his prayer, then the fire that was in the cloud broke forth, and consumed the sacrifices on the altar: and the glory of the Lord filled the house, as it is recorded in the book of Chronicles.

The Lord said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.] As much as to say, Be not afraid; but look upon this cloud as a token of God’s presence and protection; and that he owns this for his house where he intends to dwell, according to what he said, Lev. xvi. 2. This cloud is called thick darkness, because it hindered the sight of any other thing that was in the holy place; either the altar, candlestick, or table. Nothing was seen but the glory of the Lord when it broke out, which dazzled their eyes rather than enlightened them. And it is observable, that the better to represent this, the high-priest when he went into the most holy place was to fill it with a cloud of smoke by the incense he offered, which made the place dark (Lev. xvi. 12, 13), that he might not lose his life by the splendor of the Divine glory.

Ver. 13. I have surely built thee an house to dwell in.] He turns his speech from them to God; and expresses his hope that he would be pleased to continue in this house: which he perceived by this glorious cloud he intended to make his habitation.

A settled place] Not like the tabernacle, which was a movable habitation; but a place wherein he hoped he would settle, and never remove from it. From hence the Jews call this Beth-haolam, the eternal house, or the house of ages. Which was not like Gilgal, Shiloh, Nob, and Gibeon (as Abarbinel explains it), which did not last long, though God for some time dwelt there: they not being in the place which the Lord had chosen to place his name there: which was in Mount Moriah.

Ver. 14. The king turned his face about.] From the court of the priests to the court of the congregation, having the altar on his back.

Blessed all the congregation] In that form, perhaps, which God had himself prescribed (Numb. vi. 23, 24, &c.).

All the congregation of Israel stood;] Both out of reverence to God, and respect unto the king.

Ver. 15.] He acknowledges the goodness of God in his gracious promise; and his faithfulness in fulfilling it. Which promise was made by Nathan, unto whom the word of the Lord came about this matter (2 Sam. vii. 4).

Ver. 16. I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build an house.] He had often told them that they should worship him in the place which he should choose; but he never declared his choice of a place till David’s time (2 Sam. vii. 6).

I chose David] See 2 Sam. vii. 8. to whom he showed the place which he would make his dwelling, and where he would be worshipped.

Ver. 17.] This is, as I said before, where God would dwell among them, and be graciously present with them (see 2 Sam. vii. 2).

Ver. 18.] He accepted and commended his good intentions, but would not let him put them in execution. This honor he reserved for his son, as it follows in the next words.

Ver. 19.] See 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13.

Ver. 20.] He concludes, as he began, with a thankful acknowledgment of the faithfulness of God in performing his promise.

Ver. 21. And I have set there a place for the ark.] The token of God’s presence among them.

wherein is the covenant of the LORD, which he made with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt.

22 ¶ And Solomon stood before the altar of the LORD in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven :

23 And he said, LORD God of Israel, there is no God like thee, in heaven above, or on earth beneath, who keepest covenant and mercy with thy servants that walk before thee with all their heart :

24 Who hast kept with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him : thou spakest also with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

25 Therefore now, LORD God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father that thou pro-

When he brought them out of—Egypt. And told them, that by the tenure of this covenant they were to hold the land of Canaan.

Ver. 22. Solomon stood before the altar. Having spoken the foregoing words with his face towards the people, and blessed them ; now he turned about again with his face towards the altar, to make a solemn prayer to God.

In the presence of all the congregation. Being advanced upon a scaffold which he had made, of three cubits high (as we read in 2 Chron. vi. 13), so that all might see and hear him.

Spread forth his hands toward heaven : Which was a solemn posture of prayer among other nations. And it is evident both from that place in the Chronicles, and from ver. 54. of this chapter, that when he had stood awhile with his face towards the altar, he fell down upon his knees, and spread forth his hands towards heaven.

Ver. 23.] He acknowledges the transcendent excellences of the Divine majesty ; and particularly again commemorates his faithfulness to those who serve him sincerely.

Ver. 24.] This relates to that part of God's promise to David, that his son should build him a house (see ver. 15, 16, &c.).

Ver. 25. There shall not fail thee a man in my sight.] He looked upon that as an earnest he would fulfil the other part of his promise to David, which he made at the same time, concerning his kindness to his posterity (2 Sam. vii. 12, 13).

So that thy children take heed to their way.] He speaks like a wise man, who was fully acquainted with the mind of God : whose promise concerning the inheritance of the kingdom he acknowledges depended upon this condition, "if they took heed to their way," &c. ; that is, continued in the faith and worship of God as David did. But if they proved idolaters, then they made themselves unworthy of this privilege to the seed of David (as Abarinel speaks), and lost the inheritance of the kingdom, because they were none of his children. And therefore, after Solomon and Jeroboam also turned away from God and followed idols (as he goes on), God might justly have taken the divided kingdom away from their children. And when all Israel forsook the Lord, and worshipped the gods of the nations round about them, he did forsake their land, and would no longer dwell among them, nor continue the kingdom to them.

misedst him, saying, There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit on the throne of Israel ; so that thy children take heed to their way, that they walk before me as thou hast walked before me.

26 And now, O God of Israel, let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, which thou spakest unto thy servant David my father.

27 But will God indeed dwell on the earth ? behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee ; how much less this house that I have builded ?

28 Yet have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O LORD my God, to hearken unto the cry and to the prayer, which thy servant prayeth, before thee to-day :

29 That thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day, even toward the place of

Ver. 26.] This is not an unnecessary repetition ; but (as Abarinel notes) God, when he spake to David of building the temple by his son, promised two things : first, the stability of his kingdom in his family (2 Sam. vii. 16) ; and secondly, that he would show the greatest kindness and friendship to them ; such as a father doth to his son (ver. 13). Solomon here begs with God in this prayer both these benefits : the first in the foregoing verse, and the other in this.

Ver. 27.] He would not have the people possessed with such gross imaginations as were among the heathens ; who fancied their gods were confined to their temples. No, saith Solomon, the heaven itself, no, not the highest heaven, can comprehend his infinite majesty.

Ver. 28.] But he would have them know that God, who could be confined nowhere, was in a special manner present here, to grant the requests of those who piously made their supplications to him, as he now did, in this place.

Abarinel observes upon ver. 39, that Solomon uses three words in this verse, which in some places signify the very same thing ; but being all used here together, he thinks have distinct meanings. For the word rinnah (which we translate cry), he thinks signifies setting forth with a loud voice the praises of God : concerning which their wise men in Beracoth say, "Let a man first commemorate the praises of God, and then let him pray." Then the word tephillah (which we translate prayer), he thinks, signifies men's judging and condemning themselves before God for their offences : confessing they are unworthy to have their petitions granted. And the other word tehinah (supplication we translate it) imports men's petitions to God for what they want, and deprecating his displeasure, &c.

Ver. 29. That thine eyes may be open toward this house.] He prays that God would have a gracious respect unto all that came to make their petitions there. For as, in the former verse (as Abarinel observes), he prays God would hear his own petitions : so in this, that he would hear all other pious worshippers.

Hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make toward this place.] He beseeches God to hear him, if he looked towards this place in his prayer ; though he was not present at the temple to prefer his petition. For thus pious men were wont to direct their prayer, when they were far distant from it ; nay, when the temple was demolished (Dan. vi. 10). And when they were at the temple, they could only look towards the most holy place : for the people which thou hast said, My name shall be there : that thou mayest hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make toward this place.

30 And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray toward this place : and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place : and when thou hearest, forgive.

31 ¶ If any man trespass against his neighbour, and an oath be laid upon him to cause him to swear, and the oath come before thine altar in this house :

32 Then hear thou in heaven, and do, and judge thy servants, condemning the wicked, to bring his way upon his head ; and justifying the righteous, to give him according to his righteousness.

33 ¶ When thy people Israel be smitten down before the enemy, because they have sinned against thee, and shall turn again to thee, and confess thy name, and pray, and make supplication unto thee in this house :

came no nearer than into the outward court of the temple, and the priests no further than to the next court to it. Save only when they went to order the lamps, and burn incense morning and evening, and renew the shew-bread : otherwise they also stood and officiated at a distance in the court appointed for them, called the court of the priests. So both people and priests stood in their several courts, and worshipped with their faces towards the temple, where the ark and mercy-seat were. From whence came the expression of worshipping the Lord towards his holy temple : that is, towards the place where the mercy-seat was. And also the expression of worshipping towards his footstool : for if the glory of the Lord sat upon the cherubims, under which the ark stood, then it was his footstool (see Ps. xcix. 5. cxxxviii. 2).

Ver. 30. And of thy people Israel.] Here, as the same Abarnahel observes, he desires, whether there was one or many that prayed, he would hear them.

Hear thou in heaven.] He directs the people's mind up to heaven, the place where he dwells in the highest majesty and glory : of which the bright cloud in the temple was a token and resemblance.

When thou hearest, forgive.] For sins unpardoned would hinder his blessing from descending on them ; and therefore, in the first place, he implores forgiveness of them.

Ver. 31. If any man trespass—and an oath be laid upon him.] This seems to relate to such as were accused of denying that which was said to be deposited with them by their neighbour. Who were to purge themselves by an oath, there being no witness to convince them.

The oath come before thine altar.] It was the custom of all nations to touch the altar when they made a solemn oath : calling God, that is, to witness the truth of what they said, and to punish them if they did not speak the truth.

Ver. 32.] He desires God to hear the complaint of him who was defrauded, or unjustly accused : and shew who had right on his side ; by punishing the offender, and acquitting the injured person.

Ver. 33. Confess thy name.] Acknowledge him to be God alone, and renounce all false gods.

Make supplication unto thee in this house :] Or, towards this house ; expecting help from God alone.

Ver. 34.] Deliver them out of the captivity into which their enemies had carried them, and restore

Ver. 35. When heaven is shut up.] As God is said to “bring the wind” (Ps. cxxxv. 7), so he doth the rain “out of his treasures.” Which when he shuts up, no showers can fall, till he open them again.

And turn from their sin, when thou afflictest them :] That had been the frequent fruit of their affliction in former ages ; though as soon as God had delivered them, they revolted from him ; as we read in the whole book of Judges.

Ver. 36. That thou teach them the good way.] These words are better translated in 2 Chron. vi. 27 (where the Hebrew words are the very same with these here). When thou hast taught them the good way wherein they should walk. He doth not desire their pardon, till their affliction had taught them better obedience.

Give rain upon thy land.] He first desires their amendment, and then that the times and seasons might be amended.

Ver. 37. If there be in the land famine.] Which arose sometimes from other causes, besides want of rain.

If there be—mildew, locust, or if there be caterpillar ;] These two creatures, locusts and caterpillars, made great desolations where they swarmed (Exod. x. 4, 5. Ps. cv. 34, 35). Mildew, also, the heathens themselves were sensible was a punishment sent from heaven. And therefore Numa Pompilius (as Strigelius observes) ordained a solemn festival called rubigalia, in the beginning of May, to pray for their preservation from this rubigo, as they called it, which corrupted their corn (see Pliny's Nat. Hist. lib. xviii. cap. 29).

If their enemy besiege—their cities :] In their gates ; whereby they were so straitened, that none could go in, or out.

Whatsoever plague.] The word plague signifies some extraordinary stroke by the hand of God.

Ver. 38. By all thy people Israel.] Who in national calamities were wont to beseech God's mercies with public fasting and prayer ; which, if they neglected, he entreats him not to reject the supplications of any particular person who besought his favor for himself and family.

own heart, and spread forth his hands toward this house :

39 Then hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and forgive, and do, and give to every man according to his ways, whose heart thou knowest ; (for thou, even thou only, knowest the hearts of all the children of men ;)

40 That they may fear thee all the days that they live in the land which thou gavest unto our fathers.

41 Moreover concerning a stranger, that is not of thy people of Israel, but cometh out of a far country for thy name's sake ;

42 (For they shall hear of thy great name, and of thy strong hand, and of thy stretched out arm ;) when he shall come and pray toward this house ;

43 Hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for : that all people of the earth may know thy name, to fear thee, as do thy people Israel ; and that they may know that this house, which I have builded, is called by thy name.

taught by Ezra, in 2 Chron. vi. 29, to understand these words of any private trouble or grief which any man labored under : for so the words are there, "when every one shall know his own sore, and his own grief." That is, shall make his secret moan for any affliction which lies heavy upon his spirit.

Spread forth his hands] That is, pray as Solomon now did to God (see ver. 22).

Ver. 39. Whose heart thou knowest ;] He would have the people know that God could not be deceived with words ; but have them expect an answer from him, according to the sincerity of their hearts, in their professions of repentance.

Thou only, knowest the hearts] This sense begets in men the greatest awe of the Divine majesty.

Ver. 40.] That they might learn by his great goodness, to worship him alone religiously all their days : and by that means possess in peace and plenty the good land he had bestowed upon them.

Ver. 41.] To become a proselyte to the true religion, and worship God alone, though he was not circumcised, and thereby bound to keep the whole law. Such strangers came to pray at the temple, though they might not offer any sacrifices, except only a burnt-offering. And therefore we may observe, that in the New Testament the Greeks are said to come to a feast, ἡρα προσκυνησάντων, "that they might worship," not that they might keep the pass-over (John xii. 20). And the like is said of the eunuch, Acts viii. 22 (see Selden, lib. ii. De Jure Nat. et Gent. cap. 4, 5).

Ver. 42. They shall hear of thy—stretched out arm ;] All the stupendous wonders he had done : which declared him to be above all gods ; the most High, and Holy One.

When he shall come and pray toward this house ;] In the court behind that of the Israelites : which was made on purpose for the religious uncircumcised gentiles. Such, saith Victorinus Strigelius (whose words I think fit here to transcribe), were Naaman the Syrian ; Nebuchadnezzar, and his son Evilmerodach : Darius the Mede ; Cyrus the Persian ; Cornelius, and the Ethiopian eunuch, mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles ; and many such-like heathens ; who were members of the true church. By which means, and by the dispersion of the Jews among other nations, 44 ¶ If thy people go out to battle against their enemy, whithersoever thou shalt send them, and shall pray unto the Lord toward the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house that I have built for thy name :

45 Then hear thou in heaven their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause.

46 If they sin against thee, (for there is no man that sinneth not,) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them to the enemy, so that they carry them away captives unto the land of the enemy, far or near ;

47 Yet if they shall bethink themselves in the land whither they were carried captives, and repent, and make supplication unto thee in the land of them that carried them captives, saying, We have sinned, and have done perversely, we have committed wickedness ;

48 And so return unto thee with all their heart, and with all their soul, in the land of their enemies, which led them away captive, and pray unto thee toward their land, which thou gavest unto their fathers, the city which thou many heathens were called to the acknowledgment of the only true God (see Josephus's last book of Antiquities, ch. 2).

Ver. 43. Do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for ;] He had the same sense with St. Peter, that "God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him" (Acts x. 35).

That all people of the earth may know thy name ;] By this it is evident, that truly good men in ancient time desired all the gentile world might be incorporated with them : unto which, in our Saviour's time, the Jews were unaccountably averse.

That this house—is called by thy name.] Hath thy glorious presence in it.

Ver. 44.] Some of the Jews wonder that Solomon should mix his prayer for strangers with those for the people of Israel, and not rather finish first what he had to desire for the Israelites, and then pray for the gentiles. If there be any thing in this, it was to show that God made no difference between them and pious people of other nations. It is here remarkable, that they were not to make war, without a warrant and commission from God, upon the neighboring nations. Not to satisfy their ambition and vainglory, but by his command, or upon just and necessary reasons ; which would warrant them to implore and expect God's blessing upon their arms.

Ver. 45. Maintain their cause.] Show the justice of it, by making them victorious.

Ver. 46. If they sin against thee, (for there is no man that sinneth not,)] The weakness of human nature, and its proneness to sin, doth not excuse wilful offences against God ; especially apostacy from him, which was the cause of all their calamities.

So that they carry them away captives] A good cause sometimes miscarries for the iniquity of those that are engaged in it.

Ver. 48.] In these, and in the foregoing words (ver. 47), he gives a full description of true repentance. Which begins in the serious reflection which men make upon their past lives, and their present miseries into which their sins have brought them. Which begets an unfeigned sorrow and resolution of amendment, with earnest supplication for mercy and grace :

hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name :

49 Then hear thou their prayer and their supplication in heaven thy dwelling place, and maintain their cause,

50 And forgive thy people that have sinned against thee, and all their transgressions wherein they have transgressed against thee, and give them compassion before them who carried them captive, that they may have compassion on them :

51 For they be thy people, and thine inheritance, which thou broughtest forth out of Egypt, from the midst of the furnace of iron :

52 That thine eyes may be open unto the supplication of thy servant, and unto the supplication of thy people Israel, to hearken unto them in all that they call for unto thee.

53 For thou didst separate them from among all the people of the earth, to be thine inheritance, as thou spakest by the hand of Moses thy servant, when thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt, O Lord God.

54 And it was so, that when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication unto the Lord, he arose from before the confessing themselves unworthy of it, and condemning themselves for their sins and the high aggravations of them (expressed here by "doing perversely, and committing wickedness,") which at last concludes in their quitting that wicked course of life, and their sincere conversion to the service of God.

And pray unto thee toward—the house which I have built] The very looking towards the place, with earnest imploring the mercy of God, and desire of his help, was to own him that dwelt here, and acknowledge him alone for their God. Which was a means (as that excellent person Dr. Alix admonishes me) to keep them from idolatry; all the nations of the world turning their faces towards the east, when they worshipped; but the Jews to the west, where the holy place was. And for this cause, when the temple and the holy city were destroyed, and the ark of the testimony was gone; yet good men looked and prayed towards the place where it was wont to be, as appears by the prophet Daniel. And therefore Solomon much more supposes they would do so, when they were all standing. Which may seem, as Mr. Mede observes, to have been done out of the use of all mankind, without any special precept to that purpose; which is nowhere to be found. Nature having taught mankind, as in their addresses to great persons, to look unto their face; so in their addresses to the Divine majesty, to look that way, or towards that place, where his presence is more demonstrated than elsewhere. From whence he concludes, that to worship towards the place, where there is any sign or specification of his presence, is no idolatry (see his Discourse upon Ps. cxxxii. 7).

Ver. 49. Maintain their cause.] In the Hebrew their right: which they had forfeited by their disobedience; but he prayed it might be restored unto them upon their repentance.

Ver. 50.] Treat them mercifully while they continued their slaves; and give them their liberty to return to their own land. Solomon enlarges much upon this in the following verses, as a thing of the greatest importance. Because he knew that they, as well as all men else, were prone to offend God (ver. 46) and might provoke him to expel them from this altar of the Lord, from kneeling on his knees with his hands spread up to heaven.

55 And he stood, and blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice, saying, 56 Blessed be the Lord, that hath given rest unto his people Israel, according to all that he promised: there hath not failed one word of all his good promise, which he promised by the hand of Moses his servant.

57 The Lord our God be with us, as he was with our fathers: let him not leave us, nor forsake us :

58 That he may incline our hearts unto him, to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers.

59 And let these my words, wherewith I have made supplication before the Lord, be nigh unto the Lord our God day and night, that he maintain the cause of his servant, and the cause of his people Israel at all times, as the matter shall require :

60 That all the people of the earth may know that the Lord is God, and that there is none else.

land. Towards which the Jews now at this day turn their faces when they pray to God; but to no purpose; for it only demonstrates they have so provoked God by a crime more heinous than ever was committed, that he will have no regard to their petition.

Ver. 51.] Wherein they wrought with cruel labour (see Deut. iv. 20.)

Ver. 52.] He brings two arguments for the Divine compassion towards them. First, that it might not lose the glory of what he had formerly done for them; and then that it might appear he dwelt in this house, and had respect unto the penitent prayers that were here made to him.

Ver. 53.] See Exod. xix. 5. Here he adds a third argument; the peculiar laws that he had given them; whereby they were distinguished from all people: in the observance of which he beseeches him to preserve them. It was not a mere angel that brought them out of Egypt, but the Divine Αγγελος conducted them; to whom therefore this prayer of Solomon's was directed. For the Shechinah or Divine glory that settled in the temple, and there was worshipped, was this Divine person, and not an angel personating God.

Ver. 54.] See ver. 22.

Ver. 55.] Now he turned about again, with his face the other way, from the altar to the people.

Ver. 56.] He celebrates again the faithfulness of God, which continued now, as it had done in the days of Joshua (see Josh. xxi. 45. xxiii. 14).

Ver. 57.] Of which there was no doubt, if they cleaved steadfastly unto him, as it follows in the next words.

Ver. 58.] This was the greatest blessing he could ask for them; as the means to preserve them in his favor.

Ver. 59. Be nigh unto the Lord our God day and night.] Be ever acceptable to him.

He maintain the cause of his servant,] That is, of Solomon, and his successors.

As the matter shall require.] That is, according to his and their necessities.

Ver. 60.] That by his signal favors to the Israelites, all the world might be invited to acknowledge him to be God alone.

61 Let your heart therefore be perfect with the LORD our God, to walk in his statutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day.

62 ¶ And the king, and all Israel with him, offered sacrifice before the LORD.

63 And Solomon offered a sacrifice of peace offerings, which he offered unto the LORD, two and twenty thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep. So the king and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of the LORD.

64 The same day did the king hallow the

Ver. 61.] When they were perfectly free from all false worship, and served God alone: as he exhorted them to continue still to do, with sincerity of heart.

Ver. 62.] Which was a solemn act of worship, whereby they acknowledged him to be their God. And these sacrifices seem to have been laid upon the altar before Solomon begun his prayer, ready to be offered: and when he had done, fire came from heaven (as we read 2 Chron. vii. 1) and consumed the sacrifices. Which was another token of God's presence in this house; as the cloud had testified, and hereby was further confirmed: for the fire from heaven declared how acceptable the sacrifices were that were offered in that place.

Ver. 63. Solomon offered a sacrifice of peace offerings. Besides the burnt-offerings before mentioned.

Two and twenty thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep. Which could not be all offered upon that day when he made his prayer, but while the feast lasted, which was in the whole fourteen days, ver. 65 (see upon iii. 4). The heathen imitated these sacrifices in their hecatombs, which they offered of a hundred beasts of a kind; as, suppose, a hundred oxen, a hundred goats, and a hundred swine. They are described by Julius Capitolinus, in the life of the emperors Papius Maximus and Balbinus; the last of which, he saith, was so transported with joy, being fuller of fear, that he offered a hecatomb; which was such a sacrifice as this. A hundred altars of turf were raised in one place, at them a hundred swine and a hundred birds were killed. But if it were the sacrifice of an emperor, a hundred lions, a hundred eagles, and a hundred of other such kind of animals were offered: but no such ravenous creatures were ever offered to the true God.

Dedicated the house of the Lord. By this prayer of Solomon, and by the sacrifices, whereby all the people supplicated and gave thanks to God, this house was set apart for God's worship and service. For then a thing or place is said to be dedicated, when it is first employed to that use unto which it is hereafter designed. Concerning which see Selden, lib. iii. De Synedriis, p. 204, &c.

Ver. 64. The same day did the king hallow the middle of the court That is, the court of the priests, which he did not consecrate (for that was done before), but employed it to holy uses, and, as it were, honored it by religious acts (as Mr. Mede speaks upon Lev. xix. 30). And so the name of God is said to be hallowed, or sanctified by us, when we use it holily and reverently. Thus they explain it in the Gemara, he hallowed it; that is, he set up another altar there, as L'Empereur observes upon Codex Middoth, cap. 3. sect. 1.

There he offered burnt offerings. In the middle of the court he erected several altars, for the reason following: and, indeed, the whole court was little enough upon this occasion, as Dr. Lightfoot acknowledges in his book of the Temple, p. 192, 193.

middle of the court that was before the house of the LORD: for there he offered burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings: because the brazen altar that was before the LORD was too little to receive the burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings.

62 And at that time Solomon held a feast, and all Israel with him, a great congregation, from the entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt, before the LORD our God, seven days and seven days, even fourteen days.

Because the brazen altar Near the door of this court.

Was too little Therefore, by a special license from God, he set up other altars: which were to serve only during this present solemnity, when such a vast number of sacrifices were to be offered. But afterward no other altar was to be allowed, but that one brazen altar where God by Moses appointed all sacrifices should be offered; that they might be preserved in the worship of one only God. Therefore the Jews say these other altars which Solomon erected were of stone; which were soon pulled down again. But Fortunatus Scacchus hath said a great deal to make it probable that he did not erect any altars besides the brazen, but sacrificed upon the ground (Myrothec. ii. cap. 56).

Ver. 65. Solomon held a feast. Such solemnities were usual among the heathen, when they celebrated the presence of any of their gods, as the illustrious Ezek. Spanhemius hath observed upon Callimachus's Hymn to Apollo (ver. 13), where he justly makes account that they derived this custom from this famous festival of king Solomon; which Josephus sets out admirably (see lib. viii. Archæolog. cap. 2).

From the entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt. Hamath was the utmost bounds of Judea to the north, called afterward Epiphania, and by the inhabitants at this day is called Hama. Sometimes the bounds of this kingdom this way are said to be the great river Euphrates; as by the river of Egypt, which was the south bounds, is commonly understood Nilus. So Nahal is translated by Jonathan, and the Jerusalem interpreter upon Numb. xxxiv. 5. And, indeed, the word Nilus comes from thence, for the Hebrew word was anciently pronounced not Nahal but Neel: from thence the Greek Νεῖλος, and the Latin Nilus, as Bochartus observes in his Hierozoicon par. ii. lib. v. cap. 15. But there the river of Egypt is that little stream which discharges itself into the sea, by the Lacus Sirbonides, between mount Casius and Rhinocolura, the last town of Palestine. It is called by Joshua (xiii. 1) Sichor, the same with Nile, because it was but a branch from the alevis pelusiacus of that great river (see Gen. xv. 18).

Seven days and seven days. It appears by 2 Chron. vii. 9. that the feast of the dedication of the altar lasted seven days; and then the other seven days were the feast of tabernacles, which followed after the other.

Ver. 66. On the eighth day he sent the people away. So Ezra likewise saith, 2 Chron. vii. 10, but adds, that it was the twenty-third day of the seventh month: whereas the last day of the feast of tabernacles (which was the eighth from the beginning) was the twenty-second. Therefore Solomon took his leave of them on the last day of the feast, which was the two-and-twentieth day of the month; and they went home the next day. By this also it appears, these fourteen days of feasting were not kept all together, without intermission : for the great day of expiation was on the tenth of this month ; seven days before which, I suppose, the feast of dedication was kept, and then they rested till the fifteenth, when the feast of tabernacles began.

They blessed the king,] Gave him thanks for his kindness, and prayed God to make his reign prosperous.

For all the goodness that the Lord had done for David] In the book of Chronicles it is added, “and unto Solomon :” but that is here included in the goodness of God to David, on whom God bestowed such a successor. With whose magnificent entertainments they were abundantly satisfied ; and rejoiced exceedingly, that God had done such great things for David and his family ; and made all Israel happy in the great peace and plenty which they enjoyed, together with God’s holy religion so gloriously established among them.

CHAPTER IX.

1 God’s covenant in a vision with Solomon. 10 The mutual presents of Solomon and Hiram. 15 In Solomon’s works the Gentiles were his bondmen, the Israelites honourable servants. 24 Pharaoh’s daughter removeth to her house. 25 Solomon’s yearly solemn sacrifices. 26 His navy fetcheth gold from Ophir.

1 And it came to pass, when Solomon had finished the building of the house of the LORD, and the king’s house, and all Solomon’s desire which he was pleased to do.

2 That the LORD appeared to Solomon the second time, as he had appeared unto him at Gibeon.

3 And the LORD said unto him, I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication, that thou hast made before me : I have hallowed this house, which thou hast built, to put my name there for ever ; and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

4 If thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my statutes and my judgments :

5 Then I will establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel for ever, as I promised to David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Israel.

6 But if ye shall at all turn from following me, ye or your children, and will not keep my commandments and my statutes which I have set before you, but go and serve other gods, and worship them :

7 Then will I cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them ; and this house, which I have hallowed for my name, will I cast out of my sight ; and Israel shall be a proverb and a byword among all people :

8 And at this house, which is high, every one that passeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss ; and they shall say, Why hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and to this house ?

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1.] We are taught by Ezra (2 Chron. vii. 11) to understand these words in this manner : “ Thus Solomon finished the house of the Lord,” &c. and concluded all with the foregoing prayer, and the great festival which he kept.

Ver. 2.] When he appeared to him in a dream : and so it is said, 2 Chron. vii. 10, “ the Lord appeared to Solomon by night.” Which he had done once before, and no more ; for that which he spake to him, vi. 11, 12, was by a prophet (see there).

Ver. 3. The Lord said unto him,] This shows that the first verse is to be understood as I have there observed ; for otherwise, we must suppose this appearance of God to Solomon was eleven years after he had finished the house of the Lord. Which is not likely ; but it is more natural to think it was the very next night after he had dismissed the people.

I have hallowed this house,] By the glorious cloud which came into it and filled it ; and by the fire which, descending from heaven to consume the sacrifices, testified his acceptance of them.

To put my name there] Besides those visible tokens of his presence there, he now declares by word of mouth, that he owned this for his house ; and would always dwell in it, if they kept his covenant, as the Targum here interprets it.

Mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.] By his eyes and his heart he means his gracious providence, and his tender love and affection, should always have regard to what was done there ; and it should be most acceptable to him.

Ver. 4.] In all things relating to religion and civil government, which David commonly did : though some time, and in one thing, he foully miscarried.

Ver. 5.] See 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13.

Ver. 6. But if ye shall at all turn from following me,] In the Hebrew the words are, “ if in turning you turn from me ;” which signifies more than their “ at all turning from him.” Rather it should be translated, “ if they altogether turned from following him ;” that is, fell to idolatry : for he did not intend to forsake them for every offence ; but only when they forsook him, as the next words explain it.

But go and serve other gods,] There was a general corruption of their manners, when they fell to idolatry.

Ver. 7. Then will I cut off Israel] This shows that he speaks in the foregoing words of a general apostasy from him.

And this house,—will I cast out of my sight ;] No longer continue his gracious presence there, which he had promised, ver. 3.

Israel shall be a proverb] So that when men would express how unhappy any one was, they should say, “ As miserable as the Jews.”

And a byword among all people :] Who mocked at their calamity.

Ver. 8. And at this house, which is high,] Renowned for its riches, and splendor, and great resort unto it.

9 And they shall answer, Because they forsook the LORD their God, who brought forth their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and have taken hold upon other gods, and have worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath the LORD brought upon them all this evil.

10 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of twenty years, when Solomon had built the two houses, the house of the LORD, and the king's house,

11 (Now Hiram the king of Tyre had furnished Solomon with cedar trees and fir trees, and with gold, according to all his desire,) that then king

Every one that passeth by it shall be astonished,] To see such a marvellous change; for Pliny testifies that Jerusalem was the most famous city in the east, as Grotius observes.

And shall hiss;] Out of scorn and derision shall ask what is the matter, that this famous place, which boasted so much of the favour of God, is laid in ruin.

Ver. 9.] The Jews were forced to give this account of their calamity.

Ver. 10.] The former of which was seven years in building, the latter thirteen (vi. 38. vii. 1).

Ver. 11. Hiram the king of Tyre had furnished Solomon—with gold.] See ch. v. 8. 10, where mention is made of these trees, but nothing said of gold: but in the fourteenth verse of this chapter we find that Hiram sent him a hundred and twenty talents of gold. Which it is not likely he gave Solomon; who rather purchased so much of him for wheat and oil, and such-like things which Hiram's country wanted; though it abounded with gold. For the Tyrians were great merchants, fetching gold from Ophir (ver. 27, 28).

Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee.] They were near or adjoining to the country of Galilee (as the particle beth frequently signifies), but were no part of the land of Canaan, when it was divided among the Israelites: for that could not be alienated, being God's heritage. They were therefore cities out of the territories of Israel, as appears from Josh. ix. 27, but had been conquered partly by Pharaoh, who gave them to Solomon, as part of his daughter's portion; and partly by Solomon himself, who had power to dispose of them; especially since at that time they were not inhabited by the Israelites (see 2 Chron. viii. 2, and Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, lib. i. cap. 3. sect. 12. n. 3). Hotoman, indeed, a famous lawyer, thinks that Solomon did not give Hiram a propriety, and perpetual right in these cities; but only the possession and enjoyment of them till the debt was satisfied, which Solomon had contracted, by the assistance which Hiram afforded him in building the temple. But his ground is not solid: for as our Selden also hath shown (lib. vi. De Jure Nat. et Gent. cap. 16), the kings of Israel might dispose of those lands which they had conquered in a voluntary war, without the consent of the senate. Bochartus also is of the same mind, that these cities were no part of the country of Judea: but Abarbinel confirms Hotoman's opinion, that the revenues of these cities were given to him till the debt was discharged.

Ver. 12.] Were not suitable to his desire, and the genius of his people; for the soil being fat and very deep (as is generally thought), it required great labor to till it, and was not pleasant to dwell in.

Ver. 13. What cities are these which thou hast given me?] These are not words of contempt; for it is not likely that Solomon, who had been highly obliged to Hiram (and was in his own temper very generous), would give him that which was of little value. But Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee.

12 And Hiram came out from Tyre to see the cities which Solomon had given him; and they pleased him not.

13 And he said, What cities are these which thou hast given me, my brother? And he called them the land of Cabul unto this day.

14 And Hiram sent to the king sixscore talents of gold.

15 ¶ And this is the reason of the levy which king Solomon raised; for to build the house of his meaning is, these cities were not such as would serve his purpose; which made him return them to Solomon again (2 Chron. viii. 2); who, no doubt, made him some other recompense, which gave him better satisfaction. Abarbinel thinks, that Solomon having agreed to give Hiram so many measures of wheat and oil, as are mentioned, v. 11, with which he had supplied him every year; now that this work was ended, gave him this country, out of which he might raise this provision for his household himself. Which Hiram did not like, because his people were addicted to merchandise, not to agriculture: but did not upon this account break off friendship with Solomon, as appears by the following history.

He called them the land of Cabul] It is commonly thought that Hiram called them, by way of contempt, Cabul; which signifies "a dirty country:" or, as Josephus will have it, displeasing (as we translate it in the margin of our Bibles). For Chabulon, he saith, in the Phœnician language, signifies as much as οὐκ ἀρεστόν, "that which doth not please" (lib. viii. Archæol. cap. 2). But the LXX. seem to have understood the word better; who translate it ἐπὶ πον, the term or bound: as if Cabul were the same with Gebul: caph and ginel being frequently changed, as Bochartus observes; who approves of this signification of the word. For Chabulon was that tract of ground which bounded the lower Galilee: extending from Tiberias unto this place, as Josephus himself saith, lib. iii. De Bello Judaico, cap. 2 (see Bochartus, in his Canaan, lib. ii. cap. 4).

Ver. 14. And Hiram sent] It may be better translated, "and Hiram had sent," &c. See ver. 11, where the reason is given why Solomon offered him so rich a country. Which, though he did not like, yet these words, Abarbinel thinks, signify, that notwithstanding Hiram continued his generous friendship with Solomon, and after that sent him all this gold; or, it was sent him as his share in their traffic to Ophir, mentioned in the conclusion of this chapter.

Ver. 15. This is the reason of the levy which king Solomon raised;] That the raising of a great tribute upon the people, and employing so many men in his works, might not seem strange, he here shows the cause of it; which was his great and numerous buildings; suitable to the high dignity to which God had advanced him. But Mr. Selden hath shown, by many instances, that the word mas is used, not only for pecuniary tribute, but for corporeal labor. And thus he interprets these words, "this is the cause of requiring the labor and work of so many men." Which when he had declared, viz. his great buildings, then he proceeds (ver. 20), to relate who they were that he employed in this service (lib. vi. De Jure Nat. et Gent. cap. 14).

For to build the house of the Lord, and his own house,] Of which an account hath been already given.

20 And all the people that were left of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites, which were not of the children of Israel,

21 Their children that were left after them in the land, whom the children of Israel also were Israelites were wont to meet, and take their pleasure : and because it was full of people, was therefore called Millo ; which signifies fullness, or repletion. Now David had built round about Zion, from Millo inward (as we read 2 Sam. v. 9), but had left the structure of Millo itself imperfect ; which Solomon now completed, with a particular respect to Pharaoh's daughter, whose house was near to it (ver. 21, of this chapter). In this place some think there was a strong fortress built, which they gather from xi. 27, and 2 Chron. xxxii. 5. But others will have it to signify that deep valley or ditch (it may be called) which was between mount Zion (the city of David) and mount Moriah, on which the temple stood. Therefore, that there might be a convenient passage from the king's palace to the house of God, Solomon joined these two mountains by a bridge or a causeway, which could not be done without filling up the valley, or making great arches ; some think the one, and some the other.

The wall of Jerusalem.] Which was a great structure. For there were three walls, one within another, as Abarinel and Joseph ben Gorion explain it : the inner wall compassing the house of God and the house of the king ; the middle wall compassing the houses of the prophets and great persons (which explains 2 Kings xxii. 14), and the third compassing the houses of all the people.

Hazor.] Which had been a very eminent city, and the head of some kingdoms before the conquest of Canaan, (Josh. xi. 10), and was given to the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. xix. 36).

Megiddo.] A city in the tribe of Manasseh (Josh. xvii. 11).

Gezer.] In the tribe of Ephraim (Josh. xxi. 21).

Ver. 16. For Pharaoh king of Egypt had gone up, and taken Gezer,—and slain the Canaanites] For the Israelites could not dispossess the Canaanites, but they continued, in Joshua's time, and after, to dwell in Gezer (Josh. xvi. 10. Judg. i. 29). And it seems David and Solomon did not expel them, but continued them under tribute ; until Pharaoh, upon some provocation (which is not recorded), utterly extirpated them, and burnt their city. This was done, I suppose, before the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter ; and was the very first expedition that the Egyptians made out of their own country, as Sir John Marsham thinks, in his Can. Chron. Seculum 14.

And given it for a present unto his daughter, Solomon's wife.] It is likely he had begun to repair the city : and now upon the marriage of his daughter restored it to Solomon, who perfectly rebuilt it.

Ver. 17.] This is, having finished the building of Gezer, he built the lower Beth-horon, which was in the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 13, 14) : and Ezra tells us also (in 2 Chron. viii. 5) Beth-horon the upper, which was in the tribe of Ephraim (Josh. xvi. 5), but not here mentioned : either because it was not of so great consequence, or did not need so much reparation as the other.

Ver. 18. Baalath.] There was a city of this name in the tribe of Dan (Josh. xix. 44). But it is likely this was a city near Tadmor, where Baal had been formerly worshipped : for Baal was one of the gods of that people, it appears in the following observation.

Tadmor in the wilderness.] This word Tadmor signifies in Hebrew as much as Palma in Latin. From whence it was called by the Romans Palmyra ; which was one of the most splendid cities in the eastern countries : which gave name to the Palmyrene Solitudes, mentioned by Pliny and Ptolemy. There have been lately, after twelve hundred years' obscurity, several noble inscriptions found in this place by some that travelled into this wilderness : but Bochart hath one of far greater antiquity, of two Phœnician gods, Aglibelus and Melachbelus, viz. the summer and the winter sun ; in his Geogr. Sacra, par. ii. called Canaan, lib. ii. cap. 8. p. 811. where he calls this Tadmor a city of Phœnicia.

In the land.] Of Hamath Zobah (a part of Syria), as Ezra seems to expound it (2 Chron. viii. 3, 4), which country Solomon had conquered.

Ver. 19. All the cities of store.] Where he laid up corn against a time of need ; or arms and ammunition in case of war. Some will have them cities where he kept his treasure, which is not likely.

Cities for his chariots, and—horsemen.] Which he had in great number (iv. 26).

And that which Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, &c.] So that whithersoever he went, he had a house for his entertainment in every part of his country. Behold, saith Abarinel, the reason of the tribute (ver. 15) is given from all these buildings : and after he had finished them, he laid no further tribute upon his people : who murmured at these impositions, as we find, after he was dead ; but in these public buildings a great number of hands were employed, whereby idleness was expelled, manufactures were learnt, the poor were relieved, all the meaner people exercised, cities adorned, diseases driven away, and no place left for envy and sedition : while the subjects found the treasure that was raised employed for the benefit of so many of them ; as Bodinus discourses, in his book De Republica, lib. xi. cap. 2, where he observes how Augustus, having settled the empire in peace, kept the people in their duty by this means ; repairing many temples, decayed by time, or burnt by fire, laying out vast sums upon the chapel of Jupiter Capitolinus, and other public edifices ; in-somuch, that he gloried, “ he left Rome a marble city, which he found a brick.”

Ver. 20.] But by this time were become, I suppose, proselytes to the Jewish religion, as the Gibeonites were, or at least renounced their idolatry.

Ver. 21.] He was able to have rooted them all out, as the law required ; but that command did not take place after they had submitted, and made peace with the Israelites (as those words suppose, Josh. ix. 19). And they seem now to have been in so poor a condition, that Solomon did not lay any tribute of money not able utterly to destroy, upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bondservice unto this day.

22 But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondmen : but they were men of war, and his servants, and his princes, and his captains, and rulers of his chariots, and his horsemen.

23 These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's work, five hundred and fifty, which bare rule over the people that wrought in the work.

upon them ; but only of burdensome labor. Of these were the seventy thousand that bare burdens, and eighty thousand that were hewers in the mountains : mentioned v. 15. Thus Mr. Selden, in the place above mentioned, explains these words, " they were not able utterly to destroy : " which was not for want of power, but because they had made a covenant with them, and did not consume them (as it is in 2 Chron. viii. 8). But they would not receive them into peace with them, till they became proselytes of the gate : and when they had done so, they became tributaries : and therefore such persons, by virtue of their covenant, Solomon now commanded to this service (see lib. vi. De Jure Nat. et Gent. cap. 14).

Ver. 22. But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondmen : By this means he spared the children of Israel, whom he did not employ in any servile labor about his public works ; but put them into nobler offices, as it here follows. Yet this implies that his royal power might have laid such loads on them, if he had not designed to rule with great gentleness over them.

They were men of war, Which was accounted an honourable employment.

His servants, Officers in his court.

His princes, Governors of province.

His captains, &c. Commanders of his guards.

Ver. 23.] In 2 Chron. xiii. 10, they are said to be but two hundred and fifty. For the Hebrew doctors commonly say that there were of these officers but two hundred and fifty Israelites : the other three hundred were proselytes. But the plainest account of this is given by Abarbanel, that there were only two hundred and fifty set over those that wrought in the temple : the rest were employed in looking after his public works in other places. And it must be observed, also, that there were far greater numbers employed when the temple work was carried on with great speed, as we read before (v. 16).

Ver. 24.] There was not the like necessity for building Millo that there was for building the walls of Jerusalem, and the cities before named : but he did it (as Abarbanel observes) in honour, and for the pleasure of Pharaoh's daughter ; who was to remove unto a house near to it. And the reason she did not continue in the house where David had dwelt, we are told in 2 Chron. viii. 11, which was, because it was a kind of holy place, where it was not fit for her to remain ; the ark of God having dwelt there.

Ver. 25. Three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt offerings The meaning is not, that he offered sacrifices no oftener ; but that he never failed to keep the three solemn festivals which God commanded to be observed by every body, when he offered sacrifices suitable to those great mercies which were then commemorated ; and to the great blessings God had bestowed upon his family.

He burnt incense upon the altar that was before the Lord. In the holy place, before the oracle. Where he could not burn it himself ; but he gave it to the priests at his own charge, to be offered with a particular respect to him. This, it is likely he did every day, morning and evening.

24 ¶ But Pharaoh's daughter came up out of the city of David unto her house which Solomon had built for her : then did he build Millo.

25 ¶ And three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt offerings and peace offerings upon the altar which he built unto the LORD, and he burnt incense upon the altar that was before the LORD. So he finished the house.

26 ¶ And king Solomon made a navy of ships in Ezion-geber, which is beside Elath, on the shore of the Red sea, in the land of Edom.

So he finished the house. This was said before, but now repeated ; because, after he had kept the three great festivals there, it was not only consecrated, but all Divine offices had been performed in it ; and there was nothing more to be added.

Ver. 26. Ezion-geber, This name, Ezion-geber signifies spina viri ; it lying in a rocky, ragged shore, running out into the sea like the back bone of a man. So Arrianus (as Bochartus observes) in his Peripplus describes the inmost part of the Sinus Arabicus (where Ezion-geber lay) as very dangerous, because of the rocks and shelves. Which makes it less strange, that the ships of Jehoshaphat were broken there in pieces in the very port, before they put out to sea (2 Kings xxii. 48). Inasmuch that in aftertimes this port was forsaken, and they frequented Elath. Josephus will have Ezion-geber to be the same with Berenice, a city on the African shore, over against Syene ; others have a different conjecture, when the scripture plainly teaches us that it was a port of Idumea, not far from Aela upon the Red Sea ; and not far distant from the wilderness of Zin. For the Israelites removed their camp from this place to that wilderness, as we read Numb. xxxiii. 36.

Beside Elath, Or Elath, for it is called by both names ; and by the Greeks and Romans, Aela, and Ailat, and Elat, and Elana, &c. Which was a port known in the days of Moses (Deut. ii. 8), belonging to the Edomites ; and, as St. Jerome saith, to the Egyptians : for it was ambigui juris, lying on the confines of both countries. Inasmuch that Sir John Marsham thinks Solomon and Hiram now built ships there, with the good leave of Pharaoh ; the Egyptians now not minding merchandise, but were set upon conquering countries ; but David having conquered Edom (2 Sam. viii. 14), I rather think became master of this port ; where Solomon built a navy of ships in his own right, and went thither himself to see it (2 Chron. viii. 17). It continued in the possession of the Israelites about a hundred and fifty years, till, in the time of Joram, the Edomites recovered it (2 Kings viii. 20). But it was again taken from them by Azariah, and left by him to his son (2 Kings xiv. 22), but lost again by his grandson Ahaz, from whom the king of Syria took it (2 Kings xvi. 6). The Syrians held it a long time, till after many changes under the Ptolemies and the Seleucids, it came into the hands of the Romans, who quartered there the tenth legion, as St. Jerome tells us (see Bochartus, in the second part of his Geographica Sacra, called Canaan, lib. i. cap. 44).

On the shore of the Red Sea, in the land of Edom. What the Hebrews call the sea of Suph, other nations call the sea of Edom, from the country which it washes, viz. Idumea, as appears from this place. From whence the Greeks (not knowing the reason of the name) call it ἐρυθρὰν θάλασσαν, " the Red Sea : " the word Edom signifying rubrum or rufum, red or yellow, as Bochartus and Ludolphus have observed.

Ver. 27.] The navy was Solomon's, who had servants of his own on board the ships, to go and traffic at Ophir: but they had no skill in navigation, and therefore Hiram sent as many Tyrians as were necessary to man the ships; they having been always bred at sea.

Ver. 28. Ophir.] It is certain there was a place called Ophir, or as the LXX. call it Σόφιρ (which word Josephus also uses instead of Ophir), and by others called 'Οφφίρ, which was in Arabia Felix. But this cannot be the place here meant, as Bochartus hath demonstrated by many arguments, in his Phaleg. lib. ii. cap. 27. This one is sufficient, that it was a three years' voyage to Ophir here mentioned: whereas the other was very near the place where the navy was prepared. And besides, they fetched ivory from Ophir, whereas there are no elephants in Arabia; therefore we must search for it somewhere else; and there is little doubt it was in India: but in what part of it is not so easy to be determined. The famous Bochartus thinks it was Taprobana; which is the same with that now called Zeilan, or Seilan. For what the ancients say of Taprobana, that the moderns say of Zeilan: as he hath shown in a very large diagram of both countries, in his Canaan, lib. i. cap. 46. And indeed, Grotius before him concluded, there was no better way to guess where this place was, than by considering what commodities were brought from thence, and inquiring of merchants (who have been in the remote parts of the world) where not only gold and silver, and precious stones, but ivory, and all the rest that were fetched from Ophir, are to be found now. And, in a letter to his brother, he desires him to make this inquiry for him (see Epistol. 483).

Fetched from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents.] It is said in 2 Chron. viii. 18, that they brought four hundred and fifty: but we may well suppose that thirty talents might be spent in the charges of the voyage to and fro; so that only four hundred and twenty came to Solomon's coffers. Or rather, as Abarbinel thinks, Solomon gave the servants of Hiram, who managed the ships, thirty talents for a gratuity. Or, as Laniado (who delights to contradict Abarbinel), the Jerusalem talent was bigger than that of Ophir: so that four hundred and fifty Ophir talents made but four hundred and twenty Jerusalem talents. It is easy also to say, that there came of gold refined only four hundred and twenty into Solomon's treasury; though the whole mass was four hundred and fifty.

Brought it to king Solomon.] It is no improbable conjecture of Abarbinel, that Solomon at first trafficked in the ships of Hiram; which voyage brought him for his share the hundred and twenty talents mentioned ver. 11 of this chapter: which Hiram is said to have sent to him, as the profit (that is) of his adventure. Which was so great that Solomon resolved to build a navy of his own; at which Hiram was so far from being offended, that, like a true friend, he furnished him with mariners to manage the ships; and they brought him this great quantity of gold at their return from their first voyage.

The imperial laws forbid noblemen to exercise merchandise as a thing below them: and therefore it much less becomes a king, as Bodinus discourses, lib. vi. De Republ. cap. 2. But we must not measure antiquity by our own times; and that author well adds, that though he would not have kings now to be merchants, yet if he might have his choice, Mercatorum cum malo quam tyrannum, &c. "I had rather a prince should be a merchant than a tyrant;" and noblemen should rather trade than oppress and make a prey of their tenants.

CHAPTER X.

1 The queen of Sheba admireth the wisdom of Solomon. 14 Solomon's gold. 16 His targets. 18 The throne of ivory. 21 His vessels. 24 His presents. 26 His chariots and horse. 28 His tribute.

1 AND when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, she came to prove him with hard questions.

2 And she came to Jerusalem with a very great train, with camels that bare spices, and very much gold, and precious stones: and when she

CHAPTER X.

Ver. 1. When the queen of Sheba] Josephus thinks she was queen of Meroe, which was anciently called Saba. But a great many of his countrymen more rightly understand this matter; who say she came from Aljemin, which was the south part of Arabia Felix, near the Red Sea; and so our Saviour calls her the queen of the south, which is the signification of Jemin in Hebrew; and in Arabic, with the addition of Al, is called Aljemin.

Heard of the fame of Solomon] Theodoret thinks she was a religious woman, as far as the light of nature guided her; and if we may believe the Hebrew tradition, she had some tincture of revealed religion from her pious ancestors: for they think she was descended from Abraham by Keturah, one of whose sons begat Sheba (1 Chron. i. 32). Now she came to hear of Solomon's fame by the ships that went to Ophir: for they sailed by her coast, and in all likelihood spread his fame there, as they did in all other places where they touched, proclaiming his magnificence, and especially his wisdom, and his glorious temple which he had built for the worship of his God: whose praise they set forth as far above all gods.

She came to prove him with hard questions.] To try whether he was so wise as report made him; by propounding difficult questions to him, which none but a man divinely illuminated could resolve, as Abarbinel understands it.

Ver. 2. She came to Jerusalem] The fable of Agatharides is confuted by this, which saith the royal dignity among the Sabeans was but a kind of captivity. For after the inauguration of their king, it was forbid, by an ancient oracle, that he should stir out of his palace upon pain of stoning: but there he enjoyed himself in all manner of pleasure.

With a very great train.] Royally attended.

Spices, and very much gold, and precious stones:] These presents which she brought to Solomon are a great argument she came from Arabia Felix, which abounded with such things, but none of them are in was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart.

3 And Solomon told her all her questions: there was not any thing hid from the king, which he told her not.

4 And when the queen of Sheba had seen all Solomon's wisdom, and the house that he had built,

5 And the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel, and his cupbearers, and his ascent by which he went up unto the house of the Lord; there was no more spirit in her.

6 And she said to the king, It was a true re-

Meroc: nor can Meroc be said to be the ends of the earth, from whence our Saviour saith this queen came, there being many large countries in Africa beyond Meroc, but none beyond the Sabæans in Arabia, whose country lay upon the sea. See Bochartus, in his Phaleg. lib. ii. cap. 26, where he shows they abounded in gold, having such plenty of it from Ophir, that they exchanged it for brass and iron, &c. giving double, or thrice the weight of them. And yet the Abyssine Christians (who say her name was Marqueda) are very confident she came from their country; where it is as constant a tradition that she had a son by Solomon, from whom their kings are derived. So Ludolphus observes, in his notes upon the confession of Claudius king of Ethiopia, where he saith, this was "the faith of his father the Israelitish king."

She communed with him.] Had the liberty to propound whatsoever she desired to be resolved about; either in natural, I suppose, or divine things.

Ver. 3. Solomon told her all her questions:] That is, answered them to her satisfaction. There was nothing so secret, which he did not reveal to her.

Ver. 4. Had seen all Solomon's wisdom,] Had fully discovered the wonderful variety of wisdom where-with he was endowed.

The house that he had built,] Both for God and for himself; the magnificence of which was admirable.

Ver. 5. The meat of his table,] Where it is likely she was entertained while she stayed at Jerusalem.

The sitting of his servants,] At their table.

The attendance of his ministers,] Who waited on him at his table, and in his chamber, and other places.

Their apparel,] Which was different, I suppose, according to their several offices; but all very stately.

His cupbearers,] Who filled out his wine, and brought and delivered it to him; with such ceremony as made his grandeur appear in that small thing.

His ascent by which he went up unto the house of the Lord;] From his own palace; of which L'Empeur gives an account, upon Codex Middoth, p. 50. But the ancient interpreters understand by the word olatho not his ascent, but his burnt-offering, which he offered in the house of the Lord. And it is very likely, she saw the service of God's ministers in his house, as well as Solomon's in his own house; and was made by Solomon to understand the meaning of everything that was done there. Which must needs put her into an ecstasy of admiration, as it here follows. And thus the LXX. translate these words, καὶ τὴν ὁλοκαύτωσαν αὐτοῦ ἣν ἂν ἔθετον ἐν οἴκῳ κυρίου, whom P. Martyr, Victorinus Strigelius, and others, follow in these words: Et holocausta ejus, quæ in domo Domini offerebat; "and his burnt offerings, which he offered in the house of the Lord."

There was no more spirit in her,] She was perfectly astonished. For as he discoursed of all sorts of natural things, so he was no less skilful in political go-port that I heard in mine own land of thy acts and of thy wisdom.

7 Howbeit I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the half was not told me: thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard.

8 Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom.

9 Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel, because the Lord loved Israel for ever, therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and justice.

10 And she gave the king an hundred and divernment; and transcended in the knowledge of divine matters, as his book shows us; having all things likewise in such order both in his house and everywhere else, that it was amazing. A very great man of our own observes, that such things as these—the apparel, the sitting and attendance of his servants, were justly admired by her as an indication of Solomon's wisdom. For they are the outworks which preserve majesty itself from approaches and surprisals. And whatsoever prince departs from these forms, and trappings, and ornaments of his dignity and pre-eminence, will hardly be able, at some time, to preserve the body itself of majesty from intrusion, invasion and violation.

Ver. 6. She said to the king,] When she had recovered herself out of her astonishment.

It was a true report that I heard—of thy acts] They did not deceive her, who, by their reports of him, moved her to take this long journey.

Ver. 7. I believed not the words, until I came,] She thought they might magnify things too much, as travellers are wont to do; especially when they speak of their own country.

Thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard,] This was very extraordinary; for commonly men find things fall far short of their expectations.

Ver. 8. Happy are thy men,] His subjects.

Happy are these thy servants,] Especially those that were about his person, and ministered unto him; who had opportunity every day to hear his wise sayings and discourses.

Ver. 9. Blessed be the Lord thy God,] One would think, by this, that she became a proselyte before she returned to her own country; whither she carried better things than she presented to Solomon (which the next verses mention); the treasures of heavenly wisdom. Philostorgius, indeed, saith that in his time the Sabæans sacrificed to the sun and moon, and certain demons of their own country; and yet ἐκ περιθούον τὸ ἔθνος, &c. "the nation was circumcised after the Jewish manner on the eighth day." Which rite they received, one would think, from this queen, and retained it a long time, though they continued their old superstition. It is possible indeed, that the Jews who lived among them, might persuade them to it. For the same Philostorgius saith, οὐκ ὀλίγον πλῆθος Ἰουδαίων αὐτοῖς ἀνατίθησκειν, "no small number of Jews was mingled with them."

Which delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel:] A most excellent admonition both to the people and to the king; that they should think themselves highly obliged to God, who had given them such a king; and he should think God made him king to govern his people justly. This sense the wise heathen had, that governors were set over men by God for their good: as Aristotle told Alexander in a letter to him, wherein he exhorts him to keep in mind, that twenty talents of gold, and of spices very great store, and precious stones : there came no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon.

11 And the navy also of Hiram, that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of alnumg trees, and precious stones.

12 And the king made of the alnumg trees pillars for the house of the Lord, and for the king's house, harps also and psalteries for singers : there came no such alnumg trees, nor were seen unto this day.

13 And king Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty. So she turned and went to her own country, she and her servants.

14 ¶ Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred threescore and six talents of gold, 15 Beside that he had of the merchantmen, and of the traffic of the spice merchants, and of all the kings of Arabia, and of the governors of the country.

16 ¶ And king Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold : six hundred shekels of gold went to one target.

17 And he made three hundred shields of his kingdom was given him by God, for the sake of mankind, εἰς εὐεργεσίαν, οὐ πρὸς ὄφρα, "that he might do them good, and not abuse them."

Ver. 10. She gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold.] Though we do not find that the ancients speak of any mines of gold in the Sabæans' country; yet they abounded with it, being near to that Ophir which I before mentioned, and is spoken of in the book of Job, xxii. 24. xxviii. 16 (in an age when they were not acquainted with the Indian Ophir, which was very remote from them). And several other places there were also near to them, which had plenty of gold, as Bochart shows in his Phalæg. lib. ii. cap. 27. p. 159, &c.

Of spices very great store, and precious stones.] This country was famous for myrrh, frankincense, and cinnamon (Josephus adds balsam also), as Bochart observes, out of many authors in the same book, cap. 26. p. 149. 153. For their very fires were made of cassia and cinnamon. Precious stones also he shows were so common in this country, that they adorned their cups, and their beds, and their stools, &c. with them (see him, p. 150).

There came no more such abundance of spices] For it seems the Jews maintained no trade with this country.

Ver. 11. The navy also of Hiram, that brought gold from Ophir.] This is meant of Ophir in India, mentioned ix. 28. From which Hiram's navy is said to bring gold, though the ships were Solomon's, because Hiram's servants had the management of them.

Brought—great plenty of alnumg trees.] It is very uncertain what these alnumg, or alnum-trees were (as they are called by a transposition of letters in 2 Chron. ii. 8). Our famous Dr. Castell thinks it was the wood called sanctulum, which is proper for all the uses mentioned in the next verse, and is still in India. And R. D. Kimchi, upon that place in the Chronicles, saith it was a red wood which is now called brazil. By which cannot be meant the wood that comes from Brazil, for that country was not known in his days; but probably he calls it brazil, from the Hebrew word barzel, which signifies iron; it being of such a dark colour. And such a wood there is now in the kingdom of Java, as Goussset observes out of Thevet, and other authors, in his Comment. Lingue Hebr.

Ver. 12. The king made of the alnumg trees pillars.] Or rather rails (as we translate it in the margin of our Bibles), which were made on either side the causeway which went up from the king's house to the house of the Lord. Compare this with 1 Chron. xxvi. 16. 18, and 2 Chron. ix. 11, and see Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple, p. 125, where he only quotes Rabbag, who saith he made battlements, i. e. rails, on either side, that men by them might stay themselves as they went along the highway of that ascent.

There came no such alnumg trees,] This account of alnumg-trees is mixed with the story of the queen of Sheba, because she is said (ver. 5), to have admired the ascent (as we translate it) which Solomon made to the house of the Lord. Which appeared the more magnificent, because the rails thereof were made of this rare wood. Which Abarbanel fancies were coral, which grows in the very sea, and they had never seen before; nor did any come after.

Ver. 13. Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked.] By their mutual presents, which she made to him (ver. 10), and he at her departure made to her, they testified their friendship to each other; desiring by these to be remembered. And Solomon desired to know what would be most acceptable to her, among all the rarities she had seen, which he bestowed upon her; besides, he generously added more things of value, which it is likely she had not in her own country.

So she turned and went to her own country.] Accompanied, it is probable, with many of the Israelites, who went and planted themselves there: from whom sprung those Jews, who, Philostorgius saith, were mixed with the Sabæans in no small numbers, as I observed, ver. 9. But the Jews of whom he speaks were such as settled there after the last captivity; and it was not lawful for a Jew, while the temple stood, to settle in a place, from whence he could not come three times a year to worship at Jerusalem.

Ver. 14.] The history of the queen of Sheba being ended he returns to give an account of Solomon's riches and magnificence; which he had begun to set forth before. And first he relates what a vast quantity of gold was brought into his country every year; not only from Ophir, but from other countries, unto which perhaps the queen of Sheba opened him a passage.

Ver. 15. The merchantmen.] Who paid custom for the goods they brought from several countries; or, as Abarbanel thinks, the men of Hattarim (as the words are in the Hebrew) signify a certain nation, viz. the Tartars (as they are now called), who brought commodities from the north country to the people of Israel, as others did from the south.

Spice merchants.] There is no reason thus to translate these words, as the same author thinks: but they signify in general all sorts of traders, who brought in merchandise, by sea or land.

All the kings of Arabia.] Who sent him presents. Governors of the country.] Which David or he had conquered, and placed governors there; who gathered his tribute, and sent it to him every year.

Ver. 16, 17.] These targets and shields seem to have been made for state and pomp; to be carried before him, upon some special occasions. Though we do read in the Roman authors of some great captains to whom golden shields were granted, as a reward of their great valour: and these perhaps might be intended for the same purpose. But then we must not beaten gold; three pound of gold went to one shield: and the king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

18 ¶ Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with the best gold.

19 The throne had six steps, and the top of the throne was round behind: and there were stays on either side on the place of the seat, and two lions stood beside the stays.

20 And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps: there was not the like made in any kingdom.

think that the shields weighed but six hundred shekels (which would have been so small as to be of no use), but that each cost six hundred shekels of gold; as Fortunatus Scacchus observes, Myrothec. iii. cap. 3.

The king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon. Where, it is likely, he kept his most precious treasure. See concerning this house, vii. 2, which Josephus saith the queen of Sheba admired above all things she saw in Judea: the vast multitude of cedar pillars that were in it, making it look like the forest of Lebanon: from whence some think it had its name.

Ver. 18. Great throne of ivory. We never read of ivory till about Solomon's time; who, perhaps, brought elephants out of India, and took care to have a great deal of ivory brought with them. Inasmuch, that we read of ivory palaces (Ps. xlv. 9), whose walls were overlaid with ivory; which was more precious than gold in ancient times, as Pliny tells in many places.

Overlaid it with the best gold. Not entirely, so as to cover the ivory (for then it might as well have been made of wood), but here and there; as P. Martyr reasonably conjectures. Which made the throne appear more beautiful by the mixture of gold and ivory; with which, at due distances, it was studded. In this throne he sat when he administered justice, and gave audience to ambassadors, and the like.

Ver. 19. Had six steps. Was advanced to a just height, that he might be seen and heard by all.

Round behind. Making a half circle over his head.

There were stays on either side—of the seat. Like one of our great chairs, which have rests to lean one's arms upon, on either side.

Two lions stood beside. As their supporters.

Ver. 20. Twelve lions stood—upon the six steps. Upon every step a lion stood reared up, on each side, as if he was falling upon his prey: which many interpreters think had a mystical meaning in it, as every thing else had belonging to this throne; with which I shall not trouble the reader. Grotius thinks he offended in making these figures; and having once begun to transgress the law, he grew still worse and worse.

There was not the like made in any kingdom. That is, in those times there was none to be compared with it; but in after-ages there were perhaps more glorious. For Athenæus saith, the throne of the Parthian kings was of gold, encompassed with four golden pillars, beset with precious stones (lib. xii. Deipnos). And the Persian kings, he saith, sat in judgment under a golden vine (and other trees of gold), the bunches of whose grapes were made of several sorts of precious stones.

Ver. 21. In the days of Solomon. Who brought in such plenty of gold, that it made silver of less value while he lived.

Ver. 22. A navy of Tharshish with the navy of Hiram. These words are added to give a further account how Solomon came to have gold in such abundance: for he trafficked for it in another fleet, besides 21 ¶ And all king Solomon's drinking vessels were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold; none were of silver: it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

22 For the king had at sea a navy of Tharshish with the navy of Hiram: once in three years came the navy of Tharshish, bringing gold, and silver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

23 So king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom.

24 ¶ And all the earth sought to Solomon, to that which went to Ophir. That fleet, it is plain, was Solomon's, and sailed out of his own port Ezion-geber (ix. 26), though it was manned by Tyrians, because they understood the sea. Whereas this navy here spoken of belonged to Hiram, and went out of his port at Tyre; and Solomon had only the liberty to trade in it to Tharshish. Which was a place where-with the Tyrians had very ancient commerce; and therefore Hiram was the chief in this voyage, as Solomon was in that to Ophir.

Once in three years came the navy of Tharshish, bringing gold, and silver. It was not so far off, that they could not return in less than three years: but, as Abarinel supposes, they went thither in the end of one year, and stayed there the next to vend and buy their commodities; and then returned in the beginning of the third year. Bochartus hath made it very probable that this place was Tartessus in Spain, where gold and silver in ancient times, if we may believe Strabo and others, whom he quotes, were plentiful. But I do not find any proof that ivory, apes, and peacocks, were the commodities of that country (see his Phaleg, lib. iii. cap. 7).

Ivory. The Hebrew word senhabim is of doubtful signification: but the word sen, or shen, certainly signifying a tooth, interpreters have supposed that habim signifies an elephant; and both together import elephant's teeth, i. e. ivory. But it is hard to give an account of this word habim: therefore Bochartus rather thinks that the whole word senhabim signifies an elephant: which best agrees with what follows, apes and peacocks, all three signifying living creatures: and, indeed, ivory itself, in this chapter, is simply called by the name of sen: where he speaks of Solomon's throne, ver. 18 (see his Hierozoicon, par. ii. lib. i. cap. 20).

And apes. The Hebrew word kephim is both by the ancients and moderns translated apes; which creature Pliny calls cephos; and saith they were seen but once at Rome in his days, and that they came out of Ethiopia. So that if Tharshish was in Spain, they that sailed thither trafficked in Afric also before they came home (see Bochartus, in his Hierozoicon, par. ii. lib. iii. cap. 31).

And peacocks. The LXX. do not venture to translate the Hebrew word thuccijim: but the Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, and Latin, translate it as we do, peacocks: and so do the most learned among the Jews, as Bochartus shows in a long dissertation; where he probably guesses this creature had its name by a small transposition of letters from Cuthagim; as much as to say a bird of Cuth, or a Persian bird. Which transpositions are so usual, that we have an instance of it in this chapter: the trees here called almugin, being called in the Chronicles algunin. See Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 23, where he shows how beautiful a creature this is: which might well be brought from foreign countries to Judea, where there were none of them.

hear his wisdom, which God had put in his heart.

25 And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and garments, and armour, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

Ver 23.] The latter of which he begged of God ; who graciously promised to add the former ; which he did to admiration.

Ver. 21.] That is, the great men of the neighbouring countries came, as the queen of Sheba did, to be acquainted with his wisdom ; which they heard was a divine gift.

Ver. 25. They brought every man his present.] This shows that he speaks, in the former verse, of the great men of the earth ; who made these presents to him, when they came into his country.

A rate year by year.] This seems to signify that they so highly prized his wisdom, that they courted his friendship ; and voluntarily sent him a certain present every year, as a token of the continuance of it.

Ver. 26. Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen.] In a time of profound peace he thought it a piece of wisdom to be ready for war, as a means to preserve the peace. Though the surest way to enjoy the happiness wherein he lived, had been to observe strictly the commands of God.

He had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen.] Four hundred of these chariots, Josephus saith, were presented from the kings and princes before mentioned ; and he had a thousand of his own before. But what need was there for so many stables for his horses as seem to be mentioned, iv. 26, viz. forty thousand ? The word is not stables, but stalls ; every horse having a stall, not a stable to himself : and some chariots had two, some four horses belonging to them. And yet even thus there were too many ; therefore we must suppose they did not always stand in one place ; but sometimes in one country, sometimes in another. Where it was necessary there should be stalls for them, when he removed from city to city.

Whom he bestowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jerusalem.] The former part of these words relates to the chariots, which were kept in the country, in the cities Solomon built for them (ix. 19), and the latter to the horsemen, which were always with the king in Jerusalem ; as Abarinel understands these words. Thus Solomon took care they should not be burdensome to his people, by keeping them all in one place : but they were distributed through the country, only a great body of horse in the royal city.

Ver. 27. Made silver—as stones,] As common as pebbles.

lem as stones, and cedars made he to be as the sycamore trees that are in the vale, for abundance.

28 ¶ And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn : the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

29 And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and an horse for an hundred and fifty : and so for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring them out by their means.

things, like willows, that among us grow numerous in low grounds.

Ver. 28. Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt.] Here he again openly transgressed the law of God (as Grotius observes), presuming he had no need of those cautions, which were given against this by Moses in the book of Deuteronomy (xvii. 16).

And linen yarn.] Most think byssus, fine linen, is hereby meant : which was a great commodity in Egypt.

The king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.] It is acknowledged by all interpreters that these, and the following words in the next verse, are very obscure.

Ver. 29.] These words Bochart seems to me to have cleared with the greatest perspicuity, by taking the Hebrew word mikveh, not for linen yarn, or fine linen ; but for the toll or custom that was taken for the horses that were brought out of Egypt. And thus he translates the whole ; “ Horses were brought up to Solomon out of Egypt ; and as for the toll or custom, the merchants of king Solomon hired it at a price (that is, redeemed it of the king of Egypt for so much constantly) ; and a chariot coming out of Egypt went out for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty ; and so for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring by their hands.” The sense of which words is plainly this, that noble horses being found in those times in few countries but Egypt, Pharaoh would not suffer them to be carried from thence without a great tribute, which he exacted from them ; which was six hundred shekels for a chariot, and a hundred and fifty for a horse. This must not be understood to be the price at which they were bought, but the custom paid for them ; otherwise every horse would have been of the same value, which is absurd. Solomon, therefore, bringing many thousand horses out of Egypt, prevailed with his father-in-law to free him from this grievous tribute, and to accept of a certain sum of money to be paid him every year instead of it. Thus being freed from the custom, which was demanded of all others, all the kings of the Hittites and Syrians bought their chariots and horses of Solomon's merchants, who could afford to sell them cheaper than they could have them in Egypt (see Hierozoicon, par. ii. lib. ii. cap. 9).

By the “ kings of the Hittites” are meant the rulers of some of that nation, who were driven out by the Israelites ; and lived in the north-east of the land of Canaan, or in some part of Arabia (see Judg. i. 26)

1 Solomon's wives and concubines. 4 In his old age they draw him to idolatry. 9 God threateneth him. 14 Solomon's adversaries were Hadad, who was entertained in Egypt, 23 Rezon, who reigned in Damascus; 26 and Jeroboam, to whom Ahijah prophesied. 41 Solomon's acts, reign, and death: Rehoboam succeedeth him.

3 And he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines: and his wives turned away his heart.

4 For it came to pass, when Solomon was old that his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and his heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, as was the heart of David his father.

5 For Solomon went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites.

6 And Solomon did evil in the sight of the

CHAPTER XI.

Ver. 1. Solomon loved many strange women.] It was not a fault in him that he married Pharaoh's daughter; she being a proselyte, as is generally supposed, to the Jewish religion. But in marrying so many other women besides, he committed two sins against the law; one in multiplying wives, and another in marrying those of strange nations, who still retained their idolatrous religion; which was expressly against their law, as the next verse declares it. The Jewish doctors, indeed, are so very desirous to excuse Solomon, that they say these strange women were proselyted; but Mr. Selden well observes, that then it had been no sin to have married with some of them; and yet Nehemiah says it was a sin, xiii. 26 (lib. v. De Jure Nat. et Gent. cap. 15. p. 625, 626, and Buxtorf. De Sponsal et Divort. p. 40, 41).

Women of the Moabites, &c.] Some think Solomon would not have taken wives out of these nations, had it not been out of some political principle; which some think was, that he might by their means gain intelligence of the state of those countries: others, that he might extinguish the old enmity which was between the Israelites and those nations; to which he might probably hope to put an end by contracting these marriages with them. But good intentions will not justify the doing unlawful things.

Ver. 2. Ye shall not go in to them.] This relates particularly to the Hittites and the Zidonians before mentioned; and consequently the rest of the seven nations of Canaan, with whom they were forbidden to make any marriage (Exod. xxiv. 16. Deut. vii. 3), for the weighty reason here mentioned. For though they might marry wives of other nations, if they embraced the Jewish religion; yet of the seven nations of Canaan they might not, though they were converted to their religion: lest the venom might lurk and lie hid; and at last break out and infect them. Great was the foresight of Moses (wherewith God endowed him) in giving this precept (as Grotius notes); for the not observing it undid the Israelites, and was the foundation of their utter ruin.

Solomon clave unto these] He not only married them, but had a great affection to them; whereby his heart was easily alienated from God.

Ver. 3. He had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines.] Of these princesses few or none had the name of queens, as Abarinel observes; but they only who were of the highest esteem with him, or who were of royal extraction. He thinks Solomon enjoyed every one of these once, and then shut them up, that nobody might touch them afterward (see Buxtorf. De Sponsal. et Divort. p. 48, 49, and Hackspan's Miscellanies, lib. i. cap. 6). But it seems to me more probable that he kept so many wives merely for state and pomp; after the manner of the eastern princes; but never used many of them. Just as they do now in China, where the emperor hath a great multitude of wives, chosen out of the prime beauties of the country; many of which he never saw in his life; as Father la Compe tells us in his history of China, par. i. p. 62. The same is said of the great Mogul, that he hath as many women as will make up a full thousand (which is Solomon's number), as the author of the voyage to the Indies tells us, in the end of P. le Valle's History, sect. 20, p. 469. It must be considered, also, that Solomon had not brought them to this number in the beginning of his reign, but towards the latter end; when his riches increasing, he made vast expenses, and studied to outdo all other kings, in magnificence of all kinds.

His wives turned away his heart.] He was so delighted in their company, that they turned away his thoughts from serious business; yea, from God himself.

Ver. 4. His wives turned away his heart after other gods.] For, indulging himself too much in pleasure, he weakened both his body and his mind: and growing old betime, began to dote upon other gods; which he suffered his wives to worship privately, and at last openly to exercise the religious rites of their own country.

His heart was not perfect with the Lord] He did not forsake the Lord, but joined other gods with him. Which a man of his sense could never have done (who had solemnly acknowledged in his prayer, that there was no god like to the Lord, yea, that there was no god else, viii. 23. 60), if his mind had not been enervated, and his understanding darkened by sensual pleasures.

Ver. 5. Solomon went after Ashtoreth] He worshipped Astarte, of which see in the book of Judges, ii. 13, and 1 Sam. vii. 3, 4.

After Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites.] This god was the same with Moloch, whom he calls an abomination, because highly detested by God: who had given them a particular caution against worshipping the host of heaven (Deut. iv. 10). Now Moloch signifies the prince of that host, as I may call it, the sun; the king of heaven, as the moon was called the queen: in this all agree that Moloch comes from melech, which in the Hebrew language signifies a king, and is of the same import with Baal and Adonis (which signify lord), which were worshipped by many nations, as Moloch was: who was not the peculiar LORD, and went not fully after the LORD, as did David his father.

7 Then did Solomon build an high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill that is before Jerusalem, and for Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon.

8 And likewise did he for all his strange wives, which burnt incense and sacrificed unto their gods.

9 ¶ And the LORD was angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned from the LORD God of Israel, which had appeared unto him twice.

10 And had commanded him concerning this thing, that he should not go after other gods: but he kept not that which the LORD commanded.

11 Wherefore the LORD said unto Solomon, god of the Ammonites; but the god whom they principally worshipped.

Ver. 6.] And yet Abarinel thinks he did not commit idolatry by offering sacrifices to these false gods; but was only persuaded by his wives so far as to learn the manner after which they worshipped their gods, by being present at the rites of their religion. Which was a dangerous piece of learning; which he might have known without being present at their sacrifices.

Ver. 7. Chemosh.] Concerning Chemosh I have said enough elsewhere (see Numb. xxi. 29).

In the hill that is before Jerusalem.] He set up an altar upon the mount of Olives; where all the city of Jerusalem might see what they did. This contradicts Abarinel, and shows he was more than a spectator of their worship; which he encouraged by building an altar for it. And indeed that author is much to blame in abusing his excellent parts, to find excuses for such a foul crime.

For Molech.] In the same place, I suppose, Molech was worshipped; for he would not adventure to permit strange worship to be exercised in Jerusalem itself; though his posterity did. And so from little beginnings followed great mischiefs.

Ver. 8.] For what was granted to one, the rest would be apt to claim; or else complain of unkindness to them. It is an astonishing thing that a man of his wisdom should not rather have converted them all to his religion, than be seduced by them so much as to favour theirs. But he took no pains with them, having given up himself wholly to his pleasures; and growing conceited, perhaps, of his great wisdom, thought he could reconcile his religion with theirs; and find a good meaning in all their superstitions. Abarinel observes in several places, that it is never said Pharaoh's daughter turned away his heart from the LORD, or that he set up an altar for her: which is an argument she was proselyted to the true religion, and continued in it. As the rest might have been, if he had made it his business, and had not grown indifferent, and thought all religions alike. Which hath been the disease of some great wits.

Ver. 9.] First at Gibeon, in the beginning of his reign, iii. 5. and then at Jerusalem, after the building of the temple, ix. 2. There was another time when a message came to him, by the word of the LORD, vi. 12. But we do not read that God appeared to him more than twice; which was enough to establish him in his faith, fear, and love.

Ver. 10. That he should not go after other gods.] For in both those visions the happiness God promised him was declared to depend upon his observation of God's statutes, as David his father did (see iii. 14. ix. 4, 5). And when he had begun to build the tem-

Forasmuch as this is done of thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it to thy servant.

12 Notwithstanding in thy days I will not do it for David thy father's sake: but I will rend it out of the hand of thy son.

13 Howbeit I will not rend away all the kingdom; but will give one tribe to thy son for David my servant's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake which I have chosen.

14 ¶ And the LORD stirred up an adversary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite: he was of the king's seed in Edom.

15 For it came to pass, when David was in ple, he admonished him, that he had better desist than go on in that work, unless he intended to keep all his commandments, vii. 12, 13.

He kept not that which the LORD commanded.] Which was the greater crime, because he had so oft admonished him of his duty, and done such great things for him.

Ver. 11. The LORD said unto Solomon.] Either by some prophet, or by a vision: wherein he appeared to him as terribly as before he had done kindly, and pronounced this doom upon him. The former I think is most probable, that God would not vouchsafe to appear to him any more; but sent this message by Ahijah, or some other prophet.

I will surely rend the kingdom from thee.] Tear it in pieces, and give the greater part of it to one of his own subjects, viz. Jeroboam. This was enough to astonish any man, to hear that all his splendour should be so soon eclipsed, if he were not perfectly stupified; and it is likely it did make him reflect upon his folly; and, as many think, moved him to write the book of Ecclesiastes.

Ver. 12.] Though this was some mitigation of the punishment, that in his days the kingdom should continue entire; yet he humbled him by letting him know this favour was not granted for his sake, but for his father's, who had served him faithfully.

Ver. 13. I will not rend away all the kingdom.] In memory also of David's faithful service he adds another mitigation of the punishment: that the whole kingdom should not be torn from his son, but he would leave him one tribe, over which he should reign: which was that of Judah, unto which Benjamin was an appendix, being much mixed with it.

For Jerusalem's sake which I have chosen.] To be the place of his habitation, in the temple built there by Solomon, which he would suffer to remain to his posterity.

Ver. 14.] Though God did not execute the forementioned threatening till after his death, yet he began to afflict Solomon by raising up three adversaries against him: who disturbed his repose in his old age, when he most desired to be quiet. The first of them is here mentioned, who had a mortal hatred to Solomon, ever since the death of David, who had endeavoured to destroy him with every male in the country. But God restrained his wrath from attempting any thing against Solomon, as long as he observed God's commands.

Ver. 15. When David was in Edom.] To conquer the country: which he did entirely, and put garrisons into it (2 Sam. viii. 14. 1 Chron. xviii. 12, 13).

Joab—was gone up to bury the slain.] It is not to be supposed that the Edomites slew none of the Isra-

Edom, and Joab the captain of the host was gone up to bury the slain, after he had smitten every male in Edom;

16 (For six months did Joab remain there with all Israel, until he had cut off every male in Edom:)

17 That Hadad fled, he and certain Edomites of his father's servants with him, to go into Egypt; Hadad being yet a little child.

18 And they arose out of Midian, and came to Paran: and they took men with them out of Paran, and they came to Egypt, unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; which gave him an house, and appointed him victuals, and gave him land.

19 And Hadad found great favour in the sight of Pharaoh, so that he gave him to wife the sister of his own wife, the sister of Tahpenes the queen.

20 And the sister of Tahpenes bare him Genubath his son, whom Tahpenes weaned in Pharaoh's house: and Genubath was in Pharaoh's household among the sons of Pharaoh.

elites in the defence of their country: and those are they, it is probable, unto whom Joab, after he had done his business, went up to give an honourable interment.

After he had smitten every male] That is, all he could find; for some fled, as Hadad did.

Ver. 16. For six months did Joab remain there with all Israel,] That is, with all his army. Intending to extirpate the nation.

Ver. 17.] He being very young, some of his father's servants took him and hid him, and themselves with him, in some secret place; and when Joab was busy in giving a solemn burial to the Israelites, they took that opportunity to carry Hadad into Egypt.

Ver. 18. They arose out of Midian,] But first they went into Midian, that they might send from thence to know if Pharaoh would give them entertainment and protection.

Came to Paran,] Which was in the way to Egypt. For the wilderness of Paran lay between Edom and Egypt.

Took men with them] To attend Hadad; that he might appear like a young prince.

They came to Egypt, unto Pharaoh] He invited him not only to come into his country, but to his own palace.

Which gave him an house,] According to the manner of generous princes, who pity noble persons that are in distress; Pharaoh not only assigned him a house, and kept a table for him, that he might want nothing; but moreover gave him land, that out of its revenues he might provide himself an equipage suitable to his quality.

Ver. 19.] This argues a high esteem of him, for the princely qualities which it is likely appeared in him. Though sometimes the affections of kings are unaccountable, and they prefer those who do not deserve it.

Ver. 20.] The queen had as great a fondness for the child, as the king had for his father; and would have him nursed and weaned in Pharaoh's palace. He was educated among the king's children, as if he had been of them; which gave Hadad, no doubt, great reputation.

Ver. 21. That Joab—was dead,] Whom he dreaded more than David; having done that terrible execution upon his country, of destroying their males for six months together.

Let me depart, that I may go to mine own country.]

21 And when Hadad heard in Egypt that David slept with his fathers, and that Joab the captain of the host was dead, Hadad said to Pharaoh, Let me depart, that I may go to mine own country.

22 Then Pharaoh said unto him, But what hast thou lacked with me, that, behold, thou seekest to go to thine own country? And he answered, Nothing: howbeit, let me go in any wise.

23 ¶ And God stirred him up another adversary, Rezon the son of Eliadah, which fled from his lord Hadadezer king of Zobah:

24 And he gathered men unto him, and became captain over a band, when David slew them of Zobah: and they went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

25 And he was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon, beside the mischief that Hadad did: and he abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria.

26 ¶ And Jeroboam the son of Nebat, an

Which he hoped to recover, now that the great enemies of it were dead, and Solomon young.

Ver. 22.] Nothing would satisfy him but to go and attempt the regaining the dominion of Edom. Which some fancy he did, by the intercession of Pharaoh, who persuaded Solomon to let him reign in Edom, paying him a tribute; which now in the end of Solomon's reign he denied to pay, and rebelled against him. But this proceeds upon a supposition, that when David died Solomon was married, which is not true. Nor is it certain that he was the same Pharaoh whose daughter Solomon married, that had been so kind as to educate Hadad. It seems to me more likely, that though Hadad ventured to his own country, he durst not attempt any thing till Solomon began to decline in the favour of God, and of his people too. For if Hadad had moved any change of government, Solomon had forces enough to suppress him; and in his vigorous age, no doubt would have done it; he being so great a prince, and having so many chariots and horsemen always ready, that I am apt to think Hadad did not so much as enter into his own country, but lived somewhere near it; watching an opportunity to get possession of it; which he found in the conclusion of Solomon's reign.

Ver. 23.] When he saw his army beaten by king David, 2 Sam. viii. 3.

Ver. 24. He gathered men unto him,] Some of those that fled, when David defeated Hadadezer, enlisted themselves under Rezon; who became their commander. And it is probable, he lived after the manner of the Arabians, by plunder and robbery, all the days of David, and the best part of Solomon's reign.

And reigned in Damascus.] Not in the days of David, who had put a garrison into Damascus and brought the people under tribute (2 Sam. viii. 5, 6), And so they continued subject unto Solomon; till he, doting upon strange women, minded not the defence of his conquests. Which Rezon took the advantage of, and invaded and got possession of Damascus, and reigned there, as Hadad did in Edom.

Ver. 25. He was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon,] This is not to be understood of the whole reign of Solomon, which for the most part was peaceable (as was observed before, iv. 20. 25), but of all the days which remained of his life, from the time that his wives publicly exercised their idolatry, unto the day of his death.

Beside the mischief that Hadad did:] This signifies, Ephrathite of Zereda, Solomon's servant, whose mother's name was Zeruah, a widow woman, even he lifted up his hand against the king.

27 And this was the cause that he lifted up his hand against the king: Solomon built Millo, and repaired the breaches of the city of David his father.

28 And the man Jeroboam was a mighty man of valour: and Solomon seeing the young man that he was industrious, he made him ruler over all the charge of the house of Joseph.

29 And it came to pass at that time when Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, that the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite found him in the way; and he had clad himself with a new garment; and they two were alone in the field:

30 And Ahijah caught the new garment that was on him, and rent it in twelve pieces:

as Abarbinel thinks, that Rezon durst not have rebelled against Solomon, if Hadad had not led him the way; but seeing what success he had in Edom, he and his men seized on Damascus.

He abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria.] In combination with Hadad he defied Israel, and made himself king, not only of Damascus, but over all the country thereabout.

Ver. 26. Jeroboam—Solomon's servant,] In a public employment.

Lifted up his hand against the king:] Not against king Solomon, that we read of, but against his son; to whom he gave great disturbance, as soon as Solomon was dead.

Ver. 27.] This was the occasion of Jeroboam's advancement, as it follows in the next verse. For Solomon being engaged in many buildings, chose fitting persons to oversee his works; among which Jeroboam was one. Who took this opportunity to work in the people a disaffection to Solomon and his government, as Abarbinel and other of the Jews imagine. For he represented, say they, the building of Millo as a work of vanity, only to gratify Pharaoh's daughter: and the breaches of the city of David, they take to have been only open places, at which people might enter and come easily many ways to the king's palace: whereas, being stopped up by Solomon, access was not so easy, but they were forced to go about. This was represented as a grievance, especially since such heavy burdens were laid upon the people to maintain these expenses. But the text suggests nothing of this.

Ver. 28. Jeroboam was a mighty man of valour:] Of great courage and strength of body.

Solomon seeing—that he was industrious,] Very diligent in the business wherein he had employed him, of looking over his works.

He made him ruler over all the charge of the house of Joseph.] Gave him greater preferment, which was to look after the revenue of a whole province—the tribe of Ephraim, and, as some think, Manasseh also. This was a high obligation upon him; but it made him, the Hebrew doctors think, only more presumptuous to instil discontent into the people, who were unnecessarily burdened to support Solomon's vanity in such vast buildings as he undertook. If Jeroboam was guilty of joining with the people in their murmurings, and increasing them, this cannot properly be called lifting up the hand, that is, rebelling against Solomon: but was a preparation for it, and disposed the people to the revolt which afterward followed.

Ver. 29. When Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem,] Where he had been, it is likely, to give up his accounts, and was returning to his charge.

31 And he said to Jeroboam, take thee ten pieces: for thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee:

32 (But he shall have one tribe for my servant David's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, the city which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel:)

33 Because that they have forsaken me, and have worshipped Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, Chemosh the god of the Moabites, and Milcom the god of the children of Ammon, and have not walked in my ways, to do that which is right in mine eyes, and to keep my statutes and my judgments, as did David his father.

34 Howbeit I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand: but I will make him prince Ahijah—found him in the way;] Met with him as he was going along. Some of the Jewish doctors will have this prophet to be one of those who came out of Egypt with Moses, and therefore must be five hundred years old (see Selden, lib. ii. De Syndr. p. 668). Which, if it could be believed, made him the fitter person to reprove Jeroboam afterward for the sin of the golden calves, and also for the rebellion which he had seen punished in Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

He had clad himself with a new garment;] That he might make the better appearance at court, when he waited on the king.

They two were alone in the field:] The prophet, I suppose, took Jeroboam aside to speak with him privately: for it cannot be thought that Jeroboam had no servants to attend him; but they were bid to stay where they were, until the prophet and he went to confer about some private business.

Ver. 30.] An emblem of what followed, or rather a prediction of it: for there were two ways in those ancient days of foretelling things; one in express words, the other in signs and resemblances; according to the manner of the eastern people in the eldest times. Many instances we have of it, after this of Ahijah. As Zedekiah made himself a pair of iron horns, and said to Ahab, "With these shalt thou push the Syrians," &c. (xxii. 11), Elisha also foretold the victories of Joash, by shooting arrows and stamping on the ground so many times (2 Kings xiii. 18, &c.). Jeremiah foretold the pulling down of Jerusalem's pride, by the rotting of his girdle, where it was buried by Euphrates; and a great many more in the Old Testament, which continued in the New; Agabus foretelling the bonds of St. Paul, by binding his own hands and feet with St. Paul's girdle.

Ver. 31. Give ten tribes to thee:] Whence it is called frequently "the kingdom of the ten tribes."

Ver. 32. But he shall have one tribe] Besides his own. Or Benjamin and Judah may be looked upon but as one tribe; both of them having a share in the city of Jerusalem, and lying near one to the other.

For my servant David's sake,] See above, ver. 13.

Ver. 33. Because that they have forsaken me,] It seems by this, that some of the people, at least of Solomon's court, followed his bad example.

And have not walked in my ways,—as did David his father.] This was a great aggravation of his sin, that he had so good a father; who had given him an excellent education under Nathan the prophet (as I observed, 2 Sam. xii. 25), and a most pious example; having never gone after other gods, but celebrated the praises of the Lord with the highest strains of love and devotion.

all the days of his life for David my servant's sake, whom I chose, because he kept my commandments and my statutes :

35 But I will take the kingdom out of his son's hand, and will give it unto thee, even ten tribes.

36 And unto his son will I give one tribe, that David my servant may have a light always before me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen me to put my name there.

37 And I will take thee, and thou shalt reign according to all that thy soul desireth, and shalt be king over Israel.

38 And it shall be, if thou wilt hearken unto all that I command thee, and wilt walk in my

Ver. 34. Howbeit I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand :] No, not the kingdom of the ten tribes; which Solomon held as long as he lived. These and the following words explain the threatening (ver. 32), of "rending the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon," not to be meant of taking any part of it from him during his life.

But I will make him prince all the days of his life for David my servant's sake,] This was an admonition to Jeroboam not to molest Solomon in his lifetime, by raising rebellion against him; and also to walk in God's ways as David did, and not to fall into idolatry: for which sin God resolved to punish Solomon so severely, as to rend the greatest part of his kingdom from his posterity.

Ver. 35.] He bids him not doubt of what he promised: but he must stay for it till Solomon was dead.

Ver. 36. Unto his son will I give one tribe,] He saith one tribe, though there were two; because (as Abarinel observes) they had their portion and possession together in Jerusalem; and, though two tribes, were both called by the name of Judah; because of the eminence and glory of that tribe; which was so great, that, before the division of the kingdom, Judah is often mentioned as distinct from the rest of Israel (see 1 Sam. xi. 8. 2 Sam. v. 5).

That David my servant may have a light always before me in Jerusalem.] By a light is meant a succession of kings, who are called the light of the people (as David is, 2 Sam. xxi. 17), because they cheer them by their comfortable influence, when they govern well. And these are said to be before God in Jerusalem; because there he dwelt where they reigned.

Ver. 37. I will take thee,] From that condition wherein he was, and place him on a throne, as here follows.

Reign according to all that thy soul desireth,] Have a very flourishing kingdom.

King over Israel.] But not reign in Jerusalem.

Ver. 38.] The same promise that he made to David, 2 Sam. vii. 16, only he doth not say he would establish his kingdom for ever.

Give Israel unto thee.] Make them his obedient subjects.

Ver. 39. I will for this] For their sin mentioned ver. 33.

Afflict the seed of David,] By this rending the greatest part of the kingdom from them.

But not for ever.] For in the days of the Messiah, saith Rasi, the kingdom shall be restored to the house of David. And he might have added, that few returned out of their captivity but the house of Judah, who were delivered in a wonderful manner from Babylon.

Ver. 40. Solomon sought therefore to kill Jeroboam.] ways, and do that is right in my sight, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as David my servant did; that I will be with thee, and build thee a sure house, as I built for David, and will give Israel unto thee.

39 And I will for this afflict the seed of David, but not for ever.

40 Solomon sought therefore to kill Jeroboam. And Jeroboam arose, and fled into Egypt, unto Shishak king of Egypt, and was in Egypt until the death of Solomon.

41 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Solomon, and all that he did, and his wisdom, are they not written in the book of the acts of Solomon?

A sign of his dotage; that he could entertain a thought of endeavouring to defeat the purpose of God! But how he came to know what was secretly transacted between Ahijah and Jeroboam alone, is a great question. Perhaps the prophet made no scruple to report what he had delivered in the name of the Lord. Or, Jeroboam himself, being puffed up with this assurance, could not contain, but told it to some of his confidants, who spread it abroad. Or, his servants, though they heard not a word spoken, yet seeing the rending of his garment into twelve parts, and the giving ten to him, might speak of it: the meaning of which Solomon easily understood; being told (by the same prophet, perhaps) that the kingdom should be rent from him, and given to his servant, ver. 11.

Fled into Egypt.] This was a common refuge for discontented people. And it may seem strange that the king of Egypt, being nearly allied to Solomon, either his father-in-law or brother-in-law (for many think the father of Solomon's wife was dead), should give such persons entertainment. But it is to be considered that "kingdoms are never married;" and princes commonly regard only their own interest.

Unto Shishak king of Egypt.] All the kings of Egypt had the title of Pharaoh, even from the time of Abraham; but we never find any of them, till now, called by his proper name, to distinguish him from other Pharaohs, unless Remesis (Gen. xlvii. 11) be the name of a king, not of a country. Now all agree that this is the great king who is called by the Greek Sesostris: who having subdued Ethiopia, extended his conquests into Asia, as far as the Assyrians and Medes, as Josephus tells us, who calls him Sethosis, lib. i. contra Apion.

Was in Egypt until the death of Solomon.] Being protected by Shishak: who, it is likely, was now projecting the great conquest he made afterward.

Ver. 41.] All the kings of Israel, as Abarinel thinks, maintained some wise men, who wrote all that passed in their reign. Perhaps this was begun by Solomon (for we read not of any book of the acts of David), and out these annals, the sacred writer of this book took what he thought most useful, and omitted the rest which he did not judge so necessary and instructive.

Ver. 42. The time that Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel] There seems to have been no need to say he reigned in Jerusalem, since he reigned over all Israel; if it had not been to show the great tranquillity of his reign. Which was such, that he did not go out to war as other kings, but lived quietly in his royal city.

Was forty years.] He lost the great privilege of long life, which God promised if he performed such sincere obedience as David did; unto whose age he did not attain.

Ver. 43.] Thus concludes the history of this great 42 And the time that Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel was forty years.

43 And Solomon slept with his fathers, and man; without any the least mention of his repentance; though he saw terrible punishments coming upon his family. Which should have moved him (one would think) to pull down the high places he had built for idolatrous worship, and abandon all his strange wives; and do some remarkable honour to the Lord God of Israel. Which if he did, the divine writer did not think fit to record it, but to leave all in uncertainty, and leave a blot upon his memory; that all posterity might have a frightful example of human weakness, and learn thereby to watch and pray, lest they enter into temptation.

CHAPTER XII.

1 The Israelites, assembled at Shechem to crown Rehoboam, by Jeroboam make a suit of relaxation unto him.
6 Rehoboam, refusing the old men's counsel, by the advice of young men, answereth them roughly.
16 Ten tribes revolting, kill Adoram, and make Rehoboam to flee. 21 Rehoboam raising an army, is forbidden by Shemaiah. 25 Jeroboam strengtheneth himself by cities, 26 and by the idolatry of the two calves.

1 AND Rehoboam went to Shechem: for all Israel were come to Shechem to make him king.

2 And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was yet in Egypt, heard of it, (for he was fled from the presence of king Solomon, and Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt:)

3 That they sent and called him. And Jeroboam and all the congregation of Israel came, and spake unto Rehoboam, saying,

4 Thy father made our yoke grievous: now therefore make thou the grievous service of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Depart yet for three days, then come again to me. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam consulted with the old men, that stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, and said, How do ye advise that I may answer this people?

CHAP. XII.

Ver. 1. Rehoboam went to Shechem:] A multitude of children was accounted a great blessing among the Israelites: but if Solomon had any more besides this son and two daughters, mentioned iv. 11. 15, this holy writer would not do him the honour to mention them, but passes them by in silence: nor doth he vouchsafe to acquaint us (as is usual) in the beginning of his story, from whom Rehoboam was descended by the mother's side; but in the conclusion mentions it twice (xiv. 21. 31) that she was an Ammonitess, one of an infamous nation. Howsoever, though he was not entirely an Israelite, he pretended to the kingdom; being the eldest, if not the only son of Solomon, to whom it belonged by the law then established; which ever after continued in Judah. That which follows shows this was the opinion of all the people.

All Israel were come to Shechem to make him king.] To acknowledge him for their sovereign, as rightful successor to Solomon. They met for this purpose at Shechem, because it was the most convenient place, being in the middle of the kingdom: or, as others think, because it was in the tribe of Ephraim; where they could speak their minds more freely than they durst at Jerusalem, which was in the tribe of Judah. And this hath some colour in it, from what follows; that they sent for Jeroboam to meet them there, who would not venture to come to Jerusalem.

Ver. 2. Heard of it,] The words of it are not in the original, but only that he heard: either of this meeting, or of the death of Solomon, or both: for he could not hear of this meeting without hearing of his death.

Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt;] As hath been related in the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 3. That they sent and called him.] At the same time that he heard of this meeting, and the occasion of it, a message came to him from the assembly, to desire his assistance.

All the congregation] By all the congregation is meant all their elders, and heads of their tribes; who chose Jeroboam to be their speaker.

Ver. 4.] They begin with a complaint against the former government; but promise to submit to Rehoboam as their king, and be his faithful subjects, if he would promise to ease them of those burdens which his father had imposed on them. Which were not so heavy as they represented them; considering the peace and plenty they enjoyed (iv. 25) and the vast riches he brought into the kingdom: so that silver was nothing accounted of in his days (x. 21). But people are more sensible of the smallest pressures, than of all their enjoyments: and most sensible of the least burden, when they are at perfect ease. Such were the tributes he exacted for his buildings, the expenses of his family, and maintenance of chariots and horsemen, which were all for the honour of the nation, and employed great numbers of them. Abarnel thinks it is possible, when war was raised by Hadad and by Rezon against him, in his latter days, the tribute might be increased, and occasion their grumbling. But howsoever that be, it is observable that they make no complaints at all of Solomon's idolatry, and the strange worship he introduced; about which they were not concerned, but rather complied with him (see xi. 33).

Ver. 5.] He desired time to consider, in so weighty a business; pretending, I suppose, he would examine the truth of their allegations: otherwise it had been dangerous to send them away without any answer, when it was evident they were disgusted.

Ver. 6. King Rehoboam] By this it is plain he had a title to the kingdom; though they had not yet made a recognition, as we speak, of his authority.

Consulted with the old men, that stood before Solomon] Solomon was so wise, as in his best days not to depend solely on his own wisdom; but had other wise men, with whom he advised, as his counsellors, in all matters of moment.

How do ye advise that I may answer this people?] Being men of great experience, who had learned, no

7 And they spake unto him, saying, If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day, and wilt serve them, and answer them, and speak good words to them, then they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But he forsook the counsel of the old men, which they had given him, and consulted with the young men that were grown up with him, and which stood before him :

9 And he said unto them, What counsel give ye that we may answer this people, who have spoken to me, saying, Make the yoke which thy father did put upon us lighter ?

10 And the young men that were grown up with him spake unto him saying, Thus shalt thou speak unto this people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it lighter unto us ; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

doubt, much wisdom under so wise a king as Solomon, he had reason both to consult such sages, and to depend upon their advice, as likely to be most prudent and safe.

Ver. 7.] This was most solid advice, to get possession of the kingdom, and then he might govern as his father had done. And he might easily be possessed of it, by condescending to them for once, and giving them such an answer as they desired ; which would oblige them to him for ever. For to be their servant one day, signified no more than to court them with good words, and kind promises, to be an easy governor of them : which would win their hearts, and make them submit cheerfully to him ; and give him the same power which his father had.

Ver. 8. But he forsook the counsel of the old men.] He was proud and vain, I suppose, and scorned to court his people ; expecting obedience unto him, as an absolute monarch.

And consulted with the young men] He had made some of his familiars, who had been bred up with him and attended him, to be now of his privy-council : men inexperienced, and who understood not the humour of the people ; which is a frequent fault of new kings, who, to show their power, presently change their counsellors, and put in new officers ; to gratify all their dependants ; not considering who are wisest, but who have been their companions.

Ver. 9.] It is likely he told them what the old counsellors had said ; who, they thought, were too timorous, and therefore give more bold and fierce advice.

Ver. 10. The young men that were grown up with him] They were not so young but they might have had more wit (if they had not been men of pleasure) ; for Rehoboam being one-and-forty years old when he began to reign (xiv. 21) and these men growing up with him, were about the same age.

Thus shalt thou speak, &c.] They advise him to threaten to lay burdens upon them as much heavier than his father's as the loins are thicker than the little finger : words of infamy, madness, stupidity, and full of lies, as Abarbinel here glosses : for he magnifies himself, as if his power excelled his father's unto whom he was nothing comparable. And if it had been true, it did not become him to boast on this fashion ; but he ought rather to have highly magnified the glory and majesty of his father.

Ver. 11. Whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke,] What a senseless stupidity was this (as 11 And now whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke : my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 ¶ So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day as the king had appointed, saying, Come again to me the third day.

13 And the king answered the people roughly, and forsook the old men's counsel that they gave him ;

14 And spake to them after the counsel of the young men, saying, My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke : my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people ; for the cause was from the Lord, that he might perform his saying, which the Lord spake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

the same author proceeds) to grant the accusation to be true which they brought against his father, and not rather to have excused and defended so excellent a prince, from whom they could not but acknowledge they had received exceeding great benefits ?

My father hath chastised you with whips,] This is still worse, to accuse his father of such severity (which the people did not), that he treated the Israelites like beasts : for a "whip is for a horse" as Solomon observes, Prov. xxvi. 3. And who could endure to hear him say, that he would treat them far more severely, and tear their very flesh in pieces ? For that is meant by scorpions, whips with rowels in them (as we speak), which Abarbinel calls iron thorns (see Bochartus, in his Hierozoicon, par. ii. lib. iv. cap. 32). Ralbag simply calls them thorns tied to a whip, which grievously pricked and tore the flesh (see Carpovius upon Schickard's Jus Regium, cap. 2. Theor. 7. p. 143). What people could bear this with patience, or endure to come under the yoke of such a furious prince ?

Ver. 12.] In which time wiser thoughts, one would have expected, should have taken place : but Solomon had observed, that "there is no counsel, nor understanding, nor wisdom, against the Lord" (Prov. xxi. 30) whose doing this was, as it follows, ver. 15.

Ver. 13.] He answered them like a tyrant, not like a king.

Ver. 14. Spake to them after the counsel of the young men,] Which was most suitable to a prince of a high and violent spirit.

My father made your yoke heavy, &c.] He thought, it is likely, to have frightened them into obedience by this blustering language, which justly made him odious.

Ver. 15. The king hearkened not unto the people :] Who desired to be eased of their burdens.

For the cause was from the Lord,] God infatuated his counsels to bring about his own design. Otherwise, he could not have been so blinded, as not to see how basely he reflected upon his father ; and how unlikely it was that the people would submit to such a power as he intended to exercise over them. But, as Livy excellently speaks, "fatis urgentibus rempublicam, omnia salutaria monita spernuntur." And here cannot but observe the vast difference there is between the sacred and profane historians. The intention of the former is to possess men's minds with a sense of divine providence, which secretly rules in all public, as well as private affairs. Machiavel himself, though far from being religious, was sensible of an 16 ¶ So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them, the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: to your tents, O Israel: now see to thine own house, David. So Israel departed unto their tents.

17 But as for the children of Israel which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent Adoram, who was over the tribute; and all Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. Therefore king Rehoboam made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

19 So Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day.

20 And it came to pass, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again, that they sent and called him unto the congregation, and made him king over all Israel: there was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only.

21 ¶ And when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he assembled all the house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam the son of Solomon.

Rehoboam made speed to get him up to his chariot to flee to Jerusalem.] This seems to be a further imprudence; for he should have maintained his ground and kept footing (as we speak) in the country of Israel; from whence it might not have been easy for them to expel him: "but fear is as bad an adviser as fury." This is the first time that we read of a king riding in a chariot; for we never read that either Saul, or David, or Solomon, rode in them: but after the division of the kingdom, there is frequent mention of the use of them both by the kings of Judah and Israel.

Ver. 19. So Israel rebelled against the house of David] Would no longer be governed by any of David's race; who had been their deliverer from their powerful enemies. The remembrance of which might have made them more patient; and not so forward to revolt from a family to which they had been so much obliged. But old kindnesses are laid asleep, and people are strangely forgetful of benefits, as Pindar speaks, in Isthmia, ode 7.

Χάρης, ἀνέμωρες δὲ βροτοί.

This defection from the family of David is justly called a rebellion, as Salianus notes in his Annals; for though God willed this defection as a punishment of sin, yet they did wickedly who were the authors of it. And though the family of Solomon deserved such a punishment, yet the people had no just reason to forsake their legal prince. For they had no order from God for it: and Rehoboam's answer to them did not deserve such a resentment; much less so sudden and inconsiderate. Nor did the prophetic warrant it: which might have been fulfilled some other way, than by such a violent throwing off his government.

Ver. 20. When all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again.] The great men had seen him, and needed not to be informed of his return (ver. 3); but now the news was spread over all the country.

Called him unto the congregation.] From his tent, unto which he was gone, as other people were (ver. 16).

Made him king over all Israel.] Without any condition, that we can find, though it is likely he promised to ease them of all their burdens.

There was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah.] Which comprehends Benjamin also, being one with it, as was observed before (xi. 31, 32). And it was by the singular providence of God, that they were not also tempted to desert such a haughty prince as Rehoboam was.

Ver. 21.] This was a very potent tribe, especially assisted by Benjamin, and wanted not affection to the house of David, which they had expressed upon all occasions; and were ready now, with a very nume-overruling power interposing in all things, which few historians acknowledge so as they ought: but rather write, as if they would not have their reader think of any thing but the wisdom, strength, and policy, of those that manage affairs, without any consideration of the care God takes of them. Of this Hermannus Conringius thinks Polybius himself to have been guilty, whatsoever excuses Casaubon makes for him (De Civili Prudentia, cap. 11).

Ver. 16. What portion have we in David?] They renounce all interest in him, and in his family.

Neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse.] So they call David in a contemptuous and scornful manner. Wherein they have left us an exact picture of an ungrateful world, as Victorinus Strigelius here speaks. For no eloquence is able to express the great merits of David to the children of Israel.

To your tents, O Israel.] They left Rehoboam, and bade him look to his own affairs; for they would have nothing to do with him. Thus other kingdoms have been overturned by the folly of heady young men: as an old poet observes in Tully's book De Senectute, cap. 6, where he quotes these verses out of Nævius in a play of his, in which one asks,

"Cedo, qui vestram rempublicam tantam amisistis tam cito."

"Tell me, I beseech thee, how you came to lose such a famous commonwealth so quickly?"

Unto which he brings in another returning this answer,

"Proventabant oratores novi, stulti adolescentuli."

"There arose up new orators, a company of foolish youths."

Upon which Cato makes this remark; viz.

"Temeritas est florentis ætatis, prudentia senescentis."

"Rashness is the property of youth, prudence belongs to old age."

Ver. 17.] As several of the Simeonites also did; who were very nearly situated to Judah.

Ver. 18. Rehoboam sent Adoram.] This was a new piece of imprudence, to send one to treat with them, when they were so highly exasperated; and to send him (with promises, perhaps, of easing them, when it was too late) who had the principal care of those tributes, of which they complained. For people hate those that are the instruments of their oppression, or any way employed in it.

All Israel stoned him with stones, that he died.] There was a general uproar against him; in which they committed this barbarity against the law of all nations; which prohibits any violence to be done to a king's ambassador. But in their rage, the king feared (it appears by the next words) they would have no respect to himself.

22 But the word of God came unto Shemaiah the man of God, saying,

23 Speak unto Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and unto all the house of Judah, and Benjamin, and to the remnant of the people, saying,

24 Thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel: return every man to his house; for this thing is from me. They hearkened therefore to the word of the LORD, and returned to depart, according to the word of the LORD.

25 ¶ Then Jeroboam built Shechem in mount rous army, to fall upon the Israelites, before their new king was settled in his throne, and bring them back to their rightful king.

Ver. 22.] A person, known to be a prophet, was sent to them from God with a message, before they marched to the country of Israel.

Ver. 23. Speak unto Rehoboam,—king of Judah,] God himself owns him for no more than king of Judah.

To the remnant] Unto those mentioned, ver. 17.

Ver. 24. Thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel: return every man to his house; for this thing is from me.] Who was resolved to maintain what he had done. It was the intention and design of God to make Jeroboam king; but he did not stay for his appointment, but usurped the kingdom by the help of certain vain fellows, who raised a sedition against Rehoboam (see 2 Chron. xiii. 5—7). And besides, God did not promise to set his posterity upon his throne (as he did to David and Solomon), unless he kept his commandments, which he did not: and therefore, though he saith “the thing was from him,” yet the setting his son upon the throne after him, and the succeeding kings, was not from him; but in Hosea he saith (viii. 4), “They have set up kings, but not by me: they have set up princes, and I knew it not;” i. e. did not approve it.

They hearkened therefore to the word of the Lord,] Now Rehoboam was cool, and began to be wise, in not resisting the counsel of God, who had taken the kingdom from him; but submitting to his decree, and bearing it patiently. The people, at least, were of this mind, and persuaded him not to engage in a war, wherein God would not appear against him. According to the counsel of Menander mentioned by Strigelius, Μὴ θεομάχεαι, μηδὲ προσάγων τῷ πράγματι χειμῶνας ἱέρους, τοῖς δὲ ἀναγκάσιους φέρε. “Fight not against God; neither do any thing to bring upon thyself new storms and tempests: but bear those that are necessary, and cannot be avoided.”

Ver. 25. Then Jeroboam built Shechem] For there it is likely they chose him king; and therefore he enlarged and beautified it (which is meant by built), to be his royal seat.

And built Penuel.] But this did not satisfy him, he removed from thence to another city, which he also built; and so became a builder as well as Solomon, with whose buildings he is thought to have found fault.

Ver. 26.] Though God had told him he would build him a sure house (xi. 37, 38), if he kept his commandments, yet he did not trust to his promise; but after he had been some time possessed of the kingdom, began to fear a revolt of the people, if he permitted them to worship God according to the law; and so contrived to make an alteration in religion.

Ver. 27.] All the people of Israel being bound at Ephraim, and dwelt therein; and went out from thence, and built Penuel.

26 And Jeroboam said in his heart, Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David:

27 If this people go up to do sacrifice in the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, then shall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah, and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah.

28 Whereupon the king took counsel, and made two calves of gold, and said unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: be-the three great feasts to go up to Jerusalem to worship; as also, upon other solemn occasions, devout persons going thither to offer gifts and sacrifices; he was afraid they would be so taken with the splendour and magnificence of the temple, and of the royal city, and recall to memory the famous acts of David and Solomon, who were buried there; and the king would find such means to oblige them, and the priests and Levites to solicit them to unite themselves again to Judah (who appeared to have the better cause, having the temple in possession where God dwelt), that they would be drawn not only to forsake him, but to kill him. For besides all this, their belief of one only God was the principal cause of union among them: and next to that was their worshipping God at one only place. Therefore, instead of consulting God, and committing himself to him, who could and would have preserved him in the kingdom he had given him, notwithstanding all these dangers; he took counsel, as it here follows, of such as were governed only by reasons of state, and devised how to establish himself by wicked inventions.

The Talmudists, after their manner, add another reason why he took the following resolution. For, saith R. Nachman (in the Gemara of the Sanhedrin, cap. 11. n. 46), the custom being that none should sit in the court of the temple, but only the king of the house of David, he thought with himself, that if the people saw Rehoboam sit, and him stand, they would conclude the former to be king, and Jeroboam but his servant. Another reason is alleged by Kimchi: when the year of release came, Jeroboam said within himself, it is written (Deut. xxxi. 10, 11), “At the end of every seventh year thou shalt read this law in the ears of all Israel, &c. Now if I attempt to read it, the people will say, The king who is in “the place which God hath chosen” (i. e. Jerusalem) must read first, and so I must read it after him, which will be a disgrace to me: and if I read it not at all it will be worse, for I shall be thought profane. But these, and such-like, are frivolous reasons, for his resolution to draw the people from the worship of God according to the law, at his own house at Jerusalem.

Ver. 28. Whereupon the king took counsel,] Of some secular politicians, who, if they could but preserve the civil government, cared not what became of religion. The Jews in the place above mentioned, in the Sanhedrin, tell the story in this manner; That he summoned a council, consisting partly of pious, partly of wicked men; whom he asked whether they would subscribe to all that he ordered. They answered, Yes. Then he said, he would be constituted their king: to which they consenting, he asked if they would obey him. To which there being a ready compliance, he added, Even though I command you to serve idols! at which the pious men startled, and were full of indignation; but their wicked neighbours whispered to them, saying, Do you think that Jero-hold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

29 And he set the one in Beth-el, and the other put he in Dan.

30 And this thing became a sin: for the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan.

31 And he made an house of high places, and boam will honour idols? he saith this only to try your obedience. And so even Abijah himself was drawn in, by this fraud, to subscribe to what he proposed, that they would be obedient in all things without exception.

Made two calves of gold.] One egg, as Bochartus speaks, is not more like to another, than these calves were to that which Aaron made. Only, as the Jews say in Sanhedrin, "till Jeroboam's time the Israelites sucked but one calf; but from that time they sucked two." They were of the same matter with Aaron's, and made for the same reason: his, because Moses was absent; and these, because the holy city (where the temple, the altar, the priests of God were) they could not come to with safety. And as Aaron, so Jeroboam learnt this calf-worship in Egypt, where he lived for some years. The LXX. translate these words, δύο δαμάσεις χρυσῆς, "two she-calves;" and so doth Josephus: and the prophet Hosea also speaks of them in the feminine gender (x. 5), by way of contempt and despal, as Bochartus thinks. It is not improbable (as some learned men have conjectured), that he made two calves, in imitation of the Egyptians, with whom he had conversed, who had a couple of oxen which they worshipped; Apis at Memphis, the metropolis of the upper Egypt; and Mnevis at Hierapolis, which was the chief city of the lower.

It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem.] Or, as some expound the Hebrew words, "You have gone long enough to Jerusalem."

Behold, thy gods, O Israel.] The very same words that Aaron had spoken, Exod. xxxii. 4, and they had the same meaning. For he would have them think, that there was no need of going up to Jerusalem, three times a year, with labour and charge; when the true God, who brought their fathers out of Egypt, dwelt among them there no less than at Jerusalem. For God is everywhere in his essence (it is likely he told them), and cannot be included in any place; and if they required any special symbols of his presence, behold, here they were in those calves which he set up. As if every man had power to devise out of his own head, a symbol of God's presence (see Vossius, De Orig. et Progr. Idolol. lib. i. cap. 3).

Ver. 29.] The former of which was in the south, the latter in the north of the country of Israel; and as Beth-el was in every body's opinion a sacred place (having been consecrated by Jacob, when God appeared to him there more than once), so Dan had been famous for the teraphim of Micah: unto which there had been great resort, a long time (Judg. xviii. 30). For such reasons as these, it is likely, he waved his royal city, which was Shechem; and chose these two places for the residence of the Divine Majesty: for so he pretended that these calves represented God; whom he did not forsake, but worshipped him in these symbols of his presence.

Ver. 30. This thing became a sin.] Led them into foul idolatry; for that was the sin which Jeroboam is so often accused of: and the setting a calf in Dan was a high aggravation of their sin: there being no pretence for two calves; nor for placing one there, where God had never been extraordinarily present.

made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi.

32 And Jeroboam ordained a feast in the eighth month, on the fifteenth day of the month, like unto the feast that is in Judah, and he offered upon the altar. So did he in Beth-el, sacrificing unto the calves that he had made: and

For the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan.] Which place being in the extreme part of the country, yet the people were so zealous in their idolatry, that they travelled to offer sacrifice there; so that they who thought it grievous to go to worship God at Jerusalem, did not think much to go a great deal farther to worship an idol. This seems to me the simplest meaning; which others take to be, that they who dwell in Beth-el were so zealous, that they would go as far as Dan to worship the other calf.

Ver. 31. He made an house of high places.] That is, saith Abarinel, he made a house or temple at Dan; wherein there was not one altar only, as there was at Jerusalem, but a great many high places.

And made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi.] The Hebrew words miketzoth haam should not be interpreted "the lowest of the people;" but, as the same Abarinel expounds it, "out of all the people;" he made any body a priest, though he was not of the sons of Levi. And Bochartus hath justified this exposition, by a great many examples of the use of these words in other places. To this Jeroboam was forced, because the Levites would not serve his impiety (2 Chron. xi. 14), and therefore he expelled them all, and seized on their cities and lands. Whereby, as he eased the people of paying their tithes, there being none to demand them; so he gratified them by making priests out of every tribe and family; even "in the extremest part of the country," as the Hebrew words signify. Thus, as he transferred the kingdom from the house of David, so he transferred the priesthood from the family of Aaron, and let it loose, that any body might be admitted to that honourable employment. Which was a very popular thing, and ingratiated him, no doubt, with the Israelites. And Cornel. Bertram thinks that as he had priests, so he had Levites also of the same stamp; that is, some to officiate under the priests, as they did. The former he called cohenim, as they were called in Judah; the other he called cemarim, who ministered as the Levites did; but in black, not in white garments, and thence had their name (De Republ. Judaica, cap. 16).

Ver. 32. Jeroboam ordained a feast.] That is, the feast of tabernacles; which by the law was to be celebrated on the fifteenth day of the seventh month. This he altered, and, as Abarinel thinks, might possibly give this reason for his impious presumption; that this feast being instituted by God after the gathering of their fruits, which were sooner ripe about Jerusalem than in the northern parts of the country; he pretended the eighth month would be a better time for it than the seventh; because then they would be everywhere gathered. But his chief intention in this change, was to alienate the people from the rites observed at Jerusalem.

He offered upon the altar.] This was a high presumption, to invade the priesthood himself, and offer sacrifices to his gods. A crime which none of the kings of Judah were guilty of, but only Uzziah; who was smitten with a leprosy, for meddling with the priests' office, 2 Chron. xxvi. 19.

So did he in Beth-el.] What he had done in Dan, he placed in Beth-el the priests of the high places which he had made.

33 So he offered upon the altar which he had made in Beth-el the fifteenth day of the eighth he did also in Beth-el; for hitherto hath been related only what he did in the remotest place.

He placed in Beth-el the priests of the high places] There he also built a house, or temple; and set up many altars in it, where these priests officiated as they did in other high places.

Ver. 33. So he offered upon the altar which he had made in Beth-el] There he began this new festival, and consecrated it himself.

In the month which he had devised of his own heart;] Out of his own will and pleasure (as the Targum translates it), against the express ordinance of God.

Ordained a feast.] To be observed, I suppose, every year in Beth-el, as the feast of tabernacles was at Jerusalem. And it is likely it lasted as many days; unless he affected to make alterations in every thing, and ordained more, or fewer days, as he thought good.

He offered upon the altar and burnt incense.] He month, even in the month which he had devised of his own heart; and ordained a feast unto the children of Israel: and he offered upon the altar, and burnt incense.

presumed to perform the highest part of the priests' office, which was to burn incense. Which he had not done in Dan, as Abarbinel thinks, but only in Beth-el; which was in some regard the metropolis of his kingdom, and head of the tribe of Ephraim: to which place the prophet, mentioned in the next chapter, came, and not to Dan. He observes also that the scripture saith thrice he offered upon the altar, speaking of different times and places. First it is said, ver. 30, that he offered upon the altar; that is, at Dan, where all Israel went to worship. Secondly, he offered again in Beth-el, in the beginning of this verse. And then it is said here in conclusion, that he ascended the altar in Beth-el, not to offer sacrifice, but to burn incense, which he had not done in Dan. And when he burned incense on the feast-day he had instituted, the man of God came from Judah, and prophesied against the altar, as it follows in the next chapter.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Jeroboam's hand, that offered violence to him that prophesied against his altar at Beth-el, withereth, 6 and at the prayer of the prophet is restored. 7 The prophet, refusing the king's entertainment, departeth from Beth-el. 11 An old prophet, seducing him, bringeth him back. 20 He is reproved by God, 23 slain by a lion, 26 buried by the old prophet, 31 who confirmeth his prophecy. 33 Jeroboam's obstinacy.

1 AND, behold, there came a man of God out of Judah by the word of the LORD unto Beth-el: and Jeroboam stood by the altar to burn incense.

2 And he cried against the altar in the word of the LORD, and said, O altar, altar, thus saith the LORD; Behold, a child shall be born unto the house of David, Josiah by name; and upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high places that burn incense upon thee, and men's bones shall be burnt upon thee.

3 And he gave a sign the same day, saying, This is the sign which the LORD hath spoken; Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out.

4 And it came to pass, when king Jeroboam heard the saying of the man of God, which had cried against the altar in Beth-el, that he put

CHAPTER XIII.

Ver. 1. There came a man of God out of Judah] That is, a prophet; for none are called men of God, but prophets. And so this man is called below (ver. 18); whence Kimchi concludes David was a prophet, because he is called a man of God. And this prophet is thought by the Jews to be Iddo; whose vision against Jeroboam is mentioned 2 Chron. ix. 29. But this is an evident mistake; for Iddo was alive in the days of Ahijah the son of Rehoboam (2 Chron. xiii. 22), whereas this prophet here spoken of, was killed immediately after this prophecy. Therefore they were not the same; unless we suppose that what is here related fell out in the latter end of Jeroboam's reign. Tertullian in his book De Jejuniis, cap. 16, calls him Sameas; where Rigaltius observes, that Josephus calls him Jadon, and Epiphanius Joam.

By the word of the Lord unto Beth-el:] By a particular command of God.

Jeroboam stood by the altar] Upon that feast-day which he had instituted. See the last verse of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 2. He cried against the altar] Declared it and the worship there performed, to be idolatrous; which he spake by authority from God.

O altar, altar,] Some think he mentioned the altar twice, to signify that he prophesied against that in Dan, as well as against this in Beth-el.

A child shall be born unto the house of David, Josiah by name;] The prophets saw things future, as if they were present. And though this was not to come to pass till above three hundred and sixty years after this time, yet this man of God foretells it, as if it were to be done ere long. And the prediction is the more wonderful, because he tells out of what family he should spring, and what should be his name.

Upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high places] The meaning is not that he should burn the priests alive; but the execution of this prophecy explains it: that he should slay the priests of the high places, and then burn their bones, as he did the bones of those that had been buried, and thereby defile this altar (2 Kings xxiii. 15, 16, 20).

Ver. 3. He gave a sign] To confirm this prophecy.

This is the sign] A proof that he spake from God, and not from himself.

The altar shall be rent, and the ashes—poured out.] This could not be done, but by the power of God; who hereby demonstrated he had sent this prophet to speak these words; which were presently fulfilled.

Ver. 4. Which had cried against the altar in Beth-el,] forth his hand from the altar, saying, Lay hold on him. And his hand, which he put forth against him, dried up, so that he could not pull it in again to him.

5 The altar also was rent, and the ashes poured out from the altar, according to the sign which the man of God had given by the word of the Lord.

6 And the king answered and said unto the man of God, Entreat now the face of the Lord thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may be restored me again. And the man of God besought the Lord, and the king's hand was restored him again, and became as it was before.

7 And the king said unto the man of God, Come home with me, and refresh thyself, and I will give thee a reward.

8 And the man of God said unto the king, If thou wilt give me half thy house, I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place :

9 For so was it charged me by the word of the Lord, saying, Eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the same way that thou camest.

10 So he went another way, and returned not by the way that he came to Beth-el.

11 ¶ Now there dwelt an old prophet in Beth-el ; and his sons came and told him all the works that the man of God had done that day in Beth-el : the words which he had spoken unto the king, them they told also to their father.

12 And their father said unto them, What way went he ? For his sons had seen what way the man of God went, which came from Judah.

13 And he said unto his sons, Saddle me the ass. So they saddled him the ass : and he rode thereon, 14 And went after the man of God, and found him sitting under an oak : and he said unto him, Art thou the man of God that camest from Judah ? And he said, I am.

15 Then he said unto him, Come home with me, and eat bread.

16 And he said, I may not return with thee,

In the presence of the king himself, when he was about the solemn service of his gods.

He put forth his hand from the altar,] Where he stood (ver. 1).

Lay hold on him,] As he himself would have done, had he been near him.

His hand—dried up,] The muscles and sinews shrunk, so that it was stiff and rigid, and he perfectly lost the use of it. Which prodigy was a new token, that the prophet's words would be fulfilled.

Ver. 5.] Which so amazed all the people, that we do not find any body went about to lay hold on him ; but Jeroboam himself was, for the present, astonished at the miraculous power of God.

Ver. 6. Entreat now the face of the Lord] A marvellous change ! He that just now threatened, humbly supplicates him that smote him.

That my hand may be restored] He was convinced that healing must come from the same hand that gave the wound ; and that it was in vain to seek to his gods.

The king's hand was restored] He did not intend his destruction, but his reformation ; and therefore granted his request. Whereby a new miracle was wrought for his conversion.

Ver. 7.] A strange insensibility of God's great mercy to him, which did not lead him to repentance, when it moved him to so much gratitude as to desire to reward him that was the instrument of his cure. His hand was restored, but not a good mind.

Ver. 8.] For he had a charge from God (as it follows) not to communicate with them, who were apostates from their religion.

Ver. 9. For so was it charged me by—the Lord,] The same Divine authority, which sent him thither to do what they had heard and seen, gave him this following charge.

Eat no bread, &c.] The reason is plain, why he should not eat or drink with them ; because that was to have familiar society with idolaters. But why he should not return the same way that he came, is not so evident. Some think it was to represent, that even the way to Beth-el was abominable ; and therefore not to be frequented ; or, to show how much we ought to abhor that which leads to evil. But it seems to be a proverbial speech ; signifying that he should be constant and steadfast in executing the charge committed to him. For he that doth any thing without success is said to return by the way that he went (Isa. xxxvii. 29. 34). And therefore, not to return by the way that he went, is to do his business effectually.

Ver. 10.] To show (as many think) how God detests the way to idolatry ; and would have it to be forgotten.

Ver. 11. There dwelt an old prophet] One who had many years been a prophet before this apostacy ; whose name the Jews say was Micah : who was a worshipper of the true God, though he dwelt among this idolatrous people. A great many take him to have been a false prophet ; but Theodoret proves that he was a true, though guilty of telling a lie to the man of God (see Hermannus Witsius's Miscellanea, tom. i. p. 142, &c.).

In Beth-el:] He was originally of Samaria, as we learn from 2 Kings xxiii. 18. But removed hither, it is likely, since this revolution, that he might see what Jeroboam designed.

His sons came and told him] In the Hebrew it is, "his son came and told him," &c. that is, one of his sons came first, and told all the foregoing passages ; and afterward came all the rest of them, and confirmed what he had related.

The words which he had spoken unto the king,] By this it appears they were present when Jeroboam stood at the altar, and therefore joined in that idolatrous worship ; though their father did not, and yet was so timorous that he durst not reprove it.

Ver. 12] They had the curiosity to observe what way such a remarkable person went to his own country, imagining, perhaps, their father would have a mind to discourse with him.

Ver. 13. He rode thereon,] In the way they directed him.

Ver. 14. Found him sitting under an oak:] Weary, I suppose, with a long journey ; and faint for want of victuals.

Ver. 15.] He had a mind to have a further trial of the truth of what the man of God had said ; and so, in a crafty deceitful manner, enticed him back ; contrary to his commission.

Ver. 16.] It seems he was forbidden so much as to nor go in with thee: neither will I eat bread nor drink water with thee in this place:

17 For it was said to me by the word of the LORD, Thou shalt eat no bread nor drink water there, nor turn again to go by the way that thou camest.

18 He said unto him, I am a prophet also as thou art; and an angel spake unto me by the word of the LORD, saying, Bring him back with thee into thy house, that he may eat bread and drink water. But he lied unto him.

19 So he went back with him, and did eat bread in his house, and drank water.

20 ¶ And it came to pass, as they sat at the table, that the word of the LORD came unto the prophet that brought him back:

21 And he cried unto the man of God that came from Judah, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Forasmuch as thou hast disobeyed the mouth of the LORD, and hast not kept the commandment which the LORD thy God commanded thee, go into any of their houses; lest he should be tempted to eat with them.

Ver. 17.] For which reason he refused to accept of the king's invitation.

Ver. 18. I am a prophet also as thou art; He pretended, as Abarbinel thinks, that God had revealed the very same to him concerning the altar in Beth-el, that he had threatened.

An angel spake unto me—saying, Bring him back] And he further pretended that he found him here by the direction of an angel. For he did not tell him that he learned from his sons what had passed; but pretended he had it by prophecy; and that an angel, in the name of God, commanded him to bring him back to his house, and refresh himself there.

Into thy house, that he may eat bread and drink water.] He persuaded him, I suppose, that the meaning of God's charge, "thou shalt not eat bread, nor drink water in this place," was to be understood of sinners and idolaters, with whom he might not communicate: but he being a prophet, was not to be comprehended in that command. And therefore the angel said, Bring him back to thy house: not to the habitation of any idolater, but to his dwelling-house, which was undefiled. Thus Abarbinel.

But he lied unto him.] All this was a fiction, which God suffered for the trial of a good man; whether he would believe him, or a man he did not know.

Ver. 19.] He thought it possible that God might, in pity to him, revoke his prohibition; because he was hungry and weary. But he ought to have believed the revelation he had himself, of which he was certain; and not trusted to what another pretended was revealed to him; which he could not be sure was true. And it is said emphatically, ver. 22, "The Lord did say to thee, Eat no bread," &c. If God had, in compassion to him, thought fit to recall that word, he would have done it to himself; and as plainly allowed him to refresh himself, as before he had forbidden it. So Abarbinel well observes, "Nothing that a prophet receives from God is to be altered, unless that prophet hath another word from God revoking the former." As Abraham had; to whom God saith (Gen. xxii. 2), "Take thy son, &c. and offer him for a burnt-offering," &c. But when he was going to do it, he heard that command repealed (ver. 12), "Lay not thy hand upon the lad," &c. He would not receive a contrary command from the mouth of any prophet, but from the mouth of God alone; from whom he received the first command.

22 But camest back, and hast eaten bread and drunk water in the place, of the which the LORD did say to thee, Eat no bread, and drink no water; thy carcass shall not come unto the sepulchre of thy fathers.

23 ¶ And it came to pass, after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, that he saddled for him the ass, to wit, for the prophet whom he had brought back.

24 And when he was gone, a lion met him by the way, and slew him: and his carcass was cast in the way, and the ass stood by it, the lion also stood by the carcass.

25 And, behold, men passed by, and saw the carcass cast in the way, and the lion standing by the carcass: and they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt.

26 And when the prophet that brought him back from the way heard thereof, he said, It is the man of God, who was disobedient unto the word of the LORD: therefore the LORD hath de-

Ver. 20.] God would not vouchsafe to speak to him, who had disobeyed his voice: but rather to the other though in his name he had feigned an untruth.

Ver. 21. He cried unto the man of God] He seems to be in a great agony; from the consideration of what he had done, and of what the prophet from Judah was to suffer.

As thou hast disobeyed the mouth of the Lord.] To disobey God's mouth, was to disobey the word spoken by his mouth.

Ver. 22.] This was all his punishment; that he should shortly die, and not be buried among the Jews.

Ver. 23.] It is remarkable, that no punishment is here threatened to the old prophet for telling him a lie. Because, as Abarbinel thinks, he meant no harm to the other prophet; but fancied that his saying, he might not eat or drink with them, was only to excuse himself from going with Jeroboam to his house. And besides, it might have turned to the great advantage of the prophet who came from Judah, if he had steadfastly persisted in his resolution, and not given credit to what the old prophet said against it.

Ver. 24. A lion met him by the way, and slew him:] Not far from Beth-el there was a wood; out of which the two she-bears came that tare two-and-forty children in pieces (2 Kings ii. 24). Out of which wood, it is probable, this lion came, and slew this prophet.

The ass stood by it, the lion also stood by the carcass.] This was to admonish all the prophets to observe God's commands strictly; and to show Jeroboam what he might expect, since God spared not a lesser offender. But, as God showed his severity, in taking away this prophet's life, which was his punishment; so he remarkably showed his approbation of the prophet; in that the lion stood quietly by his carcass, and did not devour it; nor do any hurt to the ass on which he rode. As if he was merely sent by a divine appointment, to execute what God had threatened; but could not move one step beyond that commission. For when the prophet had suffered what God intended, he takes even his dead body into his protection; and would not let it be violated, as is observed below, ver. 28.

Ver. 25.] As a wonderful thing; that the lion should neither fall upon his prey, nor hurt them who passed by; but suffered them to go on quietly.

Ver. 26. Who was disobedient unto the word of the Lord:] Disobedience in great cases hath been thus livered him unto the lion, which hath torn him, and slain him, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake unto him.

27 And he spake to his sons, saying, Saddle me the ass. And they saddled him.

28 And he went and found his carcass cast in the way, and the ass and the lion standing by the carcass: the lion had not eaten the carcass, nor torn the ass.

29 And the prophet took up the carcass of the man of God, and laid it upon the ass, and brought it back: and the old prophet came to the city, to mourn and to bury him.

30 And he laid his carcass in his own grave; and they mourned over him, saying, Alas, my brother!

31 And it came to pass, after he had buried punished by men in authority. For the Athenians put their ambassadors to death whom they had sent into Arcadia, though they had performed their business very well, to their content, ἔπει ἐτίσαν ὁδὸν ἔχοντες, καὶ οὐ τὴν προσεταγμένην, "because they came another way, and not that which they were prescribed." Which is the very case before us (.Elian. lib. vi. Var. Hist. cap. 5).

Delivered him unto the lion, which hath torn him.] The lion did not rend his body in pieces, but only gave him one wound, which killed him. In the Hebrew the word is, he broke him, that is, his bones, and so slew him speedily.

Ver. 27.] Hearing the lion stood as quiet as a lamb, and neither meddled with the carcase, nor hurt any that passed by, he did not fear to take up the body of the prophet that came from Judah; believing the lion had order to do no other mischief, but kill him.

Ver. 28.] Here is a cluster of miracles; that the lion, contrary to his nature, did not eat the carcase, nor kill the ass, nor meddle with the travellers that passed by, nor with the old prophet and his ass; and that the ass stood so quietly, and was not frightened at the sight of a lion, and betook itself to flight: and more than this, the lion stood by the carcase a long time, until this strange news was carried into the city, as a faithful keeper of the prophet's body, that no other wild beasts should meddle with it. Which made the miracle more illustrious, and plainly showed all this did not happen by chance.

him, that he spake to his sons, saying, When I am dead, then bury me in the sepulchre wherein the man of God is buried; lay my bones beside his bones:

32 For the saying which he cried by the word of the Lord against the altar in Beth-el, and against all the houses of the high places which are in the cities of Samaria, shall surely come to pass.

33 ¶ After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way, but made again of the lowest of the people priests of the high places: whosoever would, he consecrated him, and he became one of the priests of the high places.

34 And this thing became sin unto the house of Jeroboam, even to cut it off, and to destroy it from off the face of the earth.

Ver. 29. To bury him.] To make a solemn funeral for him.

Ver. 30. He laid his carcass in his own grave;] Which was the greatest honour he could do him.

They mourned over him, saying, Alas, my brother!] He and his sons made the usual lamentation over him, of which this was the form, we find, in aftertimes (Jer. xxii. 18).

Ver. 31.] This he ordered, not merely out of affection to the prophet, but to secure himself from the judgment that he had threatened, ver. 2.

Ver. 32.] This Abarinel looks upon as an argument that this man was a prophet of the Lord; that he foretold the same thing that the man of God who came from Judah did. And, as he thinks, something more, viz. the destruction of all the high places by Josiah, which is not before mentioned.

Ver. 33. After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way,] By all these wonderful works (for the singular number is put for the plural) Jeroboam was not at all changed, but continued in his idolatry.

But made again of the lowest of the people priests] He did not reform in any one thing; but still went on in making anybody priests (see xii. 31).

Whosoever would, he consecrated him.] Without any respect to his tribe, or family; or, indeed, to his condition.

Ver. 34.] Brought dreadful punishments upon his family (for so sin sometimes signifies the punishment of sin), and these not vulgar punishments, but utter extirpation.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Abijah being sick, Jeroboam sendeth his wife disguised with presents to the prophet Ahijah at Shiloh. 5 Ahijah, forewarned by God, denounceth God's judgment. 17 Abijah dieth, and is buried. 19 Nadab succeedeth Jeroboam. 21 Rehoboam's wicked reign. 25 Shishak spoileth Jerusalem. 29 Abijam succeedeth Rehoboam.

1 At that time Abijah the son of Jeroboam fell sick.

2 And Jeroboam said to his wife, Arise, I pray

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1. At that time] Some time after those woes were denounced against him; but the phrase doth not denote any precise time.

Abijah—fell sick.] Being stricken by the hand of God with some disease.

Ver. 2. Disguise thyself,] Put on such apparel as the common people wear.

there, and disguise thyself, that thou be not known to be the wife of Jeroboam; and get thee to Shiloh: behold, there is Ahijah the prophet,

That thou be not known to be the wife of Jeroboam;] He would have her go on this errand, because he was sure she would report things truly to him: but yet would not have her known to be his wife, because he would have the prophet speak more freely and indifferently; or, perhaps, he was afraid he should threaten too heavily, if he knew who she was.

Get thee to Shiloh: behold, there is Ahijah the prophet,] This looks like great stupidity, that he should which told me that I should be king over his people.

3 And take with thee ten loaves, and cracknels, and a cruse of honey, and go to him : he shall tell thee what shall become of the child.

4 And Jeroboam's wife did so, and arose, and went to Shiloh, and came to the house of Ahijah. But Ahijah could not see ; for his eyes were set by reason of his age.

5 ¶ And the LORD said unto Ahijah, Behold, the wife of Jeroboam cometh to ask a thing of thee for her son ; for he is sick : thus and thus shalt thou say unto her : for it shall be, when she cometh in, that she shall feign herself to be another woman.

6 And it was so, when Ahijah heard the sound of her feet, as she came in at the door, that he said, Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam ; why feignest thou thyself to be another ? for I am sent to thee with heavy tidings.

7 Go, tell Jeroboam, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Forasmuch as I exalted thee from among the people, and made thee prince over my people Israel,

8 And rent the kingdom away from the house of David, and gave it thee : and yet thou hast not been as my servant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his think to deceive a prophet, who could tell him future events ; and therefore much more discover things present.

Ver. 3.] They that went to inquire of a prophet used to make him some present, as a token of their respect to him (see 1 Sam. ix. 7). And by such oblations the prophets supported themselves. This present which she made him was of such things as might make him think her to be a countrywoman, rather than a courtier.

Ver. 4.] In the Hebrew, his eyes " stood for his hoariness." He seems to have had a film, or a cataract, grown over his eyes.

Ver. 5.] He was as fully instructed how to treat her, as if he had seen and known her.

Ver. 6.] He discovered her before she appeared, that she might give the greater credit to his words.

Ver. 7.] Raised him from a private person to be the king of the ten tribes.

Ver. 8.] Though David committed some great sins, yet he was upright in his religion, and never started aside in the least unto other gods. In which piety God expected Jeroboam should have continued, as he admonished him when he first sent Ahijah to him (xi. 38).

Ver. 9. But hast done evil above all that were before thee :] King Saul was not so bad, nor Solomon ; who though he was drawn aside himself, yet did not study to make his people idolaters.

And molten images,] Or, " even molten images," that is, the golden calves. Which he did not think to be gods, but only representations of God : and yet God looked upon this worship which was paid to him before these images as the worship of other gods, which are called devils in 2 Chron. xi. 1.

To provoke me to anger,] That was the effect of this idolatrous worship.

Hast cast me behind thy back :] Neglected me and my service. For those things we cast behind our backs which are nothing worth, and for which we have no regard or concern what becomes of them.

Ver. 10. I will bring evil] Severely punish it.

heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes ;

9 But hast done evil above all that were before thee : for thou hast gone and made thee other gods, and molten images, to provoke me to anger, and hast cast me behind thy back :

10 Therefore, behold, I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel, and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone.

11 Him that dieth of Jeroboam in the city shall the dogs eat : and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat : for the LORD hath spoken it.

12 Arise thou therefore, get thee to thine own house : and when thy feet enter into the city, the child shall die.

13 And all Israel shall mourn for him, and bury him : for he only of Jeroboam shall come to the grave, because in him there is found some good thing toward the LORD God of Israel in the house of Jeroboam.

14 Moreover the LORD shall raise him up a king over Israel, who shall cut off the house of Jeroboam that day ; but what ? even now.

Will cut off from Jeroboam him that pisseth against the wall,] That is, not leave a man of his family alive, as Ralbag interprets it (see 1 Sam. xxv. 22).

And him that is shut up and left in Israel,] That is, married or unmarried, as De Dieu expounds these words upon Deut. xxxii. 36. all sorts of men, of whatsoever state or condition they be. Others refer this to treasures shut up in secret places, and to flocks left in the field ; or to men taken captive, or that have escaped. As much as to say, there shall be an universal destruction. And thus Bochartus glosses (comprehending all these), " I will cut off every male, whether he be a captive or a free man ; whether he live in the city or in the country, be married or single." (see his Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 66).

Will take away the remnant] All his posterity. As a man taketh away dung,] Which servants remove so carefully, that they suffer not the least speck to remain.

Ver. 11. Him that dieth in the city shall the dogs eat :] That is, none of them shall be buried.

For the Lord hath spoken it.] This is God's irrevocable decree.

Ver. 12.] This was a sign that all the rest of his threatenings should be fulfilled.

Ver. 13. For he only of Jeroboam shall come to the grave,] All the rest were to be buried in the bowels of dogs, and of fowls of the air (ver. 11).

Because in him there is found some good thing] He was the only person of that family that disliked the worship of the calves, and perhaps intended to remove them when he had power ; and suffer the people to go up to Jerusalem to worship, trusting God would preserve him in his kingdom. Some of the Jews say that he broke down a hedge, which his father had made, to keep people from going to Jerusalem at the three great feasts.

Ver. 14. Raise him up a king] This king was Baasha (xv. 27, 28).

That day :] As soon as he was made king (ver. 29).

But what ? even now.] What did I say (that day) ?

15 For the LORD shall smite Israel, as a reed is shaken in the water, and he shall root up Israel out of this good land, which he gave to their fathers, and shall scatter them beyond the river, because they have made their groves, provoking the LORD to anger.

16 And he shall give Israel up because of the sins of Jeroboam, who did sin, and who made Israel to sin.

17 ¶ And Jeroboam's wife arose, and departed, and came to Tirzah: and when she came to the threshold of the door, the child died;

18 And they buried him; and all Israel mourned for him, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by the hand of his servant Ahijah the prophet.

19 And the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, how he warred, and how he reigned, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

20 And the days which Jeroboam reigned were two and twenty years: and he slept with his fathers, and Nadab his son reigned in his stead.

21 ¶ And Rehoboam the son of Solomon reigned in Judah. Rehoboam was forty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which the LORD did choose out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.

22 And Judah did evil in the sight of the LORD, and they provoked him to jealousy with their sins which they had committed, above all that their fathers had done.

even just now. It is as sure as if it were now done. The Chaldee takes it otherwise; he shall destroy the house of Jeroboam, both that which liveth now at this day, and that which shall be born in time to come. But Kimchi puts no stop at this word vemah (and what), but continues it with what follows, in this manner, "What is this which shall now happen, to that which shall come hereafter?" that is, the present calamities shall be nothing to the future. Which agrees well enough with what follows, concerning the continual troubles that should be in Israel; and at last their captivity.

Ver. 15. The Lord shall smite Israel.] For their consenting to that idolatrous worship which Jeroboam set up.

As a reed is shaken in the water.] That is, they shall be in perpetual commotions by civil wars: having no quiet, but frequently changing their kings. Thus Bochartus excellently expounds it, in an epistle to our bishop Morley, p. 106, &c. The reason of this expression was, that several of their kings were afterward killed, and new families started up; and between so many kings of so many families and tribes, their minds fluctuated and wavered; and they knew not where to fix themselves and rest in quiet: therefore their condition is thus described in 2 Chron. xv. 5, "there was no peace to him that went in, or to him that came out," &c.

He shall root up Israel.] Which he began to do first by Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria (2 Kings xv. 29), and then finished it by Shalmaneser (2 Kings xvii. 5, 6, &c.).

Scatter them beyond the river.] That is, Euphrates: they being carried (as the forenamed places tell us) into the country of the Medes.

Because they have made their groves.] In which they placed the images of their gods. For they were not contented with the calves, but fell to grosser idolatry, which was commonly practised in groves (see Judg. iii. 7).

Provoking the Lord to anger.] For nothing was so detestable to him as this sin.

Ver. 16. He shall give Israel up] Into the hands of the heathen.

Because of the sins of Jeroboam—who made Israel to sin.] Perverted the whole nation: who by his authority and example were led into idolatry.

Ver. 17. Tirzah.] A city in the tribe of Manasseh, which had been famous in ancient times (Josh. xii. 21), and became the royal seat, and continued so for some time (xv. 33), being found more convenient, I suppose, than Shechem, where Jeroboam first settled.

When she came to the threshold of the door, the child died.] It seems the king's house was near the gate of the city; for it is said, ver. 12, that as soon as she entered into the city, the child should die. And so it did, when she came to the threshold of the door of the palace.

Ver. 18.] Whereby he confirmed all the rest of his threatenings against the house of Jeroboam and the people of Israel.

Ver. 19. How he warred, and how he reigned.] How he behaved himself in war and in peace.

They are written in the book of the chronicles.] Not in that book in the Bible called Chronicles; but in such a book as that wherein the acts of Solomon were recorded, day by day, xi. 41 (see there).

Ver. 20.] His sleeping with his fathers seems to be a phrase signifying only that he died, as all before him did: not that he was buried with them (as it is said of Rehoboam, ver. 31), for they were private men, and he a king; who, no doubt, was magnificently interred by his son.

Ver. 21. Rehoboam was forty and one years old when he began to reign.] And therefore was born a year before Solomon came to the crown: for he reigned but forty years, xi. 42.

He reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem.] A great honour to him, of which he was not worthy; and therefore God shortened his days, and did not let him reign so long as Jeroboam.

His mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.] It is much that David should suffer Solomon to marry one of this country, unless she was proselyted, as the daughter of Pharaoh is supposed to have been. He himself, indeed, had married the daughter of Talmai king of Geshur; but the son he had by her proved so wicked, that it might have been a caution to him not to marry his son, especially him he intended for the heir of his crown, to a stranger; who, if she was proselyted, yet many think she did not so change her religion, but that she instilled ill principles into her son, and corrupted him. Nay, was one of those women that enticed Solomon to idolatry; for women of Ammon are reckoned among his strange wives.

Ver. 22. They provoked him to jealousy with their sins.] By joining other gods together with him. Which is an amazing thing, that, at the beginning of his reign, Rehoboam should do well for three years (2 Chron. xi. 17), and then forsake the law of God (2 Chron. xii. 1), and fall off from his worship into such gross idolatry, as exceeded that of Jeroboam.

Above all that their fathers had done.] Above all that had been practised in the time of the judges.

23 For they also built them high places, and images, and groves, on every high hill, and under every green tree.

24 And there were also sodomites in the land: and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the Lord cast out before the children of Israel.

25 ¶ And it came to pass in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, that Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem:

26 And he took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house; he even took away all: and he took away all the shields of gold which Solomon had made.

27 And king Rehoboam made in their stead

Ver. 23.] They multiplied altars on every high hill; and set up images; and built temples for them; which I take to be meant by groves. For they could not be under every green tree; nor could they be said to be built, but to be planted; therefore it is reasonable to interpret them temples, or places of divine worship. As among the heathens, Strabo testifies (Geograph. lib. ix.) that the poets called their temples by the name of groves (ἀσκη καλοῦσιν τὰ ἱερά πάντα), though they had no trees about them; because the custom was to have trees planted about their sacred places. In which the Israelites set up altars; directly contrary to the law; which intended to preserve unity in religion, by allowing one altar only.

Ver. 24.] This kind of wickedness often attended idolatry (xv. 12. 2 Kings xxiii. 7. Rom. i. 21. 28). For among the heathens the most filthy things were practised in these shady dark places (their groves) by the worshippers of Venus, Bacchus, and Priapus. And such they were, it appears by the place now quoted (2 Kings xxiii. 7), among the Israelites: who, out of devotion to some false god or other, prostituted their bodies, contrary to nature, to be abused in honour of those gods, directly against the law (Dent. xxiii. 17). For when Josiah purged the temple, he is said to cast out the sodomites; where, by kadeshim our Selden understands the priests of Astarte (Syntag. ii. De Diis Syris, cap. 2).

Ver. 25.] Ῥεβοάμος δ' αὐτῷ παρέδωκε ἀμαχητὶ τὴν πόλιν. "And Rehoboam (as Josephus writes delivered up the city to him, without striking a stroke." For he had a vast army (as we read, 2 Chron. xii. 2), wherewith he conquered Asia, as Herodotus tells us, who calls him Sesostris. For Josephus acknowledges he relates the same expedition that the Scripture doth, but under a different name. It may seem something strange, that Shishak being so nearly allied to Rehoboam should come up against him, and take his royal city; but as kingdoms are never married, so Jeroboam, it is likely, who lived long in Egypt, stirred him up to invade him, and thereby established himself in his new kingdom: for we read not a word of any cities in Israel that he took, but only the fenced cities of Judah (2 Chron. xii. 4); Jeroboam and his country remaining undisturbed. Besides, it must be remembered he was not the son of Pharaoh's daughter, but of an Ammonitess; and therefore there was no kindred between Rehoboam and Shishak.

Ver. 26. He took away the treasures of the house of brazen shields, and committed them unto the hands of the chief of the guard, which kept the door of the king's house.

25 And it was so, when the king went into the house of the Lord, that the guard bare them, and brought them back into the guard chamber.

29 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Rehoboam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

30 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all their days.

31 And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David. And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess. And Abijam his son reigned in his stead.

the Lord.] These riches which David and Solomon had treasured up, tempted Shishak, it is probable, to this expedition against Jerusalem; for he did not intend to keep this city, but only to spoil it.

He took away all the shields of gold.] Which were in the house of the forest of Lebanon (see x. 16, 17), which it seems he also plundered. This was a speedy vengeance for their sins; that so soon after Solomon's death, the splendour wherein he left Jerusalem should be extinguished. For Rehoboam served God three years; was corrupted in the fourth; and in the fifth was punished.

Ver. 27.] In the Hebrew the word for guard is runner: so called because they went before the king and behind him. These shields were not of much value; and so were committed to men in a mean office: whereas the golden ones were kept, as I said, in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

Ver. 28.] He did not quite forsake God, but still continued to worship in the temple: and, perhaps, he now left the high places (after he had been thus chastised by the king of Egypt), and frequented the house of God better. Shields were carried before him for pomp's sake, that he might not be contemned by his people; and that there might be no occasion for sedition, if they were disposed to it, when they saw him so well guarded.

Ver. 29.] He refers those that desired a larger account of him to the public annals; as he had done when he concludes the history of Jeroboam, ver. 19 (see there).

Ver. 30.] This doth not seem to agree with what we read xii. 22, where God commanded Rehoboam and his people not to go to fight with Israel; and they obeyed his voice. But this is easily satisfied, by observing that the Jews were commanded not to make war upon the Israelites; but they are not commanded not to defend themselves, if the Israelites made war upon them. And this was their case; the Israelites vexed them with continual incursions and depredations; though the house of David did not assault them, but only repelled their violence; or, perhaps, upon the borders, they were continually endeavouring to get ground one of another; though they never came to a set battle.

Ver. 31.] The repetition of this about his mother hath something remarkable in it (see ver. 21) though it is hard to know what it is. Abarbinel thinks, it is as much as to say, He did not repent at last; but as he lived, so he died, in the idolatry of his mother.

CHAPTER XV.

1 Abijam's wicked reign. 7 Asa succeedeth him. 9 Asa's good reign. 16 The war between Baasha and him causeth him to make a league with Ben-hadad. 23 Jehoshaphat succeedeth Asa. 25 Nadab's wicked reign. 27 Baasha conspiring against him executeth Ahijah's prophecy. 31 Nadab's acts and death. 33 Baasha's wicked reign.

1 Now in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam the son of Nebat reigned Abijam over Judah.

2 Three years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom.

3 And he walked in all the sins of his father, which he had done before him : and his heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, as the heart of David his father.

4 Nevertheless for David's sake did the LORD his God give him a lamp in Jerusalem, to set up his son after him, and to establish Jerusalem :

5 Because David did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, and turned not aside from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite.

6 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all the days of his life.

7 Now the rest of the acts of Abijam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah ? And there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam.

8 And Abijam slept with his fathers ; and they buried him in the city of David : and Asa his son reigned in his stead.

9 ¶ And in the twentieth year of Jeroboam king of Israel reigned Asa over Judah.

10 And forty and one years reigned he in Je-

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1.] This seems to disagree with what is said below (ver. 9) concerning Asa, that he began to reign the twentieth year of Jeroboam, and Abijam reigned three years. But it is usual, both in scripture and in other authors, to reckon part of a year for a whole year. So Abijam began to reign in some part of Jeroboam's eighteenth year, and continued his reign the whole nineteenth, and died in the twentieth : and so was reckoned to have reigned three years, as it here follows.

Ver. 2. Three years reigned he in Jerusalem.] This was a very short time, as Abarbinel observes ; but it was because he walked in the way of his father ; which provoked God to cut him off.

His mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom.] The same author fancies she was the daughter of Absalom (as he is called 2 Chron. xi. 21), who rebelled against his father David ; and so was a bad daughter of a bad father. She is called by another name, 2 Chron. xiii. 2, viz. Michaiah the daughter of Uriel. But he thinks that is the name of the family, and this her proper name. Others think this is a mere fancy, and with great reason ; for Abishalom is a different name from Absalom, as David's son is always called. And they think he had two names, as his daughter also had. But Pellicanus seems to me to have given the plainest account of this, that Maachah was his grandmother, and Michaiah his mother.

Ver. 3.] See xiv. 22—24. They ought all to have remembered David, and trod in his steps ; who was the founder of the royal family ; and never turned aside to the worship of other gods, as this man did ; though together with them he worshipped the Lord God of Israel, who is therefore called the Lord his God.

Ver. 4. God give him a lamp in Jerusalem.] He continued the kingdom in the posterity of David ; which is the meaning of giving him a lamp (see xi. 36).

And to establish Jerusalem :] Whereby Jerusalem was established as the place of God's worship.

Ver. 5.] He was not without other sins ; but none so enormous as this : and therefore not remembered, as this about Uriah is very often, to his dishonour.

Ver. 6.] This was said before (xiv. 30), and therefore may seem to come in here impertinently : because he is not speaking of Rehoboam, but of his son Abijam : who was a valiant young man in the days of his father, and always fought his battles with Jeroboam. Which being related before in the history of Rehoboam, is here repeated, as Abarbinel thinks, to show that Abijam was the cause of these wars. And these words, "all his days," he thinks, relate to Abijam, who continued the war between his father and Jeroboam with great success : as we read 2 Chron. xiii.

17. Bochartus thinks a plainer account may be given of this ; by supposing that Rehoboam signifies this son of his ; children and fathers being one and the same in a moral account. Thus Abraham is said to have purchased the sepulchre of the sons of Enmor ; which was indeed purchased by Jacob : and the Israelites say to Rehoboam (xii. 16), "What portion have we in David ?" That is, in Rehoboam the grandchild of David ? In like manner, he thinks, it may be said, "there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam ;" that is, between Abijam the son of Rehoboam and Jeroboam : whom Abijam grievously afflicted (Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 43). But this doth not seem to be the true account ; because the war between Abijam and Jeroboam is distinctly mentioned in the next verse. Therefore the meaning of these words is, that though God was pleased for David's sake, who walked uprightly before him, to continue a lamp, that is, a successor to him in Jerusalem ; yet these successors were vexed with continual wars (as appeared both in the reign of Rehoboam and Abijam), and did not enjoy their kingdom peaceably.

Ver. 7. Are they not written in the book of the chronicles] See xi. 41. Ezra saith they were recorded in the book of the prophet Iddo, 2 Chron. xiii. 22, from whence he took what he thought fit.

There was war] He continued the war, which had been between his father and Jeroboam, and managed it very gloriously, as Ezra shows in the book of the Chronicles.

Ver. 10. Maachah.] This was the name of his grandmother, who is called his mother, as Reuel is called the father of Jethro's daughters, Exod. ii. 18, when he was their grandfather. Which example Kimchi here alleges to explain this. And thus Abarbinel : The sense is not, that Maachah brought forth rusalem. And his mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom.

11 And Asa did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, as did David his father.

12 And he took away the sodomites out of the land, and removed all the idols that his fathers had made.

13 And also Maachah his mother, even her he removed from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove; and Asa destroyed her idol, and burnt it by the brook Kidron.

14 But the high places were not removed: nevertheless Asa's heart was perfect with the LORD all his days.

15 And he brought in the things which his father had dedicated, and the things which himself had dedicated, into the house of the LORD, silver, and gold, and vessels.

Asa (for she was his father's mother), but she brought him up and gave him his education: which made his piety the more remarkable, that he was not tainted with her principles of religion as his father was. But why his mother should not be mentioned, but his grandmother, which was not at all needful (because it was evident, by what was said before, that Maachah was the mother of Abijam his father), is unaccountable. And therefore others think that this was the name of his mother; which was the same: as her father's also was, with that of Abijam's mother's father.

Ver. 11.] He made him his pattern: worshipping the Lord alone, and taking away all idols, as it here follows.

Ver. 12.] Of which see xiv. 23, 24. But still some secretly remained; and therefore when it is said he removed all idols, the meaning is, all that he could discover, for some lurked privately (xxii. 46).

Ver. 13. Also Maachah his mother, even her he removed from being queen.] He took away her guards, all the ensigns of royal dignity, and reduced her to the condition of a private person. But the word being is not in the Hebrew; which others translate, "he removed her from the queen:" that is, from his wife; that she might not be infected with her idolatry. He put her therefore out of the court, where she gave a bad example.

Because she had made an idol in a grove;] The word we translate idol, is miphlezeth, which imports something of terror and horror; either because it was of a frightful aspect, or brought dreadful judgments upon its worshippers. St. Jerome understands by it Priapus, or Baal-peor, to whom the women were much devoted. Theodoret takes it for Astarte, or Venus; and indeed, in the northern countries, Priapus and Venus were painted together; as Johan. Gensius observes in his book De Victimis Humanis, par. i. cap. 9. Whatsoever it was, it was placed in a grove; in which shady places all the works of darkness, even sodomy itself, were practised.

Asa destroyed her idol,] He cut it down, and having burnt it, stamped it to a powder, and then threw it into the brook Kidron; as Moses did with the golden calf, Exod. xxxii. 20 (see 2 Chron. xv. 16).

Ver. 14.] He did take away all the high places wherein they sacrificed to strange gods (2 Chron. xiv. 3), but not those wherein God alone was worshipped: for his authority was not great enough to do this; the people having so universally and so long taken this license, that none durst attempt to abolish this inveterate custom, till the days of Hezekiah: who, seeing the calamities that were coming upon his country,

16 ¶ And there was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

17 And Baasha king of Israel went up against Judah, and built Ramah, that he might not suffer any to go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

18 Then Asa took all the silver and the gold that were left in the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house, and delivered them into the hand of his servants: and king Asa sent them to Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimon, the son of Hezion, king of Syria, that dwelt at Damascus, saying,

19 There is a league between me and thee, and between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent unto thee a present of silver and gold; come and break thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may depart from me.

20 So Ben-hadad hearkened unto king Asa, endeavoured to prevent them by a thorough reformation. But though Asa did not venture to do this, yet his heart was sincerely affected to the right worship of God; and he suffered sacrifices to be offered to none else.

Ver. 15.] According to the piety of ancient times, his father had vowed some part of the spoils he took in the war with Jeroboam unto the Lord; but had not time to make good his vow, or upon some account or other neglected it. Asa, his son, therefore made his vow good; and also himself brought in what he had devoted unto holy uses (for so the words are in the Hebrew, he brought in the holy things of his father, &c.), having gotten great spoil in his war with the Ethiopians (2 Chron. xiv. 13, 14).

Ver. 16.] There having been no mention hitherto made of Baasha, this may seem not to stand in its proper place. But Abaribinel thinks it is here inserted, that as this divine writer had shown what his virtues were, so he might mention his faults. The chief of which was occasioned by this war, which moved him to send to Ben-hadad for help, when he should have relied upon God; as it is related largely, 2 Chron. xvi. 7, &c.

Ver. 17. Baasha—went up against Judah,] After Asa's great victory over the Ethiopians, a great many of the Israelites fell off to him from Baasha: who thereupon resolved to make war upon Judah, and thereby prevent a further defection of his subjects.

Built Ramah,] A city in the tribe of Benjamin: which either belonged to the kingdom of Israel, or he had taken from Judah and fortified it; for that is meant by building it, as appears by what follows.

That he might not suffer any to go out or come in to Asa] That he might hinder all communication between his people and the people of Judah. For this place lay in the confines of both kingdoms; and in such a strait, that, a fortification being made there, none could pass to and fro without a license from Baasha.

Ver. 18.] This was held lawful, in case of extreme danger, to employ sacred things for the defence of one's country. But here was no such necessity in this case; for God had appeared so wonderfully for Asa, against a more powerful enemy than Baasha, that he ought to have confided in him for help; as the prophet Hanani told him, 2 Chron. xvi. 7, &c.

Ver. 19. There is a league between me and thee,] In the latter end of Solomon's reign the Syrians were enemies to him (xi. 24, 25). But when he was dead, and the kingdom was divided, both Judah and Israel made peace with the Syrians: having enough to do, to settle themselves in their own dominions.

and sent the captains of the hosts which he had against the cities of Israel, and smote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-beth-maacah, and all Cinneroth, with all the land of Naphtali.

21 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard thereof, that he left off building Ramah, and dwelt in Tirzah.

22 Then king Asa made a proclamation throughout all Judah; none was exempted: and they took away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha had builded; and king Asa built with them Geba of Benjamin, and Mizpah.

23 The rest of all the acts of Asa, and all his might, and all that he did, and the cities which he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? Nevertheless in the time of his old age he was diseased in his feet.

24 And Asa slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Jehosaphat his son reigned in his stead.

25 ¶ And Nadab the son of Jeroboam began to reign over Israel in the second year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned over Israel two years.

[I have sent unto thee a present of silver and gold;] This was a wicked piece of policy, to tempt him with money to break his word, which perhaps he had sworn to observe.

Ver. 20. Sent the captains of the hosts which he had] Always in a readiness, for some expedition, or for the defence of his country.

Against the cities of Israel—Cinneroth, with all the land of Naphtali.] By this it appears, that he fell upon the northern part of the kingdom of Israel, which was nearest to Damascus; whilst Baasha was busy at Ramah, which was in the more southern part of his dominion.

Ver. 21. When Baasha heard thereof, he left off building Ramah.] By this means Asa compassed his ends; it not being safe for Baasha to continue the work he was about, for fear Ben-hadad should make larger conquests than he had already done.

Dwelt in Tirzah.] Which was become the royal city (see xiv. 17), where Baasha settled himself; though he intended, I suppose, when he had finished Ramah, to have dwelt there some part of the year; that by his presence the passages might have been the better secured.

Ver. 22. Made a proclamation] He summoned all the people of the country; who were not disabled by age, or sickness, or some other way.

Asa built with them Geba of Benjamin, and Mizpah.] They were inhabited before, but he enlarged, and perhaps fortified them. Which he judged better than to perfect the fortification of Ramah; which would have been a perpetual bone of contention (as we speak) between Judah and Israel.

Ver. 23. Book of the chronicles] See xi. 41.

He was diseased in his feet.] He had the gout, as the Gemara of the Sanhedrin explains it (cap. 6. n. 7), which made him less active than he had been before this disease seized him.

Ver. 25. Nadab—reigned over Israel two years.] Part of two years, as appears from ver. 28. 33.

Ver. 26. He made Israel to sin.] By the worship of the golden calves.

VOL. II.—45.

26 And he did evil in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the way of his father, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin.

27 ¶ And Baasha the son of Ahijah, of the house of Issachar, conspired against him; and Baasha smote him at Gibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines; for Nadab and all Israel laid siege to Gibbethon.

28 Even in the third year of Asa king of Judah did Baasha slay him, and reigned in his stead.

29 And it came to pass, when he reigned, that he smote all the house of Jeroboam; he left not to Jeroboam any that breathed, until he had destroyed him, according unto the saying of the Lord, which he spake by his servant Ahijah the Shilonite:

30 Because of the sins of Jeroboam which he sinned, and which he made Israel sin, by his provocation wherewith he provoked the Lord God of Israel to anger.

31 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Nadab, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

32 And there was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

Ver. 27. The house of Issachar.] That is, of a family in the tribe of Issachar.

Baasha smote him at Gibbethon.] It was a city in the tribe of Dan (Josh. xix. 41), and given to the Levites (xxi. 23), who quitted it, as they did the rest of their cities, when Jeroboam would not suffer them to execute their office (2 Chron. xi. 14), and the Philistines it is likely seized upon it, being adjoining to their country. But Nadab now endeavoured to recover it out of their hands, as of right belonging to him.

Ver. 28.] What was the pretence for this conspiracy we are not told; but it is likely he had many joined with him in it; otherwise it had not been easy to slay him, when he was in the midst of his army before Gibbethon.

Ver. 29.] His intention was not to fulfil this prophecy (mentioned xiv. 10), but to secure himself in his usurped throne, by cutting off all that had any title to it. But by this means God fulfilled his own intentions; and that as speedily as Ahijah the prophet had foretold (xiv. 14).

Ver. 30.] Which caused great miseries in Israel; especially in the beginning of that kingdom, when they reigned by force, not by succession. Whereas in Judah the son succeeded the father, by right of blood, according to the promise made to David.

Ver. 31.] His acts could not be many; yet more were recorded in the public annals than are here mentioned (xi. 41).

Ver. 32.] We read the very same words before (ver. 16) in the history of Asa; which are now repeated in the history of Baasha, to show the reason why Asa was his enemy, which he would not have been (but his friend) had he feared God after his cutting off the whole house of Jeroboam. But he would make no covenant with him, notwithstanding he had fulfilled the word of God, because he walked in the sins of Jeroboam. Thus Abarbanel.

Ver. 34.] Which makes it evident, that he did not cut off Jeroboam's family because they were idolaters, but because he aspired to the throne; which, when 33 In the third year of Asa king of Judah, began Baasha the son of Ahijah to reign over all Israel in Tirzah, twenty and four years.

he possessed, he endeavoured to establish himself in it by the same wicked policy which Jeroboam used. For he reformed nothing in religion; but continued to worship the calves which Jeroboam had set up, to keep the people from going to worship at Jerusalem.

CHAPTER XVI.

1, 7 Jehu's prophecy against Baasha. 6 Elah succeedeth him. 8 Zimri conspiring against Elah succeedeth him. 11 Zimri executeth Jehu's prophecy. 15 Omri, made king by the soldiers, forceth Zimri desperately to burn himself. 21 The kingdom being divided, Omri prevaileth against Tibni. 23 Omri buildeth Samaria. 25 His wicked reign. 27 Ahab succeedeth him. 29 Ahab's most wicked reign. 34 Joshua's curse upon Hiel the builder of Jericho.

1 THEN the word of the LORD came to Jehu the son of Hanani against Baasha, saying,

2 Forasmuch as I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel; and thou hast walked in the way of Jeroboam, and hast made my people Israel to sin, to provoke me to anger with their sins;

3 Behold, I will take away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house; and will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

4 Him that dieth of Baasha in the city shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth of his in the fields shall the fowls of the air eat.

5 Now the rest of the acts of Baasha, and what he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

6 So Baasha slept with his fathers, and was buried in Tirzah: and Elah his son reigned in his stead.

7 And also by the hand of the prophet Jehu the son of Hanani came the word of the LORD against Baasha, and against his house, even for all the evil that he did in the sight of the LORD, in provoking him to anger with the work of his hands, in being like the house of Jeroboam; and because he killed him.

8 ¶ In the twenty and sixth year of Asa king of Judah began Elah the son of Baasha to reign over Israel in Tirzah, two years.

9 And his servant Zimri, captain of half his chariots, conspired against him, as he was in Tirzah, drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza steward of his house in Tirzah.

CHAPTER XVI.

Ver. 1.] This is a prophet that lived till the end of Jehoshaphat's reign (see 2 Chron. xix. 1. xx. 34). And his father Hanani was a prophet before him (2 Chron. xvi. 7). Nor was there wanting a succession of prophets during the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, as Abarinel hath observed, through every reign, their names being set down in holy scripture: which he hath shown in a catalogue he hath made of the kings, and the prophets in their time; too long to be here transcribed.

Ver. 2. Forasmuch as I exalted thee out of the dust.] It seems he was of a mean family in the tribe of Issachar. Perhaps, but a common soldier, or some small officer in the army which laid siege to Gibbethon; but being bold and daring, formed a conspiracy against Nadab.

Made thee prince over my people] God's providence interposed, that nothing should hinder the success of his design against Nadab; because he intended to make use of him to punish the house of Jeroboam.

Hast made my people Israel to sin.] Continued them in their idolatry, against which he ought to have shown the greatest zeal, because it provoked God's anger against the family of Jeroboam.

Ver. 3.] So that neither any of his own children, nor the children of any of his relations should remain; but his name be quite put out.

Ver. 4.] The very same threatening that was pronounced against Jeroboam and his posterity by Ahijah (xiv. 11).

Ver. 6.] He was not slain, as Nadab was; but died, as Jeroboam did; and his son suffered like his (ver. 9, 10).

Ver. 7. By the hand of the prophet Jehu the son of Hanani came the word of the Lord against Baasha.] This command of God being given to Jehu (ver. 1), he executed it, and delivered this message to Baasha some time before he died. Which is said to be done by the hand of Jehu, because he was the minister of God in this business.

Because he killed him.] That is, killed Nadab, who was Jeroboam's son: or rather (as Abarinel judiciously observes) this relates to the whole house of Jeroboam before mentioned; which Baasha destroyed, not because they were idolaters, and that he might fulfil the word of the Lord (as perhaps he pretended), but to satisfy his own ambition, being guilty of the very same crime that Jeroboam was; and therefore was no better than a murderer in the slaughter he made of his family; and accordingly is threatened to be punished for that very act, which was committed not in obedience to God, but to serve himself.

Ver. 8. In the twenty and sixth year of Asa king of Judah began Elah—to reign] This seems to contradict what Ezra saith in 2 Chron. xvi. 1, that Baasha built Ramah in the thirty-sixth year of Asa. Of which I shall give an account in my notes on that place. For the present it may suffice to say, that Ezra doth not speak of the thirty-sixth year of Asa's reign, but of the thirty-sixth year after the division of the kingdom. For it could be, at the most, but the twenty-sixth year of Asa's reign when Baasha died.

Two years.] Not complete; but one entire year, and part of another; as appears from ver. 10. 15.

Ver. 9. His servant Zimri.] A considerable commander in his army, who had a great interest in the soldiery.

10 And Zimri went in and smote him, and killed him, in the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned in his stead.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, when he began to reign, as soon as he sat on his throne, that he slew all the house of Baasha : he left him not one that pisseth against a wall, neither of his kinsfolks, nor of his friends.

12 Thus did Zimri destroy all the house of Baasha, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake against Baasha by Jehu the prophet, 13 For all the sins of Baasha, and the sins of Elah his son, by which they sinned, and by which they made Israel to sin, in provoking the LORD God of Israel to anger with their vanities.

14 Now the rest of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

15 ¶ In the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah did Zimri reign seven days in Tirzah. And the people were encamped against Gibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines.

Conspired against him, as he was in Tirzah, drinking himself drunk] He seems to have been a debauched young man, who stayed at home following his pleasures, whilst his army was besieging Gibbethon (ver. 15). Which gave Zimri, who it is likely was captain of his guard, the better opportunity to kill him.

Ver. 10.] Here was a speedy execution of the vengeance threatened against him by Jehu, that God would make his house like the house of Jeroboam (ver. 3). For as Nadab the son of Jeroboam reigned but two years (xv. 25), so Elah the son of Baasha reigned no more: and then, as Nadab was killed with the sword, so was Elah. Thus, as Abarbinel notes, there was a wonderful likeness between Jeroboam and Baasha, in their lives, and in their deaths; in their sons, and in their family.

Ver. 11. He left him not one] That is, not a man (see xiv. 10).

Neither of his kinsfolks, nor of his friends.] He not only destroyed all that were descended from Baasha, as Baasha had done the family of Jeroboam; but he extended the destruction, and increased it, as Abarbinel speaks; for he killed all that were of kin to Baasha, with all his friends, which Baasha did not: this seems to be contained in the threatening of Jehu (ver. 3).

Ver. 12.] See ver. 1, 2, 7.

Ver. 13. For all the sins of—Elah] This shows that Elah walked in his father's ways; though it be not before mentioned.

With their vanities.] So the golden calves are called, being (as Forsterus well translates the word) commentitia numina, "gods of their own devising" (see I Sam. xii. 21).

Ver. 14.] Here is no mention of his might (as there is of his father's, ver. 5), for he was, as I said, a man of pleasure.

Ver. 15.] Which had been besieged many years ago, when Baasha slew Nadab (xv. 27). But was then relieved, or afterward retaken by the Philistines, while the Israelites were in a distracted condition; but now again invested.

Ver. 16. Zimri hath conspired.] Had success in his conspiracy, and made himself king.

Israel made Omri,—king over Israel that day in the 16 And the people that were encamped heard say, Zimri hath conspired, and hath also slain the king : wherefore all Israel made Omri, the captain of the host, king over Israel that day in the camp.

17 And Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Israel with him, and they besieged Tirzah.

18 And it came to pass, when Zimri saw that the city was taken, that he went into the palace of the king's house, and burnt the king's house over him with fire, and died.

19 For his sins which he sinned in doing evil in the sight of the LORD, in walking in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin which he did, to make Israel to sin.

20 Now the rest of the acts of Zimri, and his treason that he wrought, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

21 ¶ Then were the people of Israel divided into two parts : half of the people followed Tibni the son of Ginath, to make him king ; and half followed Omri.

22 But the people that followed Omri pre-camp.] Just as the Roman army, in aftertimes, made their chief commander emperor.

Ver. 17. Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Israel with him.] All the army that were at the siege. Tirzah.] Where Zimri, a more dangerous enemy, was.

Ver. 18. When Zimri saw that the city was taken.] Which he was not able to defend against a powerful army; from whom he suspected no opposition: but hoped they would have let him reign as quietly as they did Baasha.

He went into the palace of the king's house.] Into the strongest part of the house.

Burnt the king's house—and died.] He was afraid, I suppose, of suffering some shameful punishment, if he had been taken alive; and therefore chose to die desperately in this manner. So Sardanapalus ended his life.

Ver. 19.] Though he lived but a very short time after he usurped the crown, yet he gave sufficient demonstration of his resolution to continue the idolatry of Jeroboam; and therefore was abandoned by God.

Ver. 20.] It is likely, other acts that he did before he conspired against Elah were recorded in that book; together with the manner how he wrought his treason.

Ver. 21. Then were the people of Israel divided] For when it is said (ver. 16), all Israel made Omri king in the camp; the meaning is, only the whole army, and they that attended them.

Half of the people followed Tibni] For they did not like to have a king imposed upon them by the soldiery; and Tibni had as good a title as the other, being also a valiant man; who succeeded Zimri, perhaps, in his command, as captain of half his chariots.

Half followed Omri.] As already advanced to the royal dignity; and a greater man than Tibni: being captain of the whole host.

Ver. 22. The people that followed Omri prevailed] For Omri had the advantage of having the army on his side.

So Tibni died.] In this civil war (into which they fell by God's just judgment upon them) many of the people, in all likelihood, died together with him.

Omri reigned.] Without competitor. The Jews in Seder Olam Rabba, whom Rasi and others follow, say it contributed much to his advancement, that Asa vailed against the people that followed Tibni the son of Ginath: so Tibni died, and Omri reigned.

23 ¶ In the thirty and first year of Asa king of Judah began Omri to reign over Israel, twelve years: six years reigned he in Tirzah.

24 And he bought the hill Samaria of Shemer for two talents of silver, and built on the hill, and called the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill, Samaria.

25 ¶ But Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the LORD, and did worse than all that were before him.

26 For he walked in all the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin, to provoke the LORD God of Israel to anger with their vanities.

king of Judah married his son Jehoshaphat to Omri's daughter. For which they have no other ground, but that it is said, 2 Chron. xviii. 1, he joined in affinity with Ahab.

Ver. 23. Twelve years.] These twelve years of his reign are to be computed not from the thirty-first of Asa's reign; for it is evident he began to reign in the twenty-seventh year of Asa (ver. 15), and his son began to reign in the thirty-eighth year of Asa (ver. 29). Therefore the twelve years are to be computed from the beginning of Omri's reign; which was, as I said, the twenty-seventh of Asa's. From which time (as Abarbanel observes) the contest continued between Omri and Tibni, unto the thirty-first year of king Asa. In the end of which Tibni died; and then Omri reigned over all Israel, whereas he reigned but over half the people before. And Tibni being extinct, all the foregoing years are accounted to Omri; viz. from the beginning of Asa's seven-and-twentieth year, when Zimri died, to the end of this eight-and-thirtieth year, which make twelve years.

Six years reigned he in Tirzah.] Half of his time he made this his royal seat; which was, as some think, all the time his contention with Tibni lasted, and some time after.

Ver. 24.] The king's house in Tirzah being burnt, as we read ver. 18, he built a royal palace in this city, which he also built upon this hill; and called it after the name of him who was the owner of it before he bought it, viz. Shemer, from whom it had the Hebrew name of Shomeron. Which was ever after made the royal seat of the kings of Israel.

Ver. 25.] For he not only walked in the way of Jeroboam, but, it is likely, began to introduce other idolatries, which his son Ahab established among them. Or, he compelled the people to worship the calves; and by severe laws restrained the people from going up to Jerusalem; which, as some think, are meant by the statutes of Omri (Mic. vi. 16).

Ver. 26.] Though he had seen Elah, and all the whole house of Baasha destroyed by his predecessor for their idolatry, and Zimri himself perished in the same sin (ver. 13. 19), yet he persisted in their iniquity, and brought down the wrath of God upon him, and upon his family, as the foregoing kings had done.

Ver. 27.] It seems he was a valiant man, which Elah was not; concerning whose might there is no mention, as I noted upon ver. 14.

Ver. 28. Samaria.] Which now began, as I said, to be the royal city of the kingdom of Israel, as Jerusalem was of Judah.

Ahab his son reigned] Who was so eminent upon 27 Now the rest of the acts of Omri which he did, and his might that he shewed, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

28 So Omri slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria: and Ahab his son reigned in his stead.

29 ¶ And in the thirty and eighth year of Asa king of Judah began Ahab the son of Omri to reign over Israel: and Ahab the son of Omri reigned over Israel in Samaria twenty and two years.

30 And Ahab the son of Omri did evil in the sight of the LORD above all that were before him.

31 And it came to pass, as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that he took to wife Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Zidoseveral accounts, that we have a long account of him in the following part of this book.

Ver. 29.] In this space of time Asa saw six kings of Israel buried; whilst Judah flourished under one and the same king: which no doubt was a great advantage to them.

Ver. 30.] Was more idolatrous than his father Omri: for he brought in the worship of Baal (as it follows in the next verse), that is, of the sun, and of all the host of heaven.

Ver. 31. As if it had been a light thing to him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam] He was not satisfied with the worship which Jeroboam had invented, though highly displeasing to God. For so the words are in the Hebrew, was it a light thing? As much as to say, It was a most heinous crime; and yet Ahab resolved to be more wicked. For Jeroboam did not quite forsake the Lord God of Israel, but worshipped him by a representation of his own invention; and this more out of policy than any love to this kind of worship. But Ahab, out of pure love to strange gods, forsook the Lord, without any such reason for it as Jeroboam had; the people being now sufficiently estranged from Jerusalem.

Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal] Called in profane writers Ithobalus.

King of the Zidonians,] Who had been old idolaters.

And served Baal,] That god, whom the Chaldeans and Babylonians called Bel, the Phœnicians (of whom the Zidonians were a part) called Baal: which in Hebrew signifies lord. Which anciently was the name of the true God, as Mr. Selden observes; but when the world grew wicked, was given to the sun by the Phœnicians; who, as Philo-byblius tells us, reputed the sun to be μάνον οὐρανῶν ὁρόν, "the only god of heaven." And at last this name was given to other stars, and to their dead kings, whose memory was dear to them. And various rites, ceremonies, and sacrifices were devised in their honour, as that great man observes (Syntag. De Diis Syris, ii. cap. 1), who understands these words of the Phœnician Belus or Baal, who was the very same with the European Jupiter: and Zidon being situated on the sea, their Baal was called by the Greeks the sea Jupiter. So Hesychius, Θαλάσσης Ζεύς ἐν Σιδὼν τεύχεα, "the sea Jupiter is worshipped at Sidon." But our Mr. Mede is very confident, that the Baal whose worship Jezebel brought with her from Zidon was a deified king of the Phœnicians; as Baal was the first king of Babylonia who was deified after his death. Whence all the souls of men who were canonized after death were called Baalim (see book i. discourse xlii. and his nians, and went and served Baal, and worshipped him.

32 And he reared up an altar for Baal in the house of Baal which he had built in Samaria.

33 And Ahab made a grove; and Ahab did more to provoke the Lord God of Israel to anger than all the kings of Israel that were before him.

34 ¶ In his days did Hiel the Beth-elite build Jericho: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his firstborn, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son Segub, according to the word of the Lord which he spake by Joshua the son of Nun.

Apostacy of the later Times, par. i. ch. 3). Whence it came that there were not more Jupiters among the Europeans, than there were Baals among the Syrians. And hence so many mountains, and springs, and woods, and cities were called by the name of Baal, when Joshua conquered Canaan; as Baal-moon, Bamoth-baal, Baal-gad, Baal-thamar, Baal-zephon, and many more. In which places, no doubt, Baalim were worshipped, and from thence they had their names.

Ver. 32.] He built a temple for this god in the royal city, and set up an altar, where he sacrificed to him. Which was more directly to worship other gods than Jeroboam did: who pretended the worship he performed to the calves was to the true God, whom he honoured in them.

Ver. 33.] Ahab made a grove ;] Which was another piece of idolatry; which God commanded to be abolished (Deut. vii. 5). In this grove, it is likely, all manner of impurities were practised: for Jezebel was a filthy woman.

Ver. 34. Hiel the Beth-elite] A man that lived in the very seat of idolatry; and, it is likely, was deeply infected with it.

Build Jericho:] A place which being under a che- rem, was never to be rebuilt; because it was devoted to God, as the first-fruits of the conquests of Canaan. Which this man either did not know (because ignorant of the law, which now was little read), or was so impious as not to regard the words of Joshua, believing no other god but Baal.

He laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his first born, &c.] But he found to his cost, that the sentence which Joshua pronounced against the rebuilders of this city proved true; for his eldest son died when he laid the first stone of it: and so all the rest of his children one after another, as the building advanced; till at last his youngest son died when it was finished. A most remarkable instance of the certainty of Divine threatenings; and that God never forgets what he hath said, but continues always the same. This sentence being pronounced more than four hundred and forty years ago, and now fulfilled exactly in all its circumstances: which might have been a warning to the whole nation, not to despise the long-suffering and patience of God, who, though he had not yet carried them out of their good land according to the word of Ahijah (xiv. 15), would certainly do it, if they continued in their impenitence.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Elijah, having prophesied against Ahab, is sent to Cherith, where the ravens feed him. 8 He is sent to the widow of Zarephath. 17 He raiseth the widow's son. 24 The woman believeth him.

I AND Elijah the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, said unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.

CHAP. XVII.

Ver. 1. Elijah the Tishbite,] The care of God over this people (as I noted before) was so great that in every king's reign, from the first to the last, there was one or more prophets to instruct, admonish, and correct them. And now in the reign of Ahab (when there was the greatest need of it), God raised up an extraordinary prophet far exceeding all others, whom Abarinel calls the "prince of the prophets," next unto Moses. Whose original being not known (for here is no mention of his father or mother), some of the Jews have fancied him to have been an angel sent from heaven to reduce them to the true religion. So Abarinel relates, upon the book of Judges, as Joh. Frischmuthus observes, in a dissertation about Elijah. Whose name, which in the Hebrew is Elijahu, carries something divine in it: being compounded, as Ægid. Camarthus imagines, of three of the names of God, viz. Eli, and Jah, and Hu. There is no doubt the first two are the names of God, but there is reason to question the last, though a great man of our own, Edm. Castellus, in his Polyglot Lexicon, doth put Hu among the divine names; and so do the cabalists. He was indeed a very eminent messenger of God, sent to call the Israelites to repentance; from whence our learned Dr. Lightfoot thinks he had the name of Tishbite; from the Hebrew word shub, which signifies to return; for he was sent to be the converter of the nation (see him upon St. Luke, i. 17). Other conjectures there are about this name, which Frischmuth hath collected; and Dionysius Petavius hath delivered his opinion about it upon Epiphanius (Hæres. lv. n. 3), who saith Elijah was εἰς ἱερεὺς of the priests, and grandson to Zadok. But Kimchi seems to have given the plainest account of this name of Tishbite from Thesbe, a town or region where he was born; just as Ahijah is called Shilonite, from Shiloh, where he was born, or dwelt.

Who was of the inhabitants of Gilead,] It is not certain that he was a native of this country; but only that he came and settled among the Gileadites, being born, as some think, in the tribe of Benjamin, though most are rather of opinion in the tribe of Gad.

Said unto Ahab, As the Lord—liveth, before whom I stand,] To make his words the more regarded, he swore solemnly by the eternal God, whose minister he was (for that is meant by standing before him), and to whom he had prayed, that there should be no moisture from the clouds for three years and a half ensuing, unless it were by his prayers. Thus St. James teaches us to expound these words, these years (James v. 17). And Abarinel makes out the connexion of this chapter with the foregoing in this manner:—Elijah admonished Ahab to lay to heart the punishment of Hiel the Beth-elite, saying, Fear the Lord lest he be angry with thee, as he was with Hiel, for breaking his command. But Ahab despised his admonition, and said

2 And the word of the LORD came unto him, saying,

3 Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and hide thyself by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

4 And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.

5 So he went and did according unto the word of the LORD: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

6 And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook.

7 And it came to pass after a while, that the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land.

8 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto him, saying,

9 Arise, get thee to Zarephath, which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee.

10 So he arose and went to Zarephath. And when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow woman was there gathering of sticks; and he called to her, and said, Fetch me, I pray thee, a little water in a vessel, that I may drink.

11 And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thine hand.

12 And she said, As the LORD thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but a handful of meal in a

That was a chance; for you say we are all idolaters, and yet the threatening in the law of Moses (Deut. xi. 16, 17), is not come upon us. Whereupon Elijah in a great anger, said, "As the Lord liveth, there shall be no dew," &c. Which story is told with more circumstances in the Talmud.

Ver. 2.] The king being incensed at this threatening, God took care to secure Elijah from his fury, by the following direction.

Ver. 3. Get thee hence,] For he saw that Ahab intended to lay hold of him.

Hide thyself by the brook Cherith,] This brook Bochartus takes to be the same with Kana, mentioned by Joshua, xvi. 5. xvii. 9. So called from the plenty of reeds [for kana signifies a reed], in which the prophet lay hid while he stayed in this place.

Ver. 4. Ravens] This seems so strange that some will have the word orebim not to signify ravens, but merchants: because they find the word orbe in Ezek. xxvii. 17, signifying merchants that traded in the market of Tyre. But, as Bochartus hath observed, they are never called simply orebim. Nor is their opinion better, who think Arabians to be here meant: for there were none thereabout; and Elias's lurking-place would soon have been discovered to Ahab, if merchants, or any other people that travelled that way, had been acquainted with it. We must therefore acknowledge a miraculous care which God took of Elijah, as all the ancients do, none excepted (see Bochartus, in his Hierozoicon, par. ii. lib. ii. cap. 13). Nor did such things seem incredible to the heathen, who tell us as strange stories. For example, that Jupiter was fed in his cradle by bees: and Janus, the son of Apollo and Evadne, with honey by dragons: and Midas, when an infant, had corn put into his mouth, as he lay asleep, by ants: Æsculapius nourished by a goat; and a great many more mentioned by that excellent person Huettius, in his Questiones Alnetane, lib. ii. cap. 12. n. 17.

Ver. 6.] God amply provided for his servant; sending him not only bread, but flesh also that he might make a good meal: and this twice a day, at dinner and supper. This provision some of the Jews fancy (in Gemara Sanhedrin, cap. 11. n. 76), the ravens brought from Ahab's house; others fancy, from Jehoshaphat's, as if he was fed with royal dainties. But Bochartus thinks it is better to say that they had this provision from some of the seven thousand persons who had never bowed to Baal. But it is best of all to confess we cannot tell whence they had it; God, perhaps, making meat ready prepared on purpose for him. They who object that these were unclean creatures, who polluted the meat which they touched, should consider that all this was done by an extraordinary dispensation. And St. Chrysostom fancies, there was this moral instruction in it; that Elijah should learn to be more mild and gentle towards the deluded Israelites, by these birds, who were cruel to their young, but kind to him. And indeed it is very wonderful, as Victorinus Strigelius here glosses, that the ravens, who do not feed their own young ones, should constantly feed the prophet. For such is the astropylia of these creatures, as naturalists report, that they forsake their young before they be fledged: whom God feeds by worms, which are produced by the dung and out of the carcasses that have been brought into their nests, until they be able to fly, and provide for themselves. I think he hath this out of St. Ambrose lib. x. epist. 82. The psalmist is thought to allude to it, Ps. cxlvii. 9. And God himself in Job xxxviii. 41.

Ver. 7. After a while,] In the Hebrew it is, at the end of days, that is, of a year; as that phrase, I have shown, is often used.

Ver. 9. Zarephath,] It was a place between Tyre and Zidon, but belonged to the territory of the latter, and so was not in the land of Israel, but inhabited by gentiles.

I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee.] He had appointed and disposed her, just as he did the ravens, ver. 4. For she had no command from God for it (it appears from ver. 12), and this was an extraordinary providence, that a poor widow and a gentile should support him: though in all likelihood, she was not a stranger to the true religion, but a pious woman of another nation.

Ver. 10. The widow woman was there gathering of sticks.] Which shows she was but in a poor condition.

Fetch me,—a little water] For he knew by a divine inspiration, this was the woman who was to sustain him.

Ver. 11. As she was going to fetch it,] This shows she was a good woman; being ready to succour a stranger.

Bring me,—a morsel of bread] Which was very natural to desire, having asked for water; but he said it to move her to acquaint him with what follows.

Ver. 12. As the Lord thy God liveth,] By this it appears she knew the Lord God of Israel; and that Elijah was a prophet; or at least one of his worshippers.

Two sticks,] By two sticks is meant a few: as two frequently signifies (Isa. xvii. 6. Jer. iii. 14).

That I may go in and dress it] The famine, it seems, was sore in that country, as well as in Israel. For they of Zidon had their provision from the Israelites; barrel, and a little oil in a cruse: and, behold, I am gathering two sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, that we may eat it, and die.

13 And Elijah said unto her, fear not; go and do as thou hast said; but make me thereof a little cake first, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy son.

14 For thus saith the LORD God of Israel, The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the LORD sendeth rain upon the earth.

15 And she went and did according to the saying of Elijah: and she, and he, and her house, did eat many days.

16 And the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by Elijah.

17 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that the son of the woman, the mistress of the house, full sick; and his sickness was so sore, that there was no breath left in him.

18 And she said unto Elijah, What have I to do with thee, O thou man of God? art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?

19 And he said unto her, Give me thy son. And he took him out of her bosom, and carried him up into a loft, where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed.

20 And he cried unto the LORD, and said, O LORD my God, hast thou also brought evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son?

21 And he stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the LORD, and said, O LORD my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again.

22 And the LORD heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived.

23 And Elijah took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber into the house, and delivered him unto his mother: and Elijah said, See, thy son liveth.

24 ¶ And the woman said to Elijah, Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the LORD in thy mouth is truth.

and besides, it is likely, had no rain; but were punished as their neighbours were; being all alike idolaters.

Ver. 13. Fear not;] Be not afraid of being famished.

Make me thereof a little cake first, and bring it unto me,] A very hard command: whereby he tried her faith and obedience.

Ver. 14.] This was a miracle, which they that were not Christians did not think incredible: as Huetius shows in the same book, and the chapter above-mentioned, ver. 4.

Ver. 15. According to the saying of Elijah:] By which it is evident that she trusted in the Lord God of Israel.

Her house, did eat many days.] Some by many days understand a full year: as it is in the margin. But it rather signifies two years: for one year was past before he came from the brook Cherith (see ver. 7). And therefore they lived upon this meal and oil two years more, till the end of the famine.

Ver. 16.] But what they took out for their daily use was immediately supplied by the power of God.

Ver. 17. After these things,] After this demonstration of the power and goodness of God.

No breath left in him.] He expired and died.

Ver. 18. What have I to do with thee,] Some take the meaning to be "wherein have I offended thee?" but the following words seem to imply, that in a great agony of spirit she asked him, wherefore he came to her house, if this were his intention?

Art thou come—to call my sin to remembrance,] This she thought was hard, to requite his entertainment at her house with such a punishment for her sins. For then sins are said to be "called to remembrance" before God, when he punishes them.

Ver. 19. Give me thy son,] He reached out his hands, and bade her put him into his arms.

He took him out of her bosom,] It seems he was but a little child; who the Jews think afterward proved a prophet; viz. Jonah.

Carried him up into a loft where he abode,] The LXX. translate it ὑπερφωρον, "an upper room:" which he had to himself for his study, meditation, and prayer; as Elisha afterward had in another place (2 Kings iv. 10).

Laid him upon his own bed,] By this it appears it was a private room, where he lodged.

Ver. 20. He cried] Prayed most earnestly. He humbly expostulated with God; representing what an addition it was to his other afflictions, that this widow should suffer, who had been so kind to him; and suffer in her son, the great comfort of her life; and that while he was in her house.

Ver. 21.] He lay prostrate in prayer before God, and stretched out himself upon the child, as if he would inspire him with a new life. And this he did three times; believing God would be moved by his importunity, to do what he desired.

Ver. 22.] Hereby it appeared not only that this was done by God, to whom Elijah prayed; but that he did it for Elijah's sake.

Ver. 23.] There was no need, one would think, to bid her observe and lay to heart the great power and mercy of God, in restoring her son to life. But the best of us must be awakened to our duty.

Ver. 24. Now by this I know that thou art a man of God,] She believed it before (ver. 18) but when she saw he did not cure her child when he lay sick, but suffered him to die, she began to doubt of it. But her faith revived, together with her son, and was mightily confirmed.

That the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth,] She believed all that he delivered as the mind of God; and gave up herself entirely to his instructions. The benefit of which she enjoyed, till God sent Elijah to meet Ahab; resolving to send rain upon the earth, as it follows in the next chapter.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 In the extremity of famine Elijah, sent to Ahab, meeteth good Obadiah. 9 Obadiah bringeth Ahab to Elijah. 17 Elijah, reproving Ahab, by fire from heaven convinceth Baal's prophets. 41 Elijah, by prayer, obtaining rain, followeth Ahab to Jezreel.

1 AND it came to pass after many days, that the word of the LORD came to Elijah in the third year, saying, Go, shew thyself unto Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth.

2 And Elijah went to shew himself unto Ahab. And there was a sore famine in Samaria.

3 And Ahab called Obadiah, which was the governor of his house. (Now Obadiah feared the LORD greatly:

4 For it was so, when Jezebel cut off the prophets of the LORD, that Obadiah took an hundred prophets, and hid them by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water.)

5 And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, that we lose not all the beasts.

6 So they divided the land between them to pass throughout it: Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

7 ¶ And as Obadiah was in the way, behold, Elijah met him: and he knew him, and fell on his face, and said, Art thou that my lord Elijah?

8 And he answered him, I am: go tell my lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

9 And he said, What have I sinned, that thou wouldest deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab, to slay me?

10 As the LORD thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent

CHAPTER XVIII.

Ver. 1. After many days,] See upon ver. 15. of the foregoing chapter. Grotius expounds it, "after six months," upon St. Luke iv. 25.

In the third year,] Our Saviour saith, and so doth St. James, that the drought continued three years and six months (Luke iv. 25. James v. 17), which doth not disagree with these words which are thus to be explained. At the beginning of the drought, it is likely, Ahab imputed the want of rain to natural causes, and so did not seek to slay Elijah: but after six months neither the former nor the latter rain falling in their season, he began to be enraged at him as the cause of the drought: which forced Elijah at God's command, to save his life by flight. And from that time the three years here mentioned are to be computed, before the word of the LORD came to him; he being one year at the brook Cherith, and two years at Sarepta; in the end of which year God took pity upon the country, having fulfilled the words of Elijah (xvii. 1). I see no ground for Abarinel's observation, that the famine continued three years, to show that it was a punishment inflicted for the sins of three families: Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and his son Nadab; Baasha, and his son Elah; Omri, and his son Ahab. The observation of Grotius is far better upon St. Luke iv. 25 (see there).

I will send rain upon the earth,] He would not destroy the earth because it was inhabited by wicked men (as Abarinel speaks), and yet would have them know that Elijah's prayers procured mercy for them.

Ver. 2.] Which made it the more dangerous for him to appear in Ahab's presence; lest being so sorely afflicted, he should, in his rage, cause him to be killed before he could deliver his message to him.

Ver. 3. Obadiah,] Some, both Jews and Christians, think this was Obadiah the prophet; for which I can find no ground but what is said in 2 Chron. xvii. 7. that Obadiah was one of the princes whom Jehoshaphat sent to instruct the people. And Ezra, from the next words, infers he was not a prophet.

Feared the Lord greatly:] Was a truly religious man, and worshipped the Lord alone with great affection to his service; which one would have expected should have made Ahab discard him, if not persecute him. But I suppose, he was so very useful a servant to him, in the management of the affairs of his family (which he ordered with singular prudence and fidelity), that he connived at his not worshipping Baal, nor the calves; especially since he did not (we may well think) go up to Jerusalem to worship; with which defect God was pleased to dispense, as Ahab did with his religion.

Ver. 4. When Jezebel cut off the prophets of the Lord,] There were schools of the prophets, it is likely, still remaining in Israel unto her time; but she endeavoured to destroy them, and those who were bred up in them; that there might be none to instruct the people in the true religion, for such, I suppose, are here meant; not those that were endued with the extraordinary gift of prophecy: for Elijah saith, ver. 22, that he only was left a prophet of the Lord; though that may signify no more, but that he knew of nobody beside.

Obadiah took an hundred prophets and hid them,] Which was an act of great piety and zeal, whereby he hazarded his own life.

Fed them] Sent them meat and drink privately every day.

Ver. 5.] Many were dead for want of grass, which he hoped they might find growing in such moist places enough to preserve the rest.

Ver. 6.] Ahab would make this search himself, lest it should not be done faithfully by others, who might be persuaded by prayers and entreaties, or the presents of those who had any grass, not to discover it. Only he trusted Obadiah.

Ver. 7.] He showed by the profound reverence he made to him, how much he honoured him.

Ver. 8.] The prophet also approved the honour Obadiah did his master, whom he owned for his lord though he was a very wicked man (see ver. 10). For kings, by their office, are sacred persons: and therefore are to be had in great veneration (though bad men) even by the high-priest and by the prophets, who did not approach them, as the Jews observe, without due reverence. And it is a famous saying of R. Jedaiah, "Do not dwell in a city, where no reverence or fear is paid to the king."

Ver. 9.] For that he concluded would be the effect of such a message delivered by him to Ahab, as he shows in the following discourse.

Ver. 10. There is no nation or kingdom, whither my to seek thee: and when they said, He is not there; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not.

11 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

12 And it shall come to pass, as soon as I am gone from thee, that the Spirit of the Lord shall carry thee whither I know not; and so when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, he shall slay me: but I thy servant fear the Lord from my youth.

13 Was it not told my lord what I did when Jezebel slew the prophets of the Lord, how I hid an hundred men of the Lord's prophets by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water?

14 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here: and he shall slay me.

15 And Elijah said, As the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely shew myself unto him to day.

lord hath not sent to seek thee:] That is, to all the countries thereabout with whom he was in league. For it is a very foolish conceit of some of the Jews (which the best of them disown), that Ahab was as great an emperor as Nebuchadnezzar, or Ahasuerus, who ruled over all nations.

He is not there; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation,] These words incline me to think, that he sought him only throughout all his dominions; through every tribe, which is called a nation; and every government, which is called a kingdom. For how could he take an oath of any but his own subjects? It may be said, indeed, that there might be such compacts between him and the Monabites, Edomites, Ammonites, and other neighbouring nations, that they should harbour none of his rebellious subjects: and if they required it, they should swear they knew of none in their country. But such a treaty is so unusual, that I see no reason to suppose it.

Ver. 12. The spirit of the Lord shall carry thee whither I know not;] Snatch thee away from hence, as sometimes the prophets were suddenly transported by an invisible power to places far distant from that where they were at present (2 Kings ii. 16. Ezek. iii. 12. 14. Acts. viii. 39. 40). And, in all likelihood, there had been instances of it before this time: which made Obadiah fear it might fall out so in this case.

He shall slay me:] Because he did not seize and secure Elijah when he was in his power: but let him escape.

But I thy servant fear the Lord from my youth.] Therefore he hoped the prophet would take care to preserve him, because he was not like the rest of the court.

Ver. 13.] Sometimes a virtuous man may speak the truth of himself; though it be in his own praise.

Ver. 14.] When it would expose him to manifest danger of losing his life.

Ver. 15. As the Lord of hosts liveth] He who commands all creatures in heaven and earth.

Before whom I stand,] Whom I serve as one of his ministers.

I will surely show myself unto him to day.] He feared not to show himself to Ahab; for a greater king than he, the Lord of all things, he knew would preserve him.

Ver. 16.] The solemn oath of Elijah made Obadiah readily obey him; and assured him Ahab should not be disappointed, but certainly find him.

VOL. II.—16

16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him: and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel?

18 And he answered, I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim.

19 Now therefore send, and gather to me all Israel unto mount Carmel, and the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table.

20 So Ahab sent unto all the children of Israel, and gathered the prophets together unto mount Carmel.

21 And Elijah came unto all the people, and said, How long halt ye between two opinions? if the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word.

Ver. 17.] He troubles a country, who confounds all things in it, and puts them out of order. In such a condition Israel now was, by a grievous famine; which made them not know which way to turn themselves. And this he ascribed to Elijah.

Ver. 18. I have not troubled Israel;] They troubled a nation who break the laws of God; not they that defend them.

Thou hast followed Baalim.] There were more Baals than one worshipped by the heathen, as I observed before; and it is very probable that Ahab worshipped all the host of heaven, as well as the sun (see xvi. 30, 31).

Ver. 19. Gather—all Israel unto mount Carmel,] That he might prove, in the face of all the people, that it was not he who troubled them.

The prophets of the groves] By the prophets of the groves (as we translate it), Mr. Selden understands the prophets of Astarte, the great goddess of the Zidonians; which he proves by comparing many places of scripture together (L. De Diis Syris, Syntag. ii. cap. 3). Mahoonides hath a peculiar notion, that the prophets of Baal, and of the groves, were such as had drunk in the opinion of the ancient Zabii; who made images to receive the influences of the stars; golden ones for the sun, and silver ones for the moon, &c. which gave to men the gift of prophecy, and showed what was good for them. The same they said of trees; which were some under the influence of one star, some under the influence of another; and were planted in their names, and worshipped after several manners, and infused special virtues into the trees, and made men prophets. This he avers he found expressly in their books (More Nevochim, par. iii. cap. 29).

Which eat at Jezebel's table.] So high an esteem they had of these prophets, that she kept a table on purpose for them, to do them honour with the people.

Ver. 20.] I suppose the Israelites sent the great men of their several tribes to represent them; and the prophets readily assembled at the king's command: who did not distrust their power, and was promised rain, I suppose, by Elijah, if he did as he desired.

Ver. 21. How long halt ye between two opinions?] Like lame men, who tread not firmly, but dubiously; not knowing which to choose, the Lord or Baal; and therefore joining both together.

If the Lord be God, follow him;] As much as to say, There cannot be more gods than one. That is 22 Then Elijah said unto the people, I, even I only, remain a prophet of the Lord; but Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men.

23 Let them therefore give us two bullocks; and let them choose one bullock for themselves, and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under; and I will dress the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under:

24 And call ye on the name of your gods, and and I will call on the name of the Lord: and the God that answereth by fire, let him be God. And all the people answered and said, It is well spoken.

25 And Elijah said unto the prophets of Baal, Choose you one bullock for yourselves, and dress the first article of your faith; "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord" (Deut. vi. 4). If the Lord be he, then stick to him: if Baal, then reject the other. This is most rational: for both of them cannot be God.

The people answered him not a word.] Either not knowing what to resolve, or being ashamed.

Ver. 22.] He was the only prophet that appeared in behalf of the Lord, and yet feared not to contest with a great multitude who came to defend Baal.

Ver. 23.] He propounded a plain way to decide this controversy, and settle the people's minds in their belief. To whom he first propounded it, that they might approve of it, if they thought it a sure way to discover the truth.

Ver. 24. The God that answereth by fire.] That is, he that sendeth fire to consume the sacrifice, which is presented to him.

It is well spoken.] They looked upon this as a reasonable proposition; because they knew that sacrifices had been approved by God in this manner: and they were very desirous to make the experiment, and be satisfied, by this means, who was the true God. Thus Moses's sacrifice was approved (Lev. ix. 24), and Gideon's (Judg. vi. 21), and David's (1 Chron. xxi. 26), and Solomon's, when he consecrated the temple (2 Chron. vii. 1. 3). By this means, in all these cases, God had shown that he accepted the sacrifices, and that the persons who offered them were his servants.

Ver. 25. Elijah said unto the prophets of Baal,] Having the people's approbation, he turned to Baal's prophets, and desired them to agree to this trial.

Choose you one bullock for yourselves, and dress it first;] No doubt they produced both the bullocks, as he propounded at the first (ver. 22); and if there was any advantage in choosing one, and dressing it before the other, he desired they might have it.

For ye are many;] And he being a single person, was willing to give them the precedence.

Call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.] It may be translated, call on the name "of your god," viz. Baal. Or else, it may relate to their Baalim, which were many, as they themselves were: and desire them all to try their power, by putting no fire under the sacrifice; but expecting it to come down from heaven.

Ver. 26. They took the bullock that was given them,] The choice of which was left to them.

Dressed it,] Flayed it, and cut it in pieces, and laid it upon the wood. Which they durst not refuse to do, because the people thought it a reasonable motion which Elijah made; and they had utterly lost their credit with the people, if they had not accepted it. And perhaps they did not mistrust the power of Baal; which Ralbag thinks was Mars, a fiery planet; but rather the sun, which far exceeds all the other it first; for ye are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

26 And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, hear us. But there was no voice, nor any that answered. And they leaped upon the altar which was made.

27 And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry aloud: for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked.

28 And they cried aloud, and cut themselves heavenly bodies in heat. Which they thought might possibly exert its power, upon this great occasion, and burn up their sacrifice. At least they might hope that Elijah might not be able to bring fire down from heaven, because he sacrificed in a high place, not at the temple, which was contrary to the law of God, who therefore would not hear him; and then they should stand upon equal ground with him, though they obtained no fire to consume their sacrifice.

Even until noon,] When the sun was in its greatest strength.

Nor any that answered.] Not the least flash of fire.

They leaped upon the altar] Or, they danced about it, after the manner of the ancient Sali. Or, as Borchartus interprets it, Quasi furore prophetico extra se rapti, incompósitos motibus huc illuc ferebantur; "They ran about hither and thither, as men in an ecstasy with a prophetic fury, which put them into uncouth and disorderly motions." For it appears they acted like prophets from ver. 29, who sometimes acted as men beside themselves (Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 50). Abarinel thinks this leaping or dancing was a rite used in the worship of the sun: which puts all things in motion.

Ver. 27. It came to pass at noon,] When the morning sacrifice was ended.

Elijah mocked them,] He did not think it unlawful, or unseemly to jeer them, and their god; that he might awaken them out of their stupidity, and expose them to all the by-standers as corrupters of religion, and deceivers of the people.

Cry aloud: for he is a god;] He bade them raise their voices; by which they believed he was a god, but might be something deaf, or a great way off from them, and so could not hear what they said, unless they cried louder.

Either he is talking,] Busy about despatches; either in sending ambassadors, or giving audience.

He is pursuing,] Some notion (as the Hebrews understand it); being in a deep study, or deliberating about some weighty business. It is commonly understood, he is hunting, or pursuing enemies.

In a journey,] Not at home; but travelling to some other place; whither they must send after him.

Peradventure he sleepeth,] As they used to do in those hot countries after dinner.

Must be awaked,] With loud noises.

Ver. 28.] They did more than Elijah bade them: hoping to move him with their own blood, in which, perhaps, they thought he more delighted, than in the blood of beasts, or in their cries. For many nations offered human sacrifices to their gods: and their priests, when they were possessed with a sacred fury, were wont to slash themselves till the blood gushed out. Thus among the Romans the priests did in the worship of Bellona: in which sacerdotes non alieno, sed suo cruore sacrificant, &c. "The priests sacrificed after their manner with knives and lances, till the blood gushed out upon them.

29 And it came to pass when midday was past, and they prophesied until the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded.

30 And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him. And he repaired the altar of the Lord that was broken down.

31 And Elijah took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the Lord came, saying, Israel shall be thy name:

32 And with the stones he built an altar in the name of the Lord: and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two measures of seed.

not with another's blood, but with their own" (see Lactantius, in his Divin. Institut. lib. i. cap. 21). For cutting their shoulders, and running their drawn swords through both hands, they ran about like mad men. And so Apulcius saith, they that carried about the Syrian goddess, after many other things, took out their knives or swords and cut themselves (see lib. viii. Metamorph. p. 172, 173, and Pricans and Rigaltius upon that place). But our Mr. Mede hath a peculiar notion, which is, that Baalim being the deified souls of dead men, therefore the prophets of Baal cut themselves in his worship; because this was a funeral rite or ceremony (Lev. xix. 28. xxi. 5, Deut. xiv. 1), and therefore retained in the service of such gods, in token that they were but deified men (see upon xvi. 31).

Ver. 29. They prophesied] When all was done, they fell into a fury, and raved, as if they were possessed of an invisible power; singing hymns and praises to Baal. For that is sometimes meant by prophesying (1 Chron. xxv. 2, 3); or, it may be simply meant, they still continued praying to Baal (ver. 26); for that was part of a prophet's office.

There was neither voice, nor any to answer.] No more tokens of regard to their praises than to their prayers; nor any, the least intimation, that Baal was a god, that minded what they said or did.

Ver. 30. Come near unto me.] They had stood hitherto by the prophets of Baal, to attend them in their sacrifice. Now Elijah calls them to him, that they might be witnesses of what he could do.

He repaired the altar of the Lord that was broken down.] I suppose Carmel had been one of the most eminent high places in the whole kingdom; where the people, as they had been long accustomed, offered sacrifices to God in ancient times. But the worshippers of Baal had broken down the altar, and set up one of their own. For there were two sorts of high places, I have before noted, some for the worship of the true God, which continued in Judah, even under religious princes: others for the worship of idols; which good kings took away when they let the other remain. On the contrary, Ahab broke down the altars of God in the high places, and allowed none but those for Baal.

Ver. 31. Elijah took twelve stones.] That he might show he worshipped the God of the patriarchs, and no other: and that all the people, though divided in civil government, ought to be united in the same religion, and have but one altar for them; being the sons of one man, who was very dear to God, as it here follows.

33 And he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, and said, Fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the burnt sacrifice, and on the wood.

34 And he said, Do it the second time. And they did it the second time. And he said, Do it the third time. And they did it the third time.

35 And the water ran round about the altar; and he filled the trench also with water.

36 And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word.

37 Hear me, O Lord, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the Lord

Israel shall be thy name.] He purged his family from all idolatry; and then God appeared to him, and talked with him, and called him by a new name; importing the power he had with God (Gen. xxxv. 2—1. 10, 13, 15).

Ver. 32. With the stones he built an altar] Which he might do, being a prophet; for such persons were free from the lesser laws, that they might preserve the greater.

He made a trench] That is, a large trench; for "two measures" are thought to be the third part of an ephah.

Ver. 33. Laid him on the wood.] To be a whole burnt-offering.

Fill four barrels with water.] Which they might have out of the brook at the foot of the mount (ver. 40), or out of the sea, which was not far off.

Pour it on the burnt sacrifice.] From hence some gather the altar was hollow, into which this water ran.

Ver. 34.] That is, they did it till all was full of water, as it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 35.] This seems to prove the altar was hollow, and that there was a trench also round about it; both which were as full of water as they could hold, to make the miracle more conspicuous and convincing. For what more contrary than fire and water?

Ver. 36. At the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice.] When the people of God were offering their solemn prayers to God at the temple in Jerusalem. This is a noted time for great things that were then done (see upon Lev. ix. 24).

Elijah the prophet came near.] To the altar.

Let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel.] He desires him to demonstrate at once by this miracle, that he was the only true God, and that Elijah was his prophet, and that he had done nothing (in bringing, for instance, a long famine upon them) but by his command. Such miracles were proper, either where a new religion was to be set up, or the old one restored, after a general depravation.

Ver. 37. Hear me, O Lord.] He was the more earnest and fervent in his prayer, as Abarbanel thinks, because he had undertaken to make this experiment of God's power without any particular command from God, of his own accord; nothing doubting but he would appear to vindicate his own honour, though he offered sacrifice in a high place, which was against the law.

That thou hast turned their heart back again.] God turns men's hearts, though they be not turned; because he not only doth that which evidently tends to God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again.

38 Then the fire of the Lord fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench.

39 And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces: and they said, the Lord, he is the God; the Lord he is the God.

40 And Elijah said unto them, Take the prophets of Baal; let not one of them escape. And they took them: and Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, and slew them there.

41 ¶ And Elijah said unto Ahab, Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is a sound of abundance of rain.

42 So Ahab went up to eat and to drink. And Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; and he cast convert them, and is sufficient to do it, but for the present also so affects them that they are converted; though they will not take care to continue in that pious bent, but start back again from him.

Ver. 38.] It is called the fire of the Lord, because it was sent from him out of heaven to testify that he was the only God (as the people could not but acknowledge), and it was of such unusual force, that it consumed not only the flesh of the bullock, and the wood, but the very stones, and the dust, and all the water that had been poured out there in great quantity.

Ver. 39. They fell on their faces:] Worshipping the Lord of heaven and earth.

The Lord, he is the God;] This repeated acknowledgment shows how deeply they were affected at present with the demonstration God had given, that he only was to be worshipped; which extorted this public confession from them; but they soon forgot their own convictions, and continued in their idolatry.

Ver. 40. Take the prophets of Baal;] The prophets of the groves, I suppose, were not there: Jezebel, on whom they attended (ver. 19), not suffering them to appear. It is likely they were Zidonians, which she brought along with her from her own country, when Ahab married her, and were peculiarly under her command.

Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, and slew them] As perverters of the law, and teachers of idolatry; upon whom the people, in that fit of zeal wherein they now were, readily executed the sentence Elijah pronounced against them. And Ahab could make no opposition; being himself also, it is likely, astonished at the stupendous miracle.

Ver. 41. Get thee up, eat and drink;] They had fasted and prayed all the day till the even sacrifice was over, that they might have rain; or that God would decide the controversy in question.

There is a sound of abundance of rain.] He bade him be solicitous no longer; for plenty of rain was coming.

Ver. 42. Ahab went up to eat and to drink.] From the river that was at the bottom of the mount, he went up to a place on the side of it, where a tent was pitched for him, that he might refresh himself, now that the sacrifice was finished; and by Elijah's prayer be obtained rain, which he assured him he heard coming. By these two verses it is apparent, that Ahab himself was present to see how this contest between his prophets and Elijah, that is, between Baal and God would end; and in all probability was as much convinced as the people, that the Lord was the only God.

himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees, 43 And said to his servant, Go up now, look toward the sea. And he went up, and looked, and said, There is nothing. And he said, Go again seven times.

44 And it came to pass at the seventh time, that he said, Behold there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea, like a man's hand. And he said, Go up, say unto Ahab, prepare thy chariot, and and get thee down, that the rain stop thee not.

45 And it came to pass in the mean while, that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. And Ahab rode, and went to Jezreel.

46 And the hand of the Lord was on Elijah; and he girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab to the entrance of Jezreel.

Elijah went up to the top of Carmel;] The prophet went a great deal higher, where he could see the Mediterranean sea; and would neither eat nor drink, till he actually saw the rain gathering.

Put his face between his knees,] He fell upon his knees, and bowed his head to the very ground; so that it touched his knees; in token of great humility, and earnest desire that God would remember his people, and send them rain.

Ver. 43. And said to his servant,] Who, some of the Jews say, was the widow of Sarepta's son. But he was too young to wait upon him.

He went up,] It is not easy to give an account of these phrases, so often here used, he went up. First Ahab went up, and then Elijah, and now he sends his servant, and at last he bade his servant (ver. 44) go up to Ahab. It is most likely there were several risings in this mountain, some higher than other. Elijah went to the top of them; but there was another higher, to which he bade his servant go up. Or Elijah, perhaps, was near to the top; and he sent his servant to the very top of all: and then bade him go down from thence, and go up to that part of the mount where Ahab was eating and drinking.

Ver. 44.] For he saw such abundance of rain coming as would cause floods, and render the way, for the present, unpassable, if he did not make haste home.

Ver. 45. In the mean while, that the heaven was black with clouds] While the servant went to Ahab, and his chariot was making ready, that little cloud spread itself, and in a great thickness covered the face of the sky.

Went to Jezreel.] He did not go to Samaria, for Jezreel, I suppose, was nearer: and there he had a palace (xxi. 1).

Ver. 46. He girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab] They wore loose and long garments in this country, and therefore girded them up when they had occasion to run, that they might not hinder them. And God now gave Elijah more than human strength, so that (though he was an old man, xix. 4) he was made able to run as fast as Ahab's chariot drove, like one of his footmen. In which he showed his readiness to do the king all the honour imaginable, and that he was far from being his enemy, but only desired, he would become a worshipper of the true God, which was, he could not but see, the Lord God of Israel.

To the entrance of Jezreel.] He thought it not prudent, it is likely, to venture into the city, lest Jezebel should seize him, but stopped at the gate of the city, or of the palace, and retired to some private place.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Elijah, threatened by Jezebel, fleeth to Beer-sheba. 4 In the wilderness, being weary of his life, he is comforted by an angel. 9 At Horeb God appeareth unto him, sending him to anoint Hazael, Jehu, and Elisha. 19 Elisha, taking leave of his friends, followeth Elijah.

1 AND Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, and withal how he had slain all the prophets with the sword.

2 Then Jezebel sent a messenger unto Elijah, saying, So let the gods do to me, and more also, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by to morrow about this time.

3 And when he saw that, he arose, and went for his life; and came to Beer-sheba, which belongeth to Judah, and left his servant there.

4 ¶ But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and sat down under a juniper tree: and he requested for himself that he might die; and said, It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers.

5 And as he lay and slept under a juniper tree, behold, then an angel touched him, and said unto him, Arise and eat.

6 And he looked, and, behold, there was a cake baken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head. And he did eat and drink, and laid him down again.

7 And the angel of the Lord came again the second time, and touched him, and said, Arise and eat; because the journey is too great for thee.

8 And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights unto Horeb the mount of God.

9 ¶ And he came thither unto a cave, and lodged there; and, behold, the word of the Lord came to him, and he said unto him, What doest thou here, Elijah?

10 And he said, I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts: for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword;

CHAPTER XIX.

Ver. 1. Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done.] How he had called for fire from heaven, and had made rain to fall upon the earth.

How he had slain all the prophets] That is, all the prophets of Baal, for they only are mentioned, xviii. 22, 25, and the prophets of the groves (who are said to be four hundred, xviii. 19) were still in being, as appears from xxii. 6.

Ver. 2.] This shows the great folly of rage, which gave him notice of his danger, and admonished him to avoid it; or perhaps she thought him as courageous as she was furious, and that he would not flee; and then she knew her power would be greater than his.

Ver. 3. Came to Beer-sheba.] Whither her power did not reach, being in another kingdom.

Left his servant there.] Because he intended to go into the wilderness, where he resolved to spend the rest of his days, and die; and he would not have the youth put to the same straits in which he was like to be. We read of no command from God to fly, nor doth he forbid it; but left him to his own prudence. Which made him think it in vain to hope for Ahab's protection; who he saw would continue an idolater, and by his example make the people revolt to the worship of Baal. Though some are of opinion it was a fault in Elijah to run away, and not to depend upon God to preserve him in his pious endeavours to keep the people in the true religion, who had so solemnly acknowledged the Lord to be God.

Ver. 4. He himself went a day's journey into the wilderness.] This wilderness was that wherein the Israelites wandered forty years; and he now travelled as many days.

Sat down under a juniper tree.] Which some look upon as a sign he did not value life; because the shade of this tree (under which he not only sat, but lay down and slept) is thought to be very noxious, as Virgil observes.

It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life.] He thought he could do God no further service, and therefore desired to be discharged from his office by death; for all that he could say or do proved ineffectual.

For I am not better than my fathers.] Unto whose age, it is likely, he had lived.

Ver. 5.] Perhaps he was faint with his day's journey, for want of food at the end of it.

Ver. 6. On the coals.] It should be translated, "upon hot stones," as Bochartus shows in his Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 33.

Laid him down.] Being weary, and wanting rest.

Ver. 7. The journey is too great for thee.] Without extraordinary strength; he being an old man, and much tired with one day's journey.

Ver. 8.] It was a journey of not above four or five days, if so much; but he went about by private ways, that he might not be discovered; and perhaps rested sometimes, and lay hid, if there was any danger of his being seen. The Jews have made a comparison between him and Moses in twenty-four particulars. But Abarbanel shows they were very different, and Moses had the superiority, especially in this thing here mentioned. For he is of opinion that Elijah ate and drank every day, when he could meet with food, as he might in several places of the wilderness. But ordinary food would not have enabled him to travel so long as he did; but it was by the power of that celestial food which the angel brought him that he held out, it giving him vigour beyond all that he could receive from any other nourishment. But in this Moses went beyond him, that he had no food at all; being supported by a miraculous power forty days and forty nights without any sustenance of meat and drink.

Ver. 9.] As much as to say, I have no business for thee here; this is not a place wherein to do me service. Which was a secret reproof for flying so far away; Judea, Samaria, or Damascus being fitter places for him to be employed in.

Ver. 10. I have been very jealous for the Lord.] He professed that he had not wanted zeal for the Lord's service, but been moved with great indignation against idolatry.

Thrown down thine altars.] He calls the altars that had been erected in high places by the ancient patri-and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.

11 And he said, Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the LORD. And, behold, the LORD passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake:

12 And after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice.

13 And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering in of the cave. And, archs, or other pious people in following times, God's altars; because they sacrificed upon them to him alone, and not to idols.

Slain thy prophets] So Jezebel had done, xviii. 4. [I only, am left]; There were many prophets besides him, but none of them appeared publicly in defence of religion but he alone.

They seek my life.] These words answer the question, "What dost thou here?" He fled thither to save his life.

Ver. 11. Stand upon the mount before the Lord.] Where the Shechinah, I suppose, appeared unto him, after some preparations for it.

The Lord passed by.] He heard a sign of the divine presence coming before he went out of the cave. For his angelical ministers, which attended his majesty, passed by the mouth of the cave in a mighty terrible wind, which had those dreadful effects here mentioned.

Before the Lord;} These words show that, in exact speaking, it was not the Lord that passed by when this wind blew, but his ushers, as I may call them, who went "before the Lord:" so it here follows.

The Lord was not in the wind.] The Shechinah did not yet appear.

The Lord was not in the earthquake.] The divine presence still did not manifest itself.

Ver. 12. A fire;} Lightning and thunder, just as there was at the giving of the law, which Elijah endeavoured to restore.

The Lord was not in the fire;} Still he heard nothing from God; who by these things prepared him to receive his majesty with the greatest humility and composure of spirit.

A still small voice.] At the last the Lord himself came, as he perceived by the whispering of a voice: which bade him listen and attend to what the Lord should say unto him. There are many pious meditations, which this appearance of the divine majesty hath suggested to interpreters. Particularly Strigelius looks upon it as representing the divine nature to be inclined not to terrify and destroy, but placidly to invite and preserve. God easily lays aside his anger (as Nazianzen speaks in his oration upon his father), and delights to exercise mercy. For he is compelled to anger by us, πρὸς δὲ τοῦτο τὴν ὀργὴν ἔχει, "but to mercy he is very prone," as we may speak, and by his own nature bent unto it, &c. To the same purpose Rabbag discourses among the Jews. Others look upon all this as a figure of the gospel dispensation, which came not in such a terrible manner as the law did, with storms, thunders, lightnings, and earthquakes (Exod. xix. 16. Heb. xii. 18, &c.), but with great lenity and sweetness, God speaking to us by his Son, in the most mild and gentle manner. And herein also some think he intended to show Elijah that he had all the elements ready armed at his command, if he pleased to make use of them, to destroy idolaters: but by that still voice he declared the divine patience and tenderness, which he would have him to imitate, by bridling his anger, to which he was by nature very prone.

14 And he said, I have been very jealous for the LORD God of hosts: because the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.

15 And the LORD said unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus: and when thou comest, anoint Hazael to be king over Syria:

16 And Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel: and Elisha the son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.

Ver. 13. He wrapped his face in his mantle.] He first covered his face, in token of great reverence to God, not being able to look upon the divine glory which now appeared; and then went out of the cave (as God had commanded him, ver. 11), and stood in the entrance of it, to listen to what God would say to him.

There came a voice unto him.] From the Shechinah, or divine glory.

What dost thou here Elijah?] The same words are repeated which he had heard before, ver. 9. Only there they were spoken by the angel, but here by the Lord himself.

Ver. 14.] He makes the same answer that he had done before, ver. 10. He was so full of anger (as Rabbag thinks) that he did not apply his mind as he ought to understand the vision, and therefore only repeats his former words. But God informs him in the following verse, that he would take care to chastise the Israelites in due time for their apostasy from him; and for that end bade him go and anoint Hazael, &c.

Ver. 15. Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus;} He bids him return the way he came to Horeb; till he came to the way that led to the wilderness of Damascus, and go thither.

Anoint Hazael to be king over Syria;} As much as to say (as the forenamed author expounds it), Since thou art so angry with the Israelites for their impiety, go and anoint one king to be of Syria, who shall be a scourge to them. But this was not done presently, nor did he himself anoint Jehu; but ordered that it should be done by his successor Elisha; though it may be doubted whether any of them were anointed, except Jehu. For the word anoint may be no more than appoint him king, as kings were constituted in Israel by unction. Hence, by a metaphor, it is accommodated to the preferment of men to all dignities: as in Ps. cv. 15, "Touch not mine anointed;" and Cyrus is called the Lord's anointed, Isa. xlv. 1.

Ver. 16. Jehu the son of Nimshi] He was grandson of Nimshi (as appears from 2 Kings ix. 2), who are frequently called sons in the holy books.

Elisha—shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.] This last was the chiefest command (to anoint, that is, to appoint, Elisha to be his successor), for the other two were to be performed by him, not by Elijah; who ordered Elisha to do it in convenient time; and first he appointed Jehu king, and afterward Hazael.

17 And it shall come to pass, that him that escapeth the sword of Hazeal shall Jehu slay : and him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu shall Elisha slay.

18 Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees that have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him.

19 ¶ So he departed thence, and found Elisha the son of Shaphat, who was ploughing with Ver. 17.] This is not to be understood, as if the sword of Hazeal should do execution before the sword of Jehu, and the sword of Jehu before that of Elisha : but it only signifies, as Abarbinel observes, that God in his providence had appointed three persons to punish the Israelites, according to their deserts. Thus he intended Hazeal should destroy them in battle ; which he mentions first, because it is a general calamity. But Jezebel, and the children of Ahab, and the priests of Baal, not going out to fight, and consequently not falling in battle, God ordered Jehu should cut them off in that manner as he did, with all the worshippers of Baal. But he did not inflict evil upon all the people of Israel, because he was to be their king. And though he slew idolaters, he did not meddle with little children, whose disposition he did not know : but they were reserved to be punished by Elisha, who foresaw they would prove idolaters. Thus he, with too much subtilty : but in general he saith well, that the scripture doth not mention these things according to the time wherein they fell out ; but according to the decree of God, who appointed every one to execute that which was proper for him to do.

Ver. 18. Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel.] This seems to be a correction of Elijah's mistake, who imagined that he alone was the only true worshipper of God that remained in Israel. Though Abarbinel will have it relate to what goes immediately before, that all the Israelites should not be destroyed : for he had a great number (seven thousand being put indefinitely for many thousand) of pious people in Israel, who had never worshipped Baal ; and should not therefore be hurt either by Hazeal, or otherwise.

All the knees that have not bowed unto Baal,] Every one knows that bowing the knee was an act of worship ; and so was kissing the idol : which was done two ways : either by applying their mouth immediately to the image (as Cicero against Verres relates of the image of Hercules,) or kissing their hand before the image, and then stretching it out, and, as it were, throwing the kiss to it. Concerning which rite of adoration Salmasius hath given a large account in his annotations upon Flav. Vopiscus, in the life of the emperor Probus ; where he observes such kisses were called labrata oscula ; and from hence the phrases oscula jacere, and basia jactare, and manu venerari, and manu salutare : which he shows out of many authors are used for this way of adoration : the same he notes in his Plin. Exercit. p. 936, where Pliny saith, in adorando dextram ad osculum referimus, totum corpus circumagimus, “ when we worship, we kiss our hand, and turn about our whole body.”

Ver. 19. So he departed] From mount Horeb.

Found Elisha] In his journey towards Damascus.

Who was ploughing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth :] His servants managed the rest, and he himself drove the last. This shows him to have been a great man ; who, according to the manner of those ancient times, looked after his twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth : and Elijah passed by him, and cast his mantle upon him.

20 And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, Let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee. And he said unto him, Go back again : for what have I done to thee ?

21 And he returned back from him, and took a yoke of oxen, and slew them, and boiled their business himself ; and was taken from the plough to be a prophet, as the Romans took some from thence to be dictators and consuls. For nothing was in greater esteem than agriculture among the ancient Greeks and Romans, as well as among the Hebrews. In Homer, we see kings and princes living upon the fruits of their lands and their flocks, and labouring with their own hands. Hesiod hath made a poem on purpose to recommend the country life and labour to his brother. It would be too tedious to show how the Carthaginians and Persians, and indeed all other ancient nations, did not think that to do nothing was to live nobly ; but they studied how to cultivate their lands, and employed themselves, as well as their servants, in that business. Whence such persons, who were of the best quality, were called αὐτοργοί, “ men that did their work themselves,” and did not commit the care of it to others, but ploughed with their own hands. So Quinctius Cincinnatus is said by Dionys. Halicarn. lib. x. to have returned from his consulship, to lead, τὴν αὐτοργὴν βίον, “ a rustic life, as he did before it.” As the learned Jac. Perizonius observes upon Elian's Var. Histor. lib. i. cap. 31. As for the rest, the Greeks ascribe this invention of yoking oxen together to plough (withal either to Ceres, and Triptolemus, or Bacchus, (or some other great person) ; though Moses, who was before them all, was well acquainted with it (Deut. xv. 9 ;) and Job before him (Job i. 3. xlii. 12). Abarbinel thinks these twelve yoke of oxen with which Elisha was ploughing, denoted that he should be leader of the twelve tribes of Israel.

Cast his mantle upon him.] He put upon him the prophetic habit ; which was his inauguration. Or, as some understood it, this was a token that he must become his servant, and attend upon him ; and consequently succeed in his office. For servants were wont to carry their master's shoes after them, and their garments. And accordingly he waited upon him, as appears from two phrases, in the last verse : first, he “ went after him ;” and secondly, “ he ministered unto him.”

Ver. 20. Ran after Elijah,] To desire him to stay a little.

Let me—kiss my father and my mother,] Take his leave of them.

Then I will follow thee.] For he understood that to be the meaning of his throwing his mantle upon him.

Go back again:] Return to thy oxen, and do as as thou desirest.

For what have I done to thee?] He asks him whether he thought he had done any thing to hinder him ? And so this was said to try whether he understood his meaning, and was inclinable to attend him. But Abarbinel thinks these words signify, that he had conferred a great dignity upon him ; which required him to despatch his business immediately : and taking leave of his father and mother, to come after him without any delay ; since he had done such a great thing to him. Which illustrates the words of our Saviour, Matt. xix. 21.

flesh with the instruments of the oxen, and gave unto the people, and they did eat. Then he

Ver. 21. He returned back] Went home, and then came to those that were ploughing.

Took a yoke of oxen, and slew them,—gave unto the people,] He made a feast for his servants, neighbours, and friends, before he parted with them; in token of the joy he conceived at his new calling. Which shows he was not a poor peasant, such arose, and went after Elijah, and ministered unto him.

as our ploughmen are; but a man of condition, who was able to make a great expense upon occasion.

Went after Elijah, and ministered unto him.] Glad to leave his estate, his friends, and all that he had; glad to serve God in a lower station first, before he executed the office of a prophet.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Ben-hadad, not content with Ahab's homage, besiegeth Samaria. 13 By the direction of a prophet, the Syrians are slain. 23 As the prophet forewarned Ahab, the Syrians, trusting in the valleys, come against him in Aphek. 23 By the word of the prophet, and God's judgment, the Syrians are smitten again. 31 The Syrians submitting themselves, Ahab sendeth Ben-hadad away with a covenant. 35 The prophet, under the parable of a prisoner, making Ahab to judge himself, denounceth God's judgment against him.

1 AND Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his host together: and there were thirty and two kings with him, and horses, and chariots: and he went up and besieged Samaria, and warred against it.

2 And he sent messengers to Ahab king of Israel into the city, and said unto him, Thus saith Ben-hadad, 3 Thy silver and thy gold is mine; thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest, are mine.

4 And the king of Israel answered and said, My lord, O king, according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have.

5 And the messengers came again, and said, Thus speaketh Ben-hadad, saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying, Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children;

6 Yet I will send my servants unto thee to morrow about this time, and they shall search thy house, and the houses of thy servants; and it shall be, that whatsoever is pleasant in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away.

7 Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, and said, Mark, I pray you, and see how this man seeketh mischief: for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold; and I denied him not.

CHAPTER XX.

Ver. 1. Ben-hadad the king of Syria] Ben-hadad is as much as the son of Hadad. Which Hadad was of the seed-royal in Edom, and escaped into Egypt when David slew all the males in Edom (xi. 16, 17); but infested Solomon in his latter days, and endeavoured to recover his kingdom; in which he not succeeding, it is probable he established himself in Syria.

Gathered all his host together:] The father of this king had taken several cities from the Israelites (ver. 34. xv. 20), and perhaps had made them tributaries to the Syrians; which tribute Ahab refusing to pay, he made war upon him.

There were thirty and two kings with him,] Such petty princes as those in the land of Canaan before the conquest of it by Joshua; who were under the protection of the king of Syria, and bound to serve him in his wars. But he had better have been without them, and employed his own natural subjects only, who had done his business more successfully (ver. 24), because it was their own.

Horses, and chariots:] It is not said what number; which is an argument it was not very great.

He went up and besieged Samaria,] He did not actually besiege it; for his army was routed before he could do it. Therefore the sense is, "he went up to besiege Samaria," and assault it. Which is like that speech, Gen. xxviii. 10, "Jacob went out from Beer-sheba and went to Haran." Which Rasi interprets, "He went out to go to Haran." For it presently follows, that God appeared to him in the way.

Ver. 2.] he speaks in a haughty style; just like the messengers of the Assyrian monarch to Hezekiah, "Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria."

Ver. 3.] This message is explained by the king of Israel's answer.

Ver. 4.] He was content to be his vassal, and to hold all that he enjoyed of him; for so he understood his demands. But Ben-hadad intended more: or, from his submissive answer, took occasion to enlarge his demands; requiring the property of all he had, which he resolved (as appears from his second message, in the next verses) to take into his own possession.

Ver. 6.] He tells him the meaning of his first demand, that he should deliver all he had into his hands. Unto which, if he now consented, it should not suffice; but he would send some of his officers to take all, and to ransack every corner of his palace, and carry away from him and from his courtiers (who are meant, I suppose, by his servants) whatsoever was valuable: or, perhaps, by servants he means all his subjects.

Ver. 7. The king of Israel called all the elders] Summoned a general council of all the great men to advise what to do.

He sent unto me for my wives, &c. and I denied him not.] But now nothing will content him, but my utter ruin, and enslaving of our country. In this Ahab showed some sparks of virtue remaining in him; in that while Ben-hadad desired only what he had in his own disposal, that is, all his private goods, he agreed to it: but when all the people, and the public good were concerned, he would do nothing without their consent.

8 And all the elders and all the people said unto him, Hearken not unto him, nor consent.

9 Wherefore he said unto the messengers of Ben-hadad, Tell my lord the king, All that thou didst send for to thy servant at the first I will do: but this thing I may not do. And the messengers departed, and brought him word again.

10 And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, The gods do so unto me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me.

11 And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.

12 And it came to pass, when Ben-hadad heard this message, as he was drinking, he and the kings in the pavilions, that he said unto his servants, Set yourselves in array. And they set themselves in array against the city.

13 ¶ And, behold, there came a prophet unto Ahab king of Israel, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hast thou seen all this great multitude? behold, I will deliver it into thine hand this day; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

Ver. 8.] They promising unanimously, I suppose, to stand by him, and defend him against so insolent an enemy.

Ver. 9. Tell my lord the king,] Of whom he speaks in as humble a manner as he did at first (ver. 4).

This thing I may not do.] For his people would not yield to it.

Brought him word again.] Delivered this answer to Ben-hadad, that Ahab stuck to his first concession, according as he understood his demands, but would not consent to more.

Ver. 10.] He wishes he may perish, if he did not bring such an army against the king of Israel, that if every soldier in it should take a handful of his country, nothing of it would be left remaining. Others explain it thus: I will not leave a bit of Samaria standing. But the other is most natural; and this is included in it.

Ver. 11.] A speech like that, "Do not sing a triumph before the victory."

Ver. 12.] Whilst the treaty lasted between him and Ahab he was remiss: but now he commands his army to be put in order, and that they should invest Samaria, and plant their batteries against it.

Ver. 13. There came a prophet unto Ahab] One of those that had been hid; but was now commanded by God to appear and carry a message to Ahab. Which the prophet thought he might do safely, when he brought him such good news, as that which follows.

I will deliver it into thine hand this day;] Hereby God showed, that, as he hated idolatry, of which Ahab was notoriously guilty, so he hated also insolent proud boasters, who imagine they have no superior; and that they can carry all things as they please by their own power.

Thou shalt know that I am the Lord.] Have a new demonstration that he was the Lord of all things. For Ahab had no such message brought by any of Baal's prophets; which was sufficient to convince him, that the Lord, who could foretell and do such wonderful things, was the only God.

Ver. 14. By whom?] He gave some credit to his word; and only asks by whom this deliverance should

VOL. II.—47.

14 And Ahab said, By whom? And he said, Thus saith the LORD, Even by the young men of the princes of the provinces. Then he said, Who shall order the battle? And he answered, Thou.

15 Then he numbered the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty two: and after them he numbered all the people, even all the children of Israel, being seven thousand.

16 And they went out at noon. But Ben-hadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings, the thirty and two kings that helped him.

17 And the young men of the princes of the provinces went out first; and Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him, saying, There are men come out of Samaria.

18 And he said, Whether they be come out for peace, take them alive; or whether they be come out for war, take them alive.

19 So these young men of the princes of the provinces came out of the city, and the army which followed them.

20 And they slew every one his man: and the be wrought: for he knew he had not forces enough to encounter and overthrow such powerful enemies.

Even by the young men of the princes of the provinces.] The "princes of the provinces" were the governors of the several provinces, into which the kingdom was divided. And their young men seem to signify their servants, or their pages (as we speak), that waited on them. As much as to say, Not by old experienced soldiers, but by youths; who, perhaps, had never seen a fight, but had always lived at court.

Who shall order the battle?] Or, who shall begin the fight (as some understand these words), they or we? Shall we make a sally, or expect till they assault us?

Thou.] He bids the king begin, and lead them on. Which was commanded, to encourage the young men, and to try whether Ahab would thus far trust God or not.

Ver. 15. All that he could get together: for these surely were not all the men of war in Israel.

Ver. 16. They went out] Of Samaria.

At noon.] When they knew the Syrians were at dinner, taking a repast; if not debauching themselves, as their king was.

Ben-hadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions.] Being perfectly secure that the Israelites durst not appear to disturb him.

Ver. 17. The young men of the princes—went out first;] And Ahab, no doubt, at the head of them.

Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him,—There are men come out of Samaria.] The meaning is, that upon their first coming out, Ben-hadad hearing a bustle, sent to know what was the matter: and they told him a small party was come out of Samaria.

Ver. 18.] It was against the law of nations to apprehend those that came to treat of peace; but he, in his insolent pride, bade his people not trouble themselves to examine what they came for, but to take them alive; which he thought they might easily do, being so few.

Ver. 19.] The young men only appeared at first; but the rest of the army came out a little after.

Ver. 20. They slew every one his man:] Who came to apprehend them.

The Syrians fled; and Israel pursued them:] At Syrians fled; and Israel pursued them: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria escaped on a horse with the horsemen.

21 And the king of Israel went out, and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with a great slaughter.

22 ¶ And the prophet came to the king of Israel, and said unto him, Go, strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest: for at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee.

23 And the servants of the king of Syria said unto him, Their gods are gods of the hills; therefore they were stronger than we; but let us fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they.

24 And do this thing, Take the kings away every man out of his place, and put captains in their rooms:

25 And number thee an army, like the army that thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot for chariot: and we will fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than which the Syrians were so amazed, by the suddenness of the attempt, that they fled: imagining them to be stronger and better prepared for war than they were.

Ben-hadad—escaped on a horse with the horsemen.] He was possessed with the same fear; and did not endeavour to make his men rally again, but fled away together with them.

Ver. 21.] He went out, by the prophet's order, at the head of the young men, when they first issued out of the city. But now he went out further than he had done at the beginning, and overtook the chariots and horsemen; among whom he made a great slaughter.

Ver. 22. Go, strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest.] He bade him make what preparations he was able, and take care that nothing was wanting to oppose the designs of the Syrians against him; who would certainly return, and renew the fight the next year.

For at the return of the year] At the time when kings used to go out to war. Of which see 2 Sam. xi. l.

Ver. 23. Their gods are gods of the hills;] They did not know the God of the universe, but only worshipped particular gods; who they thought ruled over particular countries, and distributed several parts of those countries among them (some being gods of the woods, others of the rivers, &c.); and they imagined the God of the Hebrews to be ορειβάτης, as Pan was called by the heathen. For they had heard, perhaps, that their law was given from heaven upon a mountain, and there God appeared to them: and the country of Israel also was very hilly: where, upon one eminent hill, God's temple was built, and he was worshipped. And it was known, that the Israelites delighted to sacrifice in high places; insomuch, that when they could not come at them, they sacrificed on the house-tops (Jer. xx. 13).

But let us fight against them in the plain.] For, besides that the Syrian gods, they thought, had more power in a flat plain country, wherein they delighted; there also they should have more service of their horses and chariots, which could not fight so well upon mountains.

Ver. 24.] He had made the thirty-two kings, who were his tributaries, chief commanders in his former they. And he hearkened unto their voice, and did so.

26 And it came to pass at the return of the year that Ben-hadad numbered the Syrians, and went up to Aphek, to fight against Israel.

27 And the children of Israel were numbered, and were all present, and went against them: and the children of Israel pitched before them like two little flocks of kids; but the Syrians filled the country.

28 ¶ And there came a man of God, and spake unto the king of Israel, and said, Thus saith the Lord, because the Syrians have said, The Lord is God of the hills, but he is not God of the valleys, therefore will I deliver all this great multitude into thy hand, and they shall know that I am the Lord.

29 And they pitched one over against the other seven days. And so it was, that in the seventh day the battle was joined: and the children of Israel slew of the Syrians an hundred thousand footmen in one day.

30 But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city;

army: which his counsellors represented to him as a great error; and therefore advised him to displace them, and put his own captains in their stead, who would fight better. For they fought for their country, which the other did not: and besides, the kings, it is likely, were too delicate to be warriors; and were not so obedient to discipline as his captains would be.

Ver. 25.] For his army they knew would be superior; and they should have the advantage of the ground.

Ver. 26.] This was a city in the tribe of Asher: which, it is probable, was one of those that Ben-hadad's father had taken from the king of Israel (ver. 34). Not far from which was the plain of Galilee, where he intended to fight.

Ver. 27. The children of Israel were numbered,] That is, as many as could be got together were numbered, and put in order to give them battle.

Like two little flocks of kids;] The Hebrew word chasiph is nowhere found but in this place; which Kimchi and others translate a little flock. But there is no need to add the word little; for the flocks of goats are always small; never so great as those of sheep. For they love to ramble, and are scattered up and down, as Bochartus observes, who translates these words, two flocks of young kids; denoting their contemptible number, and that they were weak, feeble, and timorous, like those fugacious creatures, as he speaks, Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 51.

Ver. 28.] This man of God, the Jews say, was the prophet Micah.

Ver. 29. They pitched one over against the other seven days.] It may seem strange that they should look upon one another so long, and watch for advantages, without coming to any action; for the Syrians had so much advantage in their numbers, that one would think they should have immediately encompassed the Israelites, and destroyed them all. But, perhaps, the Israelites were pitched upon a rising ground, and the Syrians durst not attack them till they came down into the plain.

Israel slew of the Syrians an hundred thousand footmen] In all probability they surprised them by a sudden unexpected assault; and God dismayed them, and struck such a terror into them, that they could make no resistance.

and there a wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left. And Ben-hadad fled, and came into the city, into an inner chamber.

31 ¶ And his servants said unto him, Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are merciful kings: let us, I pray thee, put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel: peradventure he will save thy life.

32 So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, and came to the king of Israel, and said, Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee, let me live. And he said, Is he yet alive? he is my brother.

33 Now the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him, and did hastily catch it: and they said, Thy brother Ben-hadad. Then he said, Go ye, bring him. Then Ben-hadad came forth to him; and he caused him to come up into the chariot.

34 And Ben-hadad said unto him, The cities, which my father took from thy father, I will restore; and thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria. Then said Ahab, I will send thee away with this covenant. So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.

35 ¶ And a certain man of the sons of the prophets said unto his neighbour in the word of the Lord, Smite me, I pray thee. And the man refused to smite him.

Ver. 30. A wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left.] The wall of the city, under which they lay, to be ready to defend it, fell down; either by the Israelites batteries, or by an earthquake; and killed or maimed a great number of them that fled thither for safety.

Into an inner chamber.] In the Hebrew the words are, "into a chamber within a chamber;" that is, into a very secret place, where he thought he should not be easily found.

Ver. 31. We have heard that the kings of—Israel are merciful kings:] Better natured than other kings unto those who are in distress; they retaining still something of the temper of that good king David; who was full of humanity and tenderness, unto which true religion disposes men above all other things.

Let us, I pray thee,] One of his principal courtiers spake this in the name of the rest.

Put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads,] This it seems was the posture in those times, wherein supplicants presented themselves, when they petitioned for mercy; as among the Greeks and Romans they came in a mournful manner, with a branch of olive in their hands. The sackcloth upon their loins was a token of great sorrow for what they had done; and halters about their necks, a token of their subjection to what punishment he pleased to inflict.

Ver. 32. Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee, let me live.] He now as humbly petitions Ahab, as Ahab a little while ago had petitioned him (ver. 4), and he begs of him life. Such are the strange turns of human affairs, which the ancient historians among the heathens have observed, as admonishments to men not to bear themselves high in a prosperous condition, nor trust to their present fortune (as they called it), not knowing, quid serus vesper vohat, "what might fall out before the day was done."

Is he yet alive? he is my brother.] He rejoiced to hear that he did not perish in the battle; and not only pardoned him at the first word, and gave him his life; but expressed as great affection to him as if he had been his brother. This was folly, not mercifulness or good nature. It had been enough not to have tormented him; but to let him not only live, but own him for a brother, was stupid inconsideration. For a man that lately treated him so disdainfully could never make a true friend.

Ver. 33. Now the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him,] They were wise persons whom he employed in this embassy; who watched attentively whether any kind word would drop from his mouth, on which they might lay hold, and make their advantage of it, before he could retract it. And they caught at the word brother, and said, Thy brother Ben-hadad lives, and implores this favour, that he may live.

Go ye, bring him.] This was strange rashness, to make such haste as not to advise with his privy council what to do in such a case.

And he caused him to come up into the chariot.] It seems that Ahab was still in the field.

Ver. 34. The cities which my father took from thy father, I will restore;] The word Ben-hadad not being in the Hebrew, Osiander and some others think that Ahab, who was so kind as to take him up into his chariot, made this speech to him when he came there, that he would not only give him his life but his kingdom also, which he had now power to take from him; and be so far from diminishing his power, that he would restore all that had been taken from him by his father. Which senseless kindness was the thing that provoked God to pronounce that heavy doom upon him, ver. 42. But the next words do not well agree with this; therefore I take these to be Ben-hadad's words to Ahab, whereby he endeavoured to smooth him up and sweeten him, by offering to become his subject (as the next words signify), and making restitution of all that had been taken from his predecessor.

Thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria.] Some think by streets he means market-places, where commodities were sold, the toll of which should belong to Ahab. Others think he means "courts of judgment" where he should maintain a jurisdiction over Ben-hadad's subjects: others, that we now call a piazza, of which Ahab should receive the rents. But commonly interpreters think he means fortifications, whereby he might bridle the chief city of the kingdom of Syria; that they might not make new irruptions into the land of Israel: citadels, as we now speak, to keep them in awe, and to be a check to them, if they attempted anything destructive to the Israelites. Yet, after all, Gottf. Vallandus hath said a great deal to prove that the Hebrew word signifies palaces, which he being allowed to build, was a great token of subjection. We do not read of any such things that were built by the Syrian kings in Samaria: nor of any cities they took from the Israelites: unless those taken from Baasha (xv. 20), who was not Ahab's father.

So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.] Wherein he discovered his great weakness; for his covenant was soon broken, as we read in the last chapter of this book.

Ver. 35. A certain man of the sons of the prophets] This the Jews will still have to be Micaiah; which is not likely, for he is called "a prophet of the Lord;" not one of the "sons of the prophets."

Smite me, I pray thee.] He bade him give him such a blow as might wound him (ver. 37).

36 Then said he unto him, Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the Lord, behold, as soon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee. And as soon as he was departed from him, a lion found him, and slew him.

37 Then he found another man, and said, Smite me, I pray thee. And the man smote him, so that in smiting he wounded him.

38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and disguised himself with ashes upon his face.

39 And as the king passed by, he cried unto the king: and he said, Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle; and, behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, Keep this man; if by any means he be missing, then shall thy life be for his life, or else thou shalt pay a talent of silver.

40 And as thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it.

41 And he hastened, and took the ashes away from his face; and the king of Israel discerned him that he was of the prophets.

42 And he said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people.

43 And the king of Israel went to his house heavy and displeased, and came to Samaria.

The man refused to smite him.] Because it looked like inhumanity to strike an innocent person, who had done him no wrong.

Ver. 36. Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the Lord,—a lion shall slay thee.] This may seem too severe a punishment, till these two things be considered. First, that the prophet commanded him to smite him, and that “by the word of the Lord.” Not of his own will, and from his proper private motion: but God required it. As if he had said (so Theodoret glosses on it), οὐκ ἐγὼ σοι, &c. “It is not I that require this of thee, but the Spirit that is within me.” And accordingly the punishment was inflicted, because he “obeyed not the voice of the Lord.” And secondly, the prophet commanded this in God’s name, not to an ordinary man, but el reehu: which should not be translated, “to his neighbour;” but, as St. Jerome, “to his companion.” And so the Targum, and other ancient interpreters, “to his fellow;” that is, a prophet bred in the same school with himself; who well understood the weight of these words, I command thee in “the name of the Lord.”

A lion found him, and slew him.] The Jews say in the title Sanhedrin, and other places, that some prophets were put to death by the hand of man, and others by the hand of God. They that prophesied what they were not told by God, or they that prophesied in the name of idols, were to be put to death by the judges: but they who concealed their prophecy, or rejected a prophecy, their death was by the hand of God.

Ver. 37.] The intention of this was, that he might find the freer access to Ahab, as a soldier well deserving: and that he might the better feign his story: for in such a matter the king was not to be dealt withal in downright words.

Ver. 38.] As a man in a very mournful condition. The Hebrews understand it, that he covered his face with a veil, or a handkerchief, or bound it about with a fillet (for one cannot tell how ashes should cover it), in token that he was wounded. So that the king could not know who he was (see Bochart’s Canaan, lib. ii. cap. 8).

Ver. 39. Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle:] He pretended that he had adventured his life in the late fight; being engaged in the hottest service.

Keep this man:] He pretended, I suppose that his captain having a prisoner of great quality, charged him with him; telling him that he should be answerable for him with his life, if he let him escape; or redeem his life with a greater sum of money than he was able to pay.

Ver. 40. As thy servant was busy here and there,] Endeavouring, in the fight to do the best service he was able everywhere.

He was gone.] In the Hebrew, “he could not be found.”

So shall thy judgment be; thyself has decided it.] Thou hast pronounced thy own sentence; according to thy agreement so shalt thou suffer. He had forgot how he had dismissed a greater person willingly, else he could not have been so hard-hearted as to condemn one that had offended unwillingly. But he soon made him think of it.

Ver. 41. Took the ashes away from his face;] Threw away his disguise immediately; by pulling off the cloth wherein his face was wrapped.

He was of the prophets.] Some of the by-standers perhaps knew him, when they saw his bare face: or by the very motion of his eyes before he spake (which he did immediately), he sufficiently discovered what he was.

Ver. 42. Because thou hast let go—a man whom I appointed to utter destruction,] For the battle was the Lord’s; and the victory being obtained purely by the divine power, and the singular favour of God, Ahab ought not to have resolved how to dispose of Ben-hadad without God’s leave; but have consulted him (who had put him into his hands) what he would have done with him for he was God’s prisoner; who was to have his part of the spoil, which he would please to choose.

Therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people.] The former part of this decree of God was fulfilled three years after, when Ahab was killed in a battle against the Syrians (xxii. 1—4, &c.) But the latter part was deferred until the reign of Hazael, who fulfilled it by the wars he had with the Israelites (2 Kings x. 32, 33.)

Ver. 43.] This heavy sentence turned all their joy for the late victory into mourning; Ahab being much troubled for what he had done, and for what he was like to suffer.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Ahab being denied Naboth's vineyard is grieved. 5 Jezebel writing letters against Naboth, he is condemned of blasphemy. 15 Ahab taketh possession of the vineyard. 17 Elijah denounceth judgments against Ahab and Jezebel. 25 Wicked Ahab repenting, God deferreth the judgment.

1 AND it came to pass after these things, that Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria.

2 And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, Give me thy vineyard, that I may have it for a garden of herbs, because it is near unto my house: and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or, if it seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money.

3 And Naboth said to Ahab, The Lord forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.

4 And Ahab came into his house heavy and displeased because of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had spoken to him: for he had said, I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers. And he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

CHAP. XXI.

Ver. 1. After these things, that Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard.] After all those wonderful things which God had done, in giving such victories to Ahab, he coveted the vineyard of a neighbour of his. Which is peculiarly noted, as Abarbinel thinks, to have followed the foregoing history, to set forth the extreme great wickedness of Ahab; who spared Ben-hadad, as Saul did Agag king of the Amalekites, and killed Naboth, that he might get his vineyard. This was a high aggravation of his crime, that he basely murdered a just Israelite, and let an impious enemy escape.

Hard by the palace of Ahab] Not far from it, if not adjoining to it: being planted on the same rising ground, whereon the palace stood; for vines thrive best in mountainous places.

Ver. 2. For a garden of herbs.] For a flower garden, as some understand it.

I will give thee the worth of it in money.] This was a fair proposal, but the law was against it.

Ver. 3. That I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.] As it is natural to all men to value and love the ancient possessions that have been in their family; so the law of Moses prohibited the alienation of lands from one tribe to another, unless a man was reduced to poverty; in which case he might sell it till the jubilee; but then it was to return to him (see Lev. xxv. 15. 25. 28). Now, as Naboth was in no need, so he considered that if he should, out of respect to the king, and merely to do him a pleasure, part with his vineyard, he should never get it out of his hands at the jubilee; being made part of the ground belonging to the royal palace. This makes it probable that Naboth was one of the seven thousand who observed the law strictly.

Ver. 4. Ahab came into his house heavy and displeased] Just as he had done, after the prophet had pronounced the severe sentence against him (xx. 43).

I will not give thee the inheritance] Made him a peremptory denial; which he could not bear.

He laid him down upon his bed—and would eat no bread.] He was so vexed to be denied by a subject, that he fell into such a passion, as made him sick, 5 ¶ But Jezebel his wife came to him, and said unto him, Why is thy spirit so sad, that thou eatest no bread?

6 And he said unto her, Because I spake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it: and he answered, I will not give thee my vineyard.

7 And Jezebel his wife said unto him, Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? arise, and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry: I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.

8 So she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth.

9 And she wrote in the letters, saying, Proand took away his stomach, and made company unacceptable to him. In short he was very melancholy.

Ver. 5.] He soon found his mind was more out of order than his body; and therefore desired to know what had disturbed him.

Ver. 6.] He doth not acquaint her with his reason, but reports his answer, as if he gave him a surly refusal. Which was far otherwise; Naboth representing it as a religious duty (ver. 3) founded upon the law of God, not to part with the inheritance of his fathers, which was allotted to them by Joshua, never to be alienated. For in truth they that possessed them were only usufructuaries (i. e. enjoyed the profits of them), God himself being the true proprietor (Lev. xxv. 23), who charged their land with no other payments but tithes and first-fruits to his ministers: after which he gave them an entire possession of it, to remain in their several families for ever, without any alteration, which none could make but himself.

Ver. 7. Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel?] Is this like a king, to torment thyself in this manner? as Rabbag glosses. Or, doth it become a king to beg and pray, and not rather command? Thou knowest not thine own power, but actest like a minor, who hath no authority. Or, as Abarbinel understands it, Canst thou expect things should go well in thy kingdom, if thou hast neither will nor power to do any thing in such a small matter as this? She would not have him trouble himself, but leave her to accomplish his desires.

Ver. 8. So she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal.] These seals were wont to be worn upon one of the fingers of their hand (Jer. xxii. 24) and never to be taken off night nor day, but when they used them. Which shows she was an audacious woman, that durst steal this from Ahab's finger (for it doth not appear he knew of these letters) and write what she pleased in his name; that is, use his kingly authority to what purposes she thought good.

And sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles] The Israelites, it seems, after their separation from Judah, kept up the civil polity which was ordained by Moses (though they forsook his religion,) having claim a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people :

10 And set two men, sons of Belial before him, to bear witness against him, saying, Thou didst blaspheme God and the king. And then carry him out, and stone him, that he may die.

11 And the men of his city, even the elders and the nobles who were the inhabitants in his city, did as Jezebel had sent unto them, and as it was written in the letters which she had sent unto them.

elders and judges in their several cities, as they had here at Jezreel : where they had not only elders, but also nobles ; that is, captains of thousands, and hundreds, as Bon. Bertram observes, cap. 12. De Repub. Judaea.

Ver. 9. Proclaim a fast.] As if there had been some grievous crime committed, or some great calamity had befallen them ; which all the people were to bewail, and purge themselves from that sin, lest they also should become guilty. And, consequently, they were to see the crime punished very severely : for such days of fasting were spent in punishing offences, and doing justice, and praying to God for pardon. Some ask, where it was kept ? And Vitringa thinks it might possibly be in the very streets of the city : where Ezra kept his fast (Neh. viii. 1—3).

Set Naboth on high among the people.] In this religious assembly of the people. For he being a person of an illustrious house (as Josephus reports) was ordered to be set in an honourable place : that so it might not be thought they condemned him out of hatred, but with grief and respect to his person, being constrained merely by the evidence given against him. Yet, others will have it, that the reason he was set in an eminent place, was only because all people accused and arraigned were wont so to appear before the judges ; that all the people might see them, and hear what was alleged against them, and the proofs of it, and their defence.

Ver. 10. Set two men—of Belial.] Men of no conscience, that would swear any thing for money.

To bear witness against him.] Such was the Roman custom also (which was most rational), that the accused should “have the accusers face to face ;” as Festus saith, Acts xxv. 16. But some think that she need not have put herself to this trouble of proceeding in such a formal manner against Naboth in a court of justice ; for by the jus regium, mentioned 1 Sam. viii. 14, she might have taken his vineyard from him by Ahab's absolute power. But that is a great mistake ; for Samuël only meant that their kings would take the fruits of their vineyards upon occasion for their use, but not the possession of the vineyards themselves ; for so all the land might have become the king's : and that jus regium Josephus calls a mere tyranny.

Thou didst blaspheme God and the king.] The Hebrews so much abhorred this crime of blasphemy, that they would not express it by its proper name, but said bless, instead of curse ; as here and in the book of Job. Now it was death by the law of Moses to blaspheme God (Lev. xxiv. 16) and by custom it was death to blaspheme the king, which is forbidden in those words, Exod. xx. 28. And perhaps they might stretch that law hither, which forbade any man, upon pain of death, to curse his father or his mother (Exod. xxi. 17), for the prince is the father of his country. But to make all sure, they accused Naboth of both, of treason against God and against the king ; that so the people might be the better satisfied to see 12 They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people.

13 And there came in two men, children of Belial, and sat before him : and the men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king. Then they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones, that he died.

14 Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, Naboth is stoned, and is dead.

him stoned. But there is this difference to be observed between these two : that if a man had only blasphemed God, he was to be tried by the great court at Jerusalem (as the Hebrew doctors tell us), and his goods came to his heirs ; but when any man was executed for treason against the king, his estate went to the exchequer, being forfeited to him against whom the offence was committed. And therefore it was that they accused Naboth of this crime, on purpose that his estate might be confiscated, and Ahab enjoy his vineyard. And they accused him of blasphemy against God for other reasons : that justice might be done the sooner upon him ; or, as the Talmudists speak, to increase their indignation (see Selden, De Successionibus, cap. 25. fol. 87, 88).

Then carry him out.] Not merely out of the assembly, but out of the city (ver. 13). For in the wilderness, and before the conquest of Canaan, they executed punishments without the camp (Lev. xxiv. 23. Josh. vii. 24), and afterward without the gate of the city : whereby they intended to testify, that they would take the evil out of the midst of them, and not suffer wickedness to remain among them. So it is explained, ver. 13 (see Grotius, Matt. xxvii. 32).

And stone him.] For this was the punishment of blasphemy : as we see by their attempt to stone our Saviour, and their killing St. Stephen in this manner. Concerning this punishment, see Sanhedrin, cap. 6.

Ver. 11. The elders and the nobles] The principal inhabitants.

Did as Jezebel had sent unto them.] Perhaps she sent private messengers to tell them by word of mouth what she expected from them, and how she would reward them ; as well as public letters to authorize what they did. And princes never want instruments to execute their pleasure. But it is much there should be none among the judges, and great men, that abhorred such villany : which argues the great corruption of their manners by idolatry.

Ver. 13. There came in two men,—and sat before him.] As the witnesses used to do in courts of judgment ; testifying to his face the truth of the accusation brought against him.

The men of Belial witnessed against him,—in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king.] This signifies no more but that they had the impudence publicly to testify a falsity. Though Bertram, in the book before mentioned (cap. 12) from these words, “in the presence of the people” argues, potestatem populi ; “the power of the people in this kingdom ;” because these suborned witnesses gave their testimony before them. So that it was a mixed government, like ours, consisting of the power of the king, of the nobles, and of the people. If this be true, it argues all these people of that place to be very wicked ; in that none of them excepted against the testimony of such persons which ought not (as Maimonides observes) to have been admitted.

Then they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him] And his sons with him, as many gather from 15 ¶ And it came to pass, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money : for Naboth is not alive, but dead.

16 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it.

17 ¶ And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,

18 Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, which is in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he has gone down to possess it.

19 And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the Lord, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.

20 And Ahab said to Elijah, Hast thou found me, O mine enemy? And he answered, I have found thee: because thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of the Lord.

21 Behold, I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy posterity, and will cut off from Ahab him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel, 22 And will make thine house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah, for the provocation wherewith thou hast provoked me to anger, and made Israel to sin.

23 And of Jezebel also spake the Lord, saying, The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel.

24 Him that dieth of Ahab in the city the dogs shall eat; and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat.

25 ¶ But there was none like unto Ahab, which did sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord, whom Jezebel his wife stirred up.

26 And he did very abominably in following idols, according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the Lord cast out before the children of Israel.

27 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard those words, that he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and went softly.

28 And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,

29 Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself

2 Kings ix. 26, they being condemned as accessories to his crime.

Ver. 14.] They knew that the order came from her; and therefore let her know they had obeyed it.

Ver. 15.] But by what title did he take possession? The Hebrews, I observed before, think it was by the right of confiscation; which was practised in all such crimes against the king (see upon 2 Sam. ix. 7, and Grotius, upon Josh. i. 18, and upon this place). Though others think he took possession for want of heirs; his children being condemned with him.

Ver. 16.] He could not but know how Naboth died; and therefore, by this consented to that wickedness, which was committed also by his authority (ver. 8).

Ver. 17.] Some lesser prophets were employed in the late messages sent unto him (xx. 13. 28. 35). But upon this great occasion God sends Elijah, whom he dreaded, not merely to reprove him, but to condemn him to a punishment suitable to the crime he had committed.

Ver. 18. Which is in Samaria:] That is, who reigns in Samaria (ver. 1).

He is in the vineyard of Naboth.] That he might be sure not to lose his labour, he tells him where he might find him.

Ver. 19. Hast thou killed, and also taken possession?] He expresses in brief the barbarity of this fact; as if he had said, Was it not enough that thou hast taken away his life, but thou must seize on his estate, and go thyself in person to take possession of it?

In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.] He declares the cause of this judgment upon him, but doth not assign the place; for the dogs licked Ahab's blood in Samaria (xxi. 38.) Therefore these words should be translated, as the dogs licked or in like manner as they licked Naboth's blood, so shall they lick thine: mark what I say, even thine.

Ver. 20. Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?] As much as to say, Wilt thou never suffer me to be quiet?

How darest thou to appear in my presence again, with such terrible threatenings?

Thou hast sold thyself to work evil] They that sell themselves are wholly under the power of their masters; so was Ahab under the power of sin; a perfect slave to his sinful lusts and passions, which hurried him into the foulest crimes.

Ver. 21.] See upon xiv. 10.

Ver. 22.] These two families were utterly extirpated (see xv. 29. xvi. 11, 12, &c.), as he prophesied Ahab's should be.

Ver. 23. In the territory where Naboth was judged and unjustly condemned.

Ver. 24.] See xiv. 11.

Ver. 25.] But there was none like unto Ahab which did sell himself to work wickedness] Made himself a perfect bond-slave to all manner of wickedness.

Whom Jezebel his wife stirred up.] Which did not excuse him, yet something mitigated his punishment: for she died more miserably than he.

Ver. 26. He did very abominably in following idols, — as did the Amorites,] There was no abomination which the people of Canaan committed (who are here called the Amorites, according to the ancient language, Gen. xv. 16), which he did not imitate.

Whom the Lord cast out] As he intended to cast out the whole family of Ahab: who by God's judgments upon the Amorites, might have taken warning not to tread in their steps.

Ver. 27.] All these were expressions of very great sorrow and heaviness; which were usual in mourning. And the last words the Chaldee paraphrast translates, he went barefoot. But it is rejected by the greater part of interpreters, who take it as we do, for such a slow pace as signified he was reduced to great weakness and feebleness of body, by fasting and grief; or that he had no heart to go about any business. The Jews tell us in Pirke Eliezer, cap. 43, that he sent to Jehoshaphat king of Judah, who came and gave him a certain number of stripes every day: and that three times before me? because he humbleth himself before me, I will not bring the evil in his days: but in

in a day. But without this fabulous addition, here is enough to signify that he was extremely cast down, and very much troubled; I cannot say for his sin, but for the heavy punishment God had laid upon him. It is likely, indeed, for the present he might have some sense of his sins; but it did not last to bring him to true repentance: that is, to make him forsake them. For we read not so much as of any restitution of the vineyard; much less of his forsaking idols.

Ver. 29. Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself] Which neither Jeroboam nor Baasha had done, but his son's days will I bring the evil upon his house.

obstinately went on, without the least token of sorrow, when the same doom was passed on them.

I will not bring the evil in his days: but in his son's days] Such a power there is in hearty repentance and reformation of life to obtain a pardon, that God remitted part of Ahab's punishment, at least deferred it, upon this imperfect repentance. Which argued some degree of belief of what the prophet said: and accordingly it was his son's blood, not his, which was licked up by the dogs in that portion of ground where Naboth's was (2 Kings ix. 25, 26).

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Ahab, seduced by false prophets, according to the word of Micaiah, is slain at Ramoth-gilead. 37 The dogs lick up his blood, and Ahaziah succeedeth him. 41 Jehoshaphat's good reign. 45 His acts. 50 Jehoram succeedeth him. 51 Ahaziah's evil reign.

1 AND they continued three years without war between Syria and Israel.

2 And it came to pass in the third year, that Jehoshaphat the king of Judah came down to the king of Israel.

3 And the king of Israel said unto his servants, Know ye that Ramoth in Gilead is our's, and we be still, and take it not out of the hand of the king of Syria?

4 And he said unto Jehoshaphat, Wilt thou go with me to battle to Ramoth-gilead? And Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horses as thy horses.

5 And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, Inquire, I pray thee, at the word of the Lord to day.

6 Then the king of Israel gathered the prophets together, about four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall I go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? and they said, Go up; for the Lord shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

7 And Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the Lord besides, that we might enquire of him?

8 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man, Micaiah the son of Imlah, by whom we may inquire of the Lord: but I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good

CHAP. XXII.

Ver. 1. They continued three years] Not complete but part of three years, (see 2 Chron. xviii. 2).

Without war between Syria and Israel.] Though God was very angry with Israel, and intended to plague them by the Syrians: yet his anger being deferred for some time upon Ahab's humiliation, Elijah did not cause Hazael to be anointed King of Syria, who was to be the executioner of God's wrath, because it was prolonged for the reason now named. Thus Abarbanel.

Ver. 2.] For there was an affinity made between him and Ahab (2 Chron. xviii. 1), Jehoshaphat's son having married Ahab's daughter (2 Kings viii. 18).

Ver. 3.] Some think Ben-hadad had not made good his covenant to restore all the cities the Syrians had taken from Israel (xx. 34), whereof this, it is likely, was one.

Ver. 4. Wilt thou go with me to battle to Ramoth-gilead?] He acted now like a prudent man; who, before he resolved upon a war, desired to know whether he might depend upon Jehoshaphat for his assistance in it; for his forces, in comparison with the Syrians, were very small (xx. 27).

I am as thou art,] He professes himself entirely at his service; as if they were but one person and people.

Ver. 5.] But he desired first, that the prophets who were in Israel might be forthwith consulted, whether God approved of their design, and would give them success in it. So good men were wont to do (Judg. i. 1. 1 Sam. xxiii. 2).

Ver. 6. Then the King of Israel gathered the pro- phets] Some think these were the prophets of the groves, who were not slain with the prophets of Baal, because they are just the same number (xviii. 19). But perhaps there were schools of the prophets kept up still in Israel, in imitation of those in Judah, wherein men were bred up, who pretended to have this gift. But it is plain they were false prophets; for Micaiah calls them Ahab's prophets (see ver. 23).

Go up; for the Lord shall deliver it into the hand of the king.] They speak as if they were inspired by the Lord, and in his name promise good success; for they knew Jehoshaphat regarded not Baal, nor Astarte, but only the Lord.

Ver. 7.] He doth not reject these as no prophets of the Lord, though he suspected them; and therefore desired to know, if there was any other that was accounted a prophet of the Lord, from whom he might receive further satisfaction. And indeed it is not likely that Ahab would adventure to send for such prophets as were professed servants of Baal, from whom Jehoshaphat, he knew would receive no advice; but they professed themselves to be servants of the Lord, for whom Elijah's late miracle had wrought in Ahab some respect. And Dr. Jackson seems to me to have produced a good argument for this, from Jehoshaphat's continuing his resolution of accompanying Ahab to battle, notwithstanding all that Micaiah had said against it. Which he would never have done, had he believed that Micaiah alone belonged unto the Lord, and his adversaries unto Baal (book ii. upon the Creed, ch. 18. par. 2).

Ver. 8.] We ought to love those who speak the truth, not those who speak what pleaseth us.

concerning me, but evil. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so.

9 Then the king of Israel called an officer, and said, Hasten hither Micaiah the son of Imiah.

10 And the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah sat each on his throne, having put on their robes, in a void place in the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them.

11 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah made him horns of iron: and he said, Thus saith the LORD, With these shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them.

12 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the king's hand.

13 And the messenger that was gone to call Micaiah spake unto him, saying, Behold now, the words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth: let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, and speak that which is good.

14 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth,

Ver. 9.] He would not deny Jehoshaphat's desire of hearing him, as well as others; lest he should fly off from his kind offer (ver. 4).

Ver. 10. Having put on their robes.] Their royal apparel and all the ensigns of majesty.

In the entrance of the gate of Samaria.] Where the people used to meet, and causes were heard by the courts of justice (see upon 2 Sam. xix. 8).

All the prophets prophesied before them.] Continued to encourage them in their design.

Ver. 11.] Such was the manner, it seems, of prophets in ancient times, by external signs to represent future events: as Isaiah and Jeremiah continued to do in future ages (Isa. xx. 2. Jer. xxvii. 2).

Ver. 12.] Every one of them accorded in the same sense; that he should certainly be victorious.

Ver. 13.] So mightily did the opinion of universality sway with the superstitious people, that the messenger thought he could persuade Micaiah not to dissent from the rest, lest he should fall under the censure of singularity, peevishness, and privacy of spirit. And thus it is in the church at this day, as the same excellent doctor there observes.

Ver. 14.] He seems as yet to have no revelation about the matter; but when the question was put to him, God taught him what to answer.

Ver. 15. Micaiah, shall we go against Ramoth-gilead to battle.] The very same question that had been asked the rest of the prophets (ver. 6).

Go and prosper.] And he gave the very same answer in the same word that the other prophets had done (ver. 12), but spake them in such a manner, that Ahab plainly discerned he derided and mocked. It being as if he had said, To what purpose shall I contradict your prophets? For you have a mind to go, and do so: try the truth of their prediction.

Ver. 16.] He had not abjured him at all, but now he doth: and would do it again, and again, if he did not speak seriously, and tell him what God said to him; which Micaiah had not yet done. For he doth not use the common preface of prophets to the foregoing answer, Thus saith the Lord; because he did not speak in God's name but in his own.

Ver. 17. I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills.] Routed, and flying from their enemies to the hills for safety.

what the LORD saith unto me, that will I speak.

15 ¶ So he came to the king. And the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall we forbear? And he answered him, Go, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

16 And the king said unto him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the LORD?

17 And he said, I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills, as sheep that have not a shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master: let them return every man to his house in peace.

18 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil?

19 And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD: I saw the LORD sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left.

20 And the LORD said, Who shall persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-

As sheep that have not a shepherd.] In a most miserable condition, as sheep are without a shepherd to look after them: they being neither strong, nor cunning nor nimble, and swift of feet; but exposed to the injuries of all creatures, when they are left to themselves without a shepherd; which is very often repeated in the scriptures, as if it were a proverbial speech among the Hebrews (Numb. xxvii. 17. 2 Chron. xviii. 16, Zech. x. 2. xiii. 7. Matt. ix. 36).

These have no master.] They have lost their king and governor: who was represented by the shepherd before mentioned.

Let them return every man to his house in peace.] All go home, and think no more of war; having lost their ruler. This was an exact representation of what followed.

Ver. 18.] He had always been wont to bring threatening messages from God to him; and therefore was not (as the Jews imagine) the prophet who brought him that gracious message, when Ben-hadad treated him so insolently (xx. 13).

Ver. 19. Hear thou therefore the word of the Lord.] If thou dost not delight only in lies, hear what I have further to say from the Lord.

I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, &c.] This is a parabolical speech, as Abarbinel calls it, signifying that there was a greater king than Ahab, who would judge him according to his works. And in a vision he saw him sitting on a throne, for that purpose, and attended by the heavenly host, as Ahab was by his prophets: some on his right hand, by which many think he means the good angels; and some on his left hand, by which are meant the bad, who are the executioners of his judgments when he pleases.

Ver. 20. Who shall persuade Ahab.] It is not to be thought there was any such consultation before the divine majesty, who should be employed to persuade him to undo himself: but these representations are contrived to bring down invisible things to the meanest capacities of men. Who were to know that the Lord resolved to let Ahab be deceived and perish at Ramoth-gilead, rather than any other place: that he who let Ben-hadad escape, might be punished by Ben-hadad.

One said on this manner, and another said on that gilead? and one said on this manner, and another said on that manner.

21 And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will persuade him.

22 And the LORD said unto him, Wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: go forth, and do so.

23 Now therefore, behold, the LORD hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the LORD hath spoken evil concerning thee.

24 But Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah went near, and smote Micaiah on the cheek, and said, Which way went the Spirit of the LORD from me to speak unto thee?

25 And Micaiah said, Behold, thou shalt see in that day, when thou shalt go into an inner chamber to hide thyself.

26 And the king of Israel said, Take Micaiah, and carry him back unto Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son; manner.] This is said, only to signify that God hath many ways of bringing men to ruin, when he declares it.

Ver. 21.] This is not to be understood literally, but that there are evil spirits who are very forward to entice men to their own destruction, and have power so to do, if the Lord do not hinder them.

Ver. 22. Wherewith?] God was not ignorant of what he could and would do: but this is said, to represent more familiarly to vulgar understandings by what means Ahab was led into destruction.

Will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets.] Suggest to them that which will deceive him.

Go forth and do so.] God permitted this lying spirit to follow his own inclinations, which he knew would have success, and prevail with Ahab to believe he should prosper in this war, wherein God intended he should be destroyed. For the prophets had observed how prosperous Ahab had been in former wars with the king of Syria, which made them forward to promise the same success in this also; and Ahab was as forward to believe it as they were to assure it.

Ver. 23. The Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, They were properly Ahab's prophets, not the Lord's; who only employed them to mislead him.

Hath spoken evil concerning thee.] The Lord had decreed he should perish in this war; and in order to it, stirred up the spirit of the prophets (as Abarbanel speaks) to prophesy according to their own inclination; and him to believe them, and rush into his own ruin.

Ver. 24. Zedekiah—went near,] He seems to be the chief of Ahab's prophets: the head, perhaps, of the whole college.

Smote Micaiah on the cheek,] By way of reproach and scorn, Jer. xx. 2. Mark. xiv. 45, and other places.

Which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me to speak unto thee?] He was confident he had the Spirit, and could not imagine how it should depart from him and enter into Micaiah, bidding him contradict all that he and his brethren had prophesied.

Ver. 25. Into an inner chamber] Into a secret place (xx. 30).

To hide thyself.] For fear he should be seized and punished as a false prophet, and the cause of Ahab's death.

27 And say, Thus saith the king, Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I come in peace.

28 And Micaiah said, if thou return at all in peace, the LORD hath not spoken by me. And he said, Hearken, O people, every one of you.

29 So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah went up to Ramoth-gilead.

30 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, I will disguise myself, and enter into the battle; but put thou on thy robes. And the king of Israel disguised himself, and went into the battle.

31 But the king of Syria commanded his thirty and two captains that had rule over his chariots, saying, Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king of Israel.

32 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, Surely it is the king of Israel. And they turned aside to fight against him: and Jehoshaphat cried out.

Ver. 26.] It seems he was in custody when he was sent for by the messenger to come to Ahab.

Ver. 27. Put this fellow in the prison,] He ordered him, I suppose, to be kept a closer prisoner than before.

Feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I come in peace.] He would not have him starved, but fed with coarse bread and bad water, till he came home and brought victory along with him; and then perhaps he intended to put him to death.

Ver. 28.] He desires all the people to mark, and be witnesses of what he said; and take this for a sign whether he was a true prophet or not.

Ver. 29.] Notwithstanding the long declaration Micaiah had made of God's decree (which was altogether concerning Ahab), Jehoshaphat gave some credit to the other prophets, who spake in the name of the Lord as well as he (see upon ver. 7).

Ver. 30. I will disguise myself,] Like a private man.

But put thou on thy robes.] Appear like a king.

The king of Israel disguised himself,] He knew they would aim most at him, as the author of this war, and therefore he would not be known; but gives Jehoshaphat the honour (as he pretended) of leading the army, and appearing as the chief commander of it. But this seems a very odd compliment, to pray him to expose himself to the danger which he shunned. Therefore others render it, "Put on these robes?" (which he then offered him); after my example, lay thy cloak, the garment of a chief commander, aside, and put on these robes. For he brought a double change of raiment into the field, that neither of them might be known by their clothes.

Ver. 31. The king of Syria commanded his thirty and two captains] Which were divided, it is likely, into so many distinct bodies.

Fight neither with small nor great.] With common soldier, or officer, belonging to Jehoshaphat.

Save only with the king of Israel.] Whom he looked upon (as I said) as the sole author of the war into which he had drawn Jehoshaphat.

Ver. 32. Surely it is the king of Israel.] Which shows that whatsoever his robes were, he looked like more than a common man.

Jehoshaphat cried out.] Unto the Lord for help,

33 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, that they turned back from pursuing him.

34 And a certain man drew a bow at a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness : wherefore he said unto the driver of his chariot, Turn thy hand, and carry me out of the host ; for I am wounded.

35 And the battle increased that day : and the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians, and died at even : and the blood ran out of the wound into the midst of the chariot.

36 And there went a proclamation throughout the host about the going down of the sun, saying, Every man to his city, and every man to his own country.

37 ¶ So the king died, and was brought to Samaria ; and they buried the king in Samaria.

38 And one washed the chariot in the pool of Samaria ; and the dogs licked up his blood ; and they washed his armour ; according unto the word of the LORD which he spake.

39 Now the rest of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and the ivory house which he made, and all the cities that he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel ?

who delivered him, and moved them to depart from him, as we read in 2 Chron. xviii. 31.

Ver 33. When the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel,] By calling upon the Lord for help ; or perhaps some of them knew him.

They turned back from pursuing him,] Which was to be ascribed to the secret providence of God, as Ezra tells us in the place above named ; who resolved as wonderfully to preserve Jehoshaphat as to destroy Ahab.

Ver 34. A certain man drew a bow at a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness :] The Lord, no doubt, directing the arrow to that part, where it should penetrate into his vital parts. The LXX. "into his breast through his lungs ;" for it entered between his upper and lower armour.

Turn thy hand—for I am wounded,] He bade him drive to some place where he might look after his wound, which was very painful to him.

Ver 35. The king was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians, and died at even:] There was a sharp fight after this : inasmuch that the king, for fear his soldiers should run away, would return into the field, notwithstanding his wounds, and be supported in his chariot to encourage his army, till the even parted them, and then he died.

The blood ran out of the wound into the midst of the chariot,] It could not be stanchied by any means they could use, but ran out of his body into his chariot.

Ver 36.] I suppose Jehoshaphat ordered a retreat to be sounded ; and the Syrians, it is likely, were content to be gone, having slain their capital enemy. By this proclamation the prediction of Micaiah was exactly fulfilled, according to his vision (ver. 17).

Ver 38.] The dogs licked up the blood, which was mixed with the water wherewith his chariot and armour were washed : the LXX. add the word swine, as if swine as well as dogs had licked it up. But as there is no such word in the Hebrew, so neither is it in the Chaldee, Arabic, or Syriac ; no, nor in the Latin translation. And it is very absurd ; swine being not commonly kept in this country.

40 So Ahab slept with his fathers ; and Ahab's son reigned in his stead.

41 ¶ And Jehoshaphat the son of Asa began to reign over Judah in the fourth year of Ahab king of Israel.

42 Jehoshaphat was thirty and five years old when he began to reign ; and he reigned twenty and five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Azubah the daughter of Shillai.

43 And he walked in all the ways of Asa his father ; he turned not aside from it, doing that which was right in the eyes of the LORD : nevertheless the high places were not taken away ; for the people offered and burnt incense yet in the high places.

44 And Jehoshaphat made peace with the king of Israel.

45 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, and his might that he shewed, and how he warred, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah ?

46 And the remnant of the Sodomites, which remained in the days of his father Asa, he took out of the land.

47 There was then no king in Edom : a deputy was king.

48 Jehoshaphat made ships of Tharshish to go

Ver 39.] It appears by this short history, that he had several noble qualities in him, and would have been a great man, if he had not been incurably addicted to idolatry. But it is not to be imagined that the house here mentioned was built of ivory ; but only inlaid with it.

Ver 40.] See ver. 51.

Ver 42.] The intention of the divine writer of this book was, as Abarbanel observes, principally, and in the first place, to give us the history of the kings of the house of David, with which he begins, and then joins to it the history of the kings of Israel. Thus having finished the history of Asa king of Judah, he recounts the affairs of Israel under Ahab ; who being dead, he returns to the history of the kings of Judah, who were the chief objects of his history.

Ver 43.] This error was so deeply rooted, that the best of their kings, till Hezekiah's time (as I noted before), connived at it : and a great man of ours thinks, the prophets accidentally gave countenance to it : who had this power, that if they dispensed with any positive precept of the law, that precept was to cease for a time. Nor can any other reason be given of the toleration of high places before the temple was built, and after that of Elijah's sacrificing upon mount Carmel, and the forbearance of circumcision in the wilderness (see Mr. Thorndike's Review of the Rites of the Church, p. 107).

Ver 44.] He did not take advantage, which Ahab's death gave him, to seize upon the kingdom of Israel, and take it from his son.

Ver 45.] See xi. 41.

Ver 46.] He made a narrower search after them than his father had done, who is said to have removed them ; but some remained without his knowledge (xv. 12).

Ver 47.] The king of Judah deputed one to govern the Edomites, who was the viceroy (as we now speak) of the king of Judah. This continued from the days of David, who began this dominion over them (2 Sam. viii. 14), unto those of Jehoshaphat ; whose son lost this authority (2 Kings viii. 21).

to Ophir for gold: but they went not; for the ships were broken at Ezion-geber.

49 Then said Ahaziah the son of Ahab unto Jehoshaphat, Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships. But Jehoshaphat would not.

50 ¶ And Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.

51 ¶ Ahaziah the son of Ahab began to reign

Ver. 48. Jehoshaphat made ships of Tharshish] These ships were not to go to Tharshish, but to Ophir. But they are called "ships of Tharshish" from their form: for they were made after the mould of those ships which traded to that place. And all such ships, wheresoever they were built, were called "ships of Tharshish." Thus Abarbinel. Which seems not to agree with 2 Chron. xx. 36, 37 (see there).

[For the ships were broken] Before they sailed.

Ver. 49.] He had contracted an amity with this king, and engaged himself so far as to let him join with him in this navy (2 Chron. xx. 35, &c.); but being better instructed by his ill success, and by the reproof of a prophet, he would not continue this league with him.

Ver. 51. Ahaziah—began to reign over Israel in Samaria the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat] This seems not to agree with the account we have before, that Jehoshaphat began his reign in the fourth year of Ahab, and Ahab reigned two-and-twenty years. Now if we take four from twenty and two, there remain eighteen; and so Ahaziah began to reign in that year, not the seventeenth of Jehoshaphat. But this is easily and truly solved; for the years which the over Israel in Samaria the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah and reigned two years over Israel.

52 And he did evil in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the way of his father, and in the way of his mother, and in the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin:

53 For he served Baal, and worshipped him, and provoked to anger the Lord God of Israel, according to all that his father had done.

kings of Israel reigned are taken from the years of the kings of the house of David; so that if any one reigned in the latter end of the reign of a king of the house of David, and the beginning of the following year, he is said to have reigned two years. An instance of which is in the very next words of this verse.

Reigned two years] Not complete, as appears from 2 Kings iii. 1. but part of two years: for Ahaziah died before his second year was ended.

Ver. 52. In the way of his mother,] Who was still alive, to keep him in his idolatry.

In the way of Jeroboam] He was in nothing amended, by all that had befallen his father, and the family of Jeroboam.

Ver. 53. He served Baal, and worshipped him,] Which worship had been introduced by his mother Jezebel: beyond the impiety of Jeroboam.

Provoked to anger the Lord God of Israel, according to all that his father had done.] Taking no warning by the hand of God against his father which was very remarkable; nor believing the dreadful threatenings of Elijah against his mother, and their whole family.

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS.

COMMONLY CALLED THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE KINGS.

CHAPTER I.

1 Moab rebelleth. 2 Ahaziah, sending to Baal-zebub, hath his judgment by Elijah. 5 Elijah twice bringeth fire from heaven upon them whom Ahaziah sent to apprehend him. 13 He pitieth the third captain, and, encouraged by an angel, telleth the king of his death. 17 Jehoram succeedeth Ahaziah.

1 THEN Moab rebelled against Israel after the death of Ahab.

2 And Ahaziah fell down through a lattice in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, and was

CHAPTER I.

Ver. 1.] They paid them no more tribute, but utterly disclaimed their authority over them; which they had owned ever since the days of David (2 Sam. xiii. 2). Whereas Edom (which, it seems, in the division of the kingdom, fell to Judah, as Moab did to Israel) continued still under the dominion of the king of Judah (1 Kings xxii. 47).

Ver. 2. Ahaziah fell down through a lattice in his upper chamber] By this lattice, the Jews understand some net-work that was in the dining-room; which being decayed, and he leaning upon it, it fell down, and he together with it.

And was sick:] Was bruised, and, perhaps, fell into a fever.

Go inquire of Baal-zebub] Many think this god was called Baal-semin, the Lord of heaven; whom sick : and he sent messengers, and said unto them, Go, inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron whether I shall recover of this disease.

3 But the angel of the Lord said to Elijah the Tishbite, Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron ?

4 Now therefore thus saith the Lord, Thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die. And Elijah departed.

5 ¶ And when the messengers turned back unto him, he said unto them, Why are ye now turned back ?

6 And they said unto him, There came a man up to meet us, and said unto us, Go, turn again unto the king that sent you, and say unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that thou sendest to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron ? therefore thou the Jews, by way of contempt, called Baal-zebub ; i. e. the lord of a fly, as a god that was nothing worth ; or rather, because his temple was full of flies ; whereas the temple at Jerusalem, though so many sacrifices were offered there daily, never had a fly in it ; as the Jews relate in Pirke Avoth. But it is not likely, the king of Israel would have called this god, for whom he had a great reverence, by a contemptible name ; which signifies, therefore, no more than Μυῖωδης μύριος, ἀνέμωδης, among the Greeks ; which were the titles of Jupiter and Hercules ; because they were thought to free their countries from flies, with which the Ekronites were pestered, lying in a moist and hot soil, near to the ocean. Theodoret, Procopius, and others, think they worshipped this god in the image of a fly ; but the latter of them doubts whether it was the name of a demon, or of an old woman canonized for a goddess. And after all, Mr. Selden, thinks the reason of this name cannot be found. But the most probable conjecture is, that he was so called from the cure of a contagious disease. For Pliny tells us, that there being a great pestilence in Africa, which was brought among them by a multitude of flies, it was extinguished by the killing of them all after they had sacrificed to the god Achore. He should have said, the god worshipped at Ekron ; from whence that word Achore plainly came (lib. x. Nat. Hist. cap. 27). And if this was the original of the name, it is no wonder that Ahaziah sent to inquire of him about his sickness, since he was thought so powerful as to cure the pestilence.

Ver. 3.] There are two negatives in the Hebrew text which increase the sense, Is it not because there is no God, none in Israel ? That is, do you not plainly declare, that you think there is no God, none at all, in Israel ? that he knows nothing nor can do any thing ? Which makes you send to Ekron, as if there was a more knowing and mighty, if not the only, God there.

Ver. 4.] Unto mount Carmel, it is very probable : for he was presently after this sitting on the top of a hill (ver. 9).

Ver. 5.] He knew by their speedy return, that they had not executed his command, and asked the reason.

Ver. 6.] Elijah was a man of such a venerable presence, and spake to them with such authority, in the name of the Lord, that they were overawed thereby to obey him, rather than the king.

shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

7 And he said unto them, What manner of man was he which came up to meet you, and told you these words ?

8 And they answered him, He was a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. And he said, It is Elijah the Tishbite.

9 Then the king sent unto him a captain of fifty with his fifty. And he went up to him : and, behold, he sat on the top of a hill. And he spake unto him, Thou man of God, the king hath said, Come down.

10 And Elijah answered and said to the captain of fifty, If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

11 Again also he sent unto him another captain of fifty with his fifty. And he answered and said unto him, O man of God, thus hath the king said, Come down quickly.

Ver. 7.] He was not so angry at them for not obeying him, as desirous to know who he was that was so presumptuous as to stop their journey.

Ver. 8.] Some think he is said to be “a hairy man,” because he had long hair on his head and his beard, like the Greek philosophers : but it is more probable, it was because he was clad with a hairy garment, which the prophets were wont to use (Isa. xx. 2. Zech. xiii. 4. Matt. iii. 4). And, indeed, the leathern girdle shows what kind of garment he wore (see Dr. Hammond, upon the place last mentioned, annot. d). This was the simplest and most ancient garment ; and therefore the old heroes are said to have been clothed in the skins of lions, or tigers, or bears, &c. And, perhaps, by this rude habit the prophets expressed their great grief for the sad condition the Israelites were in, when they came to call them to repentance.

Ver. 9. He went up to him :] Not to the place where he was, but so near that he might hear him deliver his message.

Thou man of God, the king hath said, Come down.] Sent him with an order, to command him to come down to him. But the prophet thought he did but mock him, when he called him a man of God, as appears by the punishment he inflicted on him. For it is as if he had said, Thou that callest thyself a man of God, come down, or I will fetch thee. He would not be at the pains to go to the top of the hill ; but thought it sufficient to require him, in the king's name, to come down, and surrender himself into his hands.

Ver. 10.] If I be a man of God, as thou sayest, but dost not think, then I am not bound to obey the king, but God (as Abarbanel glosses upon these words), nor am I subject to his power, but unto God's ; who will make thee know that he judges in the earth. And immediately he and his men were consumed with lightning, according to Elijah's word. Who chose to destroy them by fire from heaven (as he goes on), because he had at mount Carmel called for fire to consume the sacrifice. Which miracle they slighting, and coming now in a proud manner to carry him by force to Samaria (where he knew Jezebel would put him to death), he called for fire to consume them.

Ver. 11.] This man was more insolent than the former, charging the prophet to obey without delay, and not to make him stay ; or think to dally with him. And, by the following words, it appears, this was the voice of the whole company.

12 And Elijah answered and said unto them, If I be a man of God, let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And the fire of God came down from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

13 ¶ And he sent again a captain of the third fifty with his fifty. And the third captain of fifty went up, and came and fell on his knees before Elijah, and besought him, and said unto him, O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of these fifty thy servants, be precious in thy sight.

14 Behold there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties with their fifties : therefore let my life now be precious in thy sight.

15 And the angel of the LORD said unto Elijah, Go down with him : be not afraid of him. And he arose and went down with him unto the king.

16 And he said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Forasmuch as thou hast sent messengers to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, is it not because there is no God in Israel to inquire of his word ? therefore thou shalt not come down off that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

17 ¶ So he died according to the word of the LORD which Elijah had spoken. And Jehoram reigned in his stead in the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah ; because he had no son.

18 Now the rest of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel ?

Ver. 12.] He knew that evil was determined against him by Ahaziah, and therefore defended himself, in this manner, from his cruelty ; that he might be afraid to meddle with him, when, he saw the divine vengeance so terrible against those that came to apprehend him.

Ver. 13.] He humbly entreated him, on his bended knees, to spare his life, and the lives of those that accompanied him, who did not come willingly, much less of their own accord ; but were commanded by their lord and master to make known his pleasure to him.

Ver. 14.] He was sensible of the hand of God against those that came with such a command before, and acknowledges he was at Elijah's mercy ; but hoped he would take compassion upon him, since he owned him really to be a man of God, and believed his power ; as appeared by his falling down most reverently before him, and beseeching his pity and calling those with him his servants.

Ver. 15.] This is a great instance of the prophet's faith and obedience to God ; who he trusted would protect him from the wrath of the king, and the malice of Jezebel. Of whom he had great reason to be afraid, having ordered the prophets of Baal to be slain, and now sent the king an unwelcome message, and done terrible execution upon two of his captains and their companies. The first of which made him fly the country (1 Kings xix. 3), Jezebel threatening his destruction ; and had constrained him to conceal himself for a long time, and not come to Samaria : which was the reason, as Abarbinel observes, that we hear nothing of him in the war of Ben-hadad against Israel (1 Kings xx.), nor in the war of Ahab against Ben-hadad (ch. xxii.). But now, having a command from God for it, as he had in the case of Naboth, he boldly goes to the king, and confirms with his own mouth that ungrateful truth, which he had already told him by his messengers.

Ver. 16.] There was more discourse passed between them, no doubt, than this : but this was the conclusion of all, that the sentence which God had pronounced against him was irreversible ; and therefore he should not think of living much longer, but make use of the time remaining to repent of his sins.

Ver. 17. So he died] It is likely he told him the very day when he should die.

Jehoram reigned in his stead—because he had no son.] Therefore this brother of his succeeded him. Who began to govern in this second year of Jehoshaphat's son ; but was king before (iii. 1), only very young, and, as some of the Jews think, under the care of Jehoshaphat. But Kimchi seems to have better reconciled this seeming difference, That Jehoshaphat declared his son Jehoram king while he lived, and he reigned with him seven years. The occasion of which is intimated in 2 Chron. xx. 3, "He gave the kingdom to Jehoram, because he was the first-born," and gave gifts to the rest of his sons. Who being many, began to strive about the succession to the kingdom ; which belonging to the first-born, Jehoshaphat, to quiet them all, declared Jehoram king together with himself, and he reigned with him seven years. When it is said therefore that Ahab's Jehoram reigned in the second year of Jehoshaphat's son Jehoram, the meaning is, the second year that he reigned with his father Jehoshaphat who was then living.

Ver. 18.] They were but few, because he reigned a very short time ; but yet, according to custom, they were recorded in a public register. Of which, see on 1 Kings xi. 41.

CHAPTER II.

1 Elijah, taking his leave of Elisha, with his mantle divideth Jordan, 9 and, granting Elisha his request, is taken up by a fiery chariot into heaven. 12 Elisha, dividing Jordan with Elijah's mantle, is acknowledged his successor. 16 The young prophets, hardly obtaining leave to seek Elijah, could not find him. 19 Elisha with salt healeth the unwholesome waters. 23 Bears destroy the children that mocked Elisha.

1 AND it came to pass, when the LORD would take up Elijah into heaven by a whirlwind, that Elijah went with Elisha from Gilgal.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. By a whirlwind,] By a mighty sound of wind which the angels raised, who came to fetch him :

2 And Elijah said unto Elisha, Tarry here, I pray thee ; for the LORD hath sent me to Beth-el. And Elisha said unto him, As the LORD liveth, of which translation he himself had some notice, by the spirit of prophecy.

That Elijah went with Elisha from Gilgal.] Unto and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they went down to Beth-el.

3 And the sons of the prophets that were at Beth-el came forth to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to day? And he said, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

4 And Elijah said unto him, Elisha, Tarry here, I pray thee; for the Lord hath sent me to Jericho. And he said, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they came to Jericho.

5 And the sons of the prophets that were at Jericho came to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy this place he retired before his assumption to heaven, it having been (as Abarbinel discourses) a place of great holiness; where the Israelites made their first encampment, after they entered the land of Canaan; and where Joshua had set up twelve stones, taken out of Jordan, in memory of their miraculous passage over that river. Here also Joshua circumcised the Israelites, and kept the first passover, and set up the tabernacle, and the ark of the covenant, which remained here a long time.

Ver. 2. The Lord hath sent me to Beth-el.] Another place in ancient time very holy, God appearing here to Jacob more than once (Gen. xxviii. 19, xxxv. 6. 9). This Elijah said to try Elisha; for he did not intend to conceal his assumption into heaven, and to have no witnesses of it. His humility indeed was great, but it was not fit to obscure the glory of God, which herein miraculously appeared.

As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee.] They were not wont anciently to swear by the name of God (out of the reverence they bare to him), but by some lesser thing which depended on it; as Joseph did by the life of Pharaoh; that is, as true as that Pharaoh lives. And Elisha puts both heretogther, "as sure as God liveth, and thou livest." I will not leave thee (see Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, lib. ii. cap. 13. n. 2).

Ver. 3. The sons of the prophets that were at Beth-el] In these very corrupt times, and in that place where the golden calves were worshipped, God did not wholly forsake the Israelites; but continued the schools of the prophets among them. For by the "sons of the prophets" are meant the scholars of the prophets, whom they educated, and trained up in religion and piety; and God, by degrees, bestowed on some of them the spirit of prophecy. This was a great testimony of God's love to an apostate people; among whom he left prophets to recover them from their idolatry. For even in the chief place of impiety (which was Beth-el) they were not wanting. And it is still more remarkable, that prophets of greater excellency for their miracles were continued in Israel than were in Judah; because they needed them more, to turn their hard hearts from the worship of idols; and to support the pious persons that remained among them, and preserve them from deserting their religion. For it seems to me very probable, that these sons of the prophets were such ministers to the prophets, as the evangelists were to the apostles: whom the prophets sent to publish their prophecies and instructions to the people, where they could not go themselves. And perhaps they taught them the law of God, and explained it to them; of which there was great need in those idolatrous times.

Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day?] It was revealed to some of master from thy head to day? And he answered, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

6 And Elijah said unto him, Tarry, I pray thee, here; for the Lord hath sent me to Jordan. And he said, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And they two went on.

7 And fifty men of the sons of the prophets went, And stood to view afar off: and they two stood by Jordan.

8 And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapped it together, and smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither, so that they two went over on dry ground.

9 ¶ And it came to pass, when they were them by God, and they told it to the rest of the company of the prophets. Who allude to their manner of sitting in their school, when they say God would "take away Elijah from his head:" that is, deprive him of his instructions. For, it is well-known, that the scholars sat below at their master's feet, and the master above over their head, when they taught them.

Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.] Say no more of it: I would not be disturbed with the thoughts of it. Or, let not my master know that I understand it.

Ver. 4. Tarry here, I pray thee;] He doth not lay his commands upon him (as he did unto a former servant, 1 Kings, xix. 3), but only entreats him, and in a more tender manner than he did before, to accompany him no further.

For the Lord hath sent me to Jericho.] Another remarkable place, as Abarbinel observes, to which he went: that, as Moses, when he turned his face towards this place (Deut. xxxiv. 1), departed this life; so this should be the last place wherein Elijah would remain, before he left the world. A place also famous for many miracles done there.

I will not leave thee.] He hoped for some great blessing from him, when he was carried up to heaven; and therefore continued firm in his resolution, to attend that wonderful change.

Ver. 5.] Here was another school, where the same holy Spirit revealed the mind of God to them; as it had done at Beth-el. And it is a probable opinion of Kimchi, who affirms there were the like schools in other cities of Israel.

Ver. 6. Jordan.] Another place where God had wrought great wonders. Not far from which, as Kimchi notes, the great prophet Moses died; and therefore God intended to translate Elijah near to this place.

They two went on.] From Jericho to the river Jordan.

Ver. 7.] And fifty men—stood to view afar off:] They were confident the time of his assumption drew near, and were very desirous, if it were possible, to see the manner of it: but were not admitted to accompany him to the place, where he was taken up to heaven, as Elisha did; for they took this view at Jericho (ver. 15).

They two stood by Jordan.] The rest being forbidden, I suppose, to go thither with him.

Ver. 8. And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapped it together;] This mantle of his is mentioned five times in these books; thrice in this chapter, and twice in 1 Kings xix. 13. 19. In all which places it is called adareth: which is a word signifying a royal robe, as well as a prophetic (Jonah iii. 6). The LXX. in all the five places now mentioned, translate it μῆτωρ, which properly signifies the prophetic mantle.

gone over, that Elijah said unto Elisha, Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee. And Elisha said, I pray thee, let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me.

10 And he said, Thou hast asked a hard thing: nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so.

11 And it came to pass as they still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.

12 And Elisha saw it, and he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. And he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces.

13 And he took also the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and went back, and stood by the bank of Jordan;

14 And he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and smote the waters, and said, Where is the Lord God of Elijah? and when he also had smitten the waters, they parted hither and thither: and Elisha went over.

15 And when the sons of the prophets which were to view at Jericho saw him, they said, The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha. And they came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him.

16 ¶ And they said unto him, Behold now, there be with thy servants fifty strong men; let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master: lest peradventure the Spirit of the Lord hath taken him up, and cast him upon some mountain, or into some valley. And he said, Ye shall not send.

17 And when they urged him till he was to be made of lamb-skin: being an upper garment thrown over the shoulders, and some think coming down to the heels.

And smote the waters, and they were divided] God made a dry path in the middle of the river, whose waters stood on each side of it.

Ver. 9.] They are much mistaken, who imagine he begged as much more of the Spirit as Elijah had; for that had been very arrogant. He only desired to have such a portion of it, as the first-born in a family had of his father's estate. That is, as much more of his spirit, as any of the rest of the sons of the prophets: for the portion of the first-born was double to that of the rest of the children. In short, he did not desire to excel his master, but his school-fellows (see P. Fagius upon Deut. xxi. 17).

Ver. 10. Thou hast asked a hard thing:] Such gifts were rarely bestowed.

If thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee:] Mark, this is a sign whether thou shalt have what thou desirest or not.

Ver. 11. As they still went on, and talked,] Of the happy state, it is likely, to which Elijah was going.

There appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder:] Angels appeared before them, in the form of a bright chariot and horses, running towards them upon the ground; which coming between them, separated them one from the other. For Elijah mounted the chariot, and in a great gust of wind governed by angels, was transported into heaven. That is, saith Abarbinel, into the air: for he being a stranger to Christianity, could not conceive how an earthly body could live among the celestial inhabitants; and therefore, according to the gross imaginations of the Jews, imagines he is still upon the earth, in the garden of Eden. But these are ignorant conceits. The plain sense is, that his body being transformed in his passage towards heaven, he was carried up to live among the angels.

The heathens themselves did not disbelieve such things: as appears by the story of Æganympa, who was made immortal by Jupiter; and of Driope by the Hamadryades: and Bacchus assured Cadmus, that by the help of Mars he should live for ever in the isles of the blessed, whither they said Alcumene was snatched up by Mercury, at the command of Jupiter, &c. (see Dan. Huetius in his Alnetanæ Questiones, lib. ii. cap. 12. n. 30).

Ver. 12. My father, my father,] So they called their masters and instructors.

The chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof.]

And he alludes to what he beheld; and very fitly compared Elijah to chariot and horsemen, which the Israelites wanted in their armies: but he was instead of them by his counsels and prayers; whereby they might have obtained great victories, if they would have been obedient to his word.

He took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces.] To express his sorrow for so great a loss.

Ver. 13. He took up also the mantle of Elijah that fell from him,] This dropped from him as he went up to heaven: in token of the spirit that should be given to Elisha, according to his promise.

And stood by the bank of Jordan:] Whose waters were come together again, after he and Elijah got over.

Ver. 14. Where is the Lord God of Elijah?] That is, let him show his presence with me, and his power, as he did with Elijah. But we do not translate these last words exactly, two words being left out, viz. aph-hu, which the LXX. put into one, αφψ, of which I know not the sense. And the Chaldee translates it, receive my petition; without any reason; those words carrying in them nothing of that signification. The best account of them is that which I meet with in a short dissertation by Joh. Frischmuthus, De Orig. et Prosapia Eliæ, where he observes, that Elisha having asked this question, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" answers himself in these words, Aph-hu, etiam ille adhuc superest; "yea, he is yet in being." Thus Abarbinel expresses the sense: "Though Elijah be not here, yet his God is." The servant is wanting, but not the Lord. The blessed God is still present, and will supply his place.

Elisha went over.] Just as Elijah had done a little before (ver. 8).

Ver. 15.] In token of their reverence to him, as the father of the prophets.

Ver. 16. There are with us fifty strong men.] Fit to undertake such an expedition as they propose.

Let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master:] They had but an imperfect notice of what God intended, when they asked Elisha if he knew the Lord would take his master from him. For they imagined he might not be quite taken away; but only for a time: or, that if his spirit were taken into heaven, his body might possibly be thrown upon some of the neighbouring mountains or valleys.

Ye shall not send.] For he knew it would be to no purpose.

Ver. 17. When they urged him—he said, Send.] He was afraid they should think he wanted love to his ashamed, he said, Send. They sent therefore fifty men; and they sought three days, but found him not.

18 And when they came again to him, (for he tarried at Jericho,) he said unto him, Did I not say unto you, Go not?

19 ¶ And the men of the city said unto Elisha, Behold, I pray thee, the situation of this city is pleasant, as my lord seeth: but the water is naught, and the ground barren.

20 And he said, Bring me a new cruse, and put salt therein. And they brought it to him.

21 And he went forth unto the spring of the waters, and cast the salt in there, and said, Thus saith the Lord, I have healed these waters; master; or, was so ambitious to enjoy his place and authority, that he was loath he should be found alive.

They sought three days.] In that time they searched every place where they thought it likely he might be cast.

Ver. 18.] By this he settled his authority, in that he foretold them their labour would be lost.

Ver. 19.] Things did not thrive in that soil, but the people and the cattle miscarried, and the fruit fell from off the trees, as the margin translates it. Which curse, Abarbinel thinks, had been upon this place ever since the time of Joshua.

Ver. 20.] He would have a new cruse, that had never been used; and brought by them, together with the salt, that there might be no suspicion of fraud (as Abarbinel observes), nor the virtue ascribed to any thing that was in the cruse before, but merely to the power of God. The Jews also in Michilta say, that his putting salt into it made this a miracle in a miracle; for it makes water less potable, and ground more barren.

Ver. 21.] He wrought the miracle at Jordan, as the forenamed author observes, for his own sake; that he might make an experiment whether the divine influence which was upon Elijah was derived unto him. But this at Jericho he wrought for the sake of the sons of the prophets who dwelt there; that they might know the hand of the Lord was with him.

Ver. 22.] By this the people of the city (who be-sought this favour from him, ver. 19) saw that he was a man of God, to whom they owed obedience.

Ver. 23. He went up from thence unto Beth-el:] That he might visit the sons of the prophets who were in that city, and comfort them for the loss of Elijah, by letting them see the Spirit of God was upon him. It is very properly said he went up thither, because it stood upon a hill, and there was an ascent from Jericho thither (Josh. viii. 3. 17); though Elijah and he, going another way, are said to go down to Beth-el (ver. 2).

There came forth little children out of the city.] The word naarim signifies "grown youth," as well as little children; for Isaac, when he was twenty-eight years old, is called naar (Gen. xxii. 5. 12), and Joseph, when he was thirty (xli. 12), and Rehoboam, when he was forty (2 Chron. xiii. 7). And this is to be understood here of adult persons, who had a hatred to the prophet.

And mocked him.] By the instigation of their pa-thers shall not be from thence any more death or barren land.

22 So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha which he spake.

23 ¶ And he went up from thence unto Beth-el: and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and said unto him, Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head.

24 And he turned back, and looked on them, and cursed them in the name of the Lord. And there came forth two she bears out of the wood, and tare forty and two children of them.

25 And he went from thence to mount Carmel, and from thence he returned to Samaria.

rents, or of Baal's priests (as they will have it who take them for mere children), who stirred them up, and taught them to jeer at his bald pate, and so laughed at the ascension of Elijah.

Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head.] Their repetition of these words expresses their earnestness and vehemence in their contempt of him. For, as hair was always accounted a singular ornament, so baldness was disgraceful; insomuch that Cæsar, as Bochartus hath observed, could not bear with those who jeered him upon this account, and thought it the highest honour the senate did him, in decreeing he should always appear with a wreath of laurel upon his head.

When they call upon Elisha to go up, they flouted, as Abarbinel thinks, at the ascension of Elijah to heaven; the news of which had been brought thither, and reported by the prophets of that place. Which the idolaters laughed at, and bade Elisha go up to heaven also, that they might not be troubled with him. Thus I find also the author of the questions and answers, ad Orthodoxos, understands these words: which were spoken, πρὸς διασυρμὸν τῆς τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἀναλήψεως, "to reproach the assumption of Elijah:" as if they had said, λαμβάνετω καὶ σε πνεῦμα, "Let the Spirit take thee also," and cast thee upon some inaccessible mountain, that we may be rid of thee, as we are of him (Respons. 80).

Ver. 21. And cursed them] This contempt of him, not as a man merely, but as a prophet, provoked the anger of God; who moved Elisha to lay a curse upon them, and punish them, as Moses did Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; and St. Peter did Ananias and Sapphira.

There came forth two she bears out of the wood.] Who it is likely had been robbed of their whelps: which made them the more fierce and outrageous.

And tare forty and two children] This was done by an extraordinary direction of God; who moved the bears at that moment to come out of the wood, when Elisha pronounced the curse; and to make such a great havoc among them, when two or three would have satisfied their hunger.

Ver. 25. He went from thence to mount Carmel.] Where it is probable he had many disciples, among whom he intended to be awhile retired.

He returned to Samaria.] To testify against their idolatry. And it is highly probable there was a college of prophets even in Samaria, as there was in Beth-el and Jericho, whom he went to encourage.

CHAPTER III.

1 Jehoram's reign. 4 Mesha rebelleth, 6 Jehoram, with Jehoshaphat, and the king of Edom, being distressed for want of water, by Elisha obtaineth water, and promise of victory. 21 The Moabites, deceived by the colour of the water, coming to spoil, are overcome. 26 The king of Moab, by sacrificing the king of Edom's son, raiseth the siege.

1 Now Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned twelve years.

3 And he wrought evil in the sight of the LORD; but not like his father, and like his mother; for he put away the image of Baal that his father had made.

3 Nevertheless he cleaved unto the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which made Israel to sin; he departed not therefrom.

4 ¶ And Mesha king of Moab was a sheepmaster, and rendered unto the king of Israel a hundred thousand lambs, and a hundred thousand rams, with the wool.

5 But it came to pass, when Ahab was dead, that the king of Moab rebelled against the king of Israel.

6 ¶ And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the same time, and numbered all Israel.

7 And he went and sent to Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, saying, The king of Moab hath rebelled against me: wilt thou go with me against Moab to battle? And he said, I will go up: I am as thou art, my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses.

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1.] Ahaziah his brother reigned two years, and began his reign in the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat (1 Kings xxii. 51): that is, part of the seventeenth year and part of the eighteenth, which was accounted for two years. In the latter end of which Jehoram his brother began to reign: when Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat, had two years reigned with his father (see i. 17).

Ver. 2.] He did not break it in pieces, as he would have done if he had heartily hated it, but only put it away out of the temple; being afraid lest the judgments of God should fall upon him, as they had done upon his father. And the king of Moab being now in rebellion against him, Jehoshaphat perhaps refused to help him whilst he was a worshipper of Baal. It is much that his mother, who had brought this worship with her from the Zidonians, should suffer him to remove this image; but she was a little daunted, perhaps, at the many disasters which had befallen their family, and was contented with worshipping Baal in private.

Ver. 3.] It was easier to remove the image of Baal than to put away the calves; for that was new, but the other had been of long standing; and the most likely course they could think of to maintain the division of the two kingdoms.

Ver. 4. Mesha king of Moab was a sheepmaster.] The riches not only of private men, but also of kings, in ancient time, consisted much in sheep and cattle; which, I have observed before, they looked after themselves, and their sons kept their sheep, as Bochartus shows in his Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 44. And thus the greatest part of the world lived, during the space of near four thousand years. Which did not hinder them from being, at the same time, a brave and warlike people, as appears by the ancient Romans, who were thus bred, and subdued all Italy, and at last made themselves masters of the world. For this sort of life was the cause of their great strength, making their bodies robust, and hardened to labour, and accustomed to a severe discipline. There cannot be a greater instance of this than we have in Cato the Censor, who passed through all the great offices of the republic of Rome, had governed provinces, commanded armies, was a great orator, lawyer, and politician; who did not disdain to write a treatise concerning all the ways that are necessary for the improving lands, and how stables and houses were to be built for several sorts of cattle, and how presses were to be made for wine and oil, &c.; insomuch that any one may see he was perfectly acquainted with country business, and that he did not write for ostentation, but for the use and service of mankind.

And rendered unto the king of Israel a hundred thousand lambs, and a hundred thousand rams.] This was a prodigious number, and being rendered unshorn, made them more valuable. But we are to consider that these countries abounded with sheep; insomuch that Solomon offered a hundred and twenty thousand at the dedication of the temple (2 Chron. vii. 5), and the Reubenites drove from the Hagarites a hundred and fifty thousand (1 Chron. v. 21). For they frequently brought forth two at a time, and sometimes twice a year, as that great man Bochartus shows in the same book, cap. 46, and produces a famous place in Pliny, which shows that this was the most ancient tribute. For he saith in the Censorian Tables, all the rents of the people are called pastures, "quia diu hoc solum vectigal fuerat" (lib. xviii. Nat. Hist. cap. 3). But Ludolphus hath observed two things for the illustrating this history of the king of Moab, which seem to be very considerable. First, that this was not annual tribute, but satisfaction for damages which the Israelites had sustained in the war with them, or by their revolt from them, as the LXX. understand it. And then the word ajil should not be translated a ram, but a wether; for one ram will serve a great many sheep (lib. i. Comment. in Histor. Æthiop. cap. 3. n. 30).

Ver. 5.] As was said before, ch. i. 1, and here again repeated, only to introduce the following history.

Ver. 6.] As soon as he was settled in his kingdom, his first business was to raise an army to reduce Moab to obedience.

Ver. 7. He went] After his army was raised, he went out of Samaria.

He said, I will go up] He returned the very same answer to him which he had given to Ahab his father, when he desired his assistance against Syria (1 Kings xxii. 4), wherein he had been so unsuccessful, that it should have made him more cautious how he joined with his son; especially since he seemed to have been afraid to have to do with his brother Ahaziah (1 Kings xxii. 49). But Jehoram having reformed some things (ver. 2), it made him, perhaps, have a better opinion

8 And he said, Which way shall we go up? And he answered, The way through the wilderness of Edom.

9 So the king of Israel went, and the king of Judah, and the king of Edom: and they fetched a compass of seven days' journey: and there was no water for the host, and for the cattle that followed them.

10 And the king of Israel said, Alas! that the Lord hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab!

11 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the Lord, that we may inquire of the Lord by him? And one of the king of Israel's servants answered and said, Here is Elisha the son of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah.

12 And Jehoshaphat said, The word of the Lord is with him. So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom went down to him.

13 And Elisha said unto the king of Israel, What have I to do with thee? get thee to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother. And the king of Israel said unto him, Nay: for the Lord hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.

14 And Elisha said, As the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, surely, were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor see thee.

15 But now bring me a minstrel. And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon him.

16 And he said, Thus saith the Lord. Make this valley full of ditches.

of him: and by showing kindness to him, he might hope to persuade him to proceed further. And besides, the Moabites had lately invaded his country (2 Chron. xx. 1. 10), which might move him to embrace an opportunity to chastise them for it.

Ver. 8. Which way shall we go up? Jehoshaphat having agreed to join with him, it is likely the king of Israel asked this question, and Jehoshaphat made the following answer.

The way through the wilderness of Edom. Which he chose, because he would have the assistance of the Edomites, who were his tributaries. And it is probable Moab was but weakly fortified on that side.

Ver. 9. King of Edom. There was no king at this time in Edom, as we read in the last chapter of the foregoing book (ver. 47), but a viceroy appointed by the king of Judah. Yet such are called kings, 1 Kings xx. 1 (see Grotius). And Jehoshaphat, I suppose, now required him with his people to help him in this war.

They fetched a compass of seven days' journey. That they might come upon the backs of the Moabites, where they did not expect them.

There was no water—for the cattle that followed them. That drew their carriages. For either there was a great drought in those parts, or they had mistaken their way.

Ver. 10.] He doth not cry to God for help, but only bewail the straits into which they were fallen; which his own guilt made him imagine God had contrived for their destruction.

Ver. 11. Is there not here a prophet of the Lord, that we may inquire by him? This was spoken like a pious man; but it was a fault that he did not inquire before for direction in this war; as he did in that with the Syrians (1 Kings xxii. 5).

Here is Elisha—which poured water on the hands of Elijah. That is, was his servant, and ministered unto him.

Ver. 12. The word of the Lord is with him. For no doubt he had been informed how Elijah had chosen him to be his successor; and how he attended him till he was taken up to heaven; and what wonders he had already done.

Went down to him. It is uncertain whither they went; but it is very observable, first, how much they honoured the prophet, for whom they did not send to come to them, but went to him. And secondly, how desirous the prophet was to do good, in that he followed the camp into this wilderness. For it is not likely they went back to Samaria to wait on him (where the story last left him, in the last verse of the foregoing chapter), which would have been a seven days' journey; and the army might in the mean time have been lost. Besides, ver. 16 shows he was not far from them; and the servant in the foregoing verse speaks of him as present; saying, Here is Elisha.

Ver. 13. What have I to do with thee? He refuses with great disdain to entertain any discourse with him; and bids him confer with those who he knew could do him no service.

Nay. That is, I will not consult them; but do thou give us counsel how we may be brought out of this great distress. Though he refused to do anything for his sake, yet he beseeches him to have respect to the other two kings, who must perish as well as he, if he did not help them.

Ver. 14. As the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand. It is observable, that the sons of the prophets are said to sit before their masters the prophets when they instructed them (iv. 3. 8, and see the foregoing chapter, ver. 3), but the prophets themselves stood before the Lord, their master, when he sent them upon any message (see Corn. Bertram. De Rep. Jud. cap. 16).

Were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat—I would not look toward thee. He saith nothing of the king of Edom, who was a dependant upon Jehoshaphat; whose piety he esteemed, and had some respect to all that belonged to him.

Ver. 15. But now bring me a minstrel. One that could play well upon an instrument of music.

When the minstrel played. Every one knows that some sort of music wonderfully quiets and composes the spirits, when they are disordered, and raises them when they are flat and heavy. And therefore holy men did not neglect such helps to make them so sedate and cheerful, that they might be fit to receive divine inspirations. But it is likely he that played now to Elisha, sung withal some hymn in the praises of God, and of his wonderful works, whereby the spirit of the prophet was sweetly composed, which had been disturbed, perhaps more than was fit, by his indignation at the king of Israel. And from hence we may conclude there were excellent musicians in Israel, as well as in Judah, where David had settled divine music in great perfection. And it is very probable, what the heathen boast of their muses, was from hence derived.

That the hand of the Lord came upon him. That is, God wrought in him; and he felt himself moved by a divine inspiration.

17 For thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not see wind, neither shall ye see rain; yet that valley shall be filled with water, that ye may drink, both ye, and your cattle, and your beasts, 18 And this is but a light thing in the sight of the LORD: he will deliver the Moabites also into your hand.

19 And ye shall smite every fenced city, and every choice city, and shall fell every good tree, and stop all wells of water, and mar every good piece of land with stones.

20 And it came to pass in the morning, when the meat offering was offered, that, behold, there came water by the way of Edom, and the country was filled with water.

21 ¶ And when all the Moabites heard that the kings were come up to fight against them, they gathered all that were able to put on armour, and upward, and stood in the border.

22 And they rose up early in the morning, and the sun shone upon the water, and the Moabites

Ver. 16.] This shows they were in a place where the army was encamped in a valley, in which he ordered them to be set at work, to dig large ditches to hold water enough for them all.

Ver. 17.] The words belonging to one of our senses are frequently applied to another: as to see wind is to feel it, or hear it. And the meaning is, there should no wind stir to blow up clouds (as the south wind commonly did), nor should they see any rain fall; and yet they should have plenty of water in that valley, for themselves and all belonging to them. I suppose it fell upon the mountains at a distance from them, and came pouring down into the lower ground.

Ver. 18.] Of which, I suppose, they had no hope, being much dispirited for want of water.

Ver. 19.] Prophets were to be obeyed, when they commanded things contrary to a positive precept, as some part of this was (see Deut. xx. 19). Which they had power to dispense withal for a time, though not always, so as to annul the precept, as Maimonides expounds this matter in his preface to Seder-Zeraim. But some think this usage so severe, that they take the prophet's meaning to be no more than this: that God would give them such an entire victory, that they might be able to do all this if they pleased; and the Moabites were so ill neighbours, that it is very likely they did this execution upon them (ver. 25).

Ver. 20. In the morning, when the meat offering was offered,] When the people of God were praying at Jerusalem, at the time of the morning sacrifice, Elisha joined his prayers with them for this blessing.

There came water by the way of Edom,] Whether it came from a sudden collection of a vast number of clouds, which poured down rain in abundance in the land of Edom, or from some rocks which God caused to gush out water; it came by a miraculous power, when there was no natural cause to produce it.

Ver. 21.] Intending to defend themselves; but not to march out of their country to give the enemy battle.

Ver. 22.] They rose up early in the morning,] The next morning, I suppose, after the water filled the valley.

On the other side] On the east side of the country.

Ver. 23.] They knew there was no water there a few days before, and that there had been no rain; and therefore (the sun shining directly in their eyes, which made it look red) they concluded it could be nothing else but blood. And what blood could it be, saw the water on the other side as red as blood:

23 And they said, This is blood: the kings are surely slain, and they have smitten one another: now therefore, Moab, to the spoil.

24 And when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up and smote the Moabites, so that they fled before them: but they went forward smiting the Moabites, even in their country.

25 And they beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land cast every man his stone, and filled it; and they stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees: only in Kir-haraseth left they the stones thereof; howbeit the slingers went about it, and smote it.

26 ¶ And when the king of Moab saw that the battle was too sore for him, he took with him seven hundred men that drew swords, to break through even unto the king of Edom: but they could not.

27 Then he took his eldest son that should but that of the three kings' army, who had fallen out, by reason, perhaps, of their different religion; or vexed at the straits they had brought one another into? And the Moabites easily believing what they wished, imagined they had nothing to do but to go and gather spoil, and not to fight at all.

Ver. 24.] They entirely routed and dispersed them. But they did not content themselves with this victory, but pursued them so close, that they got into their country with them, and there made a great havoc of them.

Ver. 25. They stopped all the wells of water,] According to the permission given them by the prophet, ver. 19, intending, I suppose, to depopulate the whole country.

Only in Kir-haraseth left they the stones thereof;] They left no walls standing, but only these of the royal city, which was exceeding strong (see Isa. xvi. 7. 11).

Howbeit the slingers went about it,] They raised such batteries against it, that they drove them who defended it from the wall, and made great breaches in it.

Ver. 26. When the king of Moab saw that the battle was too sore for him,] That he was not able to defend the place any longer.

He took with him seven hundred men—to break through even unto the king of Edom:] He made a sally with seven hundred stout men upon the quarters of the king of Edom (which it seems were the weakest), hoping to break through them and escape. But they were repulsed, and forced to retreat.

Ver. 27. Then he took his eldest son—and offered him for a burnt offering] Hereupon the king of Moab took his eldest son and made him a sacrifice before them all, as the last desperate remedy, hoping thereby to obtain powerful help from his god, through so precious a sacrifice of the dearest thing he had unto him. For it is well known, not only by the holy scriptures, but heathen writers, that in great distress they were to offer their own children upon their altars. Eusebius, lib. v. Præpar. Evangel. and Lactantius, lib. i. Div. Instit. cap. 21, mention several nations who used these sacrifices: and Cæsar, lib. iv. De Bello Gallico, saith of the Gauls, that when they were afflicted with grievous diseases, or in time of war, or great danger, “they either offered men for sacrifices, or vowed they would offer them.” For they imagined God would not be appeased, Nisi pro.

have reigned in his stead, and offered him for a burnt offering upon the wall. And there was great indignation against Israel: and they departed from him, and returned to their own land.

vita hominis reddatur vita hominis, "unless the life of a man was rendered for the life of a man."

Abarbinel, indeed, thinks that he offered the eldest son of the king of Edom, whom he took prisoner in the late sally. But it could not be said of him, that this son was to reign in his stead; for the king of Judah made whom he pleased his deputy over Edom. And this would not have made the three kings withdraw the siege, but prosecute it with greater fury. And Abarbinel acknowledges, that their wise men in Pesikta and the Sanhedrin understand it as I do: and that some of them think he offered him, in imitation of Abraham, to the God of Israel, hoping to move him to be favourable to him. Which no less man than Grotius follows. And indeed it is highly probable, that this custom of offering human sacrifices sprang from the offering of Isaac, from whence the Moabites, who were neighbours to Canaan, learnt it.

There was great indignation against Israel.] Or, as it may be translated, "great repentance upon (or in, or among) Israel." That is, they were extremely sorry and troubled at this barbarous sacrifice, and wished they had not pushed on the war so far; which ended in such a horrid action, which brought an odium upon them.

They departed from him.] Hereupon they raised the siege, by common consent, and returned home, for fear any such thing should be done again.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Elisha multiplieth the widow's oil. 8 He giveth a son to the good Shunammite. 18 He raiseth again her dead son. 38 At Gilgal he healeth the deadly pottage. 42 He satisfieth a hundred men with twenty loaves.

1 Now there cried a certain woman of the wives of the sons of the prophets unto Elisha, saying, Thy servant my husband is dead; and thou knowest that thy servant did fear the Lord: and the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.

2 And Elisha said unto her, What shall I do for thee? tell me, what hast thou in the house? And she said, Thy handmaid hath not any thing in the house, save a pot of oil.

3 Then he said, Go, borrow the vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, even empty vessels; borrow not a few.

4 And when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. Of the wives of the sons of the prophets] It is observed by St. Jerome, that Elijah and Elisha had no wives: et virgines multi filii prophetarum; "and many of the sons of the prophets were virgins" but it is plain by this place that they were not all so; but had liberty to marry if they pleased.

Thou knowest that thy servant did fear the Lord.] Was a worshipper of the true God, and not of Baal, nor the calves: which was the reason, it is likely, of his poverty; such men being discountenanced among the idolatrous Israelites.

The creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be his bondmen.] Because she was not able to pay his debts: in which case the Hebrews had such a power over their children, that they might sell them (being looked upon as their goods) to pay what they owed: and the creditor might force them to it. And Huetius thinks that from the Jews this custom was propagated to the Athenians; and from thence to the Romans. The Hebrew doctors have a fancy, that this prophet was Obadiah (mentioned 1 Kings xviii. 3), and that the creditor was Jehoram the son of Ahab. Which is utterly ungrounded.

Ver. 2. What hast thou in the house?] Towards the discharge of thy husband's debt.

A pot of oil.] Which was a thing of great use; both for the service of God and of men.

5 So she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her; and she poured out.

6 And it came to pass, when the vessels were full, that she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her, There is not a vessel more. And the oil stayed.

7 Then she came and told the man of God. And he said, Go, sell the oil, and pay thy debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest.

8 ¶ And it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to Shunem, where was a great woman; and she constrained him to eat bread. And so it was, that as oft as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat bread.

9 And she said unto her husband, Behold

Ver. 3. As many as she could get, and not small vessels.

Ver. 4. Shut the door upon thee] That none might come in to disturb her in what she was about.

Pour out] Of the pot of oil which she had.

Set aside that which is full.] And call for another that was empty.

Ver. 5.] Believing she should by this means be relieved.

Ver. 6. She said unto her son,] Who brought her the empty vessels; for the other son was employed in setting aside those that were full.

Bring me yet a vessel.] For she was confident the pot of oil would still afford more.

The oil stayed.] When there was no vessel to receive it.

Ver. 7.] We must first do justice; and then expect God's blessing upon the provision we make for ourselves and our family.

Ver. 8. Shunem,] A city in the tribe of Issachar (Josh. xix. 18).

Where was a great woman;] Who had a great estate, and it is likely kept a great house.

She constrained him to eat bread.] Was very importunate with him to take a repast at her house, and prevailed with him to accept of her kindness.

As oft as he passed by, he turned in thither] She made him so welcome, that he made no scruple, now, I perceive that this is a holy man of God, which passeth by us continually.

10 Let us make a little chamber, I pray thee, on the wall; and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candlestick: and it shall be, when he cometh to us, that he shall turn in thither.

11 And it fell on a day, that he came thither, and he turned into the chamber, and lay there.

12 And he said to Gehazi his servant, Call this Shunammite. And when he had called her, she stood before him.

13 And he said unto him, Say now unto her, Behold, thou hast been careful for us with all this care; what is to be done for thee? wouldest thou be spoken for to the king, or to the captain of the host? And she answered, I dwell among mine own people.

14 And he said, What then is to be done for her? And Gehazi answered, Verily she hath no child, and her husband is old.

when he had occasion to go that way, to step in there and refresh himself: which it is likely she invited him to do.

[Ver. 9. Behold now, I perceive] By her frequent conversation with him.

[That this is a holy man of God,] Not only a prophet; but a person of great sanctity.

[Which passeth by us continually.] For Shunem was in his way as he went from Carmel (which was not far from hence) to Beth-el and Jericho, and other places of the sons of the prophets.

Ver. 10. Let us make a little chamber,—on the wall;] A private room remote from the house, where he might retire; and without noise or disturbance give himself to prayer and meditation, and follow his sacred studies.

[And let us set for him there a bed,] Furnish it with all things necessary for a single person.

[He shall turn in thither.] Take up his lodging there, if he think good.

Ver. 11.] And it appears by the story, that he became their constant guest.

Ver. 12.] Waiting to know what he wanted. But he having been so kindly entertained by her for some time, sent for her to give her thanks, and to desire to know what he should do for her.

Ver. 13. Say now unto her;] He seems to me to have whispered to Gehazi, to ask her the following question. Whereupon she withdrew, thinking he had some business with him before he could speak with her.

[Thou hast been careful for us] Been exceeding kind to us, in taking care we should want nothing.

[What is to be done for thee?] That is, wherein can I serve thee? For he was very desirous, as all good men are, to be grateful.

[Wouldest thou be spoken for to the king, or to the captain of the host?] It seems the prophet had a great power at court since the late victory over the Moabites. And therefore, if she had any suit to make to the king, he doubted not to effect it; or had any grievance to complain of, which she suffered by the soldiers, he offered to get it remedied.

[I dwell among mine own people.] Whatsoever vexation any might suffer by the soldiers upon the borders, she tells him she lived safely and quietly among her friends and good neighbours; being so free from want that she needed not petition the king for any thing.

15 And he said, Call her. And when he had called her, she stood in the door.

16 And he said, About this season, according to the time of life, thou shalt embrace a son. And she said, Nay, my lord, thou man of God, do not lie unto thy handmaid.

17 And the woman conceived and bare a son at that season that Elisha had said unto her, according to the time of life.

18 ¶ And when the child was grown, it fell on a day, that he went out to his father to the reapers.

19 And he said unto his father, My head, my head. And he said to a lad, Carry him to his mother.

20 And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, and then died.

21 And she went up, and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went out.

[Ver. 14. What then is to be done for her?] This answer being returned to his master by Gehazi, Elisha asked him, what he thought might be most welcome to her. Which he might easily know, going about the house and observing all things there, which Elisha did not, who lived retired.

[Verily she hath no child, and her husband is old.] He knew women were desirous above all things to have children: which she neither had, nor was like to have, by reason of her husband's age.

Ver. 15. Call her.] This shows she withdrew presently, when he first sent for her (ver. 12, 13).

[She stood in the door.] Either out of modesty or reverence; or being afraid to disturb him.

Ver. 16. About this season,] The next year, after thou hast gone the usual time.

[Thou shalt embrace a son.] From the word habe-keth, which we translate "thou shalt embrace," some of the Hebrew doctors conjecture that this son proved afterward the prophet Habakkuk: which is a mere fancy, rejected by Abarbanel and others; who make account Habakkuk prophesied in the time of Manasseh or Josiah.

[Do not lie unto thy handmaid.] Do not jest with me.

Ver. 17. It is likely he named the very day when he should be born; and it fell out exactly as he had said.

Ver. 18.] Either for pleasure, or to inquire of his health. This shows still the truth of that which I have often observed, that great men in ancient times (for the quality of his wife shows this was no mean person, ver. 8), followed their country business themselves; looking after their corn and their cattle, and labouring with their own hands for their health, and the increase of their estates, by their industry in their improvement.

Ver. 19. My head, my head.] Either walking so far, or staying long in the sun (which shone hot in harvest-time), put him into a fever, which grievously affected his head.

[Carry him to his mother.] That she might look after him, and do what was proper for his case.

Ver. 20.] It seems he went out in the morning to his father, and was seized with such a sudden violent pain, as in a few hours killed him.

Ver. 21. Laid him on the bed of the man of God.]

22 And she called unto her husband, and said, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that I may run to the man of God, and come again.

23 And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to day? it is neither new moon, nor sabbath. And she said, It shall be well.

24 Then she saddled an ass, and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward; slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee.

25 So she went and came unto the man of God to mount Carmel. And it came to pass, when the man of God saw her afar off, that he said to Gehazi his servant, Behold, yonder is that Shunammite :

26 Run now, I pray thee, to meet her, and say unto her, Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? And she answered, It is well.

27 And when she came to the man of God to Hoping for help by him, whose master she had heard (no doubt) had restored a child to life.

And went out.] Kept it as private as she could, that her husband might not know the child was dead; which would have been a great grief to him.

Ver. 22. She called unto her husband.] By a messenger which she sent to him.

Come again.] So as not to hinder his business.

Ver. 23. It is neither new moon, nor sabbath.] It appears by this, that the prophets were the public instructors of the people; and their houses were a kind of school or synagogue, unto which they resorted upon the days here mentioned, to be taught their duty, out of the law of God, and to be resolved in their doubts. And the prophets accordingly were constantly in some certain place upon these days, to give the people their instruction.

It shall be well.] In the Hebrew, "It is peace." That is, she prays him to believe that she went for no hurt; but for his and her benefit.

Ver. 24.] She ordered him to make all the haste he could, as fast as the ass would go; without any respect to her, unless she called to him to drive more slowly.

Ver. 25. Mount Carmel.] This is a place which he, and Elijah also, much frequented: which makes it credible there was a school of the prophets here; it being a mountain full of trees, which made it fit for sacred exercises. As soon as Elijah was taken from him, Elisha fetched a circuit by Jericho and Beth-el to come hither; and from thence went to Samaria. For which no good reason can be given, but that it was to visit the places which his master had frequented, and instruct those who studied there, as Elijah had been wont to do.

Yonder is that Shunammite.] He was surprised to see her coming at an unusual time.

Ver. 26. Run now,—to meet her.] To show his respect to her.

Is it well with thee?] He bids him make particular inquiry after all that were most dear to her.

It is well.] Some translate it, "It shall be well." But there is no need of that. For they were well in part; that is, she and her husband. And she did not think fit to tell Gehazi all the truth, but to deliver it to the prophet himself.

Ver. 27. She caught him by the feet.] After the manner of a most humble suppliant; resolving not to let him stir till he granted her request.

the hill, she caught him by the feet: but Gehazi came near to thrust her away. And the man of God said, Let her alone; for her soul is vexed within her: and the Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.

28 Then she said, Did I desire a son of my lord? did I not say, Do not deceive me?

29 Then he said to Gehazi, Gird up thy loins, and take my staff in thy hand, and go thy way: if thou meet any man, salute him not; and if any salute thee, answer him not again: and lay my staff upon the face of the child.

30 And the mother of the child said, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And he arose, and followed her.

31 And Gehazi passed on before them, and laid the staff upon the face of the child; but there was neither voice, nor hearing. Wherefore he went again to meet him, and told him, saying, the child is not awaked.

Gehazi came near to thrust her away.] Believing his master did not expect such abasement, especially from her, who had been so kind and friendly to them.

Let her alone; for her soul is vexed within her.] Do not disturb her, for she is too full of grief already.

The Lord hath hid it from me.] God had not shown him the cause of it, that he might have prevented it.

Hath not told me.] The prophets did not know all things, but only what God was pleased to impart unto them (see 2 Sam. vii. 3). For the Spirit was not in them after the manner of a supernatural faculty, or infused habit (as we speak), whereby they might act what and when they pleased; Moses himself, the great prophet, not being able to determine some things till he had consulted the divine majesty (Numb. xv. 13, 14).

Ver. 28.] As much as to say, she was well satisfied without a son: and did neither desire one, nor was forward to believe she should have one when freely promised: but to lose him after he was bestowed upon her, was an unspeakable affliction to her.

Ver. 29. Gird up thy loins.] That he might travel with greater expedition.

If any salute thee, answer him not again.] Lest they should enter into discourse, and stop his speed.

Lay my staff upon the face of the child.] He thought it might work a miracle, as Moses's rod and Elijah's mantle did: and if the woman had had a faith strong enough, it might have been sufficient. But she distrusted it, and would have Elisha go himself. Abarinel, thinks he had no thoughts of reviving the child by this means, but only ordered his staff to be laid upon it, to preserve him from putrefaction: which is a low conceit.

Ver. 30. I will not leave thee.] This seems to me to signify, that she did not confide in what he ordered Gehazi to do; but thought his presence necessary to touch the child, and pray to God to restore him.

He arose, and followed her.] Being overcome by her importunity, and his own kindness to so great a friend.

Ver. 31. There was neither voice, nor hearing.] No sign of life appeared, as Gehazi, I suppose, expected.

The child is not awaked.] He speaks of death as a sleep: in which he continued, notwithstanding he had done as Elisha commanded. And it is likely 32 And when Elisha was come into the house, behold, the child was dead, and laid upon his bed.

33 He went in therefore, and shut the door upon them twain, and prayed unto the Lord.

34 And he went up, and lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands : and he stretched himself upon the child ; and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

35 Then he returned, and walked in the house to and fro ; and went up, and stretched himself upon him : and the child sneezed seven times, and the child opened his eyes.

36 And he called Gehazi and said, Call this Shunammite. So he called her. And when she was come in unto him, he said, Take up thy son.

37 Then she went in, and fell at his feet, and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her son, and went out.

38 ¶ And Elisha came again to Gilgal : and that power was withheld which might have accompanied the staff, because the prophet changed the method of his proceeding in working this miracle ; when the woman would have him go himself, and did not pray to God, that upon the laying on of the staff he might revive.

Ver. 32.] Where his mother had left him when she went to Elisha (ver. 21).

Ver. 33.] He shut the door, that he might not be disturbed by any body in his prayer to God.

Ver. 34. He went up.] Upon the bed.

And lay upon the child.] This could not be done all together, because his face and body were much larger than the child's, but successively : he laid his mouth upon the child's mouth, and his eyes and hands upon the child's eyes and hands, as Elijah had done in the like case, in token that God inspired his soul again into him, at his earnest prayer.

The flesh of the child waxed warm.] Not from the external heat of Elisha's body, but from an inward principle of life, which was restored, and began to move in him.

Ver. 35. He returned,] From the bed.

And walked in the house to and fro ;] Took a turn or two in the house to refresh himself, after the pains he had taken in prayer, and otherways, for the child's recovery.

And went up, and stretched himself upon him :] As he had done before. For this miracle was not wrought in an instant, but gradually : by continued vehement prayer to God.

The child sneezed seven times.] A sign of health, whereby his head was purged, in which his pain lay (ver. 19).

The child opened his eyes.] After his sneezing he looked upon Elisha, and it is likely spake to him.

Ver. 36.] She came only to the door of the room, till he bade her take up her son, and then she came in, as it follows.

Ver. 37. Then she went in, and fell at his feet,] Giving thanks to God, and to him, with a most profound reverence.

Took up her son, and went out.] Publishing, no doubt, this wonderful work of God to all her family ; who made it known abroad.

Ver. 38. Elisha came again to Gilgal :] Where he was with Elijah, a little before he was taken up to heaven (ii. 1). For those places, wherein he had been with his master, he loved to visit ; that he might work there was a dearth in the land ; and the sons of the prophets were sitting before him : and he said unto his servant, Set on the great pot, and see the pottage for the sons of the prophets.

39 And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage : for they knew them not.

40 So they poured out for the men to eat. And it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and said, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot. And they could not eat thereof.

41 But he said, Then bring meal. And he cast it into the pot ; and he said, Pour out for the people, that they may eat. And there was no harm in the pot.

42 ¶ And there came a man from Baal-shalisha, and brought the man of God bread of the firstfruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears wonders there, and confirm them in a belief that he was a prophet.

Dearth in the land ;] A great scarcity of provisions.

The sons of the prophets were sitting before him :]

Which was the posture of disciples when their masters taught them, who sat above, and their scholars below, as I observed, ii. 3, and see Acts xxii. 3, whence Bertram observes, their schools and academies were called ishiboth, that is, sessions.

See the pottage for the sons of the prophets.] This shows that they lived together in society, and after their lectures were wont to eat together with their master : who ordered his servants to prepare some food for them ; which was very plain and common, such as the gardens or fields would afford ; without much labour, and of small price.

Ver. 39. One went out into the field to gather herbs,] They went into the fields, I suppose, to gather what green things they could find ; because there were no pot-herbs in their garden at home, by reason of the drought.

And found a wild vine,] This is thought to have been colcoquintida, which hath a leaf something like that of a vine, and purges vehemently.

And came and shred them into the pot of pottage :] Neither he that gathered them, nor they that shred them, knew what they were ; but took them to be the leaves of a wild vine.

Ver. 40.] It was so bitter and distasteful, that they concluded there was some venomous herb in the pot. Perhaps they might know it by the taste to be what it was : an herb that purges extremely, and is poison, if not qualified and taken in a moderate quantity.

Ver. 41.] Which alteration was not from any virtue in the meal, but from the power of God. Therefore, the Jews justly reckon this as the eighth miracle which Elisha wrought, after he was made a prophet.

Ver. 42. Bread of the firstfruits,] This was a seasonable present, it being a time of dearth, when bread was very scarce. And it being called biccurim (which was the name of the first-fruits belonging to the priests), it is likely this was not such a present as men were wont to make when they came to ask a prophet any question, and to be resolved of their doubts (like that, 1 Kings xiv. 3), but a freewill-offering for the better subsistence of the prophet. Unto whom, it is probable, pious people gave that portion, which was assigned by God for the priests, to whom they could not now carry their first-fruits, they being in of corn in the husk thereof. And he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat.

43 And his servitor said, What, should I set this before a hundred men? He said again, Give the people, that they may eat: for thus Twenty loaves of barley.] Which were not very large; for then it would not have been a miracle, that they sufficed for a hundred men.

Full cars of corn in the husk] Which being parched, they were wont to eat (see Ruth ii. 15). But Dr. Hammond approves rather of our marginal translation, and thinks these words should be rendered, He brought ears of corn in a satchel, or scrip (see Matt. x. annot. e).

Give unto the people, that they may eat.] That is, to the sons of the prophets, with whom he then was, when this present was brought to him.

Ver. 43. What, should I set this before a hundred saith the LORD, They shall eat, and shall leave thereof.

44 So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the LORD.

men?] Just as the apostles said unto our blessed Saviour, when he intended to feed a far greater multitude with less food. By this it appears there were a great many scholars, who lived in this community; and that they used a frugal diet.

Give the people, that they may eat:] That is, do as I bid you, and make no objections.

They shall eat, and shall leave thereof.] As the multitude left of the loaves our Saviour caused to be set before them, John vi. 11.

Ver. 44.] Something like this was done by his master Elijah, for the woman of Sarepta, in time of famine; whose barrel of meal and cruse of oil wasted not for many days, till God sent rain upon the earth (1 Kings xvii. 14. 16).

CHAPTER V.

1 Naaman, by the report of a captive maid, is sent to Samaria to be cured of his leprosy. 8 Elisha, sending him to Jordan, cureth him. 15 He refusing Naaman's gifts granteth him some of the earth. 20 Gehazi, abusing his master's name unto Naaman, is smitten with leprosy.

1 Now Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honourable, because by him the LORD had given deliverance unto Syria: he was also a mighty man in valour, but he was a leper.

2 And the Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid; and she waited on Naaman's wife.

3 And she said unto her mistress, Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy.

4 And one went in, and told his lord, saying,

Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel.

5 And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. And he departed, and took with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment.

6 And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy.

7 And it came to pass, when the king of Is-

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. Naaman, captain of the host] Commander-in-chief of his whole army, whom we call general. A great man with his master,] In great favour with him.

Honourable,] In high esteem with all the people.

Because by him the Lord had given deliverance unto Syria:] He had been victorious in such battles as he had fought; which this divine writer would have the Israelites look upon as the Lord's doing.

He was also a mighty man in valour,] Being the person (as the Jews say in Midrash Tehillim) who drew the bow at adventure and killed Ahab (1 Kings xxii. 34).

But he was a leper.] Which did not exclude him from the society of men, in that country, where the Jewish law was not in force. But it was a great blemish to him, and also like to prove deadly; there being no cure for this disease, which was very common in Syria, as I have elsewhere noticed.

Ver. 2. Companies,] The word which we translate company, doth not signify an army; but such troops (or parties, as we call them) as made excursions and inroads into the enemy's country, to get booty.

A little maid;] Young men and maids were a desirable part of the prey which they got; whom they sold for money, or employed them in their own service.

She waited on Naaman's wife.] Either she was his part of the spoil in that expedition, or they made a present of her to him (being beautiful, perhaps, and ingenious), or he bought her of the soldiers.

Ver. 3. Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria!] The history left him last at Gilgal; but he used to be in several other places; and when she was taken captive was at Samaria.

For he would recover him] She related, it is likely, the wonderful things which he had done; and therefore was confident he could work this cure.

Ver. 4.] Her words being related to Naaman, he went and told the king his master what she said, and begged his leave to go to the prophet in the land of Israel. The following words warrant this sense.

Ver. 5.] That he might honourably reward the prophet, and those that attended him.

Ver. 6.] The beginning of the letter is omitted, as not pertinent to the matter in hand. It is likely it contained the usual compliments; after which he desired him, together with this letter, to receive his servant Naaman, and to cure him of his leprosy; that is, to take care he might be cured by the prophet. But this not being plainly expressed, the king of Israel apprehended that the intention of this demand was rael had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me.

8 ¶ And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.

9 So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha.

10 And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and only to pick a quarrel with him, and seek an occasion, or rather a pretence, for a war with him.

Ver. 7. He rent his clothes, and said, Am I God,] He rent his clothes either as one in great affliction and trouble, or (as some will have it), because he looked upon it as blasphemy, to ascribe that power to him which belonged to God alone. For none but he could cure a leprosy; which he expresses by killing and making alive. Every body, even beasts, can kill; but when one is killed, to make him alive again (thus these words must be understood in conjunction) is the work only of the Almighty.

To recover a man of his leprosy? To cure this disease was as hard as to raise a dead man to life; for the skin was dead, and the leprosy fretted and eat into the flesh.

See how he seeketh a quarrel against me.] Though he had seen what miracles Elisha had wrought, yet he either had forgot them, or thought this beyond his power; or was loath to see still more demonstrations of his power with God; and so did not send to him upon this occasion.

Ver. 8.] As the word prophet commonly signifies a man that declares things which none could know but God, who reveals them by his Spirit; so here it signifies a man endued with a divine power, who could do that which no man could effect unless God was with them.

Ver. 9.] Expecting, I suppose, that the prophet would come out to him; or rather out of reverence to the prophet, unto whom he sent a message, letting him understand the cause of his coming; for the prophet presently answers him, though by his servant, not by himself.

Ver. 10. Elisha sent a messenger] It is not to be thought that Elisha took state upon him; but it is to be ascribed to the retired sort of life which the prophets led, that he did not show himself to Naaman. We see an instance of this in the foregoing chapter, where we read that he did not so much as speak with the great woman who entertained him at her house, and built an apartment on purpose for him; but let her understand what he had to say by his servant Gehazi (ver. 12, 13, &c.).

Go and wash in Jordan seven times.] Thus lepers were sprinkled, by the law of Moses, seven times (Lev. xiv. 7, &c.). But it is plain, by the next verse, Naaman expected the prophet would have been so civil as to come out to him, or invite him to his house, and discourse with him: neither of which the prophet thought fit to do; partly for a trial of his faith, and partly to let him know that this was not so difficult a thing as the king imagined, but so easy for him to effect by the power of God, that he need not come out to talk with him about it: let him but go to Jorthy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

11 But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

12 Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.

13 And his servants came near, and spake unto him, and said, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean?

dan and wash there seven times, and the cure should be performed. Jordan had no more virtue in it (as he rightly saith afterward) than other rivers; nor was the earth of Israel better than that of Syria (though he begged two loads of it), but God presided more particularly over this country, and his power here appeared: and in this appeared the more, because water being cold, was very bad for this disease: the root of it being a white waterish humour, as Abarbinel notes, which would naturally, by this means, be increased.

Thy flesh shall come again] For the leprosy had eaten into it, and consumed it in part, as it did Miriam's (Numb. xii. 12).

Thou shalt be clean.] Freed from this filthy disease.

Ver. 11.] He was as angry with the prophet, as if he had scorned and mocked him. First he thought himself despised, in that he did not come to him and salute him: and then he thought it a thing ridiculous to go and wash in Jordan; for what could that water do more than any other? Thus men slight common and easy things, and admire those that are rare and difficult; and in their passion reject that which God himself propounds to them, if it be not agreeable to their humours and their conceits. In which passion, if he had continued, he had been a leper to his dying day.

Ver. 12. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus,] The valley of Damascus, which lay between Libanus and Antilibanus, was washed by five rivers; the two principal of which descended from mount Hermon, viz. Abana and Pharpar; the last of which ran by the walls of Damascus and the other ran through the city, and divided it into two parts, as Bochartus observes.

May I not wash in them, and be clean?] He did not consider that he was now under the direction of a prophet, who was supposed to speak from God, who might have prescribed what method he pleased for his cure; which was to come from his divine power alone, and not from the virtue of any water whatsoever.

Ver. 13.] Happy are they who have such excellent servants as these, who both had the courage to speak the truth to their master, and the prudence to order it with all submission and reverence. For my father was a title of honour in that country; by which name they called their lords: as kings were called the fathers of their country. And these servants, perhaps, had heard the young maid talk much of the power of the prophet, which made them very desirous their master would not refuse his advice; which they urge him to follow with great reason; by representing to him that it was the advice of a prophet, who was guided by God to give him these directions. And as 14 Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God: and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean.

15 ¶ And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came, and stood before him: and he said, Behold, now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel: now therefore I pray thee, take a blessing of thy servant.

16 But he said, As the Lord liveth, before it was not fit for servants to say to their masters, when they ordered a thing, Why so? Why not otherways? so much less should a man say to God, of his minister, who speaks in his name; especially when he commands things that may be done without much trouble, or any pain. For if he had bidden him cut and burn, as chirurgeons many times do in grievous sores, he would have submitted to it: and, therefore it was unreasonable not to comply with his prescriptions, when he required him only to go and wash himself in the river Jordan, which was a thing very easy, in his way home, and would put him to no pain.

Ver. 14. Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan.] He showed himself a person of great probity and discretion; who was not in such a rage but he could hear reason; and did not refuse good counsel from his servants; but suffered himself to be convinced and overruled to yield unto it.

His flesh came again] God was not so angry with him, as he was with Elisha; but upon his repentance and obedience to his directions, vouchsafed him a perfect cure; there being no mark left of his leprosy, but his skin as clear and smooth as that of a little child. This was the only cure of a leprosy that we read of, till Christ the great prophet came into the world.

Ver. 15. He returned to the man of God,—and stood before him.] Now Elisha seems to have admitted him into his presence.

Now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel.] He returned to give thanks to God, as the good Samaritan did to our Saviour; acknowledging the God that Elisha worshipped to be the true God, and that there was no other.

Take a blessing of thy servant.] A reward, or rather a token of his gratitude to him; for the Hebrews call all gifts a blessing: the Hebrew word barac signifying not only benedicere, but benefacere.

Ver. 16.] He did not think it unlawful to take it, for he receivde gifts from others. But he would have strangers to their religion know how good the God of Israel was; who made his servants so good, that they did the greatest good to mankind for nothing. Which generous piety was apt to invite others to the worship and service of this great and good God. For it gives great authority to a teacher of virtue not to be covetous (see Laetantius, lib. i. Div. Instit. cap. 4).

Ver. 17. Two mules' burden of earth?] As much as two mules could carry or draw.

For thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt offering nor sacrifice unto other gods.] Though he refuse to accept his present, yet he doubted not he would present him with two burdens of earth, which he intended to employ in erecting an altar, whereon he would sacrifice to no other god but the Lord. He judged it reasonable to have an altar out of God's land, because he saw he peculiarly dwelt in Israel. And though he might have taken enough as he went along in his way home, yet he desired it as a gift whom I stand, I will receive none. And he urged him to take it; but he refused.

17 And Naaman said, Shall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy servant two mules' burden of earth? for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the Lord.

18 In this thing the Lord pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the house of Rim-mon from the prophet; fancying, perhaps, that he would put a greater virtue into it by his blessing; as he had done into the waters of Jordan; therefore Rabbag thinks he desired to have this earth out of Elisha's house where he dwelt; and Abarinel thinks, from under his very feet in the place where he stood; of which there is no certainty. But it is plain he desired to receive it from the prophet, who had convinced him that there was no god like to his; who had such power, and made men so virtuous, as to be above the love of money.

Ver. 18. When my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there.] This was the god of the Syrians, but no author informs us what god this was, nor whence so called. Only many conjecture, because Rimmon in Hebrew signifies a pomegranate, that Venus is hereby meant, to whom such fruit was sacred. But Saligner understands this to be Jupiter, the thunderer, as they called him. And our Selden thinks it is derived from rum, which signifies high. Whence Hesychius saith δ' Ῥαμῶν signifies ὑψιστος ὁ θεός, the most high God.

He leaneth on my hand,] Or shoulder: which he does out of state; or, perhaps, out of weakness, for his support. In the additions to the book of Esther, mention is made of two young women that waited on that queen, upon one of which she leaned, and the other held up her train (xv. 4). And it was not only the custom among the Persians and Syrians, but the Israelites also, as we read in this book (vii. 2. 17).

And I bow myself in the house of Rimmon.] Together with his master; who could not well bow, if Naaman stood upright, and did not bow his body with him.

When I bow down myself—the Lord pardon thy servant in this thing.] He hoped he might, without offence to the divine majesty, whom alone he resolved to worship, keep the great office he had under the king his master, and consequently bow himself when he went with him into the temple of Rimmon: he who sees into the hearts of men, knowing it was no act of worship to that god; but only a necessary respect to his master. And so the word is used for civil honour, as well as religious adoration. Thus Lud. De Dieu hath clearly rendered this whole verse “In this thing the Lord pardon thy servant; when my master enters into the temple of Rimmon to worship there, he leans upon my hand, and so I bow myself (that is, together with him) in the house of Rimmon: when I bow myself in the house of Rimmon the Lord pardon thy servant in this thing.” Let him not take offence, since I intended not to worship Rimmon; as appeared by his sacrificing only to the God of Israel. An Israelite, indeed, was forbidden to bow before an idol, whatsoever his mind or intention was in that act: but a stranger was not bound by this law, as Mr. Selden shows the opinion of the Jews is (lib. ii. De Jure Nat. et Gent. cap. 11). Therefore when Naaman went into the temple, not of his own accord, but merely to wait upon his master, and perform the mon : when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing.

19 And he said unto him, Go in peace. So he departed from him a little way.

20 ¶ But Gehazi, the servant of Elisha the man of God, said, Behold, my master hath spared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought : but, as the LORD liveth, I will run after him, and take somewhat of him.

21 So Gehazi followed after Naaman. And when Naaman saw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and said, Is all well ?

22 And he said, All is well. My master hath sent me, saying, Behold, even now there be come to me from mount Ephraim two young men of the sons of the prophets : give them, I pray thee, a talent of silver, and two changes of garments.

duty of his office ; since he professed himself a worshipper of the most high God alone, and brought earth out of his land, and sacrificed only upon the altar made of it : all, he thought, might understand he did not worship Rimmon, but only paid his respects to the king when he bowed with him.

Ver. 19. Go in peace.] The prophet did not condemn this, but bade him not trouble himself about this matter ; for he did not offend against God's law, which was not intended for such as he was : though there are some of the Jews who think that these words, go in peace, relate to the verse foregoing ; that he need not trouble himself about carrying earth with him out of the land of Israel to make an altar (for it doth not appear he gave him any), and so left this matter of bowing in the house of Rimmon undetermined. And no less a person than Bochartus hath a large dissertation about this whole matter ; wherein he endeavours to defend their opinion, who think Naaman begs pardon for what he had done in times past, not for what he should continue to do ; and renders these words (as Dr. Lightfoot also doth), "when I have bowed," &c. But this seems to me altogether improbable ; for then he would not have mentioned what he did as the king's servant ; but simply the idolatry he had committed in worshipping Rimmon. Besides, the oriental versions, as well as the Greek and the Vulgar, and the Hebrew doctors generally, as well as Christian interpreters, understand it as we do, that he speaks of the future act of bowing ; which, being only a civil action, and he declaring himself publicly to be a worshipper only of the God of Israel, he hoped would not be imputed to him as a sin. And so the famous Buxtorfius, in a letter to Theod. Hacksan saith, Omnes, quotquot vidi, interpretes referunt ad futurum, &c. "All interpreters, as many as I have seen, refer this to the future, and not to the times past." And so doth the Chaldee paraphrast himself : and I am very much of the same opinion.

So he departed from him a little way.] About a mile from the city, as the Jewish doctors understand it.

Ver. 20.] He seems to be angry that his master had been so kind to one that needed not his charity, and was also one of another nation ; and therefore, in his passion, swore he would take something of him. Which-covetousness plunged him into a great many other sins, as the apostle observes it usually doth (1 Tim. vi. 9, 10). Dr. Lightfoot thinks the Hebrew text hath divinely omitted a letter in one word, that it might the more brand him for this villany. "I will 23 And Naaman said, Be content, take two talents. And he urged him, and bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments, and laid them upon two of his servants ; and they bare them before him.

24 And when he came to the tower, he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house : and he let the men go, and they departed.

25 But he went in, and stood before his master. And Elisha said unto him, Whence comest thou, Gehazi ? And he said, Thy servant went no whither.

26 And he said unto him, Went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee ? Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and oliveyards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and menservants, and maidservants ?

run," saith he, "after Naaman, and take מומה a blot," instead of מומה "somewhat."

Ver. 21.] Behold the honour he gave to the prophet, in doing such honour to his servant ; which testified he had a great sense of God, and of his goodness to him, in his heart.

Ver. 22. Mount Ephraim] It seems there was a school there, as well as at Jericho, Beth-el, Carmel, and other places.

Give them,—a talent of silver, and two changes of garments.] To relieve their poverty. This was the first fruit of his covetousness, which put him upon inventing such a wicked slander of his master. For why should Elisha desire so much silver for two young scholars ? Which might tempt Naaman to think, that though he publicly declined to take a gift from him, yet he secretly desired it (see Dr. Hammond on St. Matt. vi. annot. k).

Ver. 23. Be content, take two talents.] It is likely Gehazi pretended to keep strictly to his master's orders, and would have but one, till Naaman's generosity pressed and overcame him to take more.

They bare them before him.] As servants do before persons of honour.

Ver. 24. The tower,] To the place where Elisha lodged : or, as some will have it, to a secret place, where he laid up what he had got.

Let the men go, and they departed.] For he was afraid his master should see them.

Ver. 25. Stood before his master.] As servants were wont to do, to see if their master wanted any thing.

Thy servant went no whither.] This was another impudent lie, wherein he thought to deceive his master, though he was a prophet. Which was an impious endeavour to deceive the Spirit of God, whose minister Elisha was : like that lie of Ananias and Sapphira, Acts v. 3, &c.

Ver. 26. Went not mine heart with thee,] Did not God represent to my mind, as if I had been present, how Naaman came to meet thee, and what thou saidst to him, and what he gave thee ? For, no doubt, he recited all that passed between them ; to convince him of his folly (in thinking to cheat him), and put him to shame and confusion.

Is it a time to receive—and maidservants ?] Which Gehazi designed to purchase with the two talents : at a very unseasonable time, when the nation for their sins, were in danger to be carried captive out of their land. Which, though it did not fall out till above a hundred and fifty years after this, yet great devastations followed the death of Elisha.

27 The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed for ever.

Ver. 27. The leprosy—shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed for ever.] Unto many generations, as the word for ever frequently signifies. But the Hebrew doctors say this only relates unto his children that were then born; who were conscious to his crime, and approved of it (see more of this, viii. 1, 5).

He went out from his presence a leper] He punished him with the worst sort of leprosy, which was incurable. For his sin was exceeding great, or rather he was guilty of many sins besides those already mentioned; being a thief, and taking that to himself which was given to others. Nay, he was a sacrilegious person, in robbing the sons of the prophets, who were men belonging to God, in a special manner. The Hebrew doctors reckon seven sins, for which God punished men with the plague of leprosy, and endeavour to prove it out of scripture; and Gehazi was guilty of more than one of them, and therefore justly punished in an extraordinary manner. They are, an evil tongue, shedding of blood, a false oath, uncovering of any forbidden nakedness, inflation of spirit, rapine, and envy.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Elisha, giving leave to the young prophets to enlarge their dwellings, causeth iron to swim. 8 He dis-closeth the king of Syria's counsel. 13 The army, which was sent to Dothan to apprehend Elisha, is smitten with blindness. 19 Being brought into Samaria, they are dismissed in peace. 24 The famine in Samaria causeth women to eat their own children. 30 The king sendeth to slay Elisha.

1 AND the sons of the prophets said unto Elisha, Behold now, the place where we dwell with thee is too strait for us.

2 Let us go, we pray thee, unto Jordan, and take thence every man a beam, and let us make us a place there, where we may dwell. And he answered, Go ye.

3 And one said, Be content, I pray thee, and go with thy servants. And he answered, I will go.

4 So he went with them. And when they came to Jordan, they cut down wood.

5 But as one was felling a beam, the ax head fell into the water: and he cried, and said, Alas, master! for it was borrowed.

6 And the man of God said, Where fell it? And he shewed him the place. And he cut down a stick, and cast it in thither; and the iron did swim.

7 Therefore said he, Take it up to thee. And he put out his hand, and took it.

8 ¶ Then the king of Syria warred against Israel, and took counsel with his servants, saying, In such and such a place shall be my camp.

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1. The sons of the prophets] That were at Gilgal; for that is the place last mentioned where the prophet was (iv. 33), and was also near to Jordan, mentioned in the next verse.

The place where we dwell with thee] They had their colleges sometimes in cities (as in Beth-el), and sometimes in the fields, and sometimes upon mountains. It is probable this was in the fields; where Elisha, for the present, was resident among them.

Is too strait for us.] Their number of scholars was so much increased under so eminent a master as he was, that there was not room enough for them.

Ver. 2. Let us go.] They were so much under his government, that they did not take the liberty to go any whither without his leave.

Unto Jordan.] Near to which many trees grew.

Every man a beam.] A piece of timber.

Let us make us a place there.] A tabernacle large enough to contain them all. From whence we may gather, that the sons of the prophets did not spend all their time in studying the law, meditation, and prayer, and such holy exercises; but also employed themselves in some manufactures, as the apostles did in after-times, some of which were tent-makers (Acts xviii. 3), like to these here mentioned.

Go ye.] He consented to their design, the place which they chose being very commodious for students. As St. Jerome observes, who, in more places than one (see his epistles to Rusticus and to Paulina), compares the monks of his time with these sons of the prophets, “Qui habitabant in agris, et solitudinibus, et faciebant sibi tabernacula prope fluentia Jordanis.”

Ver. 3.] They thought their design would prosper the better under his conduct; and that if any one questioned what they did, his authority would over-awe them.

Ver. 4.] They began to go about their work.

Ver. 5. The ax head fell into the water.] Being not well fastened to the helve; or rather the helve breaking.

Alas master! for it was borrowed.] Good men are religiously careful that none suffer by their kindness to them. This shows, that as these sons of the prophets wrought with their own hands, going themselves to cut down wood to build withal, so (some of them at least) they were but poor, being not furnished with tools for their work, but forced to borrow.

Ver. 6. He cut down a stick.] To serve, I suppose, instead of a helve.

And cast it in thither: and the iron did swim.] A double miracle, as the Jews understand it, that iron, which was sunk down to the bottom, rose up; and then went to the stick and was joined to it, at its helve. For to what end should he throw a stick into the water, but that it should serve this purpose?

Ver. 7.] It fell near the river-side, or was brought thither when it rose up.

Ver. 8.] He did not rely merely on the number of his forces, but secretly resolved, by the advice of his council, to place them in such posts where he might hope to surprise the Israelites. It may seem strange, that after such a great benefit lately received in the cure of Naaman, the king should send him, who was captain of his host, to fight against Israel. But who can tell how long this was after that time, when Naaman might be dead? or, perhaps, Naaman might have lost his place; because he refused to worship Rimmon; and no benefit will reconcile inveterate enemies.

9 And the man of God sent unto the king of Israel, saying, Beware that thou pass not such a place; for thither the Syrians are come down.

10 And the king of Israel sent to the place which the man of God told him and warned him of, and saved himself there, not once nor twice.

11 Therefore the heart of the king of Syria was sore troubled for this thing; and he called his servants, and said unto them, Will ye not shew me which of us is for the king of Israel?

12 And one of his servants said, None, my lord, O king: but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bed-chamber.

13 ¶ And he said, Go and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him, saying, Behold, he is in Dothan.

14 Therefore sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a great host: and they came by night, and compassed the city about.

15 And when the servant of the man of God

Ver. 9.] And had laid an ambush for him there.

Ver. 10. The king of Israel sent to the place] He sent some spies to see whether Elisha gave him true information.

And saved himself there,] By this means he frequently saved his soldiers from falling into the hands of the Syrians; who lay in wait for them in such places, where they would certainly have gone, if they had not been told of the danger.

Ver. 11. He called his servants,] With whom he had consulted how to carry on this war (ver. 8).

Will ye not shew me which of us is for the king of Israel?] Betrays my counsels to him; for he could not think he should meet with such constant disappointments, unless it were by treachery.

Ver. 12.] It is likely Naaman had spread the fame of the prophet so much in this court, that some of them made further inquiry after him; and heard more of his miraculous works; and thence concluded he could tell the greatest secrets, as well as do such wonders as were reported of him.

Ver. 13. Go and spy where he is,] A very foolish design. As if the prophet could not as well know this, as he did the rest of his other counsels.

Dothan.] A city in the tribe of Manasseh, not far from Shechem and Samaria.

Ver. 14. Therefore sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a great host:] That the people of Dothan, being affrighted at the sight of such a number of soldiers, might not dare to defend the prophet.

They came by night,] That no intelligence might be carried to Samaria.

Ver. 15. When the servant of the man of God was risen early,] As students were wont to do.

And gone forth,] Out of the door of the house, which stood high; the city being built upon a hill.

Alas, my master! how shall we do?] Perhaps the Syrians had assured the inhabitants they intended no harm to them; but only came to take Elisha. Which the young man hearing, it put him in great fear; for being but newly come to his master in the room of Gehazi, and having perhaps seen none of his wonderful works, he gave himself and his master up for lost men.

Ver. 16.] Faith drives away fear; but it was hard for the young man to believe this, till he had more experience of God's providence over his prophet: and therefore Elisha prays he might have a demonstration of it.

was risen early, and gone forth, behold, a host compassed the city both with horses and chariots. And his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! how shall we do?

16 And he answered, Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them.

17 And Elisha prayed, and said, LORD, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the LORD opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha.

18 And when they came down to him, Elisha prayed unto the LORD, and said, Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindness. And he smote them with blindness according to the word of Elisha.

19 ¶ And Elisha said unto them, This is not the way, neither is this the city: follow me, and I will bring you to the man whom ye seek. But he led them to Samaria.

20 And it came to pass, when they were come

Ver. 17. He saw: and—the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire] He beheld the camp of God there (as the angels are called Gen. xxxii. 2), ready at hand to defend his master. Legions of angels (Matt. xxvi. 35), which were far more numerous and powerful than the host of the Syrians which he saw compass the city; but did not see this heavenly host till God opened his eyes, and represented them to him. The ancients think that the angels, when present with us, appear where they please, and are invisible where they please, though present. Now this appearance of theirs in this place is called the opening of his eyes; because it had the same effect. For he beheld the mountain (on which, I suppose, the city stood), where he saw none but Syrians before, was now full of fiery chariots and horses, which, as it here follows, had encircled Elisha.

Round about Elisha.] That is, he saw in this vision, as if Elisha was in the midst of this glorious camp of angels; who defended him so that none could penetrate and break through unto him.

Ver. 18. When they came down to him,] He seems to have gone out of the city to them, under the divine protection; intending to go to Samaria. And they seeing him, asked him the way to the man of God.

And he smote them with blindness] So that they might not be able perfectly to distinguish one thing from another.

Ver. 19. This is not the way, neither is this the city:] Some think we are not bound to speak truth to an enemy; but there is no need this should be asserted here. For it was true that they were not in the way to find Elisha: whom they should not see till they came to another city.

Follow me, and I will bring you to the man whom ye seek.] As he really did. But their minds were struck with blindness, as well as their eyes; or else they would not have committed themselves to the conduct of a stranger, to follow him in an enemy's country, they knew not whither.

But he led them to Samaria.] This shows they were not wholly blind, for then they could not have been led by him; but were dark, as we speak, and could not clearly discern who it was that led them, nor whither they were going. Here the Jews cry, Behold, a double miracle! Elisha's servant saw that which appeared to nobody else; and the Syrians could not discern that which every body else saw.

Ver. 20.] To their great astonishment, no doubt, into Samaria, that Elisha said, LORD, open the eyes of these men, that they may see. And the LORD opened their eyes, and they saw; and, behold, they were in the midst of Samaria.

21 And the king of Israel said unto Elisha, when he saw them, My father, shall I smite them? shall I smite them?

22 And he answered, Thou shalt not smite them: wouldest thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword and with thy bow? set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their master.

23 And he prepared great provision for them: and when they had eaten and drunk, he sent when they found that he had made them all captives, whom they came to carry away to Syria.

Ver. 21. My father,] This miracle touched him with great reverence to the prophet.

Shall I smite them? shall I smite them?] This repetition of the question expresses his eager desire to fall upon them and kill them, if the prophet would have permitted.

Ver. 22. Thou shalt not smite them:] There was a command to destroy the people of the seven nations; yet not if they yielded to them. But as for other persons who were taken in the war, they were not bound to destroy them; but it was humanity rather to spare them. Whence it is that the prophet here forbids the king to smite these, who were not under the curse of the people of Canaan.

Wouldest thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword,] As much as to say, thou wouldest not be so cruel, as in cold blood to kill those whom thou thyself hadst taken prisoners in a battle. Much more then are those to be spared who are not thy captives, but God's. Thou hast not taken them with thy sword, or with thy bow; but he hath brought them to thee, and delivered them into thy hand, not that thou mayest kill them, but use them kindly. To this purpose Ralbag (see Selden, De Jure Nat. et Gent. p. 745).

That they may eat and drink, and go to their master,] And tell him what civility and kindness there is among the people of God. This is a rare example of that which St. Paul recommends to us, Rom. xii. 20, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink," &c.

Ver. 23. He prepared great provision for them:] This is a new wonder, that the hearts of the Israelites should so yield unto the command of the prophet, as not only to spare, but to entertain bountifully their old enemies.

The bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel,] Great hatreds are sometimes overcome by unexpected and undeserved benefits; as many of the heathens have observed, that this is the noblest way to conquer them, particularly Valerius Maximus: Speciosius injuriæ beneficiis vincuntur, quam mutui odii pertinacia pensantur; "injuries are more gloriously overcome by benefits, than requited by pertinacious mutual hatred." But the sense of benefits in bad natures doth not last long; for in the very next verse we read how the king of Syria besieged Samaria. Which seems to contradict what is said here, that the Syrians came no more into the land of Israel. But the meaning of that is (for no man can think that any author whatsoever would contradict himself in the same breath), either that for this time they retreated quite, and laid aside all thoughts of war, though afterwards they broke out again into hostility; or (which is the plainest) that their hands made no them away, and they went to their master. So the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel.

24 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Ben-hadad king of Syria gathered all his host, and went up, and besieged Samaria.

25 And there was a great famine in Samaria: and, behold, they besieged it, until an ass's head was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a eab of dove's dung for five pieces of silver.

26 And as the king of Israel was passing by upon the wall, there cried a woman unto him, saying, Help, my lord, O king.

more incursions and inroads; but they resolved to come and fall upon them, not in small parties, and by ambushes (as they did before, ver. 8), but with a formed army, wherewith they laid siege to Samaria.

Ver. 24. Ben-hadad king of Syria] The name of Ben-hadad was common to all the kings of Syria, as Pharaoh was to those of Egypt.

Gathered all his hosts,—and besieged Samaria.] It seems the Israelites had not forces to appear against him in the field, so that he marched directly to Samaria, and laid siege to it.

Ver. 25. They besieged it, until an ass's head was sold for fourscore pieces of silver,] The siege lasted so long, or they were so ill provided for it, that there was a great scarcity of food in this city: insomuch that an ass's head was sold for so many shekels as make five pounds of our money. A great sum for the head, when the whole body was little worth; and it being an unclean creature, it was not lawful for the Israelites to eat (yea, was accounted unclean by the Arabians), unless in case of extreme necessity. See Bochartus, in his Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 13, where he observes out of Plutarch, that there was such a scarcity in Artaxerxes's army, when he was among the Cadusii, that an ass's head was sold for threescore drachms.

And the fourth part of a cab] A cab was a very small measure of corn, containing, as the Jews say, as much as twenty-four eggs would hold. It is never mentioned in the Scripture, but only here; though very often in the Talmud, in the title Kiddushin (see Imbonacius, in the Biblioth. Mag. Rabbin. tom. v. p. 349). All agree it was such a measure as I have mentioned; so that the fourth part of it was no more than six eggs would contain, called a log, as Bochartus thinks.

Of dove's dung] So the Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, and LXX. translate the Hebrew word hirjoun: and so a great many of the Jewish doctors, Jerehi, Kimchi, Ralbag, understand it. Though it be very hard to believe that dove's dung should be so plentiful in a city as to be sold in any quantity, or that men should eat it, when every one knows there is no nourishment in such excrements, and less in that of doves than in others, as is observed by Bochartus; who, after he hath confuted many other opinions, hath made it very probable that fitches or lentiles are here meant, which were the vilest of all food, and yet sold at this dear rate. For that some sort of food is here meant, is plain from what goes before (see his Hierozoicon, par. ii. lib. i. cap. 7).

For five pieces of silver.] Which the same author computes to be as much as nine French livres.

Ver. 26. As the king of Israel was passing by upon the wall,] To see if they kept their guards well, or to observe how the enemy lay.

27 And he said, If the LORD do not help thee, whence shall I help thee? out of the barnfloor, or out of the winepress?

28 And the king said unto her, What aileth thee? And she answered, This woman said unto me, Give thy son, that we may eat him to-day, and we will eat my son to-morrow.

29 So we boiled my son, and did eat him: and I said unto her on the next day, Give thy son, that we may eat him: and she hath hid her son.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, when the king heard the words of the woman, that he rent his clothes; and he passed by upon the wall, and the people looked, and, behold, he had sackcloth within upon his flesh.

Ver. 27. If the Lord do not help thee, whence shall I help thee? out of the barnfloor, or out of the winepress?] Some take the first words to be a curse, and translate them as we do in the margin, "Let not the Lord save (or help) thee." Like that among the gentiles, Dii demque to perdant, "may thou perish." Thus Josephus understands them to be the words of a man in a great passion, and full of fury, that she should implore relief from him, who could do nothing for himself. For he thought she had cried to him for virtues, as appears by the last words.

Ver. 28. What aileth thee?] When she had pacified his anger, or it cooled of itself, he asked her the cause of her cry.

This woman] Who stood by her.

Give thy son, that we may eat him] Thus began the prophecy of Moses to be fulfilled, Deut. xxxviii. 54, 55, &c.

Ver. 29.] Either that she might save him, or that she might eat him alone, and thereby preserve her life the longer.

Ver. 30. He rent his clothes;] Out of great grief at what the woman had said; or perhaps out of indignation at the prophet, with whom the next verse shows he was very angry.

He had sackcloth within upon his flesh.] His royal robes, which were uppermost, being torn, they saw sackcloth (in token of great humiliation) next to his skin. For these idolatrous kings were not so profane but they observed some of the ancient rites of religion, among which this was one; to abase and afflict themselves, in times of great calamity, by putting sackcloth upon their naked body.

Ver. 31.] Such was the arbitrary power which these kings exercised; which took away men's lives without any formal process against them: and the reason of this furious resolution seems to be, either because Elisha had hindered him from smiting the great host of the Syrians, when he had them cooped up in Samaria (ver. 20—22), which might have disabled them from bringing him into these straits; or because Elisha did not employ his interest in God, as he expected, to give them deliverance. Therefore he swore he should not live till night.

Ver. 32. Elisha sat in his house,] In the school, where the sons of the prophets came to be instructed by him.

The elders sat with him;] We often read in Ezekiel of the elders of Israel sitting before the prophet to 31 Then he said, God do so and more also to me, if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day.

32 But Elisha sat in his house, and the elders sat with him; and the king sent a man from before him: but ere the messenger came to him, he said to the elders, See ye how this son of a murderer hath sent to take away mine head? look, when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door: is not the sound of his master's feet behind him?

33 And while he yet talked with them, behold, the messenger came down unto him: and he said, Behold, this evil is of the LORD; what should I wait for the LORD any longer?

hear him (viii. 1. xxii. 24); and so some understand it here, of the chief persons in Samaria, who were come to consult him. But it rather signifies his chief scholars, some grave persons, who applied themselves to the study of divine things, and were now with him.

The king sent a man from before him:] Com-manded one that attended him to go and execute the sentence he had pronounced against Elisha.

See ye how this son of a murderer hath sent to take away mine head?] He understood, by the spirit of prophecy, the wicked intentions of the king: who was like his father Ahab, that had murdered many of the prophets of the Lord.

Hold him fast at the door: is not the sound of his master's feet behind him?] He charged them to lay hold of him before he came into the room, and not suffer him to enter; for the king would immediately follow him, to revoke his order. So he foresaw, by the same spirit of prophecy, that the king repented of what he had decreed, and was coming to revoke it; and therefore he only required the elders to do that which he knew the king would do himself, viz. stop the messenger at the door, and let him proceed no further. This will not warrant private men to apprehend public officers; nor to use such words to princes as the prophet here doth to Joram, whom he calls "the son of a murderer," by a divine motion. Which authorized him to represent him as the impious son of a very impious father.

Ver. 33.] Some imagine that the messenger being come, spake these words in the king's name; but it seems more reasonable to think the king, who was also come, spake them himself, in a fit of raging despair. He could not but acknowledge that the Lord had brought them into this distress. Upon which Elisha exhorted him to wait till he would please (who only could do it) to deliver them. But he impatiently answered, he had waited so long in vain, that he had no hope left, since they were driven to such extremity that women ate their own children. Or these words may be thus interpreted (taking the former part of them to be spoken by the prophet, and the latter by the king), And he said (that is, the prophet said), acknowledge the hand of God in this evil, which comes from him. To which the king replied, and what else can I expect from the Lord, unless it be such plagues? No, saith Elisha in the very next words, ye shall have plenty here to-morrow.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Elisha prophesieth incredible plenty in Samaria. 3 Four lepers, venturing on the host of the Syrians, bring tidings of their flight. 12 The king, finding by spies the news to be true, spoileth the tents of the Syrians. 17 The lord, who would not believe the prophecy of plenty, having the charge of the gate, is trodden to death in the press.

1 THEN Elisha said, Hear ye the word of the LORD; Thus saith the LORD, To-morrow about this time shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria.

2 Then a lord on whose hand the king leaned answered the man of God, and said, Behold, if the LORD would make windows in heaven, might this thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

3 ¶ And there were four leprous men at the entering in of the gate: and they said one to another, Why sit we here until we die?

4 If we say, we will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there:

and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians: if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, we shall but die.

5 And they rose up in the twilight, to go unto the camp of the Syrians: and when they were come to the uttermost part of the camp of Syria, behold, there was no man there.

6 For the LORD had made the host of the Syrians to hear a noise of chariots, and a noise of horses, even the noise of a great host: and they said one to another, Lo, the king of Israel hath hired against us the kings of the Hittites, and the kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us.

7 Wherefore they arose and fled in the twi-

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1. Elisha said,] Unto the king, who followed the messenger (see foregoing chapter, ver. 32. 33), and spake such words as Elisha here satisfies him were very unreasonable.

Two measures of barley for a shekel,] The Hebrew word seah signifies a certain measure, containing the thirtieth part of an omer: which is about a peck of our measure.

In the gate of Samaria,] Which was the market-place, as well as a place for other public meetings (see 2 Sam. xix. 8).

Ver. 2. Then a lord on whose hand the king leaned] Some think this was the messenger which the king sent to see execution done upon Elisha. Whosoever he was, he was greatly beloved by the king; for when he went abroad he leaned on him, which was a sign he was dear to him. For this state kings in those countries took upon them, to lean upon some favourite. As queen Esther, the Jews say, had a young lady on whom she rested her right hand, after the manner of the eastern kings (see upon ver. 18).

If the Lord should make windows in heaven, might this thing be?] He was incredulous, and seems to have laughed at what the prophet said: looking upon it as unlikely as that God would rain corn from heaven, as once he did manna.

Thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof,] A just punishment of his unbelief. And such will be the portion of those that believe not the promise of eternal life.

Ver. 3. There were four leprous men] The Jews will have these to have been Gehazi and his three sons; as they say in Gemara Sanhedrin, p. 416. edit. J. Coeh.

At the entering in of the gate:] Of the city of Samaria. From whence lepers were thrust out, as anciently out of the camp (Lev. xiii. 46. xiv. 3. Numb. v. 23). But they got as near the gate of the city as they could, for fear of the enemy. It appears by this that the Israelites observed the ceremonial law, though they were gross idolaters.

Why sit we here until we die?] For the city could no longer supply their wants, having not sufficient for themselves.

Ver. 4. We will enter into the city,] Lepers might sometimes come into their cities, if there was a great occasion, keeping their due distance from every one; as appears, some think, from Gehazi's talking with the king himself in the next chapter (viii. 4), but more plainly from this place (see Grotius upon St. Luke vii. 12).

If we sit still here, we die also,] The besiegers having carried away all the food thereabout.

Let us fall unto the host of the Syrians:] Who possibly might take compassion upon miserable people, though enemies to them.

If they save us alive, we shall live;] They will not let us starve, but give us food.

If they kill us, we shall but die,] They knew the worst that could happen to them was to lose their lives, which they should certainly do where they were; and therefore they chose an uncertain evil before a certain.

Ver. 5. They rose up in the twilight,] In the close of the evening, as appears from ver. 9. 12.

Uttermost part of the camp] Upon their trenches.

There was no man there,] Not a man to guard them, nor so much as a sentinel to watch them.

Ver. 6. The Lord had made the host of the Syrians to hear a noise of chariots, &c,] By the ministry of angels he made such a rattling like that of chariots, and prancing of horses, that the Syrians imagined a great army was not only marching towards them, but ready to fall upon them.

The king of Israel hath hired against us the kings of the Hittites,] Those people of the land of Canaan called Hittites, who dwelt about Hebron and Beersheba, were rooted out by the Israelites. But either some of them fled, and settled themselves in some neighbouring country, and there grew very populous; or else, we are to understand by the kings of the Hittites (as Josephus doth), the kings των νήσων, of the isles, lib. ix. Antiq. cap. 2. As if chittim was the same with cetum, as all isles, he saith, are called. Every one of which had a king; as Egypt itself was then divided into several kingdoms; whose help, the Syrians thought, the king of Israel had procured.

Ver. 7. They arose and fled in the twilight,] Being but newly gone when the lepers came thither.

Left—their asses,] Asses were employed in war as well as horses; at least for carrying of their baggage. So Bochartus observes out of Pollux, χρεια δ' εἰς πολέμους σκηνοφόρων μὴν ὄνων, “asses are of use in war to light, and left their tents, and their horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was, and fled for their life.

8 And when these lepers came to the uttermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it; and came again, and entered into another tent, and carried thence also, and went and hid it.

9 Then they said one to another, We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household.

10 So they came and called unto the porter of the city: and they told them, saying, We came to the camp of the Syrians, and, behold, there was no man there, neither voice of man, but horses tied, and asses tied, and the tents as they were.

11 And he called the porters; and they told it to the king's house within.

12 ¶ And the king arose in the night, and said unto his servants, I will now show you what the Syrians have done to us. They know that we be hungry; therefore are they gone out of the camp to hide themselves in the field, saying, carry burdens." There were several people, also, that fought upon asses, as others did upon horses; which he proves out of Ælian and other authors (see Hierozoicon, par. ii. lib. ii. cap. 13).

Fled for their life.] They thought of saving nothing but themselves; their fear being so great, that they left all they had behind them.

Ver. 8.] They had satisfied their hunger in the first tent, so that they had nothing now to do, but to get what treasure they could find, and secure it.

Ver. 9. We do not well.] When they had both well refreshed and enriched themselves, and also secured their booty, they began to reflect upon the distress of their brethren; and condemned themselves for making no more haste to impart unto them the discovery they had made of the enemy's flight, and the plenty of all things they found in their camp.

We hold our peace.] Do not publish the goodness of God to us all.

If we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us.] The Syrians might possibly recover out of their fright, and return when they saw none pursue them: or, some of them might be lurking thereabout, and come and kill them.

We may go and tell the king's household.] Impart this joyful news to the city. For every good citizen is in duty bound to discover every thing that is for the public safety.

Ver. 10. Called unto the porter of the city.] To him that was the chief commander at the gate of Samaria.

They told them.] Him and the guard that was with him.

The tents as they were.] Standing without any body in them; but full of provision and riches.

Ver. 11. He called the porters.] Of the king's house. They told it to the king's house within.] Reported it in the court, till it came to the king's ears.

Ver. 12. I will now show you what the Syrians have done to us.] What their stratagem is.

When they come out of the city, we shall catch them alive, and get into the city.

13 And one of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left in the city, (behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are left in it: behold, I say, they are even as all the multitude of the Israelites that are consumed:) and let us send and see.

14 They took therefore two chariot horses; and the king sent after the host of the Syrians, saying, Go and see.

15 And they went after them unto Jordan: and, lo, all the way was full of garments and vessels, which the Syrians had cast away in their haste. And the messengers returned, and told the king.

16 And the people went out, and spoiled the tents of the Syrians. So a measure of fine flour was sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, according to the word of the Lord.

17 ¶ And the king appointed the lord on whose hand he leaned to have the charge of the gate: and the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died, as the man of God had said, who spake when the king came down to him.

18 And it came to pass as the man of God had spoken to the king, saying, Two measures of

They know that we be hungry, &c.] His long sufferings had made him suspicious and cautious; and this was no improbable conjecture.

Ver. 13.] He repeats his advice twice, that it might make the greater impression on the king. The sense of which is this: that they were almost consumed with hunger, and must shortly die, as all the horses and the Israelites had done, whom the famine had killed. Therefore, if these horses and men were taken by the Syrians, there would be no great loss of them; for they would be lost if they remained in Samaria.

Ver. 14.] Whether they were gone or not. Some understand the horses of two chariots, which might in all be five: but it is more probable the king would venture no more than two horsemen, which he thought enough; who took two of the horses of his own chariots to make discovery.

Ver. 15. They went after them unto Jordan.] Finding the camp empty, as the lepers had related, they pursued them as far as this river.

The messengers returned, and told the king.] The certainty of their flight to their own country.

Ver. 16.] They found such store of provision in the tents of the Syrians, that it made this sudden change in the price of corn, according to Elisha's prediction.

Ver. 17. To have the charge of the gate.] To take care the people did not run out tumultuously, and leave the city empty: nor commit any disorder in the gate, being very eager to get victuals.

The people trode upon him in the gate, and he died.] They came out in such crowds, and pressed upon him so hard, that they threw him down, and trod him to death.

As the man of God had said.] See ver. 2.

Ver. 18.] By this it should seem there was a market kept in the gate of Samaria, where provisions were sold: and this lord was set to see good order kept, that they might neither take them by force, nor make any disturbance.

barley for a shekel, and a measure of fine flour for a shekel, shall be to-morrow about this time in the gate of Samaria :

19 And that lord answered the man of God, and said, Now, behold, if the LORD should make

Ver. 19.] This part of the history is repeated, because it is a most remarkable fulfilling of a divine prediction, whereby their belief of God's providence, ordering all things in a wonderful manner, was confirmed.

Ver. 20.] Before he could enjoy the benefit of that windows in heaven, might such a thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

plenty which God had bestowed upon them. Which did not at all alter their hearts; but they continued so obstinately deaf to all the prophet's admonitions and miraculous works, that in the next chapter we read of another long famine coming upon them.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The Shunammite, having left her country seven years, to avoid the forewarned famine, for Elisha's miracle sake hath her land restored by the king. 7 Hazael, being sent with a present by Ben-hadad to Elisha at Damascus, after he had heard the prophecy, killeth his master, and succeedeth him. 16 Jehoram's wicked reign in Judah. 20 Edom and Libnah revolt. 23 Ahaziah succeedeth Jehoram. 25 Ahaziah's wicked reign. 28 He visiteth Jehoram wounded, at Jezreel.

1 THEN spake Elisha unto the woman, whose son he had restored to life, saying, Arise, and go thou and thine household and sojourn wheresoever thou canst sojourn : for the LORD hath called for a famine ; and it shall also come upon the land seven years.

2 And the woman arose, and did after the saying of the man of God : and she went with her household, and sojourned in the land of the Philistines seven years.

3 And it came to pass at the seven years' end, that the woman returned out of the land of the Philistines : and she went forth to cry unto the king for her house and for her land.

4 And the king talked with Gehazi the servant of the man of God, saying, Tell me, I pray thee, all the great things that Elisha hath done.

5 And it came to pass, as he was telling the king how he had restored a dead body to life, that, behold, the woman, whose son he had restored to life, cried to the king for her house and for her land. And Gehazi said, My lord, O king, this is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life.

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1. Whose son he had restored] See iv. 35, 36. And sojourn wheresoever thou canst sojourn :] In some country out of the land of Israel.

For the Lord hath called for a famine ;] He had already ordered and decreed it.

It shall also come upon the land seven years.] Continue as long again as that in the days of Ahab, which lasted three years and a half. For as their iniquities increased, so did their punishments. Some of the Jews will have this to be the terrible famine spoken of by Joel the prophet ; who they fancied lived in these days. And four years of it, they say, were caused by noxious creatures, which ate up all the fruits of the earth ; and the other three by a drought, for want of rain.

Ver. 2. The woman arose, &c.] Who by this mention hath left us an example of a grateful mind, which never thinks it can sufficiently requite benefits received ; and she was abundantly satisfied, that what he predicted would certainly come to pass.

Sojourned in the land of the Philistines] This country was so near, that she might easily remove her family thither, and likewise hear sometimes from her own country. They were idolaters, indeed, but they suffered those that were not to live quietly among them, as their forefathers had done ; who entertained Abraham and Isaac with much friendship, and did not trouble themselves about their religion ; as Jacob, in like manner, sojourned a long time among idolaters in Mesopotamia. This shows the severity of God's anger against Israel, that he accounted them worse than the Philistines ; who had plenty among them, when the Israelites were almost starved.

Ver. 3.] Which some think her kindred had seized, as if she had been dead. But it is more likely that she carried her relations along with her into the land of the Philistines ; and it was the custom here, as in other places, that they who left their country had their goods confiscated (see Grotius).

Ver. 4.) Some of the Jews think, that the king seeing Gehazi, asked him how he came to be leprous ; and thereupon he related to him the history of Naaman the Syrian : which moved the king, either to satisfy his curiosity, or pass away the time pleasantly, to desire to hear all the other miracles Elisha had wrought ; but he had no intention to be convinced by them, and turn to God. But then here arises a question, how Gehazi came to be admitted to speak with him ; being a leper, who was not to come into any company, much less into the king's presence. This difficulty, some think, cannot be solved without affirming, that this fell out before Gehazi left Elisha's service ; such ὀστερολογία, as the Greeks call it, being frequent in scripture ; and the Jews, in Seder Olam Rabbah, place this famine before the story of Naaman, which spoils what they say of the occasion of this discourse. But there is no need to assert this : for either Gehazi upon his repentance might be restored to health ; or he might speak with the king at a due distance, as he walked in the field for his recreation ; and desired to be entertained with a relation of Elisha's miracles. Thus Naaman conversed with Elisha's family at a distance ; and the lepers called to our Saviour, as he went along the highway (Luke xvii. 12).

Ver. 5.] By a wonderful providence she came to present her petition, and brought her son with her, in that very nick of time, when Gehazi was telling the story of his restoration to life ; that the king might be the more fully satisfied of the truth of what he related from her own mouth.

6 And when the king asked the woman, she told him. So the king appointed unto her a certain officer, saying, Restore all that was her's, and all the fruits of the field since the day that she left the land, even until now.

7 ¶ And Elisha came to Damascus; and Ben-hadad the king of Syria was sick; and it was told him, saying, The man of God is come hither.

8 And the king said unto Hazael, take a present in thine hand, and go, meet the man of God, and inquire of the LORD by him, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?

9 So Hazael went to meet him, and took a present with him, even of every good thing of Damascus, forty camels' burden, and came and stood before him, and said, Thy son Ben-hadad king of Syria hath sent me to thee, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?

10 And Elisha said unto him, Go, say unto him, Thou mayest certainly recover: howbeit the LORD hath shewed me that he shall surely die.

11 And he settled his countenance stedfastly, until he was ashamed: and the man of God wept.

12 And Hazael said, Why weepeth my lord? And he answered, Because I know the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel: their strong holds wilt thou set on fire, and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword, and wilt dash their children, and rip up their women with child.

13 And Hazael said, But what, is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing? And Elisha answered, the LORD hath shewed me that thou shalt be king over Syria.

14 So he departed from Elisha, and came to his master; who said to him, What said Elisha to thee? And he answered, He told me that thou shouldst surely recover.

15 And it came to pass on the morrow, that he took a thick cloth, and dipped it in water, and

Ver. 6. She told him.] That is, confirmed what Gehazi had said.

A certain officer,] In the margin, an eunuch; that is, one of his bedchamber.

Restore all that was her's, and all the fruits of the field] Not only her house and land, but all the profits that had been made of them, and brought into his exchequer.

Since the day that she left the land, even until now.] This was a high act of justice, and an argument of some goodness left in a bad man, that he would not gain any thing by her calamity.

Ver. 7. Elisha came to Damascus;) In the time of the famine, I suppose, he went thither, as the woman did to the Philistines.

The man of God is come hither.] Who having cured Naaman, had raised a great opinion of his power with God, in that country.

Ver. 8. The king said unto Hazael,] Who was the captain of his host.

Take a present in thine hand—and inquire of the Lord by him, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?] They who consulted prophets, were wont always to carry a present with them, in token of the honour they paid them; as appears by many instances, particularly Jeroboam's wife in this book. It is probable, also, he begged his prayers for his recovery, acknowledging him to be a man of God.

Ver. 9. Hazael went to meet him,] As he was coming into Damascus.

And took a present with him, even of every good thing of Damascus, forty camels' burden.] This was a very noble present; which, whether he accepted or refused, is not mentioned in the holy scripture. Abarinel thinks he accepted it, because nothing is said to the contrary, as there is in the case of Naaman, who presented him with silver, and gold, and raiment, and such-like things of value. Whereas this was only a provision of food, such as bread, and wine, and fruit, and fowl; which was a fit present for him to make to the prophet, who might be presumed to be weary with his journey, and as fit for him to accept for his refreshment.

Ver. 10.] His disease was not of such a nature as would endanger his life, if he did not lose it by some other means; as the prophet foresaw he would. For Josephus saith, his disease was only a deep melancholy, into which he fell upon the shameful flight of his army, when no enemy was near them. This affected his body, and took away his appetite; but might have been cured.

Ver. 11.] The most simple sense is, He looked upon Hazael so long, with a settled countenance, that Hazael was ashamed, and he himself fell a weeping. Perhaps he fastened his eyes upon him as a man astonished, and that in an ecstasy saw some dreadful thing represented to him. Others interpret it, he turned away his face on one side, until he was ashamed, because he wept; which he would not have had Hazael seen. Others, he settled his countenance, not to weep; but he could not refrain from tears.

Ver. 12.] This last expresses the highest degree of barbarous cruelty: for which there was no occasion, if he did but kill the women with child, for the child in the womb would die with them, without ripping them up. Therefore, a late learned man, looking on this as a thing unheard of, will have the word haroth not to signify women with child, but castles or fortified places which he should demolish: though he cannot but acknowledge, that the cutting up women very naturally follows slaying their young men, and dashing their children, which goes just before. And he should have taken notice, that the very first evil he mentions that Hazael should do to them, is setting their strong holds on fire (Gousset, Comment. Lingux Hebraice, p. 216).

Ver. 13. But what, is thy servant a dog.] This is commonly understood as a disclaiming of such barbarity, which he abhorred as a beastly thing. But the words in the Hebrew sound otherways, being a submissive form of speech, wherein the speaker undervalues and debases himself, as appears from 1 Sam. xxiv. 15. 2 Sam. ix. 8, and run thus; "But what is thy servant? a dog." As much as to say, A mean and contemptible creature, who can never have power to do such great things; which none but a prince can do.

The Lord hath showed me that thou shalt be king over Syria.] This was as much as declaring and appointing him king of Syria: which Elijah ordered him to do; and was as much as if he had anointed him (see 1 Kings xix. 15).

Ver. 14.] He told him only the first part of his answer, and that not sincerely, as he intended. For he did not say he should surely recover, but that he might recover; his disease being in itself not mortal.

Ver. 15. On the morrow,] His eager desire to reign would not suffer him to expect his master's death, but spread it on his face, so that he died : and Hazael reigned in his stead.

16 ¶ And in the fifth year of Joram (the son of Ahab king of Israel, Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah, Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah began to reign.

17 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign ; and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

18 And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, as did the house of Ahab : for the daughter of Ahab was his wife : and he did evil in the sight of the LORD.

19 Yet the LORD would not destroy Judah

he made haste to dispatch him the very next morning after he came from Elisha.

That he took a thick cloth, and dipped it in water,] The covering of his bed, which (as many think) was made of goat's hair ; or, some other thick cloth, that would suck up a great deal of water.

And spread it on his face, so that he died :] He being feverish (as Josephus thinks) and complaining of heat, Hazael pretended to cool him by this means ; but indeed choked him ; by thrusting the cloth, perhaps, into his mouth : so that he could make no noise, nor did any sign of violence remain upon his body ; but the murder was committed so secretly, that it was thought he died a natural death. But nothing can be concealed from God, who took care to have the villany recorded to posterity, by revealing it to his prophet.

Hazael reigned in his stead.] Being in great favour with the people, especially with the soldiery ; and Ben-hadad, it is likely, leaving no son.

Ver. 16.] All the seeming contradictions between this verse and ch. i. 17, and ch. iii. 1, are thus briefly reconciled by Huetius :—Jehoram beginning to reign with his father Jehoshaphat in his seventeenth year, and Joram king of Israel in his eighteenth, the first year of Joram king of Israel will fall out in the second year of Jehoram, king of Judah : whose father dying in the twenty-second year of his reign, Jehoram, king of Judah, began to reign alone in the fifth year of Joram king of Israel (see Demonstr. Evang. propos. iv. p. 204).

Ver. 17.] Part of which was with his father, as I now observed, and the rest by himself. Dr. Lightfoot observing three dates of the beginning of his reign, gives this account of it :—The first was when he was made viceroy with his father, at the time he went out of the land for the recovery of Ramoth-gilead. The second was when his father went upon his expedition with Jehoram, king of Israel, against Moab (ch. iii. of this book), from which time, he thinks, the beginning of his reign is fixed here, and in 2 Chron. xxi. 20. For after this time, Jehoshaphat was little at Jerusalem, but abroad either in his own land (which he perambulated that he might reduce the people to the true religion), or, in Moab, to bring them into subjection (2 Chron. xix. 20). And lastly, at his father's death he was completely king of Judah (2 Chron. xxi. 1 (see Harm. of the Evang. Prolegom. sect. 6). So that the clearest solution of the difficulty mentioned in the foregoing verse is this (as Dr. Alix, a great man in this learning, and all others, hath observed to me), that Jehoram had three beginnings of his reign. One in the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat, when his father designed him to be king ; the second in the twenty-third year of his father, when he was crowned ; and the last when his father (after he had reigned five-and-twenty years) died ; and he for David his servant's sake, as he promised him to give him always a light, and to his children.

20 ¶ In his days Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, and made a king over themselves.

21 So Joram went over to Zair, and all the chariots with him : and he rose by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him about, and the captains of the chariots : and the people fled into their tents.

22 Yet Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. Then Libnah revolted at the same time.

23 And the rest of the acts of Joram, and all reigned alone a little more than four years. Thus Solomon was made king before his father died, and again after his death, as Abarbanel observes (see 1 Kings ii. 12).

Ver. 18. The daughter of Ahab was his wife :] viz. Athaliah, ver. 26.

He did evil in the sight of the Lord.] Being seduced by his wife to forsake the religion of his pious father and grandfather. Thus Ahab himself was led to the worship of Baal by his wife Jezebel. So dangerous it is to marry with idolaters ; for this wife of Jehoram, in all likelihood, was the author of that cruel policy of murdering all his brethren, for fear they should disturb him in his kingdom (2 Chron. xxi. 2—4).

Ver. 19. Yet the Lord would not destroy Judah for David his servant's sake,] Though he punished them severely (see 2 Chron. xxi. 11—17, &c.), yet he would not cut them all off, but had patience with them a long time, upon the account of that excellent servant of his, king David ; unto whom he had made a promise, as it here follows, and to his seed after him, of a perpetual kingdom.

To give him always a light, and to his children.] A succession in this dignity (as I have expounded it before), which was completed in the Messiah, whose kingdom shall have no end.

Ver. 20.] After they had been subject to Judah a hundred and fifty years, ever since the time of David who subdued that country. This was a great dishonour to him ; but by this means the prophecy of Isaac was fulfilled (Gen. xxvii. 40).

Ver. 21. Zair,] This word Zair is written differently from Seir ; and therefore doth not signify any part of the country of Edom ; but some city near to it.

All the chariots with him :] With as great a force as he could raise, to reduce them to obedience.

He rose by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him about,] The Edomites were not waiting in their own defence, but had surrounded him with an army ; through which he broke in the night, and routed them.

The people fled into their tents.] To their own camp ; where, it is likely, they were entrenched.

Ver. 22. Yet Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah] Notwithstanding this victory, they could not recover their dominion over this country ; but Edom continued a kingdom under its own king.

Unto this day.] When this book was written, which was not long after this revolt. And they were not brought again under the power of the Jews till after the captivity of Babylon : when Hyrcanus the son of Simon conquered them, and they received circumcision ; and came to have a free commerce with the Jews. Insomuch, that Herod the son of Antipater who was an Edomite, obtained the kingdom of Judea, that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

24 And Joram slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead.

25 In the twelfth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel did Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah begin to reign.

26 Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign; and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri king of Israel.

27 And he walked in the way of the house of Ahab, and did evil in the sight of the Lord, as and endeavoured to pass for a Jew, because they had received circumcision under Hyrcanus.

Then Libnah revolted at the same time.] Which was the reason, perhaps, why he could not pursue his victory over the Edomites, and regain their country; because he had enough to do at home, there being a defection of his own subjects from him. For this was a considerable city in the tribe of Judah (Josh. xv. 42), and belonged to the priests (Josh. xxi. 13). Which example, it is likely, other neighbouring cities followed. For the reason why they revolted, was because he attempted to set up his idolatrous worship among them; contrary to the law of God and of the kingdom (see 2 Chron. xxi. 10, 11).

Ver. 23.] See 1 Kings xi. 41.

Ver. 24. Was buried with his fathers] But not in the sepulchre of the kings, as we read 2 Chron. xxi. 20.

Ver. 25.] In the conclusion of the eleventh and beginning of the twelfth: as appears from ix. 29.

Ver. 26. Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign:] But in 2 Chron. xxii. 2, it is said, he was forty-two years old when he began to reign: which seeming contradiction was anciently solved in this manner (by the author of Seder Olam Rabba, whom a great many Jewish and Christian writers follow), that the forty-two years mentioned in the book of Chronicles are not to be computed from the birth of Ahaziah, but from the time of the decree of cutting off the house of Omri, which was in the thirty-first year of Asa, when Omri began to reign, who reigned six years, and after him Ahab twenty and two; and Ahaziah his son two years, and Joram twelve: all which put together make forty-two years. This Dr. Lightfoot hath expressed more plainly thus; "The forty-two years have not relation to the age of Ahaziah, but to the kingdom of the house of Omri. And therefore the words of the original are not to be translated, 'Ahaziah was forty-two years old:' but 'Ahaziah was the son of forty-two years,' as Seder Olam translates it. And the reason why his reign is thus differently set down from all other kings of Judah is, because he was a branch of the house of Omri by his mother's side (ver. 18), and therefore was fit to be reckoned not by the line of the kings of Judah, but by the house of Omri and Ahab." But there is an easier and more likely reconciliation of these two places, by Kinchi, Abarbinel, and others, which is, that Joram being invaded by the Arabians, and also diseased, made his son Ahaziah king, together with himself, when he was twenty-two years old. In this condition things remained twenty years: and then his father dying, they made him king alone, when he was forty-two years old; thus a great number of Christian interpreters also understand it. But then they suppose that Jehoram being thirty-two years old when did the house of Ahab: for he was the son-in-law of the house of Ahab.

28 ¶ And He went with Joram the son of Ahab to the war against Hazael king of Syria in Ramoth-gilead; and the Syrians wounded Joram.

29 And king Joram went back to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which the Syrians had given him at Ramah, when he fought against Hazael king of Syria. And Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah went down to see Joram the son of Ahab in Jezreel, because he was sick.

he began to reign, reigned eight years (as it is said ver. 17), after his father's death, that is, happily and prosperously; but after that falling into the hands of the Arabians, and growing sickly, he reigned ingloriously twenty years, till he was sixty years old, his son administering affairs all this time for him; but since the LXX. in the book of Chronicles read not forty-two, but twenty, many learned and good men think the ancient Hebrew copies agreed thereunto; but by the carelessness of transcribers, forty came in instead of twenty. Which it is better they think to acknowledge plainly, than to use forced and constrained interpretations, as the preceding seem to them to be. Perizonius hath lately censured them all, in these words, "Si quid ego video aut intelligo, multo rectius divinitati et auctoritati Scripturæ S. consulant, qui vitium istic librorum in re per se levi agnoscunt, quam qui difficultatem volunt tollere, contortis, violentis, et absonis interpretationibus: quæ ab ipsa Scripturæ locutione, et clarissima Syntaxi longissime recedunt," &c. And then instances in this very place, and the foregoing expressions of it (Prefat. in Ælian. Var. Histor. * * * * 2).

His mother's name was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri king of Israel.] So she is called also in 2 Chron. xxii. 2, that is, Omri's grand-daughter; who are often called daughters, as I have before observed. For it is certain Athaliah was the daughter of Ahab; but perhaps educated by Omri his father, and upon that account may be called his daughter. He was the youngest son of Jehoram, all whose other children and his wives were carried away by the Philistines and Arabians, when they made an inroad upon Judah, 2 Chron. xxi. 16, 17, where he is called Jehozabab.

Ver. 27. He walked in the way of the house of Ahab,] Not only worshipped the calves, but also Baal.

For he was the son-in-law of the house of Ahab.] And so corrupted in his religion, by the affinity he made with that wicked family. Into which Jehoshaphat married his son, hoping, perhaps, to unite thereby the two kingdoms again: but it proved the ruin of his family; as appears by the book of Chronicles.

Ver. 28. He went with Joram—to the war against Hazael] Just as Jehoshaphat went with Ahab to the same place; which Joram, it seems, endeavoured to recover to Israel, as his father had done.

The Syrians wounded Joram.] Not mortally, as they did Ahab: but so, that he was fain to leave the field to be cured of his wounds in Jezreel.

Ver. 29. Joram went back to be healed in Jezreel.] Leaving his army at Ramoth-gilead.

Ahaziah—went down to see Joram] By this means the secret providence of God so ordered it, that they were both killed by Jehu, as a punishment of their idolatry.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Elisha sendeth a young prophet with instructions to anoint Jehu at Ramoth-gilead. 4 The prophet having done his message fleeth. 11 Jehu, being made king by the soldiers, killeth Joram in the field of Naboth. 27 Ahaziah is slain at Gur, and buried at Jerusalem. 30 Proud Jezebel is thrown down out of a window, and eaten by dogs.

1 AND Elisha the prophet called one of the children of the prophets, and said unto him, Gird up thy loins, and take this box of oil in thy hand, and go to Ramoth-gilead :

2 And when thou comest thither, look out there Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat the son of Nimshi, and go in, and make him arise up from among his brethren, and carry him to an inner chamber ;

3 Then take the box of oil, and pour it on his head, and say, Thus saith the LORD, I have anointed thee king over Israel. Then open the door, and flee, and tarry not.

4 ¶ So the young man, even the young man the prophet, went to Ramoth-gilead.

5 And when he came, behold, the captains of the host were sitting ; and he said, I have an errand to thee, O captain. And Jehu said, Unto which of all us ? And he said, To thee, O captain.

6 And he arose, and went into the house ; and he poured the oil on his head, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I have anointed thee king over the people of the LORD, even over Israel.

7 And thou shalt smite the house of Ahab thy master, that I may avenge the blood of my servants the prophets, and the blood of all the servants of the LORD, at the hand of Jezebel.

8 For the whole house of Ahab shall perish : and I will cut off from Ahab him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel :

9 And I will make the house of Ahab like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah :

10 And the dogs shall eat Jezebel in the portion of Jezreel, and there shall be none to bury her. And he opened the door, and fled.

11 ¶ Then Jehu came forth to the servants of

CHAPTER IX.

Ver. 1. Elisha—called one of the children of the prophets.] The prophet Elijah was commanded to do this which Elisha was now about to do ; but Ahab's humiliation had moved God to defer the judgment pronounced upon him and his family : and so the execution of it was left to Elisha, who did not go himself because he was better known, and his business required secrecy ; or, being old, he was unfit for such a journey ; for the last time we read of him he was at Damascus. This young man, who was now attending him, the Jews in Seder Olam Rabba say, was Jonah the son of Amittai : which is the opinion also of Abarinel, and other Hebrew doctors.

Gird up thy loins.] Which implies he was to make expedition, and despatch his business before it could be discovered.

Go to Ramoth-gilead.] Where Joram had left his army ; and, as some think, they had now possessed themselves of it.

Ver. 2. Look out there Jehu.] Who some think was left commander-in-chief of the king's army.

Make him arise up from among his brethren.] From the other officers of the army (ver. 5).

Carry him to an inner chamber.] Lest the rest of the captains should make any opposition, and apprehend him.

Ver. 3. I have anointed thee king over Israel.] The Jews think none of the kings of Israel were anointed, but only those of the house of David : nor all they neither, but only when there was a question about the succession. For had it not been for the faction of Adonijah, there had been no need of Solomon's unction. For which reason Jehu was anointed, because the succession to the kingdom of Israel was to be translated out of the right line of the family of Ahab unto another family, which had no right to the kingdom, but merely by this appointment of God : who not only by his word, but by this solemn rite, constituted him king of Israel.

Then open the door, and flee.] Lest by any means what he had done should be discovered, and they might lay hold on him as a traitor.

Ver. 4.] This argued a great faith in this young prophet, that he undertook so readily the execution of this command. For there was no small danger to anoint a new king ; as Elisha himself plainly suggests ; when he bade him flee away, as fast as he could, as soon as he had done.

Ver. 5. The captains of the hosts were sitting.] In council, I suppose, how to carry on the war, or about some other business. Though some fancy they were at dinner.

I have an errand to thee.] Looking upon Jehu.

Jehu said, Unto which of all us ?] This shows that Jehu was the head of them, who asked the question in the name of the rest.

Ver. 6. Went into the house.] Into a private room (ver. 2).

He poured the oil on his head.] The oil being poured on his head, the Jews say he anointed him with it (as the manner was), in the form of a crown : in token that he was the head of the people, and had the supreme power over them committed to him.

I have anointed thee king over the people of the Lord.] They were still the people of the Lord by right and by profession, though they worshipped other gods with him. And it belonged to him to appoint what ruler he pleased over them ; which he did by his prophet. Without which authority, if Jehu had taken the government upon him, he had been a usurper.

Ver. 7.] Now he acquaints him what God required of him upon this promotion. To execute God's judgment on the house of Ahab, which he pronounced long ago, for their cruel murders of his prophets, and other good men in Israel ; particularly Naboth. In this Jehu acted not out of a spirit of private revenge, for he had no quarrel with the house of Ahab, but as God's minister, who by his prophet authorized him to do what follows.

Ver. 8.] See upon 1 Kings xxi. 21.

his lord : and one said unto him, Is all well? wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? And he said unto them, Ye know the man, and his communication.

12 And they said, It is false; tell us now. And he said, Thus and thus spake he to me, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I have anointed thee king over Israel.

13 Then they hasted, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the stairs, and blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu is king.

14 So Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat the son of Nimshi conspired against Joram. (Now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael king of Syria.)

15 But king Joram was returned to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which the Syrians had given him, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria.) And Jehu said, If it be your minds, then let none go forth nor escape out of the city to go to tell it in Jezreel.

16 So Jehu rode in a chariot, and went to Jezreel; for Joram lay there. And Ahaziah king of Judah was come down to see Joram.

17 And there stood a watchman on the tower in Jezreel, and he spied the company of Jehu as he came, and said, I see a company. And Joram said, Take a horseman, and send to meet them, and let him say, Is it peace?

18 So there went one on horseback to meet him, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu said, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me. And the watchman told, saying, The messenger came to them, but he cometh not again.

Ver. 9.] See 1 Kings xiv. 10. xvi. 3.

Ver. 10.] See 1 Kings xxi. 23.

Ver. 11. Then Jehu came forth to the servants of his lord:] Returned to the council-chamber, where they continued sitting (ver. 5).

Is all well? They, seeing the prophet look like a man in a fright, thought he brought some bad news.

Wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? So they call him, because he came in so abruptly upon them, when they were sitting in council; and because he fled away so hastily; and because they observed some motions in him which argued great disturbance. Though some think they, being profane idolaters, spake these words in scorn and contempt.

Ye know the man, and his communication.] They might know him to be a prophet by his habit, and by his way of speaking, as one that had authority. And prophets they knew commonly came to speak something concerning religion. By which general answer he thought to have satisfied them, and put by their further inquiry, that he might take time to deliberate of the most opportune season to declare this message of God to him.

Ver. 12. It is false; tell us now.] They were confident he came about some matter of great importance, which he seeming unwilling to discover, they pressed him the harder to tell truth.

Thus and thus spake he to me,] It is likely the spirit of courage, as well as of prudence, entered into Jehu, when he was anointed, so that he took heart to tell them boldly what the prophet had said. And the oil perhaps was still fresh upon his head, wherewith he anointed him, which he showed to them.

Ver. 13. They hasted,] God also moved the hearts of all the captains, immediately, without any consultation, to acknowledge him for their king.

And took every man his garment, and put it under him] They made a kind of throne of their very garments, and raised him up above the rest of the company.

On the top of the stairs,] They did not stay till they came down into the street, but forthwith, upon the very top of the stairs of the place where they were sitting, acknowledged him for their sovereign, by spreading their garments under his feet, to tread upon. So De Dieu understands the words. There is a late author who guesses these were winding-stairs in a turret, on the top of which tower they placed Jehu, that all the people might see him, and hear him proclaimed their king (Gousset, in his Comment. Lingue Hebraïce, p. 173).

And blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu is king.] They proclaimed him to be appointed by God to be king of Israel, which used to be done by the sound of the trumpet (1 Kings i. 32).

Ver. 14. So Jehu—conspired against Joram.] Contrived, with the rest of the captains that commanded the army, how to destroy Joram. For which they had the fairer opportunity, because he was gone from the army to Jezreel, as it here follows.

Now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael] That is, kept a strong garrison there, upon the frontiers of his kingdom; and left his army also thereabout (for they are meant by all Israel), for fear Hazael should make any new attempt to recover it.

Ver. 15. But king Joram was returned to be healed in Jezreel] This was said before, but here repeated, to show how Jehu came to effect his design so easily. Which was because Joram was absent from his army: among whom, if he had continued, it is likely some of them, if not all, would have adhered to him, and fought for him.

If it be your minds,] If they were all agreed that he should be their king.

Then let none go forth nor escape out of the city] This shows that Ramoth-gilead was in the possession of the Israelites. From whence he would have none to be sent, nor suffered to go forth, but the gates be narrowly watched.

To go to tell it in Jezreel.] For he knew that secrecy and speed were necessary to the execution of such great designs as he had in hand.

Ver. 16.] This is repeated, to show that Joram continued at Jezreel, whither he went from Ramoth; and that Ahaziah, who came to visit him, continued also with him.

Ver. 17. There stood a watchman on the tower in Jezreel,] These watchmen seem to have been set on high places, in time of peace, as well as war, where-soever the king was, that he might not be surprised. For David at Jerusalem was admonished by the watchman that his sons were safe, when he feared they had been lost (2 Sam. xiii. 34), as afterward, that news was coming from the army that fought against Absalom (xviii. 24, 25).

I see a company.] A troop, or squadron of horse, as we now speak.

Joram said—send to meet them, and let him say, Is it peace? He was afraid the Syrians had got the better of his army; or some more of his subjects had revolted.

Ver. 18. Thus saith the king, Is it peace? The messenger spake in the king's name, but he spake to 19 Then he sent out a second on horseback, which came to them, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu answered, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me.

20 And the watchman told, saying, He came even unto them, and cometh not again: and the driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously.

21 And Joram said, Make ready. And his chariot was made ready. And Joram king of Israel and Ahaziah king of Judah went out, each in his chariot, and they went out against Jehu, and met him in the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite.

22 And it came to pass, when Joram saw Jehu, that he said, Is it peace, Jehu? And he answered, What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many?

a greater king, who bade him not to trouble himself about peace or war, but follow him. Which he durst not refuse, seeing such a company of soldiers with Jehu.

The messenger came to them, but he cometh not again.] Which put them in doubt what to think.

Ver. 19.] To the same question the same answer was returned; that it did not concern him whether they were friends or enemies; but his safest way was to follow Jehu.

Ver. 20. Jehu the son of Nimshi; Who was his grandfather, but a more eminent person, it is likely, than Jehoshaphat his father; and so he was commonly called his son.

For he driveth furiously.] He was noted, it seems, for fierceness and eagerness in pursuing his designs. But the Chaldee paraphrast takes it quite otherwise, that "he drove slowly;" as if he would entice Joram to come out of the city and meet him, having no mind to engage in an assault or siege of Jezreel.

Ver. 21. They went out against Jehu; Not to fight him, but to meet him before he came to the city, that if there was any sedition he might compose it by his authority; or, perhaps, in honour of Jehu, who he saw would deliver the news himself, and not entrust a messenger with it.

Met him in the portion of Naboth] By a special providence of God, which brought them together in that place.

Ver. 22. Is it peace, Jehu? Seeing him look sternly, I suppose, he began to suspect some danger.

What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many? He means her idolatries, wherewith she bewitched the people, still continued, and were multiplied. Some think, indeed, that she added corporal fornication to her spiritual, and used evil arts to provoke men to filthy lusts. And, indeed, all manner of lewdness was wont to accompany idolatry; and in Rev. ii. 20. they who are compared to Jezebel are said to entice Christians to fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols; unless by fornication we there understand idolatry, and by eating things sacrificed to idols, having communion with idolaters.

Ver. 23. Joram turned his hands, The hand of him that drove the chariot.

And fled.] Towards Jezreel; where if he had kept, and inquired what Jehu came for, he might have defended himself for some time against him.

23 And Joram turned his hands, and fled, and said to Ahaziah, There is treachery, O Ahaziah.

24 And Jehu drew a bow with his full strength, and smote Jehoram between his arms, and the arrow went out at his heart, and he sunk down in his chariot.

25 Then said Jehu to Bidkar his captain, Take up, and cast him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite: for remember how that, when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father, the Lord laid this burden upon him;

26 Surely I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons, saith the Lord; and I will requite thee in this plat, saith the Lord. Now therefore take and cast him into the plat of ground, according to the word of the Lord.

27 ¶ But when Ahaziah the king of Judah saw this, he fled by the way of the garden house. And Jehu followed after him, and said, Smite

There is treachery, O Ahaziah.] Which he discovered too late, having no forces to resist these of Jehu.

Ver. 24. Smote Jehoram between his arms, Or shoulders; it being, I suppose, a chariot open behind.

The arrow went out at his heart, and he sunk down] God so ordered it, that he shot him quite through the heart, so that he died immediately.

Ver. 25. Cast him in the portion of the field of Naboth] Part of which Ahab had made a garden; but the rest remained a field.

For remember how that, when I and thou rode together after Ahab] With the rest of his guard, when he went to take possession of Naboth's vineyard. In the Hebrew the words are exactly thus: "Remember, thou and I were among those who rode two and two together after Ahab," &c. That is, he was attended by his guard, who were wont to ride in pairs, two and two, and Jehu and Bidkar rode at that time together, and heard Elijah's words.

The Lord laid this burden upon him; This punishment, which is frequently by the prophets called a burden, Isa. xlii. 1, &c. was denounced against Ahab, and extended to his son, 1 Kings xxi. 19, where these very words are not recorded, but Elijah said more than is there set down, which Jehu well remembered.

Ver. 26. I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons.] Some think that Jezebel contrived the death of Naboth's sons, together with their father, that they might lay no claim to the possession of their father. But these words may signify no more (as Grotius and others have observed) than the poverty to which they were reduced. For all punishments and miseries are called blood, among the Hebrews (Lev. xvii. 4); and to take away their estate, upon which they should have lived, was in effect to take away their blood, in which is the life of every creature; as we say now of grievous oppressors, that they suck the blood of others, and commonly call them blood-suckers.

Take and cast him into the plat of ground.] Without any burial; that, according to the prophecy, he might be eaten by the fowls of the air (1 Kings xxi. 24).

Ver. 27. Ahaziah—fled by the way of the garden house.] Which was built upon part of Naboth's vineyard.

To Megiddo,] He could not get to his own country, and so sheltered himself at Megiddo, which was not far from Samaria, whither his servants carried him, as a safer place (for he was not mortally wounded), and him also in the chariot. And they did so at the going up to Gur, which is by Ibleam. And he fled to Megiddo, and died there.

28 And his servants carried him in a chariot to Jerusalem, and buried him in his sepulchre with his fathers in the city of David.

29 And in the eleventh year of Joram the son of Ahab began Abaziah to reign over Judah.

30 ¶ And when Jehu was come to Jezreel, Jezebel heard of it; and she painted her face, and tired her head, and looked out at a window.

31 And as Jehu entered in at the gate, she said, Had Zimri peace, who slew his master?

32 And he lifted up his face to the window, and said, Who is on my side? who? And there looked out to him two or three eunuchs.

33 And he said, throw her down. So they threw her down: and some of her blood was there he hid himself for fear of Jehu, as we read 2 Chron. xxii. 9.

And died there.] Not at Megiddo; but being searched for and taken in Samaria, he was brought to Jehu at Jezreel, where he commanded him to be slain. Which seems to be beyond his commission; but as he was an idolater, so he was of the bloody house of Ahab by his mother's side, who was Ahab's daughter (viii. 18): and his destruction was of God (as the author of the second book of Chronicles observes, xxii. 7), who prompted Jehu thus to understand his command. Thus Ahabinel understands those words, he died there. Not in Megiddo, mentioned before, but in that execution of God's judgments on the house of Ahab.

Ver. 28.] Which honour Jehu permitted to be done him, because he was descended from the good prince Jehoshaphat (see 2 Chron. xxii. 9).

Ver. 29.] See the foregoing chapter, ver. 25.

Ver. 30.] In the Hebrew it is, "she put her eyes in paint;" that is, in stibium, which made the eyes look black, and was accounted beautiful; and also dilated the eyebrows, and made the eyes appear big; which in some countries was also thought very amiable (see Grotius). This was not intended to tempt Jehu with her beauty, but to keep up her dignity and state to the very last, for she was extremely proud.

Ver. 31.] She thought, perhaps, he would not meddle with a woman; and therefore took upon her to rebuke and upbraid him with what he had done against her son; bidding him remember what became of Zimri, who was cut off by Omri, her father-in-law, the founder of Ahab's family.

Ver. 32.] Who, according to the custom of the eastern countries, were wont to attend upon queens in their chambers.

Ver. 33. So they threw her down.] See how suddenly courtiers change with the fortune of their master.

He trode her under foot.] With his horses. This some of the Jewish doctors, particularly Rabbag and Kimchi, look upon as a punishment, according to sprinkled on the wall, and on the horses: and he trode her under foot.

34 And when he was come in, he did eat and drink, and said, Go, see now this cursed woman, and bury her: for she is a king's daughter.

35 And they went to bury her: but they found no more of her than the skull, and the feet, and the palms of her hands.

36 Wherefore they came again, and told him. And he said, This is the word of the Lord, which he spake by his servant Elijah the Tishbite, saying, In the portion of Jezreel shall dogs eat the flesh of Jezebel:

37 And the carcass of Jezebel shall be as dung upon the face of the field in the portion of Jezreel; so that they shall not say, This is Jezebel.

the lex talionis, "like for like." As she had done, so she suffered. For she caused Naboth to be stoned, and now she was condemned to be stoned herself; for there were two ways of stoning, either by throwing stones at malefactors till they had knocked them down and killed them, or by throwing them down upon the stones from a high place, and breaking them to pieces, as Amaziah did with the captives he took of mount Seir, 2 Chron. xxv. 12 (see Selden, lib. i. De Synedriis, cap. 5. p. 76, &c.)

Ver. 34. Go, see now this cursed woman, and bury her.] That is, go and take care of her body, to see it decently buried.

For she is a king's daughter.] And was also the wife and the mother of a king, which moved him to have this regard to her, as all men naturally have to royal dignity; forgetting, in the mean time, what Elijah had prophesied against her in his hearing. Which he might easily do when he was merry, it is like, with eating and drinking liberally.

Ver. 35.] All the rest being eaten by the dogs. For it is probable, when the horsemen were gone, who trod her under foot, the footmen stripped her, and left her naked in her own blood; exposed to the hungry dogs, that came out of the city and devoured her.

Ver. 36. This is the word of the Lord, &c.] Which he now called to mind, as he did his prophecy concerning Ahab and his sons.

In the portion of Jezreel] See 1 Kings xxi. 23.

Ver. 37.] No memory of her, nothing whereby to know there had been such a woman as Jezebel, should remain of her; suppose a picture, or effigies, to which men might point, and say, This is Jezebel. In our language, perhaps we should have said, "they shall not say, Here lies Jezebel:" for no monument was made for her, she having no sepulchre but in the belly of dogs. These words are not mentioned in 1 Kings xxi. being sufficiently included in what is there recorded; but perfectly remembered by Jehu; who now more largely recites the words of Elijah

CHAPTER X.

1 Jehu, by his letters, causeth seventy of Ahab's children to be beheaded. 8 He causeth the fulfilment of the prophecy of Elijah. 12 At the shearing house he slayeth two and forty of Ahaziah's brethren. 15 He taketh Jehonadab into his company. 18 By subtilty he destroyeth all the worshippers of Baal. 29 Jehu followeth Jeroboam's sins. 32 Hazael oppresseth Israel. 34 Jehoahaz succeedeth Jehu.

1 AND Ahab had seventy sons in Samaria. And Jehu wrote letters, and sent to Samaria, unto the rulers of Jezreel, to the elders, and to them that brought up Ahab's children, saying,

2 Now as soon as this letter cometh to you, seeing your master's sons are with you, and there are with you chariots and horses, a fenced city also, and armour;

3 Look even out the best and meetest of your master's sons, and set him on his father's throne, and fight for your master's house.

4 But they were exceedingly afraid, and said, Behold, two kings stood not before him: how then shall we stand?

5 And he that was over the house, and he that was over the city, the elders also, and the bringers up of the children, sent to Jehu, saying, We are thy servants, and will do all that thou shalt bid us; we will not make any king: do thou that which is good in thine eyes.

6 Then he wrote a letter the second time to them, saying, If ye be mine, and if ye will hearken unto my voice, take ye the heads of the men your master's sons, and come to me to Jezreel by to morrow this time. Now the king's sons, being seventy persons, were with the great men of the city, which brought them up.

7 And it came to pass, when the letter came to them, that they took the king's sons, and slew seventy persons, and put their heads in baskets, and sent him them to Jezreel.

8 ¶ And there came a messenger, and told him, saying, They have brought the heads of the king's sons. And he said, Lay ye them in two heaps at the entering in of the gate until the morning.

9 And it came to pass in the morning, that he went out, and stood, and said to all the people, Ye be righteous: behold, I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who slew all these?

10 Know now that there shall fall unto the earth nothing of the word of the Lord, which the Lord spake concerning the house of Ahab: for

CHAPTER X.

Ver. 1. Ahab had seventy sons] It is likely that grandsons are comprehended under the name of sons as is usual in scripture; though, by several wives, he might have as many sons as Gideon had.

In Samaria.] Unto which place the ruler of Jezreel had carried them, when they heard how Jehu had killed Joram; for fear they should fall into his hands: or, perhaps, during the war with Syria, their father had sent them thither, as a place of security (it being a strong city), in case of any ill accident that might happen.

Jehu wrote letters—unto the rulers of Jezreel.] The chief noblemen of the kingdom, who, I suppose, were fled thither with the king's sons; and perhaps were met to deliberate what to do in this juncture whether or not to set up one of Ahab's sons to be their king.

To the elders.] The principal persons in Samaria. To those who brought up Ahab's children.] These are called omanim (nourishers), because they had the care of his children from their infancy, and were now their governors, as we call them; who were of his kindred (ver. 11).

Ver. 3.] This he said, because, perhaps, he heard they were consulting about a successor to Ahab. Or rather, he insults over them, and denounces war against them with scorn and derision, being secure of the event, that they were not able to oppose him.

Ver. 4.] They were timorous persons, bred up it is likely in ease and delicacy. For this argument had little in it: those two kings being unarmed, without any forces; which they were furnished withal to defend themselves, and their master's sons.

Ver. 5. He that was over the house.] The high steward, as we call him, of the king's household.

He that was over the city.] The governor of the city who had all the soldiers under his command.

The elders] All the senators, and the great men that were entrusted with the care of the king's children.

We are thy servants.] They basely submit to his pleasure, without making any composition: which it is likely they thought it to no purpose to endeavour, and did not expect such rigorous usage from him.

Ver. 6.] This is repeated, to show the vile spirit of these great men; that could destroy so many royal persons, of whom they had the care, and who had offended nobody.

Ver. 7.] They seem not to have deliberated about the matter, though in itself so horrid; but instantly obeyed him.

Sent him them to Jezreel.] Following after themselves, as appears from ver. 11, expecting, perhaps, to be thanked for what they had so readily done; but, quite contrary, came to the same miserable end.

Ver. 8.] The gate was the place of public concourse for judgment, and other business; so that the laying them there was to expose them to public view, that every one might know there was none of Ahab's posterity left to reign over them.

Ver. 9. Said to all the people.] Who were there gathered together, gazing upon this amazing sight.

Ye be righteous.] Be not troubled; for none of you are to blame in all this.

Behold, I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who slew all these?] If any were guilty, he acknowledges it was himself. But since they had slain so many, why should he be to blame for slaying one? since he had authority from God for what he did.

Ver. 10. There shall fall unto the earth nothing— which the Lord spake concerning the house of Ahab:] In these words he throws all the guilt from off himself, being only God's instrument to punish the house of Ahab, as he had foretold by Elijah, and therefore he resolved to proceed, till he had utterly extirpated all that depended on him.

the LORD hath done that which he spake by his servant Elijah.

11 So Jehu slew all that remained of the house of Ahab in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his kinsfolks, and his priests, until he left him none remaining.

12 ¶ And he arose and departed, and came to Samaria. And as he was at the shearing house in the way, 13 Jehu met with the brethren of Ahaziah king of Judah, and said, Who are ye? And they answered, We are the brethren of Ahaziah; and we go down to salute the children of the king and the children of the queen.

14 And he said, Take them alive. And they took them alive, and slew them at the pit of the shearing house, even two and forty men; neither left he any of them.

For the Lord hath done] As if he had said, This is not my doing, but the Lord's: whose command I obey.

That which he spake by his servant Elijah.] He mentions what he denounced, rather than what Elisha commanded (ix. 8), because the words of Elijah were publicly known; whereas Elisha's were spoken in private, and not by himself, but by one of the sons of the prophets (ix. 7—9).

Ver. 11. All his great men.] Whom he had advanced to great offices, or dignities.

His kinsfolks.] All that had any relation to him.

His priests.] Who had served him in his idolatrous worship, and confirmed him in it.

He left him none remaining.] In that place: but there were still some left in Samaria (ver. 17).

Ver. 12. Came to Samaria.] Having finished his work in Jezreel, he went to prosecute it in the chief city of the kingdom; which most needed reformation.

At the shearing house in the way.] In the Hebrew the words are, "in the house of the shepherds' binding." For they bound the feet of their sheep when they sheared them; and this was the place where the shepherds of Samaria were wont to do it.

Ver. 13.] That is, the children of Joram, and the children of Jezebel. But the "brethren of Ahaziah" were carried captive before this, as we read 2 Chron. xxi. 17, therefore by brethren we must understand his brother's sons, as it is explained in 2 Chron. xxii. 8.

Ver. 14.] They were allied to the family of Ahab by the mother's side (viii. 18), and therefore he thought his commission (ix. 8, 9), extended thus far; being afraid, also, it is likely, that they might, if they lived, be avenged of him for the death of Joram, Ahaziah, Jezebel, and their children, whom they were going to see.

Ver. 15. He lighted on Jehonadab] A very pious and prudent person, as appears by his precepts to his sons, in the thirty-fifth of Jeremiah. Who hearing what Jehu had done, came I suppose to congratulate with him his happiness in fulfilling God's commands; and to encourage him in his proceedings to destroy idolatry. Scaliger, indeed, in his Elench. Triheres. cap. 24, against Serrarius, endeavours to prove that this Jehonadab was not he that gave those precepts to his sons; but another in the days of Jeremiah; for it is not likely, he thinks, that a man addicted to such a quiet life as he instituted would come to meet Jehu; and therefore this was some military person of great note, who Jehu thought might be serviceable to him. But this is a weak argument; for why might not Jehonadab, though he loved retirement, 15 ¶ And when he was departed thence, he lighted on Jehonadab the son of Rechab coming to meet him: and he saluted him, and said to him, Is thy heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? And Jehonadab answered, It is. If it be, give me thy hand. And he gave him his hand; and he took him up to him into the chariot.

16 And he said, Come with me, and see my zeal for the LORD. So they made him ride in his chariot.

17 And when he came to Samaria, he slew all that remained unto Ahab in Samaria, till he had destroyed him, according to the saying of the LORD, which he spake to Elijah.

18 ¶ And Jehu gathered all the people together, and said unto them, Ahab served Baal a little; but Jehu shall serve him much.

come to congratulate Jehu's zeal against idolatry, and Jehu be glad of such a man's company, whose known piety would gain him greater respect than the attendance of any great captain could procure him?

He saluted him.] Some think that Jehonadab saluted Jehu, and spake the words following. But it seems plain to me that they are the words of Jehu, who saluted him, as soon as he saw him, and inquired of his welfare.

Is thy heart right, as my heart is with thy heart?] The king professed great love to him, and asked him if he loved him as sincerely, and approved his actions, as he did Jehonadab's institutions.

It is.] The expression is double in the Hebrew Yes, yes; to signify a vehement affection. Or, as a late learned writer (Gousset, in his Comment. Hebr. Linguæ) will have it, the former is spoken by Jehonadab, who said It is: and the other by Jehu, who answered, "Is it? then give me thy hand," &c.

Give me thy hand.] In token of friendship (Gal. ii. 9), and of fidelity: as it was among the Romans, Æneid. iii.

"Ipse pater dextram Anchises, haud multa moratus, Dat juveni, atque animum præsentî pignore firmat."

He took him up to him into his chariot.] Which was a great honour, and token of high esteem, to ride with the king in the same chariot.

Ver. 16. See my zeal for the Lord.] To vindicate his honour, and fulfil his commands.

So they made him ride in his chariot.] He speaks in the plural number (they made him), because the servants, I suppose, opened the door, and helped him up in the chariot, when Jehu gave him his hand.

Ver. 17. He slew all that remained unto Ahab] Utterly rooted out his family.

According to the saying of the Lord.] This is mentioned again: both to show his warrant for what he did, and his exactness in fulfilling God's command.

Ver. 18. Jehu gathered all the people together.] That is, all the heads of them, who represented the rest.

Ahab served Baal a little: but Jehu shall serve him much.] His zeal for the Lord exceeded its bounds; for he ought not to have taken any indirect course to fulfil his will: as he did in counterfeiting as much zeal for Baal, as he professed to Jehonadab he had for the Lord. God doth not stand in need of any man's sin to compass his ends: but Jehu made bold to dissemble deeply for the service of God: in which he cannot be excused.

19 Now therefore call unto me all the prophets of Baal, all his servants, and all his priests; let none be wanting: for I have a great sacrifice to do to Baal; whosoever shall be wanting, he shall not live. But Jehu did it in subtilty, to the intent that he might destroy the worshippers of Baal.

20 And Jehu said, Proclaim a solemn assembly for Baal. And they proclaimed it.

21 And Jehu sent through all Israel: and all the worshippers of Baal came, so that there was not a man left that came not. And they came into the house of Baal; and the house of Baal was full from one end to another.

22 And he said unto him that was over the vestry, Bring forth vestments for all the worshippers of Baal. And he brought them forth vestments.

23 And Jehu went, and Jehonadab the son of Rechab, into the house of Baal, and said unto the worshippers of Baal, Search, and look that there be here with you none of the servants of the Lord, But the worshippers of Baal only.

24 And when they went in to offer sacrifices and burnt offerings, Jehu appointed fourscore men without, and said, If any of the men whom I have brought into your hands escape, he that letteth him go, his life shall be for the life of him.

25 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt offering, that Jehu said to the guard and to the captain, Go in, and slay them; let none come forth. And they smote them with the edge of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out, and went to the city of the house of Baal.

26 And they brought forth the images out of the house of Baal, and burned them.

27 And they brake down the image of Baal,

Ver. 19. Call unto me all the prophets of Baal, all his servants, and all his priests; By servants he doth not here mean his worshippers; but, being joined with prophets and priests, they signified some that ministered with the priests in the worship of Baal: like the Levites among the people of God.

For I have a great sacrifice to do to Baal; He might possibly mean a sacrifice not of beasts, but of men; even of all the worshippers of Baal; but he intended they should understand him otherwise, and therefore these words were spoken to deceive.

Whosoever shall be wanting, he shall not live. He thought that some, who considered what slaughter he had made of the family of Ahab (who introduced the worship of Baal, whom he pretended more highly to honour than Ahab had done), might suspect his design; and therefore he terrifies them with the fear of death, if they did not come to this great sacrifice.

That he might destroy the worshippers of Baal. By destroying his prophets, and ministers, and priests; who being all cut off, his worship would fall to the ground. But the next verses extend this further, to all the worshippers of Baal in the whole country.

Ver. 20.] The last day of the feast of tabernacles, the great day of the feast, is called by this name of atzarah; which we translate a "solemn assembly:" when it was not lawful to do any servile work, but wholly attend to the service of God (Lev. xxiii. 36). Such a day he now caused to be sanctified (as the word is in the Hebrew) for the service of Baal.

Ver. 21. Jehu sent through all Israel To give notice of this great feast; and to require every one, upon pain of death, to be present at it.

All the worshippers of Baal came, so that there was not a man left that came not. If this be meant of the whole number of Baalites throughout the kingdom, it seems scarce credible that the temple of Baal should be so large as to hold them all. But two things are to be considered; first, that this house or temple comprehended all the outward courts of it (as it did at the temple of Jerusalem), which were very spacious; and secondly, the number of his worshippers was much diminished since the death of Ahab: for Jehoram his successor had no great kindness for the worship of Baal (iii. 2), and men are apt to follow the example of their king. Besides, it is likely, Hazael king of Syria had destroyed many of them in his wars with Israel.

Ver. 22.] By "all the worshippers of Baal," are not meant all the people that came to worship him; but his ministers and priests, who alone wore vestments of a different kind from the rest of the people; and so it was among the Jews, and all other nations.

Ver. 23.] He calls those that worshipped the golden calves the "servants of the Lord;" because they worshipped the Lord by them, and abhorred the worship of Baal: whose sacrifice he pretended to fear might be profaned, if any strangers should be present at it. According to the common saying among the heathen, Procul, o procul este profani.

Ver. 24. When they went in to offer When they had begun their sacred offices.

Jehu appointed fourscore men without. This was but a small number for such an execution. But, it is likely, though no more appeared, yet there were others ready at hand to support them, if need were, in the undertaking. Or rather, these were set at the several gates of the outward courts; that if any endeavoured to make their escape, they might kill them. But the next verse seems to signify there was a greater body of men that went for that purpose into the temple.

Ver. 25. Jehu said to the guard and to the captain. Of those troops that he had set to keep the peace, as he pretended, and prevent all disturbance.

They smote them—and the guard and the captains cast them out. There is nothing in the Hebrew that answers to the word them: nor is it likely that the captains and soldiers troubled themselves to cast their bodies out of the temple; where they were rather buried in its ruins. But the meaning is, having done this execution, the guard and captains rushed out of the temple in great haste and immediately ran to the city of the house of Baal, as it here follows.

And went to the city of the house of Baal. That is, a place near to Samaria, where Baal had another temple; which gave name to the place: or rather, there were great buildings adjoining to the temple of Baal in Samaria, where the prophets, and priests, and their servants lived, called a city, because they were so large.

Ver. 26.] They worshipped several other lesser gods (whose images they had in this temple), together with the supreme god, whom they called Baal; as the others were called Baalim. So Servius writes upon the first of the Georgics, that, veteri ritu, "according to ancient custom," after the priests had invoked the special gods, to whom the sacrifice was intended, generaliter omnia numina invocabantur, "all the gods were invoked," lest any of them should think themselves neglected.

and brake down the house of Baal, and made it a draught house unto this day.

28 Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel.

29 ¶ Howbeit from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, Jehu departed not from after them, to wit, the golden calves that were in Beth-el, and that were in Dan.

30 And the LORD said unto Jehu, Because thou hast done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and hast done unto the house of Ahab according to all that was in my heart, thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel.

31 But Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the LORD God of Israel with all his heart: for he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam, which made Israel to sin.

Ver. 27. They brake down the image of Baal,] Demolished his temple, and the image of Baal in it: which was either the sun, or Belus.

Made it a draught house] It was turned into a jakes, as we now speak, a place where men went to ease nature; which was the highest contempt that could be put upon it.

Ver. 28.] So that he was never worshipped more in this country; but they were perfectly freed from this sort of idolatry. Which must be acknowledged to have been a very great work: all the eastern people, and particularly the Syrians and Zidonians, and other neighbouring nations, being addicted to this worship, and had been so from ancient time; as what I observed before shows (1 Kings xvi. 31), from the many cities, woods, mountains, and fountains, which before Joshua's time were known by the name of Baal: and there is mention of Baal-shalisha in this book, iv. 42.

Ver. 29.] Which he still worshipped: being afraid, as his predecessors were, that if he took them away, as he had done Baal, the people would return to the house of David. For which reason all the following kings of Israel continued this false worship till their captivity; when these calves were carried away with them. So they say in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 22, "In the twentieth year of Pekah came Tiglath-pileser, and took away the golden calf that was in Dan, and departed;" which they endeavour to prove out of 2 Chron. xxviii. 20, 21. And a little after, "in the twelfth year of Ahaz, the Lord stirred up the spirit of the king of Assyria, and he carried away the golden calf in Beth-el, and departed: fulfilling what is written, Hosea x. 6."

32 ¶ In those days the LORD began to cut Israel short: and Hazael smote them in all the coasts of Israel;

33 From Jordan eastward, all the land of Gilead, the Gadites, and the Reubenites, and the Manassites, from Arero, which is by the river Arnon, even Gilead and Bashan.

34 Now the rest of the acts of Jehu, and all that he did, and all his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

35 And Jehu slept with his fathers: and they buried him in Samaria. And Jehoahaz his son reigned in his stead.

36 And the time that Jehu reigned over Israel in Samaria was twenty and eight years.

Ver. 30. The Lord said unto Jehu,] By some prophet; either Elisha, or the young man that was sent to anoint Jehu; or some other.

Thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel.] His partial obedience was not without its reward: which had been greater if he had been as zealous in all things as he was in this one instance; the following history shows the truth of this prediction: the kingdom continuing in his posterity, till the days of Zachariah, who was the fourth from Jehu (xv. 8), and reigned only so long, as to make good this prophecy.

Ver. 31.] This admonition from God (which sufficiently showed he was not well pleased with him) did him no good; but policy prevailed against religion, and persuaded him to continue the old idolatry when he had destroyed the new.

Ver. 32.] He took several of their frontier towns, I suppose, and thereby opened a way to make great ravages in their country. For though Jehu was a valiant man, yet God did not prosper him, because he was not a sincere servant of his.

Ver. 33.] This fully explains what was said in the foregoing verse, that God cut them short. For Hazael took all their country beyond Jordan: the whole kingdom, which the Israelites took from Sihon and Og. Thus these countries which the Israelites first conquered were the first that they lost.

Ver. 34.] Which was extant in those days when this was written; and related his history more at large: of which this is a brief abridgment.

Ver. 36.] Longer than any of the kings of Israel his predecessors.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Jehoash, being saved by Jehosheba his aunt from Athaliah's massacre of the seed royal, is hid six years in the house of God. 4 Jehoiada, giving order to the captains, in the seventh year anointeth him king. 13 Athaliah is slain. 17 Jehoiada restoreth the worship of God.

1 AND when Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1.] There were many of them cut off by Jehu, as we read in the foregoing chapter; and not a few by others, 2 Chron. xxi. 4. xxii. 1, but now their destruction was completed by Athaliah: who,

2 But Jehosheba, the daughter of king Joram, sister of Ahaziah, took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's as she was ambitious of government, so she was enraged to see Ahab's family cut off; and therefore resolved to do as much by the house of David: and perhaps was afraid Jehu should come and kill her because she was of the house of Ahab; and therefore endeavoured to strengthen herself by getting sons which were slain; and they hid him, even him and his nurse, in the bedchamber from Athaliah, so that he was not slain.

3 And he was with her hid 'in the house of the Lord six years. And Athaliah did reign over the land.

4 ¶ And the seventh year Jehoiada sent and fetched the rulers over hundreds, with the captains and the guard, and brought them to him into the house of the Lord, and made a covenant with them, and took an oath of them in the house of the Lord, and shewed them the king's son.

5 And he commanded them, saying, This is the thing that ye shall do; A third part of you that enter in on the sabbath shall even be keepers of the watch of the king's house;

6 And a third part shall be at the gate of Sur; and a third part at the gate behind the guard: so shall ye keep the watch of the house, that it be not broken down.

into the throne, which she could not compass without the destruction of the royal family. For she was a wicked woman, as she is elsewhere called, and had played the harlot with another man, by whom she had children; as the Jewish doctors gather from 2 Chron. xxiv. 7.

Ver. 2. But Jehosheba, the daughter of king Joram.] Not by Athaliah, but by another wife. For Athaliah would not have suffered her daughter to be married to the high-priest, nor would he (in all likelihood) have married the daughter of such a woman.

Sister of Ahaziah.] By the father's side.

Took Joash—and stole him from among the king's sons which were slain.] Some think that he was thrown among them, and thought to be dead; but she snatched him away, and brought him to life: or, as P. Martyr understands it, his nurse threw him among the slain on purpose to save his life, and came afterward and stole him away. But the plain meaning seems to be, that they being all ordered to be slain, she secretly stole him away, and preserved him.

They hid him.] That is, she and her husband Jehoiada, the high-priest, to whom she was married (2 Chron. xxii. 11).

In the bedchamber.] It appears, by the next verse, that this bedchamber was in the house of the Lord; that is, the temple. Which doth not in the scripture always signify the sanctuary; but, in a larger sense, comprehends all the courts belonging to it. So Kimchi observes, that "the whole mountain of the house is called the house of the Lord." And this chamber here spoken of was in the outward court of all, called, by Josephus, πρῶτον ἱερόν, "the first holy place." For in the inner court nobody lay, nor might any woman come into it (see L'Empereur, upon Codex Middoth. cap. 2, sect. 3).

Ver. 3. He was with her hid in the house of the Lord six years.] The ministers of God were so true to Jehoiada, that he lay thus long undiscovered.

Athaliah did reign over the land.] Not de jure (as the lawyers speak) but de facto. For if we may believe the Jews, it was not lawful for a woman to reign over them. So Maimonides, in the treatise Melachim: "They do not place a woman on the throne," because it is said, Deut. xvii. 15, "If thou wilt set a king over thee," and not a queen. "And so in all the prefectures in Israel, they place none but men." She being therefore a usurper, it may seem strange she held the throne so long as six years, against the constitution of the kingdom. But, in after-ages, there is an example of one that held it longer. For Alexandra, the widow of Jannæus, after the death of her husband, possessed herself of the throne, and reigned nine years, as Josephus relates, lib. xiii. Antiq. cap. 24 (see Schickard, in his Mischpat Hammelech, cap. 2. Theor. 3).

Ver. 4. Jehoiada sent and fetched] Jehoiada was not a mere private man, but a person of great authority in the kingdom, who, knowing Athaliah was a usurper, and that he had the right heir to the kingdom in his possession (which if he had not, his own wife had a better right than Athaliah), thought he had sufficient warrant to dethrone her, and set up him that had the undoubted title to the crown. Which he did when he was seven years old; because then he grew so big, that he could not well be longer concealed; and it was fit also he should be educated in a royal manner; which he could not be while he lay hid.

The rulers over hundreds.] The names of five of them are set down in 2 Chron. xxiii. 1, who were all, some think, of the tribe of Levi. For they of that tribe were the persons principally employed in this undertaking, as appears by the sequel. But we learn from that place in the Chronicles, ver. 2, that whosoever they were, they went about all Judah, and gathered not only the Levites, but "the chief of the fathers of Israel."

With the captains and the guard.] The chief commanders of the soldiery, and those that had been the former king's guard: for it is not likely he durst call those who were the guard of the present queen.

And brought them to him into the house of the Lord.] Into that part of it where Joash was kept, where Jehoiada discoursed with them.

And made a covenant with them,—and shewed them the king's son.] He discovered to them the true heir of the crown, and they entered into a covenant to restore him: which they bound with an oath of secrecy.

Ver. 5. This is the thing that ye shall do;] These words, and those that follow, are certainly spoken to the priests and Levites (with whom those captains before mentioned were to join), as men whom Jehoiada had perfectly under his command, and whom he could trust: to whom he gives the following orders.

A third part of you that enter in on the sabbath shall even be keepers of the watch of the king's house;] The priests and Levites took their turns in their attendance at the temple; and their course was finished in the space of a week. Every week a course went out, and another came in. Now they who now entered upon their week of attendance (which was on the eve of every sabbath) were divided by Jehoiada into three parts; one of which he here orders to guard the king's house: that is, that part of the temple on the north where he lodged, and was now educated.

Ver. 6. A third part shall be at the gate of Sur;] That is, the east gate of the temple, towards the city; which was the principal (and, at the first, the only) entrance into the house of the Lord. This is called "the gate of the foundation," 2 Chron. xxiii. 5 (and by five other names, if we may believe the Talmudists), where another part were ordered to guard it. Abarbinal thinks this eastern gate was called Sur, being as much as to say, go back: because no unclean person durst enter into this gate: and the "gate of the foundation," because it was, as he speaks, the "gate of the first sanctuary."

A third part at the gate behind the guard;] The other third part he set at the south gate, which looked 7 And two parts of all you that go forth on the sabbath, even they shall keep the watch of the house of the Lord about the king.

8 And ye shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand : and he that cometh within the ranges, let him be slain : and he ye with the king as he goeth out and as he cometh in.

9 And the captains over the hundreds did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest commanded : and they took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that should go out on the sabbath, and came to Jehoiada the priest.

10 And to the captains over hundreds did the towards the royal palace ; and through which Athalian was wont to come, and therefore had a guard near this place. Behind which these Levites were placed by Jehoiada, to observe their motions.

That it be not broken down.] They were to take special care, that the house of the Lord was not any way profaned ; suffering none to come nearer to it than they ought : and particularly watching those out of the palace, that they did not defile it. So De Dieu thinks the word massach (which we translate, “be not broken down”) ought to be understood, being as much as be massach, by pulling away those that shall dare to pollute the holy place, and would come in to hurt the king. Or, as other learned men have interpreted it, they were to keep “the watch of the house at the breach :” which the wicked sons of Athaliah (which she had by another man) had made, as we read 2 Chron. xxiv. 7. Dr. Lightfoot thinks, that, besides these three parts for the design which Jehoiada intended, there were three more (six in all) for the ordinary service of the temple. For he would not have that neglected, while he took care of the affairs of the kingdom (see his book of the Temple, ch. 20).

Ver. 7. Two parts of all you that go forth on the sabbath,] It is well known, that David divided the priests into twenty-four courses, to attend the service of the temple in their turns : every one of which courses ministered their week from sabbath to sabbath. So Josephus saith expressly, he ordained each should minister eight days, ἀπο Σαββάτου εἰς Σαββάτου, “from one sabbath to another” (lib. viii. Antiq. cap. 2). For that course which went out did not depart till the sabbath was over ; and that which came in entered when it began ; as the learned Mr. Whiston in his late Chronology expounds the words of Josephus, p. 156.

Even they shall keep the watch—about the king.] He adds two parts of those who had finished their course and went off to go home into the country, whom he would have to stay at Jerusalem, and assist the rest before named ; especially in strengthening that part of the temple that lay towards the palace ; or rather to be the king’s guard, when he came out of his lodgings (where he was at present) into the court of the Lord’s house.

Ver. 8. He that cometh within the ranges,] By “the ranges” is to be understood, if not the ranks of men that stood about the mountain of the house of the Lord, the rank of trees that grew on either side of the causeway, or the rails that were set on either side of it, for the stay and safety of those that passed upon it (See Dr. Lightfoot in the same place).

As he goeth out and as he cometh in.] When he went out to walk, or do any other thing ; and when he returned to his apartment.

priest give king David’s spears and shields, that were in the temple of the Lord.

11 And the guard stood, every man with his weapons in his hand, round about the king, from the right corner of the temple to the left corner of the temple, along by the altar and the temple.

12 And he brought forth the king’s son, and put the crown upon him, and gave him the testimony ; and they made him king, and anointed him ; and they clapped their hands, and said, God save the king.

13 ¶ And when Athaliah heard the noise of the guard and of the people, she came to the people into the temple of the Lord.

14 And when she looked, behold, the king

Ver. 9.] To show they were all disposed according to his order.

Ver. 10.] They did not come armed into the temple, lest they should give any suspicion ; but Jehoiada furnished them with such weapons as the temple afforded ; particularly with the spears and shields, which king David had used, and dedicated after all his wars as monuments of God’s goodness to him : and perhaps several spears and shields of great men, which he had taken as spoils in his wars.

Ver. 11.] The guard within the court mentioned ver. 7, stood from the south part of the temple towards the palace, to the north part of it, where the king lay bid, about the great altar of burnt-offering (which was at the east gate) and the sanctuary ; and then the king was brought forth, and placed below the altar, that all might see him.

Ver. 12. He brought forth the king’s son, and put the crown upon him, and gave him the testimony ;] Having produced Joash, he put the crown on his head (which I suppose was kept in the sanctuary), and then put the book of the law into his hand, according to Deut. xvii. 18, 19, which is called the testimony, because God therein testified what he would have the king and them all do. And thereupon he declared him to be king of Israel, and then anointed him : which it was not necessary to do (and therefore he is said to be made king before it was done), being the son of a king, had not Athaliah disturbed the succession, and pretended to the kingdom. Therefore, to settle all things, he was anointed as Solomon and Jehu were. But there is a doubt what is meant by eduth, which we translate testimony ; supposing it comes from the root, which signifies to testify. But there are those, particularly Forsterus, Avenarius, and others of greater note, who derive it from the Hebrew word adah, which signifies to clothe, put on, and adorn : and so take eduth for some royal ornament, which was a mark of kingly dignity : and that, it is probable, might be a bracelet which Jehoiada put upon the young king, together with the crown. This conjecture is countenanced by what we read of the Amalekite, who brought the bracelet on Saul’s arm to David, as well as the crown that was on his head (see Fortunatus Scacchus Myrothee. iii. cap. 41).

They clapped their hands,] The guards and the people (as the next verse explains it) testified their joy by clapping their hands and shouting, as they did at king Solomon’s coronation (1 Kings i. 34. 39). For “clapping of hands” was a token of joy, as appears by many places (Ps. xlvii. 1. Isa. lv. 12).

Ver. 13. When Athaliah heard the noise—of the people,] Who were now assembled to see their king.

She came to the people into the temple.] Into the outward court where they were met together. And she stood by a pillar, as the manner was, and the princes and the trumpeters by the king, and all the people of the land rejoiced, and blew with trumpets: and Athaliah rent her clothes, and cried, Treason, Treason.

15 But Jehoiada the priest commanded the captains of the hundreds, the officers of the host, and said unto them, Have her forth without the ranges: and him that followeth her kill with the sword. For the priest had said, Let her not be slain in the house of the Lord.

16 And they laid hands on her; and she went by the way by the which the horses came into the king's house: and there was she slain.

17 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between seems in a great fright to have come alone, or but few attendants with her.

Ver. 14. The king stood by a pillar, as the manner was.] Some of the Jews, and many great men among Christian writers, understand by this pillar the brazen scaffold which Solomon erected at the dedication of the temple (2 Chron. vi. 13). But the plainest meaning seems to me, that he stood by the posts of the east gate in the inner court, where the station of the king was. Which Vitrina hath made probable, in his Synagoga Vet. p. 31, &c. where he observes, that the king alone entered at the east gate on the sabbath and the new moons; but on the other days at the south or north gate, where the people entered; which he gathers from Ezek. xlvi. 1, 2. He stood, I suppose, only to be better seen by the people; otherwise sitting was a posture of authority.

And the princes and the trumpeters by the king.] This made her soon apprehend the danger she was in, as it here follows. For the people, when they saw their young king, expressed their joy, it is likely, in some such acclamations as the people of Rome made at the inauguration of Claudius, "Claudi Auguste, Principem te, aut qualis tu es semper Octavianus, te respublica requirebat, tu frater, tu pater, tu amicus, tu bonus senator, tu vere princeps," as Trebel. Pollio relates in his life. For though Joash had done nothing praiseworthy, being but a child; yet they rejoiced in the felicity which they promised themselves in his reign, under the government of such a man as Jehoiada.

Treason, Treason.] Adding, as Josephus relates, Take that boy and kill him; meaning Joash, in whose behalf, this conspiracy, as she called it, was made against her. But she spake like a distracted woman, there being nobody on her side to execute any of her commands.

Ver. 15. Have her forth without the ranges:] Through which they had suffered her to come, being a queen, contrary to the order, ver. 8.

him that followeth her kill] If any body appeared to abet and rescue her, he commanded him to be slain.

Let her not be slain in the house of the Lord.] From whence they dragged her, until they had brought her down to the bottom of the causeway, and there they slew her.

Ver. 16. By the way by the which the horses came into the king's house:] That is, saith the same author (ch. 5. sect. 2, of the temple), they got her out of the mountain of the house, and brought her down the causeway; and when she came near the horse-gate, through which the horses went up out of the stables of Millo, when the king had occasion for them, there they slew her.

By the which the horses came into the king's house:] There was another horse-gate in the main wall of the city (Jer. xxxi. 39), but that was distinct from this;

the Lord and the king and the people, that they should be the Lord's people; between the king also and the people.

18 And all the people of the land went into the house of Baal, and brake it down; his altars and his images brake they in pieces thoroughly, and slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars. And the priest appointed officers over the house of the Lord.

19 And he took the rulers over hundreds, and the captains, and the guard, and all the people of the land; and they brought down the king from the house of the Lord, and came by the way of the gate of the guard to the king's house. And he sat on the throne of the kings.

which was peculiar to the king's horses: and therefore a distinctive character is set upon it, that it was the horse-gate "towards the king's house" (2 Chron. xxiii. 15). So it should be rendered, rather than "by the king's house;" for neither of these gates was near his house, but at a distance from it; and we may call this gate here spoken of, the back-way to the king's house at the stable-gate.

Ver. 17. Jehoiada made a covenant—that they should be the Lord's people;] He first takes care about religion, and engaged them in a solemn covenant to root out idolatry, and to restore the true worship of God, and continue in it.

Between the king also and the people.] That they should be his obedient subjects, and he should govern them by the law. This was directly agreeable to the apostolic precept, "Fear God, and honour the king."

Ver. 18. All the people of the land went into the house of Baal, and brake it down;] Accordingly they began immediately to make good their covenant, in destroying the worship of Baal; which had been introduced among the people of Judah by Jehoram (viii. 18), and was continued by Ahaziah (ver. 27).

Slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars.] To which it is possible he fled, as a place of refuge; or they dragged him hither to make him a victim to his god.

The priest appointed officers over the house of the Lord.] Levites to keep the door, lest any one who was unclean should enter into it (see more, 2 Chron. xxiii. 18, 19).

Ver. 19. He took the rulers over hundreds, &c.] Brought them out of the temple, that they might conduct the king to his palace, as it here follows.

Came by the way of the gate of the guard to the king's house.] By that gate of the king's palace, where a guard was to be kept for his safety.

He sat on the throne of the kings.] Which was the accomplishment of his inauguration.

Ver. 20. All the people of the land rejoiced.] Applauding what Jehoiada had done.

The city was in quiet:] Nobody appeared in defence of Athaliah.

They slew Athaliah with the sword beside the king's house.] Not far from it: the people having so little kindness for her, that they suffered her to be slain without any opposition. In the Chronicles, indeed, the words are, "the city was in quiet after that they had slain Athaliah" (2 Chron. xxii. 21). Which may import there was some bustle before, when she was apprehended; but after her death there was no stir: nor do we read they were so much concerned for her as to bury her.

Ver. 21.] Being so very young, he was very unfit for so weighty a charge; but he was under the direction of so excellent a counsellor, that while Jehoigreat men about him to idolatry (2 Chron. xxiv. 17, &c.) which shows him to have been a weak prince, who wanted judgment in things of greatest moment.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Jehoash reigneth well all the days of Jehoia-da. 4 He giveth order for the repair of the temple. 17 Hazael is diverted from Jerusalem by a present of the hallowed treasures. 19 Jehoash being slain by his servants, Amaziah succeedeth him.

1 In the seventh year of Jehu Jehoash began to reign; and forty years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zibiah of Beor-sheba.

2 And Jehoash did that which was right in the sight of the LORD all his days wherein Jehoia-da the priest instructed him.

3 But the high places were not taken away: the people still sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places.

4 ¶ And Jehoash said to the priests, All the money of the dedicated things that is brought into the house of the LORD, even the money of every one that passeth the account, the money that every man is set at, and all the money that cometh into any man's heart to bring into the house of the LORD,

5 Let the priests take it to them, every man of his acquaintance: and let them repair the breaches of the house, wheresoever any breach shall be found.

6 But it was so, that in the three and twentieth year of king Jehoash the priests had not repaired the breaches of the house.

7 Then king Jehoash called for Jehoia-da the priest, and the other priests, and said unto them, Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.

CHAP. XII.

Ver. 1, 2.] This history shows of what advantage it is to have good instructors and counsellors about a king. For Jehoia-da preserved Joash in good ways while he lived: but when he was dead, Joash changed his manners, and was persuaded by the flatteries of some of his courtiers to fall into idolatry; and he killed the son of his pious Jehoia-da, who reproved him for it (2 Chron. xxiv. 17, 21).

Ver. 3.] These private altars (on which they sacrificed to the true God), I observed before, were not removed by the best of their kings till the reign of Hezekiah. And this king was too young, and his authority too weak (though he had Jehoia-da to assist him), to attempt to break such a long-continued custom, especially when some of the princes in their hearts were idolaters.

Ver. 4. Jehoash said to the priest,] The house of God being suffered to run to decay, in the time of Athaliah and her son; Joash, in gratitude to God, who had preserved him there, resolved to have it repaired; and, in order to it, commanded what money should be set apart for that purpose.

All the money of the dedicated things that is brought] That had been, or should hereafter be brought and dedicated to the service of God and of the temple.

Even the money of every one that passeth the account,] This and the following money he commanded the priests and Levites to go through the kingdom, and gather for the repair of the temple, as we are told, 2 Chron. xxiv. 5. They were not to expect till the people should bring it in, but go and gather it, every man of his acquaintance, where he knew it to be due. And so the foregoing words are to be translated, not "that is brought," but "to be brought" into the house of the Lord. Which money arose three ways; the first is here mentioned, "the money of every one that passeth" (for the words the account are not in the Hebrew), which some understand of the offering which pious people of other nations made, who came to worship at Jerusalem (1 Kings viii. 41): or rather, of those who were come to twenty years of age, and being past that, were to pay half a shekel. This had been much neglected in the time of Athaliah (as the Jewish doctors think), but now being carefully gathered, there was enough to maintain the daily sacrifice (which was supported out of this money), and to carry on also the reparation of the temple. Though Abarinel thinks it was wholly applied to the reparation; and the people voluntarily offered for the maintaining of the daily morning and evening sacrifice.

The money that every man is set at,] This was the second way: by the money that every man who had vowed himself to God, was to pay, by the estimation that the priest should make for his redemption; according to that law, Lev. xxviii. 2, 3. For so the words are here in the Hebrew, "the money of a man whose taxation is the money of his soul:" that is, who is taxed such a sum of money, whereby his soul might be freed from the vow wherewith he had bound himself. For till this money was paid, his life was not his own, but God's.

All the money that cometh into any man's heart] This was the third sort of money for the reparation of the temple; that which any man would give freely for that service which they were to receive of them.

Ver. 5.] This money thus collected, he entrusted with the priests, and commanded them to see it employed to the use for which it was given.

Ver. 6.] They were both dilatory and careless in gathering the money (2 Chron. xxiv. 5), and did not bring in what they had gathered to begin the work. Whereupon the king revoked his former order, and entrusted other men (as it here follows) with this work. Thus are things seldom done well, that are committed to the care of many.

Ver. 7.] He ordered two things; first, that they should gather no more money of the people; and secondly, that they should not have the care of seeing.

8 And the priests consented to receive no more money of the people, neither to repair the breaches of the house.

9 But Jehoiada the priest took a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the LORD: and the priests that kept the door put therein all the money that was brought into the house of the LORD.

10 And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that the king's scribe and the high priest came up, and they put up in bags, and told the money that was found in the house of the LORD.

11 And they gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of the LORD: and they laid it out to the carpenters and builders, that wrought upon the house of the LORD,

12 And to masons, and hewers of stone, and to buy timber and hewed stone to repair the breaches of the house of the LORD, and for all that was laid out for the house to repair it.

13 Howbeit there was not made for the house of the LORD bowls of silver, snuffers, basons, trumpets, any vessels of gold, or vessels of silver, of the money that was brought into the house of the LORD:

14 But they gave that to the workmen, and repaired therewith the house of the LORD.

15 Moreover they reckoned not with the men, into whose hand they delivered the money to be bestowed on workmen: for they dealt faithfully.

16 The trespass money and sin money was not brought into the house of the LORD: it was the priests'.

17 ¶ Then Hazael king of Syria went up, and fought against Gath, and took it: and Hazael set his face to go up to Jerusalem.

the temple repaired; but pay what had been gathered into other hands.

Ver. 8.] They submitted to the king's new orders, and wholly committed the business to those whom he thought fit to employ.

Ver. 9. Jehoiada the priest took a chest,] By the king's order (2 Chron. xxiv. 8).

Set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the Lord:] On the right side of the gate that went into the court of the priests: not far from the altar which was within the court, as appears from 2 Chron. xxiv. 8. Dr. Lightfoot thinks these two texts do not relate to the same time. For at the first the chest was set in the very court of the priests near to the altar, as it is here said in this place: so that the money still passed through the priests' fingers; who took it of the people and put it into the chest which was in their court, where the people could not come at it. But the money not coming in so fast as was expected this way, he removed the chest, or made another, and set it without the court, at the entrance of it, where every one might have access unto it. And he proclaimed through all the country they should bring in their money thither: which came in so plentifully, that there was enough for the repair of the house, and for other uses also.

The priests that kept the door put therein all the money] There was a proclamation made, that all the people should bring in their half shekel, which Moses commanded every one of such an age to pay; and they brought it to the priests who stood at the door that let into their court, and saw them put it into the chest (2 Chron. xxiv. 9).

Ver. 10.] The high-priest would have a witness of his actions, lest he should be suspected of any fraud, as perhaps others had been; and would not open the chest without the assistance of the king's secretary of state; nor would he open it in the temple, but had it brought by the Levites into the king's office; and there the secretary and the high-priest, or any officer of his, emptied the chest, and told the money and then put it up in bags, which it is likely they sealed; and then they sent the chest into its place again. This they did every day, as we read 2 Chron. xxiv. 11.

Ver. 11. They gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work,] These bags of money were delivered (by the king and Jehoiada, 2 Chron. xxiv. 12) not to the priests, whom the king had found tardy, and perhaps faulty, in converting the money to their own uses; but to some select persons, who had this peculiar business committed to them, to see the reparation, and to employ good workmen, and to pay them their wages.

They laid it out to the carpenters and builders,] To buy materials for the work, as it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 12.] For all other things, of what kind soever they were, which they found necessary for the reparation.

Ver. 13.] Though these were wanting, yet the money was limited to the reparations of the house; and the king ordered that no vessel of any sort should be bought for the temple, till the temple itself was put into a good condition. So the LXX. render it, "there shall none be made for the house any vessels," &c. (that is, he commanded there should be none made), but all given to the forenamed workmen, as long as there needed any reparations. So it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 14.] The masons and carpenters, and such-like workmen, had all the money, to be laid out according to their discretion, upon the reparation of the temple alone, till the work was finished. And then they gave an account of what money remained in their hands, and that was laid out to purchase such vessels as are before mentioned, for the service of the temple (2 Chron. xxiv. 14).

Ver. 15.] They were so confident of the honesty of the overseers, that they took no account of the money they had paid the workmen; who were also men of such clear reputation, that what they laid out was not questioned. This was a rare example of fidelity in managing the public money; and there was one man in Greece, Aristides, who was so trusty in the opinion of all the people.

Ver. 16.] This money was not applied to the afore-said use; but put into the hands of the priests, that sacrifices for trespasses and sins might be offered for those that gave it.

Ver. 17. Then Hazael—fought against Gath, and took it:] This was a city of the Philistines, but taken by king David, and added to the dominions of Israel (2 Sam. viii. 1. 1 Chron. xviii. 1) and now taken from them by Hazael. Having made himself master of this place, he plainly declared, by the disposition of his affairs, that he intended to make an attempt upon Jerusalem. This fell out after Jehoash had forsaken God, and fallen to idolatry; as appears by the book of the Chronicles; where a much different relation is made of the expedition of the Syrians. Inasmuch that Abarbinel thinks (which is approved by several Christian writers) there were two expeditions. In the first of which Hazael came up in person against him, as is here related; but they purchased peace of him: and then in the end of the year, after they had killed Zachariah, the war was renewed; though Hazael did not come himself, but sent a small army, which they were not able to oppose, which destroyed a great many of the people, and sent great spoils to Damascus (2 Chron. xxiv. 23. 25).

Ver. 18.] The preservation of his kingdom, he thought, warranted this; but he had brought these dangers upon himself by his apostacy from God.

Ver. 20.] The Syrians had left him labouring under great diseases at this place called Millo, where his servants slew him in his bed, as we read 2 Chron. xxiv. 25. There was another place called Millo, hard by the king's palace at Jerusalem; therefore, to distinguish this from that, this is called "Millo that goeth down to Silla;" as Abarbinel thinks.

in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

20 And his servants arose, and made a conspiracy, and slew Joash in the house of Millo, which goeth down to Silla.

21 For Jozachar the son of Shimeath, and Jehozabad the son of Shomer, his servants, smote him, and he died; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David: and Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

Ver. 21. Jozachar the son of Shimeath.] He was called by another name also, viz. Zabad.

Jehozabad the son of Shomer.] This was his father's name, it is likely, and his mother was called Shimriah, who was a Moabitess; as Shimeath was an Ammonitess (2 Chron. xxiv. 26).

Smote him, and he died;] They were friends of Jehoiada (as Josephus thinks), who took this revenge upon Joash for the death of Zachariah the son of Jehoiada, as is expressly noted, 2 Chron. xxiv. 25.

They buried him with his fathers in the city of David;] But not in the sepulchre of the kings (2 Chron. xxiv. 25). For though they did him so much honour as to bury him in the royal city, yet not all the honour that was usual; because he had forsaken God, and slain one of his prophets.

Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.] His servants did not kill him with an intention to usurp the kingdom, but only to revenge the blood of Zachariah. For they suffered his son to succeed Joash peaceably, who slew those that had slain his father (2 Chron. xxv. 3).

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Jehoahaz's wicked reign. 3 Jehoahaz, oppressed by Hazael, is relieved by prayer. 8 Joash succeedeth him. 10 His wicked reign. 12 Jeroboam succeedeth him. 14 Elisha dying prophesieth to Joash three victories over the Syrians. 20 The Moabites invading the land, Elisha's bones raise up a dead man. 22 Hazael dying, Joash getteth three victories over Ben-hadad.

1 In the three and twentieth year of Joash the son of Ahaziah king of Judah, Jehoahaz the son of Jehu began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned seventeen years.

2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, and followed the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which made Israel to sin; he departed not therefrom.

3 ¶ And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and he delivered them into the hand of Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of Ben-hadad the son of Hazael, all their days.

4 And Jehoahaz besought the LORD, and the LORD hearkened unto him: for he saw the oppression of Israel, because the king of Syria oppressed them.

5 (And the LORD gave Israel a saviour, so that they went out from under the hand of the

CHAP. XIII.

Ver. 1.] Some have raised a doubt about this account, because Joash began to reign in the seventh year of Jehu (xii. 1), who reigned but twenty-eight years (x. 36); from whence if seven years be deducted, there remains no more than one-and-twenty, not three-and-twenty, as is here said. To which Kimchi and Abarbinel answer, there were two incomplete years: for when it is said Joash reigned in the seventh year of Jehu, it must be understood of the beginning of his seventh year; and in like manner, when he speaks here of the three-and-twentieth year of Joash, it must be understood of the beginning of the same year. And so they are called three-and-twenty, when they were but one-and-twenty perfect years. But it is better to say (as my worthy friend Dr. Alix thinks) that there was an interregnum of a year between the death of Jehu and the first of Jehoahaz.

Ver. 2.] Was not reclaimed by the severe punishments God inflicted on him.

Ver. 3. All their days.] The word their is not in the Hebrew, so that it may be translated all his days, as it is explained ver. 22.

Ver. 4. The Lord hearkened unto him;] Not for his sake, but for the sake of the pious ancestors of this people, with whom he had made a covenant of great mercy to be shown to their posterity; which in their great distress he now afforded them (see ver. 23).

The king of Syria oppressed them.] Intending their utter ruin, which God would not yet permit, but bare longer with them.

Ver. 5. The Lord gave Israel a saviour,] Some understand by this saviour, an extraordinary captain, whom God raised up to fight their battles with great success. But it being said, that while Hazael lived he oppressed them (ver. 22), it is more reasonable to understand by this saviour the son of Jehoahaz; who, when Hazael was dead, delivered them from their bondage.

'Syrians; and the children of Israel dwelt in their tents, as beforetime.

6 Nevertheless they departed not from the sins of the house of Jeroboam, who made Israel sin, but walked therein: and there remained the grove also in Samaria.)

7 Neither did he leave of the people to Jehoahaz but fifty horsemen, and ten chariots, and ten thousand footmen; for the king of Syria had destroyed them, and had made them like the dust by threshing.

8 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoahaz, and all that he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

9 And Jehoahaz slept with his fathers; and they buried him in Samaria: and Joash his son reigned in his stead.

10 ¶ In the thirty and seventh year of Joash king of Judah began Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned sixteen years.

11 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord; he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel sin: but he walked therein.

12 And the rest of the acts of Joash, and all that he did, and his might wherewith he fought against Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

13 And Joash slept with his fathers; and Jeroboam sat upon his throne: and Joash was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel.

14 ¶ Now Elisha was fallen sick of his sickness whereof he died. And Joash the king of Israel came down unto him, and wept over his face, and said, O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof.

15 And Elisha said unto him, Take bow and arrows. And he took unto him bow and arrows.

16 And he said to the king of Israel, Put thy hand upon the bow. And he put his hand upon it: and Elisha put his hands upon the king's hands.

17 And he said, Open the window eastward. And he opened it. Then Elisha said, Shoot. And he shot. And he said, The arrow of the {ver. 25}. And perhaps he did this in his father's lifetime, who made him joint sovereign with himself.

Israel dwelt in their tents.] They lived quietly and securely, not only in their fortified towns, but in the villages and the fields.

Ver. 6. Nevertheless they departed not from the sins of Jeroboam.] Neither their miseries, nor God's mercies to them, made any alteration in them; but they continued in those sins which had ruined the house of Jeroboam, and many of his successors.

There remained the grove also in Samaria.] We read of a grove which Ahab planted in honour of Baal, 1 Kings xvi. 33. But his worship being utterly destroyed by Jehu, I cannot but think that he cut down that grove: and therefore the grove here mentioned had in it the image of some other god.

Ver. 7. Fifty horsemen, and ten chariots.] With the men belonging to them.

Ten thousand footmen.] This explains what he means by the people in the foregoing words; not all the people of Israel, but the soldiers, or men of war; of which there were no more left than this small number.

For the king of Syria had destroyed them.] God left them in his hand to make this destruction among them, killing some, and carrying others captive.

Had made them like the dust by threshing.] By perpetual wars and captivities; which made very great depopulations.

Ver. 8.] The judgments of God upon him were the most remarkable, because he was a "man of might:" and was so far from being able to stand before the Syrians, that they beat him to dust.

Ver. 9.] Called in the next verse Jehoash.

Ver. 10.] A difficulty seems to arise by comparing this verse with the first, where it is said Jehoahaz king of Israel began to reign in the twenty-third year of Joash king of Judah, and reigned seventeen years: from whence it follows, that Jehoash began to reign not in the thirty-seventh, but in the thirty-ninth or fortieth year of Joash king of Judah. But this only shows the truth of what I said upon ver. 5, that he reigned with his father three years; after God was so gracious as to raise up a deliverer to them, who was this son of his, by whom peace was restored to them.

This we note in the margin, he reigned in concert with his father (xiv. 1).

Ver. 12.] They were all recorded in the book so often mentioned (see 1 Kings xi. 41); and his fight with Amaziah is particularly related and set down at large in 2 Chron. xxv. 17, 18, &c.

Ver. 13. Jeroboam sat upon his throne.] From whence some of the Jewish doctors gather, that he reigned with his father at least one year; though Abarbanel denies it, but without reason. He doth not here conclude this history of Joash; for he afterward relates great things done by him. But being to speak of the death of Elisha, upon which those things depended, he interposes that before he proceeds further to relate his acts.

Ver. 14. Now Elisha was fallen sick.] This was in the tenth year of Joash, as they say in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 19, and from thence gather how long Elisha continued a prophet in Israel, viz. from the nineteenth year of Jehoshaphat till this time, which was sixty-five years.

Joash—wept over his face.] This was no sign of his hearty affection to him (for he would not hearken to his word), but he bewailed himself and his people, who were in danger shortly to lose so great a defender.

My father, my father.] They are the words of Elisha concerning Elijah, when he was taken up to heaven (ii. 12), signifying the great authority he had maintained among them (which is included in the word father), and that by his counsel and prayers they had obtained glorious victories over their enemies.

Ver. 15.] This was to represent the wars he was to have with the Syrians.

Ver. 16.] This was to represent that they were not to trust in their arms and their valour, but in God alone, who would give them the victory.

Ver. 17. Open the window eastward.] Part of Syria lay east or north-east from Judea: and the Syrians also had possessed themselves of all the land of Israel eastward (x. 33): from whence he signified, by what follows, Joash should expel them.

The arrow of deliverance from Syria.] A sign the Lord would wound the Syrians by the arms of the LoRD's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria: for thou shalt smite the Syrians in Aphek, till thou have consumed them.

18 And he said, Take the arrows. And he took them. And he said unto the king of Israel, Smite upon the ground. And he smote thrice, and stayed.

19 And the man of God was wroth with him, and said, Thou shouldest have smitten five or six times; then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it: whereas now thou shalt smite Syria but thrice.

20 ¶ And Elisha died, and they buried him. And the bands of the Moabites invaded the land at the coming in of the year.

21 And it came to pass, as they were burying a man, that, behold, they spied a band of men; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Eli-

Israelites, and give them a glorious deliverance from their tyranny.

Thou shalt smite the Syrians in Aphek,] In the territories belonging to it (of which, see 1 Sam. iv. 1. xxix. 1). The Syrians had taken Gath, and Aphek, I take it, was not far from it: so that it was as much as to say, they should drive them out of the country, as it follows.

Till thou have consumed them.] Not all the people of Syria, but all their forces wherewith they infested Israel.

Ver. 18.] That which he represented before by the shooting of an arrow, he represents again by smiting upon the ground with the arrows; viz. victory over the Syrians, whom he should overthrow and cast down to the ground in battle.

Ver. 19.] By the former sign the king of Israel might have understood that this was intended to signify the same thing; and I suppose the prophet spake so as to give him to understand he would have him smite a good many times. And he was angry at his sloth and unbelief, which made him stop at the third stroke; for if he had done it oftener, he should have utterly disabled them. He had before represented great victories which he should obtain, but not till now how often he should overcome; which he was admonished by God to let him know by this sign. And it is probable the prophet himself did not know, till he saw how often he smote on the ground.

Ver. 20.] Which was the usual time when people went out to war, as I have shown upon 2 Sam. xi. 1, (see there); but whether it was the next spring after his death, or some years after, is doubted: but the words seem plainly to import it was the next spring.

Ver. 21. As they were burying a man.] Carrying him to his grave.

They spied a band of men;] A party of the Moabites, who were coming towards the place where they were to lay the corpse.

They cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha:] Which being near to the place where they then were, they rolled away the stone, and laid the body by Elisha's; for fear, if they proceeded to the sepulchre prepared for this man, they should fall into the hands of the Moabites.

Touched the bones of Elisha,] From hence some conclude, that this invasion of the Moabites was some years after Elisha's death; when his flesh was consumed, and only his bones remained.

22 ¶ But Hazael king of Syria oppressed Israel all the days of Jehoahaz.

23 And the LoRD was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them, and had respect unto them, because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and would not destroy them, neither cast he them from his presence as yet.

24 So Hazael king of Syria died; And Ben-hadad his son reigned in his stead.

25 And Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz took again out of the hand of Ben-hadad the son of Hazael the cities, which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz his father by war. Three times did Joash beat him, and recovered the cities of Israel.

clude, that this invasion of the Moabites was some years after Elisha's death; when his flesh was consumed, and only his bones remained.

He revived,] By which miracle God did the highest honour to his prophet, and confirmed both the truth of what he had promised the king, and the belief of a future life. For this was something more than he had done in Elisha's lifetime, when he could not without many prayers, and stretching himself with great application upon the body of the child, raise it to life again; whereas now, upon touching of his dead body only, God restored a man, in an instant, to perfect health; for he stood upon his feet, and, it is likely, walked home with those that brought him to be buried. It is a poor conceit of Abarbinel and others, that he was a wicked man, whom God rather would raise to life again, than suffer his dead body to rest by such a holy person as Elisha. It had been enough, if this had been the reason, to have thrown this dead body out of Elisha's sepulchre, and let it lie upon the ground.

Ver. 23.] None of these things which Elisha promised were accomplished while Hazael lived; but after his death, Joash the son of Jehoahaz (as it here follows) vanquished Ben-hadad the son of Hazael.

Ver. 23. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,] For whose sake he spared them, and would not let the oppression of the Syrians continue so long as to ruin them.

Neither cast he them from his presence as yet.] But allowed them a longer space for repentance.

Ver. 24.] The name of Ben-hadad had for a long time been common to the kings of Syria, and now was renewed in another family.

Ver. 25. Jehoash—took again out of the hand of Ben-hadad,—the cities, which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz] He took all the country on the other side of Jordan in the days of Jehu (x. 33); besides which he made further conquests on this side Jordan, in the days of Jehoahaz: whether Jehoash recovered all is not certain; but what his father lost, it is here said he regained.

Three times did Joash beat him.] It is not recorded where these three battles were fought; but the success of them was so great that he retook all that his father had lost.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Amaziah's good reign. 5 His justice on the murderers of his father. 7 His victory over Edom. 8 Amaziah, provoking Jehoash, is overcome and spoiled. 15 Jeroboam succeedeth Jehoash. 17 Amaziah slain by a conspiracy. 21 Azariah succeedeth him. 23 Jeroboam's wicked reign. 28 Zachariah succeedeth him.

1 In the second year of Joash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel reigned Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah.

2 He was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, yet not like David his father: he did according to all things as Joash his father did.

4 Howbeit the high places were not taken away: as yet the people did sacrifice and burnt incense on the high places.

5 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as the kingdom was confirmed in his hand, that he slew his servants which had slain the king his father.

6 But the children of the murderers he slew not: according unto that which is written in the book of the law of Moses, wherein the Lord commanded, saying, The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children be put to death for the fathers; but every man shall be put to death for his own sin.

7 He slew of Edom in the valley of salt ten thousand, and took Selah by war, and called the name of it Joktheel unto this day.

8 ¶ Then Amaziah sent messengers to Jehoash, the son of Jehoahaz son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, Come, let us look one another in the face.

9 And Jehoash the king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, The thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Leba-

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1.] This was, as Dr. Lightfoot observes, the thirty-eighth year of his father Joash king of Judah; three years current before his death. For his father had thrown himself into such a miserable condition by his apostacy, and his murder of Zachariah (xii. 17, 18), that he was become unfit to manage the kingdom (see Harm. of the Evang. Proleg. cap. 6).

Ver. 2.] Joash king of Israel reigned sixteen years (xiii. 10), therefore Amaziah reigned fourteen years while he lived, and after his death fifteen years; which make twenty-nine (see ver. 17).

Ver. 3.] For both of them in the beginning of their reigns did very well; but both in their latter end fell into idolatry. Both of them also, as Abarineli observes, condemned God's prophets, who spake to them in the name of the Lord.

Ver. 4.] Even in the best part of his reign, before he fell to idolatry, this license continued, which had been long practised against the law of God. In this he imitated his father (xii. 3).

Ver. 5.] He durst not venture upon this piece of justice presently, till he was well settled in his authority, and had divested those of all power who were the friends of those murderers. Who seem to have continued still at court, for they are called his servants.

Ver. 6.] In this he acted like a good man, and was not moved to cut off the children, contrary to law, for fear they should make a faction against him, and take revenge for their father's death.

Ver. 7. He slew of Edom] He alone, and the men of Judah, made the following slaughter: having, at the command of a prophet, abandoned the help of the Israelites, though he had purchased it with a great sum of money (2 Chron. xxv. 7—10); the Edomites had revolted from Judah in the days of Joram (viii. 10), and now Amaziah endeavours to reduce them.

In the valley of salt] A place mentioned 2 Sam. viii. 13, where see what I have observed concerning the reason of this name.

Ten thousand.] And he took as many captives (see 2 Chron. xxv. 12).

And took Selah by war.] The metropolis of Arabia Petrea; which took its name from hence: for Selah is the same with the word Petra, a rock; upon which the city stood. From this rock he seems to have thrown down the ten thousand whom he took alive, and broke in pieces, as is said in the forenamed place, 2 Chron. xxv. 12. Hagar signifies the same, as Bochartus observes, by which name the Arabians called it, from the rocky mountain which hung over this place, which St. Paul calls by the Arabic name Hogar.

Joktheel] Which name imports "obedience of God, or to God:" because, having taken it, he settled, as some imagine, the laws and statutes of Moses in this place; or rather, he acknowledged, by giving it this name, that the possession of this place was a reward of his obedience to the man of God, who required him to dismiss all the forces he had hired of the Israelites (2 Chron. xxv. 10).

Ver. 8.] Being flushed with his great victory over the Edomites, and incensed by the damages the Israelites had done him (2 Chron. xxv. 13) he sent this challenge to the king of Israel, saying, Let us set our armies in battle-array one against the other, and try our strength. Which some think he did only to try their military skill and prowess; not to revenge injuries, or to get his own again. Which, if he had intended, he would have assaulted the Israelites on a sudden; and not given them such a fair warning to stand upon their defence. But it is more probable, that, being encouraged, as I said, by his late victory, he resolved to be revenged for the slaughter of his ancestors by Jehu (ch. ix.), and for the late spoil the Israelites had made in his country (2 Chron. xxv. 10, 13); but he resolved to have satisfaction in a fair and honourable way, and not by surprise. And the words may be thus understood: "Either give me satisfaction, or let us try it out in a battle." It is probable, also, he might think of conquering the kingdom of Israel, if he did not satisfy him, and bring it back to the house of David: for so Jehoash understood him, as Josephus thinks, and the sequel shows.

Ver. 9. The thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar] He compares himself to a cedar, and Amaziah to a thistle; which is a poor shrub, not worthy of that name; but having drawn blood on some poor traveller, and sorely afflicted him (as Amaziah had done the Edomites), grew very proud, and would be no longer one of the shrubs, but equal to the most goodly trees.

non, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife : and there passed by a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

10 Thou hast indeed smitten Edom, and thy heart hath lifted thee up : glory of this, and tarry at home : for why shouldest thou meddle to thy hurt, that thou shouldest fall, even thou, and Judah with thee ?

11 But Amaziah would not hear. Therefore Jehoash king of Israel went up ; and he and Amaziah king of Judah looked one another in the face at Beth-shemesh, which belongeth to Judah.

12 And Judah was put to the worse before Israel ; and they fled every man to their tents.

13 And Jehoash king of Israel took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Jehoash the son of Ahaziah, at Beth-shemesh, and came to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from the gate of Ephraim unto the corner gate, four hundred cubits.

14 And he took all the gold and silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house, and hostages, and returned to Samaria.

15 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoash which he did, and his might, and how he fought with Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel ?

16 And Jehoash slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel ; and Jeroboam his son reigned in his stead.

17 ¶ And Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of Jehoash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel fifteen years.

18 And the rest of the acts of Amaziah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah ?

19 Now they made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem : and he fled to Lachish ; but they sent after him to Lachish, and slew him there.

20 And they brought him on horses : and he was buried at Jerusalem with his fathers in the city of David.

21 And all the people of Judah took Aza-

Ver. 14. And hostages.] The sons, I suppose, of the principal persons of the city, for a security that they would be quiet, and give him no disturbance.

Returned to Samaria.] For he had enough to do to defend himself from the Syrians ; and therefore did not intend a conquest of the kingdom of Judah, nor set a garrison in Jerusalem ; but contented himself with the spoil of it ; and perhaps made them tributaries to him. This was a heavy punishment upon Amaziah for going after other gods (2 Chron. xxv. 20).

Ver. 15.] There were many other things which happened in this war, as Abarbinel observes, besides these here compendiously related ; for which he refers to a record which was very well known in those days, but now is lost.

Ver. 17.] But in no great credit with his people ; for Rasi thinks he lived most of his time in Lachish, whither he was forced to fly (as it follows), by reason of a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem.

Ver. 18.] He mentions nothing of his might which he showed ; being a weak prince, who lost the reputation of his country.

Ver. 19. They made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem.] Their city having been exposed to reproach by the great breach made in their wall, and spoiled of its best ornaments, and some of their children carried away as hostages for their good behaviour, he became very odious to the great men of the city ; all this being brought upon them by his pride, and rashness, and apostacy from God (xxv. 27).

He fled to Lachish.] The conspiracy, it seems, grew so strong, that he could not resist it ; but was forced to seek for safety by flight, in a fortified city upon the borders of the Philistines.

They sent after him to Lachish, and slew him there.] They sent to have him privately murdered (as Josephus reports it), which some undertook and effected.

Ver. 20. They brought him on horses.] In a chariot. He was buried at Jerusalem.] They did him some honour when he was dead, though they hated him when he was alive.

Ver. 21. Azariah.] Called Uzziah in the next chapter, ver. 30. and in 2 Chron. xxvi. 1. Both signify the same thing ; one being as much as “ the help of God,” the other “ the strength of God.”

Give thy daughter to my son to wife.] Make an affinity with me, and let us be one kingdom. So some understand it, that Jehoash thought he would have him join his great kingdom, which was ten tribes, unto his poor one of two tribes ; that, being united, there should be but one king over them all ; and they should try their fortune in a pitched battle, which of them two should be the king. But this seems to be too much strained. He only intimates, that if he should desire a friendly alliance with him, he despised it as below him, as much as a thistle is below a cedar.

There passed by a wild beast—and trode down the thistle.] This represents how easily his soldiers (who are compared to wild beasts) would repress his insolence.

Ver. 10. Thy heart hath lifted thee up.] This hath made thee proud.

Glory of this, and tarry at home.] Be content with the honour thou hast won, and be quiet.

For why shouldest thou meddle to thy hurt.] He admonishes him to desist from this needless provocation of his neighbours ; which might end in his ruin.

Ver. 11. He and Amaziah—looked one another in the face.] Encountered one another in a fight.

At Beth-shemesh.] See 1 Sam. vi. 12.

Ver. 12.] So their houses were called, from their having no other habitations for a long time in the wilderness ; and in Canaan many continued in such dwellings. Josephus saith, the people of Judah did not strike a stroke ; but being possessed with a panic fear, when they saw a formidable army set in battle-array against them, ran away.

Ver. 13. Jehoash—took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Jehoash the son of Ahaziah.] I suppose his ancestors are mentioned to show that this was the greater disgrace to him ; being descended from a race of kings, which Jehoash was not.

Came to Jerusalem.] Bringing Amaziah with him ; and letting the inhabitants know (as Josephus saith) that he would slay him before their eyes, if they did not immediately open their gates unto him ; which was accordingly done.

Brake down the wall of Jerusalem.] That the city might lie open to his invasion, if they should break the conditions he imposed upon them.

riah, which was sixteen years old, and made him king instead of his father Amaziah.

22 He built Elath, and restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers.

23 ¶ In the fifteenth year of Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel began to reign in Samaria, and reigned forty and one years.

24 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

25 He restored the coast of Israel from the entering of Hamath unto the sea of the plain, according to the word of the LORD God of Israel, which he spake by the hand of his servant Jonah, the son of Amittai, the prophet, which was of Gath-hepher.

Made him king instead of his father Amaziah.] But this was twelve years after Amaziah's death; for he was made king in the twenty-seventh year of Jeroboam (see upon xv. 1), who began to reign in the fifteenth of Amaziah (ver. 23).

Ver. 22. He built Elath,] Repaired it.

Restored it to Judah.] It was a city belonging to Edom (Dent. ii. 8. 2 Chron. viii. 17), which king David, I suppose, took when he conquered this country; but in the days of Joram the Edomites revolted, and recovered Elath.

After that the king slept with his fathers.] It is a probable opinion of Abarbinel, that the king his father, after the great slaughter of the Edomites, mentioned in the foregoing chapter, took this place; but did not annex it to the kingdom of Judah, by reason of his succeeding troubles. Which Azariah did by building a wall about it, and fortifying it; whereby he secured the possession of it.

Ver. 23.] Which was much longer than any of the kings of Israel: Jehu himself, the first of his family, reigning but twenty-eight years, which was longer than any before him, as I observed, x. 36.

Ver. 24.] As he had the name, so he trod in the steps of him who first corrupted Israel with idolatry.

Ver. 25. He restored the coast of Israel] As Joash his father had restored many cities which Ben-hadad had taken; so Jeroboam restored a large territory which other kings had taken from them; viz. all the country from Libanus on the north, to the lake Asphatites on the south.

According to the word of the Lord God of Israel, which he spake by—Jonah,] The prophet Jonah encouraged them to this war, promising them success in it. Whose words are not here set down; but this place shows that God was very merciful to them, though a very wicked people, still in continuing prophets among them, when Elisha was dead. And this prophet, the Jews fancy, was the son of the woman 26 For the LORD saw the affliction of Israel, that it was very bitter: for there was not any shut up, nor any left, nor any helper for Israel.

27 And the LORD said not that he would blot out the name of Israel from under heaven: but he saved them by the hand of Jeroboam the son of Joash.

28 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, and all that he did, and his might, how he warred, and how he recovered Damascus, and Hamath, which belonged to Judah, for Israel, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

29 And Jeroboam slept with his fathers, even with the kings of Israel; and Zachariah his son reigned in his stead.

of Sarepta, whom Elijah raised from the dead. For which I cannot find they have any ground, but this poor conceit, that he is called the son of Amittai, i. e. of truth, say they: because his mother said to the prophet when he restored her son to her, "Now I know the word of God in thy mouth is truth" (1 Kings xvii. 24). But this is fully confuted from this single observation, that he is said to be of Gath-hepher, which was far from Sarepta, towards Tiberias in the tribe of Zebulun, as St. Jerome tells us.

Ver. 26. The Lord saw the affliction of Israel, that it was very bitter:] He showed them this favour, not for any goodness that was in them; but in compassion to their misery, which was greater than could be expressed.

For there was not any shut up, nor any left,] Men of all sorts were destroyed: or as some interpret it, they had lost all they had in their houses, and all that was in the field. But see of this phrase, 1 Kings xiv. 10. xxi. 21.

Nor any helper] None to relieve them, much less to deliver them.

Ver. 27.] But since the Lord had not yet decreed to root them out of their own land; therefore he saved them, even by this wicked prince, for the present, from their enemies; who would otherwise have made an utter end of them.

Ver. 28. For Israel,] Or rather by Israel, as Abarbinel expounds it; by the hand or power of Israel they were restored. For when David fought against the Syrians and brought them in subjection to him, he put garrisons into Damascus and Hamath (2 Sam. viii. 6, &c.). Which the Syrians afterward recovered when they rebelled against Judah: but Jeroboam possessed himself of them again, and by his valour made them as subject to Israel as they had been to Judah.

Ver. 29.] He was the third king of Israel of Jehu's race, and so might be said to sleep with his fathers of Israel.

CHAPTER XV.

1 Azariah's good reign. 5 He dying a leper, Jotham succeedeth. 8 Zachariah, the last of Jehu's generation, reigning ill, is slain by Shallum. 13 Shallum, reigning a month, is slain by Menahem. 16 Menahem strengtheneth himself by Pul. 21 Pekahiah succeedeth him. 23 Pekahiah is slain by Pekah. 27 Pekah is oppressed by Tiglath-pileser, and slain by Hoshea. 32 Jotham's good reign. 36 Aha's succeedeth him.

1 In the twenty and seventh year of Jeroboam king of Israel began Azariah son of Amaziah king of Judah to reign.

2 Sixteen years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned two and fifty years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jecholiah of Jerusalem.

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1.] Here is a great difficulty, in the solving of which interpreters much vary: for Amaziah the father of Azariah lived but fifteen years after the begin-
VOL. II.—54

3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father Amaziah had done;

4 Save that the high places were not removed: the people sacrificed and burnt incense still on the high places.

5 ¶ And the LORD smote the king, so that he was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a several house. And Jotham the king's son was over the house, judging the people of the land.

6 And the rest of the acts of Azariah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

7 So Azariah slept with his fathers; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David: and Jotham his son reigned in his stead.

ning of Jeroboam's reign (xiv. 17), therefore Azariah began his reign, not in the twenty-seventh, but in the beginning of the seventeenth of Jeroboam. Some think Jeroboam reigned with his father eleven years: others that there was an interregnum; that is, the throne was vacant eleven, or rather twelve years, between the death of Amaziah and the inauguration of Azariah. Dr. Lightfoot makes no doubt of the truth of this: that Azariah being but sixteen years old in the seven-and-twentieth of Jeroboam, he was but four years old at his father's death; and the throne being empty for eleven or twelve years, the government was managed by some of the grandees in his minority. But Ralbag will have these twenty-seven years of Jeroboam not to be those which were past, but those which were to come; and the meaning is, Azariah was made king when Jeroboam had yet twenty-seven years to reign; before the family of Jehu came to an end. For after this Jeroboam reigned twenty-six years, and his son six months; which make twenty-seven imperfect years. This Abarbinel thinks is the literal sense: but the other is more agreeable to the constant account of the reigns of other kings (see Mr. Whiston, in his late view of the Chronology of the Old Testament, p 91).

Ver. 2.] In which time, which was longer than any king of Judah or Israel reigned, he did many great things; which are recorded in 2 Chron. xxvi. from ver. 5 to 16.

Ver. 3.] He governed well in the former part of his reign, and was prospered by God (2 Chron. xxvi. 5); but offended in the latter end of it, as Amaziah his father had done.

Ver. 4.] Which was a common error (as I have often observed) which continued through the reign of the best of their kings, till the time of Hezekiah.

Ver. 5. The Lord smote the king, so that he was a leper—and dwelt in a several house. The cause of this stroke is related at large in 2 Chron. xxvi. 16, &c. And by a several house the Jews understand a house in the country, which was domus libera: where he might have liberty to take his pleasure, but not to meddle with public affairs.

Jotham—was over the house. Over the king's house, as it is in 2 Chron. xxvi. 23. That is, he lived in the palace, and managed all the affairs of the court, and of the kingdom. This was in the seven-and-twentieth year of Azariah, when he was smitten with the leprosy (as Rasi makes account), and he continued a leper twenty-five years, during which time Jotham took upon him the administration of the government, his father being incapable of it.

Ver. 7.] He was not buried in the very city

8 ¶ In the thirty and eighth year of Azariah king of Judah did Zachariah the son of Jeroboam reign over Israel in Samaria six months.

9 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as his fathers had done: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

10 And Shallum the son of Jabesh conspired against him, and smote him before the people, and slew him, and reigned in his stead.

11 And the rest of the acts of Zachariah, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

12 This was the word of the LORD which he spake unto Jehu, saying, Thy sons shall sit on the throne of Israel unto the fourth generation. And so it came to pass.

of David, but in the "field of the burial which belonged to the kings" (2 Chron. xxvi. 23). In which field, it is probable, the sepulchre of the kings was; wherein they would not bury Azariah, because he was a leper; but yet very near to the sepulchre, where his ancestors lay interred.

Ver. 8.] Some are confident the throne was vacant two-and-twenty years between the death of Jeroboam and the inauguration of his son; either through wars from abroad (which Jeroboam might have provoked against his house, by the conquest of Hamath and Damascus), or through war at home, which appears, they think, from this disastrous end of Zachariah, ver. 10 (see Dr. Lightfoot, in his Prolegomena to his Harmony of the Evangelists, sect. 6). But there are few that follow this opinion, though one most learned in these, as well as other things (Dr. Alix), thinks there was an interregnum of twenty-four years. If there be any difficulty in this account, most think it is sufficiently solved, by saying, that it was the thirty-eighth year, from the time that Azariah began to reign with his father.

Ver. 9.] Therefore God cut him off speedily; the time approaching, when he intended to put an end to the kingdom of Israel.

Ver. 10.] It is uncertain who this Shallum was, or what was the pretence of his conspiracy, and of his possessing himself of the throne; but it is pretty plain, I think, that he laid his treason privately and secret (ver. 15), and then made an open assault upon the king's person in the face of all the people.

Ver. 11.] We read of nothing that he did; therefore the meaning is, that his behaviour in the six months' time, wherein he reigned, how he managed things, and provoked this conspiracy, are recorded elsewhere; the author of this book intending only to give a brief account of the remaining kings of Israel.

Ver. 12.] How unfaithful soever they proved to God, he faithfully kept his promise which he made to Jehu: whose sons Jehoahaz, Jehoash, Jeroboam, and Zachariah, succeeded him in the throne of Israel. But this Shallum put an end to that family, and fulfilled the prophecy of Hosea, i. 4, "I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, and will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel." For though Jehu had a command from God to destroy the house of Ahab, yet he did it with such ill affections, and for such wrong ends, that God avenged that blood by this man, who slew Zachariah, and the rest of his posterity, if there were any: at least, he made the kingdom to cease in this family, and not long after in all Israel; who were rooted out, and never restored to their country, as Judah was.

13 ¶ Shallum the son of Jabesh began to reign in the nine and thirtieth year of Uzziah king of Judah; and he reigned a full month in Samaria.

14 For Menahem the son of Gadi went up from Tirzah, and came to Samaria, and smote Shallum the son of Jabesh in Samaria, and slew him, and reigned in his stead.

15 And the rest of the acts of Shalum, and his conspiracy which he made, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

16 ¶ Then Menahem smote Tiphseh, and all that were therein, and the coasts thereof from Tirzah: because they opened not to him, therefore he smote it; and all the women therein that were with child he ripped up.

17 In the nine and thirtieth year of Azariah king of Judah began Menahem the son of Gadi to reign over Israel, and reigned ten years in Samaria.

18 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord: he departed not all his days from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

Ver. 13.] We are not told how he reigned, but it is likely he followed the steps of Jeroboam, who made Israel to sin.

Ver. 14.] Josephus thinks Menahem was general of the army of Israel, which besieged Tirzah when Zachariah was slain: and he hearing what Shallum had done, came and served him in his kind, and made himself king.

Ver. 15.] A larger account was given of his conspiracy, and the occasion of it, and his success in it, in that book; where some other memorable acts, which it seems he did in a month's time were recorded.

Ver. 16. Menahem smote Tiphseh.] Some take this Tiphseh to be the same with that mentioned in 1 Kings iv. 24. But that lay upon the river Euphrates, whereas this was near to Tirzah; which was once the royal city of Israel: to the siege of which Josephus thinks Menahem returned after the slaughter of Shallum; not as general of the host, but as their king: but they knowing he had no title to the kingdom, would not open their gates to him. Therefore he took it by force, and spoiled it, and all the territory about it, until he came to Tiphseh, which he used more cruelly.

All the women therein that were with child he ripped up.] By which barbarity he thought to terrify the whole kingdom, that none might dare to withstand him.

Ver. 17.] He seems to have reigned with such fury that none durst oppose him; but he possessed the throne ten years before God cut him off.

Ver. 19. Pul the king of Assyria came against the land.] That is, the land of Israel. He was governor of Babylon, who, together with Arbaces the Mede, slew Sardanapalus, the last of the Assyrian kings, and translated the empire to the Chaldeans. For he reigned over Babylon and Nineveh, and Arbaces over the Medes and Persians. He was the first king of Assyria that invaded Israel, and began their transportation out of their own country; as Abarbanel gathers from 1 Chron. v. 26. And this is the first time that we find any mention of the kingdom of Assyria, since the days of Nimrod, who erected a small kingdom here (Gen. x. 11). And they were no great people, 19 And Pul the king of Assyria came against the land: and Menahem gave Pul a thousand talents of silver, that his hand might be with him to confirm the kingdom in his hand.

20 And Menahem exacted the money of Israel, even of all the mighty men of wealth, of each man fifty shekels of silver, to give to the king of Assyria. So the king of Assyria turned back, and stayed not there in the land.

21 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Menahem, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

22 And Menahem slept with his fathers; and Pekahiah his son reigned in his stead.

23 ¶ In the fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah Pekahiah the son of Menahem began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned two years.

24 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

25 But Pekah the son of Remaliah, a captain of his, conspired against him, and smote him in one would think, when the seventy-second psalm was penned, where they are reckoned as auxiliaries to the children of Lot, against the Israelites, together with other small nations; but now they had a great and powerful empire.

Menahem gave Pul a thousand talents of silver.] By this great present he not only turned away the army of Pul from him, but purchased his friendship; so that he helped to establish his authority. Which was very tottering, by reason he was not only a usurper, but had exercised extreme great cruelty upon his people, which no doubt made him extremely hated (ver. 10).

Ver. 20. Menahem exacted the money of Israel, even of all the mighty men of wealth, &c.] By this means, I suppose, he thought to ingratiate himself with the common people; upon whom he had laid no tax, but charged only the rich, according to the proportion of their wealth. For the Hebrew words do not import that he made every rich man in Israel pay fifty shekels; but that he gave to the king of Assyria so many shekels for every man; that is, for every one in his army. So they run exactly, "to give to the king of Assyria fifty shekels of silver for each man."

So the king of Assyria turned back.] At that time he departed; but it is likely he afterwards returned, in the reign of Pekah, and made the deportation before mentioned.

Ver. 21.] This shows him to have been a mighty man, that, notwithstanding his violence and cruelty, he left the kingdom in his family: which the two foregoing kings could not do. But it is evident, there was an interregnum of a year between the reign of Menahem and Pekahiah; for Pekahiah did not begin his reign till the fiftieth year of Azariah (as it here follows), and Menahem died the year before; for he began to reign in the thirty-ninth of Azariah (ver. 17) and reigned but ten years.

Ver. 23.] His reign was short; both because he himself was wicked, and his father also was an usurper.

Ver. 24.] He was the wicked son of a wicked father; and so perished (as it here follows) by such a conspiracy as his father made against Shallum.

Ver. 25. Argob and Arich.] These were two valiant men, who some think were in the conspiracy with him

Samaria, in the palace of the king's house, with Argob and Arieah, and with him fifty men of the Gileadites: and he killed him, and reigned in his room.

26 And the rest of the acts of Pekahiah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

27 ¶ In the two and fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah Pekah the son of Remaliah began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned twenty years.

28 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

29 In the days of Pekah king of Israel came Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and took Ijon, and Abel-beth-maachah, and Janoah, and Kedesh, against Pekahiah. But Abarinel rather thinks they were two eminent courtiers, who were always about the king.

With him fifty men of the Gileadites:] Who were his guards, and perhaps, assisted him in his treason.

He killed him, and reigned in his room.] He was a great commander under Pekahiah; for the Hebrew word shalish signifies more than a bare captain. Therefore Josephus calls him a chiliarch, or an officer over a thousand men. And the word carrying in it the notion of three, some later writers have therefore thought him to be the third person in the kingdom, next the king. No question he was some considerable person, who had soldiers at his command to execute his designs.

Ver. 27.] This is the fifth king that reigned over Israel during the reign of Azariah king of Judah.

Ver. 29. In the days of Pekah] In the last year of his reign, as the Jews say in Seder Olam Rabba.

Came Tiglath-pileser.] He was the son of Pul, and is called by other authors Phul, or Paul-assur, and here Tiglath-pul-assur: the former part of this name being taken from the river Tigris, which is called by the inhabitants Diglito; from whose borders this king came.

Ijon, and Abel-beth-maachah,] Two strong towns mentioned 1 Kings xv. 20 (see there).

Janoah,] A city in the tribe of Ephraim (see Josh. xvi. 6).

Kedesh, and Hazor,] Which were in the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. xii. 22. xix. 36).

Gilead,] Which was on the other side Jordan.

Galilee, all the land of Naphtali,] The upper Galilee; which was possessed by this tribe, and by Zebulun.

Carried them captive to Assyria,] This was the second deportation of the ten tribes; the first being made by Pul, as I said before, who carried away the two tribes and half beyond Jordan; and this second was made by his son, who carried away two other tribes: then, nine years after, followed a third, in the days of the next king (xviii. 9), when the remainder of the ten tribes were carried away from their own land. The tribe of Judah still remained; but about eight years after the former, part of that was carried away by Sennacherib, when he took all their fenced cities (xviii. 13), which, with respect to the whole country, the Jews called the fourth deportation. Then a fifth followed (xxiv. 15), and a sixth (xxv. 1, &c.); the last is mentioned xxv. 25. Thus they are reckoned up by Abarinel; and in this second (the Jews say, in Seder Olam Rabba) Tiglath-pileser carried and Hazor, and Gilead, and Galilee, all the land of Naphtali, and carried them captive to Assyria.

30 And Hoshea the son of Elah made a conspiracy against Pekah the son of Remaliah, and smote him, and slew him, and reigned in his stead, in the twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziah.

31 And the rest of the acts of Pekah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

32 ¶ In the second year of Pekah the son of Remaliah king of Israel began Jotham the son of Uzziah king of Judah to reign.

33 Five and twenty years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jerusha, the daughter of Zadok.

away the golden calf which was in Dan. But see a more exact account of Judah's captivity in Mr. Whiston's learned Chronology of the Old Testament, p. 52.

Ver. 30. Hoshea—made a conspiracy against Pekah] Who Hoshea was, or what was the ground of his conspiracy, is not recorded; but we may suppose it to have been because he governed ill, and, by his cruel war with Judah, had brought the king of Assyria upon his own kingdom (2 Chron. xxviii. 16) and thereby lost a great part of it.

Slew him,] As Pekah had served Pekahiah.

And reigned in his stead, in the twentieth year of Jotham] These words create a difficulty; for it is said, ver. 33, that Jotham reigned but sixteen years. Which Seder Olam Rabba thus reconciles (for none can think any writer whatsoever would so soon contradict himself), that this conspiracy was begun in the latter end of Jotham's reign, but not put in execution till four years after his death. So that these words are to be understood as if he had said, "Twenty years after Jotham began to reign over Judah Pekah was slain." Dr. Lightfoot gives another account of it; that the wickedness of Ahaz was so great, that the holy writer would not mention him on this occasion, but rather speaks of his good father, as if he were yet alive, in which he follows R. Solomon Jarchi. But this hath no show of truth in it; since so much is said of Ahaz in the following part of this history. A late very learned writer (in his short view of the Chronology of the Old Testament, p. 47) hath given a better account of it, in these words: "Because there had been yet no mention made of Ahaz's reign, therefore the old epocha of his predecessor Jotham is still made use of." But the plain truth is, that Jotham reigned four years with his father Azariah.

Ver. 31.] In that book which is now called by the name of Chronicles his war with Judah is recorded (2 Chron. xxviii.).

Ver. 32.] Why he should be all along called Azariah, and here only Uzziah, and ver. 34, no account can be given; unless it were to show he had two names, as I have observed, 2 Chron. xxvi. 1. And it appears by the book of Chronicles, that Uzziah was as much used when that book was written as the other.

Ver. 33. Five and twenty years old was he when he began to reign.] Alone by himself; for he reigned some time with his father during his leprosy (see Dr. Lightfoot in his Prolegom. to the Harm. of the Evang. sect. 6).

His mother's name was Jerusha, the daughter of Zadok.] It is not said of what place, as is usual: this 34 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD : he did according to all that his father Uziah had done.

35 ¶ Howbeit the high places were not removed : the people sacrificed and burned incense still in the high places. He built the higher gate of the house of the LORD.

36 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jotham, and Zadok being so well known, that there was no need to set down his dwelling.

Ver. 34. He did that which was right] Οὐδεὶς αὖτε τῆς ἀρετῆς he wanted no virtue belonging to a good prince, as Josephus writes (lib. ix. Antiq. cap. 11), being (saith he) "pious towards God, just towards men, and studious of the public good."

He did according to all that his father Uziah had done. That is, according to all the good he had done; but did not imitate him in invading the priests' office.

all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

37 In those days the LORD began to send against Judah Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the son of Remaliah.

38 And Jotham slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father : and Ahaz his son reigned in his stead

Ver. 35. He built the higher gate of the house of the Lord.] Which was between the house of the king and the house of the Lord (xviii. 20). It was built by Solomon; but this king added a noble structure to it.

Ver. 36.] See 2 Chron. xxvii.

Ver. 37.] These two kings entered into a confederacy against Judah, and made preparations for war before Jotham died; but he was so happy as to be laid in his grave in peace; their design being not executed until the reign of the next king.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Ahaz's wicked reign. 5 Ahaz, assailed by Rezin and Pekah, hireth Tiglath-pileser against them. 10 Ahaz, sending a pattern of an altar from Damascus to Uryah, diverteth the brazen altar to his own devotion. 17 He spoileth the temple. 19 Hezekiah succeedeth him.

1 In the seventeenth year of Pekah the son of Remaliah Ahaz the son of Jotham king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem, and did not that which was right in the sight of the LORD his God, like David his father.

3 But he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, yea, and made his son to pass through the fire, according to the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out from before the children of Israel.

4 And he sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 ¶ Then Rezin king of Syria and Pekah son of Remaliah king of Israel came up to Jerusalem to war : and they besieged Ahaz, but could not overcome him.

6 At that time Rezin king of Syria recovered Elath to Syria, and drave the Jews from Elath : and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt there unto this day.

7 So Ahaz sent messengers to Tiglath-pileser

CHAP. XVI.

Ver. 2. Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign.] He was a little more than twenty years old (see upon xviii. 2).

And did not that which was right] As might have been expected from the good education which, no doubt, so pious a man as Jotham his father gave him; who left him an excellent example.

Ver. 3.] He was far worse than any of the preceding kings of Israel; for he imitated those abominable idolaters whom God rooted out of the land of Canaan: who it is most certain sometimes burnt their children in the fire, as sacrifices to their gods (Deut. xii. 31), and the children of Israel it is as certain imitated them (Ezek. xvi. 20, 21. xxxiii. 37. 39). But whether Ahaz did that, or only made his son pass through the fire by way of lustration (as they called it), cannot be determined. It is no argument that he did not offer him as a burnt-sacrifice, because Hezekiah outlived him; for he had more sons, it is likely, than him. See, concerning this horrible impiety, what I have noted upon Lev. xviii. 21 and upon Deut. xviii. 10.

Ver. 4.] He added this to all his other sins (of consecrating his son to Moloch by passing him through the fire, if not offering him in sacrifice), that he himself sacrificed in high places, and on hills, and under every green tree; by his example encouraging this practice, which other kings had only tolerated. So we read, that people sacrificed in high places even in good kings' reigns, xii. 3. xiv. 4. xv. 4, &c. but as they sacrificed to God in those reigns, so we never read till now that any of those kings sacrificed there themselves, as this king did; who not merely suffered this, but gave countenance to it by his own practice, and thereby strengthened this license of private sacrificing, contrary to the law of God; and, which was worst of all, sacrificing to other gods: it being very probable that he fancied some deity to inhabit under every well-spread flourishing tree.

Ver. 5.] This seems not to agree with 2 Chron. xxviii. 5, &c. where these two princes are represented as getting great victories over him. To which Abarbinel answers, that these things happened at different times. For the wars mentioned in the book of Chronicles were made severally by these two kings, wherein they prospered, being the ministers of divine providence. But when now they joined their forces together, and not only came against other cities, but against Jerusalem, God was pleased to make them miscarry.

Ver. 6. At that time Rezin] When he broke up the siege of Jerusalem, upon intelligence he received that Tiglath-pileser was coming to its relief.

Recovered Elath to Syria,] This was a considerable port upon the Red sea.

king of Assyria, saying, I am thy servant and thy son: come up, and save me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Israel, which rise up against me.

8 And Ahaz took the silver and gold that was found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house, and sent it for a present to the king of Assyria.

9 And the king of Assyria hearkened unto him: for the king of Assyria went up against Damascus, and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Rezin.

10 ¶ And king Ahaz went to Damascus to meet Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and saw an altar that was at Damascus: and king Ahaz sent to Urijah the priest the fashion of the altar, and the pattern of it, according to all the workmanship thereof.

Drave the Jews from Elath:] This city had been recovered to the dominion of Judah by Azariah (xiv. 22), who took it from the Syrians; who now took it from them again, that they might not quite lose the fruit of their expedition against Jerusalem.

Ver. 7. Tiglath-pileser] There is a learned man of our own, who hath lately given another account of the name of Pileser, than that above mentioned (xv. 29). For he thinks it is compounded of the names of two of their gods, Fil being the same with Bel, and Azer or Azar was the name of a planet worshipped by the Persians, viz. Mars: and they much affected to have the names of their gods in their own names; which was a common thing also among the Jews: for which reason the name of Tiglath was added, which was the name of Tigris (as I observed before), which, as all great beneficial rivers, mountains, and trees, was accounted sacred among the heathen (see Dr. Hyde, Histor. Relig. Vet. Persar. cap. 3).

I am thy servant and thy son:] He not only put himself and all he had into his protection, but made himself his subject, to hold all he had of him by his favour. For that is the meaning of "I am thy servant and thy son;" that is, he was content to be his vassal, if he would be his protector.

Ver. 8.] These treasures had been sent some years ago by Jehoash to the king of Syria (xii. 18); but it seems they were well replenished again by the piety of his successors, Amaziah, Azariah, but especially Jotham.

Ver. 9. The king of Assyria hearkened unto him:] It is very uncertain when king Ahaz sent to desire this help. If it was when they were preparing to besiege Jerusalem, it was the effect of his great infidelity; for God had been so gracious to him, as to promise by the prophet Isaiah that those kings should do him no hurt (Isa. vii. 4), giving him a sign also to strengthen his faith. Others think it was after the king of Syria and the king of Israel had miserably harassed Ahaz's country, though they could not take Jerusalem, as we read 2 Chron. xxviii. 5, 6, &c. Whosoever it was, the king of Assyria gave a powerful diversion to the king of Syria, invading his country, and besieging the chief city of it, of which he made himself master.

Carried the people of it captive to Kir:] A place in the country of the upper Media, as Josephus tell us, from whence he brought some people to plant in Damascus.

Slew Rezin:] Who was the last of their kings; for the Syrians never got up again, as the Jews observe 11 And Urijah the priest built an altar according to all that king Ahaz had sent from Damascus: so Urijah the priest made it against king Ahaz came from Damascus.

12 And when the king was come from Damascus, the king saw the altar: and the king approached to the altar, and offered thereon.

13 And he burnt his burnt offering and his meat offering, and poured his drink offering, and sprinkled the blood of his peace offerings, upon the altar.

14 And he brought also the brazen altar, which was before the LORD, from the forefront of the house, from between the altar and the house of the LORD, and put it on the north side of the altar.

15 And king Ahaz commanded Urijah the priest, saying, Upon the great altar burn the in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 20. Whether he was legal successor to Ben-hadad the son of Hazael, or an usurper, is not certain.

Ver. 10. Ahaz went to Damascus to meet Tiglath-pileser] To compliment him upon his success; and perhaps to do him homage, and to request him to do as much against Pekah as he had done against Rezin. For some think that after this he went and took all those places from Israel which are mentioned in the foregoing chapter, ver. 29. And after all he fell upon Judah itself, and made great spoil there also, as is suggested in 2 Chron. xxviii. 20, 21.

Saw an altar that was at Damascus:] A beautiful altar both for the matter and form of it.

Ahaz sent to Urijah the priest the fashion of the altar:] Not only the height, and breadth, and shape of it: but all the carvings, I suppose, with the figures and images wherewith it was adorned.

Ver. 11.] He took care to have it done exactly according to the pattern; directly contrary to the command of God, who had appointed what kind of altar he would have (Exod. xxvii. 1, 2, &c.), and that no other should be made of any matter or figure whatsoever. But there are always some men to be found, that will comply with the most wicked commands.

Ver. 12. The king saw the altar:] That is, liked it, and approved of it, as made perfectly agreeable to his mind.

Offered thereon:] The morning sacrifice: which he was so presumptuous, perhaps, as to offer himself. But not to God; for we are told expressly, 2 Chron. xxviii. 23, that he sacrificed to the gods of Damascus. A wonderful blindness! to worship those gods, and expect help from them, who could not preserve their own country from ruin.

Ver. 13. He burnt his burnt offering] Some understand it that he burnt it with spices.

And his meat offering, &c.] These were all prescribed by the law of Moses: but he offered them in a wrong place, and unto other gods.

Ver. 14.] By these words, it is plain that Urijah had little more modesty than Ahaz: for he had placed Ahaz's altar behind the altar of the Lord, between it and the east gate of the court of the priests. But when Ahaz came, he removed Solomon's altar out of its place, which was before the sanctuary, and set it towards the north side of the court; that he might bring up his own, and set it there, where the altar of the Lord had stood (see Dr. Lightfoot of the temple, chap. 34, latter end).

Ver. 15. Upon the great altar] Which he had now morning burnt offering, and the evening meat offering, and the king's burnt sacrifice, and his meat offering, with the burnt offering of all the people of the land, and their meat offering, and their drink offerings; and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt offering, and all the blood of the sacrifice: and the brazen altar shall be for me to inquire by.

16 Thus did Urijah the priest, according to all that king Ahaz commanded.

17 ¶ And king Ahaz cut off the borders of the bases, and removed the laver from off them; and took down the sea from off the brazen oxen that were under it, and put it upon a pavement of stones.

18 And the covert for the sabbath that they had built in the house, and the king's entry without, turned he from the house of the Lord for the king of Assyria.

19 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Ahaz which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

20 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

erected in the place of God's altar. He makes a solemn injunction, that all the public sacrifices, of what sort soever they were, whether made by himself or by the people, should be constantly offered upon his altar. Which he calls the great altar, because it was much bigger, I suppose, than the altar of God.

The brazen altar shall be for me to inquire by.] He would not have it thought that he intended wholly to lay aside the altar made by Solomon; but rather to do it great honour, by reserving it for his own private use, when he pleased to inquire of God by it. But there being no mention of the name of the Lord, some think the meaning is no more but that he would have it stand where he did set it, till he considered what to do with it: and they fancy that he made the famous dial of Ahaz with the brass of it. So they understand the Hebrew words li lebaker—I will take care of it, and order what shall be done with it. And therefore, according to this interpretation, he laid it quite aside. But the other seems more agreeable to the Hebrew phrase, "it shall be to me to inquire, or seek, or pray:" a private altar for his proper use; whereby he pretended to have still some regard to it, though he had degraded it.

Ver. 16.] Whatsoever good inclinations he had, they were all overruled by the commands of the king, with which he entirely complied.

Ver. 17. Borders of the bases,] See 1 Kings vii. 28, 29.

And removed the laver from off them, &c.] This was done out of contempt, that the sea might not appear so great and stately, nor be so useful to the priests as it was before. For he intended quite to abolish, not only to deface, the service of God at the temple. So we read in 2 Chron. xxviii. 24, that he "shut up the doors of the house of God," that none should worship there.

Ver. 18. And the covert for the sabbath] There is a vast variety of opinions concerning this musach (which we translate covert), and why it is called the covert for the sabbath. The most probable is, that it was a covered place, where the king sat in the porch of the temple, or at the entrance of it, upon the sabbath, or other great solemnities which were called by that name. Thus Procopius Gazæus: This Ahaz took away, intending not to trouble himself to come to the temple, but to sacrifice any where; in every corner of Jerusalem, and in the several cities of Judah, which he would have been thought as holy as Jerusalem (2 Chron. xxviii. 24, 25). And it is a probable conjecture of a very learned man of our own, that Ahaz did this to express his hatred and contempt of the sabbath: for the worship of idols and violation of the sabbath are frequently joined together in scripture, especially in Ezek. xx. 16, xxii. 8, 9. xxiv. 37, 38, and in a remarkable place in the Maccabees, i. 44 (see Spencer, De Leg. Hebræor. lib. i. cap. 12).

The king's entry without, turned he from the house of the Lord] The passage through which the king came from his own house to the temple, he turned another way.

For the king of Assyria.] That he might ingratiate himself with him, by contemning his own country religion, and approaching nearer to his. But Procopius takes it the quite contrary way; that he did this "for fear of the king of Assyria." Which moved him to make a shorter passage into the house of the Lord, that he might flee thither instantly for safety, in case of any danger: which is not probable, because he profaned it, and shut up the doors of it.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Hoshea's wicked reign. 3 Being subdued by Shulmaneser, he conspireth against him with So king of Egypt. 5 Samaria for their sins is captivated. 24 The strange nations, which were transplanted in Samaria, being plagued with lions, make a mixture of religions.

1 In the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah began Hoshea the son of Elah to reign in Samaria over Israel nine years.

CHAP. XVII.

Ver. 1. In the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah began Hoshea the son of Elah to reign] This doth not agree with xv. 30, where it is said he began to reign in the twentieth year of Jotham, which was the fourth of Ahaz. To this Rabbag thinks it is sufficient to say, that till the twelfth year of Ahaz he was but a servant of the king of Assyria; nor was reputed a king, but only a governor under him. And so Abarinel. And 2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, but not as the kings of Israel that were before him.

it is no improbable conjecture of Dr. Lightfoot's that Ahaz gave him a great deal of trouble after the death of Pekah, in revenge of the slaughter he had made in Judah: so that he kept Hoshea out of the throne a great while, and upon this account is called the king of Israel (2 Chron. xxviii. 19), as well as because he walked in the ways of those kings. Our learned chronologer Mr. Whiston thinks there was an interregnum, for the space of full twelve years, from the death of Jeroboam the second. Which he takes to 3 ¶ Against him came up Shalmaneser king of Assyria; and Hoshea became his servant, and gave him presents.

4 And the king of Assyria found conspiracy in Hoshea: for he had sent messengers to So king of Egypt, and brought no present to the king of Assyria, as he had done year by year: therefore the king of Assyria shut him up, and bound him in prison.

5 ¶ Then the king of Assyria came up throughout all the land, and went up to Samaria, and besieged it three years.

6 ¶ In the ninth year of Hoshea the king of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes.

be most probable, and almost certain, from those words of Hosea, who prophesied in that king's time: "Now (or ere long) they shall say, We have no king, because we feared not the Lord; what then should a king do to us?" Hos. x. 3 (see his short View of the Chronology of the Old Testament, p. 48).

To reign in Samaria over Israel nine years.] viz. After his peaceable possession of the throne: for, from the time that he pretended to it, upon the slaughter of Pekah, he reigned seventeen or eighteen years; viz. twelve in the time of Ahaz, who reigned sixteen years, and six in the time of Hezekiah (xviii. 10).

Ver. 2.] For he did not hinder his people from going to worship at Jerusalem: but, as the Hebrew doctors say, took away the guard that Jeroboam set in the passage, to keep men from going to the solemn feasts there. And one of the golden calves being carried away captive, his devotion, it is likely, was not great for the other remaining. And yet, notwithstanding, God exterminated Israel in his days: to show (saith Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 22), that it was not merely for the sake of their kings, upon whom the Israelites cast all the blame of their depravation, that they were carried captive (see ver. 17—19, &c.).

Ver. 3. Against him came up Shalmaneser.] Some take this to be but another name for Tiglath-pileser. For which I find no ground, and rather think Shalmaneser was his son, and successor in the kingdom of Assyria.

Hoshea became his servant, and gave him presents.] Made himself a tributary to him; and presented him with gifts in token of his subjection to him, and as an earnest of his future obedience.

Ver. 4. The king of Assyria found conspiracy in Hoshea: for he had sent messengers to So king of Egypt, and brought no present.] He designed to shake off his yoke, and be no longer his subject, as he found by two undeniable evidences. First, that he had sent to treat with the king of Egypt; and, secondly, had denied him the usual tribute, which he was bound to pay him every year. St. Jerome calls this king of Egypt Sua, and Josephus calls him Soan, and the LXX. Segor, who is the same with the famous Sabacon, an Ethiopian mentioned by Diodorus Siculus and Herodotus (see Sir J. Marsham, Can. Chron. sect. 16, and our famous Usher, in his Annals, vid. A. 3989).

The king of Assyria shut him up,] He first besieged Samaria, and when he had taken it made him a close prisoner: the history of which follows.

Ver. 5. Then the king of Assyria came up throughout all the land,] He first possessed himself of the country of Moab (as the same great primate observes), that he might leave no enemies at his back; and destroyed their two chief cities, Ar and Kir-hares, 7 For so it was, that the children of Israel had sinned against the Lord their God, which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and had feared other gods.

8 And walked in the statutes of the heathen, whom the Lord cast out from before the children of Israel, and of the kings of Israel, which they had made.

9 And the children of Israel did secretly those things that were not right against the Lord their God, and they built them high places in all their cities, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

10 And they set them up images and groves in every high hill, and under every green tree:

11 And there they burnt incense in all the

according to the prediction of Isaiah, xvi. ver. 1, and the last: and then he invaded the kingdom of Israel, and possessed himself of it.

And went up to Samaria, and besieged it three years.] Josephus rightly observes two expeditions of this king against the land of Israel: first, when he made Hoshea tributary to him; and now, when he made himself master of the whole country, and besieged the capital city (lib. ix. Antiq. cap. 13).

Ver. 6.] There is no reason that any should imagine these Israelites were carried into Colchis, Iberia, Armenia the less, and the farthest Scythia, when the scripture saith so expressly that they were carried into Assyria, and the cities of the Medes: and when the very places are to be found into which they are said here to be carried in those countries, viz. Chalach, and Chabor, and Gozan; for what was Chalach (as Bochartus observes) but Ptolemy's Chalachena, or the north of Assyria? and Chabor is plainly enough the same with his Χαβρα, a mountain between Media and Assyria. Between which mountain and the Caspian sea there is the city Gauzania, that is Gozan, between the two channels of the river Cyrus.

And in the cities of the Medes.] Whither Tiglath-pileser had carried others of them out of Galilee.

Ver. 7.] This they had done a long time: for, from the beginning of Jeroboam's schism to the carrying Israel captive was two hundred and sixty-three years.

Ver. 8. And walked in the statutes of the heathen,] Of the Amorites and other impious people, whom he expelled from the land of Canaan to make room for them.

And of the kings of Israel, which they had made.] viz. The golden calves, whose worship the kings of Israel had ordained, to keep them from going up to worship God at Jerusalem.

Ver. 9. The children of Israel did secretly those things that were not right] Besides the public impiety authorized by their kings, they privately exercised idolatry, according to their own fancy.

They built them high places in all their cities,] They were not content to worship upon hills and mountains, but they raised high places in all cities to offer sacrifice.

From the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.] In all those places, both those that were desert, and those that were inhabited; or both in the country and in the city. For the towers of the watchmen are thought to be those little houses which the country people built, wherein to watch their flocks and their fruits, and preserve them from wild beasts or robbers.

Ver. 10. They set them up images and groves] The high places, as did the heathen whom the LORD carried away before them; and wrought wicked things to provoke the LORD to anger:

12 For they served idols, whereof the LORD had said unto them, ye shall not do this thing.

13 Yet the LORD testified against Israel, and against Judah, by all the prophets, and by all the seers, saying, Turn ye from your evil ways, and keep my commandments and my statutes, according to all the law which I commanded your fathers, and which I sent to you by my servants the prophets.

14 Notwithstanding they would not hear, but hardened their necks, like to the neck of their fathers, that did not believe in the LORD their God.

15 And they rejected his statutes, and his covenant that he made with their fathers, and his testimonies which he testified against them; and they followed vanity, and became vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them,

Hebrew word asherim, which we translate groves, should be rendered idols of that name, as Selden hath observed, Syntag. De Diis Syris, ii. cap. 2; where he plainly demonstrates this word doth not signify the grove, but the numen or deity placed in the grove. For how should groves "be set under every green tree?" as it is here said the asherim were. And thus Kimchi saith in the root ashur, that every wooden thing that was worshipped was called asherah. And Procopius Gazæus observes, that this word, which the LXX. here translate ἄσκη, groves, others everywhere translate Ἀστάρω, which word, saith he, δρακοὶ τὴν Ἀστάρτην, Ἀφροδίτην, denotes Astarte, that is, Venus.

Ver. 11. They they burnt incense, &c.] For as the son of Sirach expresses it, "they sought out all wickedness, till the vengeance came upon them" (see Ecclus. xlvii. ult).

Ver. 12. For they served idols.] They worshipped many other gods, which were mere idols, against the express command of God (Exod. xx. 23. Deut. iv. 15, 16, &c.).

Ver. 13. The Lord testified—by all the prophets, and by all the seers.] I have before noted, that Abarbinel, in his commentary on these books, hath observed that one or more prophets were in every king's reign, both in Israel and Judah, from the time of Saul to Zedekiah, in whose time Jerusalem was laid desolate. These admonished them of their duty, as it here follows, and endeavoured to preserve them in God's true religion, or to recover them when they apostatized from it; particularly in the days of this very king, when Israel was carried captive, they had the prophets Hosea, Amos, Isaiah, and Micah: and in the days of the last king when Judah was carried captive, they had Jeremiah and Ezekiel. As he had given them his laws by Moses; so he continued a succession of prophets after him, whom he sent to call upon them to observe these laws.

Ver. 14. Hardened their necks.] A metaphor taken from refractory oxen, that will not bow down their necks to the yoke. Even so the Israelites refused to submit to the yoke of God's laws.

Did not believe] This was the original of all the sins they committed: they did not believe God's prophets, but hearkened to deceivers.

Ver. 15.] By his servants the prophets.
Vanity.] So idols are called, which, as the apostle concerning whom the LORD had charged them, that they should not do like them.

16 And they left all the commandments of the LORD their God, and made them molten images, even two calves, and made a grove, and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served Baal.

17 And they caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire, and used divination and enchantments, and sold themselves to do evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

18 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight: there was none left but the tribe of Judah only.

19 Also Judah kept not the commandments of the LORD their God, but walked in the statutes of Israel which they made.

20 And the LORD rejected all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of spoilers, until he had cast them out of his sight.

speaks, are nothing; having no power to do either hurt or good.

Became vain.] Like the idols they worshipped; senseless, sottish, and good for nothing.

Went after the heathen, &c.] See Exod. xxiii. 24. 32, and many other places.

Ver. 16. And made a grove.] The making a grove was a greater impiety than is commonly imagined. For in their groves they worshipped Baalim, as appears from Judg. iii. 7; that is, heroes, to whom those groves were consecrated, being their sepulchre. And here many filthy rites were practised, in honour of Venus, Bacchus, and such-like deities.

Worshipped all the host of heaven, and served Baal.] They grew worse and worse, not contenting themselves with the worship of the two calves, &c. but worshipped the stars of heaven (against which Moses had given them a particular caution, Deut. iv. 19), Saturn, Jupiter, Venus, and the moon, but especially Baal, which was the sun.

Ver. 17. To pass through the fire, and used divination and enchantments.] Which were the most abominable sins of the heathen (see Lev. xviii. 21. xix. 26. xx. 2, 3, &c. Deut. xviii. 10, and upon ver. 3, of the foregoing chapter).

Sold themselves to do evil.] They were so industrious to do wickedly, and so incessant in it, as if they had been slaves that were sold to that drudgery.

Ver. 18. Removed them.] From the holy land, where his temple was, in which he dwelt among them.

There was none left but—Judah.] Unto whom adhered part of Benjamin and the Levites; who, as it here follows, imitated the wickedness of Israel; but yet had some mixture of good kings among them. Whereas all the kings of Israel persisted in the sins of Jeroboam; and therefore, before their removal out of their land, they suffered great calamities, no less than nine of their kings being killed (as Abarbinel notes) before their last king was carried captive.

Ver. 19. Also Judah—walked in the statutes of Israel.] Followed the idolatrous devices of the ten tribes; as they did most notoriously in the last reign of Ahaz: whose son Hezekiah indeed made a noble reformation; but it lasted no longer than his time, so extremely was this nation corrupted.

Ver. 20. The Lord rejected.] With loathing and abhorrence, as the word imports.

21 For he rent Israel from the house of David ; and they made Jeroboam the son of Nebat king : and Jeroboam drave Israel from following the Lord, and made them sin a great sin.

22 For the children of Israel walked in all the sins of Jeroboam which he did ; they departed not from them.

23 Until the Lord removed Israel out of his sight, as he had said by all his servants the prophets. So was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day.

24 ¶ And the king of Assyria brought men from Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from Ava, and from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria instead of the children of Israel : and they possessed Samaria, and dwelt in the cities thereof.

All the seed of Israel, &c.] The whole ten tribes. See x. 32, 33. xiii. 3. 7.

Ver. 21. For he rent Israel from the house of David ;] Here was the foundation of their ruin.

Jeroboam—made them sin a great sin.] Of which he was the author ; but they were too forward to comply with him.

Ver. 22.] They were so inclined to idolatry, that a long succession of God's judgments upon them could not reclaim them.

Ver. 23. Until the Lord removed Israel out of his sight,] Unto whose admonitions and threatenings they had no regard.

So was Israel carried away—to Assyria] As they "sold themselves to do evil" (ver. 17), so God delivered them up to be slaves to those whose gods they had worshipped (ver. 16, 17).

Ver. 24. The king of Assyria brought men] This was not done by Shalmaneser, but by his son Esarhaddon (Ezra iv. 2).

From Babylon,] Which was then subject to the king of Assyria ; but not long after revolted.

Cuthah,] A city of Chaldaea, as Abarinel expounds it ; and so doth our Dr. Hyde out of several Persian writers (Hist. Relig. Vet. Pers. cap. 2). But it rather here signifies a country called Cush also (which perhaps, had its name from the forenamed city), from whence the greatest part of this colony being brought, the people in aftertimes were called Cuthæi. For the same author truly observes, that the country called Cush was, in the Babylonish dialect (afterward called the Chaldean), called Cuth. For they were wont to change the letter shin into thau. In this country, in the land of Shinar, Cush first settled ; and his posterity spread itself into Arabia.

Ava,] The Avites were a very ancient people, who were driven by the Caphtorim out of Hazerim ; and went and settled beyond Euphrates (see upon Deut. ii. 23).

Hamath,] This was a city of Syria, on the borders of Canaan ; which was now subject to the king of Assyria, by a late conquest of it (xvi. 9).

Sepharvaim,] There is a city called Siphara, on the side of which the river Euphrates runs, not far from the sea. From this mixture of nations it was, that afterward there happened such a confusion of laws, and manners, and rites of religion, as was in this country.

They possessed Samaria,] That is, the whole country, wherein the ten tribes formerly dwelt.

Dwelt in the cities thereof,] Which were not destroyed, I suppose, but left standing, with a design to send new inhabitants into them.

25 And so it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, that they feared not the Lord : therefore the Lord sent lions among them, which slew some of them.

26 Wherefore they spake to the king of Assyria, saying, The nations which thou hast removed, and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land : therefore he hath sent lions among them, and, behold, they slay them, because they know not the manner of the God of the land.

27 Then the king of Assyria commanded, saying, Carry thither one of the priests whom ye brought from thence ; and let them go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land.

28 Then one of the priests whom they had car-

Ver. 25.] And did not the Israelites also want the fear of the Lord, as Abarinel here notes, and yet were not devoured by lions ! To which he answers, that though the Israelites also served idols, yet they did not deny the divine power and providence ; but imagined these idols to be the intermediate causes by which the divine influences might be conveyed unto them : for it is plain Jeroboam did not deny the Lord (1 Kings xiii. 6), but acknowledged his power. But these new inhabitants believed the idols which they worshipped to be true gods ; and therefore were destroyed by lions, because they did not acknowledge the power and providence of God over all inferior beings, whose land this was ; and hereby he vindicated his ancient inheritance and possession to himself.

Ver. 26.] They took the God of Israel to be of the same kind with their own, who affected a particular country and people, and would be honoured with peculiar rites, which were acceptable to him, and none else. The Syrians had the same conceit of topical gods, as I observed upon 1 Kings xx. 23, and see below, xviii. 35.

Ver. 27.] The Jews in Pirke Eliezer, cap. 38, tell the story thus : that the king of Assyria called the elders of Israel together, and said, All the while you dwelt in the land of Samaria, it was not infested with lions ; what is the reason that my people are devoured by them ? To which they answered, Our lord the king, this land will not receive any uncircumcised nation. Let two of you go then (replied the king) and circumcise them, and teach them the book of the law. So R. Dosithæus and R. Zachariah were sent, who did the business. Here they make bold to go beyond the scripture, in making two great doctors to have been sent, when there was but one. Though it is very probable there were some associates who accompanied this principal priest : for the text saith, when the king bade them "carry one of the priests" thither, he added, and let them dwell there. Which signifies he did not go alone : though he alone was to teach them, as it follows "the manner of the God of the land."

Ver. 28. One of the priests—taught them how they should fear the Lord,] That is, how they should worship and serve him. From whence many learned men conclude, that he brought the book of the law with him, without which he could not fully instruct them how to worship God, and govern themselves : which book they supposed was written in the Babylonish character, because it was to teach a colony of that nation. This is opposed by a late learned man, who earnestly contends, that the book of the law was not brought to them till the time of Sanballat ; and ried away from Samaria came and dwelt in Bethel, and taught them how they should fear the Lord.

29 Howbeit every nation made gods of their own, and put them in the houses of the high places which the Samaritans had made, every nation in their cities wherein they dwelt.

30 And the men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth, and the men of Cuth made Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Ashima, therefore this priest instructed them without the book, only by tradition. Which is not probable; for they would have had little regard to him, if he had not produced the authority of that holy book, delivered to them by that great lawgiver Moses, the man of God: for, that he taught them the right way of worshipping God according to the law, as it was practised in Judah, is very likely; being sensible that God abhorred the other worship which Israel practised; for which he had thrown them out of their land.

Ver. 29.] It seemed the people of Israel, who are here called Samaritans, had built little temples in the high places; wherein these new inhabitants worshipped the gods of the country from which they came (that is, the gods of Assyria, Ezek. xxvii. 7), together with the God of Israel.

Ver. 30. Succoth-benoth.] The Jewish doctors do but trifle in their exposition of this word, which they say signifies "a hen and chickens." The word plainly imports, "the tabernacles of daughters," or of "young maidens:" who were consecrated to Venus, whose name Mr. Selden probably conjectures was derived from Benoth. The old idolaters, it is evident, did prostitute their daughters in honour of Venus, as not only Strabo, Herodotus, and other profane writers testify; but some think is suggested in holy scripture, Lev. xix. 29. And therefore they of Babylon are said to make the "tabernacles of daughters;" that is, chapels wherein their daughters were prostituted to every one that came to worship Venus, as the manner was in Babylon, from whence the forenamed authors testify this filthiness had its original (see Selden, De Diis Syris Syntag. ii. cap. 7, and Vossius, De Idolol. lib. ii. cap. 22).

Nergal.] Which the Jews would have to signify a cock. But their conjecture is better, who think it signified fire. For the men of Cuth are those that were afterward called Persians: who, it is certain, anciently worshipped the fire (see Selden, cap. 8). But the famous Bochartus ingenuously confesses he doth not know what nergal was; but that there is a sort of palm-tree called nergil by the Persians, Arabians, and Indians, of which they report strange things. From whence, perhaps, the Persians gave the name of Nergal to this idol, as in Syria their god was called Rimmon, from the pomegranate (Hierozycon, par. ii. lib. i. cap. 16).

Ashima.] I know no ground the Jews have to say, this word Ashima signifies a smooth goat. Our great Selden modestly acknowledges he doth not know what god it was (ib. cap. 9). But a late author takes Ashima to be the same with Mars; because among the ancients AS signified the same with "Arys" among the Greeks; and shemah is as much as hearing or obedient (Jo. Gensius De Victimis Humanis, par. i. p. 92). And this AS, he conjectures, is the same whom the Romans called Hesus, whom Lucan mentions in his Pharsalia, lib. i. ver. 413.

—"Horretque feris altaribus Hesus."

Bat, after all, my learned friend Dr. Alix hath made the most probable conjecture, that Ashima is the name of God, whom the Hebrews call Hashem, the name 31 And the Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak, and the Sepharvites burnt their children in fire to Adramelech and Ananimelech, the gods of Sepharvaim.

32 So they feared the Lord, and made unto themselves of the lowest of them priests of the high places, which sacrificed for them in the houses of the high places.

33 They feared the Lord, and served their from whence Ashima, I doubt not, is derived. Accordingly, Aben Ezra saith, in his preface to the book of Esther, that he saw in a Samaritan Pentateuch, Gen. i. 1, bara Ashima, instead of bara Elohim. Which Bochart censures as a falsity, because no such word is to be found in the whole Samaritan Pentateuch; but it might be then in some paraphrase upon it.

Ver. 31. Nibhaz and Tartak.] Nobody knows what these were; for no credit is to be given to the Jews, who say, the former was in the shape of a dog, and the other of an ass. Selden thinks they were the same idol called by different names, but was not able to give an account of them.

Adramelech and Ananimelech.] These were the same gods with Moloch: unto whom the same sacrifices were offered. The Jews, after their vain fancies, make one of them to have been in the form of a peacock, and the other of a pheasant: but in all probability they were but different names of Moloch, which was the sun, as is evident from xlii. 10, 11; and the addition of addir, which signifies magnificent or potent, makes Adramelech as much as the mighty Moloch; and of ana, which signifies to answer, makes Ananimelech as much as oracular Moloch. For Moloch, and Melech, and Milcom, are all the very same in the language of different people, signifying a king: the sun being by them accounted the king, as the moon the queen of heaven. And there is nothing more known than that the gentiles burnt their children in sacrifice to him. But whether these people did so, or only made them pass through the fire to purify them, may be questioned; though the words seem to import the former: which was the practice of the Phenicians, Syrians, Tyrians, Carthaginians, Cretans, Arabians, and many other nations; and is still practised by the Americans, and other gentiles.

A learned writer of our own, Dr. Hyde, in the book before mentioned, had a quite different apprehension of these words: for he will have Adramelech to signify the king of the flock, adre being as much as greges; and Ananimelech he thinks is much of the same signification, ana being as much as pecus, in the Persian language: always signifying collectively in the plural number, the lesser cattle, sheep and goats. Of which he imagines these gods had the care, and were therefore worshipped; the riches of those people consisting much in cattle. They were also celestial constellations (as he there observes), which they imagined promoted the breeding and growth of cattle.

Ver. 32. So they feared the Lord.] Worshipped the Lord God of Israel.

And made unto themselves of the lowest of them priests of the high places, &c.] I suppose these sacrifices were offered to the God of Israel, but in high places and by the priests of their own making. As for their sacrificing to the gods of their several countries, no doubt they brought priests along with them, to perform the service belonging to them.

Ver. 33. They feared the Lord, &c.] That is, after the manner of the ten tribes, who worshipped the own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence.

34 Unto this day they do after the former manners : they fear not the LORD, neither do they after their statutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the LORD commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Israel ;

35 With whom the LORD had made a covenant, and charged them, saying, ye shall not fear other gods, nor bow yourselves to them, nor serve them, nor sacrifice to them :

36 But the LORD, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt with great power and a stretched out arm, him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye do sacrifice.

Lord and the golden calves together with him, and sometimes Baal, and other gods (ver. 16).

Ver. 34.] These and the following words, give an account of the children of Israel ; who, being carried captive out of their own land (as hath been related,) were not at all amended thereby ; but still neglected all the laws which God had given them, and did not worship him alone ; and therefore in truth " they feared not the LORD."

Ver. 35.] Whose sins he aggravates (and thereby justifies his severe proceedings against them), by representing them as a select people, who were in a strict and gracious covenant with him, obliging them not to show the least respect to any other god but himself.

Ver. 36. But the Lord, who brought you up out of—Egypt] This was a benefit, one would think, that should never have been forgotten ; but eternally engaged them to his service, who delivered them from so vile a slavery.

Ver. 37.] This is repeated again, being so very often mentioned in the book of the law, that they should worship no other god.

Ver. 38. Neither shall ye fear other gods.] Which was the principal thing in the covenant.

Ver. 39. And he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.] As he did whensoever they renounced idolatry, and promised to worship him alone, as we read throughout their whole history in these holy books.

Ver. 40. Howbeit they did not hearken.] They soon revolted, when they solemnly protested to repent ; and did just as they had done before, as the same books testify.

Ver. 41.] Just thus did the nations who came in 37 And the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment, which he wrote for you, ye shall observe to do for evermore ; and ye shall not fear other gods.

38 And the covenant that I have made with you ye shall not forget ; neither shall ye fear other gods.

39 But the LORD your God ye shall fear ; and he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.

40 Howbeit they did not hearken, but they did after their former manner.

41 So these nations feared the LORD, and served their graven images, both their children, and their children's children : as did their fathers, so do they unto this day.

their room into the country of Samaria ; they joined their own gods with the Lord God of Israel, and continued so to do, they and their posterity, unto the time this book was written, and long after. For, as Mr. Mede hath observed, this medley of religions lasted above three hundred years, till towards the end of the Persian monarchy. At which time Manasseh, brother to Jadda the high-priest of the Jews (that were returned to their own land), married the daughter of Sanballat, governor of Samaria. And after his example, other Jews of the best rank having married strange wives, contrary to the law, and being loath to leave them, betook themselves thither also ; whom Sanballat entertained, and made his son-in-law their priest. And when Alexander the great subdued the Persian monarchy, he obtained leave of him to build a temple upon mount Gerizim, where Manasseh exercised the office of high-priest. This was very prejudicial to the Jews, and the occasion of a schism ; whilst those who were discontented or excommunicated at Jerusalem were wont to run hither. Yet by this means the Samaritans (having gotten one of the sons of Aaron for their priest, and so many Jews being mingled among them) were brought to throw away all their false gods, and worship the God of Israel only. Yet so, that though they seemed to themselves to be the true worshippers of God, they retained a smack of idolatry ; worshipping God under a visible representation, viz. that of a dove. Just as their predecessors, the ten tribes, worshipped the same God under the similitude of a calf (book i. discourse 13). And indeed this inclination to have some sensible representation of God was so universal, that they who had none, were thought by the gentile world to worship nothing.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 Hezekiah's good reign. 4 He destroyeth idolatry, and prospereth. 9 Samaria is carried captive for their sins. 13 Sennacherib invading Judah is pacified by a tribute. 17 Rab-shaketh, sent by Sennacherib again, revileth Hezekiah, and by blasphemous persuasions soliciteth the people to revolt.

1 Now it came to pass in the third year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Hezekiah the son of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign ; and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Abi, the daughter of Zachariah.

CHAP. XVIII.

Ver. 1. In the third year] The third year of those nine which are mentioned before, xvii. 1 (see there).

Ver. 2. Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign, &c.] Unto this it is objected, that Ahaz lived but thirty and six years (xvi. 2) ; and therefore according to this account, begat Hezekiah when he was but eleven years old, which seems incredible. To which Capellus in his Chronologia answers, that he reigned two or three years with his father ; which is not likely, for the text saith he was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, after his father's death, which is before mentioned. And the solution of the Jews, mentioned by St. Jerome, is not much better, who say, he did not begin to reign presently after his father's death, but there was an interregnum for some years, because of a sedition that was in Jerusalem. But as there is no proof of this, so it is improbable that Hezekiah, who was a grown man, and beloved of the people, should not presently succeed his father. Calvisius's account is still worse, who will have Hezekiah to have been only the adopted son of Ahaz : which spoils the descent of our Saviour from David, as Bochartus observes : who therefore plainly admits that he did beget Hezekiah, when he was eleven or twelve years old. For so it may be understood, that he was but just entered upon the twenty-fifth year of his age, when he began his reign ; and so but twenty-four complete. Therefore his father begat him about the twelfth year of his age. For if, from thirty-six years, four-and-twenty be taken, there remain twelve. And if we suppose, as we may very well, that Ahaz was near one-and-twenty years old when he began to reign, and near seventeen years older before he died (for the scriptures, no more than other writers, do not take notice whether the year be perfect or imperfect), then he might be near fourteen years old when he begat Hezekiah. But take it according to the first account, that he was but eleven or twelve years old, Bochartus hath given a vast number of instances of persons that procreated children at that age. For ripeness for procreation is not to be precisely determined, either by physicians, philosophers, or lawyers (who have been pleased to fix the time) ; but consideration is to be had of the climate wherein men live, of the temper and constitution of their bodies, of their diet, and many other things ; as he observes in an epistle to Nicol. Carbonellos, in his additions to the last edition of his Phaleg. p. 920.

3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father did.

4 ¶ He removed the high places, and brake the images, and cut down the groves, and brake in pieces the brazen serpent that Moses had made :

Ver. 3. He did that which was right] A character which is not given, I think, to any of the kings of Judah, since the reign of Asa (1 Kings xv. 11).

Ver. 4. He removed the high places,] Which none of his predecessors had the courage to attempt. But the carrying of the ten tribes captive, I suppose, mightily awakened both him and all the people, for the present (while it was fresh before their eyes), to observe the law of God very strictly.

Brake the images, and cut down the groves,] Which his father Ahaz had multiplied (xvi. 14. 2 Chron. xxviii. 2. 24, 25).

Brake in pieces the brazen serpent] Which had been piously preserved as a monument of God's wonderful mercy to them in the wilderness ; as Gideon intended his ephod should be of another deliverance (Judg. viii. 27). But as they went a whoring after that, so they did after this, as the Jews phrase it in Avoda Zara : and therefore Hezekiah broke it in pieces ; that is, as the Talmudists there explain it, ground it to powder, and then scattered it into the air, that nothing of it might remain to be worshipped as a relic by superstitious people. And yet there is a fable that some fragments of it did remain until Josiah's time ; and at this day, as Sigonius relates in his history of the kingdom of Italy, they show this brazen serpent entire at the church of St Ambrose, in Milan. But the for unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it : and he called it Nehushtan.

5 He trusted in the LORD God of Israel ; so that after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him.

6 For he clave to the LORD, and departed not wiser Romanists are ashamed of it, and acknowledge it is not the serpent made by Moses (which being broken in pieces by Hezekiah, was never restored), but another made in imitation of it (see Buxtorf. Histor. Serpentis Aenei. cap. 6).

For unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it :] When this superstition began, we are not told ; but nobody gives a better account of it than David Kimchi, whose words are these :—From the time that the kings of Israel did evil, and the children of Israel followed idolatry, until the reign of Hezekiah, they offered incense to it. For it being written in the law of Moses, “whosoever looks upon it shall live,” they fancied they might obtain blessings by its mediation, and therefore thought it worthy to be worshipped. It had been kept from Moses's days in memory of a miracle, just as the pot of manna also was ; and Asa and Jehoshaphat did not extirpate it when they rooted out idolatry, because in their reign they did not observe that the people worshipped this serpent, or burnt incense to it, and therefore they left it as a memorial. But Hezekiah thought fit to take it quite away, when he abolished other idolatry, because in the time of his father they worshipped it as an idol. And though pious people among them accounted it only to be a memorial of a wonderful work, yet he judged it better to abolish it, though the memory of the miracle were lost together with it, than suffer it to remain, and leave the Israelites in danger to commit idolatry hereafter with it.

Nehushtan.] Some think that Hezekiah called it by this name ; others that the Israelites called it so ; the words signifying indifferently “ it was called Nehushtan” viz. by way of contempt and scorn. For the letter nun at the end of a word, the Jews say, is added by way of diminution. And nechoseth signifying brass, this is as much as to say, this serpent was mere brass or copper, and had no power in it, no profit, no ability to help, no divinity ; and therefore not to be worshipped with divine honour. Thus Kimchi ; It being called by this name signified as much as if Hezekiah had said, “How could it come into any man's heart to think that this serpent could do any thing, which is mere brass ?” Or, as Rabba expounds it, “This serpent hath no more virtue in it than the common brass in their houses.” For he takes an, in the end of the word, to be the same with am, ipsorum. But there is a great and good man of our own, who, having endeavoured to show that the destruction of the old serpent the devil was foreshadowed by the lifting up the brazen serpent in the wilderness, concludes that Hezekiah was moved with the greater indignation against the worship of it, because in truth it never was the type of our Saviour and Redeemer, but a figure of his grand enemy. This made him express such detestation of it, as is imported, he thinks, in the word Nehushtan. The signification of which is not to be found in our lexicons : for though nechoseth signify no more than brass, yet nehushtan imports no less than our English words, foul fiend, the old dragon, or Satan (see Dr. Jackson, Humiliation of the Son of God, ch. 31. par. 6).

Ver. 5. He trusted in the Lord God of Israel] And not in the help of foreign forces, as his father Ahaz did (xvi. 7), nay, which that good king Asa called in to his assistance (1 Kings xv. 18, 19).

from following him, but kept his commandments, which the Lord commanded Moses.

7 And the Lord was with him; and he prospered whithersoever he went forth: and he rebelled against the king of Assyria, and served him not.

8 He smote the Philistines, even unto Gaza, and the borders thereof, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

9 ¶ And it came to pass in the fourth year of king Hezekiah, which was the seventh year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Shalmaneser king of Assyria came up against Samaria, and besieged it.

10 And at the end of three years they took it: even in the sixth year of Hezekiah, that is the ninth year of Hoshea king of Israel, Samaria was taken.

11 And the king of Assyria did carry away Israel unto Assyria, and put them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Modes:

Was none like him] Since the time that the kingdoms of Judah and Israel were divided.

Ver. 6. For he clave to the Lord, &c.] He continued to observe God's laws through the whole course of his reign, to the conclusion of it; and did not, like some of his predecessors, who began well, but fell off in the end of their days, as Joash and Amaziah did, (xii. 2. xiv. 3. 2 Chron. xxiv. 2. 19. xxv. 14).

Ver. 7. The Lord was with him;—he rebelled against the king of Assyria.] His prosperous success in all his enterprises, which was a visible token of God's presence with him, emboldened him to throw off the yoke of the king of Assyria, to which Ahaz had basely submitted (xvi. 7); which was not properly rebellion in Hezekiah, for Ahaz could not subject his kingdom to the Assyrian monarch, but only for his own time: his son was not bound to be his slave. Therefore the meaning is, he owned not the authority of the Assyrian king over him, but looked upon himself as a free sovereign in his own kingdom, independent upon him. In this, perhaps, he was a little too forward, being very much lifted up by his victories; but it is plain he was not able to maintain himself free from all subjection to the king of Assyria (ver 14).

Ver. 8. From the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.] We had this phrase before, xvii. 9 (see there). And these words seem to signify that he smote them all the country over, and recovered from them more than his father had lost (2 Chron. xxviii. 18). According to the prophecy of Isaiah, xiv. 18, where he bids the Philistines not to rejoice, because the rod that smote them was broken (that is, Uzziah was dead, who had sorely afflicted them, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7). For out of his root should come another, that would more grievously galling them, which was Hezekiah.

Ver. 9.] We had an account of the taking of Samaria before, and therefore the mentioning of it here again may seem needless. But as now the year of Hezekiah's reign is set down wherein it was taken, so Abarinel thinks the intention of the divine writer was to connect these two histories together; the taking of Samaria, and the ascent of Sennacherib against Jerusalem; who, eight years after the destruction of the former, with great pride and confidence imagined he should do as much by the latter.

Ver. 10, 11.] As was before related (ch. xvii. 6), but could not be too often repeated, to make posterity dread the judgments of God, that were fallen upon 12 Because they obeyed not the voice of the Lord their God, but transgressed his covenant, and all that Moses the servant of the Lord commanded, and would not hear them, nor do them.

13 ¶ Now in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah did Sennacherib king of Assyria come up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.

14 And Hezekiah king of Judah sent to the king of Assyria to Lachish, saying, I have offended; return from me: that which thou puttest on me will I bear. And the king of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah king of Judah three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold.

15 And Hezekiah gave him all the silver that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the treasures of the king's house.

16 At that time did Hezekiah cut off the gold from the doors of the temple of the Lord, and from the pillars which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid, and gave it to the king of Assyria.

them for their sins; as it follows again in the next words.

Ver. 12.] See xvii. 34, 35.

Ver. 13. Sennacherib] He was the son of Shalmaneser, and succeeded him in his kingdom after his death; as we read in the book of Tobit, i. 15.

Come up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.] That is, took a great many of them (2 Chron. xxxii. 1).

Ver. 14. Hezekiah—sent to the king of Assyria to Lachish.] This shows he had not taken all the fenced cities, for Lachish was a city of Judah (Josh. xv. 39) which is mentioned before in this book (xiv. 19), and was not yet taken, though siege was laid to it. Which, when he had taken, he intended to go up against Jerusalem (2 Chron. xxxii. 2); which moved Hezekiah to divert him from his purpose, by begging his pardon, as it here follows, for what he had done in shaking off his yoke.

Saying, I have offended;] In denying to be subject to him, which no doubt was the reason of this invasion.

Return from me: that which thou puttest on me will I bear.] Though he had made great provision against him, as we read 2 Chron. xxxii. 3, 4, &c. yet he durst not venture to abide a siege; but chose rather to divert him, by submitting to such conditions as he would impose upon him.

The king of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah—three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold.] This was a great burden, though it was not a yearly tribute, but only a present payment; which his weakness forced him to submit unto.

Ver. 15. Hezekiah gave him all the silver, &c.] Which in public necessities they thought it was lawful to make use of, for their preservation. Yet the Talmudists reckon this one of the three ill things that Hezekiah did, in cutting off the golden plates, mentioned in the next verse (see Selden, De Synedr. lib. ii. cap. 1. n. 4).

And in the treasures of the king's house.] Which had been so exhausted before, that he was forced to raise the money by other means, as it follows, ver. 16.

Ver. 16.] It is very probable that when Ahaz defaced the temple, and shut up the doors of it (xvi. 17. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 2. 4), he cut off this gold: which Hezekiah took care to repair; but was now constrained to cut it off himself. Upon which words Procopius Gazæus seems to me to have very well ob-

17 ¶ And the king of Assyria sent Tartan and Rab-saris and Rab-shakeh from Lachish to king Hezekiah with a great host against Jerusalem. And they went up and came to Jerusalem. And when they were come up, they came and stood by the conduit of the upper pool, which is in the highway of the fuller's field.

18 And when they had called to the king, there came out to them Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder.

19 And Rab-shakeh said unto them, Speak ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

20 Thou sayest, (but they are but vain words.) I have counsel and strength for the war. Now served; that Hezekiah, finding he had not sufficient treasure of his own, to answer the imposition laid upon him, was driven by necessity to make use of things sacred, lest the enemy should burn the city and the temple. But what was thus employed, pious kings were wont to restore, as soon as they were able, out of the spoils of war, when it was ended.

Ver. 17.] Some of the Jews think that Sennacherib, having received the tribute from Hezekiah, went to his own land; but because Hezekiah did not continue to send it every year, after some time returned to Judea again, and besieged Jerusalem. But there is not a word of this, either in this book, or the Chronicles, or in the prophet Isaiah: therefore it is more probable, that, having received the money he demanded, he made his expedition into Egypt, of which Herodotus and others, and some think Isaiah also, speak, as Sir John Marsham observes (Isa. x. 26. 28). But as he was the first king of Assyria that invaded Egypt, so he went no further than to the entrance of it, to Pelusium, which he could not take, and so at his return broke his faith with Hezekiah; and notwithstanding his present, wherewith he pretended to be satisfied, laid siege to Jerusalem.

They came and stood by the conduit of the upper pool,] They took up their head-quarters, as we now speak, by the conduit or canal, into which water was derived from the upper fish-pond or pool; which was in the highway to the field, where the fullers, after they had washed their clothes in that pool, were wont to spread them.

Ver. 18.] They were so bold as to demand audience of the king himself, that they might treat with him in person for a surrender. Though he would not vouchsafe to go himself, yet he sent his major-domo, as they now speak, and his secretary, or a principal doctor of the law, and the master of the requests. For since the king of Assyria sent three messengers, he thought fit to send as many. Isaiah, indeed, mentions only Rab-shakeh, as sent by the king of Assyria: which Seder Olam Rabba thinks is meant of the first legation; but in the second, when he besieged Libnah (xix. 8), he joined Tartan and Rab-saris with him. It is very uncertain what officer Shebna was; for he is said, Isa. xxiii. 15, to be over the house, and the LXX. sometimes make him treasurer, sometimes scribe, and Mr. Selden thinks he might be præfectus prætorio (Lib. De Succes. in Pontif. p. 142).

Ver. 19. Rab-shakeh said unto them,] He was the chief speaker, being an eloquent man; and, as the Hebrew doctors will have it (whom Procopius follows), an apostate Jew. Which is not altogether improbable; both because he could speak readily in on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

21 Now, behold, thou trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed, even upon Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt unto all that trust on him.

22 But if ye say unto me, We trust in the Lord our God: is not that he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and hath said to Judah and Jerusalem, ye shall worship before this altar in Jerusalem?

23 Now therefore, I pray thee, give pledges to my lord the king of Assyria, and I will deliver thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

24 How then wilt thou turn away the face of the Hebrew tongue, and when he blasphemed the divine majesty, the king and his nobles rent their clothes; which was not usual, unless he that uttered such blasphemous words was an Israelite. Some think his name imports that he was the principal cup-bearer to the king of Assyria.

Thus saith the great king,] He assumed to himself the style of the great king, because of his great conquests and large dominions.

What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?] As much as to say, it was the greatest folly to think any body could defend him from so great a king.

Ver. 20.] In reason he thought Hezekiah should not stand out against his master, unless he had all things necessary for his defence: but he did delude his people, if he told them that he wanted neither skill to manage war, nor power to execute good counsels. He derides him, as full of vain hopes: and upbraids him with his rebellion. Of which he was thought formerly to be guilty, but could not now be justly accused of it, when he had submitted to him with such a present. These are therefore words of the highest pride and insolence.

Ver. 21.] He thought it probable he would seek for succour from Egypt, being a neighbouring country; which would be ready to assist him, that they might be revenged of the king of Assyria for his late invasion. But he represents Egypt as very weak, and utterly unable to help him; being sorely crushed, though not destroyed by Sennacherib. He represents the power of Egypt to be as brittle as the cane or reeds that grow on the banks of the Nile (to which he seems to allude), on which if a man leaned, they brake, and the splinters run into his hand. Such is Pharaoh, saith he, a man gets no help, but mischief, by relying upon him; as he doth who takes one of those canes for his staff to support him.

Ver. 22.] This weak arguing proceeded from his ignorance of that God and his law, in whom Hezekiah trusted. Which made him call those crimes, which were his greatest virtues; in prohibiting their offering sacrifice in any other place but that which God appointed.

Ver. 23.] He seems to challenge him to come out, and fight with his master; and, if he could give security to make that use of them, he would furnish him with two thousand horses, provided he was able to find so many men to sit upon them. Which are words of the highest contempt, and undervaluing of his power. Or, the meaning may be, he would lay a wager with him, he could not find men to sit upon so many horses; for few were good horsemen in Judea, where horses were scarce.

one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

25 Am I now come up without the LORD against this place to destroy it? The LORD said to me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

26 Then said Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rab-shakeh, Speak, I pray thee, to thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and talk not with us in the Jews' language in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

27 But Rab-shakeh said unto them, Hath my master sent me to thy master, and to thee, to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men which sit on the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

28 Then Rab-shakeh stood and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and spake, saying, Hear the word of the great king, the king of Assyria:

29 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you out of his hand:

30 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us, and this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

31 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his cistern:

32 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of oil olive and of honey, that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah, when he persuadeth you, saying, The LORD will deliver us.

33 Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered at all his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

34 Where are the gods of Hamath, and of Arpad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Henna, and Ivah? have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

35 Who are they among all the gods of the countries, that have delivered their country out of my hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

36 But the people held their peace, and an-

Chariots and for horsemen?] With which Egypt abounded above most other countries; who sometimes furnished the Israelites with horses, but none like Egypt. For which reason Moses forbids them to multiply horses, lest it should cause them to return to Egypt (Deut. xvii. 16); and the prophet reproves them severely for going to Egypt for help, and staying upon horses, &c. (Isa. xxxi. 1. 3).

Ver. 25.] If he had not been a Jew, yet he had learned the name of their God; and pretended his master was come up against Jerusalem, by a commission from him. Which were vain words (as he calls Hezekiah's, ver. 20); for there were none of his prophets among the Assyrians. But, perhaps, he concluded from what the Assyrian king had done to Samaria, God intended he should do so to Jerusalem.

Ver. 26.] I suppose Eliakim perceived the people to be frightened with his big words, and therefore entreated him, in the name of the other commissioners sent to treat with him, to speak no longer in the Jews' language, but in his own: for he was not sent to treat with the people, but with them who understood the Syrian tongue very well.

Ver. 27.] To make them know that he will reduce them to the greatest extremity, if they do not submit unto him; for it is a hyperbolical speech, importing such straits as were never known.

Ver. 28, 29.] He seems to have raised both himself and his voice higher, that he might be better heard by all. He repeats with the greatest assurance, the power of his king, and the weakness of Hezekiah: representing from thence how they were deluded with empty promises, if he persuaded them he should be able to preserve them.

Ver. 30. Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the Lord.] This was the highest presumption to persuade them not to place their hope in God, as if his master was stronger than he.

Ver. 31.] Having represented to them the miseries unto which a siege would reduce them, he invites them to a surrender upon advantageous conditions.

Ver. 32.] If they would seek the favour of the king of Assyria, by making him a present, and delivering themselves up to his mercy, he promises they should be transported to a better country than that to which the Israelites were carried: and in the meantime, every one enjoy his own possessions. But he was afraid Hezekiah's avowed confidence in God would prevail with them, to trust to him for deliverance, which makes him so often desire them not to depend upon that.

Ver. 33. Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered at all his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?] He argues very popularly and strongly, if his supposition had been true, that the God of Israel, the God of the whole earth (yea, of heaven and earth), was like those of all other nations, who presided only over one country or city.

Ver. 34. Hamath, and of Arpad?] Those were cities or countries which the king of Assyria had conquered.

Sepharvaim,] Mentioned before, xvii. 31.

Hena, and Ivah?] Some think these were the gods of Sepharvaim; which is confuted by the place before named. They were rather cities, whose gods could not protect them.

Have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?] That is, have the gods of Samaria been able to do more than the rest?

Ver. 35.] He desires an instance of one god that had been able to save his country when his master invaded it; and therefore it was best for them to yield their city up to him, since God himself could not preserve it, unless he could do more than any other had done, which he concluded was unlikely. It must be acknowledged that Rab-shakeh was an excellent orator, as well as a soldier, not inferior in eloquence to Julius Cæsar.

Ver. 36. Answer him not.] This was a very wise order, because he might have made some advantage by a sudden answer; and it was no less pious; for Hezekiah believed God would answer for himself, not in words, but in such deeds as would demonstrate he was above all gods.

swered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

37 Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rab-shakeh.

Ver. 37. With their clothes rent,] It was the custom of the Jews to rend their clothes when they heard a man blaspheme God's name; and if we will believe them, when the witnesses of a blasphemy did but repeat the words before the judges, they rent their clothes. Accordingly Hezekiah, when his commissioners gave an account of Rab-shakeh's words to him, did so (xix. 1). But they have determined that they were not bound to rend their clothes, unless he was an Israelite that blasphemed. Therefore they have resolved, as I said before, that Rab-shakeh was an apostate Israelite. And this custom was common to all nations (as appears from Homer, Herodotus, and Virgil), who expressed great grief in this manner.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Hezekiah mourning sendeth to Isaiah to pray for them. 6 Isaiah comforteth them. 8 Sennacherib, going to encounter Tirhakah, sendeth a blasphemous letter to Hezekiah. 14 Hezekiah's prayer. 20 Isaiah's prophecy of the pride and destruction of Sennacherib, and the good of Zion. 35 An angel slayeth the Assyrians. 36 Sennacherib is slain at Nineveh by his own sons.

I AND it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the Lord.

2 And he sent Eliakim, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, to Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and blasphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

4 It may be the Lord thy God will hear all the words of Rab-shakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living

God; and will reprove the words which the Lord thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that are left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say to your master, Thus saith the Lord, Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard, with which the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So Rab-shakeh returned, and found the

CHAP. XIX.

Ver. 1.] See the last verse of the foregoing chapter. Covered himself with sackcloth,] He fasted and mourned, and went into the temple to pray. Sometimes they put on sackcloth next to their skin, instead of a shirt; but here it seems to signify only, that he was clothed in this vile habit in token of his great trouble and sorrow.

Ver. 2. He sent Eliakim,] See xviii. 18.

The elders of the priests,] The principal persons among the priests.

Covered with sackcloth, to Isaiah the prophet] In the same mournful habit, to beg his prayers to God for them.

Ver. 3. This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and blasphemy;] They represent to him the great straits in which they were, and the reproaches cast upon them; and (which was worst of all) the blasphemy they had heard against God.

For the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.] And the present danger wherein they were of perishing, unless speedily relieved: like that of a woman, whose child being fallen down, after many throes, to the place of birth, she was so spent that she had no strength left to bring it forth. Or, as Procopius Gazaens expounds it, "We are in pain to hear such blasphemous words, and have no power to punish those wicked wretches as they deserve."

Ver. 4. It may be the Lord—will hear] So as to take notice of them, and punish him.

Reprove the words which the Lord thy God hath heard;] Reprove him for the words (as the Targum expounds it), the which he had spoken against God. But Lud. De Dieu, following R. Solomon Jarchi, thinks that the word we translate reprove, signifies to prove, and, by arguments, to demonstrate. And so refers it to Rab-shakeh in this manner: "It may be the Lord will hear all the words of Rab-shakeh, whom the king of Assyria hath sent to reproach the living God: and that openly, with a bold face, fearing nothing, because all things succeed according to their hearts' desire." And he saith, he shall wonder if this sense displease any body.

Lift up thy prayer] That Judah might not be carried captive, as Israel had been.

Ver. 5. So the servants—came to Isaiah.] And delivered the foregoing message to him.

Ver. 6, 7. Behold, I will send a blast upon him,] A pestilential blast, which destroyed his army in one night (ver. 35): others translate it a spirit; which is the same. For God sent an angel, who smote them with that pestilence.

And he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land;] The report perhaps, was renewed after that stroke, that Tirhakah (of whom he had heard before, ver. 9) was coming against him; which made him haste away, with the small remains of his army, to his own country.

And I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.] Which was fulfilled, ver. 37.

Ver. 8. Rab-shakeh returned,] Not with the host that he brought with him (xviii. 17), but he himself returned to give his master an account of what he had done; and left Rabaris to carry on the siege and straiten the city, till he could come with the whole army against it.

king of Assyria warring against Libnah : for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And when he heard say of Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is come out to fight against thee : he sent messengers again unto Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God in whom thou trustest deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands, by destroying them utterly : and shalt thou be delivered ?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed ; as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden which were in Thelassar ?

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arpad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah ?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter of the hand of the messengers, and read it : and Hezekiah went up into the house of the Lord, and spread it before the Lord.

15 And Hezekiah prayed before the Lord,

Found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah : for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.] Being unable, I suppose, to make himself master of it.

Ver. 9.] Whether he fought with Tirhakah or not, and what the success was, doth not appear. But it is to be noted, that there were two countries called Cush (which we translate Ethiopia) ; one in Africa beyond Egypt, the other in Arabia, which is the Ethiopia here meant. For the king of the other was far off, and must have marched through Egypt before he could come to fight with Sennacherib. But this was near, and was able to raise a powerful army, as appears by the vast forces which Zerah brought against Asa (2 Chron. xiv. 9). And thus 2 Chron. xxi. 16, as Bochartus observes, must necessarily be understood, where the Arabians, whom God stirred up against Jehoram, are said to be near to the Ethiopians, which cannot be true of those beyond Egypt (see his Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 2).

He sent messengers again unto Hezekiah.] Among which Rab-shakeh was the chief.

Ver. 10.] They could not come to the speech of him ; but sent him a letter containing the words following (ver. 14). He had heard, I suppose, that Hezekiah declared he trusted in the Lord, and had assurance from him, that he the king of Assyria should not prevail against him.

Ver. 11.] This letter is of the same import with the former message, presuming the God of Israel was like the gods of other countries, and had no more power than they to preserve his worshippers.

Shalt thou be delivered ?] Such questions imply a strong denial ; and therefore it is as much as to say, thou shalt be delivered no more than they were.

Ver. 12.] He argues from the long successes his ancestors had enjoyed : none of the gods whose countries they had destroyed making opposition to them for some ages. These were places well known in those days ; there was a Gozan and Hara in Media, as Bochartus observes, lib. iii. Phaleg. cap. 14. Where Rezeph was is uncertain ; but Ptolemy mentions such a city in Syria, where St. Jerome places Thelassar : and there were more cities than one in those countries called Adana, which is the same with Eden.

and said, O LORD God of Israel, which dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth ; thou hast made heaven and earth.

16 LORD, bow down thine ear, and hear : open, LORD, thine eyes, and see : and hear the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent him to reproach the living God.

17 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have destroyed the nations and their lands, 18 And have cast their gods into the fire : for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone : therefore they have destroyed them.

19 Now therefore, O LORD our God, I beseech thee, save thou us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD God, even thou only.

20 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent to Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, That which thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria I have heard.

21 This is the word that the LORD hath spoken concerning him ; The virgin the daughter of Zion hath despised thee, and laughed thee to

Ver. 13.] Places before mentioned, xviii. 34. Nothing can be further observed of this, but that the fury of Rab-shakeh increased : so that what he had uttered in words, he now more deliberately set down in writing : affirming boldly that their God was a deceiver, if he promised them deliverance.

Ver. 14. Hezekiah received the letter—and spread it before the Lord.] He could approach no nearer than to the outward court of the temple : where, at the entrance of the priests' court, he looked towards the sanctuary, God's dwelling-place, and laid this letter before him.

Ver. 15. And Hezekiah prayed before the Lord, &c.] Here he directly thwarts the blasphemous opinion of the Assyrians before mentioned (xvii. 27. xviii. 35), that the God of Israel was but the particular Lord of that country ; not the universal sovereign, which Hezekiah acknowledged him to be, because the creator of the whole world.

Ver. 16.] That is, sent Rab-shakeh. He speaks in such language as men use when they earnestly beseech others not to neglect their supplication, but vouchsafe to attend, and to give a gracious answer to them.

Ver. 17. Of a truth, &c.] Do not boast of more than they have done.

Ver. 18.] They had prevailed, he acknowledges, over their gods, as well as over men ; but it was because they were not so good as men, being mere wood and stone.

Ver. 19. He beseeches him to distinguish himself upon those idols, by giving them such a deliverance as might demonstrate to all the world that he was the living God (as he is often called), superior to all others, who were not able to save their worshippers.

Ver. 20.] He knew by the spirit of prophecy that Hezekiah had represented his case to God in the temple, who bade Isaiah assure him his petition was granted.

Ver. 21.] These words comprehend the whole city. For by "the daughter of Zion" he means the people that inhabited the upper part of the city, where the king's palace stood ; and by "the daughter of Jerusalem," the people of the lower part of the city ; and scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

22 Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the Holy One of Israel.

23 By thy messengers thou hast reproached the Lord, and hast said, With the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon, and will cut down the tall cedar trees thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into the forest of his Carmel.

24 I have digged and drunk strange waters, and with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of besieged places.

all that was not comprehended under the name of Zion. They "shaked their heads at him;" which is the same with despising and laughing him to scorn. For shaking the head is the posture of those that mock at others (Ps. xxii. 7. Matt. xxvii. 39). He calls Zion a virgin, because this fortress, since David conquered it, had remained inviolable, and had never been taken by any enemy. Joash, indeed, king of Israel, took Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of it (xiv. 13, 14); but I think the fort of Zion had never been taken.

Ver. 22.] So Rab-shakeh did, xviii. 28.

And lifted up thine eyes on high? As those do who have haughty thoughts of themselves; and overlook others with contempt and scorn (Prov. xxi. 4).

The Holy One of Israel.] God is called "the Holy One," with respect to his peerless perfections; and "the Holy One of Israel," as having a peculiar respect to them above all people, who therefore should be defended by his almighty power.

Ver. 23.] This is an admirable description of the boastings of a king puffed up with great success, and is as much as if he had said, What place is there into which I cannot make my way? when I have gone, even with my chariots in great number, to the top of high mountains; to Lebanon itself, through the most difficult passages, which I have opened and planned for them? Who shall hinder me from cutting down its tallest cedars and fir-trees (perhaps he means their princes and great men), and, when I have done, from marching and taking up my quarters in the extremest borders of the land, climbing up to the top of Carmel (which was towards the Mediterranean sea), or entering into all the fruitful places of the country, by making an entire conquest of it? For so Carmel often signifies, not a mountain, but a fruitful field, in the language of this prophet, Isa. x. 18. xvi. 10.

Ver. 24. I have digged and drunk strange waters.] He brags that he had marched with his vast army through strange countries, and in the driest places, where it was thought his army would die with thirst; but he digged till he found water.

And with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of besieged places.] This is commonly thought to signify, that he had gone dry-shod with his whole army over great rivers, whose streams he turned another way; and so had taken the strongest fortresses, surrounded with deep waters and great ramparts. But Bochartus hath made a plainer paraphrase upon these words, which he thus translates: "I have dried up the rivers of Egypt." As much as to say, "I will enter as easily into Egypt, in which you confide, as if, when I come thither, all the rivers wherewith it is en-

25 Hast thou not heard long ago how I have done it, and of ancient times that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldst be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps.

26 Therefore their inhabitants were of small power, they were dismayed and confounded; they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as the grass on the house tops, and as corn blasted before it be grown up.

27 But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

28 Because thy rage against me and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

vironed, should be dried up" (see his Hierozoicon, par. ii. lib. v. cap. 15). For the Hebrew word masor (which we translate everywhere besieged places or defences, or fortresses) should rather be taken for the singular of Mesoraim, which by contraction is called Mitzraim, that is, Egypt. And if this be allowed, the sense then here is, as I said before, "I have dried up all the rivers of Egypt;" which was the highest vaunt he could make of his power, and numerous forces. Thus Isa. xix. 6, "The brooks of defences shall be dried up," is interpreted by Kimeli, "The rivers of Egypt shall be emptied and dried up." And more plainly, Micah vii. 12, where "from the fortress to the river" is so obscure, that it is not to be understood; but "from Egypt to Euphrates" is such clear sense, that one cannot but think it should be so translated; for those were the bounds of the land of Canaan.

Ver. 25. Hast thou not heard long ago, &c.] These are the words of God, in answer to those empty boasts:—But what is this to what I have done? Hast thou not heard how I brought my people dry-shod through the Red sea? How in ancient times, I say, long before thou and thy ancestors were born, I did this by my own strength alone, without the help of nature or art? For so the word jatzar, which we translate formed, is used Gen. ii. 8, and other places. And it is I that have now brought thee to do all these things of which thou braggedst. Thou couldest not have done one of them without my leave, who therefore permitted it, that I might punish those cities by thy hand, which I had devoted to destruction (see Isa. x. 5, 6, 13—15).

Ver. 26.] This was the reason, that the people of those cities whereof thou spakest (ver. 12, 13), were so very feeble, and unable to oppose thee; because I delivered them into thy hand.

Ver. 27. But I know thy abode, &c.] As much as to say. There are none of thy motions hidden from me. For before thou camest from thy own country, I knew with what design thou marchedst out, and what thou hast done since, wheresoever thou hast entered; and understand with what rage and fury thou art come up to destroy my dwelling-place.

Ver. 28. Thy tumult is come up into mine ears.] I have heard the noise thou makest with thy furious threatenings, and with thy great army which hath entered Judea.

Therefore I will put my hook in thy nose, &c.] He compares his absolute power over him to that of a fisherman, who, let a fish tumble ever so much in the water, hath it fast by a hook he hath fixed in his nose: or to a man upon a horse or a mule, whom he can turn which way he pleases, when he hath a curb in 29 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, and in the second year that which springeth of the same; and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruits thereof.

30 And the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall yet again take root downward, and bear fruit upward.

31 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of mount Zion: the zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

32 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this their mouths. Even so, saith God, will I do with thee, draw thee back, press thou ever so much to compass thy designs, into thy own country, without any success.

Ver. 29. This shall be a sign unto thee,] This is spoken to Hezekiah.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, &c.] This was not a sign of the truth of his prophecy, because it was to come after that was fulfilled; but a token of God's extraordinary favour and love to them, when Sennacherib was gone; and they were in fear of another enemy, viz. a grievous famine. For though he had trodden down or eaten up all the corn with his army, yet they should find sufficient left to maintain them this year, which was the fourteenth of Hezekiah. And though the next was the sabbatical year, in which they were to let the land rest, and neither sow nor reap, yet he promises enough should grow up of itself to sustain them, without any culture, out of the corn scattered in the former year. And then, in the sixteenth year, God assures them of liberty to till their land as they were wont, and that they should sow and reap as in a time of peace, when no enemy appeared, nor there was any fear of any. But until the corn sprung up and was ripe that year, they lived upon what grew of itself in the sabbatical year without tillage. Which demonstrates the wonderful providence of God over this people, in taking care they should want nothing in those years, without any care of their own, if they believed in his word. See Lev. xxv. where the precept about this sabbatical year is delivered: and observed by this people, from the first conquest and division of the land of Canaan, forty-seven years after the coming out of Egypt (see Dr. Alix, Reflections on the Old Testament, par. ii. ch. 1).

Ver. 30.] He pursues the metaphor from corn that is sown in the ground; signifying, that they should have firm possession of their own country; and therein increase, and multiply, and flourish exceedingly.

Ver. 31. For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, &c.] For they who were now shut up in Jerusalem should be at liberty: and they who escaped the enemy's fury in the country, and fled thither for refuge, should go out of mount Zion to their own possessions.

The zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do this.] His great love to his own honour, and to his people, shall do these wonders; to vindicate his glory from that contempt which was cast upon it by Sennacherib.

Ver. 32.] He promises the king of Assyria should be so far from possessing himself of the city at this time, that he should not assault it, by shooting so much as an arrow into it: no, nor appear with his army against it, or raise bulwarks to besiege it. Or, as the Hebrews understand it, they should not cast a stone city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shield, nor cast a bank against it.

33 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the LORD.

34 For I will defend this city, to save it, for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

35 ¶ And it came to pass that night, that the angel of the LORD went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred fourscore and five thousand: and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

36 So Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

out of their engines against it. Rabсарis, I observed ver. 8, continued the siege; but whatsoever he did before, after this message of Isaiah he made no attempt upon them.

Ver. 33.] He confirms what he said before (ver. 28).

Ver. 34. I will defend this city, to save it] To preserve it from destruction.

For mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.] Upon which account he had formerly spared them, when they deserved to be punished (1 Kings xi. 12, 13).

Ver. 35. It came to pass that night,] The Jews in the Gemara Sanhedrin (cap. 11. n. 20), say, that in the very night after they set down before Jerusalem and were so weary that they made no attempt upon the city, this which follows fell out. Others think it was the same night that Hezekiah received Sennacherib's railing letter; which is more probable than the opinion of our Dr. Jackson, who will have it that it was the same night, about two years after (see upon the attributes, sect. 3. ch. 26). However it was, the blow was the more remarkable, because it was given in that very night, wherein he had lifted up himself against the God of heaven: as Belshazzar afterward did, and had his fatal stroke given him in like manner (see Dan. v. 30).

That the angel of the Lord went out, &c.] By a pestilential disease, as Josephus calls it, κατακλόν νόσος, such a vast number were suddenly cut off. It is a question, whether this destruction was made in the army that besieged Libnah, or in that host which Rab-shakeh brought up against Jerusalem. Josephus thinks the latter; for it is probable Rab-shakeh came with his whole host against Jerusalem, which before was straitened by Rabсарis; and κατὰ τὴν πρώτην τῆς πολιορκίας νύκτα, "the first night after they had begirt the city" (as the Jews say, I observed, in Sanhedrin), the angel of the LORD made this great slaughter among them: lib. x. Antiq. cap. 2, where a little before, in the end of the first chapter, he takes notice of a horrible lie which Herodotus reports from the Egyptians; who say their king, being also a priest, by his prayers to his god, brought this destruction upon the Assyrians, as they lay before Pelusium: a great army of rats coming in the night, and gnawing all their bowstrings in pieces, so that they could not fight. So studious they were to pervert the truth and corrupt the sacred story.

Ver. 36. So Sennacherib—departed,] Being afraid that Tirhakah should come and destroy the remainders of his broken army (ver. 9).

Ver. 37. Nisroch] The LXX. here calls this god Nesorach; and upon Isaiah, where this story is again told, Asarach. But what any of these names signify, Mr. Sel-den acknowledges he cannot tell, having in all his reading never met with any thing that might explain it. But Kircher adventures to say it was the image of a ship representing the ark of Noah : the relics of which, Josephus tells us, some reported were, in his time, in the neighbouring mountains of Armenia. And a later writer, Beyerus (in his additions to Selden, De Diis Syris), thinks it signifies as much as the bird of Noah, that is, a dove, which was worshipped by the Assyrians ; or, as others conjecture (for they can do no more), this word is derived from nos, which in Chaldee signifies a province, and rac, which signifies a king ; that is, Jupiter the king, and conservator of that province.

Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him] Which they might the more easily do, when he suspected no danger. The reason of it was, because (in his danger, we may suppose) he had vowed that he would offer them up unto his god : therefore they sacrificed him, to prevent being sacrificed themselves. One of them seems to have been called after the name of a god worshipped in those countries (xv. 11. 31).

Land of Armenia.] Which was not far off ; and where there were mountains of very difficult ascent, and inhabited by a warlike people.

Esarhaddon his son reigned] Who was the king that sent a colony to people the country of Samaria (as I observed before from Ezra iv. 2) and the rather, because he feared Hezekiah might have taken possession of it, after such a defeat as his father Sennacherib had received. His name is curtailed several ways : for in the book of Tobit he is called Sar-chedon (i. 21) the first syllable of his name being cut off ; and the LXX. cut off the next, calling him Aser-dan ; and Isaiah cuts off both, calling him Sargon (xx. 1).

CHAPTER XX.

1 Hezekiah, having received a message of death, by prayer hath his life lengthened. 8 The sun goeth ten degrees backward for a sign of that promise. 12 Berodach-baladan sending to visit Hezekiah, because of the wonder, hath notice of his treasures. 14 Isaiah understanding thereof foretelleth the Babylonian captivity. 28 Manasseh succeedeth Hezekiah.

1 In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz came to him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Set thine house in order ; for thou shalt die, and not live.

2 Then he turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the LORD, saying,

3 I beseech thee, O LORD, remember now how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept sore.

CHAP. XX.

Ver. 1. In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death.] This is set down after the death of Sennacherib ; but with this general note only of the time, wherein this sickness fell out, in those days. Which, as primæ Usher observes in his annals, doth not relate to what went just before (to the time when the king of Assyria invaded the land), as is evident from ver. 6 of this chapter ; where he promises to add fifteen years to his life, and also to deliver him from the king of Assyria. Which deliverance, therefore, was after this sickness, which was in the latter end of his fourteenth year ; to which if we add fifteen, they make up the whole twenty-nine years of his reign.

Set thy house in order, &c.] That is, his disease was in its own nature mortal, and could not be cured by any human remedy : therefore he wished him to settle his estate, and as we speak, to make his will : how all things in his house should be disposed when he was dead.

Ver. 2. He turned his face to the wall, and prayed] That is, towards the wall of the sanctuary, as the Targum expounds it (see Dr. Hammond upon Acts x. annot. b). He thought, as it was not beyond the power of God to restore him, so he had not peremptorily decreed that he should die ; but there was a tacit condition in the message (as in other cases, Jonah iii. 4) otherwise he would not have prayed to be spared.

4 And it came to pass, afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle court, that the word of the LORD came to him, saying,

5 Turn again, and tell Hezekiah the captain of my people, Thus saith the LORD, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears : behold, I will heal thee : on the third day thou shalt go up unto the house of the LORD.

6 And I will add unto thy days fifteen years ; and I will deliver thee and this city out of the

Ver. 3.] He was not conscious to himself that he had omitted any thing which was to be done for the restoring the true worship of God. In which he had been so exact, as to take away the high places, which had continued ever since the time of David, and none durst remove them ; and therefore he presumed to beg that he might live, to settle and establish what he had begun to do.

Hezekiah wept sore.] One reason was, as many think, that he had not yet a son to succeed him on the throne. For he lived after this fifteen years ; and when he died Manasseh was but twelve years old, who therefore was born after this sickness.

Ver. 4. Middle court.] It is doubtful whether we are to understand the middle of the court of the king's house, or the middle of the city : for the one is in the text, the other in the margin of the Hebrew Bibles. But it is not material which we follow ; for the meaning is, that he was not gone far before he was ordered to go back, and carry a new message that his prayer was heard.

Ver. 5. Behold, I will heal thee : on the third day thou shalt go up unto the house of the Lord.] Recover his strength so fast, as to be able in three days' time to go to the temple, and give God thanks for his cure ; which appears by this to have been miraculous.

Ver. 6. I will add unto thy days fifteen years ;] More than he could have lived according to the course of nature.

hand of the king of Assyria; and I will defend this city for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

7 And Isaiah said, Take a lump of figs. And they took and laid it on the boil and he recovered.

8 ¶ And Hezekiah said unto Isaiah, What shall be the sign that the LORD will heal me, and that I shall go up into the house of the LORD the third day?

9 And Isaiah said, This sign shalt thou have of the LORD, that the LORD will do the thing that he hath spoken: shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees?

And I will deliver—this city, &c.] For this sickness was that year when he threatened to destroy it (see upon ver. 1). It was a great encouragement to faithful obedience, that God so often mentions David's services with such a kind remembrance of them.

Ver. 7. And Isaiah said, Take a lump of figs. And they took and laid it on the boil, and he recovered.] There might be some natural virtue in this cataplasm, to soften and ripen a hard humour, as this seems to have been (some think a plague sore), but it was a supernatural power which made so speedy a cure; of which God used this as a sign.

Ver. 8.] He did believe, no doubt, what the prophet said, otherwise he would have been sharply reprov'd. But he made bold to desire a confirmation of his faith, as good men had done in other cases: particularly Gideon, who threw down the altar of Baal, and cut down the grove at God's command, and blew the trumpet, and gathered an army, which were arguments of a strong faith; and yet, after all this, desired a sign from God, that God would deliver Israel by his hand (Judg. vi. 25. 34. 36, 37, &c.).

Ver. 9.] Sometimes God, who is a free agent, intending to convince men by great wonders that he is to be believed, is so graciously condescending, as to give them leave to choose what they would have him do, or when, that his power may be the more notorious, and no room left for doubting. So he did with Pharaoh, Exod. viii. 9, 10, and with Ahaz, Isa. vii. 11, and here with his son Hezekiah.

Ver. 10. Let the shadow return backward ten degrees.] It was comparatively small, because to go forward was the natural course of it; but to return back was a miracle, both in the thing and in the manner of it.

Ver. 11.] It is observed by many modern interpreters, that there is not a word here spoken concerning the sun's going back; but only of the shadow upon the dial, which might by the power of God go either forward or backward, the sun still holding its course, as it was wont to do. And the degrees or lines in the dial may signify either hours, or half hours, or, as some think, quarters (see Vossius, De Orig. et Progressu Idol. lib. ii. cap. 9). Now the going back being three times mentioned in this chapter, and always spoken of the shadow, therefore they conclude the miracle was wrought upon the dial only, not upon the very body of the sun. It is said, indeed, in Isa. xxxviii. 8, "So the sun returned ten degrees;" but they think that may be meant of the shadow of the sun (as it goes before), God so disposing the rays of the sun, and ordering the light, that no shadow should be projected, but where the prophet foretold. This I thought fit to represent; but must add, that the ancient Jews and Christians too, took the words of Isaiah to signify that the sun itself went back, and not merely the shadow. Whom primate Usher in his annals follows, whose words are these: "The sun

10 And Hezekiah answered, It is a light thing for the shadow to go down ten degrees: nay, but let the shadow return backward ten degrees.

11 And Isaiah the prophet cried unto the LORD: and he brought the shadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the dial of Ahaz.

12 ¶ At that time Berodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present unto Hezekiah: for he had heard that Hezekiah had been sick.

13 And Hezekiah hearkened unto them, and and all the heavenly bodies went back; and as much was detracted from the next night as was added to this day" (A. M. 4001). Which was done, I suppose, on a sudden, by the power of God, and lasted not long before all was restored again to their usual place, so that no change was made in the state of the heavenly bodies. But, that there was some change for the present, was observed both in the northern part of the world at Babylon (from whence Merodach-baladan sent to inquire about this wonder, 2 Chron. xxxii. 31) and also in the southern, in the land of Egypt. As we may gather from a remarkable passage in Herodotus, who tells us in his Euterpe, cap. i. 42, that the Egyptians had observed strange alterations in the motions of the sun; so that it had risen four times ἐξ ἑξῆς, "out of its usual course," ἐντεῖθεν τὴν δις καταδύεται, ἐντεῖθεν δις ἐπαντεῖλαι, &c. "it rising twice where it now sets, and setting twice where it now rises; and yet, οὐδὲν τῶν κατ' Αἰγυπτίων ὑπὸ ταῦτα ἐτεροωδῆναι;" "and yet no change at all made among the Egyptians by these things," neither in the earth, nor the river, nor any thing else. This is a plain evidence that their neighbours (and many others, it is like) had heard of the unusual motions of the sun (though without any alteration in the heavenly bodies, which were soon returned to their former station), but had not a perfect knowledge of them, or had corrupted their knowledge; for to those two mentioned in scripture, in the time of Joshua and Hezekiah, the Egyptians added two more, and make them to have been near the same time. But the Jews themselves have been thus fabulous, who say in the chapter Chelek, that the day on which Ahaz died was but two hours long; but now when Hezekiah's life was prolonged, God restored those ten hours which were then wanting, and so brought time even (see Schickard, in his Bechinah Happeruschim, p. 123). They also believe this miracle was wrought a little before sunset; but that excellent person whom I have often mentioned, Dr. Alix, thinks it evident it was before noon, about our ten of the clock.

Ver. 12. Berodach-baladan,] Who is called Merodach-baladan in Isa. xxxix. 1. Merodach was the name of an idol among the Babylonians, as Baal or Bel was another; together with Adan or Adonis, as Sir. J. Marsham observes. Josephus calls him Βαδάδης, and so doth Berosus. He was but a tributary to the king of Assyria, till, Nebuchadnezzar came to reign, who cast off the yoke of Assyria, and made that monarchy subject to him.

Sent letters] Some think to make a league with him against the king of Assyria: and it is likely, to inquire about the wonder done in the land (2 Chron. xxxii. 31.)

And a present unto Hezekiah:] As the manner was when they sought any one's friendship.

For he had heard that Hezekiah had been sick.] And shewed them all the house of his precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not.

14 ¶ Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country, even from Babylon.

15 And he said, What have they seen in thy house? And Hezekiah answered, All the things that are in my house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

therefore in these letters, I suppose, he also congratulated his happy recovery to health.

Ver. 13. And Hezekiah hearkened unto them, &c.] He gave them a friendly and benign audience (as Abarbanel explains it), being glad at their coming, as Isaiah tells us (xxxix. 2), because he knew them to be enemies to Sennacherib. And the words seem to import that they came about some weighty business, to which he consented. He was so pleased, or rather transported with joy, at the honour the king of Babylon had done him, that he not only gave them a gracious audience, as was said before, but ordered his officers to show them all the rarities he had in his treasures. For though his country had been lamentably harassed by the king of Assyria, and he had endeavoured to appease him with great gifts (xviii. 14, 15) yet there were many good things remaining in Jerusalem; and great presents had been made to Hezekiah, since the stroke from heaven upon Sennacherib's army (2 Chron. xxxii. 23). The precious ointment here mentioned, is called, by Kimchi and other Hebrew doctors, apharsemon; which they say was the best balsam; not to be found anywhere but near to Jericho.

There was nothing—in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not.] There were other valuable things in other parts of the realm, besides those in his palace at Jerusalem, which he thought worth their seeing, and therefore ordered his officers to show them to these ambassadors.

Ver. 14.] He answers to the last part of Isaiah's question, but not a word of the first, what their business with him was? and he calls that a far country from whence they came (though it was not very remote), to express the great honour that was done him by a prince at such a distance from him.

Ver. 15. What have they seen?] He knew well enough what they had seen; but had a mind to hear whether Hezekiah would confess the truth, or excuse his folly.

And Hezekiah answered, All the things that are in my house have they seen:] He honestly relates the truth; being insensible of how dangerous a piece of vanity he had been guilty; in showing strangers those treasures, which he might well think would invite them to endeavour to make themselves masters of them.

Ver. 16. And Isaiah said unto Hezekiah, Hear the word of the Lord.] How he resents this action. Which was the more blameable, because he had lately received such great benefits from God, and seen such an astonishing wonder as he wrought for the confirmation of his faith; whereby he should have been moved not to glory in any thing but the goodness of God to him, nor confide in the friendship of great princes, but only in the power of the Almighty.

Ver. 17. Behold, the days come, that all that is in 16 And Isaiah said unto Hezekiah, Hear the word of the Lord.

17 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thy house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store unto this day, shall be carried into Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the Lord.

18 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

19 Then said Hezekiah unto Isaiah, Good is the word of the Lord which thou hast spoken. And he said, Is it not good, if peace and truth be in my days?

20 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and all his might, and how he made a pool, and thy house, &c.] There had been several great kings in Judah who had overcome many enemies, and got great spoils, some remainders of which were still in their stores: but Isaiah foretells all should be carried away to that very place from whence he had been complimented by those ambassadors. The most pertinent observation that I can make upon these words is that of Dr. Jackson (in his Answer to John's Question), where he saith, that whosoever will consider the state of things in this time, and the small power which the Babylonians now had, in respect to their mighty neighbour the king of Assyria (whom the Jews had reason to fear above all other princes); the accomplishment of this prophecy of Isaiah was, according to human conjecture, far more unlikely and improbable, than if a man should in the last age have taken upon him to foretell that the duke of Saxony, or some such prince in Germany, should conquer France and Spain, and lead them captive to Dresden. But the word of the Lord stands fast for ever; and Isaiah was proved a hundred and twenty-five years after to be a true prophet.

Ver. 18. Thy sons that shall issue from thee,] That is, his posterity descended from him.

And they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.] Wait upon him as his servants (xxiv. 15). This was partly fulfilled in Daniel and his companions (Dan. i. 1).

Ver. 19. Then said Hezekiah unto Isaiah, Good is the word of the Lord which thou hast spoken.] As if he had said, Thanks be to God it is no worse; let him do his pleasure. Have I not reason to be thankful, if, according to his promise, he deliver me from the king of Assyria (ver. 6), and not only prolong my days, but let me enjoy firm peace and true religion as long as I live? Some take this to be a careless speech, as if he did not concern himself what became of his posterity, so he himself did live happily. But this is inconsistent with such a pious mind as he had; which, no doubt, was sensible of the vanity and pride for which the prophet reproved him, and submitted to the punishment of it, which might have been immediately inflicted, if God had not been very merciful unto him.

Ver. 20. The rest of the acts of Hezekiah—how he made a pool, &c.] If he brought water into the city by private passages, whereby the enemy was deprived of the benefit of it, while the city enjoyed it (as Grotius understands it), it was certainly a work of admirable contrivance (see 2 Chron. xxxii. 3).

The book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah] The same great person here observes, that the book of the chronicles spoken of here and in other places, were journals, as these books were annals. Out of which journals Ezra took many more passages in his book of the Chronicles, not omitting what he had written in these annals.

Ver. 21. Hezekiah slept with his fathers.] Here is no mention of his burial with his fathers in the city of David, but Ezra, in 2 Chron. xxxii. 33, tells us they buried him "in the chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David," and that all the people "did him honour at his death."

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Manasseh's reign. 3 His great idolatry. 10 His wickedness causeth prophecies against Judah. 17 Amon succeedeth him. 19 Amon's wicked reign. 23 He being slain by his servants, and those murderers slain by the people, Josiah is made king.

1 MANASSEH was twelve years old when he began to reign, and reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hephzi-bah.

2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, after the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

3 For he built up again the high places which Hezekiah his father had destroyed; and he reared up altars for Baal, and made a grove, as did Ahab king of Israel; and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served them.

4 And he built altars in the house of the LORD, of which the LORD said, In Jerusalem will I put my name.

5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the LORD.

6 And he made his son pass through the fire, and observed times, and used enchantments, and dealt with familiar spirits and wizards: he wrought much wickedness in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

7 And he set a graven image of the grove that he had made in the house, of which the LORD said to David, and to Solomon his son, In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen out of all tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:

8 Neither will I make the feet of Israel move any more out of the land which I gave their fathers; only if they will observe to do according to all that I have commanded them, and according to all the law that my servant Moses commanded them.

9 But they hearkened not: and Manasseh seduced them to do more evil than did the nations whom the LORD destroyed before the children of Israel.

CHAPTER XXI.

Ver. 1. Manasseh—reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem.] The years wherein he was captive in Babylon (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11) must be comprehended in this number.

Ver. 2. He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord.] He set up the gentile worship again: for being young, he was easily drawn aside by the princes and nobles, who never heartily joined in Hezekiah's reformation, but were in all probability displeased at it, and so revolted as soon as he was dead. For one cannot conceive how such a sudden change should be made in religion, and such gross idolatry restored, but from the general corruption of the great men who had the management of this young king.

Ver. 3. He—worshipped all the host of heaven, and served them.] The sun, the moon, and the stars, as Procopius Gazæus explains it.

Ver. 4. He built altars] To the gods of the neighbouring nations.

In the house of the Lord, &c.] In the very sanctuary itself; for the outward courts are mentioned in the next verse. Where God appointed that he himself alone should be worshipped (2 Sam. vii. 13).

Ver. 5. He built altars—in the two courts of the house of the Lord.] The inner court, which was that of the priests, and the outward, which was that of the people, were profaned, together with the sanctuary.

Ver. 6. And he made his son pass through the fire,] In 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6, it is said he caused his children to pass through the fire; which was a most abominable practice, strictly forbidden by Moses upon pain of death (Lev. xviii. 21. xx. 2, 3).

Observed times, and used enchantments,] See Lev. xix. 21. Deut. xviii. 10, 11.

Dealt with familiar spirits and wizards:] See Lev. xix. 31.

He wrought much wickedness, &c.] For there were none before him who committed such things as these, which were the highest provocations of God's displeasure.

Ver. 7. He set a graven image—in the house,] The Hebrew words in this place are pesel haasherah, which our Selden hath well resolved (by comparing this with other texts) signify a wooden image of Ashtaroth, or Astarte (Syntagm. ii. De Diis Syris, cap. 2). For Baal and Astarte were chief gods of the Sidonians, whose worship was introduced by Ahab, whom Manasseh imitated (ver. 3). I observed before what God said to David, and what he said to Solomon is recorded 1 Kings viii. 29. ix. 3. But Manasseh endeavoured to make the name of the God of Israel to be forgotten, by placing other gods in his house.

Ver. 8.] This promise was included in the choice God made of Jerusalem to fix his dwelling-place there, which was a security to them against all their enemies, if they proved obedient to him.

Ver. 9. They hearkened not:] They had always been a rebellious people.

Manasseh seduced them, &c.] But in his reign their wickedness was grown to such a height, that it exceeded all that the people of Canaan had done; whom God expelled to make room for the Israelites. For he broke all the laws of Moses, and worshipped more

10 ¶ And the LORD spake by his servants the prophets, saying,

11 Because Manasseh king of Judah hath done these abominations, and hath done wickedly above all that the Amorites did, which were before him, and hath made Judah also to sin with his idols :

12 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Behold, I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that whosoever heareth of it, both his ears shall tingle.

13 And I will stretch over Jerusalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the house of Ahab ; and I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it, and turning it upside down.

14 And I will forsake the remnant of mine inheritance, and deliver them into the hand of their enemies ; and they shall become a prey and a spoil to all their enemies ; idols than they did. We never read of horses consecrated to the sun till his time (see xxiii. 11), who in all probability brought in that idolatry.

Ver. 10. And the Lord spake by—the prophets,] Abarbinel makes account that Hosea, Joel, Nahum, and Habakkuk all prophesied in his days. And some think Obadiah also, and Isaiah : who, as the Jews say, was sawn asunder by him.

Ver. 11. Because Manasseh—hath done wickedly above all that the Amorites did,] The whole people of Canaan are comprehended under the name of Amorites ; who were most eminent of all the seven nations (see Gen. xv. 16).

And hath made Judah also to sin with his idols :] They were too much inclined to idolatry, by the long corruptions that had been among them ; but he made them far worse than otherwise they would have been. For, as Jeremiah charges them, in the next reign but one, “according to the number of their cities were their gods, and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem they set up altars to that shameful thing, to burn incense to Baal” (Jer. xi. 13).

Ver. 12. Whosoever heareth of it, both his ears shall tingle.] The report of it shall strike terror and horror into men, as Procopius Gazeus expounds it (see 1 Sam. iii. 11).

Ver. 13. I will stretch over Jerusalem the line of Samaria,] A metaphor from those who set out men's lots and portions, by drawing a line to divide them : and is as much as to say, he would give to Jerusalem the same measure that he had done to Samaria ; that is, pull it down to the ground ; consume some of them by famine, others by the sword, and carry the rest into captivity, as the same Procopius glosses.

And the plummet of the house of Ahab :] As they imitated his sin, so they should have his punishment ; whose house was utterly destroyed. It seems to be a metaphor from builders, who measure with a line and a plummet what part of a building shall stand, and what be demolished.

I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish,] That is, leave no more people in it than you see any thing in a dish after it is emptied, and wiped, and turned upside down ; as the manner is when it is perfectly cleaned. So the meaning is, I will cleanse her of all her inhabitants, and leave none remaining. The Hebrew word we translate dish, the LXX. translate ἀλάβαστρος, “an alabaster box” of precious ointment, as the Chaldee translates it selucta, in which the Greek word λικνυδός lurks (as the illustrious Span-

16 Moreover Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to another ; beside his sin wherewith he made Judah to sin, in doing that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

17 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and all that he did, and his sin that he sinned, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah ?

18 And Manasseh slept with his fathers, and was buried in the garden of his own house, in the garden of Uzza : and Amon his son reigned in his stead.

hemius observes upon Callimachus's hymn in Palad. ver. 13), signifying that Jerusalem was once in high esteem with God, like a precious ointment ; but having lost its savour, he would reject her as a man doth such ointment when it is nothing worth.

Ver. 14. The remnant of mine inheritance,] That is, Judah, who alone was left when the ten tribes were gone.

They shall become a prey and a spoil] As their brethren, the children of Israel, had been.

Ver. 15. Because they have done that which was evil] God now intended to punish them for all their former rebellions, ever since they were a people ; which Manasseh had completed, whose sin was so great, that it is sometimes mentioned as the sole cause of their captivity (see Jer. xv. 4).

Ver. 16. Moreover Manasseh shed innocent blood very much,] Upon which words Procopius Gazeus thus glosses : “He chiefly destroyed those who opposed themselves to his impiety, and denounced the divine anger against him (that is, the prophets). They say he caused the prophet Isaiah to be sawed in sunder.” So the Jews say in the Babylonian Talmud, in the Treatise Jebamoth, and Justin Martyr in his dialogue with Trypho the Jew, and St. Jerome upon Isa. xx. 27. Nay, the words of the apostle, Heb. xi. 37, ἐπιδοκίμασαν are commonly referred to this, as primæ Usher observes in his Annals, ad. a. m. 3306.

Till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to another ;] Top-full, as we speak. For it is a metaphor from measures wet or dry, when they are filled up to the brim.

Beside his sin wherewith he made Judah to sin.] That is, besides his abominable idolatry.

Ver. 17. The rest of the acts of Manasseh,—are they not written, &c.] All that he did in his captivity, and after, was written in the journals, from whence Ezra took what we find in 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11, &c.

Ver. 18. Manasseh—was buried in the garden of his own house, in the garden of Uzza :] Some think this was the place where Uzziah was buried (2 Chron. xxvi. 23), and that he chose to be buried here, as unworthy, because of his manifold sins (of which he repented), to be laid in the common sepulchre of the kings of Judah.

Ver. 19. Amon—reigned two years] Which is the number of years to which the sons of those kings arrived, who provoked God to anger ; as some of the Jews observe in the son of Jeroboam, the son of Baasha, and the son of Ahab (1 Kings xv. 25. xvi. 8. xxii. 51).

Meshullemeth, the daughter of Haruz of Jotbah.

20 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as his father Manasseh did.

21 And he walked in all the way that his fathers walked in, and served the idols that his fathers served, and worshipped them :

22 And he forsook the LORD God of his fathers, and walked not in the way of the LORD.

23 ¶ And the servants of Amon conspired

Ver. 20. He did that which was evil—as his father Manasseh did.] He imitated him in all things but in his repentance, as is observed, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 23.

Ver. 21. Served the idols] For he was bred up in idolatry, and solemnly consecrated by his father to the service of Moloch (ver. 6).

Ver. 22. Walked not in the way of the Lord.] As Hezekiah, and Jotham, and others of his pious ancestors had done. There are two doctors also in the chapter Chelek, the one of which saith, he burnt the book of the law; the other, that he lay with his own mother.

Ver. 23. The servants of Amon—slew the king in his own house.] As he forsook God, whose servant he ought to have been; so his servants forsook him, and murdered him in his own palace.

Ver. 24.] It was a thing of such pernicious example to kill their king, though very bad, that the people against him, and slew the king in his own house.

24 And the people of the land slew all them that had conspired against king Amon; and the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.

25 Now the rest of the acts of Amon which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah ?

26 And he was buried in his sepulchre in the garden of Uzza : and Josiah his son reigned in his stead.

would not suffer it to go unpunished. The common people seem to have been better disposed than the great men, who it is probable, were engaged in the conspiracy against Amon. But it is not likely that the common people took upon them to constitute a king, but their elders and great men met, together with the people, upon such occasions as this, to declare to whom the right of succession belonged. Therefore, by the "people of the land," must be meant the people assembled in the common council of the nation.

Ver. 25.] There is nothing said here of him, but that he was a gross idolater: which was not the ground of the conspiracy against him; but it is likely was related in the book here mentioned.

Ver. 26. He was buried] He was buried either in his father's sepulchre, or in one that he made for himself in the same place.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Josiah's good reign. 3 He taketh care for the repair of the temple. 8 Hilkiah having found a book of the law, Josiah sendeth to Huldah to inquire of the Lord. 15 Huldah prophesieth the destruction of Jerusalem, but respite thereof in Josiah's time.

1 JOSIAH was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jedidah, the daughter of Adaiah of Boscath.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, and walked in all the way of David his father, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left.

3 ¶ And it came to pass in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, that the king sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, the son of Meshullam, the scribe, to the house of the LORD, saying,

4 Go up to Hilkiah the high priest, that he may sum the silver which is brought into the house of the LORD, which the keepers of the door have gathered of the people :

5 And let them deliver it into the hand of the doers of the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD : and let them give it to the doers of the work which is in the house of the LORD, to repair the breaches of the house,

6 Unto carpenters, and builders, and masons, and to buy timber and hewn stone to repair the house.

7 Howbeit there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, because they dealt faithfully.

CHAP. XXII.

Ver. 1. His mother's name was Jedidah,] Who it is likely was a good woman, and took care to instil early good principles into him.

Ver. 2. He did that which was right, &c.] In him was verified the words of Solomon (Prov. xx. 11), "Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right." For when he had reigned eight years, while he was yet young, as Ezra observes, he began to reform all abuses in religion (2 Chron. xxxiv. 3, &c.).

Ver. 3. The eighteenth year] This was in the eighteenth year of his reign, not of his age, as we are told, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 8.

Ver. 4. Go up to Hilkiah the high priest, that he may sum the silver which is brought into the house of the Lord,] He ordered him to give him an exact account of what money had been offered by pious people, for the reparation of the house of the Lord; as had been done in the reign of Jehoash (xii. 4, &c.).

Which the keepers of the door have gathered of the people :] These were the Levites, as we learn from 2 Chron. xxxiv. 9.

Ver. 5. Deliver it into the hand of the doers of the work,] They entrusted certain persons with the money, who were to oversee the work (whose names are recorded in 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12), and they delivered it to the workmen to buy materials for the reparation of the house, as it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 6. Builders,] Builders (as distinguished from carpenters and masons) were such as laid the timber and the stone together, which the other had prepared.

Ver. 7. There was no reckoning made—because they

8 ¶ And Hilkiab the high priest said unto Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the Lord. And Hilkiab gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it.

9 And Shaphan the scribe came to the king, and brought the king word again, and said, Thy servants have gathered the money that was found in the house, and have delivered it into the hand of them that do the work, that have the oversight of the house of the Lord.

10 And Shaphan the scribe shewed the king, saying, Hilkiab the priest hath delivered me a book. And Shaphan read it before the king.

11 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, that he rent his clothes.

12 And the king commanded Hilkiab the priest, and Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Achbor the son of Michaiah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asahiah a servant of the king's, saying, 13 Go ye, inquire of the Lord for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found: for great is the wrath of the Lord that is kindled against us, because our fathers have not hearkened to the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us.

14 So Hilkiab the priest, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Asahiah, went unto Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvah, the son of Harhas, keeper of the wardrobe; (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the college;) and they communed with her.

dealt faithfully.] They were men of such approved honesty (like those in the days of Jehoash, xii. 15), that there was no need to call them to an account how they laid out the money.

Ver. 8. I have found the book of the law, &c.] The book of Deuteronomy, saith Procopius Gazæus. But it was rather the whole book of the law written by Moses; that authentic copy which by God's command was laid up in the most holy place (Deut. xxxi. 24, &c.). About which the Hebrew doctors made great difficulties in their explication of this place, particularly R. Lipman in his Nitzaeon, out of which Hottinger hath alleged a long passage concerning this matter, in his Historia Ecclesiastica, N. T. sect. 16. par. iv. p. 137, where he justly thinks it a wonder that Josiah should so early fear God, and begin to reform religion, if he had never seen the book of the law before this time. And how should the people have kept such a passover, and the priests been so well instructed in the rites of it this very year (2 Chron. xxxiv. 19)? For the copies of the book now found could not be so soon made and dispersed everywhere as to teach them these things. It is most likely therefore, nay certain, that though this was the original book, yet the Jews had many copies of the law among them, though some of them perhaps imperfect or corrupted. For they report that Manasseh blotted the name of Jehovah out of all the books he could find. Hilkiab, therefore, rejoiced that he had found the original, by which all might be corrected. Which had been hid, it is probable, from the impious fury of their idolatrous kings, in some secret place of the temple, where it was now found when they were about to repair it: and the finding it at this very time, when Josiah was making a reformation of religion, could not but be looked upon as a remarkable providence, which very much affected him, as we read afterward.

Ver. 9. He gives him an account that he had executed his commands, given him ver. 4—6.

Ver. 10. Shaphan read it before the king.] Some part of it. It is said, indeed, in 2 Chron. xxxiv. 30, that "they read in the ears of the people all the book of the law." But that was done afterward, and was done by parcels, not all at one time. And so it follows here, xxiii. 2, that Josiah read, that is, caused some by his order to read, all the words of the book of the covenant that was found in the house of the Lord, in the ears of all the people.

Ver. 11. When the king had heard—the law—he rent his clothes.] Being very much affrighted when he heard the dreadful threatenings against the transgressor of the law, read out of the book of Deuteronomy. At which the book opened either by the special providence of God, or by the design of Shaphan, who had read the book before he brought it to the king (ver. 8). The Jerusalem Talmud, and from thence Abarbinel, saith, that he happened to read the place where the punishment of their king is denounced (Deut. xxviii. 36), or, that he observed the time drew near, when the punishments God threatened would be inflicted, for their long offences against this law. According to what the king himself here saith, ver. 13, "Great is the wrath of the Lord that is kindled against us," &c. By all which it is plain, the king had not written a copy of the law with his own hand, according to the command, Deut. xvii. 8. Disuse often cancels the most excellent laws. For it is too probable they had a long time neglected also to read the law publicly the seventh year (Deut. xxxiv. 9, 10).

Ver. 12. Shaphan—and Asahiah.] Shaphan was a servant of the king, being secretary, or some such officer; but Asahiah, I suppose, was one that waited on his person, and was always about him.

Ver. 13. Go ye, inquire of the Lord for me, and for the people, &c.] Of Jerusalem. I suppose he sent them to know whether there were any hopes his anger might be appeased, and by what means.

Ver. 14. So Hilkiab the priest, &c. went unto Huldah the prophetess.] It is certain that both Jeremiah and Zephaniah prophesied in the reign of Josiah; therefore it may seem strange that they did not resort to one of them. Of which Abarbinel gives this account: That Jeremiah was at this time absent from Jerusalem being gone to convert the ten tribes; or rather, being at his own house in Anathoth. And the same he supposes of Zephaniah, that he was not near at hand; and therefore they went to Huldah, who lived at Jerusalem; and the rather, as some suppose, because women are more inclined to pity and compassion than men. But this is an absurd reason, as Abarbinel well observes: for the prophets did not speak according to their own inclinations, but as God dictated to them. The Jews have a tradition in Massebeth Megillah, that eight prophets descended from Rahab, whereof Huldah was one. And Kimchi upon this place saith, Our doctors write, that three prophesied in the days of Josiah; viz. Jeremiah in the streets or villages, Zephaniah in the synagogues, and Huldah among the women.

She dwelt—in the college;] The Hebrew word mishneh, which we translate college (and which the Targum takes to signify a school), is in the margin of our bibles, translated the second part. For there were three walls about Jerusalem, as Abarbinel observes. Within the first of which lived artificers, and the common people; within the second, the better sort, the wise men,

15 ¶ And she said unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Tell the man that sent you to me,

16 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read :

17 Because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands : therefore my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and shall not be quenched.

18 But to the king of Judah which sent you to inquire of the LORD, thus shall ye say to him, prophets, and prophetesses, lived ; and within the third, was the mountain of the Lord, as they speak. Now of the middle part of Jerusalem they think the holy writer here speaks, in which Huldah dwelt.

Ver. 15.] She speaks in the prophetic style, and with great boldness tells him the plain truth.

Ver. 16.] All the plagues threatened in Deut. xxviii. and other places.

Ver. 17.] This was the answer to the king's inquiry ; that the decree of God was peremptory and irresistible, against Judah and Jerusalem, for their extirpation ; and she adds the reason thereof.

Ver. 18. As touching the words which thou hast heard ;] As far as they concerned his person.

Ver. 19.] Here are four tokens, as some observe, of a true repentance and conversion unto God. First, softness of heart ; which is opposed to that hardness which arises from unbelief of God's threatenings ; because faith makes men tenderly affected with them. Secondly, great humility, arising from a sense of his unworthiness of any mercy. These two were inward : the other were outward tokens of this inward

Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, As touching the words which thou hast heard ;

19 Because thy heart was tender, and thou hast humbled thyself before the LORD, when thou heardest what I spake against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, that they should become a desolation and a curse, and hast rent thy clothes, and wept before me ; I also have heard thee, saith the LORD.

20 Behold therefore, I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered into thy grave in peace ; and thine eyes shall not see all the evil which I will bring upon this place. And they brought the king word again.

sense ; which were rending his clothes, and weeping for his own, and for the public offences ; which moved God to take some pity upon him, though he resolved to destroy the nation.

Ver. 20. Behold therefore, I will gather thee unto thy fathers,] The time hastening for their utter destruction, God would let him live but a short time ; which was a mercy to him, that he might not see the miseries that were coming upon them.

Thou shalt be gathered into thy grave in peace, &c.] Though he was slain in battle (xxiii. 29), yet " he went to his grave in peace ; because, as the next words explain it, he did not live to see the calamities which were inevitably threatened to come upon the nation ; but left his kingdom in a peaceable condition. For the Egyptians, who slew him, gave them no long disturbance, and the Babylonians were not yet ready to come up against them.

And they brought the king word again.] Who immediately set himself to do all the good he could for his time ; though he could not prevent the evil that was coming.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Josiah causeth the book to be read in a solemn assembly. 3 He reneweth the covenant of the Lord. 4 He destroyeth idolatry. 15 He burnt dead men's bones upon the altar of Beth-el, as was forepropheesied. 21 He kept a most solemn passover. 24 He put away witches and all abomination. 26 God's final wrath against Judah. 29 Josiah, provoking Pharaoh-nechoh, is slain at Megiddo. 31 Jehoahaz, succeeding him, is imprisoned by Pharaoh-nechoh, who made Jehoiakim king. 36 Jehoiakim's wicked reign.

1 AND the king sent, and they gathered unto him all the elders of Judah and of Jerusalem.

2 And the king went up into the house of the LORD, and all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem with him, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, both small and great : and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant which was found in the house of the LORD.

3 ¶ And the king stood by a pillar, and made a covenant before the LORD, to walk after the LORD, and to keep his commandments and his testimonies and his statutes with all their heart and all their soul, to perform the words of this

CHAP. XXIII.

Ver. 1. The king—gathered unto him all the elders of Judah & of Jerusalem.] Whom he acquainted with what he intended to do ; and, I suppose, had their consent, which gave the greater authority to what follows.

Ver. 2. The prophets,] Jeremiah and Zephaniah were the principal prophets ; and, it is likely, there were many more who are not mentioned.

And he read—all the words of the book of the covenant] He ordered some to read (xxii. 10) in several places, so that all might hear ; for it is not likely that one man's voice could reach so great a multitude.

Which was found in the house of the Lord.] And some of the Jews say, was found lying open at that very place, when those words presented themselves (Deut. xxviii. 36), which awakened the king to cause all the law of God to be read to them.

Ver. 3. The king stood by a pillar,] Unto which his throne adjoined ; wherein the king was placed when he came to the temple, as the Hebrew doctors will have it. The king's seat, saith Jacob Juda Leo, was in the court of the Israelites, at the entrance into the court of the priests, by a marble pillar. There he sat when he came into the temple to worship God : there Josiah was made king by Jehoiaada (xi. 14) : there Hezekiah read before the Lord the blasphemous letter which the king of Assyria sent him (xix. 14) ; and there Josiah now made a covenant with God that covenant that were written in this book. And all the people stood to the covenant.

4 And the king commanded Hilkiah the high priest, and the priests of the second order, and the keepers of the door, to bring forth out of the temple of the Lord all the vessels that were made for Baal, and for the grove, and for all the host of heaven: and he burned them without Jerusalem in the fields of Kidron, and carried the ashes of them unto Beth-el.

5 And he put down the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn he would serve him (see Vitringa, Proleg. ad lib. De Synag. Veteri, cap. 4).

To keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes] That is, all his laws of all sorts.

With all their heart, and with all their soul,] He made this covenant in his own name, and in the name of all the people, whom he engaged faithfully to God's service.

And all the people stood to the covenant.] They gave their consent to the covenant; standing before the Lord as he did, and not stirring from the place where he propounded it unto them.

Ver. 4. And the king commanded Hilkiah the high priest,] It was very proper to commit the reformation of the house of God to the high-priest; and those who ministered under him. Some will have Hilkiah to be the father of Jeremiah, as is asserted by Greg. Abulfaragius, in his Histor. Dynastarum, p. 68. Which is an error; for Jeremiah was a priest of Anathoth, whither Abiathar was banished, of the seed of Ithamar, from whom it is likely he was descended (1 Kings ii. 26).

The priests of the second order,] They that were under the high-priests; especially the sagan (as the Targum here hath it), who was the vicar of the high-priest, and stood at his right hand when he officiated, as the Jews tell us in Joma, where they say a man could not be made a high-priest unless he had been first a sagan.

The keepers of the door,] Whom the Jews call amarcelim; which word we find xii. 10, where the Targum expounds it, "priests that were treasurers:" that is, such Levites as had the custody of the sacred money, which was for the repair of the temple. And the Hebrew phrase is not much different, "the keepers of the thresholds;" that is the entrance into those chambers (as Hottinger thinks) wherein were kept such things as were of public use in the temple. Of which there were seven: wherein the priests' garments were laid up, and other such-like things.

All the vessels.] The word we translate vessels or instruments, signifies all the various furniture belonging to Baal, and the rest of the false gods, which served either for offering of incense, or sacrifices, or the vestments of the priests, &c.

Baal,] Who was the principal idol, whose worship Ahab first introduced, and Manasseh restored after Jehu had abolished it, as was said before, xxi. 3.

The grove,] I observed before, that by a grove, is meant the image or idol of the grove; which Ahab had brought in also (see there, xxi. 3. 7, and here below, ver. 6).

All the host of heaven:] That is, the planets, and the rest of the stars, which the Sabæans, and Chaldeans, and other eastern people, worshipped. Whom the Jews impiously imitated, though they had been taught, in the very beginning of their law, that the sun, the moon, and all the stars, were all created by their God.

incense in the high places in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem; them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the planets, and to all the host of heaven.

6 And he brought out the grove from the house of the Lord, without Jerusalem, unto the brook Kidron, and burned it at the brook Kidron, and stamped it small to powder, and cast the powder thereof upon the graves of the children of the people.

7 And he brake down the houses of the so-

He burned them—and carried the ashes of them unto Beth-el.] Which place (where, as Kimchi speaks, was the very foundation of idolatry) he polluted and profaned, by casting this filth there; that they who were wont to worship the calves in that place might avoid it, and not come near it.

Ver. 5. Idolatrous priests,] These idolatrous priests are called chemarim in the Hebrew, because they were clothed in black garments (as Kimchi gives the reason, both upon this place and upon Zeph. i. 4): whereas the priests of the Most High were clothed in white; especially those whose genealogy was not questioned. They, indeed, who could not make out their descent, were clothed in a black habit, to distinguish them from undoubted priests; and so were they who had any defect or blemish in their body, as appears from the Talmud in Middoth. And indeed it is certain, that they among the heathens, who sacrificed to the infernal gods, were clothed with such vestments, as appears by Canidia in Horace, lib. i. sat. 8, and Medea in Apollonius Rhodius, lib. iii. ver. 861; from whence some think they had the name of μελαντφόροι, which we find in some ancient inscriptions. And thus the Egyptians bewailed Osiris, all which was suitable to their nightly sacrifices; wherein they were sad for the absence of the sun, who was meant by Osiris, as Gilbertus Cuperus observes in his Harpocrates, p. 129. And here now we have found the original of these chemarim, priests clothed in black. For it was a black ox which represented Osiris among the Egyptians, and it was covered μαύρῳ μίτῳ βύσσινῳ, "with a black silk garment;" from whence, in all likelihood, the priests came to be so clothed.

Them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon,] Here Baal is distinguished from the sun; and therefore signifies the same with Belus, who was a deified king; and indeed it is highly probable, that not only Baal, but Moloch and Adonis, were the names only of some very potent kings, who were adored when they were dead, and in time were thought to be real gods.

And to the planets, and to all the host of heaven.] The Hebrew word mazaloth, which the LXX. pronounce mazuroth, is thought by Procopius Gazæus to be the name of a star, and most likely the evening star: which others take to signify a constellation, as we translate it in the margin; or all the twelve signs. For the Jewish astronomers call the zodiac, ophanhamazaloth, the circle of the signs.

Ver. 6. He brought out the grove] By the grove, as I have observed before, is meant the "image of the grove," or, in plainer words, Ashtaroth: for so Procopius Gazæus saith, that where the LXX. translate this word the grove, others render it Ἀστὴρ, or Ἀστάρωδ; that is, Ἀστάρω, or "Venus." For τῆς Ἀποδείτης τῷ ἑσπέρῳ ἵδον ἑστῆσαν ἐν τῷ Διὶ νεῖον, "they had set up the statue of Venus in the temple of God" (see Selden, Syntag. ii. De Diis Syris, cap. 2).

domites, that were by the house of the LORD, where the women wove hangings for the grove.

8 And he brought all the priests out of the cities of Judah, and defiled the high places where the priests had burned incense, from Geba to Beer-sheba, and brake down the high places of the gates that were in the entering in of the gate of Joshua the governor of the city, which were on a man's left hand at the gate of the city.

9 Nevertheless the priests of the high places

Burned it—and cast the powder thereof upon the graves of the children of the people.] Which by the law were impure and unclean; and such he declared these ashes to be, and actually made them to be unclean, that none might touch them: much less gather them up as sacred relics. And so Kimchi expounds this place. He brought forth the wooden statue of Diana, which Manasseh had placed there (xxi. 7), and having burnt it, and stamped it to powder, scattered the ashes on the graves of the idolaters, in detestation and contempt of their idolatry.

Ver. 7. And he brake down the houses of the sodomites, that were by the house of the Lord,] From this some gather they were come to such a height of wickedness, that there were those among them who exposed their bodies to be abused contrary to nature, in honour of those filthy deities which they worshipped. For these public houses were near the temple of the Lord; and therefore these were persons consecrated to impurity, contrary to Deut. xxiii. 17 (see 1 Kings xiv. 24). And so the ancient interpreters here understand corporal filthiness: only the Chaldee translates it, "the houses of things consecrated to idols." R. Solomon Jarchi thinks it probable that among those who worshipped the statues of the moon, or Venus, there were those who prostituted themselves to filthy mixtures. But Mr. Selden, by kedeshim (which we translate sodomites), understands the priests of Astarte, whom St. Jerome upon Hosea iv. calls exsecratos, upon pretence of greater purity, depriving themselves of those parts that serve for procreation of children.

Where the women wove hangings for the grove.] For Asherah, or Astarte, before mentioned; as Selden expounds it in the forenamed place. These hangings, or curtains, encompassed the image, and made a kind of house for it, as the Hebrew word imports, which the Greeks called ναῖσκος and ναῖδα, "little temples or habitations." Into those tents the worshippers went, and there committed all manner of lewdness; for they had not arrived to such a degree of impudence, as not to seek for privacy in their filthiness.

Ver. 8. He brought all the priests out of the cities of Judah.] Would not suffer them to dwell there, to corrupt the people.

Defiled the high places] He made them, saith Kimchi, receptacles of impurity, by casting dead carcasses there, and other such-like unclean things; that so he might remove out of the people's hearts all idolatry: for where sweet odours were wont before to be, there was nothing but stench.

From Geba to Beer-sheba,] That is, throughout the whole country; for Geba was in the northern parts, and Beer-sheba in the southern (see 1 Kings xv. 22. Judg. xx. 1).

The high places of the gates] The high places of the gates seem to have been erected there, to offer incense to those tutelar gods, unto whom their idolatrous kings had committed the protection of their city. And Kimchi thinks that the governor of the city had his private household god, and a portable altar where-came not up to the altar of the LORD in Jerusalem, but they did eat of the unleavened bread among their brethren.

10 And he defiled Topheth, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire to Molech.

11 And he took away the horses that the kings of Judah had given to the sun, at the entering in of the house of the LORD, by the chamber of on he offered to his domestic idol. Which Josiah did not spare; but let the greatest men see his impartial zeal against all idolatry.

Ver. 9.] He mixed mercy together with severity. For though he did not suffer those priests who had offered incense in those high places, (directly contrary to the law, Deut. xii. 11), to offer sacrifices at God's altar; because they had defiled themselves with that sinful worship, though to the true God; yet he permitted them to partake of the bread of the priests, which comprehends all those parts of any sacrifice that were the priest's portion. He mentions, indeed, only the meat-offering, which was to be of unleavened bread (Lev. ii. 4, 5, 11); but that is put by a synecdoche for all other offerings belonging to the priests. So that they were put into the condition of those priests that had any blemish: who might not "offer the bread of their God" (Lev. xxi. 17—21); but they "might eat the bread of their God, both of the holy and most holy" (Lev. xxi. 22. Ezek. xlv. 10).

Ver. 10. He defiled Topheth,] By throwing all manner of filth into it, as well as by throwing down the altars on which they sacrificed their children, as the Syriac and Arabic seem to understand it.

Pass through the fire] Though a great number of the Hebrew doctors think that their passing their children through the fire, was nothing more than making them pass between two fires, whereby they were consecrated to that idol; yet it is certain as I have shown before (xvi. 3), that they offered their children sometimes as burnt-sacrifices to idols; which was a thing so horrid, that perhaps they invented this instead of it, to make them pass through two fires: or, perhaps, the opinion of Maimonides may be true, that they did not burn their children to Molech, as they did to other idols; but the entire worship of Molech was abolished, by making children only pass through the fire to him; as his words are in his book of Idolatry, cap. 6. sect. 5.; which may be confirmed from Jer. xix. 5, where he saith, "they burnt their sons with fire unto Baal" in Topheth (see Selden, Syntag. i. De Diis Syris, cap. 6, where he largely treats of this).

Ver. 11. He took away] That is, he destroyed, as the Hebrew word signifies, ver. 5, where we translate it, "he put down the chemarim;" that is, destroyed or slew those priests, as Bochartus interprets it. So Lev. xxvi. 6, we translate the same word, "I will rid evil beasts out of the land;" that is, destroy them. The LXX. here translate it καταράσας, "he burnt" the horses; as before, καταράσας χωμήρας, "he burnt the priests." Though, perhaps, in both places it should be καταράσας, "he made to cease," as the Hebrew word literally signifies.

Had given to the sun,] That is, had consecrated to the sun; as Lev. xx. 2, they are said to give their children to Molech. A great number of authors tell us, that among several nations these animals were sacred to the sun (as hawks and some other creatures were), because of their swiftness in their course. But it is uncertain whether they were kept to be sacrificed to the sun (as they were among the Massagetae, Persians, Armenians, and other people mentioned by Bochartus), or only to be led forth in pomp (as some of the Jews speak) every morning to meet the rising sun. Or, as others take it, the worshippers of the sun got upon these horses early in the morning, and rode out to adore the sun at its rising (see Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. xi. cap. 10).

Nathan-melech the chamberlain, which was in the suburbs, and burned the chariots of the sun with fire.

12 And the altars that were on the top of the upper chamber of Abaz, which the kings of Judah had made, and the altars which Manasseh had made in the two courts of the house of the Lord, did the king beat down, and brake them down from thence, and cast the dust of them into the brook Kidron.

13 And the high places that were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Israel had builded for Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile.

Nathan-Melech, the chamberlain.] Or, the eunuch, who was some great officer in the court.

Which was in the suburbs.] So the Targum interprets the word parvarim; which most translations retain as the name of a place, unto which the street in which these horses were kept reached; from the chamber of Nathan-melech. He was the principal officer, perhaps, that looked after them: and had the oversight of all those stables which were built from the temple gate to Parvarim. And perhaps he rode out himself every morning upon one of them, to salute the rising sun in the king's name.

And brake the chariots of the sun with fire.] The ancients fancied the sun itself was carried about in a chariot (as Bochart observes in the place above mentioned), and therefore chariots as well as horses were dedicated to it. Which he makes an argument, that they were not mere brazen, silver, or golden statues of horses that are here meant; but real living horses to draw those chariots (see Vossius, De Orig. et Prog. Idol. lib. xi. cap. 4). Some of those who think they are only imagines equorum et quadrigarum (as Selden speaks, Syntag. ii. De Diis Syris, cap. 8), "images of horses and chariots," made of some metal or other, imagine they were represented in the shape of griffins, as the famous M. Spoon thought (see Dr. Hyde, De Relig. Vet. Pers. p. 117).

Ver. 12.] They were not satisfied with the public altars they had made, in a vast number of high places: but the roofs of their houses being flat, they made altars there (see Jer. xix. 13. xxxii. 29. Zeph. i. 5), and particularly upon the king's palace, where they worshipped the sun, moon, and stars. But this could not privilege them from destruction, that they were on the top of the king's house. It is said in 2 Chron. xxxiii. 13, that when Manasseh repented, he "took away all the altars he had made in the mount of the house of the Lord:" and I suppose those in the courts of the priests and of the people were then removed. But Amon set them up again in the very place where Manasseh had erected them; and so they are here called his altars.

Ver. 13. Mount of corruption.] That is, mount Olivet (1 Kings xi. 2), which was anciently called harmischah, the mount of unction; because of the olives that grew there in great plenty; but by way of contempt and scorn, was called by the prophets 14 And he brake in pieces the images, and cut down the groves, and filled their places with the bones of men.

15 ¶ Moreover the altar that was in Beth-el, and the high place which Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, had made, both that altar and the high place he brake down, and burned the high place, and stamped it small to powder, and burned the grove.

16 And as Josiah turned himself, he spied the sepulchres that were there in the mount, and sent, and took the bones out of the sepulchres, and burned them upon the altar, and polluted it, according to the word of the Lord which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed these words.

17 Then he said, What title is that that I see?

harmaschith, the "mount of corruption," because of the idols that were placed there, whereby the people were corrupted in their religion.

Which Solomon the king of Israel had builded.] It is not to be doubted but these detestable idols had been taken away by such religious kings as Asa, Jehoshaphat, and Hezekiah: but they were restored again by their impious successors, in the very same place, and the same figure with those ancient ones; and so are here called those that Solomon made, because he was the first author of them, or at least permitted them to be made by his wives, and connived at their worship, as R. Levi thinks.

Did the king defile.] By dead men's bones, and other unclean things, which he threw into those places.

Ver. 14. Cut down the groves.] Wherein the images were.

And filled their places with the bones of men.] Which he caused to be digged out of their graves and burnt; being the bones of idolatrous priests (ver. 16).

Ver. 15. Moreover the altar that was at Beth-el.] For this city and the territories thereof had been under the power of Judah, ever since the reign of Abijah (2 Chron. xiii. 19, 20).

Burned the grove.] That is, he burnt the golden calf, as Mr. Selden thinks; for Asherah commonly signifies some image, as he shows in his discourse about Astarte, whose image it is likely this was; for the golden calf, as the Jews think, was carried away before this. But that is not certain: and Selden's opinion is probable, that the golden calves were made of wood gilded over, and thence called golden, which were easily burnt (Syntag. i. De Diis Syris, cap. 4).

Ver. 16. As Josiah turned himself.] Looking round about him; being resolved to trust no man's eyes but his own, in discovering the monuments of idolatry.

He spied the sepulchres.] It is not said whose sepulchres they were; but it is probable of the idolatrous priests (for in the Chronicles he is said to have burnt their bones), and of the prophets and great men, who had been instruments to promote Jeroboam's idolatry.

Took the bones out of the sepulchres, and burned them upon the altar, and polluted it.] For nothing was more unclean than that which had touched dead men's bones.

According to the word of the Lord.] Who foretold three hundred and sixty years ago these very things should be done by a king called Josiah (1 Kings xiii. 2).

Ver. 17. What title is that that I see? &c.] There was one stone, or pillar, I suppose, more eminent than the rest, with the name of the persons buried under it: and therefore called a title, because there was an inscription engraven upon it, according to the

And the men of the city told him, It is the sepulchre of the man of God, which came from Judah, and proclaimed these things that thou hast done against the altar of Beth-el.

18 And he said, Let him alone; let no man move his bones. So they let his bones alone, with the bones of the prophet that came out of Samaria.

19 And all the houses also of the high places that were in the cities of Samaria, which the kings of Israel had made to provoke the LORD to anger, Josiah took away, and did to them according to all the acts that he had done in Beth-el.

20 And he slew all the priests of the high places that were there upon the altars, and burned men's bones upon them, and returned to Jerusalem.

21 ¶ And the king commanded all the people, saying, Keep the passover unto the LORD your God, as it is written in the book of this covenant.

custom among the Jews (as now among us), to preserve thereby the memory of those they loved. The king was the more curious (as Rasi, and Kimchi also, tell the story out of the Midrasch) to know whose grave that was; because on one side of it he saw nettles and thistles grow, and on the other side myrtles and other odoriferous plants; signifying that there lay a true prophet and a false. For which there is no ground, but their fabulous fancy.

Ver. 18. Let no man move his bones.] It is pertinently observed by Joh. Wolfius, that if pious persons in those days had had the same opinion about relics which now is in the church of Rome, the king would not merely have ordered his bones to lie quiet and undisturbed, but put them into golden boxes, and carried them to Jerusalem, to be there religiously worshipped by the people.

Came out of Samaria.] That is, out of the country of Samaria.

Ver. 19. All the houses] What these houses were, whether places for worship, or for the habitation of the priests of the high places (mentioned in the next verse), is uncertain. It is most likely the former; because they provoked God to anger.

The cities of Samaria.] In such cities of Samaria as were in the possession of the king of Judah; for upon the fall of the Assyrian empire, many of the cities, no doubt, became subject to their old masters.

Josiah took away,] That is, he brake them down, and burnt them, and stamped them to powder (ver. 15).

Ver. 20. He slew all the priests of the high places that were there upon the altars.] There were some priests of the high places (of whom we read before, ver. 8, 9) that he did not kill; for they were such as sacrificed only unto God in the high places. But those whom he slew, were either the priests of Jeroboam who worshipped the calves, and had no right to the priesthood (but had invaded it by the favour of their king), or such priests of the order of Aaron as sacrificed to Baal, or other false gods.

Burned men's bones upon them,] Which was the highest pollution of those altars (ver. 13, 14).

Returned to Jerusalem.] Having made a progress through all the country, to abolish idolatrous worship where it was practised; he returned to Jerusalem, there to restore the solemnities of true religion.

Ver. 21.] Which he had bound them and himself to observe (ver. 3), and now tried them whether they 22 Surely there was not holden such a passover from the days of the judges that judged Israel, nor in all the days of the kings of Israel, nor of the kings of Judah;

23 But in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, wherein this passover was holden to the LORD in Jerusalem.

24 ¶ Moreover the workers with familiar spirits, and the wizards, and the images, and the idols, and all the abominations that were spied in the land of Judah and in Jerusalem, did Josiah put away, that he might perform the words of the law which were written in the book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the LORD.

25 And like unto him was there no king before him, that turned to the LORD with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses; neither after him arose there any like him.

26 ¶ Notwithstanding the LORD turned not would stand to the covenant, as they promised, by making a proclamation through the whole kingdom that they should keep this feast, which was a commemoration of the greatest benefit God ever bestowed on them, before the giving them the law, for it made them a free nation.

Ver. 22.] Since the time of the prophet Samuel, the last of their judges, there had never been such a great concourse of people at any passover, nor such a multitude of sacrifices offered; nor such an exact observation of the rites and ceremonies belonging to this feast. For in the time of Hezekiah many were absent: and many had not purified themselves as they ought: but now, as Rabbag expounds it, they were all turned to the Lord, and there were no idolaters nor apostates among them (see Selden, lib. i. De Syned. cap. 12. p. 478).

Ver. 23.] In the same year that he took care to have the temple repaired (xxii. 3), and to purge it from all idols (xxiii. 4), he restored the true worship of God to such purity, as it had not been in for some ages.

Ver. 24. The workers with familiar spirits, and the wizards,] Of which see what I have noted upon Lev. xix. 31. xx. 6.

The images,] In the Hebrew the teraphim, which were very ancient among idolaters, as I have observed upon the book of Genesis, xxxi. 19.

The idols,] Of which there were many sorts, that are all comprehended in this word.

The abominations] What these abominations were is not certain, but it is likely they were such as Ezekiel saw and described in aftertimes; when God showed him what odious things they committed secretly (see Ezek. viii. 6, 9, 10, 13, 15, &c). He had his spies, it is probable, to discover all secret idolatry, as well as public, which, being found out, he abolished as abominable unto God.

Ver. 25.] He doth not compare him with David and Hezekiah (as Procopius Gazæus here notes), but with other pious kings, such as Asa, Jehoshaphat, and Jehoram; who were far inferior to him in piety. And Hezekiah himself was not so exact, and did not make such a thorough search as he did, after all idolatrous practices. The nation also was so much corrupted since his days, by his son Manasseh, who reigned a long time, that it made the work of reformation more difficult in the time of Josiah. Yet in some regard Hezekiah excelled him; and therefore the same character is given of him xviii. 5, which is here given of from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the provocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal.

27 And the LORD said, I will remove Judah also out of my sight, as I have removed Israel, and will cast off this city Jerusalem which I have chosen, and the house of which I said, My name shall be there.

28 Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

Josiah; because of his trust in God, in the time of his greatest distress, for which he was very eminent. But as to repentance, Josiah was most exemplary.

Ver. 26.] Though Josiah was most sincere in what he did, and omitted nothing to restore the purity of God's worship among them; yet he could not procure the preservation of the nation from destruction, but only a forbearance of it for a time. For the people were so corrupted by Manasseh, that they rather complied with Josiah in his reformation, than heartily desired it, out of an inward affection to him. The innocent blood also shed by Manasseh was unpardonable (xxiv. 3, 4.) Of which the people it is likely approved, and so fell under an irreversible sentence of destruction (see Ezek. xxiv. 6.)

Ver. 27.] He peremptorily decreed that they should be carried away captive, as the ten tribes had been; and that his divine presence among them should not save them; but he would abandon his own dwelling-place, and, removing from them, leave them a prey to their enemies; which we find lively represented in Ezek. x. 18, 19, where the prophet saw the glory of the Lord departing from his house, and carried away by the cherubims.

This may seem strange, as Abarinel observes, that God should thus visit the sins of Manasseh, of which he had repented, and not be reconciled after Josiah had abolished all monuments of idolatry, and the Israelites had kept such a passover, as is before mentioned: unto which he answers, that though it be said Manasseh repented, yet it is not said he turned to God with all his heart, and with all his soul, as Josiah did. For Manasseh repented only when he was in great distress; and though he repented, the people did not; but fell to their idolatrous practices as soon as he was dead, following his wicked son Amon. Nay, he thinks in the days of Josiah, they were little better, as he gathers from the eleventh and twelfth of Jeremiah. To which may be added what we read in the prophet Zephaniah, who lived in the days of Josiah, and threatened in the name of God, "I will utterly consume all things from off the land, and consume both man and beast" (Zeph. i. 2, 3.) For they were still private idolaters, though they complied with the public reformation; swearing by the Lord, and by Milcom; and when the high places were taken away, worshipping the host of heaven upon the house-tops (ver. 5.)

Ver. 29. Pharaoh-nechoh] Whom Herodotus, in his second book, called Νεχός, and mentions the fight which he had with the Syrians, iv Μαγδόω, (see Usher's Annals, ad. A. M. 3394.)

Went up against the king of Assyria] Who was then king of Babylon; for he had subdued the Assyrians, and brought them under his empire. There are those, indeed, who think this happened before that time, and that this king of Egypt went to revenge the injuries done them by Sennacherib; and he hoped for the better success, because he was much weakened 29 ¶ In his days Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt went up against the king of Assyria to the river Euphrates: and king Josiah went against him; and he slew him at Megiddo, when he had seen him.

30 And his servants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo, and brought him to Jerusalem, and buried him in his own sepulchre. And the people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's stead.

31 ¶ Jehoahaz was twenty and three years by that slaughter the angel had made of his army; and because the Medes and Babylonians had rebelled against the Assyrians. But why Josiah should go to help the Assyrians no account can be given. Our forementioned primæ hath better expounded it, that as the king of Persia, having subdued Babylon and Assyria, is called the king of Assyria (Ezra vi. 22:) so here the king of Babylon, having subdued Assyria, is called the king of Assyria. Besides that, Babylon was anciently accounted a part of Assyria; and the land of the Chaldeans is said to be founded by the Assyrians (Isa. xxiii. 13.) And thus Josephus expressly saith (lib. x. Antiq. cap. 6,) Μηδὼς πολεμῶν καὶ τοῖς Βαβυλωνίοις, οἱ τὴν Ἀσσυρίαν κατέλαυνται ὄντι, "The king of Egypt came to fight the Medes and Babylonians, who had overturned the Assyrian empire."

To the river Euphrates:] To besiege Carchemish, which lay upon that river, as we read 2 Chron. xxxv. 20, which city was possessed by the Assyrians in the time of Sennacherib (Isa. x. 9), but their empire being overthrown, it returned under the power of the Babylonians.

And king Josiah went against him:] Being afraid he intended to invade his country in his passage; or to divert him from his expedition against the Babylonians, with whom he was in league. It is likely the latter was the reason; for the king of Egypt assured him he had no quarrel with him, and yet he would fight him (2 Chron. xxxv. 21, 22.)

And he slew him at Megiddo.] Gave him a mortal wound; of which he died, not till he came to Jerusalem (2 Chron. xxxv. 24.)

When he had seen him.] At the first brunt, as soon as they had joined battle (see xiv. 8.)

Ver. 30. And his servants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo.] Mortally wounded (as I said before), which befel him, the Jews think, because he did not ask counsel of the Lord, by the prophet Jeremiah.

Brought him to Jerusalem, and buried him] With such lamentations, as we nowhere read were made for any other king (2 Chron. xxxv. 25), which continued so long that it became a proverb (Zech. xii. 11).

Took Jehoahaz—and anointed him, and made him king] He is called Shallum, Jer. xxii. 11, and was younger than Jehoiaikim, as appears by this, that he was but twenty-three years old when he began to reign, and reigned but three months: after which Jehoiaikim, being made king, was twenty-five years old (ver. 31. 36). But the people preferred Jehoahaz before him because, perhaps, he was the more warlike person. And they anointed him, as Abarinel thinks, because, perhaps, he was not the first-born, and his title questionable. For they anointed persons only when there was a controversy about the succession. Ralbag, also, is of opinion, that the people by force made him a king against his will: which he will have old when he began to reign; and he reigned three months in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

32 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

33 And Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands at Riblah, in the land of Hamath, that he might not reign in Jerusalem; and put the land to a tribute of an hundred talents of silver, and a talent of gold.

34 And Pharaoh-nechoh made Eliakim the son of Josiah king in the room of Josiah his father, and turned his name to Jehoiakim, and to be the import of that phrase, "they took Jehoahaz," &c.

Ver. 31.] His father Josiah had four sons, and this was the youngest of them, as appears from 2 Chron. iii. 15, where he is called Shallum, as he is by the prophet Jeremiah. Which name our great primate thinks, seemed to the people to be of an ill omen (for Shallum king of Israel reigned but one month,) which made them change it into Jehoahaz; which proved not much more fortunate to him, for he reigned but three months, ad a. m. 3371.

Ver. 32. He did that which was evil] After the example of Ahaz, Manasseh, Amon, and such-like wicked kings; his mother, perhaps, having infused ill principles into him.

Ver. 33. Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands at Riblah] When he returned from his expedition against the Babylonians, he deposed this prince, as an usurper; or hearing that he intended to be revenged of him for his father's death; or that he was of a turbulent spirit, and so put it out of his power to give him any disturbance.

Put the land to a tribute] In token of their subjection to him.

Ver. 34. Pharaoh-nechoh made Eliakim—king] For the eldest son Johanan, in all likelihood, was dead.

Turned his name to Jehoiakim.] As the manner of conquerors was, to change the names of those whom they had subdued, in token of their absolute power over them (see Dan. i. 7). And the forenamed primate thinks he gave him this name, that he might took Jehoahaz away: and he came to Egypt, and died there.

35 And Jehoiakim gave the silver and the gold to Pharaoh; but he taxed the land to give the money according to the commandment of Pharaoh: he exacted the silver and the gold of the people of the land, of every one according to his taxation, to give it unto Pharaoh-nechoh.

36 ¶ Jehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah.

37 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

testify he ascribed his victory over the Babylonians to Jehovah, the God of Israel; who, he said, excited him to that expedition (2 Chron. xxxv. 21, 22).

And took Jehoahaz away: and he came to Egypt, and died there.] According to the prophecy of Jeremiah, whom God sent to call this new king and the people to repentance (xxi. 1—3), "Weep ye not for the dead (i. e. for Josiah), neither bemoan him, but weep sorely for him that goeth away (that is, for Shallum), for he shall return no more, nor see his native country, &c. but he shall die in the place whither they shall lead him captive," &c. (Jer. xxii. 10—12).

Ver. 35. Jehoiakim—taxed the land] For the treasures of the Lord's house, and of the king's, it seems were empty.

According to his taxation.] Proportionable to every man's estate.

Ver. 36.] In the very beginning of his reign Jeremiah was sent to him with a message from God, to bring him to repentance, Jer. xxvi. 1—3, xxvii. where he seems (ver. 12) to have told his brother Zedekiah that he should be king, if Jehoiakim was disobedient; and exhorts him not to be so.

Ver. 37.] See ver. 32. For he killed the prophet Urijah, and was at the charge to fetch him out of Egypt, whither he fled to save his life (Jer. xxvi. 20, 21, &c.). And if it had not been for Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, who had been a great man in his father Josiah's court, he had served Jeremiah in the same manner, ver. 21.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Jehoiakim, first subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, then rebelling against him, procureth his own ruin. 5 Jehoiachin succedeth him. 7 The king of Egypt is vanquished by the king of Babylon. 8 Jehoiachin's evil reign. 10 Jerusalem is taken and carried captive into Babylon. 17 Zedekiah is made king, and reigneth ill unto the utter destruction of Judah.

I In his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, and Jehoiakim became his servant three years: then he turned and rebelled against him.

CHAP. XXIV.

Ver. 1. In his days Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon came up.] He is called by heathen writers, Nabocod-assar: and, as primate Usher thinks, Nebopolassar was his father. He begun his reign in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, as Jeremiah tells us (xxv. 1); when, having smote the army of Pharaoh-nechoh, at Carchemish, near Euphrates (Jer. xlvi. 2), he came up to make the Jews tributaries to him, as they had been to Pharaoh.

And Jehoiakim became his servant three years.] He omits his being bound in chains, and carried to Babylon, which was in the fifth year of king Nebuchadnezzar, and the eighth of Jehoiakim, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, where, having been kept awhile, and promising fidelity to Nebuchadnezzar, he restored him to his kingdom, in which he served him three years; and then in the ninth year rebelled against him, by the instigation, it is probable, of Pharaoh, who began to gather strength again. But this proved fatal to him, for Pharaoh was not able to help him (ver. 7).

2 And the Lord sent against him bands of the Chaldees, and bands of the Syrians, and bands of the Moabites, and bands of the children of Ammon, and sent them against Judah to destroy it, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by his servants the prophets.

3 Surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he did;

4 And also for the innocent blood that he shed: for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood; which the Lord would not pardon.

5 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

6 So Jehoiakim slept with his fathers: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

7 And the king of Egypt came not again any more out of his land: for the king of Babylon had taken from the river of Egypt unto the river Euphrates, all that pertained to the king of Egypt.

8 ¶ Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign: and he reigned in Jerusalem three months. And his mother's name was Ne-hushta, the daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem.

9 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord according to all that his father had done.

10 ¶ At that time the servants of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against Jerusalem, and the city was besieged.

11 And Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came against the city, and his servants did besiege it.

12 And Jehoiachin the king of Judah went out to the king of Babylon, he, and his mother, and his servants, and his princes, and his officers: and the king of Babylon took him in the eighth year of his reign.

Ver. 2.] These were all subject to Nebuchadnezzar, whom he sent to chastise Jehoiakim, before he came himself, and besieged Jerusalem, and carried away part of the vessels of the house of the Lord, &c. For this was the third year mentioned by Daniel, after he was restored to his kingdom (Dan. i. 1, 2), when he, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, were carried captive to Babylon (ver. 6).

According to the word of the Lord, which he spake] By the prophet Isaiah, xx. 17, 18 of this book, and by Huldah, xxii. 16, and Jeremiah, in the fourteenth and fifteenth chapters.

Ver. 3.] By God's special order those people came up against Judah (therefore, in the verse before he is said to send them), because they were incurable. For Manasseh had so corrupted the whole body of the people, that Josiah's reformation could not recover them; but immediately upon his death, his son relapsed to the old idolatry.

Ver. 4.] See xxi. 16. Upon the repentance of Manasseh, and the reformation made by Josiah, God deferred their punishment; but he resolved not to grant them an absolute pardon of their iniquity; which provoked him to decree their extirpation.

Ver. 6. Jehoiakim slept with his fathers.] It appears by this, that to sleep with one's fathers, signifies no more than to die, as he did. For Jehoiakim was not buried with them, nor died in his bed; but being taken by the Chaldeans, he died as they led him out of Jerusalem, and, according to the prophecy of Jeremiah (xxii. 18, 19), they cast him out of the gates, and he had the burial of an ass; that is, lay upon the ground unburied. Abarbinel thinks he died in the way to Babylon; and his body was left in the highway, without any care taken to inter it; but it lay exposed to the sun by day, and to the frost by night (Jer. xxxvi. 30).

Jehoiachin his son reigned] Who is called also Jeconiah, 1 Chron. iii. 16, and more chiefly Choniah (by way of contempt, as some think), Jer. xxii. 24.

Ver. 7.] After the fight at Carchemish (which I mentioned, ver. 1). Nebuchadnezzar conquered all the places that the king of Egypt held, between that and the river of Egypt; concerning which, see my notes on Gen. xv. 13. So that he durst not stir out of the limits of his own country, which was bounded by that river, till the reign of Zedekiah, when the king of Egypt adventured to come up to help him, but in vain; for he was forced to return to his own land (Jer. xxxvii. 7, 8).

Ver. 8. Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign.] That is, when he began to reign alone after his father's death: but his father, when he was but eight years old, made him his associate in the kingdom (2 Chron. xxxvi. 9), that he might continue the kingdom in his family, and there might be no contention among his sons about it. Thus this account and that in the Chronicles are easily reconciled. When his father had reigned one year, he took him to reign with him; and so he came to reign ten years with his father, and three months alone. Now here Ezra mentions only the time he reigned alone, but there he speaks of all the years he reigned with his father and alone. Abarbinel gives another account of this difficulty, with which I shall not trouble the reader; it seeming to me a little more forced than this solution of it. And the plainest way is to acknowledge an error in the transcriber of the book of Chronicles.

And he reigned in Jerusalem three months. &c.] "And ten days," as it is explained, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, but such small numbers are wont to be omitted in greater sums (see 1 Kings xvi. 18).

Ver. 9. He did that which was evil] A wonderful thing, that he should not be moved to do better, by the sad example of his father, and his predecessor.

Ver. 10.] It is likely that Nebuchadnezzar heard he was entered into a confederacy with the king of Egypt, as his successor did; and therefore sent an army against him in the very beginning of his reign, to lay siege to Jerusalem, against which he intended to come himself. Some of the Jews say, that the counsellors of Nebuchadnezzar represented to him how unadvisedly he had acted in making him king, whose father had been in rebellion against him; using this proverb, "From an ill dog never comes a good whelp." Whereupon he resolved to depose him, and make Zedekiah king.

Ver. 11.] He first sent an army under his great commanders, and then came in person, and found they had obeyed his orders, and invested the city.

Ver. 12. Jehoiachin the king of Judah went out to the king of Babylon.] He made a surrender of the city into the hands of the king of Babylon; by the counsel of Jeremiah, perhaps, who advised the same to his successor more than once (Jer. xxi. 9. xxvii. 17. xxxviii. 2). And happy was it for him that he obeyed, and gave up himself to the king of Babylon; for God declared by the figure of good and bad figs, that he had sent them into the land of the Chaldeans 13 And he carried out thence all the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces all the vessels of gold which Solomon king of Israel had made in the temple of the Lord, as the Lord had said.

14 And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths: none remained, save the poorest sort of the people of the land.

15 And he carried away Jehoiachin to Babylon, and the king's mother, and the king's wives, and his officers, and the mighty of the land: those carried he into captivity from Jerusalem to Babylon.

16 And all the men of might, even seven thousand, and craftsmen and smiths a thousand; all that were strong and apt for war, even them the king of Babylon brought captive to Babylon.

17 ¶ And the king of Babylon made Mattaniah his father's brother king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah.

18 Zedekiah was twenty and one years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

19 And he did that which was evil in the for their good; whereas they that remained in the land should be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth, for their hurt (see Jer. xxiv. 5—8, &c.).

And the king of Babylon took him in the eighth year of his reign.] That is, in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign; for he began to reign in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, who reigned seven more after that, which was the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 13. He carried out thence all the treasures] There being no mention of the carrying away of the ark, either here, or in the book of the Chronicles, or in Jeremiah, among the holy things of the temple, it is probable that it was burnt, together with the temple, in the next reign, when the remaining holy things were carried away, but nothing said of this. For what the Jews say of its being hidden by the prophet Jeremiah in a certain cave in mount Nebo is a mere fable; there being no ark in the second temple, as they confess; which there might have been, if it had been only hidden till the temple was restored.

And cut in pieces all the vessels of gold] That is, all in a manner, but not absolutely all; for some were remaining, or else renewed again (which is not likely), xxvi. 14, 15. And by "cutting in pieces" must be meant no more than their being cut off from the temple; which was deprived of a principal part of its treasure; for these vessels were preserved entire, and not cut in pieces, as appears from Dan. v. 2.

As the Lord had said.] By the prophet Isaiah unto Hezekiah (xx. 17). As for the pillars, and the sea, and the bases, and the residue of the vessels that were not now taken away, they were only reserved till the next reign; when Jeremiah prophesied they should be carried away also (Jer. xxvii. 19—22).

Ver. 14. And he carried away all Jerusalem.] He explains what he means by the following words; which restrain it to the principal persons.

And all the princes, &c.] Among whom was Ezekiel; who began his prophecy from this captivity (Ezek. i. 2, 3), and calls it our captivity (xl. 1). Mordecai, of the tribe of Benjamin, was carried away at this time (Esther ii. 5—7), if we believe the Jews. By craftsmen, some understand carpenters; who were artificers, as the smiths were.

None remained, save the poorest.] Who were so numerous, that Zedekiah was tempted to rebel, and that against his oath of fidelity to the king of Babylon.

Ver. 15.] All that belonged to the court, or that were of any quality in the country (see Jer. xxiv. 1. xxix. 1, 2, Ezek. xvii. 12, 13).

Ver. 16.] This, and the foregoing verses, Abarbinel explains in this manner:—By the ten thousand mentioned ver. 14 are meant in general the whole number of Judah and Benjamin, that were now carried captive. Then here he comes to show how this number was made up (ver. 15, 16); Jehoiachin, and all his court and great men, were seven thousand, the craftsmen and smiths a thousand. The rest were not mighty men, nor such tradesmen, but ministers and servants of the court, and other considerable men in the country, who made up two thousand more, and completed the ten thousand. Jeremiah computes them to have been but a little above three thousand that were now carried away to Babylon; but he reckons only those that were carried from Jerusalem; whereas here is an account of those that were carried from other cities, and out of the tribe of Benjamin, which were seven thousand. There was another captivity before this, in the last year of king Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. i. 1—3), but then only a few select persons were carried away to wait upon the king of Babylon; and therefore are not mentioned, either by Jeremiah, or by this divine writer. But a very learned friend of mine (in his late Chronology of the Old Testament, p. 49), thinks that the first captivity was the greatest of all; those words (xxiv. 3), "This came upon Judah to remove them out of God's sight," implying (in his opinion) that not only some of the seed-royal, with some others, but the body of the people were led into captivity. And therefore he dates the seventy years' captivity from that time; viz. the fourth year of Jehoiakim, in the beginning of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar (see Jer. xxv. 1. 11, 12).

Ver. 17. Changed his name to Zedekiah.] Which signifies the justice of God; and seems to have been given him, to put him in mind of the just judgment of God, which would fall upon him, if he broke the oath of fidelity which he took to the king of Babylon (2 Chron. xxxv. 13. Ezek. xvii. 13, 14, 18).

Ver. 18. Zedekiah—reigned eleven years in Jerusalem, &c.] In the end of which he was carried captive (Jer. i. 3).

Ver. 19.] Not regarding what Jeremiah said unto him, but shut him up in prison, &c. (Jer. xxxiii. 1, 2. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 12). And his servants, and the people of the land, were as bad as himself (Jer. xxxvii. 1, 2).

Ver. 20.] God was so highly displeased with this wicked people, that he permitted Zedekiah to break his faith with Nebuchadnezzar, and to rebel against him, forgetting for what cause he changed his name. Unto this revolt, it is probable, he was persuaded by the ambassadors which the kings of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Zidon, sent unto him, to solicit him to throw off the yoke of the king of Babylon (Jer. xxvii. 2—4, &c.). Which was the greater crime, because he had made him swear by God he would be true to him (2 Chron. xxxvi. 13). The king of Egypt also, it is likely, promised him help, as I noted before (ver. 7. and see Ezek. xvii. 15). And Hananiah, a false prophet, assured him God would in two years' sight of the Lord, according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

20 For through the anger of the Lord it came time break the yoke of the king of Babylon, and bring back all the vessels of the house of God, with Jehoiachin and all the captives (see Jer. xxviii. 1—4, &c.). Jeremiah, indeed, proved that he had made them trust in a lie, by predicting his death that very year, which accordingly fell out (ver. 15—17). But to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, until he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

they still persisted in their vain hopes, there being other deceivers, that prophesied falsely in God's name (Jer. xxix. 8, 9). And they most of all deceived themselves with proud conceits that they were the true seed of Abraham, who had a right to that land (Ezek. xxxiii. 24).

CHAPTER XXV.

1 Jerusalem is besieged. 4 Zedekiah taken, his sons slain, his eyes put out. 8 Nebuzar-adan defaceth the city, carrieth the remnant, except a few poor labourers, into captivity, 13 spoileth and carrieth away the treasures. 18 The nobles are slain at Riblah. 22 Gedaliah, who was set over them that remained, being slain, the rest flee into Egypt. 27 Evil-merodach advanceth Jehoiachin in his court.

1 AND it came to pass in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came, he, and all his host, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it; and they built forts against it round about.

2 And the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

3 And on the ninth day of the fourth month the famine prevailed in the city, and there was no bread for the people of the land.

4 ¶ And the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night, by the way of the gate between two walls, which is by the king's garden: (now the Chaldees were against the city round about;) and the king went the way toward the plain.

5 And the army of the Chaldees pursued after the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho: and all his army were scattered from him.

6 So they took the king, and brought him up to the king of Babylon at Riblah; and they gave judgment upon him.

7 And they slew the sons of Zedekiah, before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon.

8 ¶ And in the fifth month, on the seventh day of the month, which is the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard, a servant of the king of Babylon, to Jerusalem:

9 And he burnt the house of the Lord, and

CHAP. XXV.

Ver. 1.] See Jer. xxxix. 1. lii. 1.

Pitched against it;] Encamped themselves before it.

Built forts;] On which to place their batteries, and keep any relief from coming to them.

Ver. 2. The city was besieged;] There was another siege began before this; viz. in the third year of Zedekiah; but during this second siege, the king of Egypt came to help Zedekiah: which made the Chaldeans raise the siege for a time (Jer. xxxvii. 12). And then Jeremiah endeavoured to get out of the city, but was hindered; and bade them not flatter themselves, for the Chaldeans should return and burn the city with fire; as he had told Zedekiah before (xxxiv. 1, 2, &c.)

Ver. 3. There was no bread for the people of the land;] Who had fled thither out of the country to secure themselves and their families. This famine is described as very terrible, in the book of the Lamentations of Jeremiah, iv. 10.

Ver. 4.] It is a hard matter to understand how they made their escape, since the Chaldeans had begun the city round about; unless we suppose they kept strong guards only at the gates of the city; but the Chaldeans having made a breach in the wall, they got away privately between the wall and the outworks, in a passage which the Chaldeans did not suspect: and the king ran into the champagne country, with some of his forces attending him. The Jews think there were subterranean conduits from the royal garden into the plain, through which Zedekiah went out: but this is without any ground.

Ver. 5.] Every man shifting away, and endeavouring to save himself in such places as he could flee unto.

Ver. 6. So they took the king—to the king of Babylon to Riblah;] Where he lay to attend the success of the siege, and to send them supplies, and intercept any relief that might come to them. A great council, I suppose, was called; who passed a solemn sentence upon him, in condemning him as a rebellious subject. This was fulfilled the prophecy of Jeremiah, that he should see the king of Babylon, and speak with him (Jer. xxxii. 4. xxxiv. 3).

Ver. 7. Slew the sons of Zedekiah;] See Jer. lii. 11.

Put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon;] Thus two famous prophecies were fulfilled, which seemed to contradict one the other (whereby Zedekiah, perhaps, was tempted not to believe them): one of Jeremiah, that he should be carried to Babylon (xxxii. 5. xxxiv. 3.) and the other of Ezekiel, that he should not see Babylon (xii. 13). The event made good both; for he was carried thither blind.

Ver. 8.] It is said in Jer. lii. 12 that he came on the tenth day of this month; that is, he came from Riblah upon the seventh, and arrived at Jerusalem on the tenth. Or, if he came to Jerusalem on the seventh he did not burn the temple till the tenth; but spent the eighth and ninth days, as the Jews say, in eating, drinking, and making merry. Nebuchadnezzar did not come himself to Jerusalem, but he sent this great man to execute his commands; who, the Jews say, became a proselyte.

Ver. 9. He burnt the house of the Lord;] After it had stood four hundred years, as Sir John Marsham the king's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem, and every great man's house burnt he with fire.

10 And all the army of the Chaldees, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down the walls of Jerusalem round about.

11 Now the rest of the people that were left in the city, and the fugitives that fell away to the king of Babylon, with the remnant of the multitude, did Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carry away.

12 But the captain of the guard left of the poor of the land to be vinedressers and husbandmen.

13 And the pillars of brass that were in the house of the LORD, and the bases, and the brasen sea that was in the house of the LORD, did the Chaldees break in pieces, and carried the brass of them to Babylon.

14 And the pots, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

15 And the firepans, and the bowls, and such things as were of gold, in gold, and of silver, in silver, the captain of the guard took away.

16 The two pillars, one sea, and the bases, which Solomon had made for the house of the LORD; the brass of all these vessels was without weight.

17 The height of the one pillar was eighteen cubits, and the chapter upon it was brass: and the height of the chapter three cubits; and the wreathen work, and pomegranates upon the chapter round about, all of brass: and like unto these had the second pillar with wreathen work.

18 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door:

19 And out of the city he took an officer that was set over the men of war, and five men of them that were in the king's presence, which were found in the city, and the principal scribe of the host, which mustered the people of the land, and threescore men of the people of the land that were found in the city:

20 And Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard, took these, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah:

computes it. But primate Usher makes account it was burnt four hundred and twenty-four years, three months, and eight days after it began first to be built by Solomon. But neither of these accounts is true, if we believe all the learned Jews (Kimchi, Rabbag, Abarinel, &c.) who agree that it stood four hundred and thirty years. Josephus stands amazed at this, that the second temple was burnt by the Romans, in this very month, and the same day of the month (lib. vi. De Bello Judaico, cap. 27). And so we read in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 30, that the Levites were in their desks singing the very same song in both destructions, which was this: "He shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness: yea, the Lord our God shall cut them off." (Ps. xciv. 23).

And the king's house,—and every great man's house burnt he with fire.] By col beth gadol, which signify every great house, the Talmudists understand all the synagogues. But Kimchi, Rabbag, and Abarinel, interpret the words as we do. And so the Targum; yea, Jarchi himself, who is the most tenacious of the Talmudical interpreters, after he had said, "The houses of the synagogues, where the law and prayers were read," adds these words, "and the palaces of the princes;" not daring (as Vitringa observes) to vouch the former for a literal interpretation (lib. De Synag. par. ii. cap. 11).

Ver. 10.] That they who were left there might not be able to make any resistance hereafter; and that it might no longer be looked upon as a city, but as an open village.

Ver. 11.] That is all that escaped the sword and the famine; and all that fled to the king of Babylon, and put themselves under his protection. Who were in all eight hundred thirty and two persons; as we read in Jer. lii. 29, where he saith, in the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar (that is, in the end of it, and the beginning of his nineteenth year), he carried away this number.

Ver. 12.] What should move the Talmudists by the Hebrew word ceremin to understand gatherers of balsam; and by jogebim fishers for purple, is hard to understand (though Bochartus hath attempted some account of it); when Jeremiah tells us expressly that he gave these poor people vineyards and fields; which shows what they were (Jer. xxxix. 10).

Ver. 13.] They were too cumbersome to be carried away whole, therefore he brake them in pieces, and so transported the brass of which they were made.

Ver. 14, 15.] He did not alter these, but carried them away as he found them; that he might give a punctual account of them to his master. And the singular providence of God herein appeared, that these vessels were not embezzled, nor employed to any common use, but put into the house of the king of Babylon's god, viz. Belus, where they were preserved to be restored, in God's appointed time, by Cyrus. So we read they were, Ezra i. 7, 8, &c.

Ver. 16. The brass of all these vessels was without weight.] So we read they were, when they were first made (1 Kings vii. 47).

Ver. 17.] These two pillars are more fully described in 1 Kings vii. 15, &c. and in Jer. lii. 21, &c.

Ver. 18. Zephaniah the second priest,] Whom the Jews call the sagan; who was the deputy of the high-priest, in the case of sickness, or any incapacity to officiate.

Three keepers of the door:] Of the vessels of the temple, saith Kimchi; or the treasury.

Ver. 19. Out of the city he took an officer—and five men of them that were in the king's presence,] Who constantly attended the king's person wheresoever he was.

Which were found in the city,] Where at first they found but five of them: but afterward seven (Jer. lii. 26).

The principal scribe of the host,] The muster-master-general, as we speak, or some such great officer.

Threescore—people of the land,] These were some eminent persons who had concealed themselves in some private place; but, before Nebuzar-adan left Jerusalem, were discovered. And the Jews will have it that they were the men of the great Sanhedrim; whose whole number of seventy-one persons they make shift to find here; viz. the three keepers of the door, and the seven near attendants upon the king, and the scribe; which, with these threescore, make seventy-one (see Selden, lib. ii. De Synedriis, cap. 16. p. 671).

Ver. 20. Nebuzar-adan—took these,] That he 21 And the king of Babylon smote them, and slew them at Riblah in the land of Hamath. So Judah was carried away out of their land.

22 ¶ And as for the people that remained in the land of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had left, even over them he made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, ruler.

23 And when all the captains of the armies, they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah governor, there came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan the son of Careah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth the Netophathite, and Jazaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

24 And Gedaliah swore to them, and to their men, and said unto them, Fear not to be the servants of the Chaldees: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon: and it shall be well with you.

might dispose of them as he thought fit; they being not vulgar persons, like those whom he had ordered to be carried captive, or left in the land.

Ver. 21. The king of Babylon smote them, and slew them] Passed the sentence of death upon them; which was forthwith executed; because he looked upon them, it is likely, as the king's principal counsellors, who advised him to rebel against him. And the judgment of God, Strigelius here observes, was remarkable upon impious priests, whom he suffered not to live, because they had been great instruments in promoting idolatry.

So Judah was carried away out of their land.] Four hundred sixty and eight years after the beginning of the reign of David; three hundred eighty and eight years since the division of the ten tribes from Judah and Benjamin; and a hundred thirty-four years since the destruction of the ten tribes; as our primate of Ireland makes account.

Ver. 22.] See ver. 12.

He made Gedaliah—ruler.] His father Ahikam was a great friend of Jeremiah's (Jer. xxvi. 14) and therefore Gedaliah may be presumed to have been so likewise; and by his advice, it is likely, was one of those that went out to the king of Babylon (ver. 11).

Ver. 23. And when all the captains of the armies, &c.] That is, such as fled away from Zedekiah (ver. 5) and those that fled perhaps before the siege to the Moabites, and Ammonites, and Edomites, and other neighbouring countries (see Jer. xl. 7, 11, 12). He reckons up the principal persons that came in to him, with those under their command. Jeremiah also himself put himself under his protection (Jer. xl. 5, 6).

Ver. 24.] He was so well assured of the king of Babylon's favour to him that he secured them by an oath, they should be safe under his government; provided they should serve the king of Babylon, which it was their interest to do.

Ver. 25. But it came to pass in the seventh month,] After he had been governor about two months.

That Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal,] His pride (being of the seed-royal) tempted him to conspire against Gedaliah; though he had no power to maintain any authority in the country; but was forced presently to flee away. Nor was the king of Moab, whom he instigated him to this villany (Jer. xl. 14) able to support him.

Came, and ten men with him,] These ten men were commanders, no doubt, of some forces under them;

25 But it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, came, and ten men with him, and smote Gedaliah, that he died, and the Jews and the Chaldees that were with him at Mizpah.

26 And all the people, both small and great, and the captains of the armies, arose, and came to Egypt: for they were afraid of the Chaldees.

27 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon in the year that he began to reign did lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of prison;

28 And he spake kindly to him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon;

29 And changed his prison garments: and he for so few were not sufficient to make a slaughter of Gedaliah, and all the Jews and Chaldeans that were with him (see Jer. xli. 1—3).

And smote Gedaliah, that he died, &c.] This story is told more largely in the fortieth and forty-first of Jeremiah: where we read that Gedaliah was admonished of this intended conspiracy against him; but, like other good men, who are commonly void of suspicion, because they have no design to hurt others, he did not believe what was told him.

Ver. 26.] Contrary to the persuasion of Jeremiah (by whom they pretended they would be advised), who assured them that they should be safe if they would stay in the land of Judah, but should perish if they went into Egypt (see Jer. xlii. 9, 10, &c.). Thus this populous and fertile country was laid waste and desolate; part of the people being carried captive to Babylon, part of those that were left in the land being slain with Gedaliah, the remainder flying into Egypt. So that it was left to be overrun with briars and thorns, and to be inhabited by wild beasts. Only some of the neighbouring nations seem to have settled themselves in some parts of it (see Jer. xii. 14, Ezek. xxxvi. 4, 5).

Ver. 27. On the seven and twentieth day of the month,] It was resolved on the twenty-fifth day of the month, and executed two days after. So this place is easily reconciled with Jer. lii. 35.

Evil-merodach—did lift up the head of Jehoiachin—out of prison:] Raised him from his dejected condition; for in affliction men hang down their heads. By this it appears that Nebuchadnezzar reigned five-and-forty years; for Jehoiachin was carried captive in the eighth year of his reign (xxiv. 12), and now had been prisoner thirty-seven years, when Nebuchadnezzar was newly dead. Which two sums put together make forty-five. This is the account of the Jews; but, according to the canon of Ptolemy, he reigned but three-and-forty years: and therefore primate Usher makes him to have reigned two years with his father.

Ver. 28.] He had the kings of several countries with him in Babylon, whom his father had taken captive, and made prisoners; unto whom he not only left the names and titles of kings, but now gave them some liberty, and bestowed a royal seat upon them. But he preferred Jehoiachin above them all; either because of the great fame of his royal ancestors David and Solomon, from whom he was descended; or, as the Jews say, because he had made a friendship in did eat bread continually before him all the days of his life.

30 And his allowance was a continual allow-prison with Evil-merodach, who was thrown into it by his father Nebuchadnezzar for his maladministration of the government, during the seven years that he was moped.

Ver. 29. Changed his prison garments,] Bestowed on him royal apparel; that he might be fit to keep him company.

He did eat bread continually before him] Was frequently invited to his own table, as Cæsus was to that of Cyrus. Victorinus Strigelius thinks it not unlikely that he had learned the doctrine of the true God from the prophet Daniel, as Nebuchadnezzar his father had done; who in a public edict professed as much: and upon this account he showed such great and kindness to Jehoiachin. For which cause he got the name of Evil-merodach among impious princes; that is, Foolish Merodach.

Ver. 30.] The meaning may be, that when he did not eat with the king, he lived upon a pension, that was duly paid him every day for meat, drink, clothing, lodging, and other expenses. Or if the word continually (in the foregoing verse) be understood literally, that he always ate with the king: then this allowance was made for his family and attendants: as in the case of Mephibosheth (2 Sam. ix. 10). Jeremiah, in the conclusion of his book, gives the same account of the king's extraordinary kindness to him; which continued, he saith, to the day of his death.

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES.

It is the common opinion of the Jews that these books were written by Ezra: which is the more probable, because the book of Ezra begins with the same words, without the least variation, where-with these books end: which argues one and the same person to have written both; who, to connect his history together, makes use of his own words, as Grotius observes other ancient authors have done. Howsoever, it appears from hence, that these books were written after the captivity, since they mention their restoration by Cyrus: and it is also evident from 2 Chron. xxxv. 25, that they were written after the time of the prophet Jeremiah.

Huetius, in his learned work, Demonstratio Evangelica, thus far agrees with this opinion of the Jews, that he thinks Ezra digested these books; and added to them the first six chapters of the book which bears his name, which afterward he continued: but Nehemiah, he thinks, had some hand in this work: which was gathered not only out of the public journals, but of the writings of the prophets, Shimeah, Iddo, Jehu, Nathan, Abijah, Isaiah, and others; and, it is likely, out of some genealogies (R. Solomon saith, upon the seventh chapter, that after their return he found three), and out of the other books of Holy Scripture before published, as Kimchi adds: and thus Procopius Gazæus, Hæc ex multis prophetarum scriptis collegit; "he gathered these out of many writings of the prophets."

That which confirms this opinion, is what we read in the second book, ch. v. 9, where it is said of the ark and its staves, which Solomon brought into his temple, there they are to this day. Which words are so far (as Huetius observes) from proving that these books were written before the captivity (after which the ark was no more heard of), that Ezra took this passage, and that in 1 Kings viii. 8, where are almost the same words, out of some other ancient book, and set them down word for word as he found them there. For having written the books of the Kings in the time of the captivity, he found at their return more ancient registers, containing larger accounts of several transactions; which he thought good to add to what he had before written, to make the history more complete: which Dr. Alix (in his Reflections upon the Books of the Old Testament, vol. ii. ch. 1.) thinks was done about six and twenty years after the writing of the books of the Kings, in the eighteenth year after the captivity was ended.

This seems to be implied in the Hebrew title of these books, which is Dibre hajamim, signifying they contain such things as were contained in the diaries or day-books, wherein the passages of those times were recorded, if any thing memorable happened, every day. The word jamim also signifying years, these books may be called Annals: which the Greeks call Παραλειπόμενα: as much as to say, those things are here supplied which were omitted in other books of Holy Scripture, especially in the books of the Kings, as other things are here amplified and enlarged; others explained and made more clear. For instance, in the conclusion of this first book, he gives an account of the things which David did in his old age: in ordering the courses of the priests, and of the Levites, the singers, and musicians; and in making vast preparations for the building of the temple by his son; none of which had been mentioned in the foregoing books. Thus Xenophon (Strigelius observes) wrote Paralipomena of the Peloponnesian war, which had been written before by Thucydides.

He begins these books with a genealogy from the beginning of the world to his own time, which had not been done in any book of Scripture before: but was necessary to be done now, that a distinction between their tribes and families being preserved (which was in danger to be lost by their dispersion in the captivity), it might clearly appear, the Messiah sprung out of that tribe and family, from which he was to descend, according to the ancient prophecies. For, as Procopius Gazæus observes, from these books it is that we learn, among other things, that Nathan, from whom St. Luke derives the genealogy of our Saviour, was the brother of Solomon by David and Bath-sheba.

To conclude this preface, it may be noted, that no book in the world shows the original propagation of mankind, but only the Holy Scriptures. They who were ignorant of them, having nothing of true antiquity, devised senseless fables of their descent, they knew not how, nor from whom. The Areadians fancied that they were before the moon; the people of Thessaly, that they sprung from stones. The Athenians took themselves to be ἀνθρώποις, who sprung up out of the ground; and affirmed, they were more ancient than Japetus, who in truth, was the father of the Greeks; Javan, from whom came the Iones, being the son of Japheth, as these holy books show. See upon 2 Chron. xxix. 21. a little additional proof that these books were written by Ezra.

CHAPTER I.

1 ADAM, Sheth, Enosh,

2 Kenan, Mahalaleel, Jered,

3 Henoch, Methuselah, Lamech,

4 Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

5 ¶ The sons of Japheth; Gomer, and Magog, and Madai, and Javan, and Tubal, and Meshech, and Tiras.

6 And the sons of Gomer; Ashchenaz, and Riphath, and Togarmah.

7 And the sons of Javan; Elishah, and Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodaniam.

8 ¶ The sons of Ham; Cush, and Mizraim, Put, and Canaan.

9 And the sons of Cush; Seba, and Havilah, and Sabta, and Raamah, and Sabtecha. And the sons of Raamah; Sheba, and Dedan.

10 And Cush begat Nimrod: he began to be mighty upon the earth.

11 And Mizraim begat Ludim, and Ananim, and Lehabim, and Naphtuhim, 12 And Pathrusim, and Casluhim, (of whom came the Philistines,) and Caphthorim.

CHAP. I.

Ver. 1. Adam, Sheth, Enosh.] He mentions only their names briefly: but the meaning is, that Adam begat Sheth, and Sheth begat Enosh: and so the rest are to be understood. Adam, indeed, had two sons, before he begat Sheth: but one of them was murdered without issue, and the other was accursed; so that all who descended from him perished in the flood; therefore these only that came from Sheth are remembered.

This may seem to be sufficiently recorded, as much of that which follows is, in the book of Genesis: so that there was no need, some may imagine, to repeat it here: but there being a genealogy to be drawn of the several families of the Jews, it was fit to begin it with an account of the honour they had to be the select people of God, whose original and descent was manifest and plain from the very first man, who was the son of God. This was the peculiar glory of the Jewish nation, that they alone were able to derive their pedigree from the first man that God created; of which no other nation could boast, or make a shadow of pretence. Besides, by the recital of this, the divine writer of this book designed to keep up the belief that the world was not eternal, but had a beginning as is recorded in the book of Genesis.

Ver. 2. Kenan.] We translate it Cainan, Gen. v. 9. Mahalaleel, Jered.] See Gen. xii. 15.

Ver. 3.] See concerning these, Gen. v. 18, 21, 25.

Ver. 4.] These were the three sons of Noah: among whom Japheth was the eldest (Gen. x. 21); and therefore his genealogy is first mentioned. But Shem being the person in whose posterity true religion was preserved, and from whom the promised seed was to come, is first named both here and in Gen. v. 31. x. 1.

Ver. 5.] Thus they were reckoned up in the same order, Gen. x. 2, where see concerning them.

Ver. 6.] The same account we have in Gen. x. 3.

Ver. 7.] The same we read, Gen. x. 4. And neither there nor here is any mention of the rest of Japheth's posterity, but only of Gomer and Javan (see Gen. x. 5, in the latter end of my annotations on that verse).

Ver. 8.] In this place, and in this order, they are mentioned in Gen. x. 6. And the reason, I suppose, why his genealogy is mentioned before Shem's, is, because from Shem the genealogy of Abraham and the Jewish nation was to be derived: which it was thought fit to set down without any interruption.

Ver. 9.] See Gen. x. 7, where an account is given of the sons of Cush, and of his two grandsons by one of them.

Ver. 10. Cush begat Nimrod.] He mentions him alone by himself, because he was the most eminent among all his sons (see upon Gen. x. 8, where I have given an account of the next words).

He began to be mighty upon the earth.] That is, was the first that raised a great kingdom.

Ver. 11.] The very same account we have in Gen. x. 13, where I have shown in what parts of the world their posterity settled.

Ver. 12. Pathrusim, and Casluhim.] See Gen. x. . .

13 And Canaan begat Zidon his firstborn, and Heth,

14 The Jebusite also, and the Amorite, and the Girgashite,

15 And the Hivite, and the Arkite, and the Sinite,

16 And the Arvadite, and the Zemarite, and the Hamathite.

17 ¶ The sons of Shem; Elam, and Asshur, and Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram, and Uz, and Hul, and Gether, and Meshech.

18 And Arphaxad begat Shelah, and Shelah begat Eber.

19 And unto Eber were born two sons: the name of the one was Peleg; because in his days the earth was divided; and his brother's name was Joktan.

20 And Joktan begat Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jerah, 21 Hadoram also, and Uzal, and Diklah,

[Of whom came the Philistines,] Who were a colony from the Casluhim.

[And Caphthorim.] See Gen. x. 14.

Ver. 13. Canaan begat Zidon] See Gen. x. 15.

Ver. 16.] In this very order they are set down by Moses, in Gen. x. 16—18 (see what I have noted there).

Ver. 17. The sons of Shem; Elam, &c.] Thus they are set down in Gen. x. 22, and Arphaxad is mentioned after Elam and Asshur, just as Aaron is after Moses in Exod. vi. 27, though he was the elder brother. For, as the Jews often note, the Scripture doth not strictly observe the order of time.

Uz, and Hul, and Gether, and Meshech.] These were not the sons of Shem, but his grandsons by Aram his youngest son: as appears from Gen. x. 22. But nothing is more usual in Scripture, than to call grandsons by the name of sons. As Laban is called the son of Nahor, Gen. xxix. 5, being his grandchild by Bethel. And Mephibosheth is called the son of Saul, 2 Sam. xix. 24, because he was descended from him by his son Jonathan. Meshech had two names; for he is called Mash, Gen. x. 23, and possessed the mountain of Masius in Mesopotamia; as Bochart thinks in his Phaleg, lib. ii. cap. 11. Though Mash may very well be thought not to be another name, but only the contraction of Meshech: who some think was the father of the Cappadocians.

Ver. 18.] He follows Moses exactly; who gives no account of the posterity of the two sons of Shem first mentioned, but only of the third, Arphaxad: that he might the sooner come to him from whom the Israelites descended. Here the LXX. interpose Cainan between Arphaxad and Shelah: but it is not in the Greek Muscovite translation; as is observed by primate Usher, in his Letters, cxcvi. (and see Bochart, in his Phaleg, lib. ii. cap. 13).

Ver. 19. Unto Eber were born two sons:] Gen. x. 25.

Peleg; because in his days the earth was divided:] That is, the inhabitants of the earth were divided, and dispersed; according to the division of their languages (see my annotations there).

His brother's name was Joktan.] Who had a more numerous issue than any hitherto mentioned.

Ver. 20.] See concerning these, Gen. x. 26.

Ver. 21.] See Gen. x. 27.

Ver. 22.] See Gen. x. 28, where the first of these is called Obal: from whence some have argued, that the name in this place is corrupted. As if, in process

22 And Ebal, and Abimael, and Sheba, 23 And Ophir, and Havilah, and Jobab. All these were the sons of Joktan.

24 ¶ Shem, Arphaxad, Shelah,

25 Eber, Peleg, Ren,

26 Serug, Nahor, Terah,

27 Abram; the same is Abraham.

28 The sons of Abraham; Isaac, and Ishmael.

29 ¶ These are their generations: The first-born of Ishmael, Nebaioth; then Kedar, and Ad-beel, and Mibsam,

30 Mishma, and Dumah, Massa, Hadad, and Tema,

31 Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah. These are the sons of Ishmael.

32 ¶ Now the sons of Keturah, Abraham's concubine: she bare Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah. And the sons of Jokshan; Sheba, and Dedan.

33 And the sons of Midian; Ephah, and of time, there might not be a variation in the vowel: Moses pronouncing the name as they spake it in his time, and this author as they spake in his.

Ver. 23.] Who were thirteen in all: and all but one settled their habitation in Arabia (see Gen. x. 29).

Ver. 24.] These are repeated from ver. 17, 18, to show how Abraham was descended from Shem: who was the most eminent of all Noah's sons; whom he solemnly blessed: the Messiah being to spring from him (Gen. ix. 36). For from Adam the promise of the Messiah was translated to Seth; and from Seth to Shem; from Shem to Eber; from whom the Hebrew nation, some think, derived their name; and had this precious promise committed to their trust, above all other nations in the world.

Ver. 26.] This genealogy from Eber, is recorded by Moses in Gen. xi. 16—18, &c.

Ver. 27.] God changed his name from Abram to Abraham, when he established his covenant with him (Gen. xvii. 5, &c.), and made him the father of many nations.

Ver. 28.] Isaac is first mentioned, being the son of a free-woman, and the heir of the promise: though Ishmael was elder than he, but born of a bond-woman.

Ver. 29. The firstborn of Ishmael, Nebaioth:] To show how God made Abraham the father of many nations, he reckons up twelve great persons descended from his son Ishmael; the first of which was Nebaioth: concerning whom, and the rest that follow, see Gen. xxv. 13, 14, &c.

Then Kedar:] I shall only observe here, that as from Nebaioth came the people called Nebatæi; so from Kedar came the Cedreni, whom geographers call Cedrei, and Cedranita, as Bochart observes.

Ver. 30, 31.] In what country they dwelt, see Gen. xxv. 18.

Ver. 32. Now the sons of Keturah, Abraham's concubine:] After the death of Sarah, Abraham married Keturah: and having many children by her, this holy writer names them, to show how faithfully God made good the name he gave him, by making Abraham the father of many more nations.

She bare Zimran, &c.] See Gen. xxv. 2.

The sons of Jokshan; Sheba, and Dedan. There were four Shebas, as I there observed; and one more of the name of Dedan: and this man's sons are there mentioned, though here omitted.

Ver. 33. The sons of Midian; Ephah, and Ephraim. See Gen. xxv. 4. The first of these, as Bochart thinks, was the same with the Greek Hippos, a mountain and Epher, and Henech, and Abida, and Eldaah. All these are the sons of Keturah.

34 And Abraham begat Isaac. The sons of Isaac; Esau and Israel.

35 ¶ The sons of Esau; Eliphaz, Renel, and Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah.

36 The sons of Eliphaz; Teman, and Omar, Zephi, and Gatam, Kenaz, and Timna, and Amalek.

37 The sons of Reuel; Nahath, Zerah, Shammah, and Mizzah.

38 And the sons of Seir; Lotan, and Shobal, and Zibeon, and Anah, and Dishon, and Ezar, and Dishan.

39 And the sons of Lotan; Hori, and Homam; and Timna was Lotan's sister.

40 The sons of Shobal; Alian, and Manahath, and Ebal, Shephi, and Onam. And the sons of Zibeon; Aiah, and Anah.

41 The sons of Anah; Dishon. And the sons of Dishon; Amram, and Eshban, and Ithran, and Cheran.

42 The sons of Ezer; Bilhan, and Zavan, and Jakan. The sons of Dishan; Uz, and Aran.

43 ¶ Now these are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom before any king reigned over the children of Israel; Bela the son of Beor; and the name of his city was Dinhabah.

44 And when Bela was dead, Jobab the son of Zerah of Bozrah reigned in his stead.

45 And when Jobab was dead, Husham of the land of the Temanites reigned in his stead.

46 And when Husham was dead, Hadad the son of Bedad, which smote Midian in the field of Moab, reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Avith.

47 And when Hadad was dead, Samlah of Masrekah reigned in his stead.

48 And when Samlah was dead, Shaul of Rehoboth by the river reigned in his stead.

49 And when Shaul was dead, Baal-hanan the son of Achbor reigned in his stead.

50 And when Baal-hanan was dead, Hadad reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Pai; and his wife's name was Mehetabel, the daughter of Matred, the daughter of Mezahab.

51 ¶ Hadad died also. And the dukes of Edom were; duke Timnah, duke Ahiab, duke Jetheth, a village of which name Ptolemy describes on the same shore, a little below Madian, which he calls Modiana, in his Hieroz. par. i. lib. ii. cap. 3.

These are the sons of Keturah.] Her sons or grandsons.

Ver. 35.] These were by several wives, as we read Gen. xxxvi. 10. 14.

Ver. 36.] It is plain from Gen. xxxvi. 12, that Timnah was not one of his sons, but his concubine; by whom he begat Amalek. This, therefore, is a short form of speech, as much as if he had said, "Of Timnah Amalek." Who was not equal to the rest of his sons, and therefore he mentions his mother's name. Kimchi hath expressed this so well, that it may be for the reader's use to transcribe some of his words: which may serve for a rule in such-like cases. "In my judgment (saith he) the scripture uses here a concise and compendious way of speaking: for there was no need that Ezra should recount all these things exactly and accurately, which had been done before in the law (he means in the book of Genesis), therefore he describes these genealogies briefly." Thus he doth in the seventeenth verse of this chapter, mentioning Uz and Hul after Aram: who were not his sons but his grandsons. R. Solomon hath the same observation (see Buxtorf's Anticritica, par. ii. cap. 2).

Ver. 37.] Who are called dukes, as the sons of Eliphaz also are (see Gen. xxxvi. 15. 17), that is, rulers or governors of the country, but not with kingly authority.

Ver. 38.] This Seir was not Esau, nor of his posterity, but the ancient lord of this country, from whom it had its name (see Gen. xxxvi. 20), whose genealogy is here set down, that it may be understood from whom Timnah and Amalek sprung.

Ver. 39.] This woman was Eliphaz's concubine, and bare him Amalek (ver. 36), who, by his mother's side, was Seir's grandson.

Ver. 40. The sons of Shobal;] See Gen. xxxvi. 23.

Aiah, and Anah.] The latter of which was a person of great note (see Gen. xxxvi. 24).

Ver. 41.] The first-born of these was otherwise called Hemdan, Gen. xxxvi. 26, which was the name, it is possible, whereby he was known among Esau's posterity: though anciently his name was Amram.

Ver. 42.] Among all these persons descended from Seir, seven of them were dukes: who reigned perhaps at the same time in several parts of the country (Gen. xxxvi. 29, 30). By which it appears, that this was the ancient form of government before Esau conquered this country: which his posterity at the first followed, but afterward was changed into kingly, as it here follows.

Ver. 43. Now these are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom] See this explained in Gen. xxxvi. 31.

Bela the son of Beor:] This Beor was not Balaam's father, for he was a Mesopotamian, not an Edomite; but one of the same name, as Aben Ezra well observes.

Dinhabah.] Of which he was governor, perhaps, before he was made king: and therefore therein he reigned, and made it the seat of his kingdom.

Ver. 44.] See concerning this succession, Gen. xxxvi. 33. Bozrah, was a city in Edom, as three prophets plainly describe it (Isa. xxxiv. 6. Jer. xlix. 13. Amos i. 12). And one of these represents it also as a city of Moab: because, as some think, it was in the confines of both countries: or, rather, in the opinion of Bochartus, there were two Bozrahs; the one in Idumea, the other in Moab.

Ver. 45.] We know nothing of Husham; but he seems not to have been the son of Jobab, but one of another family, in another part of the country. Some take this Jobab to have been Job: which opinion is exploded by Aben Ezra.

Ver. 46.] See Gen. xxxvi. 35, where R. Solomon saith, the Midianites making war against the Moabites, this king of Edom came to help the Moabites.

Ver. 48.] See Gen. xxxvi. 37.

Ver. 50. Hadad (or Hadar) reigned] See Gen. xxxvi. 39.

Mezahab.] Some of the Jews fancy this Mezahab to have been a very ingenious woman, being the first that found out the art of drawing gold out into wires or threads: for zahab signifies gold in Hebrew. But the LXX. take this for the name of a man, and translate it ὁ υἱὸς Μαζωβ.

Ver. 54. After the death of Hadad, the form of government was altered again: for there were no more kings for a long time; but they returned to the first constitution, which they found, when they conquered the country; which was governed by dukes (see Gen. xxxvi. 40). And thus it was in Israel, after they came into the land of Canaan. They were first governed by judges, who had not kingly power. After which, from the time of Saul, they were governed by kings till their captivity. At their return, they had no more kings, but only such governors as Zerubbabel was. Some have imagined that Esau was the first king of this country: but in all likelihood, if he was, he would have left his son Eliphaz in the same authority; who was but a duke (Gen. xxxvi. 15, 16). Therefore Esau contented himself with that form of government which he found among the Horites: which continued till Bela made himself king (ver. 43). The difference between their kings and dukes was, (as Esthius observes), that the former ruled absolutely, according to their pleasure; the power of the other was limited and bounded by certain prescribed laws.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1, 2.] He reckons up his first four sons in the order wherein they were born (Gen. xxix. 32, &c.) and next to them their two brethren by the same mother, Leah (Gen. xxx. 18, 20). Afterward, I can give no reason why Dan and Naphtali (the two sons of Bilhah) are not mentioned together, and Joseph and Benjamin, the two sons of Rachel, and Gad and Asher, the two sons of Zilpah.

Ver. 3. The sons of Judah;] There is a plain reason why the genealogy of Judah is set down in the first place; because this tribe had obtained a superiority and pre-eminence among the rest, before the time of David; ever since the prophecy of Jacob, in the blessing he pronounced upon him (Gen. xlix. 10). For Judah, when they came into the wilderness, was ordered to march first (Num. ii. 3); and accordingly we find they did, when they removed from mount Sinai (Num. x. 14). And when the princes of the tribes offered at the dedication of the altar, the prince of the tribe of Judah offered on the first day (Num. vii. 12). When they came into Canaan, they obtained of Joshua a portion for Caleb without casting of any lot, as there was in the dividing of the land (Josh. xiv. 6). And when Joshua was dead, they were appointed by God to go up first against the Canaanites, to take from them what remained unconquered (Judg. i. 2). From David's time every one knows till the captivity of Babylon, a kingly power continued in this tribe: and Zerubbabel was of the same, who was their leader when they returned to their own land.

Which—were born unto him of the daughter of Shua] See an account of this in Gen. xxxviii. 2.

Er, the firstborn of Judah, was evil in the sight of the Lord; and he slew him.] See ver. 7 of the same chapter. His second son also, though he be not represented under so bad a character, yet displeased God so much, that he slew him also (ver. 9, 10).

Ver. 4.] See there, ver. 29. 50.

Ver. 5.] Who were born unto him before they went into Egypt (Gen. xli. 12).

Ver. 6.] These were born after they came into Egypt; for there is no mention of them in the book of Genesis. And the Jews in Seder Olam Rabba, and in Jalkut, say, these men prophesied when they were in Egypt: for they suppose them to be the same with those mentioned 1 Kings iv. 31. If they were then Zerah had two names, and was also called Mahol: but there is a great reason to think they were not the same, as I have shown in my annotations there.

Ver. 7. Carmi;] This man was the son of Zimri: who in Josh. vii. 18 is called Zabdi; for by length of time his name might easily be thus altered. And, indeed, in copying proper names, one might easily mistake.

Achar the troubler of Israel,] He who is there called Achan, is here elegantly called Achar; which signifies troubler: because he had brought Israel into great danger, by the sin he committed in the accursed thing. The remembrance of this some thought fit he should carry in his name: which in process of time was changed, by common use and custom, from Achan into Achar. Which is more likely, than that there should be an error here in the transcriber (see Barchart, in his Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 31).

Ver. 8.] Here is but one son mentioned: but it is usual in scripture to speak of a singular person in the plural number (Gen. xli. 23) to include all his descendants.

Ver. 9. Ram,] This Ram is mentioned in the genealogy of our Saviour (Matt. i. 3, 4.) and called Aram.

mainadab begat Nahshon, prince of the children of Judah;

11 And Nahshon begat Salma, and Salma begat Boaz,

12 And Boaz begat Obed, and Obed begat Jesse,

13 ¶ And Jesse begat his firstborn Eliab, and Abinadab the second, and Shimma the third,

14 Nathaneel the fourth, Raddai the fifth,

15 Ozem the sixth, David the seventh:

16 Whose sisters were Zeruiah, and Abigail. And the sons of Zeruiah; Abishai, and Joab, and Asahel, three.

17 And Abigail bare Amasa: and the father of Amasa was Jether the Ishmeelite.

18 ¶ And Caleb the son of Hezron begat children of Azubah his wife, and of Jerioth: her sons are these; Jeshur, and Shobab, and Ardun.

19 And when Azubah was dead, Caleb took unto him Ephrath, which bare him Hur.

20 And Hur begat Uri, and Uri begat Bezaleel.

Ver. 10.] When they came out of Egypt, and pitched under their several standards (Numb. ii. 3).

Ver. 11, 12.] These three are the principal persons in all this genealogy, as Pellicanus observes; being put into the genealogy of our Saviour, who was descended from David by these three great ancestors.

Ver. 13—15.] It is manifest from 1 Sam. xvi. 10, 11, that Jesse had eight sons: but some think one of them was only an adopted son, and therefore not here mentioned: and they gather from 2 Sam. xxi. 2, that his name was Jonathan, by a mistake; for that Jonathan was David's nephew by his brother Shamma. The truest account therefore is, that one of Jesse's sons was dead, before David came to the kingdom. So Rasi.

Ver. 16. Whose sisters were Zeruiah, and Abigail.] Who were the sisters of David last mentioned.

The sons of Zeruiah; Abishai, and Joab, and Asahel.] Who were all eminent commanders under David.

Ver. 17. Abigail bare Amasa.] Another valiant man, who was murdered by Joab.

The father of Amasa was Jether the Ishmeelite.] He was an Ishmeelite by birth, but by religion an Israelite: or, as others will have it, he was born an Israelite, but bred so long among the Ishmeelites, that many called him by that name (see 2 Sam. xvii. 25). The father of Abishai, Joab, and Asahel, is nowhere mentioned; being not eminent, it seems, as this Jether was; but their glory was by their mother's side.

Ver. 18. Caleb the son of Hezron begat children] It is plain this is not Caleb, whom Moses sent to search out the land of Canaan; for he was the son of Jephunneh, of whom he gives an account below (iv. 15). This man is called Chelubai, ver. 9 of this chapter.

Of Azubah his wife.] It is an ungrounded fancy of the Talmudists, in Sota, who say she was called Azubah (which signifies forsaken) because Caleb married her for the love of God when nobody would have her.

Of Jerioth.] This is understood by Conradus Pellicanus, as if he had said, that "of his wife Azubah he begat Jerioth:" for there is nothing in the Hebrew that answers to the word children.

Her sons are these;] That is, these were the sons of Jerioth.

Ver. 19.] This was a very continent man, who had but one wife at a time; and loved Azubah so well, that he married no other while she lived. His second wife also was of such note, that she gave name to a place in the country of Judah (ver. 24).

21 ¶ And afterward Hezron went in to the daughter of Machir the father of Gilead, whom he married when he was threescore years old; and she bare him Segub.

22 And Segub begat Jair, who had three and twenty cities in the land of Gilead.

23 And he took Geshur, and Aram, with the towns of Jair, from them, with Kenath, and the towns thereof, even threescore cities. All these belonged to the sons of Machir the father of Gilead.

24 And after that Hezron was dead in Caleb-ephatah, then Abiah, Hezron's wife, bare him Ashur, the father of Tekoa.

25 ¶ And the sons of Jerahmeel the firstborn of Hezron were, Ram the firstborn, and Bunah, and Oren, and Ozem, and Ahijah.

26 Jerahmeel had also another wife, whose name was Atarah; she was the mother of Onam.

27 And the sons of Ram the firstborn of Jerahmeel, were, Maaz, and Jamin, and Eker.

Ver. 21. Afterward Hezron went in to the daughter of Machir] After the death of Ephrath, I suppose, he married another woman of an eminent family.

The father of Gilead.] The prince of the country of Gilead; as the word father often signifies.

Ver. 22. Segub begat Jair.] Who is called the son of Manasseh in Numb. xxxii. 41, because his grandmother was of that tribe, the daughter of Machir, the son of Manasseh (Numb. xx. 29.)

Who had three and twenty cities in the land of Gilead.] In the right of his wife, as the common opinion of the Jewish doctors is: who observe in scripture two instances of husbands that inherited the estate of their wives, though in another tribe. The first is in Josh. xxiv. 33, and the other in this place; where Kimchi notes that this Jair, "the son of Segub, took a wife in the land of Gilead, unto whom he succeeded as her heir in her possessions, when she was dead: these twenty-three cities being her inheritance" (see Selden, De Successionibus ad Leges Hebr. cap. 18).

Ver. 23. He took Geshur, and Aram, with the towns of Jair.] They were afterwards called by his name, who conquered them, and took them from the neighbouring Geshurites and Syrians.

With Kenath, and the towns thereof,] the metropolis of which was Kenath: in the taking of which he employed a great commander, called Nobah, Num. xxxii. 42, who, I suppose, was of the same tribe and family.

All these belonged to the sons of Machir] His posterity possessed these towns.

Ver. 24. Caleb-ephatah.] This city was called after the name of both husband and wife (ver. 19), they being both famous persons. And it was also called Beth-lehem, from the fruitfulness of the place.

Abiah, Hezron's wife, bare him Ashur] He married her when he was very old (for he was threescore when he took his former wife, ver. 21) and he died before the child was born, whom he begat of her. The Jews look upon his marrying when he was so old, as proceeding from a great desire of posterity in the family of Pharez, from whom the Messiah was to descend. The same we see in Boaz, who married Ruth when he was old.

The father of Tekoa.] Who gave name to a famous town in this country (2 Sam. xiv. 2. Jer. iii. 6).

Ver. 26.] There being (according to our translation of the foregoing verse) mention of his former wife, it seems not to be unreasonable to take Ahijah to have 28 And the sons of Onam were, Shammai, and Jada. And the sons of Shammai; Nadab, and Abishur.

29 And the name of the wife of Abishur was Abihail, and she bare him Ahban, and Molid.

30 And the sons of Nadab; Seled, and Appaim: but Seled died without children.

31 And the sons of Appaim; Ishi. And the sons of Ishi; Sheshan. And the children of Sheshan; Ahlai.

32 And the sons of Jada, the brother of Shammai; Jether, and Jonathan: and Jether died without children.

33 And the sons of Jonathan; Peleth, and Zaza. These were the sons of Jerahmeel.

34 ¶ Now Sheshan had no sons, but daughters. And Sheshan had a servant, an Egyptian, whose name was Jarha.

35 And Sheshan gave his daughter to Jarha his servant to wife; and she bare him Attai.

36 And Attai begat Nathan, and Nathan begat Zabad,

37 And Zabad begat Ephlal, and Ephlal begat Obed,

38 And Obed begat Jehu, and Jehu begat Azariah, been the mother of Ram, and the rest which he had by Ahijah. So the words may be understood, supposing the particle mem to be wanting before Ahijah.

Ver. 28.] He sets not down the names of the children of Jerahmeel's eldest son, by his first wife; but of both those he had by his second. The rest, perhaps, had no children, as is noted afterward of one of his grandsons, ver. 30.

Ver. 29.] This, though the second son, it seems married first; and therefore his children are mentioned before the other.

Ver. 31. The sons of Appaim; Ishi.] The plural number is often used when one son or daughter only is spoken of (as I observed ver. 8) for in that one all the posterity are comprehended. The next words are another example of this.

The children of Sheshan; Ahlai.] It is plain from ver. 34, 35, that this Ahlai was not a son, but a daughter.

Ver. 32. The sons of Jada] Mentioned in ver. 28. Jether died without children.] He had neither son nor daughter.

Ver. 33.] Whose male line he carries no farther; because, perhaps, it failed in these last named.

Ver. 34. Sheshan had no sons, but daughters.] We read of no more than one daughter that he had; but he speaks in the plural number, as before, ver. 31.

Sheshan had a servant, an Egyptian, whose name was Jarha.] Who being a proselyte, it is probable, to the Jewish religion, and a faithful servant to his master, he gave him his freedom, and married his daughter to him.

Ver. 35.] This servant was very dear to him, and perhaps, ruler of his house, as Eliezer of Damascus was to Abraham; who, if he had not had a son, he looked upon as his heir to all his estate (Gen. xv. 23).

Ver. 41.] We cannot now understand why so long a genealogy should be inserted here of the descendants of Sheshan's daughter by an Egyptian. The Jews imagine it is the genealogy of Ishmael (who slew Gedaliah, whom the king of Babylon left the governor of the land after he had taken Jerusalem), who they fancy was "the son of Nathaniah the son

39 And Azariah begat Helez, and Helez begat Eleasah, 40 And Eleasah begat Sisamai, and Sisamai begat Shallum, 41 And Shallum begat Jekamiah, and Jekamiah begat Elishama.

42 ¶ Now the sons of Caleb the brother of Jerahmeel were, Mesha his firstborn, which was the father of Ziph; and the sons of Mareshah the father of Hebron.

43 And the sons of Hebron; Korah, and Tapuah, and Rekem, and Shema.

44 And Shema begat Raham, the father of Jorkoam; and Rekem begat Shammai.

45 And the son of Shammai was Maon; and Maon was the father of Beth-zur.

46 And Ephah, Caleb's concubine, bare Haran, and Moza, and Gazez: and Haran begat Gazez.

47 And the sons of Jahdai; Regem, and Jotham, and Gesham, and Pelet, and Ephah, and Shaaph.

48 Maachah, Caleb's concubine, bare Sheber and Tirhanah.

49 She bare also Shaaph the father of Madmannah, Sheva the father of Machbenah, and the of Elishama," last mentioned (as Jeremiah describes him, ch. xli. 1) which we might have believed, if this genealogy had so concluded: in which, as there is no mention of Nathaniah, as the son of Elishama (but the genealogy ends with Elishama, and goes no further), so it is not probable, that the descent of so in famous a person, though of the seed-royal, should be deduced thus largely.

Ver. 42. The sons of Caleb] Called Chelubai, ver. 9.

The brother of Jerahmeel] This is added to show he speaks of the same Caleb there mentioned, and ver. 18.

Mesha his firstborn,] By a third wife; for his children by Azubah and Ephrath are named before.

The father of Ziph;] The prince of Ziph, as some understand it. There were two places of this name in the tribe of Judah (see Josh. xv. 24, 25).

The sons of Mareshah the father of Hebron.] Hebron here is the name of a man, not of a place: for his posterity is immediately mentioned: but Kimchi makes this to be the sense of these and the foregoing words: "The sons of Ziph were Mareshah, the father of Hebron." Which is very natural.

Ver. 45. Maon was the father of Beth-zur.] Who gave name to a place in the tribe of Judah (Josh. xv. 58). Which Josephus saith was in the mountainous part of it, as the word imports. Maon also is a well-known name to a wilderness in this tribe.

Ver. 46. Ephah, Caleb's concubine, &c.] Besides his forenamed wives, he married a concubine: which was an inferior sort of a wife, as I have shown upon Gen. xxv. 6.

Haran begat Gazez.] This is another Gazez; to whom Haran gave the name of his younger brother.

Ver. 47.] We read nothing of Jahdai in the foregoing genealogy: but the Jews take him for one of the sons of Ephah before named; and most probably Moza, next brother to Haran: whose posterity is here set down, as Haran's was before. Moza therefore had two names; which was not unusual among the Jews.

Ver. 48.] This Caleb was a great man, and could father of Gibeaz: and the daughter of Caleb was Achsa.

50 ¶ These were the sons of Caleb, the son of Hur, the firstborn of Ephraim; Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim.

51 Salma the father of Beth-lehem, Hareph the father of Beth-gader.

52 And Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim had sons; Haroeh, and half of the Manahethites.

53 And the families of Kirjath-jearim; the Ithrites, and the Pulhites, and the Shumathites, and the Mishraites: of them came the Zareathites, and the Eshtaulites.

54 The sons of Salma; Beth-lehem, and the Netophathites, Ataroth, the house of Joab, and half of the Manahethites, the Zorites.

55 And the families of the scribes which dwell at Jabez; the Tirathites, the Shimeathites, and Suchathites. These are the Kenites that came of Hemath, the father of the house of Rechab.

maintain many wives; which he took, and had a numerous issue by them.

Ver. 49.] By the word father in this verse, in all likelihood, is meant the prince or ruler of these places. For Gibeaz was a city in the tribe of Judah; and so was Madmannah (Josh. xv. 31. 57).

The daughter of Caleb was Achsa.] Who is mentioned in the books of Joshua and Judges; but it was not said by what wife he had her. She was married to a great man, Othniel (Josh. xv. 17. Judg. i. 12).

Ver. 50. These were the sons of Caleb, the son of Hur, the firstborn of Ephraim;] This was another Caleb, descended from the foregoing, by Hur his son by Ephraim (ver. 19), who had this son, whom he called Caleb, after the name of his grandfather.

Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim.] The Targum translates it "the prince of Kirjath-jearim:" which is a place, as Beth-lehem, and Beth-gader were, of which two other persons are presently after said to be the father. But Kimchi takes the word father in the proper sense, and thinks Shobal's posterity possessed the city of Kirjath-jearim.

Ver. 51.] It is not material which way we understand this; either as the Targum or as Kimchi expounds the word father in the foregoing verse.

Ver. 52.] The Hebrew words being "Haroeh. Hatzi, Hammenioth," the LXX. expound them, as if Shobal had three sons, Araa, and Aisi, and Ammanith. But Kimchi takes the last word for the name of a place; which is evident from ver. 54, where the other half of it is mentioned: and of one half he thinks Haroeh was the lord and governor. But Jacchiades follows the LXX. and leaves Kimchi's explication.

Ver. 53. The families of Kirjath-jearim, &c.] The inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim were divided into several families (as Kimchi interprets it), and these here mentioned were the heads of families, denominated from the Ithra or Jether, and Puhah, &c. as from Jinna came the family of the Jinmites, and from Beriah the family of the Berites, in Num. xxvi. 44.

Of them came the Zareathites, and the Eshtaulites.] The same Kimchi observes, that Zarah and Eshtaul were two cities in the tribe of Judah; which were built by two of Kirjath-jearim of this name. Who inhabited these places, and left two great families, who were from them called Zareathites, and Eshtaulites.

Ver. 51.] This Salma, the son of Caleb the younger (ver. 51), had a numerous posterity. For from him descended the inhabitants of Beth-lehem (so we are to understand this word, for Beth-lehem was the name of a place, not of a man), the Netophathites, and those of Ataroth, and Beth-joab (so these words we translate "the house of Joab" should be rendered; for he is not speaking of Joab's family, but of Caleb's), and half of the Manahethites, and the Zorites, who were a people possessed of a town called Zorah: where the other half dwelt.

Ver. 55. The families of the scribes which dwell at Jabez;] This place, Kimchi thinks, might possibly be built by Jabez (an honourable person, mentioned ch. iv. 9), in which some doctors of the law dwelt, who were of the family of Salma; for of these he is still speaking.

These are the Kenites that came of Hemath,] These Kenites, as R. Solomon thinks, were the inhabitants of a place called Cani, in the tribe of Judah (Josh. xv. 57), though it must be acknowledged also, some of the Kenites, the posterity of Jethro, did settle in the same tribe (Judg. i. 16), of whom, some think, Ezra here speaks. And then Hemath descended from Jethro, who was the father, that is, the prince, of Beth-rehab; so the last words may be understood. There were other Kenites, descended from Heber, who dwelt in the tribe of Naphtali, or Manasseh (Judg. iv. 11).

CHAPTER III.

1 The sons of David. 10 His line to Zedekiah. 17 The successors of Jeconiah.

1 Now these were the sons of David, which were born unto him in Hebron; the firstborn Amnon, of Ahinoam the Jezreelitess; the second, Daniel, of Abigail the Carmelitess:

2 The third, Absalom the son of Maachah the daughter of Talmai king of Geshur: the fourth, Adonijah the son of Hagith;

3 The fifth, Shephatiah of Abital: the sixth, Ithream by Egla his wife.

4 These six were born unto him in Hebron;

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1. These were the sons of David.] Having given a large account of the posterity of Hezron, he returns to David before mentioned. ch. ii. 15.

Which were born unto him in Hebron;] Before he was king of all Israel.

The second Daniel.] This second son is called Chisleab in 2 Sam. iii. 3, where I have given an account of it. And here it may be noted, once for all, that it was a frequent thing among the Jews for men to have two names; especially when they lived sometimes in one country and sometimes in another. This appears from a famous case mentioned in the Gemara of Codex Gittin, where it is resolved, that if a man have two wives, one in Judea, and another in Galilee, and he gave a bill of divorce to her in Judea, subscribing to it his name whereby he is known in Galilee, the bill is void. And in like manner, if he write his name whereby he goes in Judea, unto a bill of divorce to his wife in Galilee, it is of no effect.

and there he reigned seven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years.

5 And these were born unto him in Jerusalem; Shimea, and Shobab, and Nathan, and Solomon, four, of Bath-shua the daughter of Ammiel:

6 Ithar also, and Elishama, and Eliphelet,

7 And Nogah, and Nepheg, and Japhia,

8 And Elishama, and Eliada, and Eliphelet, nine.

9 These were all the sons of David, beside the sons of the concubines, and Tamar their sister.

10 ¶ And Solomon's son was Rehoboam, Abia his son, Asa his son, Jehoshaphat his son,

Ver. 3. Eglah his wife.] This Eglah is generally thought by the Jews to be Michal daughter of Saul (see my notes upon 2 Sam. iii. 5), who, some think, is peculiarly called his wife, because she was his only legal wife, according to the divine institution: all the rest he took by custom then reigning.

Ver. 4.] This has been explained in 2 Sam. v.

Ver. 5. Bathshua] In 2 Sam. xi. 3, she is called Bath-sheba (as she is through the whole scripture), and her father Eliam. But I observed just now, it was usual among the Jews to have two names; though there is no great difference in this first of these, no more than there is between Shammah and Shimea; the vowels being only changed, not the consonants, of which the names consist. Solomon was the eldest of these four sons; but he is mentioned last, because the discourse was to return to his genealogy (ver. 10).

Ver. 6.] There is a small difference in the name of the second of these as he is mentioned 2 Sam. v. 15, where he is called Elishua.

Ver. 8. Elishama, and Eliada, and Eliphelet.] Two of these names are mentioned before: who, it is supposed, died in their infancy: and therefore he preserved their memory, by giving their names unto two others, who were born afterward, and lived longer. So Kimchi.

Nine.] Beside the four born of Bath-sheba (ver. 5), but there are only seven mentioned in 2 Sam. v. 16, those two who died early being there omitted (see my notes on that place).

Ver. 9. Besides the sons of the concubines.] Who are not mentioned, either here or in Samuel.

Tamar their sister.] See 2 Sam. xiii. 1.

Ver. 10—15. The sons of Josiah were, the firstborn Johanan.] There is nothing needs explaining in the foregoing genealogy down from Solomon to this time; but here is some difficulty; for this Johanan is thought by many to be the same with Jehoahaz, who succeeded Josiah in the throne. But he was not his firstborn; being but twenty-three years old when the people made him king, and after three months' time, his brother, being put in his place, is said to be twenty-five years old (2 Kings xxiii. 31. 36). Petavius hath said a great deal about this in his annotations upon Epiphanius ad Heres. Epicur. p. 18. But, after all, I take the truth to be, that Johanan was his eldest son, but he died before his father: and therefore is not mentioned in the book of the Kings: as Jehoahaz is not mentioned here, being made king by the people of the land, and presently dethroned.

Jehoiakim.] Who was next to him, to whom by right of succession the kingdom belonged: he being the eldest now Johanan was dead. He was called by 11 Joram his son, Ahaziah his son, Joash his son,

12 Amaziah his son, Azariah his son, Jotham his son,

13 Ahaz his son, Hezekiah his son, Manasseh his son,

14 Amon his son, Josiah his son.

15 And the sons of Josiah were, the firstborn Johanan, the second Jehoiakim, the third Zedekiah, the fourth Shallum.

16 And the sons of Jehoiakim: Jeconiah his son, Zedekiah his son.

17 ¶ And the sons of Jeconiah: Assir, Salathiel his son, 18 Malchiram also, and Pedaiah, and Shenazar, Jecamiah, Hoshama, and Nedabiah.

his father Eliakim: but had this other name imposed on him by the king of Egypt (2 Kings xxiii. 34).

Zedekiah.] Who was the youngest of all Josiah's sons, as appears by his age, when he was made king after Jehoiakim was carried captive. The same Petavius thinks there were two Zedekiahs; one the son of Josiah, who was their last king; the other the son of Jeconiah (mentioned in the next verse), who never came to be king.

Shallum.] This was the next son to Jehoiakim, and the same with Jehoahaz, as is plain from Jer. xxii. 11 (see my notes upon 2 Kings xxiii. 30, 31). He is put last, because he was not at all considerable; being made king by a popular faction; and in three months' time thrust out of his throne, by the king of Egypt, who carried him thither, and there he died.

Ver. 16.] The posterity of Jeconiah is set down in the next verse; and therefore here by the word son we must understand his successor in the kingdom. Thus Seneca makes Atreus and Tantalus to be descendants of Inachus; because they succeeded him in the kingdom of Argos. And in like manner Jacobus Capellus here observes (in his Histor. Sacra et Exotica, ad A. M. 3424), that Multi filii dicuntur, qui legaliter tantum erant filii, id est, hæredes; "many are called sons, who were only sons legally, that is, heirs." Of which he makes Zedekiah an example, who is here called the son of Jeconiah (who was his uncle, 2 Kings xxiv. 17), because he succeeded him.

Ver. 17.] Some think that Assir is not the name of his son, but signifies captive; to denote that his son Salathiel was born when he was a captive in Babylon, as St. Matthew notes (ch. i. 12), which doth not contradict the prophecy of Jeremiah, who said he should die childless (Jer. xxii. 30), for his meaning no more, but that he should have no child sitting on the throne after him. But Jacobus Capellus, in the place forenamed, makes Salathiel another instance of an heir being called a son. For he thinks he succeeded Jeconiah in the dignity to which he was restored by Evil-merodach; but was the son of Neri, who sprung from Nathan.

Ver. 18.] These were not all the immediate sons of Jeconiah, but the sons of Salathiel; as may be gathered from hence: that in the next verse Zerubbabel is said to be the son of Pedaiah, and in St. Matthew (ch. i. 12) to be the son of Salathiel; that is, his grandson. So there is something to be supplied, to make out the sense of this verse, viz. "The sons also of Salathiel were Malchiram, and Pedaiah, &c." But Grotius (on Matt. i. 23) thinks, that Zerubbabel here mentioned is not he, who was the leader of God's people when they returned from their captivity in Babylon; with whom Huetius also agrees. But others

19 And the sons of Pedaiah were Zerubbabel, and Shimei: and the sons of Zerubbabel; Meshullam, and Hananiah, and Shelomith their sister:

20 And Hashubah, and Ohel, and Berechiah, and Hasadiah, Jushab-hesed, five.

21 And the sons of Hananiah; Pelatiah, and Jesaiah: the sons of Rephaiah, the sons of Arnan, the sons of Obadiah, the sons of Shechaniah.

think, this may better be solved by supposing, that Salathiel dying without children, Pedaiah raised up seed to his brother, as the scripture speaks, and begat Zerubbabel of Salathiel's wife. Who therefore was the son of Pedaiah, because begotten by him; and yet the son of Salathiel, because begotten of his wife; who had no son by Salathiel, but by Pedaiah; who begat him, not to be his heir, but the heir of his brother who was dead.

Ver. 19. Shelomith their sister:] That is, sister to the two sons before named; she having the same father and mother that they had; which the other five mentioned in the next verse, it is supposed, had not; but were by another mother, though they had the same father.

Ver. 20.] Upon this they ground their opinion, who think the Zerubbabel here mentioned is not he that was the governor of the people after the captivity; for his son's name was Rhesa (Luke iii. 27.) who is not found among the eight children that are here reckoned up.

Ver. 21. Pelatiah, and Jesaiah:] These are sons of the second son of Zerubbabel (ver. 19.)

The sons of Rephaiah.—Arnan.—Obadiah.—Shechaniah.] These four (and their sons) seem to have been likewise the children of Hananiah.

Ver. 22.] Here are but five sons of Shemaiah; and therefore the Hebrew word shishah (which we translate six) is rather the name of his last son; who might possibly be so called, because he was his sixth son.

22 And the sons of Shechaniah; Shemaiah; and the sons of Shemaiah; Hattush, and Igeal, and Bariah, and Neariah, and Shaphat, six.

23 And the sons of Neariah; Elioenai, and Hezekiah, and Azrikam, three.

24 And the sons of Elioenai were, Hodaiah, and Eliashib, and Pelatiah, and Akkub, and Johanan, and Dalaiah, and Anani, seven.

Ver. 23. [The rest of Shemaiah's sons had no issue.

Ver. 24.] The Targum here hath a very strange observation: for after the word Anani, he saith, "He is the king Messiah, who is to be revealed." The reason of which is given in the famous book Tanchuma (as Beckius here notes,) because it is said in Dan. vii. 13. He saw in a vision, and, behold, one like the Son of man, in anani (in the clouds; which certainly was a vision of the Messiah, as Saadis Gaon acknowledges. And this use is to be made of this passage, that their minds were always full of the thoughts of the Messiah, and that they expected he should be revealed as they speak) so many generations after Zerubbabel: which is an argument he came long ago. St. Matthew, indeed, counts more generations from Zerubbabel to our Saviour's birth than are here mentioned, and hath quite different names in this succession: which is another argument that this Zerubbabel in the Chronicles is not the same with him in St. Matthew. And, indeed, though some persons in scripture have two names, yet it is not likely that so many persons as are reckoned in this succession, should all have quite different names. Therefore St. Matthew's genealogy is not here recorded: but he had it out of the public tables, which were kept by the priests of all the great families of Judah: particularly that of David's, out of whose family they expected the Messiah should come, would not fail to keep a punctual account of his successors in every generation.

CHAPTER IV.

1, 11 The posterity of Judah by Caleb the son of Hur. 5 Of Ashur the posthumous son of Hezron. 9 Of Jabez, and his prayer. 21 The posterity of Shelah. 24 The posterity and cities of Simeon. 39 Their conquest of Gedor, and of the Amalekites in mount Seir.

1 THE sons of Judah; Pharez, Hezron, and Carmi, and Hur, and Shobal.

2 And Reaiah the son of Shobal begat Jahath; and Jahath begat Ahumai, and Lahad. These are the families of the Zorathites.

3 And these were of the father of Etam; Jez-reel, and Ishma, and Idbash: and the name of their sister was Hazelelponi:

4 And Pennel the father of Gedor, and Ezei the father of Hushah. These are the sons of Hur, the firstborn of Ephratah, the father of Beth-lehem.

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1.] By the sons of Judah are meant his posterity: for here is only one of his sons mentioned in this place: viz. Pharez: whose son Hezron begat Carmi, (the same with Chelubai and Caleb, ch. ii. 9. 18), whose sons were Hur and Shobal: who is the same, I suppose, with Shobal; of whose posterity he intends here to give an account.

Ver. 2.] Zora is not the name of a man, but of a place in the tribe of Judah: where several families of that tribe settled themselves, who descended from Jahath, Shumai, and Lahad, the sons and grandsons of Shobal, by whom this city was built and inhabited. Thus Kimchi explains this place.

Ver. 3. These were of the father of Etam;) Descended from the lord of a place called Etam: which was in this tribe (ver. 32).

Jezreel, and Ishma, and Idbush;) These were the sons of the lord of Etam: whose name is not here recorded.

Their sister was Hazelelponi;) Who, it is likely, was a very eminent woman: and therefore her name is remembered; though now we are ignorant of the particular reason there was then for it.

Ver. 4. Pennel the father of Gedor;) In the eighteenth verse of this chapter, Jered is said to be the father, that is, the lord, of Gedor. But there might be then two lords of the same city; as there are now among us several lordships in the same town.

These are the sons of Hur;) By some other wife than her by whom he had the children mentioned, ii. ver. 20.

5 ¶ And Ashur the father of Tekoa had two wives, Helah and Naarah.

6 And Naarah bare him Ahuzam, and Hephher, and Temeni, and Haahashtari. These were the sons of Naarah.

7 And the sons of Helah were, Zereth, and Jezoar, and Ethnan.

8 And Coz begat Anub, and Zobebah, and the families of Aharhel the son of Harum.

9 ¶ And Jabez was more honourable than his brethren: and his mother called his name Jabez, saying, Because I bare him with sorrow.

10 And Jabez called on the God of Israel, saying, Oh that thou wouldest bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast, and that thine hand might be with me, and that thou wouldest keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me! And God granted him that which he requested.

11 ¶ And Chelub the brother of Shuah begat

The firstborn of Ephratah.] See there ver. 19.

The father of Beth-lehem.] In the second chapter, ver. 52, Salma is said to be the father of Beth-lehem; but that doth not contradict this: for they might both be lords of the same place, especially one being the grandfather, the other the son.

Ver. 5.] See ch. ii. ver. 24.

Ver. 6.] His first wife being barren for some time, it moved him to take another; who bare him these sons.

Ver. 7.] Afterward his first grew fruitful, and bare him as many sons as the other. For it is probable that Coz (mentioned in the next words) was her son.

Ver. 8.] I suppose several families sprung from Aharhel, who was the son of Coz by his wife Harum.

Ver. 9. Jabez.] It is very uncertain who Jabez was: perhaps the founder of one of the families of Aharhel. But the Targum both here and upon ch. ii. 55 saith, he was the same with Othniel. But this is a Jewish fancy, confuted by ver. 13.

Was more honourable than his brethren.] Wiser in the law, as the Targum expounds it: who had respect, it is likely, to his piety and devotion, expressed in the next verse. Others think he was a person of greater courage and valour, for which Othniel was famous.

I bare him with sorrow.] She had a very hard labour, when she was in travail with him.

Ver. 10. Oh that thou wouldest bless me indeed.] He prayed for the help of God, to drive out the Canaanites, and make room for his family; that they might dwell more commodiously.

That thine hand might be with me.] As it was with Othniel, to enable him to take Kirjath-sepher, as we read in the first chapter of Judges.

That thou wouldest keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me!] Preserve him in health, and prosper him, when he had enlarged his border: that he might not live in such misery, as that wherewith his mother brought him forth. For in the word grieve, most think he alludes to the pains of his mother in her travail.

God granted him that which he requested.] And the rather, because he had hereby greater leisure for the study of the law, and instructing others in piety, as many understand it. For the Jews think this Jabez was an eminent doctor of the law, and left behind him a great many disciples, who are mentioned, they suppose, in the last verse of the second chapter of this book; where we read of the "family of the scribes that dwelt at Jabez."

Ver. 12. These are the men of Rechah.] The per-

Mehir, which was the father of Eshton.

12 And Eshton begat Beth-rapha, and Paseah, and Tehinnah the father of Ir-nahash. These are the men of Rechah.

13 And the sons of Kenaz; Othniel, and Seraiah: and the sons of Othniel; Hathath.

14 And Meonothai begat Ophrah: and Seraiah begat Joab, the father of the valley of Charashim; for they were craftsmen.

15 And the sons of Caleb the son of Jephunneh; Iru, Elah, and Naam: and the sons of Elah, even Kenaz.

16 And the sons of Jehaleleel; Ziph, and Ziphah, Tiria, and Asareel.

17 And the sons of Ezra were, Jether, and Mered, and Ephraim, and Jalou: and she bare Miriam, and Shammai, and Ishbah the father of Esh-temoa.

18 And his wife Jehudijah bare Jered the fa-sons whose posterity possessed the city of Rechah: of which we have no mention elsewhere.

Ver. 13. The sons of Kenaz.] It is not said whose son he was: it is likely of Chelub, mentioned ver. 11.

Othniel, and Seraiah: and the sons of Othniel; Hathath.] And likewise Meonothai, mentioned in the next verse: for after his sons follow the sons of Othniel's younger brother.

Ver. 14. The father of the valley of Charashim.] Or, of those that dwell in Gecharashim: which was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, mentioned in Neh. xi. 35.

For they were craftsmen.] The smiths that dwell and wrought there gave it the name Charashim: by which word some understand carpenters. For in this catalogue several such-like sort of persons are mentioned: such as potters, and weavers, and gardeners (ver. 21, 23). For societies cannot consist only of one sort of persons; but must be composed of men of different and various employments. As Strigelius observes out of Aristotle, "A city is not composed of physicians and physicians: but of physicians and ploughmen." So the son of Sirach discourses, that though such kind of men are not fit to be admitted to counsel, "yet they maintain the state of the world" (Ecclus. xxxiii. 34). When Solomon, indeed, began to reign, there were not many craftsmen in Israel, but afterward they increased: and such honour was paid unto arts, that they took care to preserve the memory of such persons and families as applied themselves that way; as appears by this very verse, and ver. 21, 23 of this chapter. Whence the prophet Isaiah foretells this as a judgment God would send upon them, that he would take their artificers (ch. iii. 5). And when Jerusalem was taken by the Babylonians, it is said, they carried away all the craftsmen (2 Kings xxiv. 14).

Ver. 15. Jephunneh.] Some take this Jephunneh to be the same with Hezron, whose son Caleb was: and had this son by a different wife from her mentioned ch. ii. 18.

The sons of Elah, even Kenaz.] Or rather Uknaz was the son of Elah: as some of the Jews understand it.

Ver. 16. Jehaleleel.] Who was the son of Uknaz last mentioned.

Ver. 17. Ezra] Who was the son of Asareel last named.

She bare] That is, Bithiah the wife of Mered (mentioned in the next verse) bare the sons following.

Miriam, and Shammai.] Miriam was the name of a man as well as of a woman: and there are several ther of Gedor, and Heber the father of Socho, and Jekuthiel the father of Zanoah. And these are the sons of Bithiah the daughter of Pharaoh, which Mered took.

19 And the sons of his wife Hodiah the sister of Naham, the father of Keilah the Garmite, and Eshtemoa the Maachathite.

20 And the sons of Shimon were, Amnon, and Rinnah, Ben-hanan, and Tilon. And the sons of Ishi were, Zoheth, and Ben-zoheth.

21 ¶ The sons of Shelah the son of Judah were, Er the father of Lecah, and Laadah the father of Mareshah, and the families of the house of them that wrought fine linen, of the house of Ashbea, 22 And Jokim, and the men of Chozeba, and Joash, and Saraph, who had the dominion in Moab, and Jashubi-lehem. And these are ancient things.

such instances in scripture, as Kimchi observes upon this place.

Eshtemoa.] It is uncertain whether Eshtemoa be the name of a person, or of a place whereof he was lord.

Ver. 18. His wife Jehudijah bare Jered.] Mered had this son by another wife called Jehudijah.

The father of Gedor.] The Targum and Jarchi, with others, by father, in all these three instances, understand the lord or ruler of those cities, which were in the tribe of Judah (see Josh. xv. 34, 35).

Bithiah.] Mentioned in the foregoing verse.

The daughter of Pharaoh which Mered took.] That is, married. But it is not likely he married the daughter of the king of Egypt, unless some natural daughter: but rather of some other person, called by the name of Pharaoh; who might be an Israelite as well as an Egyptian; names being upon several occasions, given from other countries.

Ver. 19. Hodiah.] This was his third wife.

The sister of Naham.] It seems to be more reasonable to translate it Achotnaam: who was his son by Hodiah.

The father of Keilah the Garmite, and Eshtemoa the Maachathite.] These were his grandsons, who are frequently in scripture called sons.

Ver. 20. Shimon.] Who is supposed to be another son of Mered by his last wife.

Ishi.] Who is thought to be the son of Tilon last mentioned.

Ver. 21. The sons of Shelah.] Having given an account of those descended from Pharez the eldest son of Judah, and Zerah, whom Judah had by Tamar (ch. ii. 4, 5), he now relates the posterity of Shelah, whom he had by his wife Shuah (Gen. xxxviii. 5).

Lecah.] This was a city in the tribe of Judah of which Er was the lord.

Mareshah.] Another city in the same tribe.

Of the house of them that wrought fine linen.] From him came all those families that were famous for this sort of workmanship in fine linen: wherewith their kings and priests were clothed, as the Targum notes.

Of the house of Ashbea.] The principal of which, I suppose, were those of this man's posterity.

Ver. 22. Jokim.] This was either a person or a family descended from Shelah.

The men of Chozeba.] They were another family sprung from the same root: who settled in this place.

Joash, and Saraph, who had the dominion in Moab.] Conquered several places there, in the time of David:

23 These were the potters, and those that dwelt among plants and hedges: there they dwelt with the king for his work.

24 The sons of Simeon were, Nemuel, and Jamin, Jarib, Zerah, and Shaul; 25 Shallum his son, Mibsam his son, Mishna his son.

26 And the sons of Mishma: Hamuel his son, Zaccur his son, Shimei his son.

27 And Shimei had sixteen sons and six daughters; but his brethren had not many children, neither did all their family multiply, like to the children of Judah.

28 And they dwelt at Beer-sheba, and Moladah, and Hazar-shual,

29 And at Bilhah, and at Ezem, and at Tolad,

30 And at Bethuel, and at Hormah, and at Ziklag, or had the government of them given by him. The Targum takes the Hebrew word baalu, as if it signified that they married wives in the country of Moab.

Jashubi-lehem.] Or rather, "the inhabitants of Lehem:" a place where some of Shelah's posterity settled.

These are ancient things.] That is, these things which have been related concerning Joash and Saraph (as Kimchi interprets it), who had dominion in Moab, show that they were long ago; but now, as it follows, their condition was altered.

Ver. 23. These were the potters.] Or rather, "these now are potters;" &c. being fallen from the glory and splendour wherein they formerly lived, to common and mean employments.

There they dwelt with the king for his work.] This is commonly understood, as if they stayed in Babylon (for there was no king now in Judea) to be vine-dressers, gardeners, and husbandmen, under that monarch: whose service they liked so well, that they chose to continue in it, rather than return to Jerusalem.

Ver. 24. Simeon.] This tribe is mentioned next to Judah, because they were neighbours to them: part of their possessions being taken out of the tribe of Judah (Josh. xix. 1, &c.). But the names of some of Simeon's sons were much altered, by length of time, from what they were when they went down into Egypt (Gen. xli. 10). And Ohad, there mentioned, is not here remembered: because, it is likely, he had no issue.

Ver. 25. Shallum his son.] That is, he was the son of Shaul, last mentioned.

Ver. 26.] It seems Mibsam had no son.

Ver. 27. Shimei had sixteen sons and six daughters.] The posterity of his eldest sons are not taken notice of: but only, as it follows, that they had not many.

Neither did all their family multiply.] Which evidently appears by the number that was taken of them at their first muster, Numb. i. 23, where we find that they were but fifty-nine thousand and three hundred: when the children of Judah were threescore and fourteen thousand and six hundred (ver. 26). And at the next muster there was a far greater inequality (Numb. xxvi. 14, 22).

Ver. 28.] These places are mentioned in Josh. xix. 2, 3.

Ver. 29. Bilhah.] Called Balah in the place above named.

At Ezem, and at Tolad.] These are called Azem, and Eltolad, the former part of names being often cut 31 And at Beth-marcaboth, and Hazar-susim, and at Beth-birei, and at Shaaraim. These were their cities unto the reign of David.

32 And their villages were, Etam, and Ain, Rimmon, and Tochen, and Ashan, five cities:

33 And all their villages that were round about the same cities, unto Baal. These were their habitations, and their genealogy.

34 And Meshobah, and Jamlech, and Joshah the son of Amaziah,

35 And Joel, and Jehu the son of Josibiah, the son of Seraiah, the son of Asiel, 36 And Elioenai, and Jaakobah, and Jeshohaiah, and Asaiah, and Adiel, and Jesimiel, and Benaiah, 37 And Ziza the son of Shiphi, the son of Alon, the son of Jedaiah, the son of Shimri, the son of Shemaiah;

38 These mentioned by their names were off; as Hermon for Baal-hermon (Judg. iii. 3), Shittim (Numb. xxv. 1), for Abel-shittim (Numb. xxxiii. 49, &c.).

Ver. 30.] See Josh. xix. 4, 5.

Ver. 31. Hazar-susim.] Called there, Josh. xix. 5, Hazar-susah.

At Beth-birei, and at Shaaraim.] The names are different in Josh. xix. 6.

These were their cities unto the reign of David.]

Who, the Jews fancy, took these cities from them, and gave them again to Judah. Which is not likely, nor doth the word unto denote that they held them no longer, than till the reign of David: but that when he came to the crown their families dwelt here; though Ziklag had been in the possession of the Philistines, who gave it to David, as his own town.

Ver. 32.] Here is one place mentioned, more than is in Josh. xix. 7, which they had some way acquired since his days.

Ver. 33. Baal.] Called Baalath-beer, Josh. xix. 8.

These were their habitations and their genealogy.] Or, as it is in the margin, "they divided themselves by nations among them;" i. e. among these places.

Ver. 34.] These, and the rest that follow, seem to have been very eminent persons in this tribe: by whose valour these great things were performed, which are mentioned ver. 38, 39, &c. There is so great a resemblance in the name, that some fancy the name Ἰαμβαχας among the Greeks came from this name Jamlech.

Ver. 38. These mentioned by their names] Whose names are mentioned in the four foregoing verses.

Were princes in their families.] Great persons of chief authority in their several families.

The house of their fathers increased greatly.] By their valour they enlarged their habitations, which were too strait for them.

Ver. 39. Gedor.] There was a place of this name belonging unto Judah (Josh. xv. 58), and another called Gederah, appertaining to the same tribe (ver. 36), out of which perhaps Judah had not driven the old inhabitants: and therefore the Simeonites wanting room went thither, and by dispossessing them enlarged their border. But see the next verse, which places Gedor elsewhere.

To seek pasture for their flocks.] For their sheep and their goats: which are properly meant by flocks.

Ver. 40. The land was—peaceable.] So that they might feed their flocks securely.

princes in their families: and the house of their fathers increased greatly.

39 ¶ And they went to the entrance of Gedor, even unto the east side of the valley, to seek pasture for their flocks.

40 And they found fat pasture and good, and the land was wide, and quiet, and peaceable; for they of Ham had dwelt there of old.

41 And these written by name came in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and smote their tents, and the habitations that were found there, and destroyed them utterly unto this day, and dwelt in their rooms: because there was pasture there for their flocks.

42 And some of them, even the sons of Simeon, five hundred men, went to mount Seir, having for their captains Pelatiah, and Neariah, and Rephaiah, and Uzziel, the sons of Ishi.

43 And they smote the rest of the Amalekites that were escaped, and dwelt there unto this day.

For they of Ham had dwelt there of old.] This had inclined Bochart to think, that Gedor was some place in Arabia, where some of the posterity of Ham settled, as he had demonstrated. And the Arabians being wholly addicted to pasturage, sought out the best ground they could find for the feeding their flocks. Whose country the Simeonites made no scruple to invade; the posterity of Ham being accused by Noah (see his Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 1).

Ver. 41. These written by name came in the days of Hezekiah] Their names are set down before, ver. 34—37, now the time is recorded wherein they performed such memorable exploits, which was in the reign of Hezekiah king of Judah. That is, as some take it, a little before the ten tribes were carried captive: or rather, some time after it, when these Simeonites, who were mixed with Judah, finding themselves very much straitened, made this expedition.

And smote their tents, and the habitations that were found there.] If they smote their tents, then it was sufficiently evident they smote their habitations; for they dwelt in tents. Therefore the word meunim, I have shown upon Judg. x. 12 (see my notes there), doth not signify habitations, but a people in Arabia, who dwelt in tents; which the Simeonites smote, as it here follows, and settled themselves in their place.

Destroyed them utterly unto this day, and dwelt in their rooms.] There were none remaining to attempt the recovery of their country any more: but the Simeonites possessed it when this book was written, after the captivity of Babylon.

Because there was pasture there] Which made them seek for no other settlement.

Ver. 42.] Another body of them under these four great commanders, who were brethren, settled themselves in some part of the country of the Edomites: being forced to seek for subsistence abroad: either when the Assyrians invaded their country, or afterward, when it was destroyed, and there was not room enough for them among the Jews; whither many of them fled.

Ver. 43. They smote the rest of the Amalekites that were escaped.] Who escaped the hands of Saul, and of David.

And dwelt there unto this day.] The king of Babylon did not disturb them in these new possessions: which were small, and not worth his regard.

CHAPTER V.

1 The line of Reuben (who lost his birthright) unto the captivity. 9 Their habitation and conquest of the Hagarites. 11 The chief men and habitations of Gad. 18 The number and conquest of Reuben, Gad, and the half of Manasseh. 23 The habitations and chief men of that half tribe. 25 Their captivity for their sins.

I Now the sons of Reuben the firstborn of Israel, (for he was the firstborn; but, forasmuch as he defiled his father's bed, his birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph the son of Israel: and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright.)

2 For Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler; but the birthright was Joseph's:)

3 The sons, I say, of Reuben the firstborn of Israel were, Hanoch, and Pallu, Hezron, and Carmi.

4 The sons of Joel; Shemaiah his son, Gog his son, Shimei his son,

5 Micah his son, Reaia his son, Baal his son,

6 Beerah his son, whom Tilgath-pileser king of Assyria carried away captive; he was prince of the Reubenites.

7 And his brethren by their families, when the genealogy of their generations was reckoned, were the chief, Jeiel, and Zechariah,

8 And Bela the son of Azaz, the son of Shema, the son of Joel, who dwelt in Aroer, even unto Nebo and Baal-meon:

9 And eastward he inhabited unto the entering in of the wilderness from the river Euphrates: because their cattle were multiplied in the land of Gilead.

10 And in the days of Saul they made war with the Hagarites, who fell by their hand: and they dwelt in their tents throughout all the east land of Gilead.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. Now the sons of Reuben the firstborn of Israel.] The double portion which was the right of the firstborn (Deut. xxi. 16, 17), was given to Joseph: whose two sons had each of them a lot in the land of Canaan; as if they had been the sons of Israel. The Jewish doctors say there were two other prerogatives belonging to the firstborn; viz. the principality, and the priesthood: the former of which was given to Judah, the latter to Levi. But I see no ground to think the priesthood was annexed to it: and as for the other, it is taken notice of in the following verse.

The genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright.] This is the reason why neither Reuben's nor Joseph's genealogy is first set down: for though the double portion belonged to the firstborn, yet he had not therefore the pre-eminence in other things, as it here follows.

Ver. 2. For Judah prevailed above his brethren.] That is, the tribe of Judah (not his person), which was the most powerful, and in all things, as I before showed, preferred to the rest.

And of him came the chief ruler;] This is the principal reason why he prevailed, because the great prince of the people was to arise out of this tribe: first David, and at last the Messiah.

But the birthright was Joseph's:] Or, though the birthright was Joseph's: yet for the reason before mentioned, Judah's genealogy is first set down.

Ver. 3.] See Gen. xli. 19.

Ver. 4. The sons of Joel;] Who, it is likely, was the son of Hanoch the eldest son of Reuben: because it appears from ver. 6, that he here gives an account of the chief persons of this tribe; and consequently those who were descended from the firstborn.

Ver. 6. Beerah his son.] Whom the Targum takes for a prophet, the father of Hosea, who is called Beeri, Hos. i. 1. But that is a mere fancy; for that prophet was of the tribe of Issachar, but this Beerah of the tribe of Reuben.

Tiglath-pileser] He is called Tiglath-pileser, 2 Kings xv. 29.

He was prince of the Reubenites.] When the two tribes and half were carried away captive out of their own country beyond Jordan, by the king of Assyria; viz. Tiglath before mentioned. The rest were carried away by Shalmaneser.

Ver. 7.] The genealogies of those descended from the rest of Reuben's sons were preserved; but he thought fit to mention only the chief of them, who were these two and those that follow.

Ver. 8. Joel.] This was another Joel, different from him mentioned ver. 4.

Who dwelt in Aroer, even unto Nebo and Baal-meon:] All these were seated on the other side of Jordan. See Numb. xxxii. 37, Josh. xiii. 15, 16, &c., where we read of this city Baal-meon.

Ver. 9. And eastward he inhabited] That is, the posterity of Reuben.

Unto the entering in of the wilderness] This is the wilderness of Kedemoth, mentioned Deut. ii. 28, upon which the country of Sihon (which Reuben possessed) bordered.

From the river Euphrates:] Their territory did not reach so far as Euphrates; but only to the entrance of that wilderness, which extended itself to that river.

Because their cattle were multiplied] When their stock very much increased, so that they had not pasturage enough for them, they enlarged their border, as far they were able, eastward towards the river Euphrates.

Ver. 10. In the days of Saul they made war] With the assistance of other tribes that dwelt on that side Jordan (ver. 18, 19).

With the Hagarites,] That is, the Ishmaelites descended from Hagar; who were settled in Arabia Deserta (see Bochartus, in his Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 11).

Who fell by their hand:] Were conquered by them in that war: so that, as it here follows, they possessed their country.

They dwelt in their tents] This shows they were Arabians; or near neighbours to them.

Throughout all the east land of Gilead.] They possessed all that country which lay east of Gilead: which chiefly belonged to the Gadites and Manassites, though the Reubenites had some of it (Deut. iii. 12, 13). A very learned man of our own is of opinion, that those Hagarites inhabited the country called Petra-nabataea. See Dr. Fuller's Miscellanea Sacra, lib. ii. cap. 13, where he observes, that all the rest, who were called Ishmaelites, or Kedar, were afterward comprehended under the name of Saracens.

11 ¶ And the children of Gad dwelt over against them, in the land of Bashan unto Salcah:

12 Joel the chief, and Shaphan the next, and Jaanai, and Shaphat in Bashan.

13 And their brethren of the house of their fathers were, Michael, and Meshullam, and Sheba, and Jorai, and Jachan, and Zia, and Heber, seven.

14 These are the children of Abihail the son of Huri, the son of Jaroah, the son of Gilead, the son of Michael, the son of Jeshishai, the son of Jahdo, the son of Buz;

15 Ahi the son of Abdiel, the son of Guni, chief of the house of their fathers.

16 And they dwelt in Gilead in Bashan, and in her towns, and in all the suburbs of Sharon, upon their borders.

17 All these were reckoned by genealogies in the days of Jotham king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam king of Israel.

18 ¶ The sons of Reuben, and the Gadites, and half the tribe of Manasseh, of valiant men, men able to bear buckler and sword, and to shoot with bow, and skilful in war, were four and forty thousand seven hundred and threescore, that went out to the war.

19 And they made war with the Hagarites, with Jetur, and Nephish, and Nodab.

20 And they were helped against them, and the Hagarites were delivered into their hand, and all that were with them: for they cried to God in the battle, and he was entreated of them; because they put their trust in him.

21 And they took away their cattle; of their camels fifty thousand, and of sheep two hundred

Ver. 11.] See Josh. xiii. 24, 25, &c. He next mentions the Gadites, because they were neighbours to the Reubenites.

Ver. 12.] He doth not give us the genealogy of this whole tribe, but only the names of the principal persons; among whom these were the most eminent, when their genealogy was examined: which seems to have been in the reign of Jotham (ver. 17). All these dwelt, I suppose, in the metropolis of the country called Bashan: where the chief city was called by the same name; and afterward called Batanaea.

Ver. 13.] These seven were eminent persons descended from other great men, of the same family with those before named: and therefore are called their brethren.

Ver. 14. These are the children of Abihail the son of Huri.] That is, the seven before mentioned came from Abihail; whose pedigree here follows.

Ver. 15.] Besides the foregoing, there was another great person who was of chief authority in the family of Abdiel, and Guni, and their fathers.

Ver. 16. They dwell in Gilead in Bashan.] In a part of it, the rest being given to the Reubenites and the half tribe of Manasseh. See Josh. xiii. 25, xvii. 1, Deut. iii. 13, where it is said Moses gave all Bashan to the Manassites: but the meaning is, all that was not given to the other two tribes, who had a share therein (see what I have noted upon Deut. iii. 13).

In her towns.] That is, such towns as belonged to that portion of the country which they possessed.

In all the suburbs of Sharon.] A country where there was excellent pasturage, and which produced the most generous wine. There were two Sharons; one in the east inhabited by the Gadites, (Deut. iii. 12, 13), another in the west (Josh. xii. 18), not far from the famous port called Joppa (Acts ix. 35).

Upon their borders.] Unto the utmost bounds (as the Hebrew words signify) of that country.

Ver. 17.] This doth not imply that Jotham and Jeroboam reigned in the same time: but that in their several reigns this account was taken. Kimchi thinks that all these (i. e. the children of Reuben, the children of Gad, and half tribe of Manasseh) were reckoned, that were listed to undertake the war afterward mentioned with the Hagarites: so that it may not concern the genealogy.

Ver. 18.] These three tribes, or at least so many of them as made a great army, joined their forces together, consisting of their best soldiers, to invade the country of the Hagarites. This seems to be a distinct war from that in the days of Saul, ver. 10 (see 1 Sam. viv. 47.).

Ver. 19.] There was mention of the Hagarites before, but now he shows how they were utterly expelled their country, though their neighbours came to their assistance; viz. those of Jetur, Nephish, and Nodab: who were all Ishmaelites; the first two being expressly mentioned as the sons of Ishmael (Gen. xxv. 15), from whom these people took their name. But, as Dr. Jackson observes, there are no people mentioned in scripture, who took their name from Nebaioth his eldest son. Which makes it probable, that they who in heathen writers are called Nabathæi, were in scripture called Ishmaelites, as sole heirs to their first progenitor's name. Their seat was in the best part of Arabia Petræa, near to the Midianites. See book i. on the Creed, ch. 25, sect. 3, where he notes, that the Greek writers call the Hagarites Ἀγάραιοι; which is more consonant to the Hebrew name than the Latin, Hagareni. Their chief city was called Atræ, and the inhabitants Atræni, unless they mistook their name, which perhaps was Agreni.

Ver. 20. They were helped against them.] It is likely the Hagarites fought stoutly, but God assisted the Israelites; enduing them with extraordinary courage, and daunted their enemies. For it is not likely any other help is here meant but that from God.

The Hagarites were delivered into their hand, and all that were with them:] That is, those allies before mentioned, who came to their aid.

They cried to God in the battle,—they put their trust in him.] I suppose their enemies were too hard for them in the first onset, which made them pray to God most earnestly in the midst of the fight: representing to him the pious confidence they placed in him and his almighty power, and not in their arms and warlike skill; which moved him to give them the success they desired. Here the Targum, instead of these words, they put their trust in him, hath these, They put their trust be Memra, “in his Word.”

Ver. 21. They took away their cattle:] In the Hebrew, led captive: that is, drove as many of their cattle as they pleased into their own country. This place is, among others, alleged by Grotius, as a proof of the lawfulness of taking the spoil in a just war against an enemy: as God allowed the Israelites to do, when a city fell into their hands, which had refused their offers of peace (Deut. xx. 14). But this instance is the more to be minded, because the war here spoken of was not by divine precept as that against the seven nations of Canaan: but from common right, which men had to defend themselves and fifty thousand, and of asses two thousand, and of men an hundred thousand.

22 For there fell down many slain, because the war was of God. And they dwelt in their steads until the captivity.

23 ¶ And the children of the half tribe of Manasseh dwelt in the land: they increased from Bashan unto Baal-hermon and Senir, and unto mount Hermon,

24 And these were the heads of the house of their fathers, even Ephraim, and Ishi, and Eliel, and Azriel, and Jeremiah, and Hodaviah, and Jahdiel, mighty men of valour, famous against injurious persons, or to invade those who had invaded them, and would make them no satisfaction. Such war was approved by God, it appears by this, that he aided them, when they called upon him for help, as we read in the foregoing verse (see lib. iii. De Jure Belli et Pacis, cap. 6. sect. 1).

Of their camels fifty thousand.] It is no wonder there were so many, for the Arabians abounded in camels, as Diodorus Siculus relates, lib. iii. cap. 12, which they used in war, as well as to carry burdens in the time of peace (see Pliny, lib. viii. cap. 18, and Vegetius, lib. iii.). For they being creatures very patient of thirst, were the fitter for any service in that hot and dry country (see Bochartus, in his Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 2).

Of sheep two hundred and fifty thousand, and of asses two thousand.] The prodigious number of sheep that those countries produced, is at large shown by the same author, lib. ii. cap. 46, and their breed of asses in the same book, cap. 13.

Of men] In the Hebrew, souls of men; i. e. of men, women, and children.

An hundred thousand.] Whom they did not kill (it appears by this relation), but carried them out of their own country, and sold them for slaves (as the manner was in those days), or employed them as such in their own business.

Ver. 22. For there fell down many slain.] Besides these taken captive, a great number were slain in the fight, which could not be avoided.

Because the war was of God.] Perhaps they consulted him before they went upon this expedition; and he encouraged them to undertake it, as he powerfully assisted them in it. Here again the Targum saith, The war was "from the Word of Jehovah."

They dwelt in their steads] Possibly all those valiant men who were engaged in this war, settled themselves in the country which they had conquered.

Until the captivity.] In the days of Pekah, 2 Kings xv. 29, when they were rooted out, as the rest of the ten tribes were in the days of Hoshea.

Ver. 23. The children of the half tribe of Manasseh dwelt in the land:] In the same country, on the other side of Jordan, with the Reubenites and Gadites: of whom he having spoken, gives a short account of the Manassites.

They increased from Bashan unto Baal-hermon] They were first possessed of the kingdom of Og and Bashan (Josh. xiii. 30); from whence they extended their territories, when they were increased, unto the northern parts of the country beyond Jordan.

Ver. 24.] He reckons only the most remarkable men of this tribe: who were not only of chief authority in their several families, but by their valiant exploits had gotten great renown.

Ver. 25.] All Israel transgressed as well as they: but it seems they were the greatest transgressors, who began, perhaps, the apostasy from God, and men, and heads of the house of their fathers.

25 ¶ And they transgressed against the God of their fathers, and went a whoring after the gods of the people of the land, whom God destroyed before them.

26 And the God of Israel stirred up the spirit of Pul king of Assyria, and the spirit of Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria, and he carried them away even the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, and brought them unto Halah, and Habor, and Hara, and to the river Gozan, unto this day.

were ring-leaders to idolatry. And, therefore, as it here follows, they were the first that were carried away captive.

Ver. 26. The God of Israel] The Targum saith, the Memra, or "Word, of the God of Israel." From whence it appears they thought the divine ΛΟΓΟΣ to be the God of Israel: for they are words of the same import.

Stirred up the spirit of Pul] When, perhaps, he intended to bend his forces another way, God inclined him to go against Israel: whom he distressed so much, that they were forced to make him a great present: whereby they moved him not to stay there, but return to his own country (2 Kings xv. 19, 20). We do not read that he carried any of the people captive, though perhaps he might, after some spoil in the skirts of the country, as he went home.

The spirit of Tilgath-pilneser] Who came in the next king's reign but one, and carried those tribes away captive, as we read in 2 Kings xv. 29.

He carried them away.] He carried these away entirely, together with some of the people of Galilee, particularly all Naphtali, as the forenamed place tells us. And the Jews say, they carried away the golden calf which was in Dan, as they gather from 2 Chron. xxviii. 22.

And brought them unto Halah, and Habor, and Hara.] These are the very places unto which Shalmaneser afterward carried the remainder of the ten tribes, 2 Kings xvii. 6, xviii. 11, where there is only this difference, that there it is said "into the cities of the Medes," but here "unto Hara," which is all one; for Media is the very same with Hara, and is by St. Jerome (without an aspiration) called Ara. And the Greeks commonly call it Aria, and the people of it Arian, as we read in Herodotus, Pausanias, and others. And Bochartus thinks, not without reason, that the mountainous part of the country of Media towards the north was properly called by this name of Hara, from the word har, which signifies a mountain. Here Strabo saith many foreigners inhabited: for it is likely this hilly country was most empty of people.

To the river Gozan.] That is, to the banks of the river on both sides: for it is much as τὴν περιχώρον, "to the region about this river," as our very learned Mr. Nic. Fuller observes, in his Miscellanea, lib. ii. cap. 5, where he takes Gozan to be the ancient name for that river, which the Persians afterward called Cyrus; near to which stood the city Gauzanian in Ptolemy, which retained that name from the river Gozan.

Unto this day.] Here they settled, as the same learned man observes; and did not range as far as Tartary, as some have thought. For how should they, being miserable captives, who had no power to go back, or to go forward? especially through strange countries, without any arms, or other accommodations.

8 And Ahitub begat Zadok, and Zadok begat Ahimaaz,

9 And Ahimaaz begat Azariah, and Azariah, begat Johanan,

10 And Johanan begat Azariah, (he it is that executed the priest's office in the temple that Solomon built in Jerusalem:)

11 And Azariah begat Amariah, and Amariah begat Ahitub,

12 And Ahitub begat Zadok, and Zadok begat Shallum,

13 And Shallum begat Hilkiyah, and Hilkiyah begat Azariah, 14 And Azariah begat Seraiah, and Seraiah begat Jehozadak,

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1.] The first of these is called Gershon, ver. 16 (see Gen. xlv. 11; Exod. vi. 16).

Ver. 2. The sons of Kohath;] He begins with the genealogy of the second son, because from him sprung the family of the priests.

Amram, Izhar,] The second of these sons is called Aminadab, ver. 22.

Ver. 3. The children of Amram;] See Exo. vi. 20. Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.] The first two perished for their sin, in offering with strange fire (Lev. x. 1).

Ver. 5.] According to the manner of the Greeks and Latins, who are wont to deprave oriental names, Josephus calls these three Abiezer, Boceias, and Ozi (lib. v. Archæol. cap. 41), and the Chronicon Alexandrinum, as Mr. Selden observes, assigns the very time when they exercised the high-priesthood; Abishua (whom he calls Abiud) in the time of Ehud; Bukki in the time of Shamgar; and Uzzi in the time of Tola. In whose days, the Jews think, the priesthood was translated from the family of Eleazar to that of Ithamar: for some great sin which they had committed; as afterward for the sins of Eli's sons, it was translated back again to Eleazar's posterity. So they say in Juchasin, "In the days of Samson died Uzzi of the family of Eleazar, and the high-priesthood was translated to the family of Ithamar; the first of which was Eli." But, as the Alexandrian Chronicle is of no great authority, so there is no mention, as Mr. Selden observes, of the names of these three persons, as succeeding Phinehas, either in the scripture, or the Hebrew Chronicles, or in Eusebius. But the only high-priest between Eleazar and Eli is Phinehas: who the Jews think was alive in the war with the Benjamites, Judg. xxi. 28 (see lib. i. De Success. ad Pontif. cap. 2). But this cannot be justified.

Ver. 7.] See Ezra vii. 3, where in this genealogy six generations are omitted by him, "from Meraioth to Azariah the son of Johanan," which are here mentioned. This Kimchi thinks was done for brevity's sake.

Ver. 8.] See 2 Sam. viii. 17; xv. 27.

Ver. 10.] The divine writer sets a mark of honour upon Azariah (which he doth not on any of the foregoing) for maintaining his office so resolutely, with the danger of his life, against the usurpation of one of Solomon's successors, who would have offered incense in that very temple which Solomon had built: of which see 2 Chron. xxvi. 17, 18, &c. The mention of Solomon's temple in this place, plainly denotes that this was written after the second temple was built, or while it was building.

But Ludovicus Capellus is of opinion, that Azariah here spoken of is not he that resisted Uziah. For such a noble fact as that was, he thinks, would not have been touched in such general words: but he takes him to have been the high-priest in the days of Solomon; and was the first that ministered only in his temple. For Zadok his grandfather, and Ahimaaz his father, ministered first in the tabernacle. Therefore to make this agree with that Azariah, he thinks, we ought to acknowledge a double metathesis in these verses, 9—12, which ought to be read thus: "Ahimaaz begat Azariah (he is the first that executed the priest's office in the house which Solomon built in Jerusalem), Azariah begat Amariah, Amariah begat Johanan, Johanan begat Azariah, Azariah begat Ahitub, Ahitub begat Zadok." If this be admitted, all the difficulties that arise out of this genealogy are quite removed (see his Chronologia Sacra, Note in Tab. xiv. p. 286).

Ver. 12.] Who is called Meshullam, in ch. ix. 11. These three are mentioned nowhere else, but in Neh. xi. 11, though they discharged the high-priest's office in the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, Hezekiah, and Manasseh, as Ludovicus Capellus makes account in his Chronol. Sacra, p. 287.

Ver. 14.] When Jerusalem was taken by the king of Babylon's army, Seraiah was carried by the captain of the guard to Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah; where he commanded him to be put to death. So that in him ended the succession of high-priests under the first temple: which from Zadok unto him were twelve. The Jews, in Seder Olam Zula, make them to be eighteen; but they are not to be believed against the scripture: there being also the very same succession mentioned Ezra vii. 1, 2, &c., which beginning from Aaron, the first four of these here mentioned, together with Ahitub the father of Zadok, are omitted for brevity's sake, as Kimchi thinks (see Selden, De Success. ad Pontif. lib. i. cap. 5). But some think it sufficient to say, that it was not the intention of the writer of this book to mention all the high-priests that were from Zadok to Seraiah; because Jehoiada, who was the high-priest in the time of Athaliah, is not here named. He is called indeed 15 And Jehozadak went into captivity, when the LORD carried away Judah and Jerusalem by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar.

16 ¶ The sons of Levi; Gershom, Kohath, and Merari.

17 And these be the names of the sons of Gershom; Libni, and Shimei.

18 And the sons of Kohath were, Amram, and Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel.

19 The sons of Merari; Mahli, and Mushi. And these are the families of the Levites according to their fathers.

20 Of Gershom; Libni his son, Jahath his son, Zimham his son,

22 The sons of Kohath; Amminadab his son, Korah his son, Assir his son,

23 Elkanah his son, and Ebiasaph his son, and Assir his son, 24 Tahath his son, Uriel his son, Uziah his son, and Shaul his son.

25 And the sons of Elkanah; Amasai, and Ahimoth.

26 As for Elkanah; the sons of Elkanah; Zophai his son, and Nahath his son, 27 Eliab his son, Jeroham his son, Elkanah his son.

28 And the sons of Samuel; the firstborn Vashni, and Abiah.

29 The sons of Merari; Mahli, Libni his son, Shimei his son, Uzza his son, 30 Shimei his son, Haggiah his son, Asaiah his son.

31 And these are they whom David set over the service of song in the house of the LORD, after that the ark had rest.

32 And they ministered before the dwelling place of the tabernacle of the congregation with singing, until Solomon had built the house of the LORD in Jerusalem: and then they waited on their office according to their order.

33 And these are they that waited with their children. Of the sons of the Kohathites: Heman a singer, the son of Joel, the son of Shemuel, 34 The son of Elkanah, the son of Jeroham, the son of Eliel, the son of Toah, every where "Jehoiada the priest:" yet he took upon him such authority, as may well make us suppose him to have been high-priest. It is observed by Kimchi, that the line of the high-priests is drawn from Aaron down to the captivity, through the family of Eleazar his eldest son; none of Ithamar's being mentioned; because the perpetual priesthood was promised only to Phinehas the son of Eleazar (Numb. xxv.).

Ver. 15.] In the captivity he begat Jeshua, who came back in the time of Cyrus (Ezra iii. 2).

Ver. 16.] He hath not yet done with the account he intends to give of Levi's posterity: and therefore repeats the names of his sons, from whom these Levites sprung, who were not priests.

Ver. 17.] Who were not mentioned before.

Ver. 18.] See ver. 2.

Ver. 19. The sons of Merari;] See Exod. vi. 19.

These are the families of the Levites according to their fathers.] That is, these were the heads of the families that sprung from them: as it is probable, they that follow in the next catalogue were the chief of their families which continued unto the days of David; who regulated their attendance in their several courses.

Ver. 20.] This last was his grandson by his son Shimei, as appears from ver. 42. But such are frequently called sons.

Ver. 22. Amminadab] Called Izhar, ver. 2.

Ver. 24. Uriel] Called also Zephaniah, ver. 36.

Uzziah] Who went also by the name of Azariah, as that verse tells us.

Ver. 25. Elkanah;] He was the son of Korah, mentioned ver. 23, as appears from Exod. vi. 24.

Ver. 26. As for Elkanah:—Zophai his son.] Or Zophai, as he is called ver. 35. This is another Elkanah; son it is likely of him last mentioned.

Ver. 27. Eliab] Who is called Eliel, ver. 34.

Ver. 28. The sons of Samuel;] Who was the son of Elkanah, as we read 1 Sam. i. 1, which being a thing well known, this writer (giving only a brief of these histories) omits the mention of it. But it appears by this account, that Samuel was only a Levite, not of the race of the priests (for he did not descend from Aaron but from Izhar the uncle of Aaron), much less the high-priest, as some great men have fancied (see Selden, De Success. ad Pontif. lib. i. cap. 14).

Vashni, and Abiah.] The first of these is called Joel, 1 Sam. viii. 2, and here below, ver. 33.

Ver. 31. These are they] Having thus far deduced the genealogy of the Levites, he proceeds now to give an account how David ordered their attendance upon the service of God at the tabernacle: and sets down the names of the chief of them, which here follow.

Whom David set over the service of song] Appointed to minister unto God by singing of songs in his house.

After that the ark had rest.] After David had brought it from the house of Obad-edom, and settled it at Jerusalem (2 Sam. viii. 17).

Ver. 32. They ministered before the dwelling place of the tabernacle] Which David had prepared for the ark, when it came to Jerusalem (2 Sam. viii. 17).

With singing.] The Psalms which David and other prophets composed.

Until Solomon had built the house of the Lord] Before the temple was built by Solomon they performed this service: which did not cease after it was built, but continued in great order, as it here follows.

Then they waited on their office according to their order.] Which David himself had constituted a little before his death: as we read in the latter end of this book.

Ver. 33. Shemuel,] That is, of Samuel the great prophet: whose name, it appears by this, was differently pronounced in different times and places. This place also still shows more clearly, that Samuel was only a Levite of the family of the Kohathites, not a priest of the family of Aaron, which is suggested by the psalmist (Ps. xcix.), "Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among them that call upon his name." Therefore, as Estius observes, when Samuel is said to have offered sacrifice (as he did often in Gilgal and other places), it must be understood that he did it by the ministry of the priests, not by himself. And thus David and Solomon sacrificed, but not by their own hands, but by those to whose office it properly belonged. This Heman was so eminent for his skill in singing, that he is thought to have been 35 The son of Zuph, the son of Elkanah, the son of Mahath, the son of Amasai,

36 The son of Elkanah, the son of Joel, the son of Azariah, the son of Zephaniah, 37 The son of Tahath, the son of Assir, the son of Ebiasaph, the son of Korah, 38 The son of Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi, the son of Israel.

39 And his brother Asaph, who stood on his right hand, even Asaph the son of Berachiah, the son of Shimea, 40 The son of Michael, the son of Baaseiah, the son of Malchiah,

41 The son of Ethni, the son of Zerah, the son of Adaiah,

42 The son of Ethan, the son of Zimmah, the son of Shimei,

43 The son of Jahath, the son of Gershom, the son of Levi, 44 And their brethren the sons of Merari stood on the left hand: Ethan the son of Kishi, the son of Abdi, the son of Malluch,

45 The son of Hashabiah, the son of Amaziah, the son of Hilkiah,

46 The son of Amzi, the son of Bani, the son of Shamer, 47 The son of Mahli, the son of Mushi, the son of Merari, the son of Levi.

a composer of hymns: which I have considered in my notes upon 1 Kings iv.

Ver. 34. Toah.] Called Nahath, ver. 26.

Ver. 35. Zuph.] Called Zophai, ver. 26.

Ver. 36—38.] Thus, in honour of Samuel, the pedigree of Heman, who was his grandson, is derived from Israel the father of them all.

Ver. 39.] This depends upon ver. 33, where it is said, "these are they that waited with their children," &c., viz. Heman and Asaph: who is called Heman's brother, according to the Hebrew phrase; in which all near kindred are called brothers. And these two were of the same tribe and family, and also of the same employment: upon which account, if there were no other, he might be called the brother of Heman.

Ver. 43.] There was no need to add "the son of Israel:" for it is apparent they sprung from the same stock, by two brethren, the sons of Levi.

Ver. 44. Their brethren the sons of Merari stood on the left hand:] In like manner the children of the next son of Levi are here mentioned; who had the lowest place assigned, because they were of the youngest family. So there were three principal singers, who were masters and governors of the whole choir; Heman, descended from Kohath, was the prime, who, together with his sons, stood in the middle: and then Asaph, descended from Gershom, with his sons, stood on his right hand: and Ethan and Merari on the left. Of these three families there were three principal persons, who bore rule over the rest of the singers here mentioned, and kept good order among them. And indeed there was an admirable order observed, in the whole ministry at the tabernacle: three great men, and their sons, were singers and musicians; the rest of the Levites prepared and made ready the sacrifices; the priests offered them; and the high-priest officiated in the most holy place, as it here follows.

Ethan] He who is here called Ethan, is called Jeduthun, ch. ix. 16, and in many other places.

Ver. 47.] It is observable, that, in all the genealogies of the Levites, there is not a word said of the 48 Their brethren also the Levites were appointed unto all manner of service of the tabernacle of the house of God.

49 ¶ But Aaron and his sons offered upon the altar of the burnt offering, and on the altar of incense, and were appointed for all the work of the place most holy, and to make an atonement for Israel, according to all that Moses the servant of God had commanded.

50 And these are the sons of Aaron; Eleazar his son, Phinehas his son, Abishua his son,

51 Bukki his son, Uzzi his son, Zerahiah his son,

52 Meraioth his son, Amariah his son, Ahitub his son, 53 Zadok his son, Ahinaaz his son.

54 ¶ Now these are their dwelling places throughout their castles in their coasts, of the sons of Aaron, of the families of the Kohathites: for their's was the lot.

55 And they gave them Hebron in the land of Judah, and the suburbs thereof round about it.

56 But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, they gave to Caleb the son of Jephunneh.

57 And to the sons of Aaron they gave the cities of Judah, namely, Hebron, the city of refuge, and Libnah with her suburbs, and Jattir, and Esh-temoa, with their suburbs, sons of Moses and their posterity: he having no ambition to prefer them unto any office, either in church or state.

Ver. 48. Their brethren also the Levites] The rest of that tribe, who were not fit to be singers.

Were appointed unto all manner of service of the tabernacle] They performed all the laborious work that was to be done in the tabernacle; being porters, keepers of the vessels of the sanctuary, as well as taking care to prepare the sacrifices, and such-like things. Of which an account is given below in ch. xxiii. and these following.

Ver. 49.] The noblest part of the ministry was reserved for Aaron and his posterity: which is mentioned at large in the book of Leviticus. Which shows that Aaron alone, and his successors in the high-priesthood, ministered in "the place most holy," and made the atonement: but his sons, the priests, offered on the altars "of burnt-offering and of incense."

Ver. 53.] Having mentioned the high-priest's office, he sets down the succession of it from Aaron to the time of David: which he had done before more largely to the time of the captivity (ver. 3, 4, &c.). There was no age like to this of David's, as Victorinus Strigelius observes; which produced so many great men, that he calls it the prophetic age. Wherein God raised up Samuel, Nathan, Gad, Heman, Asaph, and Ethan: who made the word of God dwell plentifully in the church of Israel in all wisdom.

Ver. 54. Now these are their dwelling places—of the families of the Kohathites:] Now follows an account of the places where they inhabited: and first of the habitation of the sons of Aaron, who were the noblest of the Kohathites.

For their's was the lot.] That is, the first lot fell to them (see Josh. xxi. 4).

Ver. 55.] See Josh. xxi. 10, 11.

Ver. 56.] See Josh. xxi. 12.

Ver. 57.] Besides the forenamed city of Hebron (which is mentioned again, because the most eminent)

58 And Hilen with her suburbs, Debir with her suburbs,

59 And Ashan with her suburbs, and Bethshemesh with her suburbs:

60 And out of the tribe of Benjamin, Geba with her suburbs, and Alcmeth with her suburbs, and Anathoth with her suburbs. All their cities throughout their families were thirteen cities.

61 And unto the sons of Kohath, which were left of the family of that tribe, were cities given out of the half tribe, namely, out of the half tribe of Manasseh, by lot, ten cities.

62 And to the sons of Gershom throughout their families out of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the tribe of Asher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, thirteen cities.

63 Unto the sons of Merari were given by lot, throughout their families, out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun, twelve cities.

64 And the children of Israel gave to the Levites these cities with their suburbs.

65 And they gave by lot out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, and out of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, these cities, which are called by their names.

66 And the residue of the families of the sons of Kohath had cities of their coasts out of the tribe of Ephraim.

67 And they gave unto them, of the cities of refuge, Shechem in mount Ephraim with her suburbs; they gave also Gezer with her suburbs,

68 And Jokmeam with her suburbs, and Bethhoron with her suburbs,

69 And Ajalon with her suburbs, and Gathrimmon with her suburbs:

70 And out of the half tribe of Manasseh; Aner with her suburbs, and Bileam with her suburbs, for the family of the remnant of the sons of Kohath.

71 Unto the sons of Gershom were given out of the family of the half tribe of Manasseh, Golan, in Bashan with her suburbs, and Ashtaroth with her suburbs:

72 And out of the tribe of Issachar; Kedesh with her suburbs, Daberath with her suburbs,

73 And Ramoth with her suburbs, and Anem with her suburbs:

74 And out of the tribe of Asher; Mashal with her suburbs, and Abdon with her suburbs,

75 And Hukok with her suburbs, and Rehob with her suburbs:

76 And out of the tribe of Naphtali; Kedesh in Galilee with her suburbs, and Hammon with her suburbs, and Kirjathaim with her suburbs.

77 Unto the rest of the children of Merari were given out of the tribe of Zebulun, Rimmon with her suburbs, Tabor with her suburbs:

78 And on the other side Jordan by Jericho, on the east side of Jordan, were given them out of the tribe of Reuben, Bezer in the wilderness with her suburbs, and Jahzah with her suburbs,

79 Kedemoth also with her suburbs, and Mephaath with her suburbs:

80 And out of the tribe of Gad; Ramoth in Gilead with her suburbs, and Mahanaim with her suburbs, 81 And Heshbon with her suburbs, and Jazer with her suburbs.

they gave them these following, which were in the same tribe of Judah.

Ver. 58. Hilen.] Called Holon in the book of Joshua (ch. xxi. 15).

Debir.] Mentioned in the same place.

Ver. 59. Ashan.] Called Ain, Josh. xxi. 16.

Beth-shemesh.] Mentioned in the same place.

Ver. 60. Alcmeth.] Called Almon, Josh. xxi. 18.

Thirteen cities.] Whereof there are only eleven here mentioned: but there are two more added in the book of Joshua, viz. Jutta and Gibeon, which make thirteen, ch. xxi. 16, 17. Perhaps they were not yet rebuilt when this book was written.

Ver. 61. And unto the sons of Kohath, which were left of the family of that tribe.] Who were not of the sons of Aaron, but descended from Kohath.

Ten cities.] Some of these cities were taken out of the tribe of Manasseh, and some out of others; as appears from Josh. xxi. But in all they made ten (ver. 26).

Ver. 62.] Their cities were assigned them in these several tribes, because they were too many to be contained in one.

Ver. 64.] To the tribe of Levi, consisting of priests and simple Levites, these cities were given, which are here mentioned in this chapter.

Ver. 65.] These three tribes were very near one to another; and in several places Simeon mixed together with the other two.

These cities, which are called by their names.] Which are recited in the foregoing verses (ver. 57, &c.), and given to the sons of Aaron.

Ver. 66.] By coasts here is meant portions: which were assigned them, though they were not priests, for their support in a lower ministry. These things seem to be mentioned so often, and with such exactness, that it might appear what care was taken by God for the maintenance of his ministers of all sorts; and for the instruction of his people, among whom he dispersed the Levites, who were peculiarly devoted to his service.

Ver. 67.] These were places of great eminence, unto which there was great resort: which gave them the greater opportunity of doing good. They are both expressly mentioned Josh. xxi. 21.

Ver. 70. The city here called Bileam is called Ibleam in the book of Joshua; length of time making greater alterations in the names both of persons and places than this is, as appears by several other places here mentioned. For, as Kimchi here well notes (which frivolous cavillers should observe), the divine writers did not affect accuracy in such matters as these; but took names as they found them.

Ver. 71.] From Golan came the Gaulonites.

Ver. 76. Hammon.] That place which here is called Hammon, is in Josh. xxi. 32, called Hammoth: from whence some argue, that one of these places is corrupted, and they fancy this, because the LXX. here hath Χαμὼθ. As though the name of some place and person (as I said before) may not be differently pronounced in different times and countries. As Achan and Achar, mentioned above.

Ver. 81. Heshbon.] The first of these, Heshbon, was reckoned to be in the tribe of Reuben as well as in Gad. Of which see Josh. xiii. 17.

3 And the sons of Uzzi; Izrahiah: and the sons of Izrahiah; Michael, and Obadiah, and Joel, Ishiah, five: all of them chief men.

4 And with them, by their generations, after the house of their fathers, were bands of soldiers for war, six and thirty thousand men: for they had many wives and sons.

8 And the sons of Becher; Zemira, and Joash, and Eliezer, and Elioenai, and Omri, and Jerimoth, and Abiah, and Anathoth, and Alameth. All these are the sons of Becher.

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1.] There is some little difference in the names of two of these, as they are mentioned Gen. xlv. And Jashub seems to have been called Job, for brevity's sake; just as Aram is called Ram, and among us Alexander is called Saunder. See Buxtorf's Anticritica, par. ii. cap. 8, where Rasi gives another account of it, but not so likely.

Ver. 2.] When David numbered the people (2 Sam. xxiv.), there were found thus many descended from the first-born of Issachar; which was a very great increase.

Ver. 3. The sons of Uzzi; Izrahiah.] He names but one son; therefore all his posterity is comprehended in the name of sons.

The sons of Izrahiah; Michael, and Obadiah, and Joel, Ishiah, five.] Reckoning their father for one, they were five in all; and persons of great authority, Ver. 4. And with them,—were bands of soldiers for war.] As they were numerous, so they were of a warlike spirit; which made them very considerable.

For they had many wives and sons.] They were very fruitful, and propagated the more, because they had many wives, who bare them many sons; and those sons, it is likely, took many wives also, for the greater increase of their family. For this was the cause of polygamy among them, the desire of a numerous offspring (whereby God's promise to Abraham, of making them as the stars of heaven for multitude, might be fulfilled), and of a holy race of people to propagate piety, when the nations of the world were generally corrupted (see ch. viii. 40).

Ver. 5. Their brethren] That is, their kindred.

Among all the families of Issachar were valiant men of might,—fourscore and seven thousand.] There was no such great increase of the rest of the families of Issachar, since in all they amounted but to this number: and from two of his sons sprung above fifty-eight thousand.

Ver. 6.] He mentions no more in this place; but in the next chapter (ver. 1, 2) he mentions five: they were ten in all, as we read in Gen. xlv. 21. But either half of them died without issue, or their families were extinct, or their genealogies lost.

Ver. 7.] There are others mentioned as his sons, chap. viii. 8, therefore it is likely these were his grandsons: who, being more eminent than their fathers, were mentioned as the chief of their several families, from whence they sprung.

Ver. 9.] They were not so many as those descended from the eldest son; and the youngest son had still fewer.

Ver. 10. The sons also of Jediel; Bilhan.] He mentions but one; who includes all descended from him.

Ver. 12. Shuppim also, and Huppim, the children of Ir.] Or of Iri, as he is called, ver. 7, the youngest son of Bela; whose sons are called Huppim and Moppim, Gen. xlv. 21. In which book there are other proper names of men in the plural number (Gen. x. 13, 14; xxv. 3).

And Hushim, the sons of Aher.] If he still speak of the sons of Benjamin, this person was called Ahiram, Numb. xxvi. 39. But there being no mention of the tribe of Dan in this genealogy, unless it be here, many take Aher not to be a proper name, but a common word, signifying other: and so translate the words thus, another son: that is, the son of another tribe or family, viz. of Dan. For Hushim was his only son, Gen. xlv. 23; where the word sons, though he speak of one man only, is used as it is in this place.

Ver. 13.] The sons of Bilhah were Naphtali and Dan. Therefore these were her grandsons by the first of them.

Ver. 14. The sons of Manasseh; Ashriel.] His great she bare: (but his concubine the Aramitess bare Machir the father of Gilead:

15 And Machir took to wife the sister of Hup-pim and Shup-pim, whose sister's name was Maachah;) and the name of the second was Zelophehad: and Zelophehad had daughters.

16 And Maachah the wife of Machir bare a son, and she called his name Peresh; and the name of his brother was Sheresh; and his sons were Ulam and Rakem, 17 And the sons of Ulam; Bedan. These were the sons of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh.

18 And his sister Hammoleketh bare Ishod, and Abiezer, and Mahalah.

19 And the sons of Shemidah were, Ahian, and Shechem, and Likhi, and Aniam.

20 ¶ And the sons of Ephraim; Shuthelah, and Bered his son, and Tahath his son, and Eladah his son, and Tahath his son, grandson; for both he and Zelophehad were the sons of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh (see Numb. xxvi. 29, &c. xxvii. 1).

Whom she bare:] That is, whom his wife bare; for his concubine is here opposed to her, in the next words.

But his concubine the Aramitess bare Machir the father of Gilead:] He took a Syrian woman to wife, from whom his chief posterity descended.

Ver. 15. Machir took to wife the sister of Hup-pim and Shup-pim.] He married into the tribe of Benjamin, whose sons these were.

The name of the second son was Zelophehad:] This relates to the beginning of ver. 14, where his first son Ashriel is mentioned.

Zelophehad had daughters.] No sons, but only daughters; as we read in the book of Numbers, ch. xxvii.

Ver. 18.] That is, the sister of Gilead, as Kimchi understands it (though some take her to have been the sister of Bedan), who was an illustrious woman, and therefore here mentioned, and, as the Targum imagines, was a queen; that is, governess of a certain tract of land in the country of Gilead. For he takes Hammoleketh not for a proper name, but for an appellative: of which there is no mention neither in the law nor in the prophets, as Kimchi confesses; but they have this by tradition. Which, though it be very groundless, the vulgar Latin follows it, and translates this word regina. Which Estius ingeniously acknowledges to be a mistake.

Ver. 19.] There is no mention of Shemidah before. But he is supposed to be another son of Gilead's sister before named.

Ver. 20.] Some will have all these to be the sons of Ephraim: but the most natural sense seems to be that Bered was the son of Shuthelah, and Tahath the son of Bered, &c. and so on to the following descendants of Ephraim, whose genealogy is now related.

Ver. 21.] This piece of history is nowhere else recorded: which in all likelihood fell out before the children of Israel came out of the land of Egypt. For Ephraim, it appears by the next verse, was alive when these children of his were slain. Who, as the Targum thinks, mistook in their computation of the end of the years, wherein they were to be slaves in Egypt, and imagining them to be expired, made an inroad into the land of Canaan to take possession of it before the time they were to enjoy it. But others think it proceeded from their desire of prey and spoil, which 22 And Ephraim their father mourned many days, and his brethren came to comfort him.

23 ¶ And when he went in to his wife, she conceived, and bare a son, and he called his name Beriah, because it went evil with his house.

24 (And his daughter was Sherah, who built Beth-horon the nether, and the upper, and Uzzen-sherah.)

25 And Rephah was his son, also Resheph, and Telah his son, and Tahan his son,

26 Laadan his son, Amunihud his son, Elishama his son,

27 Non his son, Jehoshuah his son.

28 ¶ And their possessions and habitations were, Beth-el and the towns thereof, and eastward Naaran, and westward Gezer, with the they thought they might lawfully get from those whose country they were to possess: and they presumed the more to make this attempt, because they were valiant men, and proud, perhaps, of the great power and authority which their ancestor Joseph had in Egypt. Though others think it more probable, that the Philistines having infested them in the land of Goshen, these sons of Zabad broke into their country to make reprisals upon their cattle. Dr. Lightfoot (in his conclusion of his Annotations on Genesis), quite contrary, thinks that the men of Gath went to plunder in Egypt, and there slew these Ephraimites, who only stood up in defence of their cattle. And those words, "that were born in the land," he thinks, signify these men of Gath were born in Egypt, though they now dwelt in Gath. So the men of Gath were the plunderers, and not the Ephraimites. But they who take the Ephraimites to have been the invaders, think those words are added, to show that the Philistines were the more incensed against them; because they seemed to come to dispossess them of their land.

Ver. 22. Ephraim their father] They were his grandchildren.

Mourned many days, and his brethren came to comfort him.] That is, his kindred (as the word brethren often signifies), they that were of his family came to condole with him. This shows Ephraim lived to be a very old man, if this happened near to the time of their going out of Egypt.

Ver. 23.] For so the word beriah, imports: his family was in an ill condition.

Ver. 24.] She was, it seems, a very great woman: who restored both those cities of Beth-horon, which were destroyed by the Israelites, when they conquered the land of Canaan, and rebuilt them in the same place, adding another city, which carried her own name in it.

Ver. 25. Rephah was his son] i.e. The son of Beriah. Also Resheph, and Telah his son, and Tahan] Beriah also had another son, whose name was Resheph, whose son was Telah, &c.

Ver. 26.] Who was the chief commander in the tribe of Ephraim when they were in the wilderness (Numb. i. 10).

Ver. 27.] For whose sake his pedigree seems to be thus largely deduced.

Ver. 28. Their possessions and habitations were Beth-el] See Josh. xvi. 1, &c.

Unto Gaza and the towns thereof:] Or rather Ad-towns thereof; Shechem also and the towns thereof unto Gaza and the towns thereof;

29 And by the borders of the children of Manasseh, Beth-shean and her towns, Taanach and her towns, Megiddo and her towns, Dor and her towns. In these dwelt the children of Joseph the son of Israel.

30 ¶ The sons of Asher; Imnah, and Isuah, and Ishuai, and Beriah, and Serah their sister.

31 And the sons of Beriah; Heber, and Malchiel, who is the father of Birzavith.

32 And Heber begat Japhlet, and Shomer, and Hotham, and Shua their sister.

33 And the sons of Japhlet; Pasach, and Bimhal, and Ashvath. These are the children of Japhlet.

azea, a place so called: for their border did not extend so far as Gaza in the land of the Philistines.

Ver. 29.] That is, the children of Manasseh (see Josh. xvi. 11).

Ver. 30.] See the same account of them in Gen. xlv. 17.

Ver. 31.] The first two of these were born before they went into Egypt, as appears from Gen. xlv. 18.

Ver. 34.] The father of these was the second brother of Japhlet, called Shomer, ver. 32.

Ver. 35. The sons of his brother] That is, of Hotham, who was next brother to Shamer.

Ver. 38.] This Jether is the same that is called in the verse foregoing Ithran; the youngest son but one 34 And the sons of Shamer; Ahi, and Rohgah, Jehubbah, and Aram.

35 And the sons of his brother Helem; Zophah, and Imna, and Shelesh, and Amal.

36 The sons of Zophah; Suah, and Harnepher, and Shual, and Beri, and Imrah, 37 Bezer, and Hod, and Shamma, and Shilshah, and Ithran, and Beera.

38 And the sons of Jether; Jephunneh, and Pispah, and Ara.

39 And the sons of Ulla; Arah, and Haniel, and Rezia.

40 All these were the children of Asher, heads of their father's house, choice and mighty men of valour, chief of the princes. And the number throughout the genealogy of them that were apt to the war and to battle was twenty and six thousand men.

of Zophah: the rest had no sons, or their genealogy was lost.

Ver. 39.] We do not read whose son Ulla was; but it is probable of Jether; whereof there are many examples in the foregoing chapters.

Ver. 40. All these were the children of Asher,] Of these only he gives an account, and takes no notice of inferior families: though they are included, I suppose, in the following number.

The number—that were apt to the war and to battle was twenty and six thousand men.] Though they lived in a rich and delicious country, abounding with wine and oil, and other good things, in the best part of Galilee; yet they did not give themselves up to sloth and laziness, but were a warlike and valiant people.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The sons and chief men of Benjamin. 33 The stock of Saul and Jonathan.

1 Now Benjamin begat Bela his firstborn, Ashbel the second, and Aharah the third,

2 Nohah the fourth, and Rapha the fifth.

3 And the sons of Bela were, Addar, and Gera, and Abihud,

4 And Abishua, and Naaman, and Ahoah, and Gera, and Shephuphan, and Huram.

6 And these are the sons of Ehud: these are the heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Geba, and they removed them to Manahath:

7 And Naaman, and Abiah, and Gera, he removed them, and begat Uzza, and Abihud.

8 And Shaharaim begat children in the country of Moab, after he had sent them away; Hushim and Baara were his wives.

9 And he begat of Hodesh his wife, Jobab, and Zibia, and Mesha, and Malcham,

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1. Now Benjamin begat Bela] He goes over the genealogy of this tribe again (which he had begun before in the foregoing chapter, ver. 6) and gives a larger account of it, because it was entirely joined to the tribe of Judah; and likewise, that he might make way for the following history, and touch upon the generations of Saul; and show how this tribe was increased again, after that great calamity which befel them in the time of the judges.

Ashbel the second, and Aharah the third,] His firstborn, Bela, is expressly so called by Moses, Gen. xlv. 21, but all the rest are called by very different names. Therefore, either these were his grand-children (who are frequently called sons), or they had two names, which I showed before was not unusual (see ch. iii. 1).

Ver. 5. Gera,] It is likely this was the son of the forenamed, and so grandson to Bela, Ver. 6. These are the sons of Ehud;] Who is not named before; unless he be the third son of Bela, called Abihud, ver. 3. And some think the three persons last named to have been his sons.

Geba,] Where their first settlement was.

They removed them to Manahath;] That is, Gera removed them, as it follows, ver. 7, to a place mentioned before in the second chapter of this book, ver. 52, 54, Geba being too narrow for them, when they were multiplied: or, this other place being a more commodious habitation.

Ver. 7. Begat Uzza and Abihud.] After his removal.

Ver. 8.] After the removal before mentioned, this person took two wives of the country of Moab; whose names are here set down. To show (say some of the Jews) that though a Moabite was excluded from the congregation of the Lord, yet a Moabitess was not; as appears by the example of Ruth.

Ver. 9. He begat of Hodesh his wife,] The Jews

10 And Jeuz, and Shachia, and Mirma. These were his sons, heads of the fathers.

11 And of Hushim he begat Abitub, and El-paal.

12 The sons of Elpaal; Eber, and Misham, and Shamed, who built Ono, and Lod, with the towns thereof:

13 Beriah also, and Shema, who were heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Aijalon, who drove away the inhabitants of Gath.

14 And Ahio, Shashak, and Jeremoth,

15 And Zebadiah, and Arad, and Ader,

16 And Michael, and Ispah, and Joha, the sons of Beriah;

17 And Zebadiah, and Meshullam, and Hezeki, and Heber,

18 Ishmerai also, and Jezliah, and Jobab, the sons of Elpaal;

19 And Jakim, and Zichri, and Zabdi,

20 And Elienai, and Zilthai, and Eliel,

21 And Adaiah, and Beraiah, and Shimirath, the sons of Shimhi;

22 And Ishpan, and Heber, and Eliel,

23 And Abdon, and Zichri, and Hanan,

24 And Hananiah, and Elam, and Antothijah,

25 And Iphedeiah, and Penuel, the sons of Shashak;

26 And Shamsheraï, and Shehariah, and Athaliah,

27 And Jaresiah, and Eliah, and Zichri, the sons of Jeroham.

28 These were heads of the fathers, by their generations, chief men. These dwelt in Jerusalem.

29 And at Gibeon dwelt the father of Gibeon; whose wife's name was Maachah:

30 And his firstborn son Abdon, and Zur, and Kish, and Baal, and Nadab, 31 And Gedor, and Ahio, and Zacher.

32 And Mikloth begat Shimeah. And these also dwelt with their brethren in Jerusalem, over against them.

33 ¶ And Ner begat Kish, and Kish begat Saul, and Saul begat Jonathan, and Malchishua, and Abinadab, and Esh-baal.

think she is the same with Baara: who was called Hodesh, that is new, because he renewed the example of marrying a Moabitish woman: which was first practised in Ruth. But this is an odd fancy of theirs, who misplace the time of Ruth.

Ver. 10. Heads of the fathers.] Chief men in their families.

Ver. 11.] On this verse the Jews ground what they say of Hodesh, that she was the same with Baara, mentioned ver. 8, with Hushim as his other wife.

Ver. 12. Ono, and Lod.] These two, Ono and Lod, are joined together in other places, being neighbouring cities (see Ezra ii. 33; Neh. vi. 37; xi. 33). They were but three miles distant one from the other, as Dr. Lightfoot computes in his Chorographical Decats before St. Mark, ch. 9. sect. ult. where he shows the Talmudists say, that Ono was a walled city from the days of Joshua; but in the war against Gibeon it was burnt with fire, as other cities were; and rebuilt by this Elpaal: who also re-edified Lod, which is the same with Lydda in the New Testament, as the same Dr. Lightfoot observes in his Chorographical Century before St. Matthew. Where he observes, the author of the maps of the land of Canaan hath placed Lydda not far from Jordan, and Lod near the Mediterranean: whereas they are one and the same place, as he shows at large. And in the other place, mentioned before, he shows that it was also called Laodicea: for sometimes they speak of the martyrs in Lod, and in other places call them the martyrs in Laodicea.

Ver. 13. Of the inhabitants of Aijalon.] That is, of the fields that lay about Aijalon: for the town itself belonged to the tribe of Dan (Josh. xix. 42).

Who drove away the inhabitants of Gath.] In revenge (as Pellicanus thinks) of the slaughter they made long ago of their brethren the Ephraimites (ch. vii. 21): or, finding the men of Gath had possessed themselves of this place, they drove them out after their return from the captivity of Babylon. But we read of no war after their return till the time of the Maccabees: and, therefore, this belongs (as a most judicious friend of mine, Dr. Alox, observes) to what was done in more ancient times, viz. after the division of the country by Joshua.

Ver. 16.] Mentioned before, ver. 13.

Ver. 18.] Of whom we had an account before (ver. 11, 12).

Ver. 21. Shimhi.] It is likely that this Shimhi is the same with him who is called Shema, ver. 13.

Ver. 25. Shashak.] This Shashak was an eminent person, mentioned ver. 14.

Ver. 26. Here is another instance of the same name being common with men and women.

Ver. 27. Jeroham.] He is the same with Jeremoth, mentioned ver. 14 next to Shashak.

Ver. 28.] It is probable that all these mentioned from ver. 14, dwelt at Jerusalem (one part of which belonged to the tribe of Benjamin), as they that are forenamed did at Aijalon.

Ver. 29.] Perhaps Gibeon built this city, and gave his name to it, as Kimchi conjectures. But his proper name was Jehiel (as we read, ch. ix. 35, where this genealogy is repeated); and he is called "the father of Gibeon," because he was the chief ruler or governor of the Benjamites, who inhabited that place.

Ver. 30. Between Baal and Nadab, there is mention of another son called Ner, ch. ix. 36.

Ver. 31. Zacher.] Who is called Zachariah, in ch. ix. 37, where another son is added, called Mikloth, whose posterity here follows.

Ver. 32. Shimeah.] Who is called Shimeam, ch. ix. 38.

These also dwelt with their brethren in Jerusalem, over against them.] These families likewise were settled at Jerusalem, as well as the forenamed: and dwelt in a part of the city directly over against the other.

Ver. 33. Ner begat Kish, and Kish begat Saul.] I observed before, ver. 30, that Ner was one of the sons of Gibeon (or Jehiel), who did not beget (in the common signification of the word) Kish; but educated him, and bred him up. For Kish was the son of Abiel: but different from him mentioned 1 Sam. xiv. 51, who was his brother. The Targum here saith, that Ner and Abiel were the same men, who had two names: Abiel was his proper name, but he was called Ner (which signifies a light), because he was illustrious upon some accounts which the Jews mention. See upon 1 Sam. ix. 1, where there is a large account of the ancestors of Abiel, none of which are here mentioned. Upon which Conradus Pellicanus makes this reflection: "That hence we may learn, it is an unnecessary labour scrupulously to inquire after these things, from which we can reap no fruit, and of which 34 And the son of Jonathan was Merib-baal; and Merib-baal begat Micah.

35 And the sons of Micah were, Pithon, and Melech, and Tarea, and Ahaz.

36 And Ahaz begat Jehoadah; and Jehoadah begat Alemeth, and Azmaveth, and Zimri; and Zimri begat Moza.

37 And Moza begat Binea: Rapha was his son, Eleasah his son, Azel his son:

38 And Azel had six sons, whose names are these, Azrikam, Bocheru, and Ishmael, and Sheariah, and Obadiah, and Hanan. All these were the sons of Azel.

39 And the sons of Eshek his brother were, Ulam his firstborn, Jehush the second, and Eliphelet the third.

40 And the sons of Ulam were mighty men of valour, archers, and had many sons, and sons' sons, an hundred and fifty. All these are of the sons of Benjamin.

we may be ignorant without danger. Especially in the matter of these genealogies; the reason of which is long ago expired, together with the tribes to which they belong. As for the certainty of our belief, which depends upon the authority of the holy scriptures, that stands firm and constant, though some things by the length of time be so obscure, that they are not now exactly understood, especially in the difference we find in the proper names of persons and places, which without any prejudice to the faith may be neglected." Thus he.

Esh-baal.] Who is called also Ish-bosheth (see 2 Sam. ii. 8).

Ver. 34. Merib-baal.] This son of Jonathan is called commonly Mephibosheth (see in the forenamed place).

Ver. 35.] The third of these is called Tahrea, ch. ix. 41.

Ver. 39.] We read nothing of Eshek before, unless he be the same with Eleasah, ver. 37.

Thus the family of Saul, though he was rejected by God from being king of Israel, was blessed with a numerous progeny, which sprang from his great-grandchild Micah, whose posterity is here largely recorded in honour of Jonathan.

Ver. 40. Archers.] In the Hebrew the word for archers is, those that tread the bow, because their steel bows (which were much in use among them) were so strong, that they could not bend them with their arms; but sat down, and pressing them with their feet, pulled the arrow with both hands, that it might fly with greater force.

All these are of the sons of Benjamin.] Who, it appears by Judg. xx. were a very valiant tribe: and this family, in particular, were noted to be very great, both in number and valour.

2 The Israelites, 10 the priests, 14 and the Levites, 35 The stock of certain Levites.

1 So all Israel were reckoned by genealogies; and, behold, they were written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah, who were carried away to Babylon for their transgression.

their possessions in their cities were, the Israelites, the priests, Levites, and the Nethinims.

3 And in Jerusalem dwelt of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin, and of the children of Ephraim, and Manasseh;

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1. So all Israel were reckoned by genealogies.] As much as to say, Thus I have summarily reckoned up the genealogies of all the tribes; as I found them in the public registers.

They were written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah.] For, let it be noted, they were so careful to preserve their genealogies, that they were kept in the public records, not only of the Jews, but of the Israelites: whose kings were not negligent in this matter.

Who were carried away to Babylon] These last mentioned, of the tribe of Judah, were carried thither; as the Israelites had been before into remote countries, upon the same account of their idolatry. In which captivity there was, no doubt, a great confusion made in their families: but Ezra, by the help of the prophets Haggai and Malachi (as the Jews think), undertook to set them right, by giving an account of what he found remaining in his time. Though there is a great difference of names in Neh. xi. from those who are here mentioned: Malachi, also, and Ezra did not live in the same time.

Ver. 2. Now the first inhabitants—were.] He speaks of those that came back to their own country with Zerubbabel.

The Israelites, the priests, Levites, and the Ne-thinims.] The first inhabitants that came and settled in their country, out of which they had been carried captive, he comprehends under four sorts of persons, Israelites, priests, Levites, and Nethinims. The first of these seems to comprehend not only all those of the ten tribes, who were carried captive with Judah and Benjamin, but those also who were carried into Assyria and Media by Tiglath-pileser and Shalmaneser. For the edict of Cyrus extended to them, as well as to Judah and Benjamin; and, as the prophets had foretold (see Jer. v. 3, 4, 10, and xxi.), some of them did return, though too many (as the Jews also did) continued where they were settled in their captivity. But that the word Israelites is here a distinct name from the Jews, is apparent from what follows, ver. 3. The last of these, viz. the Nethinims, are generally thought by the Jewish interpreters to be the same with the Gibeonites, who performed the lower offices in the temple, being hewers of wood and drawers of water (see Josh. ix. 27). But Ezra hath given us a better account of them, ch. viii. 20, where he informs us they were given by David to minister to the Levites (which is the original of their name), as the Levites were given by God to help the priests. And therefore in all places they are mentioned with holy persons.

Ver. 3.] This shows that some of the ten tribes returned with those of Judah and Benjamin. For the 4 Uthai the son of Ammihud, the son of Omri, the son of Imri, the son of Bani, of the children of Pharez the son of Judah.

5 And of the Shilonites; Asaiah the firstborn, and his sons.

6 And of the sons of Zerah; Jeuel, and their brethren, six hundred and ninety.

7 And of the sons of Benjamin; Sallu the son of Meshullam, the son of Hodaviah, the son of Hasenuah,

8 And Ibneiah the son of Jeroham, and Elah the son of Uzzi, the son of Michri, and Meshullam the son of Shephathiah, the son of Reuel, the son of Ibniyah;

9 And their brethren, according to their generations, nine hundred and fifty and six. All these men were chief of the fathers in the house of their fathers.

10 ¶ And of the priests; Jedaiah, and Jehoiarib, and Jachin,

11 And Azariah the son of Hilkiah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Zadok, the son of Meraioth, the son of Ahitub, the ruler of the house of God;

12 And Adaiah the son of Jeroham, the son of Pashur, the son of Malchijah, and Maasiai the son of Adiel, the son of Jahzerah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Meshillemith, the son of Immer;

13 And their brethren, heads of the house of their fathers, a thousand and seven hundred and threescore; very able men for the work of the service of the house of God.

14 And of the Levites; Shemaiah the son of Hashub, the son of Azrikam, the son of Hashabiah, of the sons of Merari;

15 And Bakbakkar, Heresh, and Galal, and Mattaniah the son of Micah, the son of Zichri, the son of Asaph;

16 And Obadiah the son of Shemaiah, the son of Galal, the son of Jeduthun, and Berechiah the son of Asa, the son of Elkanah, that dwelt in the villages of the Netophathites.

17 And the porters were, Shallum, and Akkub, proclamation of Cyrus excepted none, but gave all the people of that nation liberty to return to their own country. And Josephus says expressly, that the edict of Cyrus was sent by Zerubbabel to those of Assyria and Media. Many, indeed, neglected that favour (as I said before), and continued where they were settled; but those that did return were united to the Jews without distinction. Inasmuch, that at Jerusalem, which belonged to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, some of Ephraim and Manasseh were permitted to make their abode. For several of those tribes, being left in the land of Samaria, when the ten tribes were carried away, and joined with Judah (2 Chron. xxxi. 1, xxxii. 1, xxxiv. 9, &c.), and were carried with them to Babylon, and returned with them.

Ver. 4.] Now he sets down their names; and first those of the tribe of Judah, in this and the two following verses. But their names are so different from those in Neh. xi. that it is an argument they speak of quite different persons, who lived in different times.

Ver. 5. Shilonites.] Who are called Shelanites in Numb. xxvi. 20.

Asaiah the firstborn, and his sons.] The eldest of that family, and those descended from him.

Ver. 6. Jeuel, and their brethren.] By brethren are meant near relations, as ver. 9, 13, 21.

Six hundred and ninety.] This was the whole number of the children of Judah, who dwelt in Jerusalem, after they came out of their captivity.

Ver. 7. Meshullam.] This Meshullam is said to be descended from quite different ancestors, than are mentioned Neh. xi. 7. And therefore this is a quite different person from the other, though of the same name. Though some think that one of these authors gives an account of his remote ancestors, and the other of his more immediate: which is not probable.

Ver. 9. And their brethren.] By brethren, as I said before, are meant their near kindred.

All these men] That is, the seven mentioned above, (ver. 4, 8).

Were chief of the fathers] They are called chief fathers because they were principal governors in their families. Nehemiah mentions no more than nine hundred twenty and eight, who came with these; therefore gives an account of different persons; or some before his time were dead, or removed to some other place. The first is most likely.

Ver. 10.] These are the second sort of inhabitants that first settled in their possessions after the captivity, mentioned ver. 2.

Ver. 11. Azariah the son of Hilkiah.] Not he in the days of Josiah (2 Kings xxii. 8), but another of the same name; whose son Seraiah lived in the time of Nehemiah, xi. 11.

Ahitub, the ruler of the house of God.] This last person is thought by Pellicanus to have been the high-priest; but both Ezra and Haggai tell us Jeshua (or Joshua) was high-priest (Ezra iii. 2; Hag. i. 1). This therefore was not the ruler, but a ruler in God's house (as the words should be translated); not the principal ruler, but one in great authority under him; perhaps he that was called the sagan (who was vicar to the high-priest; and performed his office when he was sick, or otherwise hindered), or he was the head of one of the courses of the priests that attended in their turns, at the house of God. Here it is to be noted, that by "the house of God" in this place, we are taught by ver. 23, to understand "the house of the tabernacle." For as, before the first temple was built, there was a tabernacle for divine service; so, after the second was founded, they erected a tabernacle, till this temple could be finished: without which they could not have performed the several parts of the worship of God, which were annexed to the several parts of the holy places, according to the law.

Ver. 12.] There were three between that Jeroham and Pashur mentioned in Nehemiah: and therefore he was either his great-grandson, or they were different persons, though of the same name.

Ver. 13.] In the Hebrew they are called "mighty men of valour." For the service of the house of God required not only great strength of body, but great courage and resolution of mind; especially at that time when they were newly come out of captivity. There was a famous instance of this courage before the captivity, in Azariah: who resisted the king himself, when he would have profaned the holy place (2 Chron. xxvi. 17, 18, &c.).

Ver. 14.] These are the third sort of persons, mentioned ver. 2.

Ver. 15.] This last was descended, it is likely, from that Asaph who lived in David's time (2 Chron. xx. 14).

Ver. 16.] He speaks of Elkanah, not of Berechiah; for he dwelt at Jerusalem. But there was not room and Talmon, and Ahiman, and their brethren: Shallum was the chief;

18 Who hitherto waited in the king's gate eastward: they were porters in the companies of the children of Levi.

19 And Shallum the son of Kore, the son of Ebiasaph, the son of Korah, and his brethren, of the house of his father, the Korahites, were over the work of the service, keepers of the gates of the tabernacle: and their fathers, being over the host of the Lord, were keepers of the entry.

20 And Phinehas the son of Eleazar was the ruler over them in time past, and the Lord was with him.

for them all there; therefore Elkanah, and those that belonged to him, dwelt in these villages, till their own cities were rebuilt. They were in the tribe of Judah (ch. ii. 54), and waited at Jerusalem in their courses, though they did not dwell there.

Ver. 17. The porters] Or rather the guards, as the Hebrew word signifies, and not porters.

Were, Shallum, &c.] The next verse tells us, at what places these guards exercised their office.

Ver. 18. Who hitherto waited in the king's gate eastward:] That is, where the king's gate formerly was; which shows that the tabernacle they had erected was not on mount Moriah, but in Zion, since their return from captivity.

They were porters] That is, the four persons above mentioned.

In the companies of—Levi.] That were at the four sides of the tabernacle, Jerusalem being without walls.

Ver. 19. And Shallum] Mentioned ver. 17.

Of the house of his father,] That is, the rest of that family.

Keepers of the gates of the tabernacle:] Their service was to be keepers of the porches of the tabernacle. From which it appears again, that the Jews (as I said before) did pitch a tabernacle upon mount Zion, till they had rebuilt the temple on mount Moriah.

Being over the host of the Lord,] Here the principal person among them attended, taking care of the tabernacle and all its appurtenances, which some think is meant by the "host of the Lord."

Were keepers of the entry.] More especially they took care of the court, that none should enter into it but such as the law allowed.

Ver. 20. Phinehas the son of Eleazar was the ruler over them in time past,] So we rightly translate the last word lepanim; which as R. David Gauz observes in his Tzemoth David (ad A. M. 2892), doth not signify that Phinehas was now living, but he was ruler of them "in time past" when he was living. And thus that Hebrew word is rendered, Ruth iv. 7; Ps. cii. 26. But that he should be ruler over this sort of officers seems unlikely, being the son of the high-priest, and after Eleazar high-priest himself; which raised him far above such a low employment. Besides, it is evident he is here speaking of the Levites, not of the priests, and therefore it is probable this Phinehas was only a Levite, called, as his father was, by the ancient name of a high-priest (see Selden, De Success. in Pontificatum, lib. i. cap. 2. fol. 117, 119).

The Lord was with him.] In the Targum, "the Word of the Lord was his helper." From which Beckius frames this argument against the present Jews. That if he who was with Phinehas was Jehovah the true God, and this Word was with Phinehas, then the Word, in the opinion of this paraphrast, was Jehovah the true God.

21 And Zechariah the son of Meshelemiah was porter of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

22 All these which were chosen to be porters in the gates were two hundred and twelve. These were reckoned by their genealogy in their villages, whom David and Samuel the seer did ordain in their set office.

23 So they and their children had the oversight of the gates of the house of the Lord, namely, the house of the tabernacle, by wards.

24 In four quarters were the porters, toward the east, west, north, and south.

25 And their brethren, which were in their vil-

Ver. 21.] Here again the tabernacle is mentioned, which, as I said, the first inhabitants of the country, after their return from captivity, erected, till the temple could be built. For they would not be without the public worship of God, and a place was necessary for it. By "the door of the tabernacle," I suppose, is meant the door which let into the court of the priests: for the Levites might not go into that court; and therefore this is not meant of the door of the sanctuary, as some have thought.

Ver. 22. All these which were chosen to be porters in the gates were two hundred and twelve.] Who came in their turns to discharge this office.

These were reckoned by their genealogy] See ver. 16.

Whom David and Samuel the seer did ordain] All things (that is, after their return from captivity), were put into that order at the house of God, which Samuel projected, and David, when he was settled in peace, put in execution (see ch. xxiii. 5). For there had been very great confusion, no doubt, in the service of God, in the days of the judges, as there had been in all other things. But when Samuel came to govern, he designed to put things in good order: and especially to make the attendance of God's ministers at his house more regular than it had been. For which end he contrived, in all likelihood, that method of the priests and Levites waiting in their courses; which (Saul being rejected by God), he imparted unto David, whom he anointed by God's appointment to be king over Israel. Who accordingly, in the latter end of his reign, disposed their services at the tabernacle.

In their set office.] Or rather (as it is in the margin) "in their trust;" for the Hebrew word signifies fidelity; importing that their attendance at the house of God was no longer confused and disorderly (as it had been formerly, when there were sometimes too many, and sometimes too few waiting there; or, they had no certain work assigned them, or were negligent for want of overseers), but they every one in their course obediently went about their proper work, and faithfully discharged it.

Ver. 23. So they and their children had the oversight of the gates of the house of the Lord,] This verse plainly instructs us that they built a tabernacle for the worship of God (as I noted ver. 10), after their return from Babylon, till the temple was finished: and here the priests and Levites attended; as "in the house of the Lord."

By wards.] According to the courses that David appointed; as it is explained, ver. 25.

Ver. 24.] On the four sides of the tabernacle, as I observed on ver. 18. After the temple was built, these guards were kept, as Dr. Lightfoot notes, on the four quarters of the outward wall. For the wall that encompassed the courts had no gate on the west (see Prospect of the Temple, ch. 4, sect. 3).

lages, were to come after seven days from time to time with them.

26 For these Levites, the four chief porters, were in their set office, and were over the chambers and treasuries of the house of God.

27 ¶ And they lodged round about the house of God, because the charge was upon them, and the opening thereof every morning pertained to them.

28 And certain of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, that they should bring them in and out by tale.

29 Some of them also were appointed to oversee the vessels, and all the instruments of the sanctuary, and the fine flour, and the wine, and the oil, and the frankincense, and the spices.

30 And some of the sons of the priests made the ointment of the spices.

31 And Matthithiah, one of the Levites, who was the firstborn of Shallum the Korahite, had the set office over the things that were made in the pans.

32 And other of their brethren, of the sons of the Kohathites, were over the shewbread, to prepare it every sabbath.

Ver. 25. Their brethren,—were to come after seven days] Every week a new course came to attend the service of the house of God, and to relieve their brethren.

From time to time with them.] They came to wait their week under the government of the chief porters: who seem to have constantly dwelt at Jerusalem, to see the courses disposed according as David had ordained. So it here follows.

Ver. 26. The four chief porters were in their set office.] The principal porters were four, one at each gate (ver. 24), to whom was committed the care of the rest of their brethren to see that they did their duty.

And were over the chambers and treasuries] This I shall explain upon ch. xxvi. 20, where it is more distinctly mentioned.

Ver. 27. They lodged round about the house of God.] Round about the outward wall before mentioned, ver. 24. For, as the same learned man observes, neither priests nor Levites had any lodgings in the gates of the courts; nor did the Levites open those doors, but the priests.

Ver. 28.] For the use of the priests when they ministered: who returned, when they had done their work, the same number to the Levites, which they had received from them. This was another duty of the Levites.

Ver. 29.] See upon ch. xxvi. 20.

Ver. 30.] Or rather, “but some of the sons of the priests,” &c. For though the Levites had the custody of the spices of which the ointment was made, yet none but the priests could compound them and make the ointment.

Ver. 31.] To prepare fine flour and oil for the mincha, or meat-offering that was offered every morning and evening, as we read Lev. ii. 5, 6. The LXX. (who herein follow the Talmudists) will have this peculiarly refer to the mincha offered by the high-priest for himself and his family: which was the tenth part of an ephah; half in the morning, and half in the evening (Lev. vi. 20, &c.).

Ver. 32.] When it was set new upon the table in the holy place, and the old taken away (see upon Exod. xxv. 30).

Ver. 33. These are the singers, chief of the fathers of the Levites, who remaining in the chambers were 33 And these are the singers, chief of the fathers of the Levites, who remaining in the chambers were free: for they were employed in that work day and night.

34 These chief fathers of the Levites were chief throughout their generations; these dwelt at Jerusalem.

35 ¶ And in Gibeon dwelt the father of Gibeon, Jehiel, whose wife’s name was Maachah:

36 And his firstborn son Abdon, then Zur, and Kish, and Baal, and Ner, and Nadab, 37 And Gedor, and Ahio, and Zechariah, and Mikloth.

38 And Mikloth begat Shimeam. And they also dwelt with their brethren at Jerusalem, over against their brethren.

39 And Ner begat Kish: and Kish begat Saul; and Saul begat Jonathan, and Malchi-shua, and Abinadab, and Esh-baal.

40 And the son of Jonathan was Merib-baal: and Merib-baal begat Micah.

41 And the sons of Micah were, Pithon, and Melech, and Tahrea, and Ahaz.

42 And Ahaz begat Jarah; and Jarah begat free:] Others of the Levites, and principal persons among them, were appointed to be singers, and attended nothing else: but dwelt in some chambers about the temple, free from all other employment. And the reason why they dwelt there was that they might not be defiled, and so made unfit at any time for that ministry: and that they might be ready at hand to attend upon it.

For they were employed in that work day and night.] In learning and teaching to sing, and to play upon instruments both wind and stringed: as appears from ch. xxvi. This was wholly a new thing, Moses having ordained nothing concerning singing and music in the house of God, and seems (as it is objected in the book of Cosri) to be contrary to what he commanded, Deut. xii. 32, “Thou shalt not add unto it (that is, to the law), nor take from it:” but they answer very well, that this command concerned the people only, who were forbidden out of their own heads, as we speak, to innovate any thing, and frame laws to themselves out of their own reasonings. But it did not oblige prophets and divine men, such as Moses was: and therefore David had authority from God (who had not bound up himself to add nothing) to do what he did; as Solomon afterward had to set up another altar in the midst of the court, upon a special occasion (2 Chron. vii. 7—9), and Nehemiah to require but a third part of a shekel of the people, ch. x. 32 (thus Sopher Cosri, par. iii. sect. 11, 12).

Ver. 34. These chief fathers of the Levites were chief throughout their generations:] These were principal persons, among whose families had always been eminent men, who were chosen for this service.

These dwelt at Jerusalem.] They were settled there, for the greater convenience of attending the morning and evening service at the temple, without much trouble. But these words seem to comprehend a great deal more; viz. that not only these chief of the Levites, but all those whom he hath mentioned from ver. 3, unto this verse, lived at Jerusalem, and came back with Zerubbabel.

Ver. 35.] From hence to the end of the chapter the same genealogy is set down again, which we had in the foregoing chapter (ver. 29, 30, &c.), and in the same words: and therefore I shall not here transcribe them. Of this I can give no account, but that this narrative of the descent and family of Saul is repeated, the better to join the following history to it, concerning the death of that king. But if we could give no account of it, Conradus Pellicanus thinks it is not irreligious to acknowledge that in these Jewish genealogies, which are very long and useless to us, 44 And Azel had six sons, whose names are these, Azrikam, Bochern, and Ishmael, and Sheariah, and Obadiah, and Hanan: these were the sons of Azel.

Alemeth, and Azmaveth, and Zimri; and Zimri begat Moza;

43 And Moza begat Binea; and Rephaiah his son, Eleasah his son, Azel his son.

some errors may have crept in by the negligence of transcribers. Who, in copying of them might not attend sometimes, but be drowsy, as we are apt to be, when we are about any tedious work and not very profitable, in which, if there be any error, the church suffers no damage by it. But there is no need of this.

CHAPTER X.

1 Saul's overthrow and death. 8 The Philistines triumph over Saul. 11 The kindness of Jabesh-gilead towards Saul and his sons. 13 Saul's sin, for which the kingdom was translated from him to David.

1 Now the Philistines fought against Israel; and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and fell down slain in mount Gilboa.

2 And the Philistines followed hard after Saul, and after his sons; and the Philistines slew Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Malchi-shua, the sons of Saul.

3 And the battle went sore against Saul, and the archers hit him, and he was wounded of the archers.

4 Then said Saul to his armour-bearer, Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these uncircumcised come and abuse me. But his armour-bearer would not; for he was sore afraid. So Saul took a sword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armour-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise on the sword, and died.

6 So Saul died, and his three sons, and all his house died together.

7 And when all the men of Israel that were in the valley saw that they fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, then they forsook their cities, and fled: and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

8 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his sons fallen in mount Gilboa.

9 And when they had stripped him, they took his head, and his armour, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to carry tidings unto their idols, and to the people.

10 And they put his armour in the house of their gods, and fastened his head in the temple of Dagon.

11 ¶ And when all Jabesh-gilead heard all that the Philistines had done to Saul, 12 They arose, all the valiant men, and took away the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, and brought them to Jabesh, and buried their bones under the oak in Jabesh, and fasted seven days.

13 ¶ So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the CHAP. X.

Ver. 1.] This verse, and those that follow to ver. 13, have been explained upon 1 Sam. xxxi. where the same history is related; in the same words, and with very little difference. And it is repeated here, to make way for the history of David (which is mainly intended in the rest of this book), who by Saul's death was advanced to the crown.

Ver. 6.] That, is, all that were present with him in the battle: and his family had such a blow by their fall, that it never recovered itself. For though Ishbosheth reigned over a part of the country, yet it was not in any splendour; such a deadly wound being given to the house of Saul, that it did not long survive him in the kingly authority.

Ver. 7. By the valley is meant the towns in the open country, which were not fortified (see 1 Sam. xxxi. 7).

Ver. 9. They took his head,] Which they cut off from his body, as we read 1 Sam. xxxi. 9.

And sent into the land of the Philistines round about,] That public thanksgiving might be given by them to their gods for this victory.

Ver. 10. They put his armour in the house of their gods,] In the temple of Ashtaroth, as the same book tells us (1 Sam. xxxi. 10).

And fastened his head in the temple of Dagon.] These two, Dagon and Ashtaroth, were the principal gods of the country of the Philistines; unto whom they sent these trophies of their victory. And the plate forenamed informs us where they fastened his body, after they had separated his head from it, and stripped off the skin and the hair; for the Hebrew word signifies a skull.

Ver. 11.] By Jabesh-gilead, is meant the people of the city, and of the territory round about it.

Ver. 12.] This was a noble instance of their courage, and of their love and gratitude to their prince: who had some excellent qualities in him, and had highly obliged this city in the beginning of his reign: as I have observed on the book of Samuel. If we may believe Josephus, there was a law among the Jews, that they who killed themselves should be denied burial: for this was all the punishment that could be inflicted on them after they were dead, for so great a sin. Yet David highly approved this fact of the men of Jabesh-gilead, who buried Saul: and therefore the Jews make this exception to the rule, that if they killed themselves merely to avoid that reproach which might be cast upon them if they lived, they might be buried: and they instance in Samson and Saul. Who they fancy repented of his many sins, after Samuel had appeared to him, and told him of his sad fate. But the two following verses seem to contradict this word of the LORD, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it;

(see Grotius, in his book De Jure Belli et Pacis. lib. ii. cap. 19, sect. 5).

Ver. 13.] His two great transgressions (one against the express order and command of God by Samuel, and the other against a known law of Moses) were his sparing the Amalekites, and his consulting the witch of Endor; which were plain proofs that he did not mind God, as it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 14. And enquired not of the Lord:] He did not regard him as he ought to have done: for otherwise he did inquire of him (1 Sam. xxviii. 6), but not with a religious mind.

14 And enquired not of the LORD: therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the son of Jesse.

Turned the kingdom unto David] Kingdoms are never translated from one family to another, but injustice and impiety go before, as Grotius here notes. Which the son of Sirach expresses admirably, Ecclus. x. 8. "Because of unrighteous dealings, injuries, and riches got by deceit, the kingdom is translated from one people to another."

CHAPTER XI.

1 David by a general consent is made king at Hebron. 4. Hewinneth the castle of Zion from the Jebusites by Joab's valour. 10 A catalogue of David's mighty men.

1 THEN all Israel gathered themselves to David unto Hebron, saying, Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh.

2 And moreover in time past, even when Saul was king, thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel: and the LORD thy God said unto thee, Thou shalt feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be ruler over my people Israel.

3 Therefore came all the elders of Israel to the king to Hebron; and David made a covenant with them in Hebron before the LORD; and they anointed David king over Israel, according to the word of the LORD by Samuel.

4 ¶ And David and all Israel went to Jerusalem, which is Jebus; where the Jebusites were, the inhabitants of the land.

5 And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David, Thou shalt not come hither. Nevertheless David took the castle of Zion, which is the city of David.

6 And David said, Whosoever smiteth the Jebusites first shall be chief and captain. So Joab the son of Zeruiah went first up, and was chief.

7 And David dwelt in the castle; therefore they called it the city of David.

8 And he built the city round about, even from Millo round about; and Joab repaired the rest of the city.

9 So David waxed greater and greater: for the LORD of hosts was with him.

10 ¶ These also are the chief of the mighty men whom David had, who strengthened themselves with him in his kingdom, and with all Israel, to make him king, according to the word of the LORD concerning Israel.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1. Then] That is, after the death of Ish-bosheth: for many things passed after the death of Saul which are here omitted. As, the coming of the Amalekite to David with the news of it; his lamentation over Saul and Jonathan; his anointing at Hebron over the tribe of Judah; the death of Abner, and then of Ish-bosheth. After which this author relates the promotion of David to be king of all the tribes of Israel, by the full consent of all the people.

All Israel] By all Israel is meant the elders of all their tribes, 3 Sam. v. 1, where this verse is explained.

Ver. 2.] See 2 Sam. v. 2, where there are the very same words.

Ver. 3. They anointed David] See there, 2 Sam. v. 3.

According to the word of the Lord by Samuel.] These words are added unto those in the book of Samuel to show how the people came to know that God told David (as they say in the foregoing verse) he should govern Israel. Samuel declared it to him, and published it, no doubt, among the people.

Ver. 4. Jebus:] See concerning this place, Judg. xix. 10.

Where the Jebusites were,] See 2 Sam. v. 6.

Ver. 5.] The insolent language of the Jebusites is recorded more largely in 2 Sam. v. 6, where see what I have noted.

Ver. 6.] It is evident Joab was before this in a great station, commanding all the forces of Judah: as may be gathered from 2 Sam. ii. 13, 14; iii. 22, 23. But now he was a commander-in-chief of all the forces both of Judah and Israel; which made him very powerful: or, perhaps, Abishai being his elder brother, was general of the forces before; and this place gives an account how Joab came to have the pre-eminence, by this great achievement.

Ver. 7.] Because here he chose to have his constant residence: in order to which he enlarged and adorned it with many buildings, as it here follows.

Ver. 8. He built the city] See 2 Sam. v. 9.

Joab repaired the rest of the city.] He repaired, perhaps, the fortifications, which had been, in the time of the siege, much shattered. And, as Conradus Pellicanus thinks, built some houses, for the quartering of his soldiers.

Ver. 9.] The word of the Lord was his help, as the Targum expresses it (see 2 Sam. v. 10).

Ver. 10. These also are the chief of the mighty men whom David had.] Having touched upon David's promotion to the throne, and his settlement in Zion, he next thought fit to relate who those valiant men were that assisted him in his advancement, and helped to establish him in his authority. They were such, in all likelihood, as had accompanied him during his persecution, when they gave David many proofs of their valour and affection, as they also did afterward.

And with all Israel, to make him king,] A great

11 And this is the number of the mighty men whom David had; Jashobeam, an Hachmonite, the chief of the captains; he lifted up his spear against three hundred slain by him at one time.

12 And after him was Eleazar the son of Dodo, the Ahohite, who was one of the three mighties.

13 He was with David at Pas-dammim, and there the Philistines were gathered together to battle, where was a parcel of ground full of barley; and the people fled from before the Philistines.

14 And they set themselves in the midst of that parcel, and delivered it, and slew the Philistines; and the Lord saved them by a great deliverance.

15 ¶ Now three of the thirty captains went down to the rock to David, into the cave of Adullam; and the host of the Philistines encamped in the valley of Rephaim.

16 And David was then in the hold, and the Philistines' garrison was then at Beth-lehem.

17 And David longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, that is at the gate!

18 And the three brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: but David would not drink of it, but poured it out to the Lord, many of the Israelites, as is related in the next chapter, came to David before the death of Saul, believing he was designed by God to be their king.

According to the word of the Lord] That David should be king over all Israel: which word was delivered by Samuel, and known to all the people, as well as to Saul and Jonathan.

Ver. 11.] I have explained this upon 2 Sam. xxiii. 8, where I observed, how Kimchi reconciles this place to that, which saith he slew eight hundred. But I now think it plainer to say, that he slew three hundred with his own hand, and thereby routed the enemy, and put them to flight, in which five hundred more were killed in the pursuit. All which might be said to be slain by him; because the slaughter he made was the cause the rest were slain. Or, as Mayerus (upon Seder Olam) interprets it; After he had slain three hundred, he was so little tired, that he slew as many more as made eight hundred.

Ver. 12. Eleazar the son of Dodo, the Ahohite.] The son of Ahothi, as Kimchi understands it; for this is not the name of a country, but of a family.

One of the three mighties.] See 2 Sam. xxiii. 9.

Ver. 13. Pas-dammim.] The same with Ephes-dammim, 1 Sam. xvii. 1.

Ver. 14.] All this is related, and hath been explained in 2 Sam. xxiii. 9—12.

Ver. 15.] See there, ver. 13.

Ver. 16.] See there, ver. 14.

Ver. 17.] See ver. 15. He did not desire any one should venture to fetch him some of this water, but in a very hot day, said, as we sometimes do, What would I not give for a draught of those cool and refreshing waters! which he remembered he had drunk off freely in his youth.

Ver. 19.] See all this explained in that place, ver. 16, 17.

19 And said, My God forbid it me, that I should do this thing: shall I drink the blood of these men that have put their lives in jeopardy? for with the jeopardy of their lives they brought it. Therefore he would not drink it. These things did these three mightiest.

20 ¶ And Abishai the brother of Joab, he was chief of the three: for lifting up his spear against three hundred, he slew them, and had a name among the three.

21 Of the three, he was more honourable than the two; for he was their captain: howbeit he attained not to the first three.

22 Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man of Kabzeel, who had done many acts; he slew two lionlike men of Moab: also he went down and slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day.

23 And he slew an Egyptian, a man of great stature, five cubits high; and in the Egyptian's hand was a spear like a weaver's beam; and he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear.

24 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had a name among the three mighties.

25 Behold, he was honourable among the thirty, but attained not to the first three: and David set him over his guard.

26 ¶ Also the valiant men of the armies were, Asahel the brother of Joab, Elhanan the son of Dodo of Beth-lehem, Ver. 20.] See 2 Sam. xxiii. 18. There are but two here mentioned; the third, Abarbinel thinks, was Adina the son of Shiza, mentioned ver. 42, who is said to be a captain of the Reubenites, and thirty with him.

Ver. 21. Of the three, he was more honourable than the two;] Perhaps he was the first, and led them on, in that bold exploit at Beth-lehem.

Howbeit he attained not to the first three.] But came short of them in their great achievements.

Ver. 22.] See 2 Sam. xxiii. 20.

Ver. 23.] The country of Egypt was famous for men of vast bigness, as we learn from Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 130, 143, 153, 175, 176. See Huetius, in his Questiones Alnetanæ, lib. ii. p. 180, where he observes, out of Pliny, that in Ethiopia there was a people that were eight cubits high (lib. vi. cap. 30, lib. vii. cap. 3).

Ver. 24.] See all this explained in the forenamed book, 2 Sam. xxiii. 21, 22.

Ver. 25. He was honourable among the thirty, but attained not to the first three.] He sets a mark of honour upon him as a man of great reputation among the thirty, though he did not rise up to the pitch of the first three, nor of Abishai, though it is likely he excelled the third (see there, ver. 23).

David set him over his guard.] The Cherethites, and Pelethites. Or, as some take it, he made him president of his council, as the Hebrew word imports (so Kimchi), there being a rare conjunction in him of wisdom with valour.

Ver. 26.] See there, ver. 24. These were chief commanders in the army, either colonels, as we speak, or captains; and they were under the command of the three foregoing great men, who were over them, as they were over the soldiers. But these great men were below the first three: who are said, in the tenth

27 Shammoth the Harorite, Helez the Pelonite,

28 Ira the son of Ikkesh the Tekoite, Abiezer the Antiothite,

29 Sibbecai the Hushathite, Ilai the Ahohite,

30 Maharai the Netophathite, Heled the son of Baanah the Netophathite,

31 Ithai the son of Ribai of Gibeah, that pertained to the children of Benjamin, Benaiah the Pirathonite,

32 Hurai of the brooks of Gaash, Abiel the Arbathite,

33 Azmaveth the Baharumite, Eliahba the Shaalbonite,

34 The sons of Hashem the Gizonite, Jonathan the son of Shage the Hararite, 35 Ahiam the son of Sacar the Hararite, Eliphal the son of Ur, 36 Hephher the Mecherathite, Ahijah the Pelonite, verse of this chapter, to be mighty men to David (as the words are in the Hebrew), because they attended upon him continually, as the keepers of his body, and had no other command.

Ver. 27.] See 2 Sam. xxiii. 25.

Ver. 28.] See there, ver. 26. All the rest that follow are mentioned in that chapter of the second book of Samuel, with some difference in their names, as I have there noted. Some others also are added, being men of great note, though not equal to the above-named. Particularly he relates who were the chief commanders, in the borders of the kingdom beyond Jordan (ver. 42, &c). This appears by the names of their country, which was beyond that river.

37 Hezro the Carmelite, Naarai the son of Ezbai,

38 Joel the brother of Nathan, Mibhar the son of Haggeri,

39 Zelek the Ammonite, Naharai the Zeruahite, the armour-bearer of Joab the son of Zeruiah, 40 Ira the Ithrite, Gareb the Ithrite,

41 Uriah the Hittite, Zabad the son of Ahlai,

42 Adina the son of Shiza the Reubenite, a captain of the Reubenites, and thirty with him.

43 Hanan the son of Maachah, and Josphat the Midnite,

44 Uziah the Ashterathite, Shama and Jehiel the sons of Hothan the Aroerite, 45 Jedaiel the son of Shimri, and Joha his brother, the Tizite,

46 Eliel the Mahavite, and Jeribai, and Josphaviah, the sons of Elnaam, and Ithmah the Moabite, 47 Eliel, and Obed, and Jasiel the Mesobaite.

There is a little difficulty in the thirty-eighth verse, where Joel, who is called Igal in 2 Sam. xxiii. 36 (there being nothing more common than such alterations in names), is said to be the brother of Nathan, which seems not to consist with what is said in the other place, that he was the son of Nathan. But the account of this is easy, for he might be both, if he was his adopted son, for want of children: the word son often signifying no more than a nephew, as the word brother doth one near of kin. As for the rest of the variations, Conradus Pellicanus resolves, that we need not trouble ourselves about the errors of transcribers, which we may acknowledge, in such matters as these, without any prejudice of faith, truth, or good manners. So he concludes this chapter.

CHAPTER XII.

1 The companies that came to David at Ziklag. 23 The armies that came to him at Hebron.

1 Now these are they that came to David to Ziklag, while he yet kept himself close because of Saul the son of Kish: and they were among the mighty men, helpers of the war.

2 They were armed with bows, and could use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones and shooting arrows out of a bow, even of Saul's brethren of Benjamin.

3 The chief was Abiezer, then Joash, the sons of Shemaah the Gibeathite; and Jeziel, and Pelet, the sons of Azmaveth; and Berachiah, and Jehu the Antiothite,

4 And Ismaiah, the Gibeonite, a mighty man among the thirty, and over the thirty; and Jeremiah, and Jahaziel, and Johanan, and Josabab the Gederathite,

5 Eluzai, and Jerimoth, and Bealiah, and Sheariah, and Shephatiah the Haruphite,

CHAP. XII.

Ver. 1.] This author thought fit to do those the honour of being remembered (which is omitted in the book of Samuel), who came and joined themselves to David, when he was in exile: and were afterward very assistant to him in his wars. They are said to come to him, while he "kept himself close because of Saul:" because they, pitying David's condition, who was forced to skulk in secret places to secure himself from Saul's fury, designed to help him, and it is likely left their habitations, and went to seek him; though they did not actually join him till he came to Ziklag.

Ver. 2. And could use both the right hand and the left] Which gave them a great advantage in war; and made them more valuable soldiers (see Judg. xx. 16).

In hurling stones and shooting arrows] They were excellent slingers as well as archers.

Even of Saul's brethren] There was some extraordinary cause which moved some of Saul's kindred, as well as of his tribe, to desert him, and go over to David. Either the great virtue of David attracted them, or they abhorred to see an innocent person so violently persecuted; or, perhaps, they were pious persons, who had a great regard to the words of Samuel, concerning David's right to the kingdom.

Ver. 3.] There is mention before of Azmaveth (ch. viii. 36), as descended from Micah the son of Me-phibosheth, the grandson of Saul.

Ver. 4. Ismaiah the Gibeonite,] I suppose there were thirty Benjamites came over to David at one time, and this was their leader.

6 Elkanah, and Jesiah, and Azareel, and Jo-ezer, and Jashobeam, the Korhites, 7 And Jehoah, and Zebadiah, the sons of Jeroham of Gedor.

8 And of the Gadites there separated themselves unto David into the hold to the wilderness men of might, and men of war fit for the battle, that could handle shield and buckler, whose faces were like the faces of lions, and were as swift as the roes upon the mountains;

9 Ezer the first, Obadiah the second, Eliab the third,

10 Mishmannah the fourth, Jeremiah the fifth,

11 Attai the sixth, Eliel the seventh,

12 Johanan the eighth, Elizabad the ninth,

13 Jeremiah the tenth, Machbanai the eleventh.

14 These were of the sons of Gad, captains of the host: one of the least was over an hundred, and the greatest over a thousand.

15 These are they that went over Jordan in the first month, when it had overflowed all his banks; and they put to flight all them of the valleys, both toward the east, and toward the west.

16 And there came of the children of Benjamin and Judah to the hold unto David.

17 And David went out to meet them, and answered and said unto them, If ye be come peaceably unto me to help me, mine heart shall be knit unto you: but if ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no wrong in mine hands, the God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it.

18 Then the spirit came upon Amasai, who was chief of the captains, and he said, Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse: peace,

Ver. 7. These were the principal persons among the thirty, mentioned ver. 4; the rest, perhaps, were not of such note.

Ver. 8. Of the Gadites there separated themselves] From their countrymen and families, which they left to follow them.

Unto David into the hold to the wilderness] There are several holds, or inaccessible places mentioned, where David secured himself from Saul's persecution (see 1 Sam. xxii. 4; xxiii. 14; xxiv. 22). But some think he still speaks of those that came to David at Ziklag: which may be called a hold, they think, as the city of David is, ch. xi. 7, because he fortified it.

That could handle shield and buckler,] Under these are comprehended all weapons of war, which they could manage skilfully; being bred to it, and wanting no courage to engage any enemy.

Whose faces were like the faces of lions, and were as swift as the roes upon the mountains;] They had a fierceness in their countenances, which terrified their enemies; who durst not look them in their face, but ran away as soon as they saw them. But they could not save themselves by flight, being pursued so swiftly by these men, that they overtook them and slew them. Bochart observes out of Aristotle, that lions have faces more like men than any other creature, but very stern and terrible.

Ver. 9.] They are reckoned up thus distinctly, according to the dignity and precedence which they had in their own country; or according to the order wherein they came to David.

Ver. 14.] They did not bring a host of men with them, but they had been commanders of the army in their own country. Or, when David came to the crown, he thought them worthy to be preferred, and the lowest of them was made a centurion.

Ver. 15. These are they that went over Jordan in the first month, when it had overflowed all his banks;] This is an instance of their fearless valour, that they ventured over Jordan in the most dangerous season: and perhaps swam over, when the stream was most rapid and violent, to help their brethren (see Josh. iii. 15).

And they put to flight all them of the valleys,] When Saul was engaged to attend the motions of the Philistines, it is likely some people both of the eastern and western countries which bordered upon Jordan, laid hold of this opportunity to invade and spoil the land thereabout; which moved these men to go to their relief, and God gave them a great victory over them. Where these valleys lay, and what enemies these men encountered, is nowhere recorded.

Ver. 16.] Besides those of Saul's kindred before mentioned, there were others of that tribe, together with some of Judah, who came to him when he was in the hold, mentioned ver. 8, which I conjectured might be Ziklag; but I rather think it was some of the holds he was in, when he lay in the wilderness.

Ver. 17. David went out to meet them,] They were so considerable, either for their number, or quality, that David went out (attended, no doubt, with some of his men) to meet them, before they came to the hold.

And answered] After the first salutation which they made him, he replied in the following words.

If ye be come peaceably unto me to help me, mine heart shall be knit unto you:] As much as to say, If you be really friends, you are welcome, and I will make a league with you.

But if ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no wrong in mine hands, the God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it.] He knew himself to be so innocent, both with respect to Saul and all other men, whom he had no way injured, that he doubted not God would protect him, and do him right against these men, if they came with bad intentions to him. What should make him suspect there might possibly be some treachery designed, is not now to be known. Perhaps some had before this come with pretences of great kindness to him, whom he had found to be false; which made him now more cautious whom he entertained.

Ver. 18. Then the spirit came upon Amasai,] The Spirit of power, saith the Targum: That is, God powerfully moved him with an heroic boldness, and resolution, in the name of them all, to profess their fidelity to David, in such pathetic words, as convinced him they were friends. Rasi compares with this those words in Judg. vi. 34. But none hath discoursed so well upon these words as Maimonides, who observes, that by the spirit in such places as this, is not to be understood a power to speak or declare any thing; but only to excite those who felt it, to do some excellent thing either for particular persons, or the whole church. With this power Moses was endued, when he came to man's estate, and was moved to smite the Egyptian, who injured one of his brethren. Which power did not leave him, but remained still with him when he fled into Midian (see Exod. ii. 17). This power exerted itself in David after he was anointed, 1 Sam. x. 13, xvii. 34 (see More Nevoch. par. ii. cap. 45).

peace be unto thee, and peace be to thine helpers; for thy God helpeth thee. Then David received them, and made them captains of the band.

19 And there fell some of Manasseh to David, when he came with the Philistines against Saul to battle; but they helped them not: for the lords of the Philistines upon advisement sent him away, saying, He will fall to his master Saul to the jeopardy of our heads.

20 As he went to Ziklag, there fell to him of Manasseh, Adnah, and Jozabad, and Jediael, and Michael, and Jozabad, and Elihu, and Zilthai, captains of the thousands that were of Manasseh.

21 And they helped David against the band of the rovers: for they were all mighty men of valour, and were captains in the host.

22 For at that time day by day there came to David to help him, until it was a great host, like the host of God.

23 ¶ And these are the numbers of the bands that were ready armed to the war, and came to David to Hebron, to turn the kingdom of Saul to him, according to the word of the Lord.

24 The children of Judah that bare shield and spear were six thousand and eight hundred, ready armed to the war.

25 Of the children of Simeon, mighty men of valour for the war, seven thousand and one hundred.

26 Of the children of Levi four thousand and six hundred.

27 And Jehoiada was the leader of the Aaronites, and with him were three thousand and seven hundred;

28 And Zadok, a young man mighty of valour,

And he said, Thine are we, David, and on thy side.] He seems to have broken out into this speech with a sudden violence, being unable to hear with patience their fidelity questioned. For the words, and he said, are not in the Hebrew text; nor those are we: but only, thine David, &c. Which is a broken speech, expressing great passion.

Peace, peace be unto thee, and peace be to thine helpers:] He most affectionately wishes all happiness to him, and to all that came to his assistance: which implies a desire they might not prosper, if they did not now sincerely come to his help.

For thy God helpeth thee.] God they saw on his side, who, by his marvellous deliverances of him, had shown he had a special affection to him, and care of him: and therefore they believed would bless those that came to his help.

Then David received them, and made them captains of the band.] He preferred them to considerable commands in his army, when he came to be king: for it is not likely he would set them above those, who had served him all the time of his exile; they being but new comers.

Ver. 19. And there fell some of Manasseh to David, when he came with the Philistines against Saul to battle: but they helped them not:] It seems they offered their service to David, when he was going with the Philistines to help them against Saul, in the last battle which he fought. This shows a strange zeal for David, and abhorrence of Saul's enmity to him, that they should then join their forces with him, when he took part with the Philistines. But neither they, nor the rest of David's men were admitted to fight in that battle.

He will fall to his master Saul to the jeopardy of our heads.] First kill them, and then flee to Saul and make peace with him, at the cost of their heads (see 1 Sam. xxix. 3, &c.).

Ver. 20.] These came to him, in that nick of time, when he went from the Philistines, in his return to Ziklag. Which fell out very opportunely, for they, being valiant men, assisted him against that band of robbers, the Amalekites, who had burnt Ziklag, and carried captive their wives and children. He had indeed only six hundred men with him in that expedition, but these were of the number, who, as it follows, did him great service in recovery of his losses.

Ver. 21. They helped David against the band of the rovers:] They were not at all disheartened, when they found David in such exceeding great distress; but being most valiant captains, offered their service to him in the pursuit of his enemies.

And were captains in the host.] In their own country they had been commanders of a company of men; many of which, it is likely, they brought over to David with them: or, they followed after them, as is intimated in the following words.

Ver. 22. For at that time day by day there came to David to help him.] After the battle wherein Saul was slain, so many resorted to him every day, that his forces grew very considerable.

Until it was a great host, like the host of God.] A very formidable host. Which he compares to the host of heaven (the stars or the angels), because they were numerous, and many of them illustrious persons.

Ver. 23. And these are the numbers of the bands that were ready armed to the war, and came to David to Hebron.] The great resort to him at Ziklag, mentioned in the foregoing verse, made greater numbers flock to him, when by God's direction he went to Hebron: and they brought their arms with them, that they might be ready to fight for him.

To turn the kingdom of Saul to him.] They remembered what Samuel had said, and resolved to anoint him king (2 Sam. ii. 4).

Ver. 24.] In the place before named we read, "the men of Judah came" and anointed him king: which signifies the whole tribe consented to it. Therefore these six thousand and eight hundred men were only the first that came, and perhaps appeared in the name of the rest.

Ver. 25.] Though David was anointed king only over the tribe of Judah (one of Saul's posterity reigning over Israel), yet some of other tribes came and owned David for their king; particularly a great number of the tribe of Simeon, who were near neighbours to Judah.

Ver. 26.] Those came out of several tribes, into which they were dispersed; yet all agreed to show their affection to David.

Ver. 27. Jehoiada was the leader of the Aaronites.] He was not the high-priest, for Abiathar held that place; but he was chief, as Jarchi thinks, of one of the courses of the priests; and now the chief commander of those of the family of Aaron, who came to invite David to take the government upon him. He was a man of war also, and brought these priests armed with him: for, it is said, of all that came to David to Hebron (ver. 23), that they were ready armed for the war, in case any should oppose their design (see Selden, De Successione. ad Pontificatum, lib. i. cap. 3).

With him were three thousand and seven hundred:] Besides those of the Levites before named:

and of his father's house twenty and two captains.

29 And of the children of Benjamin, the kindred of Saul, three thousand: for hitherto the greatest part of them had kept the ward of the house of Saul.

30 And of the children of Ephraim twenty thousand and eight hundred, mighty men of valour, famous throughout the house of their fathers.

31 And of the half tribe of Manasseh eighteen thousand, which were expressed by name, to come and make David king.

32 And of the children of Issachar, which were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do; the heads of them were two hundred; and all their brethren were at their commandment.

33 Of Zebulun, such as went forth to battle,

Ver. 28.] It is likely, he is the same person who was made high-priest in Solomon's time, who was now very young, but had a great deal of courage; whom two-and-twenty of his family followed, who were commanders of so many companies.

Ver. 29. And of the children of Benjamin, the kindred of Saul, three thousand:] We read of several of this tribe, and of Saul's kindred, that came to David before this (ver. 1, 2, 16), but now a greater number came over to him; which shows his interest to be considerably grown among them.

For hitherto the greatest part of them had kept the ward of the house of Saul.] But still a multitude of them (as it is in the Hebrew) adhered to the house of Saul, and endeavoured to keep the crown in that family. And, as Solomon Jarchi, and D. Kimchi, and others, understand it, the three thousand before mentioned, being of Saul's kindred, were of that mind, looking upon his grandson as the lawful heir of the kingdom, who ought to succeed in it. But now they altered their opinion, and came to David.

Ver. 30.] This was so great a number, that by their defection from the house of Saul, it must needs be extremely weakened; especially since they were men of such great account in that tribe.

Ver. 31. And of the half tribe of Manasseh eighteen thousand.] He speaks of those on this side Jordan, for of those beyond it on the other side he speaks afterward (ver. 37).

Which were expressed by name, to come and make David king.] These were appointed to go in the name of the rest of their brethren, and assure David of their affection to him; being picked (as we speak) out of the whole tribe, for this purpose. And some think the names of these men were set down in the public register of the kings of Judah: from which this author transcribed it.

Ver. 32. And of the children of Issachar, which were men that had understanding of the times.] The Targum, and many of the Jews (particularly Maimonides in Rosch Hashanah), take this to signify their skill, in computing the beginning of their years, and months, and intercalations, that it might be certainly known when their feasts were to be celebrated. Others think they were great astronomers; whence the Hebrew doctors say, that the name of this tribe was engraven in the sapphire in the high-priest's breast-plate, and that their banner was of a sky colour, having the figures of the sun, moon, and stars, wrought in it, because of their skill in the motions of the heavenly bodies. Others take it to signify their skill in the weather, whereby they knew the proper season for sowing, planting, reaping, and navigation. Many such-like fancies there are, which seem impertinent expert in war, with all instruments of war, fifty thousand, which could keep rank: they were not of double heart.

34 And of Naphtali a thousand captains, and with them with shield and spear thirty and seven thousand.

35 And of the Danites expert in war twenty and eight thousand and six hundred.

36 And of Asher, such as went forth to battle, expert in war, forty thousand.

37 And on the other side of Jordan, of the Reubenites, and of the Gadites, and of the half tribe of Manasseh, with all manner of instruments of war for the battle, an hundred and twenty thousand.

38 All these men of war, that could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make to the present business, which required men of great abilities in political affairs, who could discern what was fit to be done in the various cases of human life, and particularly what was good for the commonwealth in all turns of affairs. Thus Solomon Jarchi himself: "They knew how to advise and give counsel, according to the nature and circumstances of all cases: which sort of men David stood in great need of at this time, to consult the best means to confirm him in his kingdom."

To know what Israel ought to do;] These words show they were men skilful in secular affairs; and now, I suppose, told the Israelites it was the proper time to think of David, and make him their king; after the Philistines had gained so great a victory over Saul, and destroyed his family. For none was so likely to quell the Philistines as he, who had so often beaten them.

The heads of them were two hundred; and all their brethren were at their commandment.] These two hundred were eminent persons among them; and were of such known wisdom and judgment, that they had all the rest of their tribe at their beck.

Ver. 33. Of Zebulun, such as went forth to battle, fifty thousand.] This is the greatest number of any tribe that went over to David; that is, gave him assurance of their readiness to assist him to make him king of Israel. For it is not likely, that so many as are here mentioned went to Hebron, as soon as David came thither.

Which could keep rank:] Men well disciplined; or, as some understand it, men that would stand their ground, and not flinch when they were assaulted by their enemies.

They were not of double heart.] But all sincerely affected to David, though there were so many of them. Thus some understand it; but others think, it rather relates to the foregoing words, that they had not a counterfeit courage, but would stand to it (as we speak) with a firm resolution, to die rather than stagger in their undertaking. For this is affirmed of them all, that they "came with a perfect heart unto David" (ver. 38), and therefore needs not to be said of these in particular, there being no reason to suspect their loyalty.

Ver. 34—37.] Here were so many thousands of valiant men, expert in war, reckoned up in the several tribes of Israel; That Saul could not well have been overthrown in battle by the Philistines, if God had not forsaken him, and the hearts of his people had not been alienated from him.

Ver. 38.] After the death of Ish-bosheth (see 2 Sam. v.) all Israel, communi concilio, "with one consent" (as Maimonides explains this phrase, "with David king over all Israel: and all the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king.

39 And there they were with David three days, eating and drinking: for their brethren had prepared for them.

40 Moreover they that were nigh them, even unto Issachar and Zebulun and Naphtali, brought bread on asses, and on camels, and on mules, and on oxen, and meat, meal, and cakes of figs, and bunches of raisins, and wine, and oil, and oxen, and sheep abundantly: for there was joy in Israel.

one heart," More Nevochim, par. i. cap. 39), came and joined with their brethren, who were gone over to him. And they were such a number, men of such undaunted spirits and expert in war, who crowded in to him, that the like is not to be found in any history. For as Herodotus saith in his Polyhymnia, in the army of Xerxes there were πολλοὶ μὲν ἄνθρωποι, ὀλίγοι δὲ ἄνδρες, "a world of people, but few men;" that is, men of courage and conduct; with which David's army so abounded, that every one of this vast number seems to have been fit to command in an army.

Ver. 39. And there they were with David three days eating and drinking: The famous historian Dion (as Victorinus Strigelius here observes) saith he never saw a more splendid and pompous show than that was, when the emperor Severus entered Rome. But here was a far more noble feast, which lasted three days, for three hundred forty-eight thousand and eight hundred brave men.

For their brethren had prepared for them. They who were before actually gone over to David, and others about Hebron, hearing of such a great concourse of people, had made a preparation for their entertainment.

Ver. 40. Moreover they that were nigh them, even unto Issachar and Zebulun and Naphtali, All the neighbouring countries brought in provisions for those who dwelt more remote: their common concerns begetting great love and kindness (as there ought always to be, especially on such occasions) for their brethren, though never so distant from them.

Brought bread on asses, and on camels, and on mules, and on oxen, Whom they employed, in that country, in carrying burdens; for horses were very scarce among them. So Bochart observes, that they did not only ride upon mules, but some of them were ἄρσενες, "employed in carrying burdens," as these were. Others were ζεύγεται, "yoked to draw chariots," (lib. ii. Hieroz. par. i. cap. 19). The same he observes of oxen, that though they seem made rather for the plough, yet they made them serve for the other purpose also, of bearing burdens.

And meat, meal, and cakes of figs. All sort of provisions for a great feast.

For there was joy in Israel. Their hearts were enlarged with joy to see an end of their division, by their union under such a king; as they might reasonably hope would procure great happiness to them.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 David fetcheth the ark with great solemnity from Kirjath-jearim. 9 Uzza being smitten, the ark is left at the house of Obed-edom.

1 AND David consulted with the captains of thousands and hundreds, and with every leader.

2 And David said unto all the congregation of Israel, If it seem good unto you, and that it be of the LORD our God, let us send abroad unto our brethren every where, that are left in all the land of Israel, and with them also to the priests and Levites which are in their cities and suburbs, that they may gather themselves unto us:

3 And let us bring again the ark of our God to us: for we inquired not at it in the days of Saul.

4 And all the congregation said that they would do so: for the thing was right in the eyes of all the people.

CHAP. XIII.

Ver. 1.] With all the principal persons in authority who had any command over others. For it is a dangerous thing for a prince, especially in the beginning of his reign, to rely wholly upon himself alone, and not advise with others.

Ver. 2. David said unto all the congregation Who were represented by those great men, whom he had called together for their advice.

If it seem good unto you, and that it be of the Lord our God Whom, I suppose, he intended to consult, as well as them.

Let us send abroad unto our brethren every where, that are left Who were not there present.

And with them also to the priests and Levites Whose assistance was very necessary in the sacred work which he intended.

Ver. 3. Let us bring again the ark of our God to us: In the book of Samuel this is said to have been done after that which here follows in the next chapter, concerning Hiram and David's wars with the Philistines; and so it was. Only David (as became a good king, whose first care is about religion) took advice with the elders of the people, as soon as he came to the crown, concerning the bringing up the ark of God. Which was put in execution afterward, when they had gone to their several countries, and spoken with the people about it; and a time was appointed for their meeting to do it. In the mean time Hiram sent his ambassadors to him, and the Philistines came twice to disturb him, and were beaten by him; and then all the people met in a vast number (it is probable at some solemn festival) to bring the ark to its place.

For we inquired not at it in the days of Saul. They were not solicitous in his days to find a fit place for the residence of the ark of God, where they might conveniently attend upon his worship and service. For they were hindered by perpetual wars, and contented themselves with going to Gibeon, where the tabernacle was; though without the presence of God in it. But it is probable, that Saul, after David fled from him, and he was haunted by that evil spirit, that often came upon him, grew so profane that he was not concerned about religion. So the words are in the Hebrew, "We inquired not of it, or about it."

Ver. 4.] They were convinced of their negligence,

5 So David gathered all Israel together, from Shihor of Egypt even unto the entering of Hemath, to bring the ark of God from Kirjath-jearim.

6 And David went up, and all Israel, to Baalah, that is, to Kirjath-jearim, which belonged to Judah, to bring up thence the ark of God the LORD, that dwelleth between the cherubims, whose name is called on it.

7 And they carried the ark of God in a new cart out of the house of Abinadab: and Uzza and Ahio drave the cart.

8 And David and all Israel played before God with all their might, and with singing, and with harps, and with psalteries, and with timbrels, and with cymbals, and with trumpets.

9 ¶ And when they came unto the threshing-floor of Chidon, Uzza put forth his hand to hold the ark; for the oxen stumbled.

10 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Uzza, and he smote him, because he put his hand to the ark: and there he died before God.

11 And David was displeased, because the LORD had made a breach upon Uzza: wherefore that place is called Perez-uzza to this day.

12 And David was afraid of God that day, saying, How shall I bring the ark of God home to me?

13 So David brought not the ark home to himself to the city of David, but carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom the Gittite.

14 And the ark of God remained with the family of Obed-edom in his house three months. And the LORD blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that he had.

and piously disposed to comply with the king's desire.

Ver. 5. So David gathered all Israel together,] Some chosen persons out of all the tribes, with their attendants (who represented all the rest): which were thirty thousand (2 Sam. vi. 1).

From Shihor of Egypt even to the entering of Hemath,] The former of these, Shihor, was the southern bounds, as Hemath was the northern of the land of Canaan. And by Sihor (called in other places the river of Egypt) the Targum, and most of the Jews, even Abarbanel himself, understand the river Nile. But there is great reason to take it for a little branch of that river, as I have shown upon Gen. xv. 18, and see upon Numb. xxxiv. 5, Josh. xiii. 3.

To bring the ark of God from Kirjath-jearim.] Where it had been a long time, ever since it returned out of the land of the Philistines (see 1 Sam. vi. ult. vii. 1).

Ver. 6.] See 2 Sam. vi. 1.

Ver. 7.] They had so long been without it, that they had forgot how it ought to be carried (see 2 Sam. vi. 3.).

Ver. 8.] See there, ver. 5.

Ver. 9—11.] All this hath been explained in the forenamed place, ver. 6—8.

Ver. 12.] See there, ver. 9. It is an old observation, that pœna ad unum, metus ad plures pervenit; "punishment falls upon one, the fear of it falls upon all:" which justifies the severity of God, as not contrary to his mercy, in such cases.

Ver. 13.] See there also, ver. 10.

Ver. 14.] See there ver. 11. The Targum here pretends to give us an account how God blessed this family, by increasing it prodigiously with a numerous issue; of which the Jews were so desirous, that they could think of no greater blessing. For his wife and eight daughters (says that paraphrast), the wives of his sons, brought each of them at one birth eight sons: so that fathers and sons made up fourscore and one. But though history acquaints us with wondrous births of many children at a time, yet there is no ground to believe this of so many in one family.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Hiram's kindness to David. 2 David's felicity in people, wives, and children. 8 His two victories against the Philistines.

1 Now Hiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, and timber of cedars, with masons and carpenters, to build him an house.

2 And David perceived that the LORD had confirmed him king over Israel, for his kingdom was lifted up on high, because of his people Israel.

3 ¶ And David took more wives at Jerusalem: and David begat more sons and daughters.

4 Now these are the names of his children which he had in Jerusalem; Shammua, and Shobab, Nathan, and Solomon,

5 And Ibhar, and Elishua, and Elpalet,

6 And Nogah, and Nepheg, and Japhia,

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1, 2.] See both these verses explained in 2 Sam. v. 11, 12, where the same thing is related, almost in the same words.

Ver. 3.] After he came from Hebron, and had possessed himself of Jerusalem, he took more wives and concubines also, as we read 2 Sam. v. 13. But they are all here called wives, for so they were: though not principal wives (as Pellicanus notes); that is, not such as governed the family, for that the concubines did not.

Ver. 4—7.] In 2 Sam. v. 14—16, there are but eleven mentioned, whereas here are thirteen; of which I gave some account in that place. To which I shall here add, that some of them died in their childhood, which are reckoned here, but not in the other place. For here are two Eliphalets, the first of which dying young, the last was so called to preserve his memory. So Kimchi writes very judiciously; perhaps neither the first Eliphalet, nor Nogah, are mentioned in the book of Samuel, because they were not then living; but they are recorded here, because the author of this book proposed to himself to give an account of all David's sons born at Jerusalem, as saith ver. 4. As for the difference between Elpalet, ver. 5, and Eliphalet in this verse, Simeon De Muis hath well observed, it ought not to make any 7 And Elishama, and Beeliada, and Eliphalet.

8 ¶ And when the Philistines heard that David was anointed king over all Israel, all the Philistines went up to seek David. And David heard of it, and went out against them.

9 And the Philistines came and spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim.

10 And David inquired of God, saying, Shall I go up against the Philistines? and wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And the LORD said unto him, Go up; for I will deliver them into thine hand.

11 So they came up to Baal-perazim; and David smote them there. Then David said, God hath broken in upon mine enemies by mine hand like the breaking forth of waters: therefore they called the name of that place Baal-perazim.

12 And when they had left their gods there,

David gave a commandment, and they were burned with fire.

13 And the Philistines yet again spread themselves abroad in the valley.

14 Therefore David inquired again of God; and God said unto him, Go not up after them; turn away from them, and come upon them over against the mulberry trees.

15 And it shall be, when thou shalt hear a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt go out to battle: for God is gone forth before thee to smite the host of the Philistines.

16 David therefore did as God commanded him: and they smote the host of the Philistines from Gibeon even to Gazer.

17 And the fame of David went out into all lands; and the LORD brought the fear of him upon all nations.

one think there is an error either here or in any other place: for that king of France who is commonly called Clodoveus, is called by Cassiodore Luduinus, Ludovicus, and, in Hincmar, Hludovicus: such differences there are in the pronunciations of the same name, the examples of which are infinite, as he speaks in his Varia Sacra.

Ver. 8.] See 2 Sam. v. 17.

Ver. 9.] This phrase spread themselves, seems to import that they were very numerous, and assured themselves of victory (see there, ver. 18).

Ver. 10, 11.] See these verses explained in 2 Sam. v. 19, 20.

Ver. 12.] No wonder they could not preserve such gods as could not preserve them. Which David would not honour, as they had done the ark when they took it, but burnt them (see there, ver. 21).

Ver. 16.] See there, 2 Sam. v. 22—25.

Ver. 17.] Upon all those upon whom the fame of him came; that is, all the neighbouring countries.

CHAPTER XV.

1 David, having prepared a place for the ark, ordereth the priests and Levites to bring it from Obed-edom. 25 He performeth the solemnity thereof with great joy. 29 Michal despiseth him.

1 AND David made him houses in the city of David, and prepared a place for the ark of God, and pitched for it a tent.

2 Then David said, None ought to carry the ark of God but the Levites; for them hath the LORD chosen to carry the ark of God, and to minister unto him for ever.

3 And David gathered all Israel together to Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the LORD unto his place, which he had prepared for it.

4 And David assembled the children of Aaron, and the Levites:

5 Of the sons of Kohath: Uriel the chief, and his brethren an hundred and twenty:

6 Of the sons of Merari: Asaiah the chief, and his brethren two hundred and twenty:

7 Of the sons of Gershon: Joel the chief, and his brethren an hundred and thirty:

8 Of the sons of Elizaphan: Shemaiah the chief, and his brethren two hundred:

9 Of the sons of Hebron: Eliel the chief and his brethren fourscore:

10 Of the sons of Uzziel: Amminadab the chief, and his brethren an hundred and twelve.

11 And David called for Zadok and Abiathar the priests, and for the Levites, for Uriel, Asaiah, and Joel, Shemaiah, and Eliel, and Amminadab;

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1. David made him houses] He had need of many houses, because he had many wives and children as we read before: who could not all well live in one house, unless we suppose it to be very large, and to contain many apartments, which may be called houses.

And prepared a place for the ark of God, and pitched for it a tent.] As we read in 2 Sam. vi. 17. For he did not think fit to bring the tabernacle from Gibeon, because he intended shortly to build a house for the ark. Or, as Conradus Pellicanus thinks, the tabernacle of Moses, having been long neglected, was grown ruinous: and he thought it better to prepare a new tabernacle than repair the old.

Ver. 2.] The former miscarriage when they brought up the ark from Kirjath-jearim, had taught him to use it with greater reverence, according to the prescription of the law: which ordered the Levites to carry it upon their shoulders (see Numb. vi. 15; vii. 9).

Ver. 3.] See 2 Sam. vi. 15.

Ver. 4.] Whom he ordered should be sent for before, when he first attempted to bring up the ark, but we do not read that they came (ch. xiii. 2, 5), therefore now he actually got them together.

Ver. 5.] The sons of Kohath are mentioned in Ex. vi. 17, 18, and Uriel is none of them: therefore he was his grandson, who proved so famous, that his descendants are reckoned in the first place.

Ver. 8.] He was the son of Uzziel, the youngest son of Kohath (see Exod. vi. 18, 23; Numb. iv. 3).

Ver. 10.] These two last named were the sons of Kohath.

12 And said unto them, Ye are the chief of the fathers of the Levites: sanctify yourselves, both ye and your brethren, that ye may bring up the ark of the LORD God of Israel unto the place that I have prepared for it.

13 For because ye did it not at the first, the LORD our God made a breach upon us, for that we sought him not after the due order.

14 So the priests and the Levites sanctified themselves to bring up the ark of the LORD God of Israel.

15 And the children of the Levites bare the ark of God upon their shoulders with the staves thereon, as Moses commanded according to the word of the LORD.

16 And David spake to the chief of the Levites to appoint their brethren to be the singers with instruments of musick, psalteries, and harps and cymbals, sounding, by lifting up the voice with joy.

17 So the Levites appointed Heman the son of Joel; and of his brethren, Asaph the son of Berechiah; and of the sons of Merari their brethren, Ethan the son of Kushaiah;

18 And with them their brethren of the second degree, Zechariah, Ben, and Jaaziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, Eliab, and Benaiiah, and Maaseiah, and Mattithiah, and Elipheleh, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, the porters.

19 So the singers, Heman, Asaph, and Ethan, were appointed to sound with cymbals of brass;

20 And Zechariah, and Aziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, and Eliab, and Maa-

Ver. 11. David called for Zadok and Abiathar] I have observed here before, that Zadok was in the greatest favour with David: and therefore is mentioned first, though Abiathar was the high-priest, and Zadok only the second priest (see upon 2 Sam. xv. 27, 29).

For Uriel, &c.] The six persons mentioned in the foregoing verses.

Ver. 12.] This sanctification was by washing their bodies and garments, abstaining from their wives, and other purifications (see Exod. xix. 10, 15).

Ver. 13. For because ye did it not at the first, the LORD our God made a breach upon us.] It seems the priests and Levites were not well acquainted with the law: or, the ark having been very long in one place, they had forgot how it ought to be removed: and did not sanctify themselves and seriously consider their duty. At least, they that were then present (for the chief were not then assembled, as I said ver. 4), were ignorant, or careless.

For that we sought him not after the due order.] This good king doth not wholly excuse himself, and lay all the blame on them: but put himself into the number of those who were negligent in this matter. For it was his duty as well as theirs to look into the law; and pray to God for his direction. There were four faults committed: First, in putting the ark into the cart, which should have been carried by the Levites on their shoulders. Secondly, the Levites were not permitted to touch the ark, as Uzza did. Thirdly, he was no Levite, and therefore more grievously offended (Num. xvi. 28). Lastly, he wanted faith, that God would take care of the ark. This last David could not help: but the first three he might have prevented.

Ver. 14.] From this place, and some others (as Josh. iii. 3), Buxtorf truly infers, I think, that all the tribe of Levi had a right to carry the ark, the priests as well as the others. But while they were in the wilderness, they that were bare Levites commonly did it, because the priests were few, and had other employment. But the priests, being Levites, might do it when they pleased, or were appointed to it (see Histor. Arcæ. cap. 8, sect. 2).

Ver. 15.] The children of Kohath had this peculiar privilege: who are the Levites here mentioned (Num. iv. 4).

Ver. 16. David spake to the chief of the Levites] To those six persons before mentioned, ver. 5, 6, &c.

To appoint their brethren to be the singers with instruments, &c.] They that were chief among them knew who could sing well, and play upon such instruments as are here mentioned: the best of which were to be ordered to perform this service.

Sounding, by lifting up the voice with joy.] Singing so loud that all might hear, and have their hearts lifted with joy in God (see 2 Chron. xx. 19). Here it may be observed, that though David did not build the temple, yet he ordered how the service of God should be performed there, in a more solemn manner than it had been hitherto, with singing and musical instruments. Which began now when the ark was brought to the place prepared for it; and was ordered afterward to be constantly performed every day (ch. xvi. 4, 42). And indeed there was scarce any solemn service performed to their gods, either by Greeks or barbarians, without both vocal and instrumental music, so the illustrious Ezekiel Spanhemius hath observed out of Strabo, lib. x. p. 467. See him upon Callimachus's hymn to Diana, ver. 245, where he notes out of Plutarch, that their musical instruments were three (as they were here); and that music was thought to be a thing so heavenly, that their gods were accounted the inventors of the principal instruments of it (see upon ver. 295). Certain it is that the Greeks were not the inventors of them, but they had them out of the east, as he shows upon ver. 249. Which appears by the names of some of them, which are plainly extant in the Bible, as Bochartus hath observed.

Ver. 17.] These three were the principal, who were appointed to govern the rest.

Ver. 18. Zechariah, Ben, and Jaaziel.] The LXX. take Ben for an appellative, and join it with the next, as if he had said, "Zechariah the son of Jaaziel." But the Jews take it for a proper name of one of the singers (as we do), and David Kimchi thinks this is the person to whom David directed the ninth psalm, to be sung by him upon the occasion of the death of Saul: for it is said to be laben, which he understands to be to Ben the singer.

And Shemiramoth, &c. the porters.] This was the office of these of the second degree; who were also, when their attendance was over, instructed in music, and assisted in it when they were not in the other employment.

Ver. 20. And Zechariah, &c.] Here is no mention made of Ben; which some imagine is, because, before they came to execute their office, he fell sick, or died: and Azaziah, who was not mentioned before, came in his room: but was not so eminent as he, and therefore put in the last place.

With psalteries on Alamoth;] Or, "with Alamoth." Which being joined with psalteries, is thought by some to be a musical instrument. But Strigelius, from the derivation of the word, thinks that Alamoth seiah, and Benaiah, with psalteries on Alamoth;

21 And Mattithiah, and Elipheh, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, and Azaziah, with harps on the Sheminith to excel.

22 And Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, was for song; he instructed about the song, because he was skilful.

23 And Berechiah and Elkanah, were door-keepers for the ark.

24 And Shebaniah, and Jehoshaphat, and Nethaneel, and Amasai, and Zechariah, and Benaiah, and Eliezer, the priests, did blow with the trumpets before the ark of God; and Obed-edom and Jehiah were doorkeepers for the ark.

25 ¶ So David, and the elders of Israel, and the captains over thousands, went to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of the house of Obed-edom with joy.

signifies that these men sung the bass, as those in the next verse did the treble.

Ver. 21. Sheminith] Some take sheminith to signify a harp with eight strings.

To excel.] The Hebrew word lenatzach, coming from natzach, "to overcome," is thought by Strigelius to signify a voice higher than all the rest.

Ver. 22. Chenaniah, chief of the Levites.] A principal person among them, but not before mentioned: so that it doth not appear of what family he was.

Was for song:] Or, as it is translated in the margin, "was for carriage;" that is, for managing of the voice. He taught them how to sing, as the following words tell us, "he instructed about the song, because he was skilful." Being a great artist in singing, he was the precentor: for, ver. 27, he is called "master of the song." Which Lud. Capellus thinks signifies as much as that he guided them to keep time by the elevation of his hand, or of a wand. So the LXX. ἀρχων τῶν ᾠδῶν, who is properly called "the precentor" among us: who among the ancient Sali was called vates; he being the prime singer while they were dancing; as Gutberletius observes in his book De Saliis, cap. 11.

Ver. 23.] Their office at present was to guard the ark as it passed along, that none might touch it.

Ver. 24. The priests did blow with the trumpets before the ark] For this was the office of the priests, as we read in Numb. x., the beginning.

Obed-edom and Jehiah were door-keepers] When it was settled at Jerusalem, they kept the door of the tent prepared for it, that none might approach it but the high-priest at proper seasons.

Ver. 25.] With music and dancing (see 2 Sam. vi. 5, 12, 15).

Ver. 26.] Some understand this of the strength that God gave them to carry the ark without fainting, though they went up a steep hill, to settle it in the place where it was to rest. But it is not likely God imposed such great burdens on them in his service, that it was hard to bear them, without an extraordinary assistance. I think the meaning rather is, that he preserved them from committing any error, so that 26 And it came to pass, when God helped the Levites that bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, that they offered seven bullocks and seven rams.

27 And David was clothed with a robe of fine linen, and all the Levites that bare the ark, and the singers, and Chenaniah the master of the song with the singers: David also had upon him an ephod of linen.

28 Thus all Israel brought up the ark of the covenant of the LORD with shouting, and with sound of the cornet, and with trumpets, and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, as the ark of the covenant of the LORD came to the city of David, that Michal the daughter of Saul looking out at a window saw king David dancing and playing: and she despised him in her heart.

they carried it without offence. Or, as Junius takes it, God gave them ease, and others were ordered to take their place, when they had gone some part of the way. For, though it was not a heavy burden, yet they could not but proceed with fear and trembling, lest they should incur God's displeasure, as Uzzah did. Then they, that is, the Levites, offered upon their own account the sacrifices here mentioned; besides those which the king offered, as we read 2 Sam. vi. 13. And seven bullocks, and as many rams, being offered, some think, that every time the ark rested, for the Levites to rest themselves, a bullock was offered with a ram: which was seven times between the house of Obed-edom and the city of David.

Ver. 27. David was clothed with a robe of fine linen.] Pure white garments were proper (as Grocius here notes) in divine ministrations. And Kimchi thinks, that the Levites, who bare the ark, and the singers, being thus clothed upon this solemn occasion, David being musical, and bearing his part among them, chose to appear in the very same habit. Just, saith he, as, among Christians, their kings and princes, when they go in procession with the clergy, are clothed like them. And by this, perhaps, may be understood what Michal meant when she found fault with David for uncovering himself: which does not signify that he appeared naked, but put off his royal robes, and put on those that did not belong to him. But it must be confessed, that fine linen was the apparel of kings and great men.

All the Levites—with the singers:] These were all clothed in fine linen.

An ephod of linen.] Which was an honorary vestment allowed to those who were not Levites, as I have shewn upon 1 Sam. ii. 18 (see my notes there, and upon 2 Sam. vi. 14).

Ver. 28.] See upon 2 Sam. vi. 15.

Ver. 29.) And expressed as much, when he came to his house, in words of great contempt (see 2 Sam. vi. 16, 20). She was a proud woman, and it is likely had no great sense of religion, which in the reign of Saul (as we read before, xiii. 3), was much neglected.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 David's festival sacrifice. 4 He ordereth a choir to sing thanksgiving. 7 A psalm of thanksgiving. 37 He appointeth ministers, porters, priests, and musicians, to attend continually on the ark.

1 So they brought the ark of God, and set it in the midst of the tent that David had pitched for it: and they offered burnt sacrifices and peace offerings before God.

2 And when David had made an end of offering the burnt offerings and the peace offerings, he blessed the people in the name of the LORD.

3 And he dealt to every one of Israel, both man and woman, to every one a loaf of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine.

4 ¶ And he appointed certain of the Levites to minister before the ark of the LORD, and to record, and to thank and praise the LORD God of Israel:

5 Asaph the chief, and next to him Zechariah, Jeiel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Mattithiah, and Eliab, and Benaiah, and Obed-edom: and Jeiel with psalteries and with harps; but Asaph made a sound with cymbals;

6 Benaiah also and Jahaziel the priests with trumpets continually before the ark of the covenant of God.

7 ¶ Then on that day David delivered first this psalm to thank the LORD into the hand of Asaph and his brethren.

8 Give thanks unto the LORD, call upon his name, make known his deeds among the people.

9 Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him, talk ye of all his wondrous works.

10 Glory ye in his holy name: let the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.

11 Seek the LORD and his strength, seek his face continually.

12 Remember his marvellous works that he hath done, his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth;

13 O ye seed of Israel his servant, ye children of Jacob, his chosen ones.

CHAP. XVI.

Ver. 2. In the name of the Lord.] The Targum translates it, "in the name of the Word of the Lord." Which shows that interpreter took the Word to be Jehovah.

Ver. 3.] These three verses have been explained upon 2 Sam. vi. 17—19 (see there).

Ver. 4. He appointed—Levites.] In their courses.

To record, and thank and praise the Lord] To declare unto the people the wonderful works God had done for Israel (for that is to record), and to give him thanks, and to extol his almighty goodness, and all his glorious perfections. As none could sacrifice but the priests of the seed of Aaron; so none could minister in the temple but the Levites: which was unalterably established by the law of God. But it was in the power of their king to assign the priests or Levites several functions in the service of God, as Grotius observes from this place. They were appointed to be singers, with instruments of music, by the prophets, as we are told in 2 Chron. xxix. 25, and David, as a prophet, not as a king, appointed this divine service, xxiii. 2. But the application of persons to their several places is every where ascribed to king David, and afterward to Solomon; and Jehoshaphat, who was no prophet, ordered the priests and Levites to go and teach the people. So David here appointed who should sing, who should be porters, and discharge other duties (see De Imper. Sum. Protest. circa Sacra, cap. 10, p. 270, edit. Paris).

Ver. 5. Asaph the chief.] Some of whose divine composes we have in the book of Psalms.

But Asaph made a sound with cymbals;] By whom all the rest were directed to take their several parts in this service.

Ver. 6.] At the morning and evening service these priests attended with trumpets, as the Levites did with other musical instruments.

Ver. 7. Then on that day David delivered first this psalm] Or, as it may be plainly translated out of the Hebrew, "This David appointed (or ordained) in the first place at that time;" viz. that God should be praised by Asaph and his colleagues in the manner following. Which solemn service began on the day when he brought up the ark, and ever after was continued.

To thank the Lord] To give him thanks (as Conradus Pellicanus well glosses) for all his benefits he had bestowed on his people Israel, and which he intended to bestow upon all the people of this world by his son Christ.

Ver. 8.] Out of Ps. xvi. and cv. which, I suppose, David had made before this time, he now composed one hymn to be daily used in the divine service: wherein the divine perfections are admirably set forth, that the people might be excited to his fear, love, and obedience. I have sufficiently explained the sense of every verse in my paraphrase upon the Psalms: but shall here touch upon them again, out of that good and truly great man now mentioned, who thus glosses upon this verse: O ye ministers and worshippers of the Most High, celebrate with heart and voice all the benefits you have received from him the fountain of all good; and if you suffer any evil, or want any thing, pray to him for relief; and being taught by happy experience how good he is, proclaim to all the world, and teach them that all things depend upon his pleasure and order.

Ver. 9.] Praise him with heart and voice: declare his wonderful works, wherein he hath testified his omnipotence, and his wisdom to the faithful.

Ver. 10.] Look upon this as your highest happiness, and make your boast of it, that he is your God: and let their heart rejoice who seek his favour as their chiefest good.

Ver. 11.] Being sensible of your own weakness, depend upon his power for help: and seek his clemency and mercy with humble prayer on all occasions. The ark is called God's strength in other places, 2 Chron. vi. 41, Ps. lxxviii. 61, and therefore here they are exhorted to fall down before it and implore his mercy.

Ver. 12. Remember his marvellous works that he hath done.] For the preservation of his people, and the punishment of their enemies.

His wonders and the judgments of his mouth;] He would have them reflect upon the plagues of Egypt, which came upon them in a wonderful manner, at the command of Moses. Or, perhaps, he means by 14 He is the Lord our God; his judgments are in all the earth.

15 Be ye mindful always of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations;

16 Even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac;

17 And hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant,

18 Saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance;

19 When ye were but few, even a few, and strangers in it.

20 And when they went from nation to nation, and from one kingdom to another people;

21 He suffered no man to do them wrong: yea, he reproveth kings for their sakes, 22 Saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

judgments the laws he gave them at Mount Sinai (Exod xxi. 1.)

Ver. 13.] This is your duty, as you are the offspring of a most faithful servant of his: O ye posterity of Jacob, whom God hath chosen for his people; not for your merits, but out of his free love to one that loved him.

Ver. 14.] The great Lord of all things, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is our God: who rules the whole world by his providence.

Ver. 15.] Never forget his most gracious covenant, wherein he promises to be ever propitious to you, if you keep his law.

Ver. 16.] This covenant he made with your fathers, and confirmed it with an oath, that it should never fail.

Ver. 17.] And what he first promised to Abraham, and confirmed to Isaac by a solemn oath, he established to Jacob by an inviolable law, to endure for ever (see Gen. xvii. 1, 2, xxii. 16, &c. xvi. 3, xviii. 13.)

Ver. 18.] He gave him an undoubted title to that good land; and afterward put his posterity into actual possession of it.

Ver. 19.] Remember your former condition, when you were the smallest of all nations, poor and little esteemed; were strangers in the land, which now you enjoy.

Ver. 20.] When you wandered up and down, from one country to another: having no settled dwelling-place.

Ver. 21. He suffered no man to do them wrong.] Though they were in danger to be oppressed by those who had not the fear of God before their eyes, yet they were safe every where under the divine protection.

Yea, he reproveth kings for their sakes.] When great princes did but attempt to offer any violence to them, he presently made them feel his hand against them.

In Seder Olam Rabba they say, thus far they sung in the morning.

Ver. 22.] So that they durst not so much as touch them, but used them as if they had been kings and lords of the land. So precious were they in his eyes, as if to do them the least harm had been the crime of treason against the divine majesty.

Grotius thinks they are called God's anointed, because they had in their family ius regium; and therefore Nicolaus Damascenus and Justin call them 23 Sing unto the LORD, all the earth; show forth from day to day his salvation.

24 Declare his glory among the heathen; his marvellous works among all nations.

25 For great is the LORD, and greatly to be praised: he also is to be feared above all gods.

26 For all the gods of the people are idols: but the LORD made the heavens.

27 Glory and honour are in his presence; strength and gladness are in his place.

28 Give unto the LORD, ye kindreds of the people, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

29 Give unto the LORD the glory due unto his name; bring an offering, and come before him: worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness.

30 Fear before him, all the earth: the world also shall be stable, that it be not moved.

31 Let the heavens be glad, and let the earth rejoice: and let men say among the nations, The LORD reigneth.

kings. Kimchi more plainly translates the word "anointed, my great men," or princes:" for Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were honoured by kings, Abimelech and Pharaoh, as if they had been anointed kings. Whence the children of Heth say to Abraham, thou art a prince of God, that is, a great prince, in the midst of us (Gen. xxiii. 6.) St. Jerome thinks, that all the Israelites when they came out of Egypt were called God's anointed, because they were under his special protection, by the cloud that covered them; as Cyrus was called his anointed, because he was chosen by him to a special office, to be the deliverer of his people, and restore them to their own land.

Ver. 23.] Let not only the Israelites praise him, but all the people of the earth acknowledge their great Creator; proclaim his promised salvation by Christ, without intermission.

Here began the song between the two evenings (if we may believe the Jews in Seder Olam Rabba) unto those words (ver. 36,) "Let all the people say, Amen."

Ver. 24.] Let them spread his fame among all nations, and celebrate every where his astonishing works.

Ver. 25.] He is the great Creator of all things, and the donor of all good, who therefore cannot be sufficiently magnified and praised: and none ought to share with him in his worship and service.

Ver. 26.] For all the gods which the heathen worship are empty names, who can do nothing: it is the Lord God of Israel who made the sun, moon, and stars (which the gentiles worship,) and therefore only is to be adored.

Ver. 27.] To him only we ought to ascribe glory, honour and power: in him alone we ought to confide, to him we ought to cleave, and in his clemency and favour perpetually rejoice.

Ver. 28.] Let not his worship be confined to the people of Israel, but let all sorts of people, from one end of the world to the other, acknowledge him to be the great God, who governs the whole world.

Ver. 29.] Acknowledge all his glorious attributes, wherein he excels all beings: offer unto him the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving; prostrate yourselves before him in the humblest manner, and adore his most holy and gracious majesty.

Ver. 30. Fear before him, all the earth.] Let all the inhabitants of the earth tremble before him, and humble themselves unto him, 32 Let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof: let the fields rejoice, and all that is therein.

33 Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the Lord, because he cometh to judge the earth.

34 O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.

35 And say ye, Save us, O God of our salvation, and gather us together, and deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name, and glory in thy praise.

36 Blessed be the Lord God of Israel for ever and ever. And all the people said, Amen, and praised the Lord.

37 ¶ So he left there before the ark of the covenant of the Lord Asaph and his brethren, to minister before the ark continually, as every day's work required:

The world also shall be stable, that it be not moved.] For if they humbly submit themselves to his gospel, and implore his grace, he will amend the world, and confirm them in all that is good; and not suffer so many nations to wander in such labyrinths of error.

Ver. 31.] Let all the inhabitants in heaven and earth be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will not only be known in Judea, but most gloriously reign in all nations.

Ver. 32.] By the fulness of it, is meant its swelling to the very top of the banks, as Bochartus observes.

Ver. 33.] These two verses he thus paraphrases: "Let the vast sea, and all that live in the waters triumph; let the dry land, and all the living creatures therein exult for joy: let the trees, and all the fruit that grows on them, sing to the Lord for his benefits." For the Creator of all comes to restore mankind, and resume them into his favour: for whom all these things acknowledge they were created.

Ver. 34.] Whatsoever we are or can do, we owe it to his divine bounty: unto whom we ought to give perpetual thanks, and hope in his mercy for ever.

Ver. 35.] Let all, both Jews and gentiles, say, Save us, O Lord our God, most just, merciful, and powerful; and gather those who now are distant from, and opposite to one another, by variance and hatred, into the unity of faith and charity: that all nations may unanimously give thanks unto thee, and glory in this, that they are always praising thee.

Some have imagined that Ezra added these words after they came out of captivity: but David rather uttered them by the spirit of prophecy, concerning the happy union of Jews and gentiles.

Ver. 36. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel for ever and ever.] Unto the great Creator and Sovereign of the world, God most blessed for ever, let all men every where never cease to give blessing and praise.

And all the people said, Amen, and praised the Lord.] At the end of this hymn (the last two verses of which are the conclusion of Ps. evi. 47, 48) all the people expressed their desire that God might be for ever praised in this manner, by saying, Amen. From whence Vitringa observes the antiquity of this sacred rite of saying Amen at the conclusion of all our prayers and benedictions: which was continued after the captivity, as we find Neh. viii. 6. And he notes three rules which the Jewish doctors give concerning the pronunciation of this word by the people; first, that it be not pronounced too hastily and swiftly, but with a grave and distinct voice: and then, not louder than the tone of him that blessed: and lastly, it was to be expressed in faith; with a certain persuasion, that 38 And Obed-edom, with their brethren, three score and eight: Obed-edom also the son of Jeduthun and Hosah to be porters:

39 And Zadok the priest, and his brethren the priests, before the tabernacle of the Lord in the high place that was at Gibeon.

40 To offer burnt offerings unto the Lord upon the altar of the burnt offering continually morning and evening, and to do according to all that is written in the law of the Lord, which he commanded Israel;

41 And with them Heman and Jeduthun, and the rest that were chosen, who were expressed by name, to give thanks to the Lord, because his mercy endureth for ever;

42 And with them Heman and Jeduthun with trumpets and cymbals for those that should make a sound, and with musical instruments

God would bless them and bear their prayers (De Synag. Veteri, lib. iii. par. ii. cap. 18.)

Ver. 37.] To sing hymns proper to the season.

Ver. 38. Obed-edom with their brethren.] He was one of the principal singers under Asaph (ver. 5.)

Obed-edom also the son of Jeduthun.] This is another Obed-edom: who is joined with Jehiah as door-keeper for the ark, xv. 24. But Jehiah, I suppose, was also called Hosah.

Ver. 39. Zadok the priest.] He was the second priest, as I have often noted, deputy to the high-priest.

In the high place that was in Gibeon.] As Asaph and his brethren ministered at Jerusalem; so others were appointed to minister at Gibeon: where the tabernacle of Moses was, and the altar of burnt-offering, ever since the slaughter of the priests by Saul (see 2 Chron. i. 3.) Here the ordinary worship of God was performed, and therefore the priests attended at this place to offer sacrifice, which the Levites could not do (ver. 40.) But the extraordinary worship was where the ark was placed, at Jerusalem: where Abiathar the high-priest attended upon David: that if he had any occasion to consult the divine majesty (which could be done only before the ark,) he might be ready to do it for him. But Zadok, the chief of the secondary priests, always attended at Gibeon.

Ver. 40.] For this part of the divine service could be performed nowhere but there where the altar was, nor by any body but by the priests: and therefore David took care it should be constantly performed here, though he was not present every day at those sacrifices, which were offered for all the people of Israel, wheresoever they were. The priests also took care to trim the lamps, and set the show-bread on the table, and to do all other things which the law required.

Ver. 41.] As Asaph and his brethren took care of the music at Jerusalem, where no sacrifices were offered, but only hymns sung and prayers made; so did Heman and Jeduthun (who were with Zadok) at Gibeon, where they sung and played on instruments when the morning and evening sacrifices were offered.

Ver. 42. And with them Heman and Jeduthun, with trumpets and cymbals.] It should be translated, "with them (Heman and Jeduthun) there were trumpets and cymbals."

For those that should make a sound, and with musical instruments of God.] All the utensils of the tabernacle and temple were sacred and set apart for that use: not only those of the altar, but even these instruments of music, which David ordained to praise the Lord withal. They were not common, but of God. And the sons of Jeduthun were porters.

43 And all the people departed every man to his house: and David returned to bless his house.

consecrated to God to be used in his service alone: and therefore called "musical instruments of God," both here and in 2 Chron. vii. 6, that is, sacred ones: whence those that sung the song of victory over the beast, Rev. xv. 2, are said to have in their hands "the harps of God:" that is, not profane or common, but sacred harps, the harps of the temple, for there they sang their anthem, as Mr. Mede observes, book I. discourse 2.

The sons of Jeduthun were porters.] To the tabernacle, as others of them were to the ark (ver. 38). Ver. 43.] See 2 Sam. vi. 19, 20.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Nathan first approving the purpose of David, to build God an house, 3 after by the word of God forbiddeth him. 11 He promiseth him blessings and benefits in his seed. 16 David's prayer and thanksgiving.

1 Now it came to pass, as David sat in his house, that David said to Nathan the prophet, Lo, I dwell in an house of cedars, but the ark of the covenant of the LORD remaineth under curtains.

2 Then Nathan said unto David, Do all that is in thine heart: for God is with thee.

3 ¶ And it came to pass the same night, that the word of God came to Nathan, saying,

4 Go and tell David my servant, Thus saith the LORD, Thou shalt not build me an house to dwell in:

5 For I have not dwelt in an house since the day that I brought up Israel unto this day; but have gone from tent to tent, and from one tabernacle to another.

6 Wheresoever I have walked with all Israel, spake I a word to any of the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people, saying, Why have ye not built me an house of cedars?

7 Now therefore thus shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, I took thee from the sheepcote, even from following the sheep, that thou shouldest be ruler over my people Israel:

8 And I have been with thee whithersoever thou hast walked, and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee, and have made thee a name like the name of the great men that are in the earth.

9 Also I will ordain a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, and they shall dwell in their place, and shall be moved no more; neither shall the children of wickedness waste them any more, as at the beginning.

10 And since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel. Moreover I will subdue all thine enemies. Furthermore I tell thee that the LORD will build thee an house.

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when thy days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons; and I will establish his kingdom.

12 He shall build me an house, and I will establish his throne for ever.

13 I will be his father, and he shall be my son, and I will not take my mercy away from him, as I took it from him that was before thee:

14 But I will settle him in mine house and in my kingdom for ever: and his throne shall be established for evermore.

15 According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

16 ¶ And David the king came and sat before the LORD, and said, Who am I, O LORD God, and what is mine house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?

17 And yet this was a small thing in thine eyes, O God; for thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come, and hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree, O LORD God.

CHAP. XVII.

Ver. 1—4.] These four verses have been explained before, 2 Sam. vii. in the first five verses.

Ver. 5.] This verse is the very same with the sixth verse of that chapter in Samuel: only there it is said, "I have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle;" and here, "I have gone from tent to tent, and from one tabernacle to another." Both which signify, that he had no settled place wherein to dwell, but walked or went, where the tent, or tabernacle, was pitched for him. For the words may be translated, "I went out of the tent into the tent:" that is, when they marched in the wilderness, the ark was taken out of the tent, and when they rested it was put into the tent again: and not into a house built of cedar. Or, this may refer to the translation of the ark from the tabernacle made by Moses, unto the tent made for it by David.

Ver. 6.] See 2 Sam. vii. 7.

Ver. 9.] He speaks here, as if now, and not before, they were possessed of the land of Canaan: for under David's government they were settled and flourished; whereas under the judges they had no rest.

Ver. 10—13.] All these verses, which are set down almost in the same words in 2 Sam. vii. from ver. 7 to ver. 16, are there explained.

Ver. 14.] That is, in my church, which is the house of God, wherein he dwelt; and which he governed, ruled, and protected as his peculiar people. It is very observable that in 2 Sam. vii. 16, speaking to David, he calls them, thine house, and thy kingdom: but here, mine house and my kingdom. Which confirms, what I noted upon the former place, that this principally belongs to the Messiah, of whom David was but a figure.

Ver. 15.] See there, 2 Sam. vii. 17.

Ver. 16.] He came and took his place before the ark, and then stood up, and made the following prayer to God, as I have explained it 2 Sam. vii. 18.

Ver. 17.] This is likewise explained there, ver.

18 What can David speak more to thee for the honour of thy servant? for thou knowest thy servant.

19 O LORD, for thy servant's sake, and according to thine own heart, hast thou done all this greatness, in making known all these great things.

20 O LORD, there is none like thee, neither is there any God beside thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

21 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem to be his own people, to make thee a name of greatness and terribleness, by driving out nations from before thy people, whom thou hast redeemed out of Egypt?

22 For thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever; and thou, LORD, becamest their God.

19, but the latter part of that verse is expressed in different words, for there he saith, "Is this the manner of men, O Lord?" but here, "thou hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree, O Lord God." This was not after the manner of men, to treat a poor shepherd, as if he were a great prince: but so he had dealt with David. But Victorinus Strigelius thinks, the Hebrew words will bear this translation, which in his opinion is better than our own, "Thou hast looked upon me in the form of a man, who art in the highest the Lord God." Which he looks upon as a prophecy of the Messiah, who was really the Lord God, but appeared in the form of a man. The LXX. come near this sense in the former part of the words, ἐκείνός με ὡς ὅρασις ἀνθρώπου, "Thou hast looked upon me as the aspect of a man." So Christophorus Helvicus interprets it in his Elenchus Judæorum.

Ver. 18.] He could desire no more for the increase of his honour: which is an explication of what is said 2 Sam. vii. 20 (see there).

Ver. 19.] In 2 Sam. vii. 21 it is said "for thy word's sake," that is, for the sake of thy promise to thy servant, as this place explains it. He had passed 23 Therefore now, LORD, let the thing that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant and concerning his house be established for ever, and do as thou hast said.

24 Let it even be established, that thy name may be magnified for ever, saying, The LORD of hosts is the God of Israel, even a God to Israel: and let the house of David thy servant be established before thee.

25 For thou, O my God, hast told thy servant that thou wilt build him an house: therefore thy servant hath found in his heart to pray before thee.

26 And now, LORD, thou art God, and hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:

27 Now therefore let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may be before thee for ever: for thou blessest, O LORD, and it shall be blessed for ever.

his word to David by his prophets out of his own mere goodness, without any other motive (see there). It may also be thought to signify, "for the sake of the Messiah," who is, "the Word of God:" and by way of eminence is called his servant. Isa. xlii. 1. xlix. 5.

Ver. 20.] This is more fully expressed in 2 Sam. vii. 23.

Ver. 21.] See 2 Sam. vii. 23. As in the former verse he acknowledges his happiness, in being beloved of God; so in this, the great honour God had done him, in making him king of such a people.

Ver. 22, 23.] See there, ver. 24, 25.

Ver. 24.] See ver. 20, where the same thing is said, only the title of God is a little here enlarged. For there it is only said, "The Lord of hosts is the God of Israel;" but here "The Lord of hosts is the God of Israel, even a God to Israel." Or, as it may be translated, "The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, is a God to Israel;" that is, most gracious and merciful as appeared in many things, particularly in bestowing such a king upon them.

Ver. 25, 26.] See there, ver. 27, 28.

Ver. 27.] This is delivered a little more largely in 2 Sam. vii. 29 (see there).

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 David subdueth the Philistines and the Moabites. 3 He smiteth Hadarezer and the Syrians. 9 Thou sendeth Hadoram with presents to bless David. 11 The presents and the spoil David dedicateth to God. 13 He putteth garrisons in Edom. 14 David's officers.

1 Now after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them, and took Gath and her towns out of the hand of the Philistines.

2 And he smote Moab; and the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

3 ¶ And David smote Hadarezer king of Zobah unto Hamath, as he went to establish his dominion by the river Euphrates.

4 And David took from him a thousand chariots, and seven thousand horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: David also houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them an hundred chariots.

5 And when the Syrians of Damascus came to help Hadarezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

6 Then David put garrisons in Syria-damascus; and the Syrians became David's servants, and brought gifts. Thus the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

7 And David took the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadarezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

CHAP. XVIII.

Ver. 1.] This chapter hath been fully explained in 2 Sam. viii. What differences there are in any expression is there noted, and an account given of them to which I refer the reader. Only it may be observed upon this verse, that in the book of Samuel it is said, he took Metheg-ammah out of their hand; but here "Gath and her towns:" which are all one in Abarbanel's account, who takes Metheg-ammah for a region

8 Likewise from Tibhath, and from Chun, cities of Hadarezer, brought David very much brass, wherewith Solomon made the brasen sea, and the pillars, and the vessels of brass.

9 ¶ Now when Tou king of Hamath heard how David had smitten all the host of Hadarezer king of Zobah;

10 He sent Hadoram his son to king David, to inquire of his welfare, and to congratulate him, because he had fought against Hadarezer, and smitten him; (for Hadarezer had war with Tou;) and with him all manner of vessels of gold and silver and brass.

11 ¶ Them also king David dedicated unto the LORD, with the silver and the gold that he brought from all these nations; from Edom and from Moab, and from the children of Ammon, and from the Philistines, and from Amalek.

or province which comprehended Gath and her towns. We may observe also in ver. 11 the great piety of David, who had in his heart to build a splendid house for God's habitation: and when he was prohibited by God to do it (because he had been engaged in so many wars, and shed a great deal of blood) he could not satisfy himself without doing something towards it: by preparing materials for it, and consecrating a great deal of treasure to be employed in the building, and to no other use. For that is the meaning of what is 12 Moreover Abishai the son of Zeruiah slew of the Edomites in the valley of Salt eighteen thousand.

13 ¶ And he put garrisons in Edom; and all the Edomites became David's servants. Thus the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

14 ¶ So David reigned over all Israel, and executed judgment and justice among all his people.

15 And Joab the son of Zeruiah was over the host; and Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud, recorder.

16 And Zadok the son of Ahitub, and Abimelech the son of Abiathar, were the priests; and Shavsha was scribe;

17 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites and the Pelethites; and the sons of David were chief about the king.

here said, That he dedicated unto the Lord the gold and silver which he brought from several nations: that is, he consecrated, or solemnly deputed them to this holy use, that it might not be lawful hereafter to employ them to any other.

Ver. 16.] It is observed by Drusius, that there were two Ahimelechs; one the grandson of Ahitub, the other the son of Abiathar; who by the change of a letter, is here called, Abimelech (Miscel. Cent. i. cap. 46.)

CHAPTER XIX.

1 David's messengers, sent to comfort Hanun the son of Nahash are villanously entreated. 6 The Ammonites, strengthened by the Syrians, are overcome by Joab and Abishai. 16 Shophach, making a new supply of the Syrians, is slain by David.

1 Now it came to pass after this, that Nahash the king of the children of Ammon died, and his son reigned in his stead.

2 And David said, I will show kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, because his father shewed kindness to me. And David sent messengers to comfort him concerning his father. So the servants of David came into the land of the children of Ammon to Hanun, to comfort him.

3 But the princes of the children of Ammon said to Hanun, Thinkest thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? are not his servants come unto thee for to search, and to overthrow, and to spy out the land?

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, and shaved them, and cut off their garments in the midst, hard by their buttocks, and sent them away.

5 Then there went certain, and told David how the men were served. And he sent to meet them: for the men were greatly ashamed. And the king said, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they had made themselves odious to David, Hanun and the children of Ammon sent a thousand talents of silver to hire them chariots and horsemen out of Mesopotamia, and out of Syria-maachah, and out of Zobah.

7 So they hired thirty and two thousand chariots, and the king of Maachah and his people; who came and pitched before Medeba. And the children of Ammon gathered themselves together from their cities, and came to battle.

8 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and all the host of the mighty men.

9 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array before the gate of the city; and the kings that were come were by themselves in the field.

10 Now when Joab saw that the battle was set

CHAP. XIX.

This chapter also hath been so fully explained in 2 Sam. x. that there is no need of adding any thing. Unless, I observe, that the country which there is called simply Maachah, is here called, ver. 6. Aram-maachah. Which is the foundation of their opinion who think this was in Syria, as I there observed: but it is plain the scripture makes Maachah a city of Canaan (see Deut. iii. 14, Josh. xii. 4, 5, and other places.) But it lying beyond Jordan on the borders of Syria, it had the name of Aram added to it; because the people were in their manners more Syrians than Canaanites, as Bochartus conjectures. In like manner, Aram-bethrehab he thinks belonged to Canaan, in the north part of it, not far from Emath, that is, Epiphaagainst him before and behind, he chose out of all the choice of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians.

11 And the rest of the people he delivered unto the hand of Abishai his brother, and they set themselves in array against the children of Ammon.

12 And he said, If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will help thee.

13 Be of good courage, and let us behave ourselves valiantly for our people, and for the cities of our God: and let the LORD do that which is good in his sight.

14 So Joab and the people that were with him drew nigh before the Syrians unto the battle; and they fled before him.

15 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, they likewise fled before Abishai his brother, and entered into the city. Then Joab came to Jerusalem.

(see Numb. xiii. 41.) And Maachah was in the tribe of Manasseh, as Rehob in the tribe of Asher (Josh. xiii. 11, xix. 28. As for what is said here, that "they hired thirty-two thousand chariots," the meaning must be, so many men who fought in chariots, when they saw cause. For in the book of Samuel, it is said expressly that they hired twenty thousand

16 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they sent messengers, and drew forth the Syrians that were beyond the river: and Shophach the captain of the host of Hadarezer went before them.

17 And it was told David; and he gathered all Israel, and passed over Jordan, and came upon them, and set the battle in array against them. So when David had put the battle in array against the Syrians, they fought with him.

18 But the Syrians fled before Israel; and David slew of the Syrians seven thousand men which fought in chariots, and forty thousand footmen, and killed Shophach the captain of the host.

19 And when the servants of Hadarezer saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they made peace with David, and became his servants: neither would the Syrians help the children of Ammon any more.

footmen from Zoba, and twelve thousand men of Ish-tob: which make up the thirty-two thousand here mentioned. Which if it should be understood of such a number of chariots, there would have been no footmen in their whole army, which is incredible: as it is that they should have so many chariots (see I Sam. xiii. 5.)

CHAPTER XX.

1 Rabbah is besieged by Joab, spoiled by David, and the people thereof tortured. 4 Three giants are slain in three several overthrowes of the Philistines.

1 AND it came to pass, that after the year was expired, at the time that kings go out to battle, Joab led forth the power of the army, and wasted the country of the children of Ammon, and came and besieged Rabbah. But David tarried at Jerusalem. And Joab smote Rabbah, and destroyed it.

2 And David took the crown of their king from off his head, and found it to weigh a talent of gold, and there were precious stones in it: and it was set upon David's head: and he brought also exceeding much spoil out of the city.

3 And he brought out the people that were in it, and cut them with saws, and with harrows of iron, and with axes. Even so dealt David with all the cities of the children of Ammon. And David and all the people returned to Jerusalem.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that there arose war at Gezer with the Philistines; at which time Sibbechai the Hushathite slew Sippai that was of the children of the giant: and they were subdued.

5 And there was war again with the Philistines; and Elhanan the son of Jair slew Lahmi the brother of Goliath the Gittite, whose spear staff was like a weaver's beam.

6 And yet again there was war at Gath, where was a man of great stature whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand, and six on each foot: and he also was the son of the giant.

7 But when he defied Israel, Jonathan the son of Shimea David's brother slew him.

8 These were born unto the giant in Gath; and they fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

CHAP. XX.

Ver. 1.] See 2 Sam. xi. 1, where the history of David's adultery with Bath-sheba, and the murder of Uriah follows: which is here omitted, it being there so largely related, that nothing could be added to it.

Ver. 2, 3.] See 2 Sam. xii. 30, 31, where these two verses are explained.

Ver. 4.] An account is given of this in 2 Sam. xxi. 18, where this giant is called Saph; who was, as I observed there, of the race of the Anakims (see Deut. ix. 2).

Ver. 5.] See there, 2 Sam. xxi. 19.

Ver. 6—8.] These three verses are explained in the forenamed place, 2 Sam. xxi. 20—22. After which follows the hymn which David composed in commemoration of his many deliverances from these and other enemies, especially from Saul; which is here omitted, because not only there largely recorded, but also in the book of Psalms.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 David, tempted by Satan, forceth Joab to number the people. 5 The number of the people being brought, David repenteth of it. 9 David having three plagues propounded by Gad, chooseth the pestilence. 14 After the death of seventy thousand, David by repentance preventeth the destruction of Jerusalem. 18 David, by Gad's direction, purchaseth Ornan's threshing-floor: where having built an altar, God giveth a sign of his favour by fire, and stayeth the plague. 28 David sacrificeth there, being restrained from Gibeon by fear of the angel.

1 AND Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel.

2 And David said to Joab and to the rulers of the people, Go, number Israel from Beer-sheba even to Dan; and bring the number of them to me, that I may know it.

3 And Joab answered, The LORD make his people an hundred times so many more as they be: but, my lord the king, are they not all thy lord's servants? why then doth my lord require this thing? why will he be a cause of trespass to Israel?

4 Nevertheless the king's word prevailed against Joab. Wherefore Joab departed, and went throughout all Israel, and came to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ And Joab gave the sum of the number of the people unto David. And all they of Israel were a thousand thousand and an hundred thousand men that drew sword: and Judah was four hundred threescore and ten thousand men that drew sword.

6 But Levi and Benjamin counted he not among them: for the king's word was abominable to Joab.

7 And God was displeased with this thing therefore he smote Israel.

8 And David said unto God, I have sinned greatly, because I have done this thing: but now, I beseech thee, do away the iniquity of thy servant; for I have done very foolishly.

9 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Gad, David's seer, saying,

10 Go and tell David, saying, Thus saith the LORD, I offer thee three things: choose thee one of them, that I may do it unto thee.

11 So Gad came to David, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Choose thee

12 Either three years' famine; or three months to be destroyed before thy foes, while that the sword of thine enemies overtaketh thee; or else three days the sword of the LORD, even the pestilence, in the land, and the angel of the LORD destroying throughout all the coasts of Israel. Now therefore advise thyself what word I shall bring again to him that sent me.

13 And David said unto Gad, I am in a great strait: let me fall now into the hand of the LORD; for very great are his mercies: but let me not fall into the hand of man.

CHAP. XXI.

Ver. 1.] It is said in 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, that God being angry with Israel, moved David, that is suffered Satan to move him. This is sufficiently explained there, only here the phrase stood up is to be observed. Which was the posture of those who charged and accused any person of a crime in a court of justice (see 1 Kings xxii. 21). Thus Satan is represented as the accuser of the brethren, in the book of the Revelation: and here to lay some sin to the charge of the Israelites, which he represented to God as a reason to punish them: for it is the way of the holy scriptures thus to bring down these things, and accommodate them to the lowest capacities.

Ver. 2. David said to Joab, and to the rulers of the people.] Who, it is plain by 2 Sam. xxiv. 4, were with Joab when the king gave this command.

Ver. 3.] See what I have noted upon 2 Sam. xxiv. 3. It is something strange that Joab should see the danger of this, and David not think of it; no, not when it was so plainly represented to him. But the best men are sometimes very drowsy, and apprehend not those things which plainly appear to those who are not so good.

Ver. 4.] Unto which they came at the end of nine months and twenty days, as is more largely related in 2 Sam. xxiv. from ver. 4 to 9.

Ver. 5.] This account of their number differs much from that given in 2 Sam. xxiv. 9, concerning which see what I have there noted.

Ver. 6. But Levi and Benjamin counted he not among them.] Some think he took no account of Levi because they were not warriors, and only such as were fit for war, David desired to be satisfied how many they were. And Benjamin they think was so diminished in the time of the Judges, that they were to be spared. But these, it were easy to show, are not good reasons, and no other reason is to be sought for, than that given here in the very next words.

For the king's word was abominable to Joab.] He did all this against his will, and at last the work was so odious to him, that he was quite tired with it; and therefore broke off before he took the number of these two tribes.

Ver. 7.] He resolved to punish them because it was for their sins that God permitted David to indulge himself in this vanity.

Ver. 8.] See 2 Sam. xxiv. 10, where I have explained this, and given the best account I could of the nature of this sin.

Ver. 9.] This is expressed a little more largely in 2 Sam. xxiv. 11 (see there).

Ver. 10.] He speaks to him so solemnly in the name of the Lord, that he might attend the more seriously to what he said, and look upon it as peremptorily resolved.

Ver. 12.] In the book of Samuel it is said, the prophet propounded seven years of famine, and here but three. Of which difference I have given an account in 2 Sam. xxiv. 13.

Ver. 13.] See there, upon ver. 14. I only add here that the pestilence is more properly called the hand of the Lord, than other common calamities: for they have visible causes, but none know whence this sudden destruction comes, but immediately from the hand 14 ¶ So the LORD sent pestilence upon Israel: and there fell of Israel seventy thousand men.

15 And God sent an angel unto Jerusalem to destroy it: and as he was destroying, the LORD beheld, and he repented him of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed, It is enough, stay now thine hand. And the angel of the LORD stood by the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.

16 And David lifted up his eyes, and saw the angel of the LORD stand between the earth and the heaven, having a drawn sword in his hand stretched out over Jerusalem. Then David and the elders of Israel, who were clothed in sackcloth, fell upon their faces.

17 And David said unto God, Is it not I that commanded the people to be numbered? even I it is that have sinned and done evil indeed; but as for these sheep, what have they done? let thine hand, I pray thee, O LORD my God, be on me, and on my father's house; but not on thy people, that they should be plagued.

18 ¶ Then the angel of the LORD commanded Gad to say to David, that David should go up, and set up an altar unto the LORD in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.

19 And David went up at the saying of Gad, which he spake in the name of the LORD.

20 And Ornan turned back, and saw the angel;

God; when there is no alteration that we can see in the air, or other elements (as we call them). And therefore the angel of the Lord is said to have smote the army of Sennacherib with such a pestilence, as Josephus reasonably conjectures.

Ver. 14.] This is more largely expressed in 2 Sam. xxiv. 15 (see my annotations there).

Ver. 15. And God sent an angel unto Jerusalem to destroy it.] This seems to import that there were more angels than one employed to destroy in several places of the country; and that the angel sent to Jerusalem had begun to slay some of the inhabitants: but God took pity of them; beholding, perhaps, their serious repentance.

And the angel of the Lord stood by the threshing-floor of Ornan.] See there upon ver. 16.

Ver. 16. David lifted up his eyes, and saw the angel of the Lord—having a drawn sword in his hand.] Whence the pestilence is called (ver. 12), “the sword of the Lord.”

Stretched out over Jerusalem.] As ready to do execution upon the people there.

Then David and the elders of Israel, who were clothed in sackcloth, fell upon their faces.] It appears by their habit that they (and the people of Jerusalem with them, ver. 15), were humbling themselves before God for their sins, and deprecating his displeasure; for mourners were wont to clothe themselves in sackcloth.

Ver. 17.] See 2 Sam. xxiv. 17.

Ver. 18.] This seems to signify that Gad was sent upon his former message (ver. 9), by an angel, who came with that command from God. See there, ver. 18.

Ver. 19.] See there, ver. 19.

Ver. 20. And Ornan turned back, and saw the angel.] Or, when he saw the angel, he turned his face from him, (as he did his four sons, who likewise saw him); being afraid at so glorious an appearance.

This book, as I observed in the beginning, supplies some things omitted in the book of Samuel, among which this is one. For nothing is said there of Arauand his four sons with him hid themselves. Now Ornan was threshing wheat.

21 And as David came to Ornan, Ornan looked and saw David, and went out of the threshing-floor, and bowed himself to David with his face to the ground.

22 Then David said to Ornan, Grant me the place of this threshing-floor, that I may build an altar therein unto the LORD: thou shalt grant it me for the full price: that the plague may be stayed from the people.

23 And Ornan said unto David, Take it to thee, and let my lord the king do that which is good in his eyes: lo, I give thee the oxen also for burnt offerings, and the threshing instruments for wood, and the wheat for the meat offering; I give it all.

24 And king David said to Ornan, Nay; but I will verily buy it for the full price: for I will not take that which is thine for the LORD, nor offer burnt offerings without cost.

25 So David gave to Ornan for the place six hundred shekels of gold by weight.

26 And David built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt offerings and peace offerings, and called upon the LORD; and he answered him from heaven by fire upon the altar of burnt offering.

nah's seeing the angel, but only of David's seeing him.

Ornan was threshing wheat.] For the greatest persons did not, in those days, disdain such employments.

Ver. 21.] See 2 Sam. xxiv. 20.

Ver. 22. David said to Ornan, Grant me the place of this threshing-floor, that I may build an altar.] This he said, after Ornan had first desired to know the cause of his coming to him.

That the plague may be stayed.] By offering a sacrifice to appease the divine anger (see ver. 21).

Ver. 23.] He offered the ground to the king, as a free gift; with every thing that was necessary for sacrifice (see 2 Sam. xxiv. 22, 23).

Ver. 25.] This confutes their opinion, who think there were no shekels but of silver. See 2 Sam. xxiv. 24, where I have shown that this account of the sum of money which he paid, doth not disagree with that which is given there in that place.

Ver. 26. David built there an altar.] See there, ver. 25.

Called upon the Lord.] By thanksgivings for his mercy, beseeching the continuance of it.

He answered him from heaven by fire upon the altar.] This was the highest token of God's gracious acceptance of any sacrifice (see Lev. ix. 24). The Jews say, thus God consumed the sacrifices of Abel, and of Noah, and of Abraham, when they first dedicated altars to him. It is certain from the holy scriptures, thus God testified his acceptance of the sacrifices of Gideon and Elijah in ancient times: which Julian himself had not the hardness to deny (see St. Cyril, contra Julianum, lib. x.). And indeed this was known by the heathens: for Servius upon Virg. Æneid. xii. ver. 200, saith, that in the old temples sacrifices were no otherways consumed, quam igne divino precibus impetrato, “than by divine fire obtained by prayers” (see other testimonies out of heathen antiquity, in Huetius's Quest. Alectanæ, p. 216. &c.).

27 And the LORD commanded the angel; and he put up his sword again into the sheath thereof.

28 ¶ At that time when David saw that the LORD had answered him in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite, then he sacrificed there.

29 For the tabernacle of the LORD, which Moses made in the wilderness, and the altar of the burnt offering, were at that season in the high place at Gibeon.

30 But David could not go before it to inquire of God: for he was afraid because of the sword of the angel of the LORD.

Ver. 27.] Which, it seems, was brandished over Jerusalem, till this sacrifice was offered.

Ver. 28.] That is, he continued to offer his sacrifices in that place, where there was such a manifest appearance of God, and a testimony of his acceptance of his sacrifices. So that from this time he did not go to Gibeon, where sacrifices were wont to be offered upon the brazen altar: which, as it follows, was then there, together with the table, the candlestick, and the fire that came down from heaven in the days of Moses (as Seder Olam Rabba saith, cap. 14), and here Zadok and his brethren ministered, while the ark was in Zion, and with them Heman and others (xiv. 39—41).

Ver. 29.] The Targum calls this high place, “the sanctuary in Gibeon:” for this word comprehended the whole sacred house, as in 1 Sam. ix. 13.

Ver. 30. David could not go before it to inquire of God:.] He thought it not fit to go thither at this time, though that was the place to which they always resorted to beg mercy of God by sacrifice.

For he was afraid] As he thought God had consecrated this place for his service, and that he ought immediately to sacrifice here, and not stay till he could go to Gibeon: so perhaps he thought there might still be danger, that the angel might smite Jerusalem, if he did not continue to worship God here: where he knew, by some means or other, God intended his temple should be built for his perpetual honour in this place. The altar also now erected here was set up by the command of God, as well as that of Moses; so that he thought he might most acceptably serve God here.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 David, foreknowing the place of the temple, prepareth abundance for the building of it. 6 He instructeth Solomon in God's promises, and his duty in building the temple. 17 He chargeth the princes to assist his son.

1 THEN David said, This is the house of the LORD God, and this is the altar of the burnt offering for Israel.

2 And David commanded to gather together the strangers that were in the land of Israel; and he set masons to hew wrought stones to build the house of God.

3 And David prepared iron in abundance for the nails for the doors of the gates, and for the joinings; and brass in abundance without weight;

4 Also cedar trees in abundance: for the Zido-nians and they of Tyre brought much cedar wood to David.

5 And David said, Solomon my son is young and tender, and the house that is to be build for the LORD must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries: I will therefore now make preparation for it. So David prepared abundantly before his death.

6 ¶ Then he called for Solomon his son, and charged him to build an house for the LORD God of Israel.

CHAP. XXII.

Ver. 1. David said, This is the house of the Lord God.] He seems to have been inspired by God with this thought, that here he would have his temple to be built. At least, he concluded this, because the angel bade him build an altar here, which was for sacrifice: and here God testified his presence, as he did at the erection of the first altar, Lev. ix. 24. He seems to have respect to the words of Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 16, 17.

This is the altar of the burnt offering for Israel.] That is, here all his sacrifices shall be offered, when the temple is built. From which words Maimonides concludes, it was utterly unlawful to build God a house any where else, or to offer sacrifice in any other place but this.

Ver. 2. David commanded to gather together the strangers that were in the land of Israel:] That is, those they called proselytes, who perhaps were better skilled in such works, as here follow, than the children of Israel. Or, as R. Solomon Jarchi thinks, these being servile works, he would not employ the free people of Israel therein: which example Solomon afterward followed (1 Kings v. 15; ix. 22; 2 Chron. ii. 1; viii. 7). But we must not from hence infer, as some have done, that proselytes were not as free as other subjects: for they did not settle among the Jews upon any condition of being under any kind of servitude.

He set masons to hew wrought stones to build the house of God.] Though God had forbidden him to build him a house, yet he thought he might prepare materials for the building: which God so much approved, that he was pleased to show him a model of such a house as he would have, as we read ch. xxviii. 19.

Ver. 3.] The word which we translate joinings, the Targum translates hinges.

Ver. 4.] There being great friendship between them and David.

Ver. 5.] He considered with himself these two things, the youth of Solomon (of which see 1 Kings iii. 7), and then the magnificence of the structure that was to be built; both which he thought required his care, to make what preparation he could for such an undertaking. For young men are wont to be careless, and are rarely capable of great designs. Learned men have observed, that this temple was so stately and rich, that it exceeded all others in the world: the famous temple of Diana at Ephesus, being not to be compared with it (see Dr. Spencer, lib. iii. De Leg. Hebr. cap. 2. dissert. 6).

Ver. 6.] By this it was apparent, and, I suppose,

7 And David said to Solomon, My son, as for me, it was in my mind to build an house unto the name of the LORD my God:

8 But the word of the LORD came to me, saying, Thou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars: thou shalt not build an house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight.

9 Behold, a son shall be born to thee, who shall be a man of rest; and I will give him rest from all his enemies round about: for his name shall be Solomon, and I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days.

10 He shall build an house for my name; and he shall be my son, and I will be his father; and I will establish the throne of his kingdom over Israel for ever.

11 Now, my son, the LORD be with thee; and prosper thou, and build the house of the LORD thy God, as he hath said of thee.

12 Only the LORD give thee wisdom and understanding, and give thee charge concerning Israel, that thou mayest keep the law of the LORD thy God.

well known, that he intended him for his successor; which made the crime of Adonijah the greater, who endeavoured to put him by.

Ver. 7.] See in 2 Sam. vii. 1, 2.

Ver. 8.] This reason is not mentioned in the book of Samuel, but here is recorded to show, that though David's wars were warranted, and succeeded by God in an extraordinary manner, yet it did not suit so well with the divine majesty, to have a house built him by one who had shed so much blood, as by one that reigned in peace and quietness; that he might be an emblem of the King of peace, the Lord of the church, who was prefigured in all such great transactions. There might be respect here to the blood of Uriah, and those worthy men slain together with him, by the contrivance of David: which made him unworthy to be honoured with such an undertaking as this. David himself takes notice of this blood-guiltiness, as a thing which was always in God's eye, Ps. li. 4, where he saith, "I have done this evil in thy sight:" as God here saith, "Thou hast shed blood in my sight" (see more below, ch. xxviii. 3).

Ver. 9.] Here are two reasons, why his son should have this honour: because God would give him rest from all his enemies, and Israel should live in peace and quietness in his days. Which made his reign a proper season for this great work.

Ver. 10.] This can belong to none, in the proper and full sense of the word, but Christ alone. For Solomon reigned but forty years, and after that his kingdom was torn in pieces: therefore to Christ the author of the Hebrews applies them (Heb. i. 5).

Ver. 11.] He would not have him doubt, but be as confident as he was, that God would prosper him in this work; because he ordered him to undertake it.

Ver. 12.] When he committed Israel to his care.

Ver. 13.] Nothing gives a man such an undaunted courage, as a conscience of well-doing, in exact obedience to God's commands.

Ver. 14.] Now, behold, in my trouble] In a tumultuous reign, full of various troubles.

I have prepared for the house of the Lord an hundred thousand talents of gold, &c.] His heart was so bent to show his gratitude to God, that he would have done a great deal more for him, if he had been able. Though this was such a vast treasure which he 13 Then shalt thou prosper, if thou takest heed to fulfil the statutes and judgments which the LORD charged Moses with concerning Israel: be strong, and of good courage; dread not, nor be dismayed.

14 Now, behold, in my trouble I have prepared for the house of the LORD an hundred thousand talents of gold, and a thousand thousand talents of silver; and of brass and iron without weight; for it is in abundance: timber also and stone have I prepared; and thou mayest add thereto.

15 Moreover there are workmen with thee in abundance, hewers and workers of stone and timber, and all manner of cunning men for every manner of work.

16 Of the gold, the silver, and the brass, and the iron, there is no number. Arise therefore, and be doing, and the LORD be with thee.

17 ¶ David also commanded all the princes of Israel to help Solomon his son, saying,

18 Is not the LORD your God with you? and hath he not given you rest on every side? for he hath given the inhabitants of the land into mine amassed (not out of covetousness, but purely for the honour and service of God), that it hath seemed to some incredible. For if we take this to be meant of the greater talent, it makes such an immense sum, that it exceeds the riches of any of the Roman emperors, or other former monarchs. For in the time of Trajan, when that empire was largest, the money that was in his treasury did not exceed seventy-three thousand talents, as Bodinus observes in his book De Republ. lib. vi. cap. 2. But a better man than he, our Brewerod, hath computed these talents to make so many millions, that he thinks the word kikkar should not be translated talent in this place; but only a mass, or cake of gold and silver. And so Guil. Budæus observes in his book De Asse, that there was in Homer's time a talent of lesser value: for he speaks of two talents, which were given, with other things, as a reward of a victory obtained in some exercises. Such talents, he thinks, we are to understand in this place: for David reigned about the time of the kingdom of the Assyrians, which was near the time of Homer (see Beekius upon the Targum in this place). Of the same opinion is Jacobus Capellus, and Junius, and Tremellius, as appears by the sum to which they make these talents to amount, viz. five hundred thousand dollars of gold, and as much of silver. And more lately Hermannus Witsius hath computed, that half so many talents of the sanctuary (as some call them) amounts to twenty thousand five hundred eighty-five tons of gold: which he shows David had opportunity to heap together, in his Miscell. Sacra, tom. ii. exerc. x. sect. 17, 18.

Ver. 15.] Who were all to be paid, as well as the labourers, and carriers of burdens, out of this money; which required a very great sum.

Ver. 16. Of the gold, the silver, and the brass, and the iron, there is no number.] The meaning is, the quantity of brass and iron was not numbered, as that of the gold and silver was.

Arise therefore, and be doing, and the Lord be with thee.] He would not have him now go about the work, but begin it when he was settled on his throne: nothing doubting the Lord would prosper it.

Ver. 17.] By advising him, and encouraging the people in their labours.

Ver. 18. Is not the Lord your God with you?]

hand; and the land is subdued before the LORD, and before his people.

19 Now set your heart and your soul to seek the LORD your God; arise therefore, and build ye the sanctuary of the LORD God, to bring the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and the holy vessels of God, into the house that is to be built to the name of the LORD.

What God hath already done for them, was a ground of hope he would further them in this work; which was for his service.

For he hath given the inhabitants of the land into mine hand;] For God was the author of all those wars, and gave them all their victories.

Ver. 19.] He beseeches them not to neglect this opportunity, which he spake of in the foregoing verse; viz. the time of peace which God had given them, which was fit for such a work. Strigelius compares these words with those of Christ, "While ye have the light, walk in the light." And, indeed, the ark and the tabernacle had been too long separated, and therefore such preparation being made for it, it was time to bring the ark, with all the holy vessels in the tabernacle, together into a settled place, by building the sanctuary for them.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 David in his old age maketh Solomon king. 2 The number and distribution of the Levites. 7 The families of the Gershonites. 12 The sons of Kohath. 21 The sons of Merari. 24 The office of the Levites.

1 So when David was old and full of days, he made Solomon his son king over Israel.

2 ¶ And he gathered together all the princes of Israel, with the priests and the Levites.

3 Now the Levites were numbered from the age of thirty years and upward: and their number by their polls, man by man, was thirty and eight thousand.

4 Of which, twenty and four thousand were to set forward the work of the house of the LORD: and six thousand were officers and judges:

5 Moreover four thousand were porters; and

CHAP. XXIII.

Ver. 1.] Declared him his successor, but did not resign his throne to him, nor make him his coadjutor.

Ver. 2.] It is likely he took this opportunity to declare before them all, that Solomon should be king after his decease. But the principal end of this assembly was, that he might acquaint them with a new regulation of the priests and Levites in their ministration: which he intended to establish by a divine direction, as we read xxviii. 12, 13. This was a work becoming his elder years, after he had long observed and weighed the inconveniences of their present method, and the necessity of putting things into a better order. For nothing is more useful or more beautiful than good order, as Strigelius observes out of Xenophon in his Economics. And therefore the church of God was highly obliged to David, for distinguishing the degrees and offices of the Levites: appointing some to take care of the divine rites and ceremonies (as his words are); others to govern the public judgments; others to watch and guard the temple; others to celebrate the praises of God with singing and instruments of music.

Ver. 3. Now the Levites were numbered from the age of thirty years and upward:] So Moses appointed Numb. iv. 3, for then they were come to their full strength and fit for service; which lasted till they were fifty years old, and no longer. For then they generally began to decay, and grew less able to bear burdens: which was their work then, to carry the tabernacle when it was to be removed, and all the utensils belonging to it. Which work being now at an end, they seem to have continued till their death to discharge their business at the temple; which was more easy, after that was built, and required less labour.

And their number by their polls, man by man, was thirty and eight thousand.] The priests are not included in this number: which is so great, that it may very well incline us to think, that many of them served rather for state and ornament, than for necessity. Abarbanel here cries out, "See whether in all the countries there were so many singers and musicians, and other officers employed in their temples, as there were in the house of the sanctuary. Who ever saw the like? Who ever beheld such sanctity, such ornaments, and such praising of God?"

Ver. 4. Of which twenty and four thousand were to set forward the work of the house of the Lord:] These were employed about the sacrifices and offerings, which they killed, and flayed, and washed: and served the priests in all other parts of their ministry about them. Which being very numerous, there were the greater number of Levites to attend this work; viz. a thousand every week: for they took their courses, which being twenty and four, in so many weeks they came about again (see their business, ver. 28, 29).

Six thousand were officers and judges:] God appointed judges and officers to be settled in all their gates (Deut. xvi. 18); but many think, there had been a long neglect in this matter; and that David himself could not restore their judicatures to their ancient order and dignity till the latter end of his reign. For being hindered by perpetual wars, he was forced to be content with such judicatures as had been wont to be executed (which in many things was very defective), only reserving appeals to himself, in causes of great moment (2 Sam. xv. 2). But now he takes care of this so necessary a part of government, and having numbered the Levites, appointed them their certain business, which had been before unsettled and undetermined: employing them both in ecclesiastical, and civil affairs, as Bertram discourses in his book De Republ. Jud. p. 124. But a late writer makes a doubt, whether the Israelites observed that command of Moses at all, when they came into the land of Canaan: the heads of their tribes taking upon them for a long time, to determine all controverted matters. But now the Levites were constituted, in the cities where they dwelt, to be both officers and judges. All agree, that shoterim commonly signify such officers as execute the sentence of the judges (see my notes upon Deut. xvi. 18, and other places). But here, being placed before judges, we are not to take them for such inferior persons, but for men of greater authority; whom the Targum calls governors, such four thousand praised the LORD with the instruments which I made, said David, to praise therewith.

6 And David divided them into courses among the sons of Levi, namely, Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.

7 ¶ Of the Gershonites were, Laadan, and Shimei.

8 The sons of Laadan; the chief was Jehiel, and Zetham, and Joel, three.

9 The sons of Shimei; Shelomith, and Haziel, and Haran, three. These were the chief of the fathers of Laadan.

10 And the sons of Shimei were, Jahath, Zina, and Jeush, and Beriah. These four were the sons of Shimei.

11 And Jahath was the chief, and Zizah the second: but Jeush and Beriah had not many sons; therefore they were in one reckoning, according to their father's house.

12 ¶ The sons of Kohath; Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel, four.

13 The sons of Amram; Aaron and Moses: and

Aaron was separated, that he should sanctify the most holy things, he and his sons for ever, to burn incense before the LORD, to minister unto him, and to bless in his name for ever.

14 Now concerning Moses, the man of God, his sons were named of the tribe of Levi.

15 The sons of Moses were, Gershom, and Eliezer.

16 Of the sons of Gershom, Shebuel was the chief.

17 And the sons of Eliezer were, Rehabiah the chief. And Eliezer had none other sons: but the sons of Rehabiah were very many.

18 Of the sons of Izhar; Shelomith the chief:

19 Of the sons of Hebron; Jeriah the first, Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, and Jekameam the fourth.

20 Of the sons of Uzziel; Micah the first, and Jesiah the second.

21 ¶ The sons of Merari; Mahli, and Mushi. The sons of Mahli; Eleazar, and Kish.

22 And Eleazar died, and had no sons, but

Aaron was separated, that he should sanctify the most holy things, he and his sons for ever, to burn incense] The business of Aaron and his sons was very different from the rest of the Levites: for they were set apart for the special services of the priesthood; to sanctify, that is, to minister in a holy manner the most holy things. His sons burnt incense every day; and the high-priest went into the most holy place on the great day of expiation, with the blood of expiation; and when he came out, blessed the people, as the priest who offered incense did every day, at the conclusion of the sacrifice.

Ver. 14.] Though Moses was so great a man, the supreme governor of the people while he lived, and had such familiarity with the divine majesty, yet his sons were not advanced to any dignity, but he left them simple Levites, not so much as priests. Such was the wonderful humility and modesty of this holy man, that he did not aim at great things for his posterity. Which perhaps is here noted, that none might presume, because of their noble descent, to meddle with the priesthood, which was settled in the family of Aaron; as the civil government of the people was left to Joshua, a man of another tribe, and Moses's servant.

Ver. 15.] See Exod. xviii. 3, 4.

Ver. 16.] Who is called Shobael, xxiv. 20.

Ver. 17. The sons of Eliezer were Rehabiah the chief.] The word for chief in the Hebrew is, the first: that is, the first-born, after whom he had no other son; but a great many grandsons, who are frequently called sons.

But the sons of Rehabiah were very many.] Which in the Hebrew is thus expressed, "were highly multiplied." From whence the Targum took a conceit (as several Jewish doctors have done) that they were multiplied to above six hundred thousand: merely because the same phrase is used of the children of Israel in Exod. i. 7, that they multiplied exceedingly in Egypt; that is, to this number, Exod. xii. 17. Whereby they imagine God fulfilled his intentions to Moses, if he would not intercede for the Israelites, that he would make him a great nation. But these are idle speculations; wherein they abound, since they were abandoned by God.

Ver. 18.] Who is called Shelomoth, xxiv. 22.

as our justices of the peace are, who saw good order kept according to the law; as the judges were such as decided causes in their several courts (see Campegius Vitringa, in his book De Synag. Veteri, lib. i. par. ii. cap. 8).

Ver. 5. Four thousand were porters;] Who were to take care that no unclean person entered into the temple; or any thing brought into it which ought not to be there; or any thing carried out of it which belonged only to that place; and that nothing was done about the door of the court which might disturb the people at their prayers.

Four thousand praised the Lord with the instruments] Thus he hath given an account how the whole thirty-eight thousand (mentioned ver. 3), were disposed of to their offices. And this last four thousand had some among them that were more eminent than the rest; being their instructors, both in singing and playing upon instruments: and perhaps some of them, being very skilful in music, contrived instruments, and commanded them to be made.

Ver. 6.] They took their turns of waiting, some going off, and others coming on, to perform all the forementioned duties, which David, the man of God, ordered (as he speaks, 2 Chron. viii. 14), by the direction of Gad and of Nathan the prophets, who had a command for it from God, as we read in this book, xxix. 25.

Ver. 7.] Who were their immediate ancestors is not said, nor is it material to be known.

Ver. 8.] It is likely they were not his sons, but some of his posterity; for so the word sons signifies in the verses following.

Ver. 9.] This Shimei was descended from one of the three sons of Laadan.

Ver. 10.] That is, the sons of that Shimei, brother of Laadan, mentioned ver. 7.

Ver. 11. Zizah] He is called Zina in the foregoing ver. Jeush and Beriah had not many sons;] As their two elder brothers had.

Therefore they were in one reckoning.] They were accounted but as one family, and not called by the name of their fathers, Jeush and Beriah, but by the name of Shimei their grandfather.

Ver. 12.] See Exod. vi. 18.

Ver. 13. The sons of Amram;] See Exod. vi. 18.

daughters: and their brethren the sons of Kish took them.

23 The sons of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jeremoth, three.

24 ¶ These were the sons of Levi after the house of their fathers; even the chief of the fathers, as they were counted by number of names by their polls, that did the work for the service of the house of the LORD, from the age of twenty years and upward.

25 For David said, The LORD God of Israel hath given rest unto his people, that they may dwell in Jerusalem for ever:

26 And also unto the Levites; they shall no more carry the tabernacle, nor any vessels of it for the service thereof.

27 For by the last words of David the Levites were numbered from twenty years old and above:

Ver. 22.] Their cousins married them, as the Targum expounds it.

Ver. 24.] They were numbered twice, as they were in the time of Moses: the first time all from thirty, the second time from twenty. And these here mentioned were of the last sort; who were fit to minister in some things belonging to the service of the Levites at twenty years old, though they were not employed in the rest till thirty. See upon Num. viii. 21, where they are ordered to begin at five-and-twenty, though they did not completely minister till thirty.

Ver. 25.] That is, constantly attend upon the service of God there settled. Which was the reason for this new order, that the Levites should begin their ministry at twenty years of age: because Israel having rest was very much multiplied, and there being greater resort to Jerusalem, the Levites had more work to do at the temple. But it must here be noted, that those words, for ever, suppose their obedience to God (as in ch. xxviii. 4), in which, if they failed, they were not to continue in Jerusalem, but be expelled out of it.

Ver. 26.] It should rather be translated, "As concerning the Levites:" they were no longer to have that burdensome work of carrying the tabernacle and its vessels when they were removed; but had a much easier service, which they might begin sooner than formerly, it requiring not so much strength of body as readiness of mind.

Ver. 27.] This was his last will about this matter; after he had well considered what they had to do, and what number was necessary to perform every part of this duty. For some of which they were able enough at twenty years of age; when they might be called probationers till they were thirty. And there would not have been a sufficient number for all the work, unless they had come to it at the age of twenty.

Ver. 28. Their office was to wait on the sons of Aaron] Which the Levites were able to do at the age of twenty years. To attend, for instance, at the tabernacle; but not to carry the ark or the tabernacle.

For the service of the house of the Lord.] This is a general expression of what they were to do, the particulars of which follow: To assist in the courts, and in the chambers, in making clean the holy vessels, and cleansing the courts, and taking care nothing was wanting for the service of the sanctuary.

Ver. 29. Both for the show-bread, and for the fine flour] They were to prepare the show-bread, to be set on the table every week by the priests; and to 28 Because their office was to wait on the sons of Aaron for the service of the house of the LORD, in the courts, and in the chambers, and in the purifying of all holy things, and the work of the service of the house of God;

29 Both for the show-bread, and for the fine flour for meat offering, and for the unleavened cakes, and for that which is baked in the pan, and for that which is fried, and for all manner of measure and size;

30 And to stand every morning to thank and praise the LORD, and likewise at even;

31 And to offer all burnt sacrifices unto the LORD in the sabbaths, in the new moons, and on the set feasts, by number, according to the order commanded unto them, continually before the LORD:

32 And that they should keep the charge of see that there was a just quantity of fine flour for the meat offering morning and evening; and that the unleavened cakes were rightly made: with every thing that was to be baked or fried. Of which in the second chapter of Leviticus.

And for all manner of measure and size;] They were to see also that the just measure for things liquid, and the just size for things dry, were exactly kept, and not altered. For all measures and weights (by which all that were used in the country were to be made) were kept in the sanctuary, in the custody of the Levites. Hence it is, that we read often of the "shekel of the sanctuary:" not that there were two sorts of shekels, one sacred and another civil; but because weights and measures were reckoned inter sacra, "among holy things:" the examples, as I said, of them all being kept in the sanctuary. And so they were in the temples of the pagans, and afterward in Christian churches; as appears by Justinian's Novels, cxxviii. cap. 15. So Villalpandus and our bishop Walton have observed. Unto which may be added, that Constantine the Great had gone before him in this: for he commanded the cubit whereby the Egyptians measured the increase of Nilus, and was kept in the temple of Serapis, to be translated into one of the Christian churches, that there it might be preserved the safer by true religion: as both Socrates and Sozomen testify in their Ecclesiastical History, lib. i. cap. 18, lib. v. cap. 3. Julian, indeed, caused it to be restored to Serapis; but that temple being burnt, Rufinus tells us the church had it again in its possession. All which shows, that this ancient piece of religion, to preserve weights and measures as sacred things, continued after the time of David, and perhaps was before it.

Ver. 30.] At the time when the priests offered the morning and evening sacrifice.

Ver. 31. To offer all burnt sacrifices unto the Lord,—by number.] It was no part of their business to offer burnt-sacrifices, which belonged to the priests alone. Therefore the meaning is, to praise and give thanks to God at the offering of sacrifices at those solemnities, as well as every morning and evening, and to see there were a just number of sacrifices then offered as the law prescribed.

Continually before the Lord:] That is, in their courses, wherein they were commanded to wait continually when their turn came.

Ver. 32.] These words belong to those that went just before; signifying, that in their order, when their course came to attend, they served either about the tabernacle, or preparing the show-bread in the holy the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the holy place, and the charge of the sons of Aaron their brethren, in the service of the house of the LORD.

place, or in any other things wherein the priests had occasion to employ them: and the rest of their time they spent at home in their several cities, where they studied and taught the law.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 The divisions of the sons of Aaron by lot into four and twenty orders. 20 The Kohathites, 27 and the Merarites divided by lot.

1 Now these are the divisions of the sons of Aaron. The sons of Aaron; Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

2 But Nadab and Abihu died before their father, and had no children: therefore Eleazar and Ithamar executed the priest's office.

3 And David distributed them, both Zadok of the sons of Eleazar, and Ahimelech of the sons of Ithamar, according to their offices in their service.

4 And there were more chief men found of the sons of Eleazar than of the sons of Ithamar; and thus were they divided. Among the sons of Eleazar there were sixteen chief men of the house of their fathers, and eight among the sons of Ithamar according to the house of their fathers.

5 Thus were they divided by lot, one sort with another; for the governors of the sanctuary, and governors of the house of God, were of the sons of Eleazar, and of the sons of Ithamar.

6 And Shemaiah the son of Nethaneel the scribe, one of the Levites, wrote them before the king, and the princes, and Zadok the priest, and Ahimelech, the son of Abiathar, and before the

CHAP. XXIV.

Ver. 1.] To avoid all confusion, now that they were much increased, David distributed the priests, as he had done the Levites, into several courses: which no doubt was by a divine direction, as well as the other; or rather, there was greater reason he should have God's order for it; they being higher ministers of his than the Levites were.

Ver. 2.] From these two all the families of the priests descended, who were now to be disposed into a regular performance of their duty.

Ver. 3. Zadok,—and Ahimelech.] These two (Zadok and Ahimelech) were the chief persons in David's days, of the posterity of those sons of Aaron, Eleazar and Ithamar.

According to their offices in their service.] He determined when they and those priests who depended on them should perform their office in the temple-service.

Ver. 4. And there were more chief men found of the sons of Eleazar than of the sons of Ithamar; and thus were they divided.] Accordingly David divided them into certain classes and courses, as the Targum expounds it.

Among the sons of Eleazar there were sixteen chief men of the house of their fathers, and eight among the sons of Ithamar] He appointed therefore sixteen courses of the sons of Eleazar, under as many heads of their families: and half as many of the posterity of Ithamar. Which Kimchi and other Hebrew doctors explain in this manner: In the days of Moses there were but eight courses in the whole: four of Eleazar's family, and four of Ithamar's. But in Samuel's days they were grown to sixteen: eight of the one, and as many of the other. But in the end of David's reign they were enlarged to twenty-four courses; two-thirds of which were assigned to the sons of Eleazar, because they were more numerous than the other: and the sons of Ithamar continued as they were before, having eight courses. But the holy scriptures never mention any settled courses till this time (as Dr. Lightfoot observes in his Temple Service, chap. 6), though their doctors assert it to explain that precept, Deut. xxviii. 6.

Ver. 5. Thus were they divided by lot,] That there might be no occasion for complaint; when all was ordered by a divine disposition, according to very ancient custom. For the choice of persons by lot into sacred offices was used from the beginning of the world, as Grotius observes, in his book De Imper. Sum. Potest. circa Sacra, cap. 10, sect. 5.

One sort with another;] Both the sons of Eleazar and of Ithamar were thus chosen, who should wait together.

For the governors of the sanctuary.] The words in the Hebrew are share kodesh: which signify the principal ministers about holy things.

And governors of the house of God,] There is no word for house in the Hebrew; where we only read share Elohim: which seem to signify the chief judges.

Were of the sons of Eleazar, and of the sons of Ithamar.] These two families had obtained the chief functions both in the temple and in the civil government, wherein they could not be distributed so well any way as by lot, without danger of envy among themselves.

Ver. 6. And Shemaiah the son of Nethaneel the scribe, one of the Levites, wrote them before the king, &c.] In perpetual memory of the thing (as Conradus Pellicanus thinks), this divine writer sets down the name of the public notary by whom their names were written, and put into the urn out of which the lots were to be drawn. Which, that there might be no suspicion of fraud, were drawn before the king, the princes, both the chief priests (the high-priest and the sagan), and before the chief persons of the several families of priests and Levites. Whence it is reasonable to conclude, that David did not make this regulation by his mere royal power, but by a divine direction; which he had in this, as in the order he gave about the temple (ch. xxviii.); and he seems here not to have acted by an absolute authority, but to have advised with the high-priest, and other persons of great note, how to proceed.

One principal household being taken for Eleazar, and one taken for Ithamar.] These words are something obscure: but the meaning is, that one of the principal families of Eleazar was first taken, and then one of Ithamar's; and after that, one of Eleazar's again, and so by turns till all was done: that is, till chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites: one principal household being taken for Eleazar, and one taken for Ithamar.

7 Now the first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the second to Jedaiah,

8 The third to Harim, the fourth to Seorim.

9 The fifth to Malchijah, the sixth to Mijamin,

10 The seventh to Hakkoz, the eighth to Abijah,

11 The ninth to Jeshuah, the tenth to Shecaniah,

12 The eleventh to Eliashib, the twelfth to Jakim,

13 The thirteenth to Huppah, the fourteenth to Jeshebeab,

14 The fifteenth to Bilgah, the sixteenth to Immer,

15 The seventeenth to Hezir, the eighteenth to Aphses,

16 The nineteenth to Pethahiah, the twentieth to Jechezkel,

17 The one and twentieth to Jachin, the two and twentieth to Gamul, 18 The three and twentieth to Delaiah, the four and twentieth to Mazaiah.

19 These were the orderings of them in their service to come into the house of the LORD, ac-there were eight of each. After which, those of Eleazar alone were distributed under their several heads.

Ver. 7.] The first lot that was drawn out of the urn had the name of Jehoiarib upon it: so that his family had the precedence, and waited in the first place. This was esteemed a great honour; for Josephus reckons himself noble, not only because he was descended ἐξ ἱερέων, "from the priests," but ἐκ τῆς πρώτης ἐπιμερίας τῶν εἰκοσιτεσσάρων, "from the first course of the four-and-twenty." For this made a great difference: Mattathias also, the father of the Maccabees, descended from Jehoiarib, as we read 1 Mac. ii. 54.

Ver. 8.] I have nothing to observe concerning these and the rest that follow to ver. 19, but only that Zachariah the father of John the Baptist, was of the eighth course of these priests, viz. that of Abijah, mentioned ver. 10, as we read in the first of St. Luke. For, as Josephus testifies, this order of the courses continued till his time; that is, till the destruction of the second temple.

Ver. 19. These were the orderings of them in their service to come into the house of the Lord, according to their manner, under Aaron their father. Under the inspection of the high-priest, who, being the successor of Aaron, is called by his name. He took care that this order should be observed in such manner, as is here prescribed; none of them anticipating their course, nor trusting in themselves to attend before their time, but waiting till their time came. And then every course served a week, coming in on the sabbath: and going out the next before the burning of the incense at the morning sacrifice, when the show-bread was set on the table, as Scaliger observes out of the Jewish writers, in his notes upon the Fragments at the end of his book De Emend. Temporum, p. 54. Upon the three great festivals, indeed, when all priests, as well as others, were bound to appear before God, they came out of their course, and, that they might not be idle, officiated in such things as cording to their manner, under Aaron their father, as the LORD God of Israel had commanded him.

20 ¶ And the rest of the sons of Levi were these: Of the sons of Amram; Shubael: of the sons of Shubael: Jehdeiah.

21 Concerning Rehabiah: of the sons of Rehabiah, the first was Isshiah.

22 Of the Izharites; Shelomoth: of the sons of Shelomoth; Jahath.

23 Of the sons of Hebron; Jeriah the first, Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, Jekameam the fourth.

24 Of the sons of Uzziel; Michah: of the sons of Michah; Shamir.

25 The brother of Michah was Isshiah: of the sons of Isshiah; Zechariah.

26 The sons of Merari were Mahli and Mushi: the sons of Jaaziah; Beno.

27 ¶ The sons of Merari by Jaaziah; Beno, and Shoham, and Zaccur, and Ithri.

28 Of Mahli came Eleazar, who had no sons.

29 Concerning Kish: the son of Kish was Jerahmeel.

30 The sons also of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jerimoth. These were the sons of the Levites after the house of their fathers.

31 These likewise cast lots over against their properly belonged to those solemnities. But the ordinary business, for the daily burnt-sacrifice, and the freewill-offerings, was managed by those only whose course it was to wait. And thus the Jews understand those words, Deut. xviii. 6, 7, "The Levite (i. e. the priests who were of that tribe) that shall come to the place which the LORD his God shall choose (that is, at the three solemn feasts), that he shall minister in the house of the LORD his God, as all his brethren the Levites do (which is meant of the priests, for they only ministered before God, not the Levites): they shall have like portions to eat;" that is, of the sacrifices which were then offered at those solemn times they were to have their share, with the priests then in attendance, but the Levites did not eat of them; "beside that which cometh by the sale of his patrimony;" or, as it is in the Hebrew, by "the sale of his fathers." That is, say they, except the portion of the daily sacrifices, and freewill-offerings, which by the ordinance of their fathers, Moses and Aaron, belonged only to those priests, who were in their ordinary attendance in their week.

As the Lord God of Israel had commanded him.] By his servant David.

Ver. 20.] Now he speaks of the rest of the Levites who were not priests, who are mentioned in the foregoing ch. xxiii. 16, 17, &c. and here named again to distinguish them from the priests, and to show that they also had their places assigned them by lot, ver. 31. I have nothing to note concerning those that follow between this verse and that, but only this: that several are mentioned as descended from Merari, who are not mentioned in the foregoing chapters, nor any where else. For which, no question, the author of this book had good authority, though we cannot, without the help of such records as he perused give an account of it (see Buxtorf's Anticridea, p. 1014).

Ver. 31. These likewise cast lots over against their brethren the sons of Aaron.] There was the like solemnity used in their distribution, as there was in that brethren the sons of Aaron in the presence of David the king, and Zadok, and Ahimelech, and the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites, even the principal fathers over against their younger brethren.

of the priests, by casting lots: whereby they knew what Levites should wait, in every course with the sons of Aaron.

Even the principal fathers over against their younger brethren.] This is expressed very obscurely; but the meaning is, that the elder and younger had their places by lots, not by seniority of houses. They that were of greater dignity drew lots against those that were of less; and they were to take their courses, as they fell; either to the elder or the younger family.

CHAPTER XXV.

1 The number and offices of the singers. 8 Their division by lot into four and twenty orders.

1 MOREOVER David and the captains of the host separated to the service of the sons of Asaph, and of Heman, and of Jeduthun, who should prophesy with harps, with psalteries, and with cymbals: and the number of the workmen according to their service was:

2 Of the sons of Asaph; Zaccur, and Joseph, and Nathaniah, and Asarelah, the sons of Asaph under the hands of Asaph, which prophesied according to the order of the king.

3 Of Jeduthun: the sons of Jeduthun; Geda-liah, and Zeri, and Jeshaiiah, Hashabiah, and Mattithiah, six, under the hands of their father Jeduthun, who prophesied with a harp, to give thanks and to praise the LORD.

4 Of Heman: the sons of Heman: Bukkiah, Mattaniah, Uzziel, Shebuel, and Jerimoth, Hananiah, Eliathah, Giddalti, and Romamtiezer, Joshbekashah, Mallothi, Hothir, and Mahazioth:

5 All these were the sons of Heman the king's seer in the words of God, to lift up the horn.

CHAP. XXV.

Ver. 1. David and the captains of the host] It is absurd to think, that the commanders in war meddled with ordering the tribe of Levi, and the service of the temple. Therefore by the host we are to understand (as our Mr. Thorndike well observes) the companies of priests, that waited upon the service of God at the temple; the captains of whom (i. e. the chief leaders), together with David, divided the singers, as they had done the priests (ch. xxiv. 3, 6, 7). Though elsewhere (ch. xxiii. 6), David alone is mentioned to have done it (Rites of the Church, p. 230).

Separated to the service] Of God in the temple.

Of the sons of Asaph, and of Heman, and of Jeduthun.] These were the chief persons among the Levites whose families were separated to the following service.

Who should prophesy] Sing psalms, which David and other prophets composed. For these young men were not prophets, as their fathers were; but are said to prophesy, because they sung in the service of God those divine prophetic hymns, which were composed by their fathers, who were men divinely inspired. Thus the Talmudists say, in Bava-Bathra, cap. 1, that all the hymns we find in the bible were made by Adam, Melchisedec, Abraham, Moses, Asaph, Heman, Jeduthun, and David: who collected them into one volume. But this is a foolish tradition, and very new.

With harps, with psalteries, and with cymbals.] There were also pipes, or hautboys, used upon several occasions, together with the trumpets. The difference between these three here mentioned is better described by Dr. Lightfoot out of Josephus, than by any I have met withal; who observes, that the other Israelites, if allied to the priests by marriage, might, if they had skill, join in this instrumental music: but none besides the Levites in the vocal. See his Temple Service, ch. 7, sect. 2, where he likewise notes what psalms were to be sung every day of the week. And this was the first office of the Levites; the two other are explained in the two following chapters.

And the number of the workmen according to their service was.] It had better be translated, "the number of the men of the ministry (i. e. of those who ministered in singing, and playing on instruments) according to their service was," as follows.

Ver. 2. Under the hands of Asaph.] Under his government, as their precursor: or who taught and instructed them in singing and music.

Which prophesied according to the order of the king.] The Targum understands this, as if Asaph prophesied by the Holy Ghost, and was constituted the head of these by the king. But the word prophesy is of very large extent; signifying sometimes, as I said before, nothing more, but singing divinely inspired hymns. Thus Miriam is called a prophetess (Exod. xv. 20), because she led up the women to praise God, with timbrels and dances. And, indeed, music and singing were in ancient times had in such esteem and veneration, that they who excelled in this faculty were looked upon as persons divinely moved. So Quintilian observes, as a known truth, lib. i. Instit. cap. 10. Quis ignorat, musicen tantum jam illis antiquis temporibus non studii modo, verum etiam venerationis habuisse, ut iidem musici, et vates judicarentur. "Who is so ignorant as not to know that music, in those ancient times, was not only so much studied, but had in such veneration, that the same men, who were musicians were accounted prophets, and wise men?"

Ver. 3. Six, under the hands of their father Jeduthun.] Here are but five named: but it appears afterward (ver. 17, when the lots were cast) there was another, whose name was Shimei: who being now very young and not yet able either to sing or to play, is not named in this verse. But, that he might be instructed and learn both, he is chosen to be the head of a course, when he should be fit for it. Thus D. Kimchi explains this matter.

Who prophesied with a harp.] The harp was a most noble instrument, in which Jeduthun seems to be peculiarly skilled, and therewith praised God; which is called prophesying.

Ver. 4.] He had the most numerous issue of these three; and they all had families who were employed in this service.

Ver. 5. All these were the sons of Heman the king's seer] He was a prophet, in whose company the king

And God gave to Heman fourteen sons and three daughters.

6 All these were under the hands of their father for song in the house of the LORD, with cymbals, psalteries, and harps, for the service of the house of God, according to the king's order to Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman.

7 So the number of them, with their brethren that were instructed in the songs of the LORD, even all that was cunning, was two hundred fourscore and eight.

8 ¶ And they cast lots, ward against ward, as well the small as the great, the teacher as the scholar.

9 Now the first lot came forth for Asaph to Joseph: the second to Gedaliah, who with his brethren and sons were twelve:

10 The third to Zaccur, he, his sons, and his brethren were twelve:

11 The fourth to Izri, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

12 The fifth to Nethaniah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

13 The sixth to Bukkiah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

14 The seventh to Jesharelah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

15 The eighth to Jeshaiiah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

16 The ninth to Mattaniah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

17 The tenth to Shimei, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

delighted: and with whom he advised in difficult affairs.

In the words of God.] Especially in divine matters.

To lift up the horn.] In the temple they used also wind music: which many think to have been trumpets made of horn: but the priests only blew with trumpets in the temple: while the Levites sung to those other instruments. Therefore others understand this, of the hymns they sung to magnify the power, greatness, and exaltation of David's kingdom, or rather, of the kingdom of the Messiah, whom Zachary in his song (Luke i. 69), calls the horn of salvation. For the power of any thing in scripture is expressed by a horn; in which lies the strength of some creatures. And from these words Victorinus Strigelius gathers, that Heman was David's seer in politic affairs, which belonged to the confirmation and settlement of his kingdom: Cornu enim significat regimen et regnum; "for a horn signifies government and kingdom." But the first sense seems to me to be most natural, that at stated times they blew aloud with trumpets made of horns: for such, I suppose, they might use, though the priests only could blow with the silver trumpets. And thus the famous Bochartus interprets these words, "at set times to blow aloud with trumpets made of horns;" in his preface to his Hieroicoicon.

God gave to Heman fourteen sons and three daughters.] Some have fancied there are fifteen mentioned in the foregoing verse; but the Jews look upon Romantizer as one name; and so we take it: which is justified by ver. 31.

Ver. 6. All these were under the hands of their father for song in the house of the Lord.] The whole number of these was four-and-twenty, who, under their several fathers, Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman, regulated the choir in their singing, and music; being the instructors and governors of those who were under them. It is likely they set the psalms to music which David composed; or if he himself modulated them, they sung them in the tunes he directed, with the musical instruments here mentioned.

According to the king's order to Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman.] These were prophets, who composed many of the songs, which their sons sung by their direction; as appears from 2 Chron. xxix. 10, where it is said they sung praises, "in the words of David and Asaph the seer."

Ver. 7.] This was the whole number of those who were skilful in singing, who, under the persons before mentioned, were distributed (as it here follows) into several courses, after the same manner the priest had been: with whom they were to attend in their order. For twelve of these singers, with their govornor, came and waited every week; and at the end of which they were succeeded by other twelve, till the course was finished; and then it began again, where it did at first. Now twelve times twenty-four amount to two hundred fourscore and eight.

It is no wonder that there were so many of them: found very skilful in singing and music: for David himself was a great musician and poet, and every one knows how much the inclination of the supreme governor serves to the promoting of arts among the people.

Ver. 8. They cast lots, ward against ward.] Being thus distributed into twenty-four courses, they cast lots, one course against another, which should wait first, and in order succeed one another.

As well the small as the great, the teacher as the scholar.] So that they did not begin and succeed one another, according to the order of age, or of learning, but as God disposed them by their lot. The last words ["the teacher as the scholar"] the LXX. translate τελειον και μαθητευται, "those that were perfect, and those that were learners." They were called perfect who were masters of their art, able to instruct others who learnt of them.

Ver. 9. The first lot came forth for Asaph to Joseph.] Who was not his eldest son (see ver. 2). After the word Joseph, we are to supply the words that follow in the rest of these classes, "who, with his brethren and sons, were twelve;" otherwise the number of two hundred fourscore and eight (ver. 7), will not be complete.

The second to Gedaliah.] Who was the eldest son to Jeduthun (ver. 3).

Who with his brethren and sons were twelve.] These words, as Rasi observes, are to be referred to Joseph as well as Gedaliah; for he mentions them both in one and the same verse; and therefore he only saith once with respect to both, "he and his sons and brethren;" where by brethren is meant their kindred.

Ver. 10. Zaccur.] He was the eldest son of Asaph (ver. 2).

Ver. 11. Izri.] Called Zeri, ver. 3, who was the second son of Jeduthun.

Thus all things were disposed, for the preserving order, and avoiding all disputes about precedence: there being no respect had in this divine distribution to their birth, but the younger in course preceded the elder.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 The divisions of the porters. 13 The gates assigned by lot. 20 The Levites that had charge of the treasures. 29 Officers and judges.

1 CONCERNING the divisions of the porters: Of the Korhites was Meshelemiah the son of Kore, of the sons of Asaph.

2 And the sons of Meshelemiah were, Zechariah the first-born, Jedaiel the second, Zebadiah the third, Jathniel the fourth.

3 Elam the fifth, Jehohanan the sixth, Elioenai the seventh.

4 Moreover the sons of Obed-edom were, Shemaiah the first-born, Jehozabad the second, Joah the third, and Sacar the fourth, and Nethaneel the fifth.

5 Ammiel the sixth, Issachar the seventh, Peulthai the eighth: for God blessed him.

6 Also unto Shemaiah his son were sons born, that ruled throughout the house of their father: for they were mighty men of valour.

7 The sons of Shemaiah; Othni, and Rephael,

CHAP. XXVI.

Ver. 1. Concerning the divisions of the porters:] As some of the Levites were chosen to be singers (of which an account is given in the foregoing chapter), so others were appointed to be porters. Which were fixed offices (as Dr. Lightfoot observes) which they might not change: none of them being permitted to intrude into the office of the other; and neither of them into the priesthood. It was an office of great dignity, and men of the best quality were put into it: they having the charge of the holy things (ver. 20, 22, 24, 26).

Meshelemiah.] Called Shelemiah, ver. 14.

The son of Kore, of the sons of Asaph.] Not of Asaph the musician, mentioned in the foregoing chapter, for he was of the family of Gershon (ver. 41), but of another Asaph, called Eliasaph, and sometimes Jasaph, of the line of Kohath (ch. vi. 23; ix. 19).

Ver. 5. For God blessed him.] With a numerous offspring, as the Targum glosses upon the last words:

because he entertained the ark in his house with great reverence. Upon which account God did him the honour to let him see of his sons and grandsons fourscore and two: who were chief men among the Levites. This the Targum had said before, one only being wanting of this number (see upon ch. xiii. 14). But what the scripture saith is sufficient to show how God blessed him with a numerous posterity, without the help of such monstrous stories as some of the Jews relate.

Ver. 6. Also unto Shemaiah his son were sons born, that ruled throughout the house of their father:] Being men of great authority in that family.

For they were mighty men of valour.] Which was requisite in men who had this office: for they were to watch and guard the house of God, night and day. And not only to open and shut the doors of the mountain of the house, and of the court of the women (for the priests opened and shut the gates of the other courts), but to attend there to prevent any thing that might be done to the prejudice of the and Obed, Elzabad, whose brethren were strong men, Elihu, and Semachiah.

8 All these of the sons of Obed-edom: they and their sons and their brethren, able men for strength for the service, were threescore and two of Obed-edom.

9 And Meshelemiah had sons and brethren, strong men, eighteen.

10 Also Hosah, of the children of Merari, had sons; Simri the chief, (for though he was not the first-born, yet his father made him the chief:)

11 Hilkiab the second, Tebaliah the third, Zechariah the fourth: all the sons and brethren of Hosah were thirteen.

12 Among these were the divisions of the porters, even among the chief men, having wards one against another, to minister in the house of the LORD.

13 ¶ And they cast lots, as well the small as the great, according to the house of their fathers, for every gate.

14 And the lot eastward fell to Shelemiah. Then for Zechariah his son, a wise counsellor, they cast lots; and his lot came out northward.

15 To Obed-edom southward; and to his sons the house of Asuppim.

16 To Shuppim and Hosah the lot came forth westward, with the gate Shallecheth, by the causeway of the going up, ward against ward.

17 Eastward were six Levites, northward four a day, southward four a day, and toward Asuppim two and two.

peace, safety, and purity of the place. And likewise, as appears by what follows, they had the guard of some treasures, which required men of courage to defend them.

Ver. 7.] Their names are recorded, with two of their brethren, or cousins: who are likewise noted to be strong men. That is, not only men of great bodily strength, but of great courage and resolution. So it is translated in the margin, out of the Hebrew, sons of valour. But strength of body was a principal requisite in this service; for the doors of the temple were so massy and weighty, that the hands of many men (as Josephus saith) were needful to open and shut them.

Ver. 8.] This was a great number, which he lived to see descended from him, and from his sons.

Ver. 9.] Still their strength is mentioned, as a qualification for this service.

Ver. 10.] Because his elder brother was feeble, or some other way unfit for the service. For, as Jacob gave the kingdom to Judah, and the priesthood to Levi, and put Reuben his first-born from his right, because of his crime; so there was some weighty cause, no doubt, why this man had the right of primogeniture given him, which was not to be altered upon the account of affection (Deut. xxi. 16, 17).

Ver. 11.] Who were not all named, but these who are the principal.

Ver. 12. Among these were the divisions of the porters, even among the chief men. They were distributed into courses, as the priests and Levites were; and these were principal commanders over them: being the most illustrious among their brethren, and therefore particularly named.

Having wards one against another. Having charges or custodies answerable to their brethren: that is, to the Levites, who attended as these did.

To minister in the house of the Lord. This was not a vile ministry (as the word porter sounds among us), but they were like the standing guard of a king in his palace: and so the word, I observed before, had better be rendered (see ix. 17). Who kept the treasures of the temple, as it follows (ver. 20, 26), and officers and judges also were chosen out of them (ver. 29, 30, 32), which shows they were eminent persons: some of them being very learned and wise (ver. 14); though, I suppose, they were not judges of the law, but of other matters.

Ver. 13. They cast lots, as well the small as the great. Without respect to their age or dignity.

According to the house of their fathers. Every family having a distinct lot drawn for it.

For every gate. That it might be determined at what gate of the temple they were to wait.

Ver. 14. Shelemiah. Who is called Meshelemiah, ver. 1.

Then for Zechariah his son, a wise counsellor. He was as much reputed for prudence, as others were for strength or valour: and it was as necessary in the management of many of their affairs.

Ver. 15. Asuppim. Many learned men take Asuppim to signify the treasury of the temple, or the place where things dedicated were laid up. This they ground, first, upon the import of the word, which betokens collections, or gatherings, as we translate it in the margin: and, secondly, because Obed-edom (whose sons are here said to be placed at Asuppim is said in 2 Chron. xxv. 24, to have the custody of the treasures. But, though this be granted, it still remains a very difficult matter to find where Asuppim was. After a long discussion of it, Dr. Lightfoot concludes, that Asuppim were two gates in the western wall, which stood most south, or nearest to Jerusalem; and that "the house of Asuppim" was a large building which ran between them, and was a treasury of divers rooms for laying up things that served the use of the temple (see Temple Service, ch. 5, sect. 3).

Ver. 16. To Shuppim and Hosah the lot came forth westward, with the gate Shallecheth, by the causeway of the going up. This gate which in Solomon's time was called Shallecheth, in the time of Herod's temple was called the gate of Coponius. Which is said here to be "by the causeway of the going up:" because it was by that ascent which Solomon made for his own passage up from his own house to the temple (1 Kings x. 5; 2 Chron. ix. 4). Which Josephus thus expresses (as Dr. Lightfoot observes), "A gate led to the king's house from the temple, the valley between them being filled up for the passage." From whence the gate was called by the name of Shallecheth, which signifies casting up; because of the causeway that was cast up to lead to it from the king's palace: this being the ordinary way to the house of God.

Ward against ward. I suppose the meaning is, that they guarded each of these gates of Asuppim: or, as others take it, they guarded by turns; when one went off, another coming on. But the most learned Dr. Alix (whom I consulted about it) thinks these words signify, that their stations were at the four points of heaven, opposite one to the other.

Ver. 17.] That is, two at each gate of Asuppim before mentioned. The distribution of the porters into four-and-twenty courses, is not so plainly and distinctly set down in scripture, as is the distribution of the priests and singers. Yet (as Dr. Lightfoot observes) it may be fairly concluded from two places: whereof this is one, in these two verses, 16, 17, where 18 At Parbar westward, four at the causeway, and two at Parbar.

19 These are the divisions of the porters among the sons of Kore, and among the sons of Merari.

20 ¶ And of the Levites, Ahijah was over the treasures of the house of God, and over the treasures of the dedicated things.

21 As concerning the sons of Laadan; the sons of the Gershonite Laadan, chief fathers, even of Laadan the Gershonite, were Jehieli.

22 The sons of Jehieli; Zetham, and Joel his brother, which were over the treasures of the house of the LORD.

23 Of the Amramites, and the Izharites, the Hebronites, and the Uzzielites:

24 And Shebuel the son of Gershom, the son of Moses, was ruler of the treasures.

the fathers of the porters are summed up to the very same number that the first fathers of the other courses were, viz. to four-and-twenty. "Among all the porters (saith Kimchi on this place) there were four-and-twenty, according to the rest of the courses; six on the east side, four on the north, four on the south, at Asuppim two and two (four in all), four on the west, and two at Parbar: behold, four-and-twenty." The other place is 2 Chron. viii. 14, where the porters go in the very same equipage (as he speaks), as to the matter of division into courses, with the priests and the singers (see Temple Service, ch. 7).

Ver. 18.] This gate, it appears from this place, was in the west quarter, and the west gate to the causeway, or Shallecheth. It signifies, some think, the same with Parvar, which betokens suburbs: for it led to the suburbs, that is, that part of the city which was called Millo. Which was the valley at the west end of mount Moriah, in which Jerusalem and Zion met; replenished with buildings in David's and Solomon's time, 2 Sam. v. 9; 1 Kings xi. 27 (see Dr. Lightfoot, in his Survey of the Temple, ch. 5, sect. 2).

Ver. 19.] These courses were made up of the Levites of these two great families.

Ver. 20.] By the "treasures of the house of God," are meant such things as were of ordinary use and employment in the temple; such as the vessels, vestments, tithes, wine, oil, and other things that were commonly used; together with such as were offered to the treasury, either as a due (as was the half shekel), or voluntarily, as money or vessels, for the repair of the house of God, and advancement of the service there. By "the treasures of the dedicated things," are meant whatsoever their kings or great commanders had consecrated and dedicated for divine uses; which lay as a stock for the temple, and monuments of their devotion.

Ver. 21.] This was an eminent man of that family (see xxiii. 7).

Ver. 22. The sons of Jehieli; Zetham, and Joel] See xxiii. 8, where he is called Jehiel.

Which were over the treasures of the house of the Lord.] From hence Dr. Lightfoot gathers that as some of the "treasures of the house of God" were under the care and charge of the porters (see ix. 26), so the rest, and the treasures of dedicated things, were committed to the care and charge of other Levites, who were neither porters nor singers.

Ver. 23.] Several persons of these families were employed as they that are mentioned in the foregoing verse.

25 And his brethren by Eliezer; Rehabiah his son, and Jesaiah his son, and Joram his son, and Zichri his son, and Shelomith his son.

26 Which Shelomith and his brethren were over all the treasures of the dedicated things, which David the king, and the chief fathers, the captains over thousands and hundreds, and the captains of the host, had dedicated.

27 Out of the spoils won in battle did they dedicate to maintain the house of the LORD.

28 And all that Samuel the seer, and Saul the son of Kish, and Abner the son of Ner, and Joab the son of Zeruiah, had dedicated; and whosoever had dedicated any thing, it was under the hand of Shelomith, and of his brethren.

29 ¶ Of the Izharites, Chenaniah and his sons were for the outward business over Israel, for officers and judges.

Ver. 24.] This is the sole honour that we read of hitherto, conferred upon any of the posterity of Moses; one of which was advanced to a great authority, being the overseer of all the treasures, and their officers. By treasures, I suppose, is here meant those of the house of the Lord: for another was over the dedicated things (ver. 26).

Ver. 25.] These, I suppose, were under Shebuel, and his chief ruler.

Ver. 26. Which Shelomith and his brethren were over all the treasures of the dedicated things.] Here is another of Moses' posterity (by his younger son) preferred to a great office: to have the charge of those things which were dedicated for the service of God, in which his brethren were to assist him.

Which David] Out of his great piety, had dedicated in abundance to the building of the temple (xxii. 14).

And the chief fathers, the captains] Such as by the counsel of Jethro (Exod. xviii.) were constituted to assist in the government of the people.

And the captains of the host, had dedicated.] The great military men imitated the rulers in the civil government in this piety: or such as are called "captains of the host," xxv. 1.

Ver. 27.] As David gave a vast treasure to the building of the house, so these men dedicated a part of their spoil to the support and repair of it, as there should be occasion, after it was built.

Ver. 28. And all that Samuel the seer, and Saul, &c. had dedicated;] He mentions particularly some great benefactors, to honour their memory, and to be examples to posterity. And Samuel seems to have begun, and led the way to the rest that followed. For he, I suppose, by the spirit of prophecy, foresaw the nation would be so well settled in the land, that a house would be built for the service of God; and therefore he dedicated part of the spoils which he got in the battles he fought, while he was judge of the people of Israel. Which example Saul, Abner, and Joab imitated. And they all took it from the ancient piety of the great patriarch Abraham, who gave the tenth of the spoils which he won to Melchisedec, God's high-priest. The like did the princes of the people of Israel, after their victory over the Midianites, as we read Numb. xxxi.

And whosoever had dedicated any thing.] There were many, no doubt, who were disposed to the same piety besides these named.

It was under the hand of Shelomith.] He was a man of eminent probity and prudence, otherwise so great a trust would not have been reposed in him.

30 And of the Hebronites, Hashabiah and his brethren, men of valour, a thousand and seven hundred, were officers among them of Israel on this side Jordan westward in all the business of the Lord, and in the service of the king.

31 Among the Hebronites was Jerijah the chief, even among the Hebronites, according to the generations of his fathers. In the fortieth year of the reign of David they were sought for,

Ver. 29. Of the Izharites, Chenaniah and his sons were for the outward business] That is, the business without the city of Jerusalem; which neither belonged to the singers, nor the porters, whose business was within the city: but what this outward business was, is not easily resolved. Kimchi and other Hebrew doctors think, it was to cut down trees in the woods, and to hew stones, and to see the fields ploughed, and the vineyards and gardens planted and dressed, which by devout persons had been dedicated to the service of God: but there doth not seem to be any thing belonging to such matters in these words. For though shoterim, or officers, might possibly have something to do in such matters, yet what business there was in these things for the judges (on whom these officers attended) none can imagine. And this outward business being over Israel, as it here follows, it does not denote their care of the fruits consecrated by the Israelites, nor the government of those who gathered those fruits; but some authority over the Israelites themselves, such as is described in the following verse. See Bertram, De Repub. Jud. p. 126, whose opinion is approved by Conringius; which is, that they were assessors with the ordinary judges.

Over Israel,] Not over all the people of Israel, but over a part of them: for those about Jordan were under another jurisdiction, as appears by the next verse.

For officers and judges,] For such employments as are mentioned in the following verse.

Ver. 30. And of the Hebronites, Hashabiah and his brethren, men of valour, a thousand and seven hundred, were officers] This was a vast number: therefore their officers were of several sorts (as it follows) not only in divine, but in civil affairs.

In all business of the Lord and in the service of the king,] The work or "business of the Lord," was to take care of all things belonging to religion: among which divine employments, no doubt this was the chief, to judge the people according to the law of God; and to see their sentence put in execution. For their judges "judged for the Lord," as Jehoshaphat tells them, 2 Chron. xix. 6, and they had officers called shoterim, to see their judgment take effect. But the word shoterim doth not signify merely the ministers of the judges, but also such persons who had some ministry committed to them, to correct offenders and to punish them, or to bring them before the judges, to be punished by them. For they are not only joined with judges (as I have often before observed), but frequently put before them in this book; and therefore it is hard to find one word to comprehend the whole work of these officers; who were employed both in peace and in war, as our learned Nic. Fuller observes, in his Miscellanies, lib. ii. cap. 20.

As for "the business of the king," some think it was the gathering his tribute, or perhaps publishing his orders and commands, and the like (see Grotius, De Jure Sum. Pot. circa Sacra, p. 390).

Ver. 31. Among the Hebronites was Jerijah the and there were found among them mighty men of valour at Jazer of Gilead.

32 And his brethren, men of valour, were two thousand and seven hundred chief fathers, whom king David made rulers over the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, for every matter pertaining to God, and affairs of the king.

chief,] He was the principal person among the sons of Hebron, as we find before, xxiii. 19.

In the fortieth year of the reign of David they were sought for, and there were found among them mighty men of valour at Jazer of Gilead,] In the last year of king David's reign, not only these things mentioned in this chapter were established, but all the other ordinances which we read of in the foregoing, as the Hebrew commentators observe. And his care extended itself to the utmost parts of his dominions, where he sought for men fit to be put into these offices, on the other side of Jordan: and found many persons of great courage at Jazer in Gilead, and the territory belonging to it; among whom Jerijah was the chief: Jazer was a city given to the children of Merari (Josh. xxi. 39).

Ver. 32. And his brethren, men of valour, were two thousand and seven hundred chief fathers, whom David made rulers] This was a great number to be employed in so small a country, when on the other side of Jordan (besides those under Chenaniah) there were but one thousand and seven hundred. But the reason was, that they lived a great way from Jerusalem, and therefore needed more to inspect and admonish them of their duty, lest they should forget their relation to the temple, or grow sluggish in the worship of God, or embrace the religion of their neighbours, as Pellicanus observes.

For every matter pertaining to God, and affairs of the king,] It was the more necessary there should be such a number of officers among them, to keep them in their obedience to the king, as well as in their duty to God. For there was danger of their desertion from their sovereign, who lived at a great distance, and was separated from them by the river Jordan. And nothing could be more pernicious, as he likewise observes, than the rending of the kingdom and neglect of the divine service.

From these words it appears very plainly, as Johannes Vostius notes (in his dissertation De Syne-driis Hebæorum, sect. 36), that the same persons took care of the things or causes pertaining to God, and those concerning the king. For nothing hindered that one and the same college of judges might judge both kind of things, whether spiritual, as we distinguish, or civil. And he thinks no interpretation of the things of God, and the things of the king, is so probable as that which I have given before: that by the things of God are meant such things as might be judged by the divine law, and the things of the king, such as could not be determined by the law, but were left to the judgment of the king; who could not abrogate the ancient laws, being bound to study the book of the law all the days of his life (Deut. xvii.), and judge according to it. But all things being not there defined, or not so clearly and plainly that they could be determined by those laws, the king, or those whom he entrusted in his stead, gave sentence in such matters, and could make new laws, provided they did not contradict the old.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 The twelve captains for every several month. 16 The princes of the twelve tribes. 23 The numbering of the people is hindered. 25 David's several officers.

1 Now the children of Israel after their number, to wit, the chief fathers and captains of thousands and hundreds, and their officers that served the king in any matter of the courses, which came in and went out month by month throughout all the months of the year, of every course were twenty and four thousand.

2 Over the first course for the first month was Jashobeam the son of Zabdiel: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

3 Of the children of Perez was the chief of all the captains of the host for the first month.

4 And over the course of the second month was Dodai an Ahohite, and of his course was Mikloth also the ruler: in his course likewise were twenty and four thousand.

5 The third captain of the host for the third month was Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, a chief priest: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

6 This is that Benaiah, who was mighty among the thirty, and above the thirty: and in his course was Ammizabad his son.

7 The fourth captain for the fourth month was Asahel the brother of Joab, and Zebadiah his son after him: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

8 The fifth captain for the fifth month was Shammuth the Izrahite: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

9 The sixth captain for the sixth month was Ira the son of Ikesh the Tekoite: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

10 The seventh captain for the seventh month was Helez the Pelonite, of the children of Ephraim: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

11 The eighth captain for the eighth month was Sibbecai the Hushathite, of the Zarhites: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

12 The ninth captain for the ninth month

CHAP. XXVII.

Ver. 1.] After the settlement of ecclesiastical affairs, here is an account given how the militia, as we may call it, of the kingdom was settled in such order that it might be serviceable. They were distributed into twelve legions, consisting each of twenty-four thousand men; who were commanded by one of the chief of the fathers: under whom there were captains of thousands, such as we now call colonels, which were twenty-four in every legion, commanding a thousand men. And then centurions under them, or captains of hundreds; and under them inferior officers. Each of these generals attended, with the legions, one month, for the security of the king and kingdom, at the end of which they marched off, and another legion, with their general, succeeded. So that their course came but once in a year, for one month, which made it no considerable burden to them; there being so many valiant men then in the nation, that without much damage such a number might be in arms for so short a season. Pellicanus thinks this order was instituted in the beginning of David's reign, but was interrupted by many wars he had abroad; and not renewed till his last years, when he established it again, and left his kingdom to Solomon thus governed. See Bertram, De Repub. Jud. p. 133, who observes, that after this we never read of the Cherethites and Pelethites, these troops being settled in their room.

Ver. 2.] Now he sets down the names of the chief commander of every legion: and Jashobeam seems to have been the first of his mighty men, mentioned xi. 11; 2 Sam. xxiii. 8.

Ver. 3.] The renowned Jashobeam was of the children of Pharez, the son of Judah; which tribe had the honour to have the first chief commander chosen out of it.

Ver. 4.] This Dodo (as he is called in 2 Sam. xxiii. 9) was another of David's mighty men, who had for his lieutenant (when he was absent) Mikloth; who, we may suppose, is therefore here mentioned, because he was a person of great eminence, and had some considerable command in this course.

Ver. 5. A chief priest:] Or rather, "a chief prince," as the Hebrew word cohen often signifies (see upon 2 Sam. viii. 18; xx. 26): for it is certain neither Benaiah nor his father was high-priest, or second-priest; but Abiathar and Zadok were in those offices.

Ver. 6. This is that Benaiah who was mighty among the thirty,] He was one of David's worthies, who had done such mighty acts, that this divine writer did not think fit here to mention him, without a mark of honour set upon him (see 2 Sam. xxiii. 20, 23).

And in his course was Ammizabad his son.] He was his deputy, when his father could not attend this duty himself; having another office of great dignity, wherein he served as captain of the Cherethites and Pelethites (2 Sam. viii. 18). Of whom, I observed before, we never read after the time of David: but it is likely were kept up while they lived, though there was no need of them, after these courses were settled.

Ver. 7. The fourth captain for the fourth month was Asahel] This confirms Pellicanus's opinion, that David instituted these courses in the beginning of his reign: for Asahel was killed while David reigned in Hebron, before he was king over all Israel, and settled at Jerusalem. He also was one of David's worthies (2 Sam. xxiii. 24).

And Zebadiah his son after him:] He had the honour to succeed his father in this great command, when he was slain.

Ver. 8.] It is probable, that this was that valiant man called Shammah, 2 Sam. xxiii. 11, and Shammath in this book, xi. 27.

Ver. 9.] He is mentioned among the thirty mighty in 2 Sam. xxiii. 26, and in this book, xi. 28.

Ver. 10.] He is called the Paltite in 2 Sam. xxiii. 26, and, for the honour of that tribe, he is said here to be of the "children of Ephraim."

Ver. 11.] One of that family that was eminent in the tribe of Judah descended from Caleb (ii. 53). He slew one of the sons of the giant, in a battle with the Philistines (2 Sam. xxi. 18).

Ver. 12.] He also is mentioned among the thirty mighty men in (2 Sam. xxiii. 27).

was Abiezer the Anetothite, of the Benjamites: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

13 The tenth captain for the tenth month was Maharai the Netophathite, of the Zarhites: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

14 The eleventh captain for the eleventh month was Benaiah the Pirathonite, of the children of Ephraim: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

15 The twelfth captain for the twelfth month was Heldai the Netophathite, of Othniel: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

16 ¶ Furthermore over the tribes of Israel: the ruler of the Reubenites was Eliezer the son of Ziehri: of the Simeonites, Shephatiah the son of Maachab:

17 Of the Levites, Hashabiah the son of Kemuel: of the Aaronites, Zadok:

18 Of Judah, Elihu, one of the brethren of David: of Issachar, Omri the son of Michael;

Ver. 13.] One of the same mighty men (2 Sam. xxiii. 28).

Ver. 14.] Who is also there mentioned, ver. 30, but here it is added of what tribe he was.

Ver. 15.] He is called Heled in this book, ch. xi. 30, and Heleb in 2 Sam. xxiii. 29.

Ver. 16. Furthermore over the tribes of Israel:] Besides the twelve great captains before mentioned, who commanded, each of them, twenty and four thousand men: every tribe had a ruler (who are called "the princes of the tribes of Israel," ver. 22), who had the chief authority among them, under the king.

The ruler of the Reubenites was Eliezer] He reckons up the tribes in order according to their birth-right, by Leah.

Ver. 17. Of the Levites, Hashabiah the son of Kemuel:] He is mentioned before (xxvi. 30).

Of the Aaronites, Zadok:] They were not a distinct tribe, but of a distinct order, from the rest of the Levites: and therefore had a peculiar chief to preside over them, viz. Zadok. Who (as Bertram thinks) had the chief authority at the tabernacle in Gibeon, as Abiathar had at Jerusalem, where the ark was.

Ver. 18. Of Judah, Elihu,] Called Eliab in 1 Sam. xvi. 6.

Of Issachar, Omri the son of Michael:] He was the fifth son of Leah, and therefore is reckoned next to Judah, who was the fourth (Gen. xxx. 17, 18).

Ver. 19. Of Zebulun, Ishmaiah the son of Obadiah:] He was the next son of Leah (Gen. xxx. 20).

Of Naphtali, Jerimoth the son of Azriel:] Though Dan was the first-born of Bilhah (Gen. xxx. 6), yet that tribe is put last, and Naphtali, who was the next son, put before him. For what reason we cannot tell.

Ver. 20.] This is meant of that half tribe, which had its portion on this side Jordan, near to Ephraim.

Ver. 21. Of the half tribe of Manasseh in Gilead,] On the other side Jordan, where the Reubenites and Gadites were.

Iddo the son of Zechariah:] It doth not appear of what family he was, but it is likely one of that tribe.

Of Benjamin, Jaasiel the son of Abner:] It seems the family of Abner, who was the greatest man in the kingdom of Israel, continued in high authority after his death.

Ver. 22.] That is, of those tribes before mentioned. But Gad and Asher are omitted, of which we can give no certain account: perhaps they were under

19 Of Zebulun, Ishmaiah the son of Obadiah: of Naphtali, Jerimoth the son of Azriel:

20 Of the children of Ephraim, Hoshea the son of Azariah: of the half tribe of Manasseh, Joel the son of Pedaiah:

21 Of the half tribe of Manasseh in Gilead, Iddo the son of Zechariah: of Benjamin, Jaasiel the son of Abner:

22 Of Dan, Azareel the son of Jeroham. These were the princes of the tribes of Israel.

23 ¶ But David took not the number of them from twenty years old and under: because the LORD had said he would increase Israel like to the stars of heaven.

24 Joab the son of Zeruiah began to number, but he finished not, because there fell wrath for it against Israel: neither was the number put in the account of the chronicles of king David.

25 ¶ And over the king's treasures was Azmaveth the son of Adiel: and over the storehouses in the fields, in the cities, and in the the government of the ruler of some neighbouring tribe. For Asher, dwelling in very narrow bounds between Naphtali and Zebulun, might be under the command of him that governed either of them: and Gad, some think, was comprehended under the Reubenites.

Ver. 23. But David took not the number of them] That is, of Israel, whom he had spoken of before.

From twenty years old and under:] But only of those who were above the age of twenty years.

Because the Lord had said he would increase Israel like to the stars of heaven.] This was the reason, Pellicanus thinks, that God was so angry with David for numbering the people: which he had promised should be so many, that they should not be numbered. Which promise God would have to be believed, without attempting to prove the truth of it. But these words seem to me to confute that opinion: for they rather signify, that David forbore to number all the people, because he would not question that promise, and contented himself with an account of those that were fit to go to war, xxi. 4 (see my notes upon 2 Sam. xxiv. 10).

Ver. 24. Joab the son of Zeruiah began to number, but he finished not,] For he did not number those of Levi and Benjamin; as we read before in this book, ch. xxi. 6.

Because there fell wrath for it against Israel;] This seems to import, that before Joab had finished his account the plague began; which put a stop to his proceedings.

Neither was the number put in the account of the chronicles of king David.] An account of the number as far as he went, was given by Joab to the king: but the king being sensible of his error, would not have it recorded in the public registers of the kingdom, as other things of daily occurrence were. Yet the memory of it is preserved in these holy books, to teach all posterity not to put their trust in the arm of flesh.

Ver. 25.] The former of these was the principal officer in the exchequer, as we now speak, who received the king's money from the under-officers, and was accountable for it; and lived at Jerusalem, where he issued it out, according to the king's orders. But there was another in the country out of Jerusalem, who received the tribute of all kinds, which the people were to pay him: which he laid up in storehouses, that were built in several places for that purpose.

villages, and in the castles, was Jehonathan the son of Uziah:

26 And over them that did the work of the field for tillage of the ground was Ezri the son of Chelub:

27 And over the vineyards was Shimei the Ramathite: over the increase of the vineyards for the wine cellars was Zabdi the Shiphmite:

28 And over the olive trees and the sycamore trees that were in the low plains was Baal-hanan the Gederite: and over the cellars of oil was Joash:

29 And over the herds that fed in Sharon was Shitrai the Sharonite: and over the herds that were in the valleys was Shaphat the son of Adlai:

Ver. 26.] Besides the tribute paid by the people of corn, wine, oil, &c. the king had land of his own: where he kept servants to till the ground. And this person was set over them, to see they were not idle, and that they were honest in gathering the fruits of the earth, and sending them to the storehouses.

Ver. 27. And over the vineyards was Shimei] He looked after the vine-dressers.

Over the increase of vineyards for the wine cellars was Zabdi the Shiphmite:] His office was to see the wine pressed out of the grapes, and carried into the cellars; where it was laid up.

Ver. 28. And over the olive trees, and the sycamore trees that were in the low plains was Baal-hanan the Gederite:] This shows that David was a great husbandman, as we speak, and had ground proper for all sort of fruits; which was managed by his own servants. For, as I have often observed, the greatest men in those times studied the improvement of their ground, of what sort soever it was.

And over the cellars of oil was Joash:] It appears, from many places, that a great part of their revenue lay in oil: which required great care, as wine did, in the looking after it.

Ver. 29.] He had great store of cattle also in his pastures, particularly in Sharon, which was a place noted for its fruitfulness, as we read in the prophet Isaiah, ch. xxxiii. 9; xxxv. 2. And so St. Jerome testifies, Omnis regio Saron, &c. "all the region of Saron" about Lydda, Joppa, and Jamnia, was apt for feeding of flocks (see Isa. lxx. 10). There was another Sharon besides this near the Mediterranean, which was in the east beyond Jordan (as I observed upon ch. v. 16 of this book), where the Gadites inhabited, who abounded in cattle: and therefore were planted by Moses in this region, and in Bashan, which was another rich country for pasture (see L'Empereur, upon Bava-kama). And therefore here David, it is likely, bred a great many cattle both in the mountains and in valleys; and had particular officers to look after them, they being very many. For here, as he observes out of Maimonides, there were great numbers of calves bred, which women had the care of, and were brought from hence to other places to be sold.

Ver. 30. Over the camels also was Obil the Ishmaelite:] An Ishmaelite was the fittest person to look after the breed of camels, because that country abounded with them, and they best understood their nature. And this person seems to have had his name from his office. For as ibil, in Arabic, signifies a camel, so abal, and abil, a keeper of camels: as Bochart notes in his Hierozycon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 2.

And over the asses was Jehdeiah the Meronothite:] This was a great part of men's riches in old times; for we find Ana feeding his father's asses in Gen.

30 Over the camels also was Obil the Ishmaelite: and over the asses was Jehdeiah the Meronothite:

31 And over the flocks was Jaziz the Hagerite. All these were the rulers of the substance which was king David's.

32 Also Jonathan David's uncle was a counsellor, a wise man, and a scribe: and Jehiel the son of Hachmoni was with the king's sons:

33 And Ahithophel was the king's counsellor: and Hushai the Archite was the king's companion:

34 And after Ahithophel was Jehoiada the son of Benaiah, and Abiathar: and the general of the king's army was Joab.

xxxvi. 24. In which book we find them reckoned among the wealth of the ancient patriarchs: and the Israelites took no less than threescore and one thousand of them from the Midianites, Numb. xxxi. 34. And in this book we read of two thousand taken from the Hagarites (ch. v. 21). And when the Jews returned out of the captivity of Babylon, they were become so rich, that they brought away with them six thousand seven hundred and twenty asses; as Nehemiah relates, ch. vii. 69.

Ver. 31.] The flocks of sheep, no doubt, were very numerous; but among all the flocks and herds there is no mention made of swine, as Bochart observes. Nor had the patriarchs any that we read of, when mention is made of their possessions. Nor had Job any in Arabia, though he had a vast number of other cattle. Nor did the Israelites ever take any of these as spoil from their enemies. And therefore Gedara, where swine were kept in Judea (as we read in the gospel), was a Greek city, not a Jewish, as Josephus tells us (see Hierozycon, par. i. lib. i. cap. 51).

Ver. 32. Also Jonathan David's uncle was a counsellor, a wise man, and a scribe:] He was one of the privy-council; being a man of great wisdom, and also skilful in the law: for so the word sopher (which we translate scribe) signifies. A very learned author thinks it signifies a secretary of state, or rather chancellor.

Jehiel—was with the king's sons:] He also, no doubt, was a man of great understanding, being a tutor, as we speak, or governor to the king's sons.

Ver. 33.] Ahithophel seems to have been president of the council: but Hushai was his favourite (being called David's friend), in whose company he most delighted, and whom he trusted with his greatest secrets.

Ver. 34. After Ahithophel was Jehoiada the son of Benaiah, and Abiathar:] After Ahithophel had destroyed himself, these two were the principal counsellors; as Kimchi and other Jewish doctors understand these words. But others think the meaning is, that next to him these two were accounted the ablest men that David advised withal: but after him, for he was esteemed the man of greatest prudence.

And the general of the king's army was Joab.] The Targum hath a strange exposition of this verse, which is this: When there was war to be made, they consulted Ahithophel, and after that they asked counsel of urim and thummim by Jehoiada, the head of the Sanhedrin; and by Abiathar the high-priest: and so the Cherethites and Pelethites, by the authority of urim and thummim, went to fight under the command of Joab, the general of the army. In the exposition of which there are a great many foolish descants, which I shall not mention.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 David in a solemn assembly having declared God's favour to him, and promise to his son Solomon, exhorteth them to fear God. 9, 20 He encourageth Solomon to build the temple. 11 He giveth him patterns for the form, and gold and silver for the materials.

1 AND David assembled all the princes of Israel, the princes of the tribes, and the captains of the companies that ministered to the king by course, and the captains over the thousands, and captains over the hundreds, and the stewards over all the substance and possession of the king, and of his sons, with the officers, and with the mighty men, and with all the valiant men, unto Jerusalem.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Ver. 1. David assembled all the princes of Israel, the princes of the tribes.] These seem to be the same, one being the explication of the other; and they are those persons mentioned ver. 16, 17, &c. of the foregoing chapter.

And the captains of the companies] That is, those great commanders, over four-and-twenty thousand apiece, mentioned in the beginning of the foregoing chapter.

The captains over the thousands, and captains over the hundreds.] The commanders of every one of those thousands, with the centurions who commanded the several companies, consisting of a hundred.

The stewards over all the substance and possession of the king.] Who are mentioned also in verse 25, 26, &c. of the foregoing chapter: and appear by this to have been considerable persons.

With the officers.] Who were about his person.

With the mighty men, and with all the valiant men.] Those who were eminent for their services in war, of whom he had spoken in ch. xi. xii.

Unto Jerusalem.] All these he called to attend him in the chief city of the kingdom, that he might commend Solomon to them as his successor, and this government which he had settled (see Bertram, De Repub. Jud. p. 150). This seems to have been a distinct assembly from that mentioned ch. xxiii. 2, being more general, and consisting of many persons, who were not then in such offices as are here named.

Ver. 2. Then David the king stood up upon his feet, and said.] He was sitting in his throne, I suppose, when they came in, but then stood up in respect to so great an assembly, and that he might be the better heard. When he first declared Solomon to be his successor, and caused him to be anointed, he lay upon his bed, being very palsied and decrepit, as we read 1 Kings i. But intending now to have him anointed again, in the midst of his princes and great commanders (ch. xxix. 22), whom he could not assemble, when on a sudden he commanded him to be anointed before; he roused up himself, and rose from his couch, and came out of his chamber, and made orations, and gave advice for things to come, as Dr. Lightfoot observes.

Hear me, my brethren, and my people.] He calls the great men his brethren, both because they had a share in the government with him, and to express his affection to them. It is likely they were attended by some other persons, whom he calls my people.

I had in mine heart to build a house of rest for the ark] A fixed place, where the ark might be settled, and not carried about, as it had been hitherto (2 Sam. vii. 1).

2 Then David the king stood up upon his feet, and said, Hear me, my brethren, and my people: As for me, I had in mine heart to build an house of rest for the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and for the footstool of our God, and had made ready for the building:

3 But God said unto me, Thou shalt not build an house for my name, because thou hast been a man of war, and hast shed blood.

And for the footstool of our God.] Here the conjunction and, as our Mr. Mede observes, is exegetical, and the same with that is: according to which expression, the prophet Jeremiah saith (Lam. ii. 1), that the Lord had cast "down the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool (that is, the ark of the covenant, which was their glory), in the day of his anger," book i. p. 500. For the divine glory sitting upon the wings of the cherubims, over the mercy-seat (Ps. lxxx. 2), his feet, as we speak after the manner of men, rest upon the ark; and therefore the Targum thus paraphrases it, "The footstool of the throne of glory." And thence it is sometimes called, "The ark of the covenant of the Lord of hosts, who sitteth upon the cherubims" (1 Sam. iv. 4).

And had made ready for the building.] Laid up great treasures, which he designed to defray the charges of the building (see ch. xxii).

Ver. 3. But God said unto me.] In the Targum, The Memra, "Word of the Lord."

Thou shalt not build an house for my name, because thou hast been a man of war, and hast shed blood.] See my notes upon ch. xxii. 8. To which I shall here add, that bloodshed was accounted a thing so heinous, that though one had killed another only accidentally, yet he was bound to flee for it to a city of refuge, or else he might have been killed himself. And among the ancient Greeks (as Petitus shows, in his book of the Attic laws, lib. vii. p. 512), he that killed another involuntarily, was banished from his country for a year. But David is here forbidden to build God a temple, merely because he had been engaged in war and bloodshed, though it was on a pious account. And thus also among the ancient Greeks, (as Grotius observes), they stood in need of an expiation, who, without any blame, had defiled their hands in blood. And accordingly, among the Greek Christians there was a canon, long observed in that church, which kept men from the holy communion for a time, who had killed an enemy in any war (see lib. ii. De Jure Belli et Pacis, cap. 25, sect. 9). But Osiander, considering this passage in Grotius, thinks, that in these words, David's warring and bloodshed are not alleged, ratione alicujus vitii, &c. "upon the account of any blemish," which hindered him from building a house for God, but merely upon the account of the vast business wherein he was engaged: for, being employed continually in warlike actions, he was not at leisure for such a building; which was to be the work of peace and quietness. David also is expressly said to have managed the wars of the Lord, being but his instrument to punish the enemies of his people Israel; and therefore could not be blemished by being thus employed to God, nor made incapable thereby to build his temple. For he gloried and triumphed

4 Howbeit the LORD God of Israel chose me before all the house of my father to be king over Israel for ever: for he hath chosen Judah to be the ruler; and of the house of Judah, the house of my father; and among the sons of my father he liked me, to make me king over all Israel:

5 And of all my sons (for the LORD hath given me many sons) he hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the LORD over Israel.

6 And he said unto me, Solomon thy son, he shall build my house and my courts: for I have chosen him to be my son, and I will be his father.

7 Moreover, I will establish his kingdom for ever, if he be constant to do my commandments and my judgments, as at this day.

8 Now therefore in the sight of all Israel, the congregation of the LORD, and in the audience of our God, keep and seek for all the commandments of the LORD your God, that ye may possess this good land, and leave it for an inheritance for your children after you for ever.

9 ¶ And thou, Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind: for the LORD searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts: if thou seek him, he will be found of thee; but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off for ever.

10 Take heed now; for the LORD hath chosen thee to build a house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it.

11 ¶ Then David gave to Solomon his son the pattern of the porch, and of the houses thereof, and of the treasures thereof, and of the upper chambers thereof, and of the inner parlours thereof, and of the place of the mercy seat.

in these wars, and in the victories he got: for which he sung praise to God, Ps. lx. Add to all this, that the account which Solomon gives to Hiram, why his father did not build God a house, was, that he was otherwise employed (1 Kings v. 3). But I leave this to better judgments.

Ver. 4. The Lord God of Israel chose me before all the house of my father.] See 1 Sam. xvi. 13; Ps. lxxviii. 68.

For he hath chosen Judah] See Gen. xlix. 10.

And of the house of Judah,—and among the sons of my father he liked me, to make me king] For till his days it was not known out of what family of Judah a king should be chosen, from whom the Messiah should come.

Ver. 5.] For he was beloved of God from his birth (2 Sam. xii. 25), and plainly designed by God to be his successor (2 Sam. vii. 13, and here in this book, ch. xxii. 9). So that David sware he should reign after him, and accordingly performed it (1 Kings i. 17, 35). This he declares now to them all, when he was going out of the world: that they might reverence Solomon as a person placed upon the throne by divine appointment; and not out of any partial and fond affection of his to him, preferred before his elder brethren.

Ver. 6.] See 2 Sam. vii. 13, and this book, chap. xxii. 9.

Ver. 7.] The last words import, that hitherto Solomon was very towardsly (as we speak), and gave great hopes he would continue steadfast in his obedience to God, as his father David had done.

Ver. 8. In the sight of all Israel] Who were here present by their representatives: to whom he now addresses his speech, that they might give the same exhortation to their neighbours.

And in the audience of our God.] Who was present in all their public assemblies, as I have noted upon Judg. xx. 1 (see there).

Keep and seek all the commandments of the Lord your God.] It is not enough to know the will of God, if we do not keep it; that is, observe his commands, and live in the practice of our duty. But that we may know it, it is necessary to seek it; that is, to inquire after it, and study the laws of God. For no man (as Grotius here observes) shall be excused by a supine ignorance.

That ye may possess this good land.] It was in vain to expect the continuance of God's favour to them, who had brought them into this good land, unless they continued steadfast in his obedience.

This was the only way to settlement in their possessions.

Ver. 9. Thou, Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy father.] To know God is, in scripture language, to acknowledge and love him. As God is said to know the way of the righteous; that is, to approve and love it (Ps. i. ult.). Solomon had the greater reason to do this, because God had been so very gracious to his father David, and chosen him, before all his brethren, to be his successor.

And serve him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind.] His love was to be expressed by obedience to God, and that entirely and cheerfully: out of choice, not by constraint; not to gain the good opinion of men, but the favour of God. For hearty piety, and not merely the outward appearance of it, is the surest support of a prince's power and authority: and will dispose his subjects to love and reverence him as sincerely as he doth God.

For the Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts.] He presses him with two arguments unto sincerity in his obedience. The first is in these words; because God cannot be deceived with external services; for he looks into the hearts, and discerns the most secret motions there: which cannot be hid from him, but he is privy to every thought, and to the very beginning of them.

If thou seek him, he will be found of thee.] This is the other argument; God is not tied to any man, but upon condition of his hearty obedience. As he behaves himself towards God, so God will deal with him.

Ver. 10. Take heed now; for the Lord hath chosen thee to build a house for the sanctuary.] That is, for the ark to dwell in, for that was the principal furniture of the sanctuary. The Targum thus expresses it, "The Memra, Word of the Lord, hath chosen thee," &c.

Be strong, and do it.] Being a young man, he might be discouraged from undertaking so great a work: but he bids him go about it strenuously, because God had chosen him to do it.

Ver. 11. Then David gave to Solomon his son the pattern of the porch, and of the houses thereof.] Abartinel is very confident that the word ulam, which we translate porch, is a general word used in this place for the whole house. The description of which David gave Solomon, with all the apartments belonging to it: especially of the houses thereof, which were two: the outward, called, the holy place, and the in-

12 And the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit, of the courts of the house of the Lord, and of all the chambers round about, of the treasuries of the house of God, and of the treasuries of the dedicated things:

13 Also for the courses of the priests and the Levites, and for all the work of the service of the house of the Lord, and for all the vessels of service in the house of the Lord,

14 He gave of gold by weight for things of gold, for all instruments of all manner of service; silver also for all instruments of silver by weight, for all instruments of every kind of service:

15 Even the weight for the candlesticks of gold, and for their lamps of gold, by weight for every candlestick, and for the lamps thereof; and for the candlesticks of silver by weight, both for the candlestick, and also for the lamps thereof, according to the use of every candlestick.

16 And by weight he gave gold for the tables of shew-bread, for every table; and likewise silver for the tables of silver:

17 Also pure gold for the flesh-hooks, and the bowls, and the cups: and for the golden basons he gave gold by weight for every bason; and likewise silver by weight for every bason of silver:

18 And for the altar of incense refined gold by weight; and gold for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubims, that spread out their wings, and covered the ark of the covenant of the Lord.

19 All this, said David, the Lord made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern.

ward, called the holy of holies, which were distinct houses, being separated by a partition: and accordingly the former is called the greater house, (2 Chron. iii. 5), being much larger in its dimensions, than the other. At the entrance of which there was a porch, the model of which David gave him, as well as of the houses.

And of the treasuries thereof, and of the upper chambers thereof, and of the inner parlours] There were several rooms against the walls of the house round about, as we read 1 Kings vi. 5, which are here called by several names, according to the use wherein they were employed. And the forenamed, Abarbinel here observes, out of Middoth, and Tamid, and other books, that the temple was built like a high tower, reaching up to heaven, there being three upper stories one above another, and the first story three times higher than that of Moses, viz. thirty cubits.

And of the place of the mercy seat,] Where that should be placed, in the "holy of holies."

Ver. 12. And the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit,] In the Hebrew, "of all that he had in the Spirit with him;" that is, inspired into him. It being a house for God to dwell in, it was fit that it should not be of a mere human, but of a divine contrivance, as the tabernacle built by Moses was. Therefore God suggested to David by his Spirit, how he would have it made in all the parts before mentioned, and in those that follow: for those words refer to both (see ver. 19).

Of the courts of the house of the Lord, and of all the chambers round about,] How large the courts should be, and how many, and what rooms adjoining to them, was all ordered by a special direction from God.

Of the treasuries of the house of God, and of the treasuries of the dedicated things:] From the last words most are of opinion, it may be concluded, that in these places all the utensils belonging to the tabernacle which Moses made, and the tabernacle itself (which was no longer used after Solomon's temple was built), were laid up and preserved. By which, perhaps, was signified, as Constantine L'Empereur conjectures (upon Middoth p. 87), that all the ceremonies of Moses should one day be decently laid aside, and something better come in their room.

Ver. 13.] He disposed of the courses of the priests and Levites (before mentioned) by the same Spirit, and how they should be employed, and what vessels they should use in God's service.

Ver. 14.] He gave materials also, in a just proportion to the instruments that were to be made, either of gold or silver.

Ver. 15.] By this we learn that there were candlesticks of silver, as well as of gold. The former of which were lesser, to be carried in their hands from place to place, as there was occasion. But the latter were fixed in the sanctuary, and in Solomon's house were ten in number (1 Kings vi. 49).

Ver. 16.] There was but one table for the show-bread, but there were several others attending upon it, whereon were set such vessels as belonged to it. For as he made more candlesticks than were in the tabernacle, so it appears by this he also augmented the tables, which were no less than ten (2 Chron. iv. 8).

Ver. 17.] Assigning such a portion of gold or silver to every bason, as would make it as large as he proposed. Many of the Jews, by the Hebrew word kepuri (which we translate basons), understand spoons, which had the figure of oxen and lions on the head of them; which they imagine was the beginning of Solomon's offence. But the word rather imports some vessel, wherein they received the blood of the sacrifice of expiation.

Ver. 18. For the altar of incense refined gold.] It was covered with gold, as the cherubims were, 1 Kings vii. 49.

And gold for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubims, that spread out their wings, and covered the ark of the covenant of the Lord.] It seems David contrived these two cherubims, besides those which Moses had made. Of which see what I have noted upon 1 Kings vi. 23, 28. They are called the chariot, because God is said not only to sit, but "to ride upon the cherubims" (Ps. xviii. 10), as the Lord of hosts: and therefore they are described in Ezekiel, as having wheels on which they ran. The other made by Moses were most properly his seat, but these represented him as filling the whole house.

Ver. 19.] God made him understand all this so plainly and distinctly, as if it had been written on his mind as the ten commandments were upon the tables of stone in the mount. But some of the Jews think the meaning is, that God revealed these things first to some of the prophets, Samuel, (iv. 22), or Nathan, or Gad, who delivered all to David in writing as the mind of God. However it was, God was pleased thus himself to give instructions about the structure of the temple, and all belonging to it; that it might breed in the people's mind a greater reverence when they came to worship him there: and, as Joseph de Voysin observes, the Jews in Bernacoth say, that their minds might be lifted up, when they came to the temple, from earthly things, to things spiritual and celestial.

20 And David said to Solomon his son, Be strong and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed: for the LORD God, even my God, will be with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the LORD.

21 And, behold, the courses of the priests and

Ver. 20. David said to Solomon his son, Be strong and of good courage, and do it:.] He repeats what he had said before (ver. 10), the more to excite and encourage him to this work, which was to do the work of God.

Fear not, nor be dismayed:.] He thought that he might possibly fear disturbance from enemies abroad, of which David had a great many: but he bids him be confident, he should not be disquieted in his work, which should go on prosperously, by the blessing of God, till it was finished. Of which he might be the more assured, if he reflected how God had blessed David himself all his life long.

the Levites, even they shall be with thee for all the service of the house of God: and there shall be with thee, for all manner of workmanship, every willing skilful man, for any manner of service; also the princes and all the people will be wholly at thy commandment.

Ver. 21.] It is a probable conjecture of Conradus Pellicanus, that he now presented Solomon with a list of all the courses of God's ministers, as God had directed him to establish them; assuring him that God would dispose them to be serviceable unto him in all that he had to do for the carrying on of the work. Which should have the help and assistance of all other skilful persons, whom he would make willing to further it; and that he would make all the princes and the people obedient to him in all things. This was one reason, no doubt, of calling this assembly together, that they might be engaged to be aiding to Solomon in promoting so pious a work.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 David, by his example and intreaty, 6 causeth the princes and people to offer willingly. 10 David's thanksgiving and prayer. 20 The people, having blessed God, and sacrificed, make Solomon king. 26 David's reign and death.

1 FURTHERMORE, David the king said unto all the congregation, Solomon my son, whom God alone hath chosen, is yet young and tender, and the work is great: for the palace is not for man, but for the LORD God.

2 Now I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God the gold for things to be made of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and the brass for things of brass, the iron for things of iron, and wood for things of wood; onyx stones, and stones to be set, glistening stones, and of divers colours, and all manner of precious stones, and marble stones in abundance.

3 Moreover, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house,

4 Even three thousand talents of gold, of the gold of Ophir, and seven thousand talents of refined silver, to overlay the walls of the houses withal:

CHAP. XXIX.

Ver. 1. He stirs them up to the assistance of his son by these considerations, that he was a person chosen by God, not by him, for this work; and yet he needed their help, because he was but a youth (see 1 Kings iii. 7), and the work itself was to be very magnificent, suitable to the majesty that was to dwell therein, viz. the Lord himself; who dwells not, (as the apostle speaks) "in temples made with hands," but was present there by a glorious light, which represented his majesty.

Ver. 2.] We read of his great preparation for this building before (ch. xxii. 14, &c.), only nothing is said there concerning precious stones; the use of which, in the ornament of any part of the temple, is not known. Ludolphus, speaking of the word phuc, which we translate glistening, saith, that as David provided all things for the fabric of the temple, so he provided for the clothing of the priests with rich garments, and also with such things as were good for bodily health, as this was, which was not only χορηγισμός, "for ornament," but διαφαινετικός, "for medicine and preservation of health." But perhaps phuc being famous among those things which women used for setting off their beauty, it may possibly here be a metaphorical word, for all such stones as may set off the building (see his Commentary upon the Ethiopic History, lib. i. cap. 7, n. 51).

Ver. 3.] Besides what he had devoted and dedicated to this use, he gave, out of what remained for his own occasions, a further sum for the building of the house, which is mentioned in the next verse.

Ver. 4. The gold of Ophir,] The gold of Ophir here mentioned was that which came out of Arabia, where Bochartus hath proved, there was a country of that name abounding with gold. For in David's time the Ophir of India was not known, Solomon being the first that attempted a long voyage thither. So are we to understand the word Ophir in the book of Job (xxii. 24, xxviii. 16); for in his time they had not learned to traffic into those far distant countries where the other Ophir in India was (see my notes on 1 Kings ix. 18). This gold here mentioned was of a purer sort than that in chap. xxii. 11, which was coarser than the gold of Ophir.

And seven thousand talents of refined silver, to overlay the walls of the houses withal:.] There are two things which Dr. Lighfoot hath remarked in these two verses. One is, that it is said this preparation was above what he had prepared for the holy house, and yet he saith he had prepared it for the house of God. The other is, that mention is made here of silver to overlay the house withal; whereas it is evident, that within the house itself all the overlaying was of gold. Therefore it is thus to be understood, that besides the store of gold that David had 5 The gold for things of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and for all manner of work to be made by the hands of artificers. And who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the LORD?

6 ¶ Then the chief of the fathers, and princes of the tribes of Israel, and the captains of thousands and of hundreds, with the rulers of the king's work, offered willingly,

7 And gave for the service of the house of God of gold five thousand talents and ten thousand drams; and of silver ten thousand talents; and of brass eighteen thousand talents, and one hundred thousand talents of iron.

8 And they with whom precious stones were found gave them to the treasure of the house of the LORD, by the hand of Jehiel the Gershonite.

9 Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly, because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the LORD: and David the king also rejoiced with great joy.

provided for the gilding of the house, both in the holy and most holy place, he had also laid by a stock both of gold and silver, to gild the chambers over the porch (for there were divers upper chambers, the height of it being a hundred and twenty cubits), and to beautify the side-chambers, and the other rooms that were about the courts. All this gold and silver amounted to such a vast sum of our money, that it is not easy to give an account of it (see Calvinus, ad Annum Mundi 2933).

Ver. 5. For all manner of work to be made by the hands of artificers.] That there might be enough to pay all sort of workmen their wages, as well as to provide them materials to work withal.

And who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?] The Hebrew phrase "to fill his hand" (as it is in the margin) signifies to make an offering; unto which he excites them by his example, as a thing which would be very grateful unto God.

Ver. 6.] All those great men mentioned ch. xxvii. made their cheerful contributions.

Ver. 7.] What every particular person gave is not here recorded; but the whole amounted to these sums, which was very great.

Ver. 8.] For he and his sons were keepers of the treasures of God's house (ch. xxvi. 21, 22), and were appointed to receive such offerings.

Ver. 9. Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly.] They that made the offering rejoiced, for they did it with a good will, and not by constraint.

Because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord:] This is the virtue which St. Paul calls ἀκρίως, "singleness of heart;" which hath respect purely to the service of God, the honour of religion, and the good of his church (2 Cor. viii. 2; ix. 11, 13).

And David the king also rejoiced with great joy.] It was a singular comfort to him in his old age, to see the people so well disposed, and his exhortation so effectual upon their hearts; which gave him a good hope this work would not fail to be speedily accomplished.

Ver. 10.] All this he ascribed to the grace of God, whom he therefore blessed and praised, for giving them such a heart.

Ver. 11.] This is a most noble declaration of the sense he had of the divine excellencies and perfections, with a thankful acknowledgment of his immen-

10 ¶ Wherefore David blessed the LORD before all the congregation: and David said, Blessed be thou, LORD God of Israel our father, for ever and ever.

11 Thine, O LORD, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O LORD, and thou art exalted as head above all.

12 Both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reignest over all; and in thine hand is power and might; and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give strength unto all.

13 Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name.

14 But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? for all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee.

15 For we are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the sity, power, goodness, eternity, and majesty, which are the properties or attributes of God. The Targum and the Talmudists apply these to the wonderful works of God in this manner:—"Thine, O Lord, is the greatness," for thou createdst the world; "and the power," for thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt, and carriest them through the Red sea; and revealest thyself in glory upon mount Sinai, to give the law to thy people; and obtainedst victory over Amalek, Sihon, Og, and the Canaanites; and madest the sun and the moon stand still, "by the spirit of thy glory," till thy people were vindicated of their enemies. For all things, both in heaven and in earth, are the work of thy hands; thou supportest and rulest all things, and thou art exalted above all the angels in heaven, as well as all the kings upon earth.

Ver. 12.] The Targum thus paraphrases it: The riches of the wealthy, and the glory of kings and dominions, are given them by thee; thou rulest over all, and they are in thy power: who art able to multiply, and strengthen all things; that is, to increase those to great numbers who are diminished, and to strengthen those who are feeble and weak.

Ver. 14. But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort?] In the Targum it is thus paraphrased: "Who hast given such plenty, that we are able to offer these gifts." He should have added, and also given us a heart to part with them for thy service.

For all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee.] We only return to thee what thine own hand hath blessed us withal, as the Targum expresses it. And so the ancient Christians were wont to say at their offertory, τὰ ἑαυτοῦ τῶν ὁμῶν, "thine from thine;" that is, thy own goods, from thy own people. In like manner we ought to acknowledge God in all spiritual things; referring every good thought, good purpose, good work, to his divine grace, from whom we receive it; beseeching him, as David doth here in this prayer (ver. 18), to preserve it in us.

Ver. 15.] He acknowledges that they were not proprietors of that good land wherein they dwelt, but only his tenants; who held all they had of him; and that but a very short term; after which they must leave all, as their fathers had done. The words may be thus paraphrased, in short: "We have but the use of these things for a little while, and so have parted with no great matter unto thee." Those words, as a earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding.

16 O LORD our God, all this store that we have prepared, to build thee a house for thine holy name, cometh of thine hand, and is all thine own.

17 I know also, my God, that thou triest the heart, and hast pleasure in uprightness. As for me, in the uprightness of mine heart I have willingly offered all these things: and now have I seen with joy thy people, which are present here, to offer willingly unto thee.

18 O LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, our fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and prepare their heart unto thee:

19 And give unto Solomon my son a perfect shadow, the Targum thus paraphrases: "As the shadow of a bird which flieth through the air, so are our days upon the earth:" that is, soon gone, as the Psalmist speaks.

Ver. 16.] He could not often enough repeat his sense of this, that they had given him nothing but what was his own; which he had most bountifully bestowed on them.

Ver. 17.] But the highest satisfaction was, that God had bestowed upon him a heart to do what he had done willingly, with a sincere respect to the service of God, and not out of vain-glory. For the truth of which he appeals to God himself, who could not be deceived with false shows and pretences. It was a great additional comfort to him, that God had given such a heart unto his people.

Ver. 18.] He could not desire a greater blessing for them, than that he who had given them such a pious heart, would preserve them in the same good disposition: and confirm and establish them therein. So the last words are better translated in the margin, establish their heart unto thee. Which the Targum paraphrases, "dispose their heart to fear thee."

Ver. 19.] To have a due respect to all God's precepts (in the observation of every one of which, perfectness of heart consists) he knew would be the best security for the performing what David designed. For then he would not be disobedient to his father's dying words.

Ver. 20.] They worshipped both with the same gesture, but with a different mind; God with religious worship, the king with civil: giving God thanks for all his benefits, and thanking the king for all the care he had taken, during his reign, for their prosperity. But some think, this worship was not paid to David, but to Solomon; it being the manner thus to acknowledge the king, when he was enthroned. So they bowed their knees to our Saviour, in mockery of him, as a pretended king.

Ver. 21. They sacrificed sacrifices unto the Lord, and offered burnt offerings—on the morrow after that day.] For the ark was now at Jerusalem, where this great congregation was assembled (ch. xxviii. 1), and therefore they offered peace-offerings and burnt-offerings to God in that place, on the morrow after their meeting: for there was not time to do it on that day, when the foregoing things were done.

Even a thousand bullocks, &c. with their drink offerings, and sacrifices in abundance for all Israel.] That is, together with the numerous burnt-offerings, a great many peace-offerings (which are here meant by sacrifices), sufficient for the entertainment of all the Israelites, who were there present, to feast upon; heart, to keep thy commandments, thy testimonies, and thy statutes, and to do all these things, and to build the palace for the which I have made provision.

20 ¶ And David said to all the congregation, Now bless the LORD your God. And all the congregation blessed the LORD God of their fathers, and bowed down their heads, and worshipped the LORD and the king.

21 And they sacrificed sacrifices unto the LORD, and offered burnt offerings unto the LORD, on the morrow after that day, even a thousand bullocks, a thousand rams, and a thousand lambs, with their drink offerings, and sacrifices in abundance for all Israel:

22 And did eat and drink before the LORD on that day with great gladness: and they made as the manner was, and as it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 22. And did eat and drink before the Lord on that day with great gladness.] For the greatest part of peace-offerings was given to the persons that offered them, to entertain their friends withal, as hath been often observed. And they are said to eat and drink before the Lord, because it was a sacred feast, kept before the ark at Jerusalem, the place which God had chosen, according to the law, Deut. xii. 11, &c.

They made Solomon—king the second time.] This is supposed to have been done after David's death, when Solomon was anointed for himself, as reigning pleno jure, "in subjection to none:" as he was anointed the first time by David's command. But there are great men of another opinion; that he was twice anointed while David lived: first, in the presence of a few of David's servants, as we read 1 Kings i., and now, in the presence of all the great men of Israel, the princes of the tribes, captains of thousands and hundreds (see Bertram, De Repub. Jud. p. 130, 131). And, indeed, we are led to this by the connexion of the foregoing words: for the persons who now made him king the second time, were those before mentioned, who sacrificed and feasted thereupon with great joy: after David's long speech to them. Dr. Lightfoot, indeed, observes, that there is mention three times of Solomon being made king; twice in this book, ch. xxiii. 1, and here in this place; and in 1 Kings i. So that there may be a question made, whether he was made king three times, or only twice. But this place seems to settle the doubt; for when, upon the aspiring of Adonijah, he was anointed, it was the first time that David showed who should succeed him: see 1 Kings i. 21, 27, and that must be concurrent, or the same, with that making the king mentioned in this book, ch. xxiii. 1, and this anointing in the midst of the princes and great commanders, was the second time. Abarbanel is of the same opinion, that he was anointed at first before a few; and now more publicly before the whole nation.

And anointed him—to be the chief governor.] After the death of David, who, perhaps, now resigned the government of the kingdom to him, finding he had not long to live.

And Zadok to be priest.] This hath inclined many to think the anointing forementioned was after the death of David: because Abiathar was not put out of his office till the beginning of Solomon's reign. But I see no reason why we may not think he was anointed to be priest, as Solomon was to be king, in David's lifetime: though he was not actually put into Solomon the son of David king the second time, and anointed him unto the LORD to be the chief governor, and Zadok to be priest.

23 Then Solomon sat on the throne of the LORD as king instead of David his father, and prospered; and all Israel obeyed him.

24 And all the princes, and the mighty men, and all the sons likewise of king David, submitted themselves unto Solomon the king.

25 And the LORD magnified Solomon exceedingly in the sight of all Israel, and bestowed upon him such royal majesty, as had not been on any king before him in Israel.

26 ¶ Thus David the son of Jesse reigned over all Israel.

the office till after he was dead, when Abiathar was thrust out. It was necessary he should be anointed, because the succession to the high-priesthood, in the line of Eleazar, had been long interrupted; and Abiathar, of the line of Ithamar, was still alive. This reason the Jews give why he was anointed; which was not necessary, they say, but in this case: it being sufficient otherwise, only to clothe him with the priestly vestments. But see Selden, De Success. in Pontif. lib. ii. cap. 9, who will incline one to be of another opinion.

Ver. 23. Then Solomon sat on the throne of the LORD] So the throne of this kingdom is called, because this was God's land, and Israel his people, over whom he still remained their king: and Solomon reigned over them, not by inheritance, but by his special appointment. The Targum thus expresses it, "He sat upon the royal throne, according to the word of the Memra, the Word of the Lord."

And all Israel obeyed him.] From the beginning of his reign, his people were all obedient to him: whereas, it was a long time before Saul could be settled on his throne; and it was longer before all Israel submitted to David.

Ver. 24. All the princes, and the mighty men,] All the soldiery, as well as the heads of the tribes, and the great commanders.

And all the sons likewise of king David,] Who were then alive.

Submitted themselves unto Solomon the king.] Swore allegiance to him. For so the Hebrew phrase signifies, "they gave the hand under Solomon." For putting the hand under the knee or the thigh of a person, was a token of subjection to him: and was anciently used, when they solemnly promised any thing to a superior, by an oath (Gen. xxiv. 2; xlvii. 29); which custom, if it did not continue in use in Solomon's days, yet that which was signified by it, was expressed in the ancient phrase.

Ver. 25.] Which appears from the foregoing books, which show, that neither David, nor Saul, nor any of the judges (who governed before them), lived in such splendour, as was in the court of Solomon.

Ver. 26.] That is, this is a brief account of what David did, during his reign, especially in the latter end of it.

27 And the time that he reigned over Israel was forty years; seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem.

28 And he died in a good old age, full of days, riches, and honour: and Solomon his son reigned in his stead.

29 Now the acts of David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Samuel the seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer, 30 With all his reign and his might, and the times that went over him, and over Israel, and over all the kingdoms of the countries.

Ver. 27.] See 2 Sam. v. 5.

Ver. 28. He died in a good old age, full of days, riches, and honour:] Abundantly satisfied, that he had lived long enough, in as great splendour and glory as he could desire.

And Solomon his son reigned in his stead.] Having this particular satisfaction, to see his son sit on his throne, likely to reign in greater glory than he had done. This was the Lord's doing, who disposed the hearts of all the great men, and his elder brethren, and the whole kingdom, to submit to him, who was but a young man.

Ver. 29. Now the acts of David the king, first and last,] A larger account of all that he did, from the beginning to the end of his reign.

Behold, they are written in the book of Samuel the seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer.] Here are three distinct titles given to those three persons: Samuel being called roch, and Nathan is called nabi, and Gad is called chosh. But whether they have distinct significations, denoting several ways of receiving divine inspirations, or several degrees of it, I am not able to determine. But this we may certainly affirm, with Theodoret (in his preface to the book of the Kings), that the prophets, besides the edition of their prophecies, published also very frequently the history of their own times. And Samuel began to write the life of David, which Nathan and Gad finished: out of which these things here recorded were extracted.

Ver. 30. With all his reign and his might.] That is, how he governed his people, and how he warred with their enemies; and got glorious victories over them: with all the rest that he did, both as a prophet and as a king.

And the times that went over him.] All the troubles which he endured, and which befell the people of Israel (which are called times in Ps. xxx. 16); or, more simply, the meaning may be, all the revolutions that were in public affairs, in his days.

And over all the kingdoms of the countries.] That is, the neighbouring countries, such as the Philistines, Moab, Amalek, Syria, Damascus, the Ammonites, &c. The loss of which history is very much bewailed; but God knows better than we, what was fit to be preserved for the use and benefit of his church.

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES.

As there are some things here omitted which are recorded in the first book of the Kings, so there are several things contained in this book, of which no mention is made there; particularly in the history of Jehoshaphat and Hezekiah. And many other things there mentioned are here more fully and clearly explained, as will be observed in the acts of Abijah, Asa, Joash, and other kings of Judah: upon which account St. Jerome saith of this book, It is such, and of so great use, that he who, without it, will pretend to the understanding of the prophets, will expose himself to scorn.

CHAPTER I.

1 The solemn offering of Solomon at Gibeon. 7 Solomon's choice of wisdom is blessed by God. 13 Solomon's strength and wealth.

1 AND Solomon the son of David was strengthened in his kingdom, and the LORD his God was with him, and magnified him exceedingly.

2 Then Solomon spake unto all Israel, to the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and to the judges, and to every governor in all Israel, the chief of the fathers.

3 So Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high place that was at Gibeon; for there was the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses, the servant of the LORD, had made in the wilderness.

CHAP. I.

Ver. 1. Solomon—was strengthened in his kingdom,] After the death of Adonijah and Joab, he was confirmed in his authority and government.

The Lord his God was with him, and magnified him exceedingly.] In the Targum it is paraphrased, "The Word of the Lord was his helper, and raised him to a great height of glory."

Ver. 2.] Before that great assembly, mentioned in the foregoing chapter, in the midst of which he was anointed, went home, Solomon discoursed with them about his intentions of going to Gibeon to worship God, by offering a great sacrifice, and desired them to accompany him.

Ver. 3. So Solomon,—went to the high place that was at Gibeon;] This verse shows, that this was the thing about which he spake unto them (see 1 Kings iii. 4).

For there was the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses—had made in the wilderness.] But it was there without the ark, which was in the city of David, while the tabernacle was in Gibeon. How these came to be separated, so that the ark was without the tabernacle and its vessels; and the vessels, and the altar with the tabernacle, without the seat of the glory of God, is not easy to be resolved. Conradus Pellicanus supposes, that even in those days, God would have them to know, he did not regard the ceremonious worship, when the people were under the government and instruction of such men as Samuel and David: and they were free from idolatry. Then the Lord did not exact so strictly the legal services, as he did in times of peace and tranquillity, when they were most necessary for the people: lest, after their 4 But the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim to the place which David had prepared for it: for he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem.

5 Moreover, the brasen altar that Bezaleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur, had made, he put before the tabernacle of the LORD, and Solomon and the congregation sought unto it.

6 And Solomon went up thither to the brasen altar before the LORD, which was at the tabernacle of the congregation, and offered a thousand burnt offerings upon it.

custom, when they lived in ease and prosperity, they should fall into superstition, and admire the rites of the gentiles. And with such questions as these he thinks the Jews may be very strongly urged: How came it to pass that, in the days of Samuel and David, the legal worship was not observed more precisely? how came the ark to be separated from the altars, which were made for the ark, and not the contrary? Who dispensed with David to build another tabernacle for the ark, and neglect that built by Moses? And how came Solomon to sacrifice in another place, than that which the Lord had chosen?

Ver. 4.] See 2 Sam. vi. 2, 17.

Ver. 5. The brasen altar, that Bezaleel—had made, he put before the tabernacle of the Lord:] One would think that this altar did not stand in its right place, till Solomon set it where it used to stand; but the words may be translated as in the margin, was there before the tabernacle.

And Solomon and the congregation sought unto it.] I think this is better translated by Victorinus Strigelius, "Solomon and the congregation were wont to frequent it;" with sacrifices by which they sought the favour of God.

Ver. 6. And Solomon went up thither to the brasen altar before the Lord,] This is said to be before the Lord, though the ark was not there, because God was pleased graciously to accept the sacrifices offered before the place where he was wont to dwell, though wanting the token of his glorious presence.

And offered a thousand burnt-offerings upon it.] He offered them by the ministry of the priests. And "burnt offerings" here signify (as Pellicanus with great reason thinks) the sacrifice of peace-offerings, 7 ¶ In that night did God appear unto Solomon, and said unto him, Ask what I shall give thee.

8 And Solomon said unto God, Thou hast showed great mercy unto David my father, and hast made me to reign in his stead.

9 Now, O LORD God, let thy promise unto David my father be established: for thou hast made me king over a people like the dust of the earth in multitude.

10 Give me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may go out and come in before this people: for who can judge this thy people that is so great?

11 And God said to Solomon, Because this was in thine heart, and thou hast not asked riches, wealth, or honour, nor the life of thine enemies, neither yet hast asked long life; but hast asked wisdom and knowledge for thyself, that thou mayest judge my people, over whom I have made thee king:

12 Wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee; and I will give thee riches, and wealth, and honour, such as none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like.

13 ¶ Then Solomon came from his journey to the high place that was at Gibeon to Jerusalem, from before the tabernacle of the congregation, and reigned over Israel.

14 And Solomon gathered chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, which he placed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

15 And the king made silver and gold at Jerusalem as plenteous as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the vale for abundance.

16 And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn; the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

17 And they fetched up, and brought forth out of Egypt, a chariot for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty: and so brought they out horses for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, by their means.

the general name being put for the special. For it is not reasonable to think, a thousand offerings were wholly burnt upon the altar: but in all probability, he made a feast for all that were there present, as had been done when this great assembly offered so freely at his inauguration (1 Chron. xxix. 22).

Ver. 7. In that night did God appear unto Solomon.] Immediately after the offering of the sacrifices.

Ask what I shall give thee.] See 1 Kings iii. 5. This was a declaration that he accepted his prayers which accompanied those sacrifices, and would grant whatsoever he desired.

Ver. 8.] An admirable example unto those who make petitions unto God, that they should in the first place thank him for the great benefits they have received (1 Kings iii. 6).

Ver. 9. Let thy promise unto David my father be established.] viz. That God would be a father to him and make him his son (2 Sam. vii. 14).

For thou hast made me a king.] See 1 Kings iii. 8.

Ver. 10. That I may go out and come in before this people.] This is a proverbial speech, for governing the people, both at home and abroad, in peace and in war (see Numb. xxvii. 17; Deut. xxxi. 2).

For who can judge this thy people, that is so great?] Among such a numerous people, he knew there would be so many, and so various, and many times difficult causes brought before him, that it would be impossible to hear them and judge aright, without a divine Spirit (see upon 1 Kings iii. 9).

Ver. 11, 12.] These two verses have been sufficiently explained in the same chapter (1 Kings iii. 11—13): only it may be observed, he doth not say he would give him "the life of his enemies," because he was to be a peaceable king.

Ver. 13.] We put in these words, "from his journey" which was not needful, for the words may be translated exactly, "Solomon came from the high place," &c. and so it follows, "from before the tabernacle." For the particle lamed signifies not only to but from. So R. Jonas, whom Kimchi calls a famous grammarian, saith that it is here put for mem i. e. from. But Kimchi himself is author of our translation, who is followed by Junius, and Tremellius, and others, but comes to the same purpose.

Ver. 14. And Solomon gathered chariots and horsemen.] See upon 1 Kings x. 26.

The chariot-cities.] The chariot-cities were such wherein there was good pasture for the horses.

Ver. 15.] See there, ver. 27.

Ver. 16, 17.] These two verses are there also explained (see 1 Kings x. 28, 29). From this place the famous Bochartus gathers, that the chariots of Egypt in Solomon's time were drawn by four horses: for the tribute which was exacted for a chariot, was four times as much as was paid for a single horse (see his Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 9).

CHAPTER II.

1, 17 Solomon's labourers for the building of the temple. 3 His embassy to Hiram for workmen and provision of stuff. 11 Hiram sendeth him a kind answer.

1 AND Solomon determined to build a house for the name of the LORD, and a house for his kingdom.

2 And Solomon told out threescore and ten thousand men to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to hew in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred to oversee them.

3 ¶ And Solomon sent to Hiram the king of

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. Solomon determined to build a house for—the Lord.] Wherein the Lord should be worshipped: as his father David had designed and directed.

VOL. II.—68

And a house for his kingdom.] A royal palace for himself, and those who should succeed him. But he finished God's house before he began his own.

Ver. 2.] Here are three hundred more than are mentioned in the book of the Kings: concerning which Tyre, saying, As thou didst deal with David my father, and didst send him cedars to build him a house to dwell therein, even so deal with me.

4 Behold, I build a house to the name of the LORD my God, to dedicate it to him, and to burn before him sweet incense, and for the continual shew-bread, and for the burnt offerings morning and evening, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts of the LORD our God. This is an ordinance for ever to Israel.

5 And the house which I build is great: for great is our God above all gods.

6 But who is able to build him a house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain him? who am I then, that I should build him a house, save only to burn sacrifice before him?

7 Send me now, therefore, a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and in crimson, and blue, and that can skill to grave with the cunning men that are with me in Judah and in Jerusalem, whom David my father did provide.

8 Send me also cedar trees, fir trees, and alnum trees, out of Lebanon; for I know that thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon; and, behold, my servants shall be with thy servants, 9 Even to prepare me timber in abundance: for the house which I am about to build shall be wonderful great.

20 And, behold, I will give to thy servants, the hewers that cut timber, twenty thousand measures of beaten wheat, and twenty thousand measures of barley, and twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil.

11 ¶ Then Hiram the king of Tyre answered in writing, which he sent to Solomon, Because the LORD hath loved his people, he hath made thee king over them.

12 Hiram said moreover, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, that made heaven and earth, who hath given to David the king a wise son, endued with prudence and understanding, that might difference, see what I have noted there (v. 16), and need not be repeated here.

Ver. 3.] Hiram (as he is called in the book of the Kings) first sent to him, to congratulate his succession to the throne, and then Solomon sent to him: as I have noted there (see 1 Kings v. 1).

Ver. 4. I build a house] That is, he purposed to build, as it is expressed 1 Kings v. 5, and he had also disposed things so, that he was ready to go about it.

To dedicate it to him,] For his worship and service.

For the continual shew-bread,] So this bread is called in Numb. iv. 7, because it stood before the Lord continually, being renewed every week, as we read Exod. xxv. 30, and other places.

For the burnt offerings morning and evening, &c.] He reckons up several parts of the divine service, which was there to be performed: Hiram as I have elsewhere observed, being no stranger to the God of Israel.

This is an ordinance for ever to Israel.] Which God himself had appointed.

Ver. 5.] It was no large structure which he built, but very magnificent, suitable to the glorious majesty of him that dwelt therein.

Ver. 6. But who is able to build him a house,] He would not have Hiram imagine that he had such low notions of God, as to think he could be confined and comprehended in any house, though ever so large, being immense beyond all conception.

Who am I then, that I should build him a house, save only to burn sacrifice before him?] It would have been a high presumption then for him, or any man else to build him a house, for any other end, but only for his worshippers to assemble there; he being pleased in a special manner to be present in that place. The Targum thus paraphrases this, "The heavens are the throne of his glory, the earth is his footstool, the abyss, and all people are supported by the Spirit of his Word." Which carries in it a notion which the author had of the ever-blessed Trinity.

Ver. 7.] There were admirable artists in all these works at Tyre; whom he desired to be sent to him; that they might assist those whom David had provided, but were not so skillful as those of Tyre.

Ver. 8. Alnum trees,] Or almug trees: concerning which, see what I have noted upon 1 Kings x. 11. To which may be added, that Beekius hath lately conjectured, This was a tree brought originally out of Arabia, as the prefix al notes. And then it was brought out of that Ophir which was in Arabia, and planted in Lebanon. For there, this place tells us, these trees grew; as well as cedars and firs.

For I know that thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon;] The Tyrians were more expert in cutting down and hewing timber (they dealing much in it) and therefore he desires to entertain them as his principal workmen, with whom he should join.

Ver. 9. In the Hebrew, "great and wonderful." This relates not so much to the bigness of it (though, taking in all the courts belonging to it, it was of large extent), but to the admirable contrivance and riches of it.

Ver. 10. Beaten wheat,] That is, of wheat ground, or fine flour, as R. Jonas, a famous grammarian, expounds it; whom many Christians follow.

And twenty thousand measures of barley, &c.] All this was provision for the workmen; for whose subsistence Solomon took care, during their labour: besides what he gave to Hiram every year for his household (see upon 1 Kings v. 11). What this measure, called corus, was, is uncertain: but many learned men think it the same with an omer, which was the most ancient word. For we never find the other used in the books of Moses, nor in the prophets; but only in Ezekiel (xlv. 14), and in the books of the Kings, Chronicles, and Ezra. But Josephus and the LXX. often have the word corus instead of omer, which was the largest measure of dry things, containing, as Epiphanius saith, thirty bushels.

Ver. 11, 12.] From these two verses, Victorinus Strigelius thought it certain, that Hiram was a proselyte to the true religion: because he first of all owns the God of Israel to be Jehovah, the maker of heaven and earth; for none but the Israelites called God by that name, and when they would distinguish him from idols and all creatures, they confess him to be the Creator of the world, as Hiram here doth. And, secondly, he congratulates the Israelites upon the happiness they enjoyed under such a king, which was the effect of his love to God and his church. And, lastly, he declared his love to the church not only in embassies and letters, but in real acts of kindness, sending to Solomon materials to build the house of God, and artificers the best in the world. But the build a house for the LORD, and a house for his kingdom.

13 And now I have sent a cunning man, endued with understanding, of Hiram my father's,

14 The son of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone, and in timber, in purple, in blue, and in fine linen, and in crimson; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him, with thy cunning men, and with the cunning men of my lord David thy father.

15 Now therefore the wheat, and the barley, the oil, and the wine, which my lord hath spoken of, let him send unto his servants:

first of these reasons is not good; for, as my most learned friend, Dr. Alix, hath observed to me, the name of Jehovah was known to the Tyrians from the time of Gideon, as we learn from the words of Sanchniathon.

Ver. 13.] A man of great skill and long experience, being the principal workman employed by his father. So the Targum seems to understand the word abi to signify a master or chief workman. But Beekius upon this place thinks it most probable that Abi was his surname, as we call it: and translates this verse, "He sent him a man of great skill;" viz. Hiram Abi. For it was very common among the eastern people, to call men by the name of Ab, and Abi, or Aba, and Abu, as he observes. And thus Luther translates these words, Huram Abi: to whom may be added Emanuel Sa, a person very skilful in this language.

Ver. 14. The son of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his father was a man of Tyre.] The Targum saith she was "a woman of the tribe of Naphthali;" because it is said so in 1 Kings vii. 14, and therefore he reconciles these two places; by "a daughter of Dan," he means of a man called Dan, who was of the tribe of Naphthali: which being near to Tyre, she married one of that nation. Or, as Jarchi and Kimchi will have it, he was a Jew, but dwelt in Tyre: as Obed-edom was called the Gittite, because he dwelt in Gath, but was a Levite (see my notes upon 1 Kings vii. 11).

Skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him.] These last words argue this man to have been a great artist, who could contrive any thing that was propounded to him, though never wrought before.

With the cunning men of my lord David thy father.] This seems another argument, that Hiram was 16 And we will cut wood out of Lebanon, as much as thou shalt need; and we will bring it to thee in flotes by sea to Joppa; and thou shalt carry it up to Jerusalem.

17 ¶ And Solomon numbered all the strangers that were in the land of Israel, after the numbering wherewith David his father had numbered them; and they were found a hundred and fifty thousand and three thousand and six hundred.

18 And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to be bearers of burdens, and fourscore thousand to be hewers in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred overseers to set the people a work.

of the true religion, because he honoured David with the name of his lord; as he doth Solomon in the next verse. Or, as others think, he was become tributary to them; his country very much depending upon them for corn.

Ver. 15.] For their support in their labour.

Ver. 16.] The Hebrew word rapsodoth (which we translate floats) is of the same signification with daberoth (1 Kings v. 9), as a learned Jew notes. By which is meant, timber bound together, which was drawn through the sea, and through rivers. Such floats were used, especially in the river Tigris (as Beekius here notes out of a Hebrew author), which was so swift, that vessels were wont to be overturned by the stream: and therefore they employed these floats alone, made of reeds tied close together; upon which both men and burdens went down the river (see my notes upon 1 Kings v. 9).

Ver. 17.] These were the relics (as Kimchi thinks) of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites, mentioned afterward, ch. viii. 7. But they were not idolaters; for then David would not have suffered them to dwell in the land: but they worshipped God alone, though they did not embrace the Jewish religion wholly, by being circumcised. Those David had numbered, that he might know their strength and their condition. Which did not proceed from such vanity, as moved him to number his own people, but out of a prudent care, that they might be distinguished from Jews, and be employed in such work as he did not think fit to put upon the Israelites (see 1 Chron. xxii. 2).

Ver. 18.] This he had said before, ver. 2, but now relates of what condition they were, who were put to these servile employments. They that were the overseers (whom the LXX. call the ἐργονόμους) were, I suppose, of the children of Israel.

CHAPTER III.

1 The place, and time of building the temple. 3 The measure and ornaments of the house. 11 The cherubims. 14 The vail and pillars.

1 THEN Solomon began to build the house of the LORD at Jerusalem in mount Moriah, where the LORD appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.

2 And he began to build in the second day of

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1. Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem in mount Moriah.] See what I have noted concerning Moriah upon Gen. xxii. 2.

To which may be here added, that part of this mountain was in the tribe of Judah, and part of it in the tribe of Benjamin: so that the temple is ascribed to them both. To Judah, in Ps. lxxviii. 68, 69, to Benjamin, Deut. xxxiii. 12. For the greatest part of the the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.

3 ¶ Now these are the things wherein Solomon was instructed for the building of the house of God. The length by cubits, after the first measure, was threescore cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

4 And the porch that was in the front of the house, the length of it was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the height was a hundred and twenty: and he over-laid it within with pure gold.

5 And the greater house he cieled with fir tree, courts was in the tribe of Judah: but the altar, the porch, the most holy part of the temple, where the ark and the cherubims were, in the tribe of Benjamin.

Where the Lord appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the threshing-floor of Ornan] The Targum here derives the sanctity of this place from many noble things that were done there in ancient times. For in this place, saith he, Abraham worshipped the name of the Lord, and here he offered up his son Isaac, but he was delivered by the Memra, the Word of the Lord, and a ram substituted in his place. Here Jacob prayed when he fled from his brother Esau; and here the angel appeared to David, and ordered him to offer sacrifice in the threshing-floor of Ornan. By which appearance and sacrifice this mountain was consecrated to be a place where the temple should be built (see 1 Chron. xxi. 26). But Maimonides (in his treatise of the building of the temple) carries this a great deal higher. For here, saith he, Noah built an altar when he came out of the ark (as Abraham did when he offered his son); yea, here Cain and Abel offered their sacrifices, as Adam the first man had done before them. And more than that, he will have it, that he was created in this place; whence the saying of their wise men, "Man was made in the very place of his expiation." But this is unworthy of Maimonides, who is not wont to follow such conceits as this, which is borrowed from a foolish book called Pirke Eliezer.

Ver. 2.] See 1 Kings vi. 1. In the preceding winter it was not fit to build, and in the first month the paschal feast hindered, as Jarchi here observes: and Dr. Alix takes to have been a sabbatic year, in which the people were free from the tillage of their ground.

Ver. 3. Now these are the things wherein Solomon was instructed for the building] He had been instructed by David his father, who gave him a model, according to which he built it (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, &c.). The Targum translates these words very clearly, which in the Hebrew are a little obscure, "These are the dimensions of the foundation of the temple, which Solomon began to build." So in our margin we translate the word, not instructed, but founded. And thus, Beckius thinks, it is most properly to be understood; because Solomon did not receive from his father a delineation of the whole fabric of the temple, but only of the porch, and of the courts, and some other things: as the forenamed place tells us.

The length by cubits after the first measure was threescore cubits, and the breadth twenty] He projected the sanctuary and the oracle both together; and in their first description they were to be in length sixty cubits: that is, forty for the sanctuary, and twenty for the most holy place. Or, as some think, by the first measure, is here meant that measure which Moses followed in building of the tabernacle: for, in process of time, the cubits altered, and were larger (see 1 Kings vi. 2). But this is doubtful.

6 And he garnished the house with precious stones for beauty: and the gold was gold of Parvaim.

7 He overlaid also the house, the beams, the posts, and the walls thereof, and the doors thereof, with gold; and graved cherubims on the walls.

8 And he made the most holy house, the length whereof was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold, amounting to six hundred talents.

Ver. 4. The porch—was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits.] So we read expressly, 1 Kings vi. 2, that "the breadth was twenty cubits."

The height was a hundred and twenty:] This is a very different account from that in the book of the Kings, where it is said to be thirty cubits. But Aben-dana hath briefly summed up what their authors say to reconcile these two places. Some think it probable, that the porch was but thirty cubits high, but the whole temple higher. Thus Kimchi. Others, that the porch and all were of the same height: but from the foundation to the roof was but thirty cubits: though above the roof there were ἐντρεψα, upper-rooms, which were ninety cubits high (see upon 1 Kings vi. 3). And, indeed, it is not likely, that this house was lower than the second temple, which, by the command of Cyrus, was to be threescore cubits (Ezra vi. 3, and see Josephus, lib. vii. cap. 8).

He overlaid it within with pure gold.] As he did the rest of the house.

Ver. 5.] By the "greater house" he means the sanctuary, or holy place: which was larger than the most holy, as was before noted.

Ver. 6.] He garnished the house with precious stones] This shows the use to which the precious stones, that were dedicated by David, and by his princes, were employed (1 Chron. xxix. 2, 8); which served not merely for the garments of the high-priest, but for the house itself, which was garnished with them. Though I do not know but the observation of Bochartus may be true, that these stones are called precious stones, though they were common, because they excelled the rest in greatness, fineness, and in their polishing (Hieroz. par. ii. lib. v. cap. 7.).

The gold was gold of Parvaim.] It is a great mistake of Abraham Mylius, and others, who take this place to have been Peru; which the great man now mentioned hath proved to be Taprobana (see upon 1 Kings ix. 28), which was called Parvaim, and, with a small change, Parvam, and Provan; from whence he conjectures came the name of Taprobana, which is compounded of taph (which in Arabic signifies a shore or coast) and Parvan (lib. ii. Phaleg. cap. 28). The Jews, after their manner, say the gold was called the gold of Parvaim, because it was of a deep red colour, like the blood of parim, that is, bullocks, and signifies the most excellent gold, as L'Emperer notes upon Middoth; though others of them say it was a place.

Ver. 7.] See 1 Kings vi. 21, 22, 29.

Ver. 8.] The very same is said 1 Kings vi. 20, only here is added the quantity of gold which he expended upon this place, which was very great.

9 And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold. And he overlaid the upper chambers with gold.

10 And in the most holy house he made two cherubims of image work, and overlaid them with gold.

11 ¶ And the wings of the cherubim were twenty cubits long: one wing of the one cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house; and the other wing was likewise five cubits, reaching to the wing of the other cherub.

12 And one wing of the other cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house; and the other wing was five cubits also, joining to the wing of the other cherub.

13 The wings of these cherubims spread themselves forth twenty cubits: and they stood on their feet, and their faces were inward.

14 ¶ And he made the vail of blue, and purple, and crimson, and fine linen, and wrought cherubims thereon.

15 Also he made before the house two pillars of thirty and five cubits high, and the chapter that was on the top of each of them was five cubits.

16 And he made chains, as in the oracle, and put them on the heads of the pillars; and made a hundred pomegranates, and put them on the chains.

17 And he reared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and called the name of that on the right hand Jachin, and the name of that on the left Boaz.

Ver. 9. The weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold.] Each nail, I suppose, whereby the plates of gold were fastened to the boards, cost fifty shekels.

He overlaid the upper chambers with gold.] These seem to be the chambers mentioned 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, of which David gave him a model. But Dr. Lightfoot thinks, that over the holy place there were no chambers at all in the temple of Solomon, but it was all open to the roof. Over the most holy place, indeed, there was an upper room of ten cubits high; but why that should be called chambers, in the plural number, and why it should be overlaid with gold, since there was none came into it, nor any way to come there, is not easy to apprehend. And as for the side chambers that were on the outside of the house, there was no reason they should be overlaid with gold, since they were places wherein their corn, and wine, and tithes, and first-fruits, and such like things, were laid up. Therefore, by the Hebrew word elyoth, we are not to understand upper chambers, but the upper floor, or the roof, of the holy and most holy places; which were overlaid with gold everywhere; both the floor on which they trod, and the walls round about, and the roof over head (see his Temple Service, ch. 15, sect. 3).

Ver. 10. In the most holy house he made two cherubims of image work.] I do not know why we thus translate the last words, for the Hebrew, which we translate image, hath nothing of that signification in it: unless we take the word zaazum to be the same with zeazim, which some of the Jews say signifies their faces were like to boys'. And accordingly many understand these words, They had the figure of youths, or boys. But Beckins, upon the Targum, in this place, seems to me to have given a more rational account of the word, which he derives from the root zaa, and translates it the work of motions, or moveable work, for they stood upon their feet, (ver. 13), as ready to move. In which he follows Forsterus and Buxtorfius.

Overlaid them with gold.] For they were made of olive-wood, and were not like those of Moses, of beaten gold (see upon 1 Kings vi. 23, 28).

Ver. 11—13.] See these three verses explained, 1 Kings vi. 24—26, where the height of these cherubims is also set down.

They stood on their feet.] See 1 Kings vi. 26.

Their faces were inward.] In the Hebrew, "towards the house:" that is, towards the inner house, or holy place, as Jarchi expounds it: whose words are, Their heads were not erect, that they should look outwards; but they bended down, that they might look upon one another.

Ver. 14.] That is, the veil before the most holy place; which is the partition mentioned in 1 Kings vii. 21.

Ver. 15. He made before the house] Before the entrance into the sanctuary.

Two pillars of thirty and five cubits high.] They were not each of them thus high, but both of them together, as it is explained in 1 Kings vii. 15.

The chapter that was on the top of each of them was five cubits.] In the form of a crown, as the Targum expresses it (see 1 Kings vii. 16).

Ver. 16. He made chains.] See 1 Kings vi. 21.

And made a hundred pomegranates, and put them on the chains.] There were a hundred in two rows, two hundred in all (see 1 Kings vii. 20).

Ver. 17.] See 1 Kings vii. 21. The Targum on these words makes this commentary: He called the one Jachin, because Nachon, the kingdom of the house of David, was established; and the other Boaz, from the name of the patriarch of that royal house of Judah from whom all their kings were derived.

CHAPTER IV.

- 1 The altar of brass. 2 The molten sea upon twelve oxen. 6 The ten lavers, candlesticks, and tables.
9 The courts, and the instruments of brass. 19 The instruments of gold.

1 MOREOVER he made an altar of brass, twenty cubits the length thereof, and twenty cubits the breadth thereof, and ten cubits the height thereof.

2 ¶ Also he made a molten sea of ten cubits from brim to brim, round in compass, and five cubits the height thereof; and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1.] The making this altar so many cubits high may seem to contradict God's command, Exod. xx.

26. But see what I have noted there, to show how the ascent might be so contrived, that the priest's nakedness should not be discovered. The making it of brass also was, no doubt, by the direction of God.

3 And under it was the similitude of oxen, which did compass it round about; ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about. Two rows of oxen were cast when it was cast.

4 It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east; and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

5 And the thickness of it was a hand-breadth, and the brim of it like the work of the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies; and it received and held three thousand baths.

6 ¶ He made also ten lavers, and put five on the right hand, and five on the left, to wash in them: such things as they offered for the burnt offering they washed in them; but the sea was for the priests to wash in.

7 And he made ten candlesticks of gold according to their form, and set them in the temple, five on the right hand, and five on the left.

8 He made also ten tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the right side, and five on the left; and he made a hundred basons of gold.

9 ¶ Furthermore, he made the court of the priests, and the great court, and doors for the court, and overlaid the doors of them with brass.

10 And he set the sea on the right side of the east end, over against the south.

who told David how such things should be made (1 Chron. xxviii.), as L'Empereur very well observes.

Ver. 2.] This and the following verses are explained 1 Kings vii. 23.

Ver. 3. Under it was the similitude of oxen, which did compass it round about: ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about.] These oxen are called knobs in 1 Kings vii. 24, which were little protuberances, or bunches, round about the lips of the laver, in the figure of oxen. There were ten of them in every cubit, and the circumference being thirty cubits, there were three hundred of them in one row; and they being cast in two rows, one under another, were six hundred in all.

Two rows of oxen were cast, when it was cast.] They were not fastened on afterward, but cast together with the vessel itself. So Kimchi and Jarchi; the latter of which thus explains it: They were not joined to it by nails or solder, but all cast together with the sea.

Ver. 4.] See upon 1 Kings vii. 25.

Ver. 5.] See this account reconciled with that in 1 Kings vii. 26. The Targum here thus paraphrases: Three thousand baths of things dry, and two thousand of things liquid. But others better explain it, that the quantity of water which was commonly in it was two thousand baths; but if it were filled up to the top it would hold three thousand.

Ver. 6.] See there, 1 Kings vii. 38, 39.

Ver. 7. He made ten candlesticks of gold] See upon 1 Kings vii. 49.

According to their form,] Those words, "according to their form," are thus translated by the Targum, "as was convenient or agreeable to them." Or the meaning may be, "according to the pattern which David gave him."

Ver. 8.] See upon 1 Kings vii. 48. Some have observed, that there was the very same furniture made 11 And Hiram made the pots, and the shovels, and the basons. And Hiram finished the work that he was to make for king Solomon for the house of God;

12 To wit, the two pillars, and the pommels, and the chapters which were on the top of the two pillars, and the two wreaths to cover the two pommels of the chapters which were on the pillars:

13 And four hundred pomegranates on the two wreaths; two rows of pomegranates on each wreath, to cover the two pommels of the chapters which were upon the pillars.

14 He made also bases; and lavers made he upon the bases;

15 One sea, and twelve oxen under it:

16 The pots also, and the shovels, and the flesh-hooks, and all their instruments, did Hiram his father make to king Solomon for the house of the Lord of bright brass.

17 In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, in the clay ground, between Succoth and Zeredathah.

18 Thus Solomon made all these vessels in great abundance: for the weight of the brass could not be found out.

19 ¶ And Solomon made all the vessels that were for the house of God, the golden altar also, and the tables whereon the show-bread was set;

by Solomon for the most holy place that was made by Moses; but in the holy place there was an augmentation made of ten candlesticks and ten tables. But they should have remembered, that Solomon also added two cherubims, and of a larger size, to the most holy place, which were not there before.

Ver. 9.] See 1 Kings vi. 36, where the court of the priests is called "the inner court," it being next the sanctuary: and by the "great court" here is meant the court of the people, to which he made doors.

Ver. 10.] See my notes upon 1 Kings vii. 39.

Ver. 11.] See there, 1 Kings vii. 40. He did not stir from the work, but finished it all before he left Solomon's service.

Ver. 12. The pommels,] Or, the globes, as we now speak, and as the Targum translates it.

And the chapters which were on the top of the two pillars, &c.] This is there explained, 1 Kings vii. 41.

Ver. 13.] See ver. 42.

Ver. 14. He made bases, &c.] See ver. 43.

Ver. 15. One sea,] See ver. 44.

Ver. 16.] In 1 Kings vii. 45, it is said, "which Hiram made;" and that is the meaning here: for the words are best translated Hiram Abi, or Abif, did make. See upon ch. ii. 13, which seems more easy than other expositions which may be given of the words. For some think Solomon calls him his father, out of great respect to him; or because he was the inventor of all this excellent work (as in Gen. iv. 20, 21), or it is a short speech, for "Hiram and his father."

Ver. 17.] See 1 Kings vii. 46.

Ver. 18. Thus Solomon made all these vessels in great abundance:] More for ornament and grandeur, than for necessary use.

For the weight of the brass could not be found out.] See 1 Kings vii. 47.

Ver. 19. Solomon made all the vessels that were for the house of God,] That is, for the sanctuary.

20 Moreover the candlesticks with their lamps, that they should burn after the manner before the oracle, of pure gold;

21 And the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs, made he of gold, and that perfect gold;

The tables whereon the show-bread was set;] One table only was made by Moses, but Solomon made ten (ver. 8), for the greater convenience of the priests in the ministration: that they might have a table at hand whereon to set the bread which they took off, when they set on new upon the table of show-bread. But it is not improbable that tables in the plural are put for table in the singular, and that he speaks of that on which the bread stood before the Lord. Which I suppose was of gold, as the others were of silver.

Ver. 20. Moreover the candlesticks with their lamps, that they should burn after the manner] Which God had appointed in the law of Moses.

22 And the snuffers, and the basons, and the spoons, and the censers, of pure gold: and the entry of the house, the inner doors thereof for the most holy place, and the doors of the house of the temple, were of gold.

Before the oracle,] Here the Targum calls the oracle "the house of expiations;" because into this most holy place the high-priest went with the blood, to make atonement on the great day of expiation.

Ver. 21.] The Hebrew word miklot, which signifies perfection, denotes gold most purified, as Kimchi saith their doctors expound it. But he thinks it signifies simply, all these vessels were of gold.

Ver. 22. The snuffers,] See upon 1 Kings vii. 50. The entry of the house, &c. were of gold.] They were not entirely of massy gold, but of wood (as we read 1 Kings vi. 31, &c.), covered with plates of gold (ver. 35, and see 1 Kings xviii. 16).

CHAPTER V.

1 The dedicated treasures. 2 The solemn induction of the ark into the oracle. 11 God being praised giveth a visible sign of his favour.

1 Thus all the work that Solomon made for the house of the LORD, was finished: and Solomon brought in all the things that David his father had dedicated; and the silver, and the gold, and all the instruments, put he among the treasures of the house of God.

2 ¶ Then Solomon assembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of the city of David, which is Zion.

3 Wherefore all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto the king in the feast which was in the seventh month.

4 And all the elders of Israel came; and the Levites took up the ark.

5 And they brought up the ark, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, these did the priests and the Levites bring up.

6 Also king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel there were assembled unto him before the ark, sacrificed sheep and oxen, which could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

7 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto his place, to the oracle of the house, into the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims:

8 For the cherubims spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and the staves thereof above.

9 And they drew out the staves of the ark, that the ends of the staves were seen from the ark before the oracle; but they were not seen without. And there it is unto this day.

10 There was nothing in the ark save the two tables which Moses put therein at Horeb, when the LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of Egypt.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place: (for all the

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1.] See 1 Kings vii. 51. David, we read 1 Chron. xxii. 14, made such vast preparations for building of this house, that there was more than could be spent in the work. What remained, therefore, Solomon could not employ to his own use, but laid it up in the treasures of God's house.

Ver. 2.] See 1 Kings viii. 1.

Ver. 3. All the men of Israel assembled themselves] That is, all the persons forementioned.

In the feast which was in the seventh month.] See 1 Kings viii. 2. The feast of tabernacles, which they kept seven days; and the feast of dedication, which lasted as many (ch. vii. 9).

Ver. 4.] That is, they whose office it was to carry it.

Ver. 5.] See 1 Kings viii. 3.

Ver. 6.] See 1 Kings viii. 5. The observation of Victorinus Strigelius upon this history is very pious: That nothing is more lovely in human things, than such concord as here appeared among all orders of men; both of teachers and learners, magistrates, soldiers, and people, who were all combined to promote the service and honour of God. Such unity ought to be studied by Christian people, that we may be all one, as our Saviour prayed.

Ver. 7.] The very same words are in 1 Kings viii. 6 (see there).

Ver. 8.] And this verse also is the same with 1 Kings viii. 7.

Ver. 9. There it is unto this day.] Or, "they are there," as the margin hath it, out of 1 Kings viii. 8, where there are the same words. And when that book was written they were exactly true; but when this author transcribed them into this book, after the captivity, there were then neither staves nor ark remaining: therefore he only relates how Solomon settled things (see my notes there).

Ver. 10.] These words are there also explained (see 1 Kings viii. 10).

Ver. 11. When the priests were come out of the priests that were present were sanctified, and did not then wait by course;

12 Also the Levites, which were the singers, all of them of Asaph, of Heman, of Jeduthun, with their sons and their brethren, being arrayed in white linen, having cymbals and psalteries and harps, stood at the east end of the altar, and with them a hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets;)

13 It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be holy place:] Whither they carried the ark, and set it in its place.

For all the priests that were present were sanctified, and did not then wait by course:] As David had appointed in the ordinary service at the temple. But upon this extraordinary occasion they all attended (though it was not their course), at least as many as could, and were sanctified to do all the duties of this great day. For, as Kimchi observes, there were such a multitude of sacrifices offered, that the service of them all was necessary.

Ver. 12. Also the Levites which were the singers, all of them of Asaph, &c.] According to their several families, as the Targum well explains it; viz. those of the family of Asaph, &c.

Stood at the east end of the altar,] Where the Talmudists say there were two desks for them to stand in and sing. One of which had fifteen steps, on which they sung those songs called the Songs of Degrees, or Steps. For there is no better account, L'Empereur thinks, can be given of that name.

With them a hundred and twenty priests] Who joined with the Levites, it appears by the next verse, in praising God.

Ver. 13. As the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound] When they were all ready, as one man, to make with one voice a loud sound.

When they lifted up their voice with the trumpets] As soon as they began to sound, and play on the instruments, and sing the following words.

For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever:] Many think they sung the whole psalm, which thus heard in praising and thanking the LORD, and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the LORD, saying, For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the LORD;

14 So that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud; for the glory of the LORD had filled the house of God.

begins, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good," &c. And so the LXX. in this place, ἐξομολογείσθε τῷ Κυρίῳ, &c. and the Vulgar in like manner.

Then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord:] In the Hebrew there is nothing answering to the word even: but the whole may be thus plainly rendered, "The house was filled with the cloud of the house of the Lord." That is, with the cloud that was wont to be in the most holy place, and was the token of the gracious presence and favour of the divine majesty among them.

Ver. 14.] See 1 Kings viii. 19. It is a pious reflection which Victorinus Strigelius makes upon this place: Which admonisheth us, saith he, first, of the presence of God in his church; and, secondly, of the abrogation of the Levitical worship. It is a most sweet promise of our Saviour, "Where two or three are gathered in my name, I will be there present in the midst of them." Thus when the Levites here sung his praises, the house of God was filled with a cloud, which was the token of his presence: and when the auditors of the apostles prayed (Acts iv. 31), the whole house where they were assembled was shaken, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost: but the Levitical priests being unable to discharge their office, after the majesty of the Lord filled the house: it was a plain signification that their ministry and way of worship should cease, when the Messiah came, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Solomon, having blessed the people, blesseth God. 12 Solomon's prayer in the consecration of the temple, upon the brazen scaffold.

1 THEN said Solomon, The LORD hath said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

2 But I have built a house of habitation for thee, and a place for thy dwelling for ever.

3 And the king turned his face, and blessed the whole congregation of Israel: and all the congregation of Israel stood:

4 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, who hath with his hands fulfilled that which he spake with his mouth to my father David, saying, dwelling in darkness was among the heathen (who hence learned it), for Justin Martyr observes, that Orpheus, and another ancient writer, call God Ἰσχυριον, "altogether hidden." And the Lacedemonians, who pretend to be of kin to the Jews, had a temple dedicated to Ζεὺς Σκοτεινός, "Jupiter the dark," as Strabo relates out of Pausanias (see Meurs. Miscell. Lacon. lib. i. cap. 1).

Ver. 2.] See there, 1 Kings viii. 13.

Ver. 3.] Who were in the great court before the house (see there, ver. 14).

Ver. 4.] The same with what is there said, ver. 15.

Ver. 5.] The last words of this verse are very differ-

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1.] When Solomon saw that token of the divine presence, he made this speech to the priests. See 1 Kings viii. 12, and the following verses; for there is little in this chapter but what is there explained: the sense, and commonly the very words, being the same. The paraphrase of the Targum upon these words, is very remarkable, which is this: "The Lord would have his Shechinah, or glorious presence, to reside in this city Jerusalem, in his sanctuary, which I have built to the name of his Word; and, behold, a thick cloud covereth it." This notion of God's

5 Since the day that I brought forth my people out of the land of Egypt, I chose no city among all the tribes of Israel to build a house in, that my name might be there; neither chose I any man to be a ruler over my people Israel:

6 But I have chosen Jerusalem, that my name might be there; and have chosen David to be over my people Israel.

7 Now it was in the heart of David my father to build a house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

8 But the LORD said to David my father, Forasmuch as it was in thine heart to build a house for my name, thou didst well in that it was in thine heart:

9 Notwithstanding, thou shalt not build the house; but thy son which shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house for my name.

10 The LORD therefore hath performed his word that he hath spoken: for I am risen up in the room of David my father, and am set on the throne of Israel, as the Lord promised, and have built the house for the name of the LORD God of Israel:

11 And in it have I put the ark, wherein is the covenant of the LORD, that he made with the children of Israel.

12 ¶ And he stood before the altar of the LORD in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands,

13 For Solomon had made a brasen scaffold, of five cubits long, and five cubits broad, and three cubits high, and had set it in the midst of the court: and upon it he stood, and kneeled down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven,

14 And said, O LORD God of Israel, there is no God like thee in the heaven, nor in the earth; which keepest covenant, and shewest mercy unto thy servants, that walk before thee with all their hearts:

15 Thou which hast kept with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him; and spakest with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

16 Now, therefore, O LORD God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him, saying, There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit upon the throne of Israel; yet so that thy children take heed to their way to walk in my law, as thou hast walked before me.

17 Now then, O LORD God of Israel, let thy word be verified, which thou hast spoken unto thy servant David.

18 But will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? behold, heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house which I have built!

19 Have respect therefore to the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O LORD my God, to hearken unto the cry and the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee:

20 That thine eyes may be open upon this house day and night, upon the place whereof thou hast said that thou wouldest put thy name there; to hearken unto the prayer which thy servant prayeth toward this place.

21 Hearken, therefore, unto the supplications of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, which they shall make toward this place: hear thou from thy dwelling place, even from heaven; and when thou hearest, forgive.

22 ¶ If a man sin against his neighbour, and an oath be laid upon him to make him swear, and the oath come before thine altar in this house;

23 Then hear thou from heaven, and do, and judge thy servants, by requiting the wicked, by rent from those 1 Kings viii. 16, where it is said, "but I chose David to be over my people Israel." Till whose time there was no settled succession of a ruler, that he and his posterity should reign over them; but God raised up judges out of what tribe and family he pleased: and when he made Saul king, did not continue that dignity in his family, as he did to David.

Ver. 6.] But now he declared both the city wherein he would dwell, and also the person and family whom he would have to govern Israel.

Ver. 7—10.] All these four verses are in the same words, 1 Kings viii. 17—20 (see there). I shall only therefore observe here, how the Targum translates the last words of this verse; "built a house to the name of the Word of the Lord God of Israel." In which he makes the Word a distinct person from the Lord God of Israel, but Lord God also; else he would not have built a house for his name, that he might be there worshipped and served.

Ver. 11.] There is no difference between these words and those 1 Kings viii. 21, but that there he saith, I have set there the place of the ark; which is the same in effect with these words, which signify he had put the ark in the most holy place.

Ver. 12.] See upon 1 Kings viii. 22.

Ver. 13.] This verse is added to what we read in the book of the Kings: and, as Solomon Jarchi observes, hath relation to what goes before, "in the presence of all Israel." For he was advanced higher than they, that he might be seen and heard of all.

Ver. 14.] See 1 Kings viii. 23, where there are the same words.

Ver. 15, 16.] These two verses, with very little difference, are in 1 Kings viii. 21, 25.

Ver. 18.] See there, ver. 26, 27. I shall only add the gloss of Kimchi upon the last words, "Thou art rather the place of this world, and comprehendest all things, than the world the place of thee, which cannot comprehend thee. Wherefore then have I built this temple? it was only that thy gracious presence might dwell there, hearing the prayers which shall be made in this place." So the next words import.

Ver. 19.] See there, ver. 28.

Ver. 20.] Those words, "that thine eyes may be open," the Targum expounds, By his divine providence and protection, in this place of the residence of his gracious presence, as the words there are.

Ver. 21.] See 1 Kings viii. 30.

Ver. 22.] See there, ver. 31. Whereby it appears, that a man who was to purge himself of any trespass, whereof he was accused against his neighbour, by an oath, was to do it at the temple, before the altar of God, from whom he expected remission of sin.

Ver. 23.] See there, 1 Kings viii. 32.

recompensing his way upon his own head; and by justifying the righteous, by giving him according to his righteousness.

24 ¶ And if thy people Israel be put to the worse before the enemy, because they have sinned against thee, and shall return and confess thy name, and pray and make supplication before thee in this house;

25 Then hear thou from the heavens, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again unto the land which thou gavest to them and to their fathers.

26 ¶ When the heaven is shut up, and there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; yet if they pray toward this place, and confess thy name, and turn from their sin, when thou dost afflict them;

27 Then hear thou from heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, and of thy people Israel, when thou hast taught them the good way wherein they should walk; and send rain upon the land, which thou hast given unto thy people for an inheritance.

28 ¶ If there be dearth in the land, if there be pestilence, if there be blasting, or mildew, locusts, or caterpillars; if their enemies besiege them in the cities of their land; whatsoever sore or whatsoever sickness there be;

29 Then what prayer or what supplication soever shall be made of any man, or of all thy people Israel, when every one shall know his own sore and his own grief, and shall spread forth his hands in this house;

30 Then hear thou from heaven thy dwelling place, and forgive, and render unto every man according unto all his ways, whose heart thou knowest; (for thou only knowest the hearts of the children of men;)

31 That they may fear thee, to walk in thy ways so long as they live in the land which thou gavest unto our fathers.

32 ¶ Moreover, concerning the stranger, which is not of thy people Israel, but is come from a far country for thy great name's sake, and thy mighty hand, and thy stretched out arm; if they come and pray in this house;

33 Then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for; that all people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee, as doth thy people Israel; and may know that this house which I have built is called by thy name.

34 If thy people go out to war against their enemies by the way that thou shalt send them, and they pray unto thee toward this city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name;

35 Then hear thou from the heavens their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause.

36 If they sin against thee, (for there is no man which sinneth not), and thou be angry with them, and deliver them over before their enemies, and they carry them away captives unto a land far off or near;

37 Yet if they bethink themselves in the land whither they are carried captive, and turn and pray unto thee in the land of their captivity, saying, We have sinned, we have done amiss, and have dealt wickedly;

38 If they return to thee with all their heart, and with all their soul, in the land of their captivity, whither they have carried them captives, and pray toward their land, which thou gavest unto their fathers, and toward the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house which I have built for thy name;

39 Then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling place, their prayer and their supplications, and maintain their cause, and forgive thy people which have sinned against thee.

40 Now, my God, let, I beseech thee, thine eyes be open, and let thine ears be attent unto the prayer that is made in this place.

41 Now therefore arise, O Lord God, into thy

Ver. 24, 25.] These two verses are, in a manner, the very same with those 1 Kings viii. 33, 34.

Ver. 26.] This, and all the rest to ver. 32, are the same, in a manner, with 1 Kings viii. 35, 36, &c. And therefore see the explication of them there: and in ver. 29 he desires, that all prayers, whether for private or public concerns that were made here, might be heard.

Ver. 32, 33.] These two verses are there also explained, in ver. 41—43. Unto which I shall here add this pious reflection which Dr. Jackson makes upon them: "Solomon knew the goodness of God to be so great, that it could not be a whit lessened towards Israel, how far soever it was extended towards other people. Happy had it been for that nation, if their charity had been like this of their heavenly Father. But it was their seeking to engross God's promised blessings to mankind, which brought that grievous curse upon them, under which they groan at this day."

Ver. 34—39.] All these verses are, with some small variation in a few words, and a large addition to the last verses, in 1 Kings viii. 44—50.

Ver. 40.] He sums up all these words, beseeching him, that the prayer which was presented to him here, for any blessing, of what sort soever it was, might be graciously accepted by him.

Ver. 41.] These words are part of Ps. cxxxii. 8, 9, with a little alteration. Wherein he beseeches God to take up his habitation here, together with his ark (whereby such wonders and miracles had been wrought), and stir from hence no more. And, then, that he would defend his priests, who ministered to him here; that they might obtain his blessings for others: so that all the people might rejoice in his great bounty to them. The Targum here translates the first words after a remarkable manner: "Now therefore, before the Lord God, rest in thy glory, thou, and the ark of thy strength." Upon which words an unanswerable question is made by Beckius to the Jews; Who is this thou, who, according to their paraphrase, rests before Jehovah? Their mouths are stopped, unless they acknowledge another Jehovah, that is, the Word of God (as he is commonly called in the Targum), the second person of the ever-blessed Trinity.

Ver. 42. O Lord God, turn not away the face of resting place, thou, and the ark of thy strength: let thy priests, O LORD God, be clothed with salvation, and let thy saints rejoice in goodness.

thine anointed:] Since he had appointed Solomon to be king of his people, he hoped God would have a regard to his humble petition. For as to look upon one, or lift up the countenance upon him, is to have a kind respect to him; so to "turn away the face" is to reject and refuse him.

42 O LORD God, turn not away the face of thine anointed: remember the mercies of David thy servant.

Remember the mercies of David] This is another argument or hope, that his prayer would be granted: because God had such a great kindness for David, that he had made very large and most gracious promises unto him, and his seed after him.

CHAPTER VII.

1 God having given testimony to Solomon's prayer by fire from heaven, and glory in the temple, the people worship him. 4 Solomon's solemn sacrifice. 8 Solomon having kept the feast of tabernacles, and the feast of the dedication of the altar, dismisseth the people. 12 God appearing to Solomon giveth him promises upon condition.

1 Now when Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices; and the glory of the LORD filled the house.

2 And the priests could not enter into the house of the LORD, because the glory of the LORD had filled the LORD's house.

3 And when all the children of Israel saw how the fire came down, and the glory of the LORD upon the house, they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and worshipped, and praised the LORD, saying, For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.

4 ¶ Then the king and all the people offered sacrifices before the LORD.

5 And king Solomon offered a sacrifice of twenty and two thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep. So the king and all the people dedicated the house of God.

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1.] See 1 Kings viii. 11. This is added to what is recorded in that book to show God's gracious acceptance of Solomon's prayer and sacrifices; to give him assurance he would be present in this place, and grant all their petitions. Of which he gave two demonstrations: one by fire sent down from heaven to consume the sacrifices; the other by the glorious cloud filling the whole house. By the former of these, the first sacrifice that we read of in scripture (that of Abel), it is generally thought was declared to be acceptable unto God (Gen. iv. 4). And when the tabernacle was erected, and Aaron consecrated, there was the same testimony given of God's presence there, as here at the consecration of the temple, Lev. ix. 24 (see what I have there noted, and in other places). I shall only farther add, that the like miraculous token of God's acceptance was shown, when Elijah contested with the priests of Baal (1 Kings xviii.), and when David offered sacrifices in the threshing-floor of Araunah (1 Chron. xxi. 26), which had relation to what was now done: for David sacrificed in the very place where the temple was built; and therefore by both these miracles God declared he would be worshipped in this place. They differ only in this, that by the first God admonished David where the temple should be built; and by this he approved and consecrated it when it was built. Dr. Jackson most judiciously adds, that thus was the consecration of the Son of God to his eternal priesthood confirmed by the apparition of the Holy Ghost in a flame of fire; which was the accomplishment of the appearance of Aaron's consecration, and of this at the consecration of the temple.

Ver. 2.] See Exod. xl. 35; 1 Kings viii. 11. But another great man (Dr. Alix) thinks it pertinent here to observe, that there was no such thing in the second temple; though the Lord Christ was to appear in it, and make the glory of the last house greater than the first. For the appearance of the flames of fire on the day of Pentecost was not in the temple, but in Jerusalem: when the Messiah was exalted to his heavenly sanctuary, and the temple devoted to destruction by the Romans.

Ver. 3. When all the children of Israel saw how the fire came down, and the glory of the Lord upon the house,] Here was a great assurance that God would be present in this place, in that the glory of the Lord not only filled the house, but appeared upon the house: so that all the people might see it, and not only have the word of the priests for it. By this they were satisfied that it was God's house, where he would accept their sacrifices, hear their prayers, and bestow his blessing upon them. There is no mention here made of the cloud, as in the book of the Kings; but that is comprehended, as Abarinel observes, in the glory and the fire, which were in the cloud. It came down at the first like a cloud, and then broke out in such a light and splendour, as they were not able to behold: and a flame came out upon the altar, and consumed the sacrifices that lay upon it.

They bowed themselves with their faces to the ground] They bowed down to the middle of their body, and fell prostrate upon the floor, which was the most profound adoration. These were two distinct acts of worship (bowing and falling flat on the face), but here are joined together upon this great occasion. As Dr. Hyde observes in his Reliq. Vet. Parsarum, cap. 1, where he notes out of Maimonides, that the pavement was kept very clean: it being unlawful for any one to come into the court with their shoes on their feet, or so much as to spit there.

And praised the Lord,] They praised and gave thanks to God (as they had great reason to do, the fire from heaven and the cloud of glory being manifest tokens of God's presence among them) in the same words which the priests had used, who sung the eighty-sixth psalm (see ver. 13).

Ver. 4.] They had offered sacrifices before; but now they renew them, and offer more in acknowledgment of this new assurance of God's love unto them.

Ver. 5. Solomon offered a sacrifice of twenty and

6 And the priests waited on their offices; the Levites also with instruments of music of the LORD, which David the king had made to praise the LORD, because his mercy endureth for ever, when David praised by their ministry; and the priests sounded trumpets before them, and all Israel stood.

7 Moreover, Solomon hallowed the middle of the court that was before the house of the LORD: for there he offered burnt offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings, because the brasen altar which Solomon had made was not able to receive the burnt offerings, and the meat offerings, and the fat.

8 ¶ Also, at the same time, Solomon kept the feast seven days, and all Israel with him, a very great congregation, from the entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt.

9 And in the eighth day they made a solemn assembly: for they kept the dedication of the altar seven days, and the feast seven days.

10 And on the three and twentieth day of the seventh month he sent the people away into their tents, glad and merry in heart, for the goodness that the LORD had showed unto David, and to Solomon, and to Israel his people.

11 Thus Solomon finished the house of the LORD, and the king's house: and all that came into Solomon's heart to make in the house of the LORD, and in his own house, he prosperously effected.

12 ¶ And the LORD appeared to Solomon by night, and said unto him, I have heard thy prayer, and have chosen this place to myself for a house of sacrifice.

13 If I shut up heaven that there be no rain, or if I command the locusts to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among my people;

14 If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land.

15 Now mine eyes shall be open, and mine ears attent unto the prayer that is made in this place:

16 For now have I chosen and sanctified this house, that my name may be there for ever: and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

17 And as for thee, if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, and do according to all that I have commanded thee, and shalt observe my statutes and my judgments;

18 Then will I stablish the throne of thy kingdom, according as I have covenanted with David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man to be ruler in Israel.

19 But if ye turn away, and forsake my statutes and my commandments, which I have set before you, and shall go and serve other gods and worship them;

20 Then will I pluck them up by the roots out of my land which I have given them: and this house, which I have sanctified for my name, will I cast out of my sight, and will make it to be a proverb and a byword among all nations.

21 And this house, which is high, shall be an astonishment to every one that passeth by it; so that he shall say, Why hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and unto this house?

22 And it shall be answered, Because they forsook the LORD God of their fathers, which brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, and laid hold on other gods, and worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath he brought all this evil upon them.

two thousand oxen.] See 1 Kings viii. 63, where it is said, he offered only twenty thousand oxen; which was a vast number, but not incredible: nor are these two places inconsistent, as I have there shown.

So the king and all the people dedicated the house of God.] Thus the dedication of the temple ended.

Ver. 6. The Levites also with instruments of music of the Lord.] They are called musical instruments of the Lord, because David had made them, as it here follows "to praise the Lord withal, because his mercy endureth for ever" (see 1 Chron. xv. 16).

When David praised by their ministry;] For they sung the psalm of praise which he composed, 1 Chron. xvi. 7, &c. In the Hebrew the words are behallil David bejatham, with the hallel (that is, the hymn of praise) which David had put into their hands for that purpose.

All Israel stood.] For that was the common posture of worship, whether in prayer or praises.

Ver. 7—9.] These verses and the next are explained in 1 Kings viii. 64—66.

Ver. 10.] The Targum thus glosses upon the last words of this verse, which express the joy of the people: For the goodness of the Lord, shown unto David in the opening of the doors of the sanctuary; and unto Solomon, whose prayer God had accepted, and vouchsafed his glorious presence in the house he had built; and unto his people Israel, in his gracious acceptance of their sacrifices, and sending down fire from heaven to consume them.

Ver. 11.] See 1 Kings ix. 1.

Ver. 12. The Lord appeared to Solomon by night.] See 1 Kings ix. 2.

And have chosen this place to myself for a house of sacrifice.] As appeared by the fire which came down from heaven and consumed the sacrifice, at the consecration of this house.

Ver. 13.] Famine and pestilence were two sore punishments wherewith God afflicted them for their sins; and the former of them was caused sometimes by want of rain, and sometimes by locusts, who ate up what the earth produced for their sustenance.

Ver. 14.] He had petitioned for the divine favour and clemency upon no other condition.

Ver. 15.] Some take these phrases to signify, that he will always discern whether they were such as they ought to be; but they rather have the same sense with the next verse, that he would have a gracious respect to them, and testify it by hearing their prayers, as he desired, ch. vi. 40.

Ver. 16.] See this explained, 1 Kings ix. 3.

Ver. 17.] See there, ver. 4.

Ver. 22.] This and the foregoing verses are the same with those 1 Kings ix. 6—9, and there have been explained.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Solomon's buildings. 7 The Gentiles which were left Solomon made tributaries; but the Israelites rulers. 11 Pharaoh's daughter removeth to her house. 12 Solomon's yearly solemn sacrifices. 14 He appointeth the priests and Levites to their places. 17 The navy fetcheth gold from Ophir.

1 AND it came pass at the end of twenty years, wherein Solomon had built the house of the LORD, and his own house,

2 That the cities which Hiram had restored to Solomon, Solomon built them, and caused the children of Israel to dwell there.

3 And Solomon went to Hamath-zobah, and prevailed against it.

4 And he built Tadmor in the wilderness, and all the store cities, which he built in Hamath.

5 Also he built Beth-horon the upper, and Beth-horon the nether, fenced cities, with walls, gates, and bars;

6 And Baalath, and all the store cities that Solomon had, and all the chariot cities, and the cities of the horsemen, and all that Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and throughout all the land of his dominion.

7 ¶ As for all the people that were left of the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which were not of Israel,

8 But of their children, who were left after them in the land, whom the children of Israel consumed not, them did Solomon make to pay tribute unto this day.

9 But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no servants for his work; but they were men of war, and chief of his captains, and captains of his chariots and horsemen.

10 And these were the chief of king Solomon's officers, even two hundred and fifty, that bare rule over the people.

11 ¶ And Solomon brought up the daughter of Pharaoh out of the city of David unto the house that he had built for her: for he said, My wife shall not dwell in the house of David king of Israel, because the places are holy whereunto the ark of the LORD hath come.

12 ¶ Then Solomon offered burnt offerings unto the LORD on the altar of the LORD, which he had built before the porch, 13 Even after a certain rate every day, offering according to the commandment of Moses, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts, three times in the year, even in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles.

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1.] See 1 Kings ix. 10.

Ver. 2.] This is a short relation of what is more largely told in the book of the Kings, ch. ix. 12, 13, only here we are further informed, that these cities being restored to Solomon, who had given them to Hiram, (who disliked them), Solomon built them so that his own subjects became the inhabitants of them.

Ver. 3.] This country lay between Euphrates, which was the eastern bounds of it, and Damascus, which was the western, as Bochartus hath demonstrated in his Phaleg, lib. ii. cap. 7.

Ver. 4. He built Tadmor in the wilderness,] See an account of this in 1 Kings ix. 18.

All the store cities, which he built in Hamath.] All the cities wherein he laid up provision for war were in this country of Hamath-zobah, as well as Tadmor.

Ver. 5.] Only one of these cities is mentioned in the book of the Kings, viz. the nether. But both of them were built before, and he now only repaired, enlarged, beautified, and made them strong places (see 1 Kings ix. 17).

Ver. 6. Baalath, and all the store cities that Solomon had,] That is, elsewhere, as well as in the land of Hamath.

And all the chariot cities,] See 1 Kings ix. 19.

Ver. 7—9.] These three verses are the same with 1 Kings ix. 20—22.

Ver. 10.] How this agrees with the book of the Kings, where it is said they were five hundred and fifty, see upon 1 Kings ix. 23.

Ver. 11. Solomon brought up the daughter of Pharaoh out of the city of David] Where she first dwelt (1 Kings iii. 1).

Unto the house that he had built] See 1 Kings vii. 8. For he said, My wife shall not dwell in the house of David king of Israel, because the places are holy, whereunto the ark of the Lord hath come.] All houses into which the ark had come were not thereby made holy, for then the house of Obededom would have been so. But where it had been settled so long as it had been in David's house, and had a tabernacle made for it, there was a special regard to the place where it had made its abode; and Solomon would not suffer a stranger (for so his wife was, though proselyted) to keep her court there. For it is not likely she and all her servants had embraced the law of Moses, though they had renounced idolatry; and so might many ways defile a place which had been made sacred by a divine presence in it. Many other reasons are given by interpreters, to which I refer the reader; and only add, that Abarbinel thought it sufficient to say that it would have sounded very ill, to hear the people say that Pharaoh's daughter dwelt where the ark of God had inhabited. And he looks upon this as an argument that the heart of Solomon continued hitherto right with God, and had no intentions to commit those sins he afterward did: and therefore God at this time vouchsafed him the gift of prophecy.

Ver. 12.] That is, he settled the daily sacrifice at the temple.

Ver. 13.] He took care the law of Moses should be strictly observed, which prescribed what offerings should be offered every day (Exod. xxix. 38, 39); and at several other solemn times here mentioned (Exod. xxiii. 14, and other places).

Ver. 14. He appointed, according to the order of David his father, the courses of the priests to their service, and the Levites to their charges.] Next of all he took care to confirm and establish the orders which David had made, for the regular attendance of the priests and Levites upon the service of God. Who were but a few in the days of Moses, in comparison of what they were now; and therefore David disposed of so that all confusion might be avoided, and also 14 ¶ And he appointed, according to the order of David his father, the courses of the priests to their service, and the Levites to their charges, to praise and minister before the priests, as the duty of every day required; the porters also by their courses at every gate: for so had David the man of God commanded.

15 And they departed not from the commandment of the king unto the priests and Levites, concerning any matter, or concerning the treasures.

16 Now all the work of Solomon was prepared assigned them new employments, in singing the hymns which he composed, and playing upon musical instruments, whereby he made the service of God more beautiful and cheerful (see 1 Chron. xxiv. xxv.).

The porters also by their courses at every gate:] These words show that the porters were distributed into twenty-four courses, as well as the priests and Levites; though this order of David's be not there expressly mentioned (see what I have noted upon 1 Chron. xxvi. 27, 28).

For so had David the man of God commanded.] He is called by the name of the "man of God," as Moses was, because after Moses there was none like him, so divinely inspired to raise the public worship of God to a higher pitch by his heavenly hymns, and to direct the manner of its performance in such order, that God was served (if I may use here those words of his) "in the beauty of holiness." For though Solomon, as Strigelius observes, was a very wise man in natural knowledge, and in political affairs, and in moral and divine things, yet he was much inferior to David in piety, and in the gift of prophecy; as the book of Psalms alone is sufficient to testify: in which there are so many glorious predictions of the Messiah.

Ver. 15.] Whatsoever had been ordered by David in all other matters, Solomon settled them, and the priests and Levites obeyed him.

unto the day of the foundation of the house of the LORD, and until it was finished: so the house of the LORD was perfected.

17 ¶ Then went Solomon to Ezion-geber, and to Eloth, at the sea-side in the land of Edom.

18 And Hiram sent him, by the hands of his servants, ships, and servants that had knowledge of the sea; and they went with the servants of Solomon to Ophir, and took thence four hundred and fifty talents of gold, and brought them to king Solomon.

Ver. 16.] Care was taken that there should be no stop to the building of God's house, because all materials were prepared before he began it; and every thing projected how it should be done, in every part of it.

Ver. 17.] After he had finished all those great works of the house of the Lord, and his own house, and built many cities, as before recited, he designed to improve navigation, which the Jews did not much understand. And for that end he went to these places on the Red sea (see 1 Kings ix. 26). Eloth (as is observed by the learned Nic. Fuller in his Miscellanies, lib. iv. cap. 20) lay nearest to him, which appears from Deut. ii. 8, where we read that the Israelites, passing by the country of Edom, came first to Eloth and then to Ezion. But Solomon went first to Ezion, though further off, because there was Ναυίγιον, the place where ships were built and fitted up; which Solomon made haste, with the greatest diligence and speed, to inspect, and see in what forwardness they were.

Ver. 18.] Besides those ships which Solomon had built, Hiram sent more, who brought able seamen with them to manage the whole fleet. See there ver. 22, 28, where only four hundred and twenty talents are said to be brought; of which I have there given an account, and shown it doth not disagree with this place.

CHAPTER IX.

1 The queen of Sheba admireth the wisdom of Solomon. 13 Solomon's gold. 15 His targets. 17 The throne of ivory. 20 His vessels. 23 His presents. 25 His chariots and horse. 26 His tributes. 29 His reign and death.

1 AND when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, she came to prove Solomon with hard questions at Jerusalem, with a very great company, and camels that bare spices, and gold in abundance, and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart.

2 And Solomon told her all her questions: and there was nothing hid from Solomon which he told her not.

3 And when the queen of Sheba had seen the wisdom of Solomon, and the house that he had built,

4 And the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel; his cup-bearers also, and their apparel; and his ascent by which he went up into the house of the LORD; there was no more spirit in her.

5 And she said to the king, It was a true report which I heard in mine own land of thine acts, and of thy wisdom;

6 Howbeit, I believed not their words until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the one half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me: for thou exceedest the fame that I heard.

7 Happy are thy men, and happy are these

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 2.] There is little in this chapter, but what is related in 1 Kings x. where see concerning these two verses, ver. 1—3. I shall only add, that the hard questions she came to ask, were not the curious inquiries into the secrets of natural things, or new political matters, but about things pertaining to piety, and the service of God. For our Saviour saith, she came to hear the wisdom of Solomon, and should thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom.

8 Blessed be the LORD thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on his throne, to be king for the LORD thy God: because thy God loved Israel, to establish them for ever, therefore made he thee king over them, to do judgment and justice.

9 And she gave the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices great abundance, and precious stones: neither was there any such spice as the queen of Sheba gave king Solomon.

10 And the servants also of Hiram, and the servants of Solomon, which brought gold from Ophir, brought alnum trees and precious stones.

11 And the king made of the alnum trees terraces to the house of the LORD, and to the king's palace, and harps and psalteries for singers: and there were none such seen before in the land of Judah.

12 And king Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which she had brought unto the king: so she turned, and went away to her own land, she and her servants.

13 ¶ Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and threescore and six talents of gold;

14 Beside that which chapmen and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia and governors of the country brought gold and silver to Solomon.

15 ¶ And king Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred shekels of beaten gold went to one target.

16 And three hundred shields made he of beaten gold; three hundred shekels of gold went to one shield. And the king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

17 Moreover, the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with pure gold.

18 And there were six steps to the throne, with a footstool of gold, which were fastened to the throne, and stays on each side of the sitting place, and two lions standing by the stays:

19 And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps. There was not the like made in any kingdom.

20 ¶ And all the drinking vessels of king Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold: none were of silver; it was not any thing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

21 For the king's ships went to Tarshish with the servants of Hiram: every three years once came the ships of Tarshish, bringing gold, and silver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

22 And king Solomon passed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom.

23 ¶ And all the kings of the earth sought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, that God had put in his heart.

24 And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and raiment, harness, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

25 ¶ And Solomon had four thousand stalls for horses and chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

26 ¶ And he reigned over all the kings from the river even unto the land of the Philistines, and to the border of Egypt.

therefore rise up in judgment against that generation, who would not learn of him; and in 1 Kings x. 1, it is said, the fame she heard of Solomon was concerning the name of the Lord: which moved her to this journey.

Ver. 7.] All that is contained in the foregoing verses, is related in the same words (with very little difference) in 1 Kings x. 4—8, where see what I have noted.

Ver. 8. Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on his throne, to be king for the Lord thy God.] In these words she says a great deal more than is there related, ver. 9, for she here calls the throne of Israel the "throne of the Lord;" and acknowledges Solomon to be made "king for the Lord his God;" that is, not only to rule by his authority, and as his viceroy, but for his glory, and to promote his religion.

Because thy God loved Israel.] See upon 1 Kings x. 9.

Ver. 11.] This and the two foregoing verses are explained in 1 Kings x. 10—12.

Ver. 12.] The last clause, concerning his presents (viz. "besides that which she had brought unto the king"), is expressed much otherwise in 1 Kings x. 13, where the words are, "besides that which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty." Which is here explained to have been done to requite her for the great presents she had made the king.

Ver. 13.] See there, ver. 14.

Ver. 14.] See there, ver. 15.

Ver. 16.] See both this and the foregoing verse there explained, ver. 16, 17.

Ver. 17, 18.] These and the following verses are explained in 1 Kings x. 18—21, where there are the same words: only here is mention made of a footstool of gold, which is not taken notice of there.

Ver. 21.] See 1 Kings x. 22.

Ver. 22—24.] See of these verses 1 Kings x. 23—25.

Ver. 25. Solomon had four thousand stalls for horses] See 1 Kings x. 26, and what I have noted there to make this place and that agree together.

Twelve thousand horsemen;] See there. It is evident that in David's time they had no horses: for Absalom, when he had lost the battle wherein he perished, rode upon a mule to make his escape; and David ordered his own mule to carry Solomon to be anointed. And indeed the country did not produce them; but Solomon, being able to make great expenses, had them brought out of Egypt, and maintained this number of chariots; which resembled those of the Grecians; that is, they were small, with two wheels a piece, carrying a man or two, standing or leaning forward. The following kings could not be at this charge; but upon occasion sent for succour from Egypt, and then mention is always made of their horses.

Ver. 26.] That is, they were tributaries to him (see 1 Kings iv. 26).

27 And the king made silver in Jerusalem as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the low plains in abundance.

28 And they brought unto Solomon horses out of Egypt, and out of all lands.

29 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Solomon, first and last, are they not written in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite, and in the visions of Iddo the seer against Jeroboam the son of Nebat?

30 And Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel forty years.

31 And Solomon slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

Ver. 27. The king made silver in Jerusalem as stones.] This is an hyperbolical expression, signifying such abundance of it, as exceeded all belief.

And cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the low plains in abundance.] This is a wild fig-tree, with which those countries abound; bearing fruit not unlike to figs, but much sweeter, and have no little seeds in them. And being not so good as others, are little esteemed, but commonly sold only to the poorer sort of people, as Leon Rawholf informs us in his Travels, par. i. ch. 4.

Ver. 28.] Such as Cappadocia, which was famous for a noble breed of horses (see 1 Kings x. 28). But Egypt is here especially mentioned, because it was nearer, and no place afforded more. From whence, even till the captivity, they sought for supplies, as appears by Zedekiah's sending ambassadors to Egypt, requesting horses from thence (Ezek. xvii. 15).

Ver. 29.] In the first book of the Kings it is only said, that his acts were written in the book of the acts of Solomon (see ch. xi. 41). But here we are told the particular books wherein they were recorded. And the last of these authors (viz. Iddo) wrote also the acts of Rehoboam, ch. xii. 15, of this book; and some suppose he lived till the time of Asa, ch. xv. 1, where he is called Obed. Howsoever that be, it appears by this, that the prophets, as I noted before, were also historians, who gave an account of what passed in their times: out of whose work this short history was extracted. And Abarbanel is of opinion, that there were two books or catalogues written of the acts of Solomon; one, De Rebus Prioribus, of what passed in the beginning of his reign, giving an account of his great buildings, and of the splendour wherein he lived, and the prosperity he enjoyed; and these were written by Nathan: the other, De Rebus Posterioribus, giving an account of what passed in the latter end of his life; how he deoted upon women, and fell into idolatry, and was threatened with terrible punishments, and had several adversaries raised against him, &c., which were all written by Ahijah the Shilonite. And some of these things were also recorded by another author, Iddo; who wrote concerning the acts of Jeroboam, which could not be related without touching upon some part of Solomon's reign. These three did not join to make one book, but severally and distinctly gave an account of such things as occurred to their knowledge; out of which, it is probable, Ezra took many things, which he hath supplied in this book.

Ver. 30, 31.] These two verses are the last words of 1 Kings xi. 42, 43.

CHAPTER X.

1 The Israelites, assembled at Shechem to crown Rehoboam, by Jeroboam make a suit of relaxation unto him. 6 Rehoboam, refusing the old men's counsel, by the advice of young men answereth them roughly. 16 Ten tribes revolting kill Hadoram, and make Rehoboam to flee.

1 AND Rehoboam went to Shechem: for so Shechem were all Israel come to make him king.

2 And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was in Egypt, whither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king, heard it, that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.

3 And they sent and called him. So Jeroboam and all Israel came and spake to Rehoboam, saying,

4 Thy father made our yoke grievous; now, therefore, ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude of thy father, and his heavy yoke that he put upon us, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Come again unto me after three days. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam took counsel with the old men that had stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, saying, What counsel give ye me, to return answer to this people?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, If thou be kind to this people, and please them, and speak good words to them, they will be thy servants for ever.

8 And he forsook the counsel which the old men gave him, and took counsel with the young men that were brought up with him, that stood before him.

9 And he said unto them, What advice give ye, that we may return answer to this people, which have spoken to me, saying, Ease somewhat the yoke that thy father did put upon us?

10 And the young men that were brought up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt

CHAP. X.

Ver. 2.] See 1 Kings xii. where this chapter is so fully explained, that little is to be added here.

Ver. 3. And they sent and called him.] The Targum well translates it, for they sent, giving a reason why he returned from Egypt.

Ver. 4.] This verse is the same in sense with 1 Kings xii. 4, and so are those that follow, with those that follow there; where see them explained. I shall only add, that if this complaint of Solomon's hard usage of them was true, it is probable that when he was corrupted by the love of money and strange women, and fell into idolatry, he also oppressed his sub-thou answer the people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it somewhat lighter for us; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

11 For whereas my father put a heavy yoke upon you, I will put more to your yoke: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam on the third day, as the king bade, saying, Come again to me on the third day.

13 And the king answered them roughly: and king Rehoboam forsook the counsel of the old men, 14 And answered them after the advice of the young men, saying, My father made your yoke heavy, but I will add thereto: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 So the king hearkened not unto the people; for the cause was of God, that the Lord might perform his word, which he spake by the hand of Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 ¶ And when all Israel saw that the king would not hearken unto them, the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? and we have none inheritance in the son of Jesse: every man to your tents, O Israel: and now, David, see to thine own house. So all Israel went to their tents.

17 But as for the children of Israel that dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent Hadoram, that was over the tribute; and the children of Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. But king Rehoboam made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

19 And Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day.

jects; being unable to maintain such great expenses, as so many wives and concubines, and building them places for religious worship (besides other things before mentioned) put him unto, without greater treasures than he had heaped up to support them. At least they began to be exhausted, which tempted him to these ill courses to keep them full.

Ver. 5.] The rest of this chapter is so much the very same, not only in sense, but also in words, with what we had before in the book of the Kings, that I shall not transcribe it.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Rehoboam raising an army to subdue Israel, is forbidden by Shemaiah. 5 He strengtheneth his kingdom with forts and provision. 13 The priests and Levites, and such as feared God, forsaken by Jeroboam, strengthen the kingdom of Judah. 18 The wives and children of Rehoboam.

1 AND when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he gathered of the house of Judah and Benjamin a hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against Israel, that he might bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam.

2 But the word of the Lord came to Shemaiah the man of God, saying,

3 Speak unto Rehoboam the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and to all Israel in Judah and Benjamin, saying,

4 Thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not go up nor fight against your brethren: return every man to his house; for this thing is done of me. And they obeyed the words of the Lord, and returned from going against Jeroboam.

5 ¶ And Rehoboam dwelt in Jerusalem, and built cities for defence in Judah.

6 He built even Beth-lehem, and Etam, and Tekoa,

7 And Beth-zur, and Shoco, and Adullam,

8 And Gath, and Mareshah, and Ziph,

9 And Adoraim, and Lachish, and Azekah,

10 And Zorah, and Aijalon, and Hebron, which are in Judah and in Benjamin, fenced cities.

11 And he fortified the strong holds, and put captains in them, and store of victual, and of oil and wine.

12 And in every several city he put shields and spears, and made them exceeding strong, having Judah and Benjamin on his side.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1.—4.] These four verses I have explained in my notes upon 1 Kings xii. 21—24.

Ver. 5.] That is, he strengthened his frontiers against the ten tribes that were revolted from him.

Ver. 7.] We are told in 1 Chron. iv. 32, that Etam was a town in the tribe of Simeon: therefore this shows that some portion of that tribe adhered to the house of David, after Jeroboam made this rent in the kingdom.

Ver. 10.] It is apparent from hence, that by “building cities of defence” (ver. 5), is meant only repairing and fortifying them: for they were built before, but perhaps he now enlarged some of them, and made them more capacious.

Ver. 11.] These strong holds, I suppose, were in the heart of his country: which he furnished with good garrisons and provisions; that they might be able to maintain a siege, in case their enemies should make an irruption into his country.

Ver. 12.] Who were two warlike and valiant tribes by whose assistance he made every one of these cities a magazine; out of which, upon occasion, soldiers might be furnished with arms. Which was a necessary precaution in doubtful times, for the preservation of his kingdom.

Ver. 13.] So the tribe of Levi was added to the 13 ¶ And the priests and the Levites that were in all Israel resorted to him out of all their coasts.

14 For the Levites left their suburbs, and their possession, and came to Judah and Jerusalem: for Jeroboam and his sons had cast them off from executing the priests office unto the LORD:

15 And he ordained him priests for the high places, and for the devils, and for the calves which he had made.

16 And after them, out of all the tribes of Israel such as set their hearts to seek the LORD God of Israel came to Jerusalem, to sacrifice unto the LORD God of their fathers.

17 So they strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and made Rehoboam the son of Solomon strong, three years: for three years they walked in the way of David and Solomon.

18 ¶ And Rehoboam took him Mahalath the daughter of Jerimoth the son of David to wife, and Abihail the daughter of Eliab the son of Jesse;

19 Which bare him children; Jeush, and Shamariah, and Zaham.

20 And after her he took Maachah the daughter of Absalom, which bare him Abijah, and Attai, and Ziza, and Shelomith.

21 And Rehoboam loved Maachah the daughter of Absalom above all his wives and his concubines: (for he took eighteen wives and threescore concubines; and begat twenty and eight sons, and threescore daughters.)

tribe of Judah; though not all the cities wherein they dwelt: which they were forced to leave, when they would not conform to the idolatrous worship which Jeroboam had set up. The tribe of Simeon likewise was so intermixed with Judah, that, in all probability, more cities of it besides that before mentioned, if not all, become one body with it; which made Judah a very powerful kingdom.

Ver. 14.] After the right manner, according to the law of Moses. For they refused to offer sacrifices before his calves in Dan and Beth-el: and he would not let them go to do their duty at Jerusalem, the place which the Lord had chosen; and therefore they left their dwellings and possessions, and went to live there. He mentions Jeroboam's sons as well as himself; because they were his principal counsellors, and assistants in the change he made in religion.

Ver. 15.] See 1 Kings xii. 28, 29, &c. A new religion being set up by Jeroboam, devised out of his own head, wherein he ordained a solemnity in the eighth month, which was not of God's institution, all that he did was profane. The priests profane, the feasts profane: and so were the sacrifices and the whole worship. And therefore he calls (as Bochartus well observes) the objects of their worship devils and gods: and the ministers of this religion he calls not cohen, priests, but chemarim (Hos. x. 5): and their solemnities, instead of the feasts of God, he calls the day of their king (Hos. vii. 5, because instituted by their king, and not by God); and the place of worship, instead of Beth-el, he calls Beth-aven (Hos. x. 5, 8), that is, not the house of God, but the house of wickedness, or of idolatry. For the ointment (as he speaks) being turned into deadly poison, the inscription ought not to remain upon the pot or box wherein it was contained (see his Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 34, p. 357). There is a late writer, indeed (Antonius van Dale), who labours to persuade us, that the word seirim (which we translate devils) signifies no more than goats; which were worshipped in Egypt: from whence Jeroboam lately coming brought this worship along with him. But who can think the Israelites would have been drawn to adore so filthy a creature? which was worshipped by the Egyptians, as several other hairy creatures were, and the image of them held in great veneration (Pan being represented below in that form), as Bochartus hath observed: yet signified also demons, which appeared in that shape. Thus the ancient interpreters, the Chaldee, the Syriac, the Arabic, and all the Jews, understand it, as the same learned man hath largely shown, in the same book, lib. ii. cap. 53, p. 643.

Ver. 16.] The good example of the priests and Levites moved many pious people to quit their habitations and estates, rather than forsake, or not have the exercise of their religion.

Ver. 17.] Though the number of people that came to him out of all the tribes, added great strength to Rehoboam's kingdom: yet his power was chiefly owing unto God: who protected and assisted them, as long as he and his people continued in the way of his predecessors, David and Solomon. From which last words some conclude Solomon was a penitent, because he is mentioned here as an example of true piety, as well as David. But it cannot be certainly inferred hence, because this may relate only to the greatest part of his reign, before he lapsed in his old age, and forsook the law of Moses. The book of Ecclesiastes is a better proof of it, which the Jews generally think was written when he was old: wherein he sensibly expresses the vanity of all earthly things; and particularly speaks with great detestation of bad women, by whom he had been seduced (Eccles. vii. 26). Here it is to be observed, that the corruption of Judah and Israel began in the fourth year of Rehoboam (see xii. 1); and from thence begin the three hundred and ninety years of their iniquity mentioned by Ezekiel, iv. 5, which lasted to the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 18. Jerimoth] We never read of Jerimoth among the sons of David, but only here. Some think he was by a concubine who is not named.

Abihail] His grand-daughter; for he was David's eldest brother.

Ver. 19.] He speaks, I suppose, of the latter of these wives, who bare him these children.

Ver. 20.] This wife was his first cousin (as we call such persons), being the daughter of his uncle: if this be meant of Absalom the son of David. But it is evident this was another person of the same name of Gilbeah, which was in the tribe of Benjamin (xiii. 2), whereas Absalom the son of David was of Judah.

Ver. 21.] So great was their desire of having abundance of children in those days, that they entreated upon the law of God, who commanded their kings should not multiply wives. But David indulged himself in it, and Solomon a great deal more: and so did Rehoboam and Abijah, who had both of them a numerous issue. For virginity in those days was not accounted a virtue: and the greatest unhappiness in a married estate was barrenness.

Ver. 22. Rehoboam made Abijah the son of Maachah the chief] He was his eldest son by his beloved wife, whom he put in authority over all the rest, which he had by her, and by his former wives.

For he thought to make him king.] Such power I have observed before, they then challenged: and in 22 And Rehoboam made Abijah the son of Maachah the chief, to be ruler among his brethren: for he thought to make him king.

23 And he dealt wisely, and dispersed of all his children throughout all the countries of Judah and Benjamin, unto every fenced city; and he gave them victual in abundance. And he desired many wives.

order to it, he seems to have committed unto Abijah the management of all affairs under himself.

Ver. 23. And he dealt wisely, and dispersed of all his children throughout all the countries of Judah and Benjamin.] Upon which words Kimchi glosses very well: He thought seriously of this thing, and, fearing a rebellion, broke all his sons (that is, did not suffer them to live together), and dispersed them into all parts of the country under his government, that he might confirm the kingdom in the hand of his son Abijah. Thus Abraham anciently sent his sons which he had by Keturah into other countries, that they might not be troublesome to Isaac, who he intended should be his heir: and thus Jehoshaphat did in following times after this (xxi. 3).

Unto every fenced city.] Of which, I suppose, he made them governors-in-chief, and committed a great care to them: these cities being frontier places, as I observed, ver. 5, where, it is probable, he had trusted persons to watch and observe them, that they entered not into any combinations to defeat his design.

He gave them victual in abundance.] He provided for them amply, that they might not be discontented, but live at their ease.

He desired many wives.] This might possibly be for his children, that they might in their several governments live very pleasantly. But, considering his temper, most interpreters think it was for himself: being not satisfied with those wives he had already, but still desiring more.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Rehoboam, forsaking the Lord, is punished by Shishak. 5 He and the princes, repenting at the preaching of Shemaiah, are delivered from destruction, but not from spoil. 13 The reign and death of Rehoboam.

I AND it came to pass, when Rehoboam had established the kingdom, and had strengthened himself, he forsook the law of the LORD, and all Israel with him.

2 And it came to pass, that, in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, because they had transgressed against the LORD,

3 With twelve hundred chariots, and three-score thousand horsemen: and the people were without number that came with him out of Egypt; the Lubims, the Sukkiims, and the Ethiopians.

4 And he took the fenced cities which pertained to Judah, and came to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ Then came Shemaiah the prophet to Rehoboam, and to the princes of Judah that were gathered together to Jerusalem because of Shishak, and said unto them, Thus saith the LORD, Ye have forsaken me, and therefore have I also left you in the hand of Shishak.

6 Whereupon the princes of Israel and the king humbled themselves; and they said, The LORD is righteous.

7 And when the LORD saw that they humbled themselves, the word of the LORD came to She-

CHAP. XII.

Ver. 1. When Rehoboam had established the kingdom, and had strengthened himself.] When he thought himself safe, and out of all danger.

He forsook the law of the Lord.] His evil inclinations began to appear; which he derived, it is likely, from his mother, who was an Ammonitess (see I Kings xiv. 21).

And all Israel with him.] See I Kings xiv. 22—21.

Ver. 2.] See I Kings xiv. 25. Their apostasy was in the fourth year of his reign (after they had been three years obedient, xi. 17); therefore God speedily corrected them, that he might reduce them to his service, before they were settled in their impiety.

Ver. 3. The people were without number] That is, the footmen in his army.

That came with him out of Egypt; the Lubims, the Sukkiims, and the Ethiopians.] There is no doubt the Lubims were the people of Lybia, a famous country in Africa, adjoining to Egypt. And the Sukkiims are the people called Troglodytes, who lived near the Red sea: and had that name Troglodytes, because they dwelt in τρωγλαῖς "in caves and dens of the earth:" which is the very signification of the Hebrew word succha: which in that language imports not only tabernacles, but also caves or dens, as in Ps. x. 9; Job xxxviii. 40. From this people there was a town, upon the coast of the Red sea, called Succha: and at this day, with a little alteration, Suachen, as Bochartus observes in his Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 29. As for the people called Cush (which we translate Ethiopians), they were either those to the south of Egypt, or the Scenitæ in Arabia: for I have observed elsewhere it was a name common to both (see the same most learned author in the same book, cap. 33).

Ver. 4. He took the fenced cities which pertained to Judah.] Where the sons of Rehoboam were governors: who, perhaps, there perished.

And came to Jerusalem.] The frontier towns being taken, nothing hindered his coming hither. For, trusting to his fenced cities, he had raised no army to oppose Shishak: or, if he had, they durst not oppose his progress.

Ver. 5. Then came Shemaiah the prophet to Rehoboam,—to Jerusalem] As to a place of more safety than the country; or, perhaps, to consult what to do, in a time of so great danger.

Ye have forsaken me, and therefore have I also left you in the hand of Shishak.] The Chaldee translates this, "Ye have forsaken my fear;" that is, his worship, and turned to idols: therefore God gave them up into the power of an idolater.

Ver. 6. Whereupon the princes of Israel] They are called "the princes of Israel," because there were many Israelites among them; and they had all lately been comprehended under this name.

And the king humbled themselves; and they said, The Lord is righteous.] Sorrowfully confessed that the Lord had most justly punished them for their sins.

Ver. 7.] Their humiliation prevailed with God so far, that he moderated his anger, and respited the maiah, saying, They have humbled themselves, therefore I will not destroy them, but I will grant them some deliverance; and my wrath shall not be poured out upon Jerusalem by the hand of Shishak.

8 Nevertheless they shall be his servants; that they may know my service, and the service of the kingdoms of the countries.

9 So Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, and took away the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; he took all: he carried away also the shields of gold which Solomon had made.

10 Instead of which king Rehoboam made shields of brass, and committed them to the hands of the chief of the guard, that kept the entrance of the king's house.

11 And when the king entered into the house of the LORD, the guard came and fetched them, and brought them again into the guard chamber.

12 And when he humbled himself, the wrath destruction which was coming upon them: promising he would not suffer Shishak to do so much mischief as he designed. Yet he seems to intimate, that if they went on to provoke him, he would use some other hand to ruin them.

Ver. 8.] He resolved to let them feel the difference between him and all other lords and masters; and how much more happy they were while they continued to worship and serve him, than when they fell under a foreign yoke.

Ver. 9. So Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem,] Which was basely yielded up to him, ἀμαρτί, "without striking a stroke," as Dionysius Halicarnassus speaks. Who is thought by learned men to have respect to this place, when he saith that Sesostris made an expedition into Palestine, Λαβὼν ἀμαρτί τοῖς ἀνδράσι ἐν αὐτῷ, "taking all the men there without fighting." And it was to be ascribed only to the great goodness of God, that he did not possess himself absolutely of the whole country, and make it a province subject and tributary to the king of Egypt. For unless God had diverted him, he might have done what he pleased; it being in his power to extirpate the Jewish nation.

Ver. 10, 11.] These three verses have been explained in 1 Kings xiv. 25—28. Only from hence may be gathered, that the golden shields were made for state, to be used by his guard when they attended him to the house of the Lord; this being the use of the brassen shields which were made in their stead.

Ver. 12. And when he humbled himself, the wrath of the Lord turned from him, that he would not destroy him altogether:] When he saw his danger he humbled himself, before Shishak came to Jerusalem; and after he had taken and ransacked it, he humbled himself still more: and thereby diverted that utter destruction which such an army might have brought of the LORD turned from him, that he would not destroy him altogether: and also in Judah things went well.

13 ¶ So king Rehoboam strengthened himself in Jerusalem, and reigned: for Rehoboam was one and forty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which the LORD had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah, an Ammonitess.

14 And he did evil, because he prepared not his heart to seek the LORD.

15 Now the acts of Rehoboam, first and last, are they not written in the book of Shemaiah the prophet, and of Iddo the seer, concerning genealogies? And there were wars between Rehoboam and Jeroboam continually.

19 And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David: and Abijah his son reigned in his stead.

upon him, and which their sins deserved. For it appears by the language of the prophet, God was most highly provoked by the defection of Judah so suddenly from him, to pour out his wrath upon them.

And also in Judah things went well.] They began again to prosper. But the words in the Hebrew being there were good things in Judah, they may be understood of the reformation made in the whole kingdom; many good things being found among them in the midst of their corruption. For the priests, I suppose, kept up the worship of God in its purity, and many good people joined in it, especially such as had fled from the idolatry of Jeroboam.

Ver. 13. So king Rehoboam strengthened himself in Jerusalem, and reigned:] He repaired the fenced cities which Shishak had taken, and recovered so much strength, that he reigned with some authority. See 1 Kings xiv. 21.

Ver. 14.] This seems to signify, that after his humiliation for his sins he relapsed again into them (though it may relate to his first provocation); and the reason is here given, because his heart was not intent (as the Targum expounds it) to seek instruction from the Lord.

Ver. 15. The book of Shemaiah the prophet,] Which was extant when Ezra made this short abstract out of it. For prophets, as I observed before, wrote the history of their own times; as Jarchi says they did their own prophecies.

And of Iddo the seer concerning genealogies?] The Targum hath it, "genealogies of the house of David;" which he set down in the history he wrote of things done in his time.

There were wars between Rehoboam and Jeroboam continually.] See 1 Kings xiv. 30.

Ver. 16. Abijah his son reigned in his stead.] As he had designed in his lifetime (see ch. xi. 22, 23).

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Abijah succeeding maketh war against Jeroboam. 4 He declareth the right of his cause. 13 Trust- ing in God he overcometh Jeroboam. 21 The wives and children of Abijah.

1 Now in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam began Abijah to reign over Judah.

2 He reigned three years in Jerusalem: his mother's name also was Michaiiah, the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah: and there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam.

3 And Abijah set the battle in array with an army of valiant men of war, even four hundred thousand chosen men: Jeroboam also set the battle in array against him with eight hundred thousand chosen men, being mighty men of valour.

4 ¶ And Abijah stood up upon mount Zemaraim, which is in mount Ephraim, and said, Hear me, thou Jeroboam, and all Israel;

5 Ought ye not to know, that the LORD God of Israel gave the kingdom over Israel to David for ever, even to him and to his sons by a covenant of salt?

6 Yet Jeroboam the son of Nebat, the servant of Solomon, the son of David, is risen up, and hath rebelled against his lord.

7 And there are gathered unto him vain men, the children of Belial, and have strengthened themselves against Rehoboam the son of Solomon, when Rehoboam was young and tender-hearted, and could not withstand them.

8 And now ye think to withstand the kingdom of the LORD in the hand of the sons of David;

CHAP. XIII.

Ver. 1.] See 1 Kings xv. 1.

Ver. 2. His mother's name also was Michaiiah, the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah.] He gives a different account above, xi. 20, 21, for there his mother is called Maachah, and her father's name is said to be Absalom: and so we read 1 Kings xv. 2. The Targum, therefore, to reconcile these two places, adds a long gloss, in these words: Because she was his legal wife, her name was changed from Maachah to Michajah, which was a more honourable name; and the name of her father changed into Uriel, that no mention might be made of the name of Absalom. But this reason is frivolous, for she is said to be the daughter of Absalom in the place above named. Therefore a better account of this is given by Jarchi and by Kimchi, who say that her entire name was Michaiiah Maachah, and her father's entire name was Uriel Absalom (see what I have noted upon 1 Kings xv. 2).

And there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam.] See 1 Kings xv. 7.

Ver. 3.] Here was such a vast army brought into the field, that the whole strength of both sides was engaged in the controversy about the restoring the kingdom of Israel to the house of David, who had but half the number of men that was on Jeroboam's side; but thought they had the better cause, and seemed by Abijah's speech to have put such trust in God for succour, that they doubted not of success.

Ver. 4. Abijah stood up upon mount Zemaraim.] It seems Belial had entered into the country of the Israelites, and there drew up his army on the hill afterward called Samaria.

Hear me, thou Jeroboam and all Israel;] A great many might hear his voice from so advantageous a place, but all the eight hundred thousand could not. But he desired what he said might be reported to them, and it is very likely he desired a parley before they fought, to see if they could accommodate matters without shedding blood.

Ver. 5. Ought ye not to know?] They did know, but he means they ought to consider and acknowledge.

By a covenant of salt?] See concerning this expression, "covenant of salt," Numb. xviii. 19. The Targum here expounds it, "as the waters of the sea," which never alter their saltness. But it rather signifies a solemn covenant made by sacrifice, which was always salted (Lev. ii. 13).

Ver. 6.] Though he had the warrant of a prophet to take the kingdom, yet his own ambition first led him to it; as we may gather from 1 Kings xi. 27.

Ver. 7. And there are gathered unto him vain men, the children of Belial.] Such, one would think, his principal partakers were, who so easily changed their religion, that it showed they regarded neither God nor man, as the word Belial signifies (see my notes upon 1 Kings xii. 24). And here it may be further noted, that the high offenders of all sorts are called by the name of children of Belial. As those ungodly men, who, like a torrent, came upon David with all manner of violence, are called the floods of Belial (2 Sam. xxii. 5), and the sacrilegious sons of Eli (1 Sam. ii. 12), and the filthy beasts of Gibeah (Judg. xix. 22), and blood-thirsty men (2 Sam. xvi. 7), and perjured persons (1 Kings xx. 10), and pernicious counsellors (Nahum i. 11).

And have strengthened themselves against Rehoboam—when Rehoboam was young.] He was one-and-forty years old when he came to his kingdom, but not bred up to military affairs; in which he was raw and inexperienced, in a time of long peace.

And tender-hearted.] This doth not so much aggravate their crime, as reflect upon his father; who wanted courage, as this phrase signifies. But if we take it in this sense, Abijah over-shot himself: for Rehoboam gathered a great army, and would have fought, if God, by his prophet, had not forbidden him. And if that was his meaning, that he had a tender regard to God's commands, and yielded immediately to them, he spake the truth; for he was fearful then to offend God, and so could not withstand them, as it here follows.

Ver. 8. Now ye think to withstand the kingdom of the Lord in the hand of the sons of David.] But he would not have them think that God would always be of that mind, and let them quietly enjoy what they had usurped. For the kingdom which he governed was not set up by such vain persons as advanced Jeroboam, but the Lord himself, whom they should not be able to withstand.

Ye be a great multitude.] Or, though ye be far more in number than we; being two to one (ver. 3).

There are with you golden calves.] It may be better translated, "but there are with you," &c. i. e. you have forsaken the Lord, and worshipped other gods (for so the golden calves were esteemed by God), and therefore your vast forces will do you no service.

and ye be a great multitude, and there are with you golden calves, which Jeroboam made you for gods.

9 Have ye not cast out the priests of the LORD, the sons of Aaron, and the Levites, and have made you priests after the manner of the nations of other lands? so that whosoever cometh to consecrate himself with a young bullock and seven rams, the same may be a priest of them that are no gods.

10 But as for us, the LORD is our God, and we have not forsaken him; and the priests, which minister unto the LORD, are the sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business:

11 And they burn unto the LORD, every morning and every evening, burnt sacrifices and sweet incense: the shew-bread also set they in order

Ver. 9. Have ye not cast out the priests of the Lord,] This they could not deny, whatsoever they might pretend against the charge of "forsaking the Lord."

Have made you priests after the manner of the nations of other lands?] Without any regard to the family they were of, and out of any part of the country (see 1 Kings xii. 31).

So that whosoever cometh to consecrate himself with a young bullock and seven rams,] Any one that could make this expense might consecrate himself to be a priest.

The same may be a priest of them that are no gods.] The Targum expresses it thus, "is the priest of him that is not the Word of the Lord." By which it appears (as from innumerable other places) the divine Word was the God of Israel, worshipped in the most holy place.

Ver. 10. But as for us, the Lord is our God,] So it follows in the Targum, "Unto us the Word of the Lord is our helper, he is our God."

We have not forsaken him;] Not quite departed from him: though in some part Abijah (who spake these words) had done evil in the sight of the Lord, as his father had done; and his heart was not perfect with God (1 Kings xv. 3).

The priests, which minister unto the Lord, are the sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business:] The service of God was orderly performed in his house, by such only as were appointed to it by himself.

Ver. 11. They burn unto the Lord every morning and every evening burnt sacrifices and sweet incense, &c.] There was nothing omitted, either day or night, which the law required: and he mentions these things thus particularly, that he might put the Israelites in mind how the worship of God was with great solemnity kept up in Judah, which in some years the Israelites had not seen, and perhaps had forgot. But he mentions here only one candlestick, and its lamps, because, as some think, Shishak had carried away the rest. Or rather, because Solomon had made the other ten candlesticks for ornament, so that they had not lamps in them every night, which burnt only in the great candlestick made by Moses, from evening until morning (Lev. xxiv. 2, 3).

For we keep the charge of the Lord our God;] The Targum here again thus expresses it, "We keep the charge of the Word of the Lord our God." This gives us reason to think, that Abijah kept up the public worship of God very regularly: though he did evil in the sight of the Lord privately.

Ver. 12. And, behold, God himself is with us for upon the pure table; and the candlestick of gold with the lamps thereof, to burn every evening: for we keep the charge of the LORD our God; but ye have forsaken him.

12 And, behold, God himself is with us for our captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets to cry alarm against you. O children of Israel, fight ye not against the LORD God of your fathers; for ye shall not prosper.

13 ¶ But Jeroboam caused an ambushment to come about behind them: so they were before Judah, and the ambushment was behind them.

14 And when Judah looked back, behold, the battle was before and behind: and they cried unto the LORD, and the priests sounded with the trumpets.

15 Then the men of Judah gave a shout: and our captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets to cry alarm against you.] Upon the sounding of which Moses promised they should "be remembered before the Lord, and saved from their enemies" (Numb. x. 9). This seems to be added as an amplification of their strict observance of the law of God in all things, in war as well as in peace, which gave them a good hope he would be with them. And here it may be noted, that it doth not appear that the priests were forbidden any functions in a civil life: for they went to war, and performed the office of trumpeters in the army, as well as in the temple.

O children of Israel, fight ye not against the Lord God of your fathers; for ye shall not prosper.] So he concludes his speech, that, if they fought, it was not so much against him, as against the Lord whom their fathers worshipped, and they had forsaken, and therefore should not succeed. None of the great captains and commanders, whose speeches are recorded in heathen authors, ever spoke more movingly than this king of Judah did.

Ver. 13. We read of no answer to this speech, but Jeroboam seems to have been so much touched with it, that he would not trust to his numbers, but used policy: and, like a great captain, laid in ambush behind the army of Judah, while he faced them with his main body, drawn up in battle array. For he had such a prodigious multitude with him, that he had men enough to spare upon any design, and more than enough to fight also.

Ver. 14. When Judah looked back,] Hearing a great noise, it is like, behind them.

Behold, the battle was before and behind:] Which put them into sore distress.

And they cried unto the Lord, and the priests sounded with the trumpets.] They were not dismayed, but implored help from God; which the priests gave them hopes to obtain. For "the sounding with the trumpets" was an imploring of the divine aid, which God had promised (as I before noted) when they sounded.

Ver. 15. Then the men of Judah gave a shout:] To terrify their enemies, by this token of their confidence, that they should have the victory.

And as the men of Judah shouted,—God smote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.] This is thus expressed by the Targum: When the alarm sounded, the Word of the Lord caused Jeroboam and all Israel to fall, and to be slain by Abijah. For to smite, commonly signifies in scripture language, to kill.

Ver. 16. They seem not to have struck a stroke, but to have been so dismayed, that they ran away; and in the chase were slain in vast numbers.

Ver. 17. This is the greatest slaughter that we as the men of Judah shouted, it came to pass, that God smote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.

16 And the children of Israel fled before Judah; and God delivered them into their hand.

17 And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter: so there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand chosen men.

18 Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time, and the children of Judah prevailed, because they relied upon the LORD God of their fathers.

19 And Abijah pursued after Jeroboam, and ever read in any story, as Bochartus observes: but it is not incredible, when we consider that God fought for them, and chastised the idolatry of the Israelites to such a degree, that the Jews killed a hundred thousand of them, more than they had in their own army. So Josephus also long ago observed, that there never was such a slaughter heard of, either among the Greeks or barbarians.

Ver. 18. Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time,] Very much humbled, but not made subject to the house of David.

And the children of Judah prevailed, because they relied upon the Lord God of their fathers.] It was not by their own valour that they obtained this great victory; but by their leaning (or relying) "upon the Word of the Lord God of their fathers," as the Targum expresses it.

Ver. 19. Abijah pursued after Jeroboam, and took cities from him;] He followed his blow (as we speak), and did not content himself with beating them in the field, but pursued the Israelites into their country, and possessed himself of some of their cities.

Beth-el with the towns thereof;] From whence it is likely, Jeroboam removed the golden calf unto some place of greater safety: or else the destruction of it would have been mentioned.

Ephraim with the towns thereof.] There was a city, as well as a tribe called Ephraim, John xi. 54, which some think was the same with Ophrah.

took cities from him; Beth-el with the towns thereof, and Jeshanah with the towns thereof, and Ephraim with the towns thereof.

20 Neither did Jeroboam recover strength again in the days of Abijah: and the LORD struck him, and he died.

21 ¶ But Abijah waxed mighty, and married fourteen wives, and begat twenty and two sons, and sixteen daughters.

22 And the rest of the acts of Abijah, and his ways, and his sayings, are written in the story of the prophet Iddo.

Ver. 20.] Some have made it a doubt, who it is of whom it is said that God struck him. And in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 21, the Jews say it was Abijah: for Jeroboam lived a long time, but Abijah reigned only three years: God not granting him a longer life, because of his ingratitude for so great a victory; or, as others will have it, because, when he took Beth-el he did not destroy nor carry away the golden calf, but let it remain, although he had reproached the Israelites with it, (ver. 8). But it is uncertain, as I said, whether it was there when the city was taken: and the next verse plainly shows, that Abijah while he lived was mighty: and therefore it was Jeroboam who was struck, and died a year or two after this blow. And as long as he lived, after this defeat, some think he was full of anguish, and such pain in his bowels as Jehoram had (ch. xxi. 19). Thus Abarbinel, and many others.

Ver. 21.] Not after this victory, but before he was king, in the time of his father; for he lived not long after this success.

Ver. 22.] In the Targum it is, "they are written in the Midrash of the prophet Iddo:" that is, in his commentary, as we translate the Hebrew word here, in the margin of our Bible (see ch. xii. 15). This king was a very wise man (as appears by the excellent oration above mentioned); and in familiar conversation dropped many remarkable sayings, like the proverbs of Solomon: which Iddo thought worthy to be recorded and transmitted to posterity.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Asa succeeding destroyeth idolatry. 6 Having peace, he strengthneth his kingdom with forts and armies. 9 Calling on God, he overthroweth Zerah, and spoileth the Ethiopians.

1 So Abijah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city of David; and Asa his son reigned in his stead. In his days the land was quiet ten years.

2 And Asa did that which was good and right in the eyes of the LORD his God:

3 For he took away the altar of the strange gods, and the high places, and brake down the images, and cut down the groves;

4 And commanded Judah to seek the LORD God of their fathers, and to do the law and the commandment.

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1.] There was no war declared, but only some private bickerings between his subjects and Baasha's (see 1 Kings xv. 16).

Ver. 2.] See concerning this verse and the next, in 1 Kings xv. 11, 12.

Ver. 3.] By this it appears, that though Abijah maintained the public worship of God (as I observed, ch. xiii. 11), yet there were also strange gods worshipped in some places.

Ver. 4.] I supposed he set forth royal edicts, requiring the people to worship the Lord alone, and to observe all the laws of Moses.

Ver. 5. He took away out of all the cities of Judah the high places] There were high places in the open fields (mentioned before, ver. 3), and also in the cities, which were all taken away by him.

And the images:] In the Hebrew the sun images, as we translate it in the margin. Certain it is, that the word hammanim imports something belonging to the sun, which Buxtorf renders Solares statuae, sun-statues; because, saith Jarchi, they were set on the tops of houses, and so exposed to the sun. Whence 5 Also he took away, out of all the cities of Judah, the high places and the images: and the kingdom was quiet before him.

6 ¶ And he built fenced cities in Judah: for the land had rest, and he had no war in those years; because the LORD had given him rest.

7 Therefore he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities, and make about them walls and towers, gates and bars, while the land is yet before us; because we have sought the LORD our God, we have sought him, and he hath given us rest on every side. So they built, and prospered.

8 And Asa had an army of men that bare targets and spears, out of Judah three hundred thousand, and out of Benjamin, that bare shields and drew bows, two hundred and fourscore thousand: all these were mighty men of valour.

9 ¶ And there came out against them Zerah the Ethiopian, with a host of a thousand thousand, and three hundred chariots, and came unto Mareshah.

10 ¶ Then Asa went out against him, and they set the battle in array in the valley of Zephathah at Mareshah.

11 And Asa cried unto the LORD his God, and said, LORD, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power: help us, O LORD our God; for we rest on thee, and in thy name we go against this multitude. O LORD, thou art our God; let not man prevail against thee.

12 So the LORD smote the Ethiopians before Asa, and before Judah; and the Ethiopians fled.

13 And Asa, and the people that were with him, pursued them unto Gerar: and the Ethiopians were overthrown, and they could not recover themselves; for they were destroyed before the LORD, and before his host: and they carried away very much spoil.

Junius and Tremellius called them subdiales statuae. But Abarbinel thinks they were in the form of the sun, made after the similitude of that globe, and worshipped by those who took the sun for their god. Others think they were temples built for the worship of the sun: which the Vulgar Latin follows.

And the kingdom was quiet before him.] Nobody made opposition to him.

Ver. 6. He built fenced cities] On the frontiers of his kingdom.

For the land had rest, and he had no wars in those years; because the Lord had given him rest.] The Targum thus expresses it, "Because the land of Israel rested, neither did they more war against him in those years." That is, the Israelites and their king made no attempt upon him, nor endeavoured to vindicate the late great loss they had received, by the singular providence of God over him. But the meaning may rather be, that "the land of Judah" (which he is speaking of), which had hitherto endeavoured to reduce the ten tribes to the obedience of the house of David, now attempted nothing, nor was assaulted by them or others.

The Lord had given him rest.] Of which he made this good use, in providing for war in the time of peace.

Ver. 7. Therefore he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities, and make about them walls and towers.] But he showed his wisdom in this also, that he did not go about this work without the advice of his council, and the elders of Judah.

While the land is yet before us;] Which the Targum thus expounds, "While the inhabitants of the land are subdued to us:" or, as Jarchi, "While the kingdom is established before us." That is, while it is in our power, as this phrase signifies.

He hath given us rest on every side.] None gave him the least disturbance till he had finished his works.

Ver. 8.] He was provided also of a great army, if there were any occasion to use it, as well as of places of defence. Some think he raised these men after he heard Zerah intended an invasion upon him: but it rather signifies his great care to have an army in readiness, when he saw no danger of any enemy.

Ver. 9. There came out against them Zerah the Ethiopian] King of the Arabians, as Cush here signifies: and must necessarily be so understood in ch. xxi. 16, and 2 Kings xix. 9. See what I have there noted; and Bochartus, in his Phaleg, lib. iv. cap. 2, where he shows they were a very powerful nation.

Mareshah.] A city upon the borders of Judah (Josh. xv. 44).

Ver. 10.] He did not stay till he entered his country, but went to fight him upon the frontiers of it.

Ver. 11. Asa cried unto the Lord his God.] Before he began to fight, he implored the help of Heaven; which he did, I suppose, in the face of all his army, that they might look up to God as their strength and salvation.

Lord, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power:] Or, as the Targum renders it, "There is none besides thee, who helpeth both the strong and the weak."

Help us, O Lord our God; for we rest on thee, and in thy name we go against this multitude.] In the Targum it is, "We rely upon thy Word, in the name of thy Word we go forth." That is, by his authority, in confidence of his power, and in the defence of his kingdom and religion.

O Lord, thou art our God; let not man prevail against thee.] Nothing could more inspire them with courage, than to believe he looked upon their cause as his own, while they owned him for their God.

Ver. 12. The Ethiopians fled.] As the Israelites had done not long before (ch. xiii. 15).

Ver. 13. Gerar:] This was a city of the Philistines who, it is likely, were their allies and confederates in this war.

The Ethiopians were overthrown, that they could not recover themselves; for they were destroyed before the Lord.] The victory was so entire, that they could not rally their forces to renew the fight. It is not said what numbers were slain, but the word destroy signifies that very many perished; for they fought against the Lord and his host, who made a great destruction among them.

They carried away very much spoil.] From the men that were slain in the field of battle, and those that ran away and left their baggage behind them: for he speaks in the next verses of the spoil of their cities, and of the fields about them.

Ver. 14. They smote all the cities round about Gerar;] Into which it is likely, the Ethiopians fled.

For the fear of the Lord came upon them:] Seeing so vast a host defeated, they had no courage to defend themselves.

For there was exceeding much spoil in them.] Partly by their own riches, and partly by the booty which the Ethiopians afforded them.

14 And they smote all the cities round about Gerar: for the fear of the LORD came upon them: and they spoiled all the cities; for there was exceeding much spoil in them.

Ver. 15.] The abundance of camels which they had show they were Arabians. And the Scenitæ and Nomades (as Bochartus observes) did not live all the year in the open air, but had tents both for themselves and their cattle in winter time. And they that dwell in tents are opposed to those who lived in the open field, who are said ἀγραινοί. Thus Esau and Jacob are distinguished: the former of which is said to be a man of the field, and the other to dwell in tents (Gen. xxv. 27).

15 They smote also the tents of cattle, and carried away sheep and camels in abundance, and returned to Jerusalem.

CHAPTER XV.

1 Asa with Judah and many of Israel, moved by the prophecy of Azariah the son of Oded, make a solemn covenant with God. 16 He putteth down Maachah his mother for her idolatry. 18 He bringeth dedicate things into the house of God, and enjoyeth a long peace.

1 AND the Spirit of God came upon Azariah the son of Oded:

2 And he went out to meet Asa, and said unto him, Hear ye me, Asa, and all Judah and Benjamin: The LORD is with you, while ye be with him: and if ye seek him, he will be found of you; but if ye forsake him, he will forsake you.

3 Now for a long season Israel hath been without the true God, and without a teaching priest, and without law.

4 But when they in their trouble did turn unto the LORD God of Israel, and sought him, he was found of them.

5 And in those times there was no peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in, but great vexations were upon all the inhabitants of the countries.

6 And nation was destroyed of nation, and city of city: for God did vex them with all adversity.

7 Be ye strong, therefore, and let not your hands be weak: for your work shall be rewarded.

8 And when Asa heard these words, and the prophecy of Oded the prophet, he took courage, and put away the abominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of the cities

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1.] Some think he was also called Oded (ver. 8), but had the name of Azariah given him, to distinguish him from his father.

Ver. 2. The Lord is with you.] As appeared by the late glorious victory they had obtained by his help (ch. ix. 13).

While ye be with him;] While you continue to worship him alone.

If ye seek him, he will be found of you; but if ye forsake him, he will forsake you.] He would not have them presume of his continued favour, if they forsook his worship and service: and therefore admonishes them to stick close to him, otherwise he would forsake them. The Targum thus expresses it, "The Word of the Lord is your helper, while you walk in his ways," &c.

Ver. 3. Now for a long season Israel hath been without the true God,] The Targum explains it very clearly: "There have been many days since the house of Israel departed from the house of David, because of Jeroboam: in which they have not worshipped the true God, but the golden calves."

Without a teaching priest, and without law.] For all the priests were gone into the land of Judah: and the Israelites neglected the study of the law, as the Targum explains the last words. But there are a great number of learned men who will have these words, and those that follow, relate to the times of the judges: when they were more manifestly in such a condition as is here described. And truly Campegius Vitringa hath learnedly asserted this opinion, in his book De Synagoga Veteri, par. ii. lib. i. cap. 6.

Ver. 4.] If we follow the common interpretation, which respects the present and future state of Israel, these words should thus be translated; "If in their trouble they had turned, &c. they should have found him."

Ver. 5.] We do not read of such troubles hitherto in the kingdom of Israel; therefore the words must be translated, "In those times (if they continue to displease God) there shall be no peace," &c. No quiet, no safety; but they shall be infested both by external wars and intestine discords. Which was fulfilled, as we find in their history, 1 Kings xv; xvi. &c.

Ver. 6. And nation was destroyed of nation, and city of city:] These words also must be translated in the future tense, "Nation shall be destroyed of nation," &c. Where by nation is meant tribe: one of which fought against another, in those times, when there was no certain settled succession in the kingdom; but whosoever killed their king, hoped to make a party to help him to get into the throne.

For God did vex them with all adversity.] For God shall set them one against another, with mutual slaughters, and all those evils that accompany civil wars. The Targum here again translates it, "The Word of the Lord, &c."

Ver. 7. Be ye strong—let not your hands be weak:] To root out idolatry; which had brought such calamities upon the Israelites, and would still bring more.

For your work shall be rewarded.] As they might learn from their late great victory over idolaters.

Ver. 8. And when Asa heard these words, and the prophecy of Oded the prophet,] A short expression, being as much as "the son of Oded the prophet." Though some think the father prophesied as well as the son, and foretold the same calamities: the more to awaken them, and confirm them in the belief of what Azariah said.

He took courage,] This explains the foregoing words "be strong therefore," to be meant of an undaunted resolution to abolish idolatry: which required great courage, when so many were addicted to it, and had practised it both in the days of Rehoboam and Abijah.

Out of the cities which he had taken from mount which he had taken from mount Ephraim, and renewed the altar of the LORD, that was before the porch of the LORD.

9 And he gathered all Judah and Benjamin, and the strangers with them out of Ephraim and Manasseh, and out of Simeon: (for they fell to him out of Israel in abundance, when they saw that the LORD his God was with him:)

10 So they gathered themselves together at Jerusalem in the third month, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa.

11 And they offered unto the LORD the same time, of the spoil which they had brought, seven hundred oxen, and seven thousand sheep.

12 And they entered into a covenant to seek the LORD God of their fathers with all their heart and with all their soul;

13 That whosoever would not seek the LORD

Ephraim,] Or, which had been taken, viz. from Abijah.

And renewed the altar of the Lord, that was before the porch] At the entry of the court of the priests.

Ver. 9. He gathered all Judah and Benjamin,—and out of Simeon:] Though the Simeonites had their portion out of the tribe of Judah, when the land was divided by Joshua, yet it appears from hence, as well as from other places, that they joined themselves to the rest of the Israelites, when the kingdom was rent by Jeroboam. But now great numbers of them came over to Asa: which they might easily do, for one side of their tribe adjoined to Judah, as the other to Dan.

When they saw that the Lord his God was with him.] The Targum here again renders it, “When he saw the Word of the Lord was his helper.”

Ver. 10.] This seems to have been a voluntary assembly by common agreement, rather than by the king's commandment or invitation. Unless we suppose it to have been at one of the great festivals, when they were bound by God to go up to Jerusalem.

Ver. 11.] They offered unto the Lord the same time,] In the Hebrew, in that day. Which the Targum takes to have been in the feast of weeks; which in the New Testament is called Pentecost; which was kept in the third month, called Sivan.

Of the spoil which they had brought,] From Zerah, and from the cities they took about Gerar.

Seven hundred oxen, and seven thousand sheep.] Which they offered besides the appointed offerings at the feast. And they seem to have been partly burnt-offerings, in acknowledgment of God's goodness for their great victory: and partly peace-offerings, in eating of which they made the following covenant.

Ver. 12.] Engaged themselves, by a solemn oath, to worship the Lord alone, and professed to do it sincerely, and with entire affection to him. But this doth not signify that Asa had no fault: for it appears by the next chapter, that he had a great many.

Ver. 13. Whosoever would not seek the Lord God of Israel should be put to death,] If any body did, either publicly or privately, worship any other god, they agreed the sentence of the law should be executed upon him, which was death (Deut. xvii. 2).

Whether small or great, whether man or woman.] That is, without any respect to persons; no consideration being had of any one's dignity, nor the weakness of their sex moving pity and compassion.

Ver. 14.] These were expressions of the joy mentioned in the next verse, wherewith they took this oath. The difference between trumpets and cornets it is not worth inquiring after; the former seem to God of Israel should be put to death, whether small or great, whether man or woman.

14 And they swear unto the LORD with a loud voice, and with shouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets.

15 And all Judah rejoiced at the oath; for they had sworn with all their heart, and sought him with their whole desire; and he was found of them: and the LORD gave them rest round about.

16 ¶ And also concerning Maachah the mother of Asa the king, he removed her from being queen, because she made an idol in a grove: and Asa cut down her idol, and stamped it, and burnt it at the brook Kidron.

17 But the high places were not taken away out of Israel: nevertheless the heart of Asa was perfect all his days.

have been made of metals, the other of horns or wood.

Ver. 15. All Judah rejoiced at the oath:] The main body of the people: and though there might be some idolaters secretly lurking among them, yet they all gave those outward tokens of their joy to see the worship of God thus established.

For they had sworn with all their heart, and sought him with their whole desire;] That is, they professed to do this most sincerely and heartily; and many of them, no doubt, did, at that time, resolve to worship God alone, though afterward they apostatized from him.

And he was found of them: and the Lord gave them rest round about.] They reaped the happy fruit of this reformation, in the great peace which they enjoyed, without any disturbance from any of their neighbours.

Ver. 16. Also concerning Maachah the mother of Asa the king,] His grandmother, as the Targum observes: it being usual in scripture to call such their parents (Exod. ii. 18).

He removed her from being queen,] This was a great testimony of the uprightness of this king, that he would not suffer such a near relation to retain her idols, or any authority: his love to God overcoming his affection for his parents (see 1 Kings xv. 13). Jacobus Capellus thinks this stirred up Baasha to make war upon him: for having lived peaceably with him a long time, upon this he broke out into hostility (Histor. Sacra et Exot. ad Annum Mundi 3053).

Because she had made an idol in a grove:] Or rather, an Asherah, or Astarte, for so laasherah is translated by the LXX. And, in all probability, Astarte, the famous goddess of Syria, was the deity which was worshipped by Maachah, as Mr. Selden observes in his De Diis Syris, Syntagm. ii. cap. 2. And thus Abarbinel upon Jer. xlv. makes Asherah to be the same with the queen of heaven there mentioned, viz., the moon.

Asa cut down her idol, and stamped it, and burnt it] He destroyed it with the utmost contempt (1 Kings xv. 13).

Ver. 17. But the high places were not taken away out of Israel:] It is said twice in the foregoing chapter, that he did take away the high places (ver. 3, 5). But that was of Judah: whereas out of the territories he had conquered in the land of Israel, we are here informed, he was not able to remove them. Or else the meaning is, that he gave orders for the taking them away every where; but they were not obeyed. Or, as others think, he took away those high places that were for the service of other gods; but let those alone where the true God alone was worshipped.

18 ¶ And he brought into the house of God the things that his father had dedicated, and that he himself had dedicated, silver, and gold, and vessels.

The heart of Asa was perfect all his days.] He heartily hated all idolatrous worship as long as he lived.

Ver. 18.] See upon 1 Kings xv. 15.

Ver. 19.] That is, as some interpret it, there was no war with the Ethiopians, or such-like people; though with Baasha he had perpetual war (1 Kings xv. 16).

19 And there was no more war unto the five and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa.

But Jacobus Capellus in the place above named would have the words thus translated, "There was no war in the kingdom of Asa till the thirty-fifth year," viz. of the kingdom of Israel, not of Judah, or Asa: for this was the thirty-fifth year after Jeroboam rent the kingdom from the house of David. In which he follows Torniellus, as he doth Beroaldus and Junius, though he would not vouchsafe to name them. But more of this in the beginning of the next chapter.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Asa, by the aid of the Syrians, diverteth Baasha from building of Ramah. 7 Being reprov'd thereof by Hanani, he putteth him in prison. 11 Among his other acts in his disease he seeketh not to God, but to the physicians. 13 His death and burial.

1 In the six and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa Baasha king of Israel came up against Judah, and built Ramah, to the intent that he might let none go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

2 Then Asa brought out silver and gold out of the treasures of the house of the LORD and of the king's house, and sent to Benhadad king of Syria, that dwelt at Damascus, saying,

3 There is a league between me and thee, as there was between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent thee silver and gold; go, break thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may depart from me.

4 And Benhadad hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of his armies against the cities of Israel; and they smote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-maim, and all the store cities of Naphtali.

5. And it came to pass, when Baasha heard it, that he left off building of Ramah, and let his work cease.

6 Then Asa the king took all Judah; and they carried away the stones of Ramah, and the timber

CHAP. XVI.

Ver. 1. In the six and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa Baasha king of Israel came up against Judah.] The war was begun in the conclusion of the five-and-thirtieth year: and in the beginning of the six-and-thirtieth he made this invasion. But this disagrees so much with what is said 1 Kings xv. 33, that interpreters labour hard to reconcile them. For by that place it appears, that Baasha began his reign in the third year of Asa, and reigned no more than four-and-twenty years. From whence it follows, that he was dead nine or ten years before the thirty-sixth year of Asa. It is a short way of solving this which Josephus seems to take (lib. viii. Ant. cap. 6.), by supposing a mistake in the transcriber from the original copy, in which it was not the six-and-thirtieth of Asa's reign but the six-and-twentieth, which was the last year of the reign of Baasha. Who died, he thinks, immediately after Benhadad had defeated his intentions of building Ramah. But most think this too bold a supposal; and therefore I gave in few words another account of this difficulty in my notes upon 1 Kings xvi. 8, viz. that this was the six-and-thirtieth year since the division of the kingdom, after the death of Solomon, when Israel was rent from Judah. For so many years were now passed since that time; viz. twenty years in the reign of Rehoboam and Abijah, and fifteen of Asa's reign, when many of the Israelites came to him (xv. 10). Thus Seder Olam Rabba, Ralbag, Abarinel also, with a great number of eminent modern writers, both protestants and papists: such as Junius, Piscator, Cocceius, Jacobus Capellus, Lightfoot, Mariana, Torniellus, Sanctius, Salianus, and Petavius himself, with many others. It is not said, indeed that Baasha came up in the thirty-sixth year of the kingdom of Judah, but in that year of the reign of king Asa: but they make account, that the kingdom of Judah and of Asa were all one: and so they might easily be put one for the other. And whereas it is objected, that the scripture is not wont to reckon the years of any king from any other term but the time wherein he began to reign: they produce an example to the contrary from 2 Sam. xv. 7, where Absalom is said to have gone to Hebron in the end of forty years, and there conspired against his father: which years Seder Olam reckons from the beginning of the kingdom, or the inauguration of Saul. And our Dr. Lightfoot alleges another instance in the thirty-sixth chapter of this book, ver. 9, where Jehoiachin is said to be eight years old when he began to reign: that is, said he, in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar: for he was eighteen years old, as appears from 2 Kings xxiv. 8. But this difference, I think, may be better reconciled another way, as I shall observe on that place. I shall here only add, that as this is the most ancient way of solving this difficulty, so they that go another are forced to suppose, that these words do not relate to the beginning of the reign of Asa, but to something else; for instance, to the beginning of his wars with Israel. Which Kimchi endeavours to make out; but I shall not trouble the reader with it: for many good men think Josephus in the right.

And built Ramah.] That is, made a wall about it, and fortified it.

To the intent that he might let none go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.] The late defection of so many of his subjects, as fell from him to the house of David (xv. 9), was the occasion of setting a strong guard in this place, which was the passage between the dominions of Israel and Judah (1 Kings xv. 17).

Ver. 2.] This is a little more largely related in 1 Kings xv. 15 (see my notes there).

Ver. 3—6.] These four verses are the very same thereof, wherewith Baasha was building; and he built therewith Geba and Mizpah.

7 ¶ And at that time Hanani the seer came to Asa king of Judah, and said unto him, Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not relied on the LORD thy God, therefore is the host of the king of Syria escaped out of thine hand.

8 Were not the Ethiopians and the Lubims a huge host, with very many chariots and horsemen? yet, because thou didst rely on the LORD, he delivered them into thine hand.

9 For the eyes of the LORD run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him. Herein thou hast done foolishly; therefore from henceforth thou shalt have wars.

(with small variation) with those in 1 Kings xv. 19—21, 29 (see my notes there).

Ver. 7. Hanani the seer came to Asa king of Judah, and said unto him.] Here follows a remarkable history added to what we read in the book of the Kings: which relates to the great weakness of Asa in his declining years, and God's displeasure at it.

Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not relied on the Lord] Who had promised great victories to him, by the prophet Azariah, if he did well (xv. 7).

Therefore is the host of the king of Syria escaped out of thine hand.] Whom God would have overthrown, as he did the Ethiopians, if they had continued their league with Baasha, and come to his assistance against Asa. But now the Syrians were reserved to be a scourge to his family.

Ver. 8. Were not the Ethiopians and the Lubims a huge host, with very many chariots and horsemen?] See xiv. 9. By the Lubims are meant the people of Lybia, or the Africans beyond Egypt: who are sometimes in scripture called Phut, and sometimes Lubim, from the Arabic word lub, which signifies dry or thirsty, as Bochartus observes; for such was the country which the people inhabited, terra sitiens (as Lucian calls it), "a thirsty land." They are noted by authors to have had abundance of horsemen and chariots, in which they fought, as Xenophon tells us. And Herodotus saith, the Greeks learnt from them ῥιπιδας ἅμας ζευγνυσαι, "to yoke four horses together to draw a chariot."

Yet because thou didst rely on the Lord he delivered them into thine hand.] See xiv. 11. The words of Conradus Pellicanus upon this verse are so pious, that I think fit to transcribe them: "Asa committed a triple offence; in distrusting the goodness of God for help, and calling to his aid an infidel and impious king; when he had lately had such an experiment of God's clemency in his triumph over the king of Ethiopia. Nothing offends God so much as distrust in his goodness towards the faithful; as an entire faith and confidence in his mercy pleases him above all things. Upon which account David was so highly in his favour, though otherwise guilty of sundry crimes."

Ver. 9. For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth.] He exercises a most watchful providence over those throughout the whole world, who sincerely commit themselves unto him and depend upon him in well-doing, and will not fail to protect them. For these words, as Mr. Mede observes, are of the same import with those in the prophecy of Zechariah, iv. 11, where "the seven eyes of the Lord" are said to "run to and fro through the earth." Which took such care of that one stone which Zerubbabel had laid for the foundation of the 10 Then Asa was wroth with the seer, and put him in a prison-house; for he was in a rage with him because of this thing. And Asa oppressed some of the people at the same time.

11 ¶ And, behold, the acts of Asa, first and last, lo, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

12 And Asa, in the thirty and ninth year of his reign, was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet in his disease he sought not to the LORD but to the physicians.

13 ¶ And Asa slept with his fathers, and died in the one and fortieth year of his reign.

14 And they buried him in his own sepulchres, which he had made for himself in the city temple, that the work could not be disappointed, but should certainly at length be finished (par. i. discourse 10.)

Herein thou hast done foolishly.] The heart of Asa is said to have been "perfect all his days," in the foregoing chapter, ver. 17. And so it was in the matter of the outward worship of God at the temple of which he was there speaking. But in the latter end of his life he was defective in his inward trust and confidence in God: which is called foolishness; both because it was a sinful thing, and very pernicious. For God exposed him to his enemies as a punishment for relying on man more than his friendship.

Ver. 10. Asa was wroth with the seer.] This was still a greater sin, to be so angry with his reprover (though he had his commission from God) as to put him in prison. But anger is no good adviser; and when men forget God, they are not themselves.

And put him in a prison house.] In the stocks which were in the prison, as Tremellius translates it, in domum cippi.

For he was in a rage with him because of this thing.] For which he ought to have thanked and rewarded him.

Asa oppressed some of the people the same time.] He enslaved them, as the Targum translates it. That is, in the latter part of his reign he grew something tyrannical. And no wonder, when he relied not upon God, but upon human power, and was full of pride and passion.

Ver. 11.] Not in those books of the Kings which we have in the Bible; but in those written by the prophets, mentioned xii. 15.

Ver. 12. Asa—was diseased in his feet.] He had the gout: which increased to such a height, that he died of it, as Pellicanus thinks. Which was a just punishment upon him, for putting the prophet's feet in the stocks: Ut per id quod peccaverat, per id puniretur; "that his offence might be seen in his punishment."

Yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord but to the physicians.] It was not a fault that he desired the help of physicians; but that he trusted to their skill, more than to the goodness and power of God; which he did not implore, but continued in his former fault, of putting confidence in man. And so Grotius thinks, he did not sin in seeking help from the Syrians, but in trusting to them more than God, and hiring them with things consecrated to God (lib. ii. de Jure Belli et Pacis, cap. 15. sect. 9.). An excellent person whom I have often mentioned (Dr. Alix) is of opinion, that these physicians were heathens; for we never read of any before in the sacred story, but among the Egyptians; and the heathen physicians in those days were a sort of charmers.

of David, and laid him in the bed which was filled with sweet odours and divers kinds of spices prepared by the apothecaries' art; and they made a very great burning for him.

Ver. 14. They buried him in his own sepulchres.] In the Hebrew the words are, they buried him in his sepulchres; the plural number being used, as many think, for the singular, which is frequent in the scripture. But the words rather respect the form of their monuments in that nation, which contained many sepulchres; that is, several cells wherein dead bodies were laid. And it is likely he made one for himself, which he added to the rest of the sepulchres in that vault or monument.

And laid him in the bed which was filled with sweet odours.] To all his other offences he added this vanity (as Conradus Pellicanus thinks), that he ordered his body to be buried after the manner of the gentiles, rather than like the people of God. Though it must be confessed, it was an ancient custom to embalm bodies, which was used in the burial of Jacob. But what is here related doth not seem to be meant of any thing done to the body, but to the bed on which it lay; which, among the Romans, was very stately for great persons (see Suetonius, in the life of Julius Cæsar, cap. 84). For the heathens were wont to burn their goods with them, to serve them in the other world.

They made a very great burning for him.] The Greeks and Romans burnt dead bodies, throwing frankincense, myrrh, cassia, and other fragrant things, into the fire. And these in such vast quantity, that Pliny represents it as a piece of profaneness to bestow such heaps of frankincense upon a dead body, when they offered it to their gods by crumbs (lib. xii. Nat. Hist. cap. 18). But the Israelites had no such custom; but from the ancient Egyptians perhaps learnt the custom, not of burning bodies, but of burning many spices at their funerals; as we find not only here, but at the funeral of Jeroham (ch. xxi. 9), and of Zedekiah (Jer. xxxiv. 5). Kimchi here says, that they burnt the bed on which they lay, and other household-stuff, that none might have the honour to use them when they were gone.

If we may believe what the Jews say in Juchasin, when Gamaliel the son of Simeon, the grandchild of Hillel (at whose feet St. Paul sat), was buried, Onkelos burnt seventy pounds of frankincense upon his sepulchre. But this is a fable invented to raise the credit of the Targum of Onkelos, which was not known till many ages after. But the best of the Jews believe this burning of sweet spices and woods was first intended merely to prevent the offence which the smell of dead bodies might possibly sometimes give. But the vanity of some men made them exceed beyond necessity.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Jehoshaphat, succeeding Asa, reigneth well, and prospereth. 7 He sendeth Levites with the princes to teach Judah. 10 His enemies being terrified by God, some of them bring him presents and tribute. 12 His greatness, captains, and armies.

1 AND Jehoshaphat his son reigned in his stead, and strengthened himself against Israel.

2 And he placed forces in all the fenced cities of Judah, and set garrisons in the land of Judah, and in the cities of Ephraim, which Asa his father had taken.

3 And the LORD was with Jehoshaphat, because he walked in the first ways of his father David, and sought not unto Baalim;

4 But sought to the LORD God of his father, and walked in his commandments, and not after the doings of Israel:

5 Therefore the LORD established the kingdom in his hand; and all Judah brought to Jehoshaphat presents; and he had riches and honour in abundance.

6 And his heart was lifted up in the ways of the LORD: moreover, he took away the high places and groves out of Judah.

7 Also, in the third year of his reign, he sent

CHAP. XVII.

Ver. 1.] The first thing he did after he came to the crown, was to put his kingdom in a good posture of defence against the king and people of Israel; who had given disturbance to his father (xvi. 1, &c.).

Ver. 2.] He fortified his frontier cities, and increased the garrisons in the rest of the country, and in those cities which his father took from Israel. We do not read, indeed, of any cities that Asa took, but Abijah possessed himself of several, which Asa kept and took for his own (xiii. 19), and Jehoshaphat put such forces in them as might secure them to himself.

Ver. 3. The Lord was with Jehoshaphat.] The Targum, according to the usual language of that paraphrast, saith, "The Word of the Lord was his helper."

Because he walked in the first ways of his father David.] Before he committed those foul sins, in the matter of Uriah. But some read it, "of his father, and of David." For Asa in the beginning of his reign was very pious, as David was. And thus it is some reflection upon Asa, for his offences in the latter end of his life: his son being noted to have followed him as he was in his first days, not in his old age.

And sought not unto Baalim.] Which were the gods worshipped in all the eastern countries round about them.

Ver. 4.] As he worshipped not the gods of other countries; so he did not join with the Israelites in worshipping God by the calves.

Ver. 5. All Judah brought to Jehoshaphat presents.] As they used to do in those countries, in the beginning of their king's reign (see 1 Sam. x. 27, 28; 1 Kings x. 25).

He had riches and honour in abundance.] Riches procure men honour; when they make such a good use of them as he did.

Ver. 6. His heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord.] He had very generous resolutions, as Strigelius renders it, to promote the true worship of God, and all goodness: his mind being raised above all fear and discouragement.

Moreover, he took away the high places and groves out of Judah.] The meaning is plain, that those to his princes, even to Ben-hail, and to Obadiah, and to Zechariah, and Nathaneel, and to Michaiah, to teach in the cities of Judah.

8 And with them he sent Levites, even She-maiah, and Nathaniah, and Zebadiah, and Asahel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehonathan, and Adonijah, and Tobijah, and Tob-adonijah, Levites; and with them Elishama and Jehoram, priests.

9 And they taught in Judah, and had the book of the law of the LORD with them, and went about throughout all the cities of Judah, and taught the people.

high places wherein they sacrificed to idols he destroyed, as Asa had done in the beginning of his reign: but, in the latter end some had restored them again. There is no need, therefore, of their amendment, who fancy, that, anciently, instead of teeth, moreover, there was velo, he did not: that so it may agree with 1 Kings xxii. 43, and with the twentieth chapter of this book, ver. 33. As if the meaning was, that though he was courageous above all that had been before him; yet the people were so accustomed to sacrifices in high places, that he durst not take them away. This is true, that where they offered to the true God he did not take them away: but those wherein idols were worshipped were abolished.

Ver. 7.] He sent some that were of his council, to see the people taught; by removing all impediments, and making the people come to hear the priests and the Levites. For it had been to little purpose to take away their idols, if they had not been withal better instructed: and the priests and the Levites would not have had much authority among the people, if they had not been backed by such great persons as are here mentioned. Grotius, indeed, will have it, that these great men did themselves instruct the people: for, as the Jews observe, it was not proper to the priests and Levites, but all learned men might teach the people: and these who were of the king's council were certainly learned in the law. But the two next verses tell us, that priests and Levites were sent along with them, who taught in Judah. And therefore I take the meaning to be, that Jehoshaphat, being very desirous to have the people understand their duty, took this singular and extraordinary course to send some princes, together with the priests and Levites, upon this weighty business. The latter, that they might teach the people, the former to see them do it carefully, and require the people to come and receive instruction, and to be obedient to what they heard. Thus Jarchi and other interpreters explain it: "It belonged to the priests and Levites to inform the people of their duty, as it is written, Deut. xxiv. 8, and these political persons went along with them, to quicken the people to hear them, and compel them to obey them, and do according to their commands" (see Neh. viii. 9). Campegius Vitringa hath a large discourse to this purpose in his Synag. Vet. par. ii. lib. i. cap. 9, where he takes this to be an indication that the people in those times had little solemn public instruction; and thinks it a good proof that there were no synagogues in the country in those days, as there were in aftertimes, wherein the people were constantly instructed in the sense of the divine law. Mr. Thorndike, indeed, rightly observes, that the words of Moses, Deut. xxiv. 8, are not rightly alleged by Jarchi to this purpose. But there is another place, Deut. xvi. 18, from whence he also concludes (Religious Assemblies, p. 23), that this teaching consisted

10 ¶ And the fear of the LORD fell upon all the kingdoms of the lands that were round about Judah, so that they made no war against Jehoshaphat.

11 Also some of the Philistines brought Jehoshaphat presents, and tribute silver: and the Arabians brought him flocks, seven thousand and seven hundred rams, and seven thousand and seven hundred he goats.

12 ¶ And Jehoshaphat waxed great exceedingly; and he built in Judah castles, and cities of store.

in declaring the obligation of the law by the judges of it, the priests and Levites; and the princes were officers with power to enforce the execution of it (see Mal. ii. 7).

Ver. 8.] These, no doubt, were eminent men among the Levites, as the two priests, Elishama and Jehoram, were, who were joined with them.

Ver. 9. And had the book of the law of the Lord with them.] That they might teach with the greater authority, by reciting the very words of that sacred book. But from hence Vitringa argues, that the books of Moses were scarce among the people in those days; for if there had been then public synagogues, wherein the law had been read (as it was afterward, every sabbath-day,) there had been no need of carrying a copy of the law with them, which they might have had in every synagogue.

And went about throughout all the cities of Judah, and taught the people.] Which is too plain an argument, that there were not settled teachers in every city, who on all occasions instructed the people; nor doth it appear by this history, that these great men, who were sent to see the people instructed, settled such constant teachers in every city, to instruct them when they were gone. The priests and Levites, no doubt, were ready to teach the people in their cities where they dwelt; and there is good reason to think, that most part of the prophets, who were the great instructors of the people, were priests and Levites. But it is as certain, that the charge of teaching the people belonged to those prophets who were not priests and Levites, as much as to those that were, as Mr. Thorndike observes in the same place.

Ver. 10.] God took care to prevent any disturbance, while they were about this pious work, by striking a terror into all their neighbours; who, it is likely, were sensible that it was in vain to assault them, while they continued firm in their religion. For they could not but observe how much their prosperity depended on that; and that they never fell into their enemies' hands, but when they fell off from God.

Ver. 11. Some of the Philistines brought Jehoshaphat presents, and tribute silver.] They were so far from giving him any disturbance, that some of his neighbours complimented him by presents, and voluntarily paid their tribute. Which, it is likely, they had neglected in the time of some of his predecessors, though imposed on them by David, who had conquered the Philistines.

And the Arabians brought him flocks.] The riches of the Arabians consisted in cattle, as Fuller observes out of Strabo and Pliny, in his Miscellanies, lib. iii. cap. 16. And the scripture informs us, how they abounded in both the sorts of flocks here mentioned (Isa. lx. 7; Ezek. xxvii. 21). And these, perhaps, were their tribute, they having been brought under the Jews; or rather their present, by which they 13 And he had much business in the cities of Judah: and the men of war, mighty men of valour, were in Jerusalem.

14 And these are the numbers of them, according to the house of their fathers: Of Judah, the captains of thousands; Adnah the chief, and with him mighty men of valour three hundred thousand.

15 And next to him was Jehohanan the captain, and with him two hundred and fourscore thousand.

16 And next him was Amasiah the son of sought Jehoshaphat's friendship, and put themselves under his protection.

Ver. 12.] He built very strong towers (as Jarchi understands it), and cities wherein he laid up provisions of wine and corn.

Ver. 13. He had much business in the cities of Judah:] To settle religion, and purge out idolatry; as well as to provide for their safety, by fortifications, and whatsoever was necessary for the preservation of public tranquillity.

And the men of war, mighty men of valour were in Jerusalem.] He kept the principal officers in his army near to himself; that he might advise with them upon any emergency.

Ver. 14.] He mentions only the commanders-in-chief: under whom were a great number of captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds, who are not named.

Ver. 15.] In the Hebrew (as it is noted in the margin) the first words are, at his hand was, &c. Which may seem to import, that he was lieutenant-general (as we speak) to the former great man: who assisted him in the management of that army. But the following words plainly signify, that he was another commander-in-chief, having under him a great body of men, though not equal to the former. And, as the Targum translates the first words (whom Jarchi follows) he encamped near to the former.

Ver. 16.] Some think, he served as a volunteer, without any stipend; or that he vowed himself to the service. Kimchi thinks that he offered gold and silver to the treasury, for the service of the Lord.

Ver. 17.] All the former were of Judah; now he mentions those of Benjamin, and the eminent persons who commanded them.

Zichri, who willingly offered himself unto the Lord; and with him two hundred thousand mighty men of valour.

17 And of Benjamin; Eliada a mighty man of valour, and with him armed men with bow and shield two hundred thousand.

18 And next him was Jehozabad, and with him a hundred and fourscore thousand ready prepared for the war.

19 These waited on the king, beside those whom the king put in the fenced cities throughout all Judah.

Ver. 18.] See ver. 16. If we put all these numbers of valiant men together, they make a great demonstration of the wonderful blessings of God upon Jehoshaphat: who, though he had little more than the third part of the kingdom which David had, yet went much beyond him, in proportion, in the number of able men that were subject to him. For David, when he numbered the people, found but thirteen hundred thousand; and Jehoshaphat had several bodies of good troops, which altogether amounted to eleven hundred and sixty thousand: not reckoning the garrisons, which were in the strong-holds. Nor is there any thing incredible in this, for we read the like in profane histories. The great Thebes, for instance (as Tacitus relates in his Annales, lib. ii), furnished seven hundred thousand soldiers, of its own inhabitants alone. But it is farther observable, how God blessed the reign of these last two kings, Asa and Jehoshaphat: in that when Abijah, the father of Asa, could scarce bring into the field four hundred thousand men (xiii. 3), his grandson was able to muster almost three times that number.

Ver. 19. These waited on the king.] That is, these great men, who had such numerous forces at their command, attended the king's person always, where-soever he went.

Beside those whom the king put in the fenced cities] He made governors of all strong places, who constantly attended their duty there; and were under the direction of the great men before mentioned. Who did not only wait upon the king, but, as Pellicanus conjectures, presided over the whole kingdom: and were ready upon any occasion to send abroad the king's orders, and take care of the public concerns.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 Jehoshaphat, joined in affinity with Ahab, is persuaded to go with him against Ramoth-gilead. 4 Ahab, seduced by false prophets, according to the word of Micaiah, is slain there.

1 Now Jehoshaphat had riches and honour in abundance, and joined affinity with Ahab.

CHAP. XVIII.

Ver. 1. Jehoshaphat had riches and honour in abundance.] So he had before this time (xvii. 5), but now they were more increased.

And joined affinity with Ahab.] For his son married Athaliah the daughter of Ahab (2 Kings viii. 18; and ch. xxi. ver. 6, of this book). His great prosperity tempted him to this affinity with an abominable idolater: having some conceit, perhaps, that he might again unite, by this marriage, the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah.

Ver. 2. After certain years] After there had been

2 And after certain years he went down to Ahab to Samaria: and Ahab killed sheep and peace three years between Israel and Syria, as it is explained 1 Kings xxii. 1.

He went down to Ahab to Samaria:] The affinity between them was the occasion, I suppose, of this visit.

Ahab killed sheep and oxen for him in abundance, and for the people he had with him,] He entertained both Jehoshaphat and all his attendants with great splendour: which is not mentioned in the book of the Kings, though the substance of this chapter is the same with that above mentioned; and is there explained.

And persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that he had with him, and persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead.

3 And Ahab king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat king of Judah, Wilt thou go with me to Ramoth-gilead? And he answered him, I am as thou art, and my people as thy people; and we will be with thee in the war.

4 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, Inquire, I pray thee, at the word of the LORD to day.

5 Therefore the king of Israel gathered together of prophets four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for God will deliver it into the king's hand.

6 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD besides, that we might inquire of him?

7 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man by whom we may inquire of the LORD: but I hate him; for he never prophesied good unto me, but always evil: the same is Micaiah the son of Imla. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so:

8 And the king of Israel called for one of his officers, and said, Fetch quickly Micaiah the son of Imla.

9 And the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat king of Judah, sat either of them on his throne, clothed in their robes, and they sat in a void place at the entering in of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them.

10 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah had made him horns of iron, and said, Thus saith the LORD, With these thou shalt push Syria until they be consumed.

11 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper; for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

12 And the messenger that went to call Micaiah spake to him, saying, Behold, the words of the prophets declare good to the king with one assent: let thy word therefore, I pray thee, be like one of theirs, and speak thou good.

13 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, even what my God saith, that will I speak.

14 And when he was come to the king, the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And he said, Go ye up, and prosper, and they shall be delivered unto your hand.

15 And the king said to him, How many times shall I adjure thee, that thou say nothing but the truth to me in the name of the LORD?

16 Then he said, I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as sheep that have no shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master; let them return, therefore, every man to his house in peace.

17 And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would not prophesy good unto me, but evil?

18 Again he said, Therefore, hear the word of the LORD; I saw the LORD sitting upon his throne, and all the host of heaven standing on his right hand, and on his left.

19 And the LORD said, Who shall entice Ahab king of Israel, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one spake, saying after this manner, and another saying after that manner.

20 Then there came out a spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will entice him. And the LORD said unto him, Wherewith?

21 And he said, I will go out, and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And the LORD said, Thou shalt entice him, and thou shalt also prevail: go out, and do even so.

22 Now therefore, behold, the LORD hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of these thy prophets, and the LORD hath spoken evil against thee.

23 Then Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah came near, and smote Micaiah upon the cheek, and said, Which way went the Spirit of the LORD from me to speak unto thee?

24 And Micaiah said, Behold, thou shalt see on that day when thou shalt go into an inner chamber to hide thyself.

25 Then the king of Israel said, Take ye Micaiah, and carry him back to Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son;

26 And say, Thus saith the king, Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I return in peace.

27 And Micaiah said, If thou certainly return gilead:] He caressed him so at this feast, and used such arguments, as prevailed with him to undertake this expedition.

Ver. 3. Wilt thou go up with me to Ramoth-gilead?] What he had consented unto in the midst of their merriment, he seems now to resolve more deliberately (see 2 Kings xxii. 4).

I am as thou art, and my people as thy people; and will be with thee in the war.] The prophet Hanani had given his father a caution against this (xvi. 7), and Jehoshaphat is reproved for it afterward (xix. 2; xx. 37). The Targum expounds the last words thus, "that which happens to thee, shall happen to me, in this war."

Ver. 4—6.] These three verses are the same in sense, and almost in words, with those which I have explained in 1 Kings xxii. 5—7.

Ver. 7.] See there, ver. 8.

Ver. 8.] He seems to have thought, that Micaiah would be backward to come, because he knew the king's hatred to him; and therefore he bids the officer (who was a person of quality) quicken him.

Ver. 9. And the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat — sat in a void place] The very same we read there, ver. 10. And the Targum explains it thus; "they sat in a semicircle," as the court of judgment used to do, that they might see one another, and all the people stood before them.

All the prophets prophesied before them.] All the false prophets, as the Targum understands it, who pretended to the gift of prophecy, which the following words show to be the meaning.

Ver. 10—13.] There is no difference between these verses and those in 1 Kings xxii. 11—14.

in peace, then hath not the Lord spoken by me. And he said, Hearken, all ye people.

28 So the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, went up to Ramoth-gilead.

29 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, I will disguise myself, and will go to the battle; but put thou on thy robes. So the king of Israel disguised himself, and they went to the battle.

30 Now the king of Syria had commanded the captains of the chariots that were with him, saying, Fight ye not with small or great, save only with the king of Israel.

31 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, It is the king of Israel: therefore they compassed about him to fight: but Jehoshaphat cried out, and the Lord helped him; and God moved them to depart from him.

32 For it came to pass, that, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, they turned back again from pursuing him.

33 And a certain man drew a bow at a venture, and smote the king of Israel-between the joints of the harness: therefore he said to his chariot man, Turn thine hand, that thou mayest carry me out of the host; for I am wounded.

34 And the battle increased that day: howbeit the king of Israel stayed himself up in his chariot against the Syrians until the even; and about the time of the sun going down he died.

Ver. 18. Therefore hear the word of the Lord;] Some think he spake these words to the bystanders: but this is confuted by 1 Kings xxii. 19, where the words are, Hear thou therefore, speaking again to the king.

In all that follows, to the end of the chapter, there is scarce any difference between it, and what is recorded in the book of the Kings; where I have explained it: and will not here transcribe what the reader may find there.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Jehoshaphat, reproved by Jehu, visiteth his kingdom. 5 His instructions to the Judges, 8 To the priests and Levites.

1 AND Jehoshaphat the king of Judah returned to his house in peace to Jerusalem.

2 And Jehu, the son of Hanani the seer, went out to meet him, and said to king Jehoshaphat, Shouldst thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord.

3 Nevertheless, there are good things found in thee, in that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land, and hast prepared thine heart to seek God.

5 And Jehoshaphat dwelt at Jerusalem: and he went out again through the people, from Beersheba to mount Ephraim, and brought them back unto the Lord God of their fathers.

5 ¶ And he set judges in the land, throughout all the fenced cities of Judah, city by city,

6 And he said to the judges, Take heed what

CHAP. XIX.

Ver. 1.] I suppose, as soon as the battle was over, he immediately went to Jerusalem: to return thanks to God for his wonderful preservation.

Ver. 2. Jehu the son of Hanani.] See 1 Kings xvi. 1.

Went out to meet him.] Before he came into the city: that, being admonished by him, he might be the more affected with the mercy of God towards him in his deliverance.

Shouldst thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord?] As much as to say, This is contrary to common reason, which taught the gentiles to make no friendship with such as were God's enemies. So Callimachus in his hymn to Ceres, ver. 117, 118.

Δάμντες, μή τῆος εἶν φίλος ὅς τοι ἀπειχθῆς,
Ἔσται, μὲν δ' ὑποτόχος μοι κακομήτορες ἐχθροί.

"O Ceres, he shall be none of my friend who is hated by thee; nor shall he live under my roof: such neighbours are odious unto me." Where the illustrious Spanhemius hath observed many the like sayings among the heathens; and shows how the ancient Greeks abhorred to lodge in the same house with a murderer, or other grievous criminals; with whom they would not eat, much less be with them in their sacred assemblies; looking upon them as impure creatures.

Therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord.] Upon which account God threatens to punish him: which some think he did by raising such numerous enemies to invade him, as we read of in the next chapter. But most of all, by suffering all his sons to be murdered by their elder brother (ch. xxi. 4), and his grandchildren by Jehu (2 Kings ix. 27: x. 13, 14).

Ver. 3. Nevertheless, there are good things found in thee.] For the sake of which he so far pardoned his error as not to punish him in his own person, but in his posterity.

In that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land, and hast prepared thine heart to seek God.] The chief thing wherein he pleased God was by abolishing idolatrous worship: which he had done rigorously, and served God with a sincere heart.

Ver. 4. Jehoshaphat dwelt at Jerusalem.] Being settled at Jerusalem after his visit to Ahab, and the war with Syria, he had time to reflect upon his escape out of the late battle, and the reproof of the prophet: at which he was so far from being angry (as his father Asa had been, xvi. 7) that he laid it to heart, and seriously resolved upon a farther reformation, in other matters, as well as religion.

He went out again through the people.] He had sent out his officers before (ch. xvii. 7), who went out by his authority, and acted in his name, about this very business; and now he went in person, as then by his orders.

From Beersheba to mount Ephraim.] The former of these had always been the utmost bound south-ye do: for ye judge not for man, but for the LORD, who is with you in the judgment.

7 Wherefore now, let the fear of the LORD be upon you; take heed and do it: for there is no iniquity with the LORD our God, nor respect of persons, nor taking of gifts.

8 ¶ Moreover in Jerusalem did Jehoshaphat set of the Levites, and of the priests, and of the chief of the fathers of Israel, for the judgment of ward of the tribe of Judah: and the latter, since the division of the kingdom, had been the northern bound, as before the division was Dan.

And brought them back unto the Lord God of their fathers.] Since the last reformation, it seems, some had revolted to their former idolatry, whom he now reduced; especially those cities which his father had taken in mount Ephraim (ch. xv. 8), who, being Israelites, might have been drawn in again to worship the calves.

Ver. 5.] That is, in every one of these cities: or, as Bertram thinks it should be translated, "for city, and city." That is, he placed judges in the principal cities, unto which all causes were brought from the lesser cities and villages. This was a means both to have justice done between man and man, and also to preserve them in the worship of God, when judges were ready at hand, to call those to an account who went after other gods.

Ver. 6.] He gave them this very solemn admonition when he settled them in their place: which the Targum thus translates, "Ye do not judge before the sons of men, but before the Word of the Lord; and his glorious presence resides among you in the act of judgment." Which is a most illustrious testimony that the ancient Jews believed more persons than one in the Deity.

Ver. 7. Let the fear of the Lord be upon you: take heed and do it:] That is, do as I command you, judge according to the law; for such as God is, such you ought to be, since you are in his place.

For there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor respect of persons, nor taking of gifts.] He bids them remember that as the nature of God is perfectly just, so he cannot be moved to do iniquity by respect to the greatest, or pity to the meanest, or by any gift be bribed to do unjustly. Whom they ought to imitate, being entrusted by him with his authority.

Ver. 8. Moreover, in Jerusalem did Jehoshaphat set of the Levites, and of the priests, and of the chief of the fathers of Israel.] Many were of opinion, that as before he speaks of the courts consisting of twenty-three judges, which were settled in every considerable city of the kingdom; so here he speaks of the high court of all, consisting of seventy, called by the Jews the great Sanhedrin, sitting at Jerusalem: whither appeals were made in all causes, that could not be determined below. But if this be true, Jehoshaphat was the first that we can find who settled this excellent constitution: of which we can find no footsteps in the books of Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, or in the foregoing kings, as I have discoursed at large upon Deut. xvi. 18: xvii. 9 (see my notes there). And there is little in the succeeding times to persuade us of it; for Ezra and Nehemiah set up no such judicature as that the Jews call Sanhedrin. Which seems to have been wisely constituted, when they fell under the government of the Macedonian princes, from whose language they borrowed the name. Though Jehoshaphat therefore settled judges in Jerusalem, yet the number of them is not certain.

For the judgment of the Lord, and for controversies,] These words are variously expounded:

the LORD, and for controversies, when they returned to Jerusalem.

9 And he charged them, saying, Thus shall ye do in the fear of the LORD, faithfully, and with a perfect heart.

10 And what cause soever shall come to you of your brethren that dwell in their cities, between blood and blood, between law and commandment, statutes and judgments, ye shall even warn them some understanding by the "judgment of the Lord," causes about sacred matters, others pecuniary matters: and by controversies, some understanding civil causes, others criminal and capital. It is sufficient, I think, to say, they tried all sorts of causes.

When they returned to Jerusalem.] That is, when Jehoshaphat, and those that attended him, returned from the other cities, where they had appointed judges (ver. 5), he constituted this supreme court in the chief city of his kingdom. I say supreme court, for there were not two of them; one for ecclesiastical, the other for civil causes, as some have imagined: but one court judged both, as Grotius has very well proved, from the very account here given of this matter. For Jehoshaphat bids these judges try what cause soever should come to them (ver. 10), and adds, "between blood and blood, between law and commandment, statutes and judgments." Which shows there was no kind of business in controversy, which did not come before this one court. Nor do those words, ver. 11, prove the contrary, as he shows in his book, De Imperio Sum. Potes. circa Sacra, cap. 11, sect. 15.

Ver. 9.] He gives them the same solemn charge which he had given the other Judges (ver. 7); that having the fear of God before their eyes, they should do righteous judgment, and not suffer themselves to be any way corrupted, for God would judge all over again.

It is a most memorable saying of Cicero, that judges, being sworn to do justice, should remember; when they come to pass sentence, Deum se habere testem; id est, ut ego arbitror, mentem suam, quæ nihil homini dedit ipse Deus Divinus; "that he hath God a witness of what he doth, even his own conscience, than which God himself hath given unto man nothing more divine: lib. iii. De Officiis, cap. x. where he hath left this excellent instruction also, that a man may lay aside the person of a friend, when he puts on the person of a Judge.

Ver. 10. And what cause soever shall come to you of your brethren that dwell in their cities,] By way of appeal from the other cities: where the judges were wont to refer matters of great difficulty to this supreme court at Jerusalem, where the judges were most learned.

Between blood and blood.] When the question was, who was next of kin to an estate, and should succeed him that was deceased. So some understand the word blood to signify kindred. But Jarchi understands it of a question, whether a murder was voluntary, or a man was killed by chance.

Between law and commandment, statutes and judgments,] Some take the word law to be a general word, the species of which follow. So that it is as much as to say, Ye shall judge concerning all manner of laws: first, of commandments, such as have a natural equity in them: then statutes, or positive laws belonging to rites and ceremonies: and judgments, concerning those precepts, which direct the manner of proceeding in judgments.

Ye shall even warn them that they trespass not that they trespass not against the LORD, and so wrath come upon you, and upon your brethren: this do, and ye shall not trespass.

11 And, behold, Amariah the chief priest is over you in all matters of the LORD; and Zebaagainst the Lord, and so wrath come upon you,]

This seems to be a command, that they should not only pronounce a righteous sentence in every cause that came before them, but that they should admonish him, who was in the wrong (and all other persons in the like case), to beware of injuring their neighbours for the time to come.

This do, and ye shall not trespass.] But worthily discharge their office.

Ver. 11. Amariah the chief priest] See concerning him, what I have noted upon 1 Chron. vi. 9, 10, &c.

Is over you in all matters of the Lord; and Zebadiah the son of Ishmael, the ruler of the house of Judah, for all the king's matters:] Many understand by "the matters of the Lord," all things sacred; and by "the king's matters," all civil and political causes. But Grotius hath judiciously observed (in his book De Imperio Sum. Potest. circa Sacra, cap. 11, sect. 15), that it is most agreeable to the scripture to understand by "the things of God," those which were defined by the law of God, and were to be judged by that law: and by "the king's matters," such as, not being defined by the divine law, were left to the judgment of the king. Of which kind were all deliberations about what was expedient or not expedient. And thus, he observes, the most learned of the Jewish interpreters explain these words in his book, De Jure Belli et Pacis, lib. i. cap. 3, sect. 20. But which way soever we distinguish the things of God and the king's things, yet one and the same court took cognizance of them both: only with this difference, that the court had different presidents according to the nature of the causes. In things pertaining to God, Amariah the high-priest sat as the first judge; in things pertaining to the king, Zebadiah, a principal person about the king, had the chair, and was the moderator. For, as the high-priest was most conversant in the law of God, and therefore fittest to direct in such matters; so the chief ruler about the king was most exercised in matters left undetermined by the law, and so fittest, to preside in such consultations.

There are, indeed, very learned men who think these words plainly prove two different courts: in one of which ecclesiastical matters were determined, diah the son of Ishmael, the ruler of the house of Judah, for all the king's matters: also the Levites shall be officers before you. Deal courageously, and the LORD shall be with the good.

in the other civil; in the former of which Amariah presided; in the latter Zebadiah. Thus Corn. Bertram, in his book De Republ. Judaica, p. 137, 139, whom Const. L'Empereur defends in his annotations on that place; and endeavours to prove out of Deuteronomy, that God himself instituted an ecclesiastical senate, distinct from the civil, p. 389. But this is not a fit place to meddle farther with that controversy: I shall only say, that I think Grotius hath sufficiently confuted this opinion in the book and chapter before mentioned, De Imperio, &c. And in his annotations also upon St. Matt. v. 22 (on those words ὁμοῦς ἵσταται τῷ συνδρίκῳ), where he makes this paraphrase upon this speech of Jehoshaphat: "Do not despond, as not able to discharge so weighty an office, for want of such learning and knowledge as are necessary for such a work: you have excellent men to guide you with their counsel. Such is the prince of the senate Amarias the priest, a man skilled in judgment; and if any thing fall out belonging rather to civil prudence than to the knowledge of the law, Sabadiah the Ishmaelite is ready at hand, who is a principal person in such kind of deliberations. And besides (as it here follows) you have the Levites their assessors, who are very well skilled in many arts."

Also the Levites shall be officers before you.] Some of the Levites were members of this great court, who sat in judgment (ver. 8): the rest, who were not judges were ministers under them to see their sentence executed. But it appears by this place, that the word shoterim doth not here signify, as in others, mere apparitors who summoned men to the court, or such officers as executed the sentence of the court; but persons of some authority, who had power to make offenders sensible of the justice of the sentence, and convince them of their error: which was a great encouragement to the judges to undertake this office, and to judge uprightly.

Deal courageously, and the Lord shall be with the good.] He bids them not to be afraid of any man: for God, who employs them, would stand by them and defend them, if they were good and upright judges. The Targum hath it, "The Word of the Lord will help you who is good."

1 Jehoshaphat in his fear proclaimeth a fast. 5 His prayer. 14 The prophecy of Jahaziel. 20 Jehoshaphat exhorteth the people, and setteth singers to praise the Lord. 22 The great overthrow of the enemies. 26 The people, having blessed God at Berachah, return in triumph. 31 Jehoshaphat's reign. 35 His convoy of ships which he made with Ahaziah, according to the prophecy of Eliezer, unhappily perished.

1 It came to pass after this also, that the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon,

CHAP. XX.

Ver. 1. The children of Moab, and the children of Ammon,] These seem to have been the principal in this invasion: the other here mentioned (in the next verse and in verse 22) to have been auxiliaries. For such was the ancient way of making war, and still is to this day, to call in the assistance of their neighbours. As appears by the Romans, more especially, whose armies consisted of their own legions, and with them other beside the Ammonites, came against Jehoshaphat to battle.

on whom they chiefly relied, and their auxiliaries: who agreed neither in their discipline, nor in their language, nor in their affection, as Vegetius observes in his book De Re Militari, lib. ii. cap. 2, and therefore could not do such service. For which cause (as he observes in the beginning of his third book) they took care their socii miliores should never exceed the number of their own soldiers, which is a rule laid down by Livy and Tacitus.

With them other beside the Ammonites,] It ought

2 Then there came some that told Jehoshaphat, saying, There cometh a great multitude against thee from beyond the sea, on this side Syria: and, behold, they be in Hazazon-tamar, which is En-gedi.

3 And Jehoshaphat feared, and set himself to seek the LORD, and proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah.

4 And Judah gathered themselves together to ask help of the LORD; even out of all the cities of Judah they came to seek the LORD.

5 ¶ And Jehoshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of the LORD, before the new court,

6 And said, O LORD God of our fathers, art not thou God in heaven? and rulest not thou over all the kingdoms of the heathen? and in thine hand is there not power and might, so that none is able to withstand thee?

7 Art not thou our God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham thy friend for ever?

8 And they dwelt therein, and have built thee a sanctuary therein for thy name, saying,

9 If, when evil cometh upon us, as the sword, judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence, (for thy name is in this house,) and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help.

10 And now, behold, the children of Ammon, and Moab, and mount Seir, whom thou wouldst to be translated, "and with them the Meunims:" who were a people in Arabia, near the Moabites and Ammonites (see my annotations upon Judges x. 12, and in this book, ch. xxvi. 6, 7, and Bochartus, in his Phaleg, lib. ii. cap. 22).

Came against Jehoshaphat to battle.] Made an invasion upon his country.

Ver. 2. There cometh a great multitude against thee from beyond the sea] That is the Dead sea, as it is called in scripture.

On this side Syria;] The Targum translates it, "from the western part of Syria:" for the Dead sea was the western bounds of that country; and it is likely the Syrians joined against him, to revenge the assistance he gave to Ahab.

They be in Hazazon-tamar, which is En-gedi.] A place where there was a great forest of palm-trees. It seems he had but slender intelligence, for he heard not of their motion till they were upon the borders of his country.

Ver. 3. Jehoshaphat feared.] Having been lately told by the prophet (ch. xix. 2) that God was very angry with him.

Proclaimed a fast] Fasting was generally joined with prayer in times of distress: unto which he publicly called the whole nation, that they might obtain help from God.

Ver. 4.] The Targum translates it, "to ask mercy of him, and to beg his direction, and to hear his holy word." For some part of the law was read upon those solemn days. Vitrina takes this to be an argument, that there were no synagogues in every city in those days. For there would have been no need they should come out of their cities, and all resort to Jerusalem, to fast and pray, and hear the law there; which might have been done at home in their synagogues, as well as in the temple. Though not, indeed, in such a solemn manner, as it was performed by such a vast conflux of people, in one place, to make their supplication to God (De Vet. Synag. par. ii. lib. i. cap. 9).

Ver. 5. Jehoshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of the Lord.] For there was a throne, the Hebrew doctors tell us, in the court of the Israelites, where their kings prayed to God, or spake to the people, as there was occasion. So Jehoshaphat did, and, in the following times, Hezekiah and Josiah; after the example of Solomon, who began this custom (chapter vi. 13).

Before the new court.] The most learned in these matters confess they do not know what is meant by the new court. Some think it probable, that it was only some enlargement that Jehoshaphat had made of the court of the people, to render it more capacious:

but others are of opinion, that it signifies the court of the women, which was now made distinct from the court of the men (see 1 Chron. xv. 3). Thus Constantine L'Empereur thinks that the court of the women was not built by Solomon, but added in after-times, Annot. in Cod. Middoth, cap. 2, sect 5, where he disputes that according to the Mishna, this court when it was made did not surround the court of Israel: but the breadth of them was equal, according to the delineation there.

Ver. 6.] This is the most admirable prayer that we read any of their kings made; expressing the greatest confidence in God, and representing to him the justice of their cause. He begins with an acknowledgment of God's supreme and irresistible power; which extends itself every where over all creatures in heaven and earth, who are every one of them subject to his authority.

Ver. 7.] Then he remembers the peculiar relation the people of Israel had to him, and the promise to Abraham, and the deed of gift which he made of this country to him, and to his posterity for ever, as a reward of his fidelity to him.

Ver. 8.] Next to that he remembers, that they had been long possessed of this country, wherein a house had been built for his worship by Solomon: to whom God promised at the consecration of it, that he would have regard to the prayers made in that place (see the sixth chapter of this book, and 1 Kings viii.). The Targum here again saith this sanctuary was "built to the name of thy Word;" as in the foregoing verse God is said to have driven out the inhabitants of this land by his Word.

Ver. 9. If when evil cometh upon us, as the sword, judgment,] Some translate it, the sword of judgment, that is, the punishing sword. But if judgment signify any particular punishment, distinct from the sword, it must be wild beasts, or captivity: for pestilence and famine are particularly mentioned in the following words. The Targum translates it, "slaughter of the sword," which was a sore judgment.

We stand before this house.] See 1 Kings viii. 38, 39.

Ver. 10. The children of Ammon, and Moab, and mount Seir.] Some think this explains what is meant by "other besides the Ammonites" (as we translate ver. 1), viz. Edomites. So the Targum is that place, "With these the Edomites, who joined with the Ammonites." But see there.

Whom thou wouldst not let Israel invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt, when they turned from them.] He represents in the next place, the foul ingratitude of their enemies (added to their injustice) in invading their country, unto which they had an not let Israel invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt, but they turned from them, and destroyed them not;

11 Behold, I say, how they reward us, to come to cast us out of thy possession, which thou hast given us to inherit.

12 O our God, wilt thou not judge them? for we have no might against this great company that cometh against us; neither know we what to do: but our eyes are upon thee.

13 And all Judah stood before the LORD, with their little ones, their wives, and their children.

14 ¶ Then upon Jahaziel, the son of Zechariah, the son of Benaiah, the son of Jeiel, the son of Mattaniah, a Levite, of the sons of Asaph, came the Spirit of the LORD in the midst of the congregation;

15 And he said, Hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat; Thus saith the LORD unto you, Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not yours, but God's.

16 To-morrow go ye down against them: behold, they come up by the cliff of Ziz; and ye shall find them at the end of the brook, before the wilderness of Jeruel.

17 Ye shall not need to fight in this battle; set yourselves, stand ye still, and see the salvation of the LORD with you, O Judah and Jerusalem: fear not, nor be dismayed; to-morrow go out against them; for the LORD will be with you.

18 And Jehoshaphat bowed his head, with his face to the ground: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the LORD, worshipping the LORD.

19 And the Levites of the children of the undoubted title: when the Israelites did not do them the least harm, as they went to take possession of it, but took the pains to march a long way about to come at it, rather than give them any disturbance in their country.

Ver. 11.] It is a most odious thing not to make grateful returns for benefits received; but to return evil for good is the highest wickedness. Which in this case was aggravated by this, that they made an attempt not only upon the rights of the Israelites, but of God himself; whose land this was, which they held of him as their Lord.

Ver. 12. O our God, wilt thou not judge them?] He appeals to the justice of God, the righteous Judge, who rights those that suffer wrong, especially when they have no helper. To judge in this place signifies to punish, as in Exod. vi. 6; Ps. ix. 16, where these words, "the Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth," are thus interpreted by Drusus, The Lord is known by the just punishments which he inflicts: in his Miscellanies, cent. i. cap. 18.

For we have no might against this great company that cometh against us; neither know we what to do: but our eyes are upon thee.] This is the last argument he uses to obtain help from God: the weak condition wherein he and his people were, which made them the objects of the divine pity; especially since they placed all their confidence and hope in him alone. But it may seem strange that he should say they had no might against this multitude, when he had so many hundred men at command, as are mentioned ch. xvii. 14—16, &c. To which it may be replied, that perhaps this was such a sudden invasion, that he had not time to gather a considerable body to oppose them: or rather he distrusted the greatest army, and acknowledged them to be of no force if God was not with them: on whom he entirely relied, and not on the number and valour of his soldiers, though both were very great.

Victorinus Strigelius hath such a devout reflection upon this prayer of Jehoshaphat, that it will not be unacceptable, I persuade myself, to the pious reader, if I here transcribe it: "In this weak and declining condition wherein the church now is, when the devil is very outrageous, because he knows his time to be short, &c. let us say daily with Jehoshaphat, We know not what to do; but our eyes are upon thee. Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory. Thou art our king and our shepherd, we are thy people, and the sheep of thy pasture. Thou only art powerful, we are infirm: but thy power will be perfected in our weakness. Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy name give the glory; for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake. Do not remember our iniquities, but save us for thy mercy's sake; for we are brought very low. Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name; deliver us, and be merciful to our sins, for thy name's sake. Save us, O Lord our God, that we may give thanks unto thy holy name, and triumph in thy praise." Such addresses to God (so he concludes) will illustrate this prayer of Jehoshaphat better than the largest commentaries.

Ver. 13.] The more to move the divine compassion towards them.

Ver. 14.] He seems not to have been a prophet before this time: when a sudden inspiration came upon him from God, to comfort this great assembly with assured hope of deliverance before they stirred from the place where they had prayed.

Ver. 15.] As it was God's cause which they now asserted, so they might be assured he would maintain it, by overthrowing their enemies.

Ver. 16. To-morrow go ye down against them:] Jerusalem, where they now were, was situated on a high hill, and therefore he saith they should go down against these enemies: who are said in the next words to come up.

Behold, they come up by the cliff of Ziz; and ye shall find them at the end of the brook] God was so very gracious to them, as, by this prophet, not only to assure them of victory, but to inform them of the very time, and place, and manner of it. The time was the very next morning: the place is mentioned in the latter end of this verse, as the time is in the beginning: and the manner, in the conclusion of the foregoing verse, that it should be by the hand of God, and not by their own: who should be only spectators of the victory which God himself would give them: so it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 17. Ye shall not need to fight in this battle; set yourselves, stand ye still, and see the salvation of the Lord with you,] He repeats what he had said before (which he knew would be the greatest comfort to them), that they should have no conflict with their enemies; but only stand still in their place, and see the hand of God overthrowing them all. In which there was a notable accomplishment of Solomon's prayer, which Jehoshaphat recited.

For the Lord will be with you,] "The Word of the Lord will be your helper," as the Targum expounds it.

Ver. 18.] The king gave most humble thanks to God, as did all the people with him, after his example.

Ver. 19. The Levites,] Who were then waiting, in their course, at the temple.

Kohathites, and of the children of the Korhites, stood up to praise the LORD God of Israel with a loud voice on high.

20 ¶ And they rose early in the morning, and went forth into the wilderness of Tekoa: and as they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem; Believe in the LORD your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper.

21 And when he had consulted with the people, he appointed singers unto the LORD, and that should praise the beauty of holiness as they went out before the army, and to say, Praise the LORD; for his mercy endureth for ever.

22 ¶ And when they began to sing and to praise, the LORD set ambushments against the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which were come against Judah; and they were smitten.

23 For the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the inhabitants of mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them: and when they had made an end of the inhabitants of Seir, every one helped to destroy another.

24 And when Judah came toward the watch tower in the wilderness, they looked unto the multitude, and, behold, they were dead bodies fallen to the earth, and none escaped.

25 And when Jehoshaphat and his people came to take away the spoil of them, they found among them in abundance, both riches with the dead bodies, and precious jewels, which they stripped off for themselves, more than they could carry away: and they were three days in gathering of the spoil, it was so much.

36 ¶ And on the fourth day, they assembled themselves in the valley of Berachah; for there they blessed the LORD: therefore the name of the same place was called, The valley of Berachah, unto this day.

27 Then they returned every man of Judah and Jerusalem, and Jehoshaphat in the fore-front of them, to go again to Jerusalem with joy: for the LORD had made them to rejoice over their enemies.

Stood up to praise the Lord God of Israel with a loud voice] They sung praise to God before the army went out, as if the victory had been already obtained. And they raised their voice as high as they could, to express their full assurance of success. This, I suppose, they did by the order of Jehoshaphat.

Ver. 20. They rose early in the morning, and went forth] That is, the army who were to stand, and face the enemy, went forth from Jerusalem.

As they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, Hear me, O Judah.] It is likely he stood in the gate of the city, through which they marched out, and spake these words to the several companies as they passed by him.

Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper.] The Targum translates it, "Believe in the Word of the Lord your God, believe his law, and his prophets," &c. God having made them a gracious promise, expected their belief of it, and dependence on it: otherwise they had no reason to hope for victory.

Ver. 21. When he had consulted with the people,] That is, with the elders and heads of their tribes, who represented the rest: without whose consent he was loath to do any thing, in a time of common danger.

He appointed singers—that should praise the beauty of holiness.] It may be translated, "should praise his most sacred Majesty." Though it is commonly thought he ordered them to praise the Lord with the same state, pomp, and ornament, that they worshipped in the temple: in the same habit, in that order and magnificence, wherein they appeared in the holy place.

As they went out before the army.] This was an argument of great courage and assurance, that they led on the army: declaring to their enemies, that God (whose ministers they were) was coming against them.

Praise the Lord; for his mercy endureth for ever.] This was the usual song, which they sung at the temple (ver. 13).

Ver. 22. When they began to sing and to praise,] Before they had marched many steps.

The Lord set ambushments against the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which were come against Judah; and they were smitten.] Or "smote one another," as it is in the margin. The Targum translates it, "The Word of the Lord set ambushments," &c. By which that paraphrast understands his angelical ministers which attended him; who smote some of them secretly, and the rest thinking it was done by their neighbours, fell upon them as their enemies. But the meaning seems rather to be, that the ambushments which they had laid against Judah, by a confusion among themselves, made by a divine hand, fell upon part of their own army, mistaking them for their enemies.

Ver. 23.] They of mount Seir were ordered to fall upon Judah, out of an ambushment; but by some mistake they fell upon the Ammonites, their own confederates: and they and the Moabites fell upon them, till they had entirely destroyed those of Seir. And when that was done, they continued in such confusion, that they fell one upon another, still imagining they were destroying the Jews: who came upon them very early in the morning, as the prophet had directed.

Ver. 24.] Instead of meeting with an enemy to oppose them, they saw them all lie dead upon the ground. For this tower, it is probable, stood upon the cliff of Ziz (mentioned ver. 16), from whence they could behold how their army lay.

Ver. 25.] As they found rich garments upon their bodies, so they found great treasure among their baggage (as we call it), and many precious jewels; which they brought along with them, I suppose, that they might appear the more glorious, in the triumph which they promised themselves over the Jews. They could not carry all the spoil at once, but spent three days in collecting it, and disposing of it. For there was vast provision, no doubt, which they had made for the subsistence of such a multitude; and a great many beasts for the carriages that brought it to them.

Ver. 26.] One cannot think that they deferred to give God thanks for so signal a victory, till four days after it; but then they did it in a more solemn manner than they could at first: the whole body of the people assembling together, to acknowledge God's goodness to them. Which they did in such a remarkable manner, that it gave to the place ever after the name of the valley of blessing.

Ver. 27. Then they returned, every man of Judah and Jerusalem, and Jehoshaphat in the fore-front of 28 And they came to Jerusalem with psalteries and harps and trumpets, unto the house of the LORD.

29 And the fear of God was on all the kingdoms of those countries, when they had heard that the LORD fought against the enemies of Israel.

30 So the realm of Jehoshaphat was quiet; for his God gave him rest round about.

31 ¶ And Jehoshaphat reigned over Judah. He was thirty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and five years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Azubah the daughter of Shilhi.

32 And he walked in the way of Asa his father, and departed not from it, doing that which was right in the sight of the LORD.

33 Howbeit the high places were not taken away; for as yet the people had not prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers.

34 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, first and last, behold they are written in the book of Jehu the son of Hanani, who is mentioned in the book of the kings of Israel.

35 ¶ And after this did Jehoshaphat king of Judah join himself with Ahaziah king of Israel, who did very wickedly.

36 And he joined himself with him to make ships to go to Tarshish: and they made the ships in Ezion-gaber.

37 Then Eliezer, the son of Dodavah of Mareshah, prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying, Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the LORD hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish.

them, to go again to Jerusalem with joy;] This is a farther instance of their thankfulness to God for their victory; that they did not return every man to his own home, after this overthrow: but first went back to Jerusalem, to bless him again for hearing their prayers, and making good his promises.

For the Lord had made them to rejoice over their enemies.] This they did with great joy, wherewith God had filled their hearts, by making them triumph over such powerful enemies.

Ver. 28.] To express by these the greatness of their joy, and proclaim their thankfulness to God.

Ver. 29. And the fear of God was on all the kingdoms of those countries,] On all the neighbouring nations, who heard of this glorious victory without fighting.

When they had heard that the Lord fought against the enemies of Israel.] Here the Targum hath it, "When they heard that the Word of the Lord fought," &c.

Ver. 30.] Here again the Targum saith, "The Word of his God gave him rest."

Ver. 31.] See 1 Kings xxii. 42. It is likely, his mother was a very religious woman, who had taken care to bring up Jehoshaphat in the fear of the Lord: and happy had it been for him and his family, if he had taken care to marry his son to such another woman.

Ver. 32.] Whatsoever other faults he had he kept close to the worship of God alone: and did many other good things as the law of Moses directed.

Ver. 33. Howbeit the high places were not taken away:] This shows, that the meaning of those words, xvii. 6, is, that the high places wherein God was worshipped were not taken away: though those wherein idols were served were destroyed.

For as yet the people had not prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers.] The reason of it is here given, the people could not bear it: for their hearts were not disposed to serve God exactly according to the law of Moses. But though they renounced idolatry, and worshipped none but the Lord, yet they would not have his worship, by sacrifices, restrained to one place alone, but have the liberty to sacrifice elsewhere.

Ver. 34.] He was an eminent prophet in the time of Baasha king of Israel, and lived to the end of Jehoshaphat's reign (see 1 Kings xvi. 1, 7). He, as several other prophets, wrote the history of his own time: out of which monuments these books were collected. And his work was so highly esteemed that it was registered in the books of the kings of Israel: which were commentaries, as Huetius thinks, of what daily passed (Demonstr. Evang. p. 202).

Ver. 35. After this] That is, after the Lord had given him such a glorious victory, and struck terror into all his enemies, and given him rest and quiet round about.

Did Jehoshaphat—join himself with Ahaziah—who did very wickedly:] This was a great weakness, to make friendship with the son, when he had been so sharply reproved for joining with his father Ahab (xix. 22), especially since he was no better, but a very wicked idolater. And though he did not join with him in making war, but only in trade: yet God took it ill of him, and threatened to punish him for it (ver. 37). Into this he was betrayed by the affinity which was between them, which shows how dangerous it is to marry with idolaters.

Ver. 36.] They were ships of Tarshish made to go to Ophir, as we learn from 1 Kings xxii. 48, 49, where I have shown how this place and that agree. Borchart thinks there was a place called Tarshish in the Indian Ocean near to Ophir (that is, Taprobana), which the Phœnicians called by the same name with the other Tarshish, because the same commodities came from both (see his Phaleg. lib. iii. cap. 7).

Ver. 37. The Lord hath broken thy works.] In the Targum it is again, "The Word of the Lord hath destroyed thy works." Which he laid to heart so much, that when Ahaziah afterward desired to join in some voyage with him, he would not consent: as we read in 1 Kings xxii. 49.

The ships were broken,] They were shattered in the very place where they were built, in Ezion-gaber (see 1 Kings xxii. 48).

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Jehoram, succeeding Jehoshaphat, slayeth his brethren. 5 His wicked reign. 8 Edom and Libnah revolt. 12 The prophecy of Elijah against him in writing. 16 Philistines and Arabians oppress him. 18 His incurable disease, infamous death, and burial.

1 Now Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.

2 And he had brethren, the sons of Jehoshaphat, Azariah, and Jehiel, and Zechariah, and Azariah, and Michael, and Shephatiah: all these were the sons of Jehoshaphat king of Israel.

3 And their father gave them great gifts of silver, and of gold, and of precious things, with fenced cities in Judah: but the kingdom gave he to Jehoram, because he was the first-born.

4 Now when Jehoram was risen up to the kingdom of his father, he strengthened himself, and slew all his brethren with the sword, and divers also of the princes of Israel.

5 ¶ Jehoram was thirty and two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

6 And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, like as did the house of Ahab; for he had the daughter of Ahab to wife: and he wrought that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord.

7 Howbeit the Lord would not destroy the house of David, because of the covenant that he had made with David, and as he promised to give a light to him and to his sons for ever.

8 ¶ In his days the Edomites revolted from under the dominion of Judah, and made themselves a king.

9 Then Jehoram went forth with his princes, and all his chariots with him: and he rose up by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him in, and the captains of the chariots.

10 So the Edomites revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. The same time also did Libnah revolt from under his hand; because he had forsaken the Lord God of his fathers.

11 Moreover, he made high places in the mountains of Judah, and caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit fornication, and compelled Judah thereto.

CHAP. XXI.

Ver. 1.] By his own appointment, as appears from ver. 3. He was designed king in the seventeenth year of the reign of Jehoshaphat; and crowned in the twenty-third year, and afterward reigned eight years; three with his father, and five alone (see ver. 5).

Ver. 2. And he had brethren, the sons of Jehoshaphat.] They had the same father, if not the same mother: which made his wickedness in killing them the more unnatural.

Azariah—and Azariah,] The fourth son is distinguished in the Hebrew from the first, by the addition of hu; the first being called Azariah, this Azariahu.

All these were the sons of Jehoshaphat king of Israel.] He was king of Israel in a large sense, many of Israel being subject to him. So Ahaz is also called, xxviii. 19, where I shall give some farther account of it.

Ver. 3. Their father gave them great gifts of silver, and of gold,] After the manner of the ancient patriarchs (see Gen. xxv. 6).

And of precious things,] The Hebrew word signifies any thing that is excellent in its kind; whether jewels, or garments, or fruits of the earth, as Beckius observes out of Solomon Abu Melech.

With fenced cities in Judah:] Over which he made them governors. This he did very prudently, for providing so well for them, that they might not be tempted to envy the kingdom to their brother; nor quarrel among themselves. But, as Strigelius observes out of Cicero, Sæpe optime cogitata pessime cadunt; "things excellently designed have often very ill event." For these riches of theirs made their brother first fear them; and then, being wickedly covetous, he was tempted to make them away, that he might get what they had into his possession.

But the kingdom he gave to Jehoram; because he was the first-born.] He could not but know his wicked disposition, by his inclination to idolatry: but was swayed purely by his being the first-born, to settle the kingdom upon him, though not so deserving as his brethren. For such was the power of the kings of Judah (as Conringius observes), that they took upon them to dispose of the kingdom, as if it had been their patrimony. Some think he superstitiously observed that law, Deut. xxi. 13, for sometime the younger sons were preferred to the elder, as we find in the sons of Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 30. But (as Mr. Selden shows) common usage was otherwise, lib. ii. De Successione ad Pontif. cap. 1, p. 202, where he translates these words, Regnum autem transmisit, &c. not he gave, but he "transmitted the kingdom to Jehoram."

Ver. 4. When Jehoram was risen up to the kingdom of his father, he strengthened himself, and slew all his brethren] Being advanced to the throne, his first business was to make himself so strong, that he might be able without danger to murder all his brethren. Which he did; that neither they nor their posterity might ever pretend to the crown. Perhaps they were inclined to the true religion, and therefore he made them away; lest they should oppose him, when he went about to alter it, and bring in the old idolatry.

And divers also of the princes of Israel.] Several of the most eminent persons in the country; such as the judges, established by Jehoshaphat in Jerusalem, and in the country; lest they should revenge the death of his brethren (see Grotius).

Ver. 5, 6.] These two verses are the very same with 2 Kings viii. 17, 18, where see what I have noted.

Ver. 7.—10.] There is little difference between these four verses, and what we read in 2 Kings viii. 19—22. I shall only note here, that this was the first punishment God inflicted on him for his sin, in not following his good father, but turning unto idols.

Ver. 11. He made high places in the mountains of Judah,] For the worship of strange gods.

And caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit fornication, and compelled Judah thereto.] He not

12 ¶ And there came a writing to him from Elijah the prophet, saying, Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father, Because thou hast not walked in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor in the ways of Asa king of Judah,

13 But hast walked in the way of the kings of Israel, and hast made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to go a whoring, like to the whoredoms of the house of Ahab, and also hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thyself; only gave them a bad example, and enticed them to idolatry; but by threatenings and compulsions he endeavoured to constrain them to conform to his example.

Ver. 12. And there came a writing—from Elijah the prophet.] It is certain Elijah was taken up into heaven in the time of Jehoshaphat: therefore Josephus and the LXX. imagine (as Grotius observes), that from thence he sent a letter. Which is no more wonderful, than that Judas Maccabæus should see in a divine dream Onias and Jeremiah praying for the people (2 Macc. xv.); so that the meaning may be, that Elisha saw Elijah appear to him, and bid him write these words and send them to Jehoram. But our Dr. Lightfoot is of opinion, that it is not meant of that Elijah, who was carried up to heaven, but of another of his name, who sent this letter. His reason is, because he is always called Elijah the Tishbite, and never Elijah the prophet (see him upon Luke i. 17). But in this, I think, he is singular; and it is not true, that he is always called the Tishbite; but sometimes simply Elijah; and in 1 Kings xix. 16, God calls him prophet. Therefore Kimchi seems to me to have given the most natural and plainest sense of these words, in his commentary on this place: That Elijah, foreseeing, by the spirit of prophecy, before he went to heaven, the wickedness of Jehoram, spake these words to one of the prophets, and charged him to put them down in writing, and send them in a letter to Jehoram, when he grew so impious as is here related; and let him know, that Elijah commanded this writing to be delivered to him: that so Jehoram, being affected with it, as if it had been sent from heaven, might be moved to repent of the evil he had done. And indeed this passage will bear this sense, if we take the words from Elijah not to relate to the first words there came, but to the immediately precedent, a writing. He did not send a writing, but it was sent as his writing. For there is nothing in the words to intimate that this was written after his death, but delivered after his death: so that it might have been written (for any thing that appears to the contrary) by Elijah himself, before he was taken up into heaven.

Saying, Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father.] He seems to upbraid him with his degeneracy from so pious an ancestor as David was, from whom he descended.

Because thou hast not walked in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor in the ways of Asa] His sin was the greater, because both his father and his grandfather had left him an excellent example.

Ver. 13. But hast walked in the way of the kings of Israel, and hast made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to go a whoring.] He was not only an idolater himself, not only by his example corrupted others, but used his authority to draw, or rather to force them into idolatrous worship, and that of the very worst sort.

And also hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thyself.] This seems 14 Behold, with a great plague will the Lord smite thy people, and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods:

15 And thou shalt have great sickness by disease of thy bowels, until thy bowels fall out by reason of the sickness day by day.

16 ¶ Moreover, the Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians, that were near the Ethiopians:

17 And they came up into Judah, and brake into it, and carried away all the substance that to signify that they were pious persons, who abhorred idolatry: and therefore his sin was the more heinous in cutting them off, proceeding from enmity to God as well as to them.

Ver. 14.] There was no calamity that could be thought of (as Vic. Strigelius observes) which did not befall this wicked prince: whose kingdom was destroyed and depopulated by the fiercest nations; his treasures ransacked; his wives carried into captivity; his children slain; and he himself laboured under a sore disease for two years; and when he was dead had not the honour of royal sepulture, such as his ancestors had. All which calamities were threatened in the writing sent him in the name of Elijah, that he might not think they came by chance, but by the special direction of almighty God, as a punishment for his wickedness. But why should his people suffer, who are threatened in the first place to be plagued? the reason was, because their base fear made them comply with him in his idolatry; and besides, he was punished by the loss of them.

Ver. 15. Thou shalt have great sickness by disease of thy bowels.] A dysentery miserably tormented him.

Until thy bowels fall out] For what should he do with bowels, who had no pity and compassion on his own brethren?

By reason of the sickness day by day.] For two years, as it is interpreted ver. 19. For days sometimes signifies a year; and in the Hebrew the words are “days upon days,” that is, one year after another.

Ver. 16. The Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines.] Who invaded him on the west side of his kingdom, as the Arabians did on the east side: who stood in such awe of his father, that they brought him presents (ch. xvii. 11).

And of the Arabians, that were near the Ethiopians.] It should be translated, “that were near to the Cushites.” A people inhabiting the inmost part of Arabia, not far from Nabathæa and Negid, which was then called Cush, in the confines of the territories of Babylon, which was the ancient Cush: by which name Arabia, or some part of it, is to be understood in many places (see xiv. 9; 2 Kings xix. 9). Whence the topaz of Cush must be understood of the topaz of Arabia, not of Ethiopia. In which country, there are no precious stones, as Ludolphus was assured by a priest of Ethiopia, and is confirmed by our merchants (see Dr. Hyde, in his late book De Relig. Veterum Persarum, cap. 1. p. 37, and my annotations on the place above mentioned).

The Hebrew atjad (at hand) is well translated near by us, for so it signifies plainly in other places. And Forsterus, perhaps, hath rightly observed, that the bounds and limits of countries were called jad (i. e. a hand), because a hand was there placed, to denote that there was the end of the territory, which reached no farther.

Ver. 17. They came up into Judah, and brake into it.] For his soldiers were not able to defend it from this irruption on both sides.

was found in the king's house, and his sons also, and his wives; so that there was never a son left him, save Jehoahaz, the youngest of his sons.

18 ¶ And after all this the LORD smote him in his bowels with an incurable disease.

19 And it came to pass, that, in process of time, after the end of two years, his bowels fell

And carried away all the substance that was found in the king's house, and his son's also,] Whom they slew, ch. xxii. 1.

And his wives;] All except Athaliah: who hid herself, it is likely, in some secret place, with her youngest son.

So that there was never a son left him, save Jehoahaz,] Who is also called Ahaziah, ch. xxii. 1, and by the interposition of one letter Azariah, ver. 6.

Ver. 18.] He lived to see all those calamities, which the prophet threatened, come upon him: and then the Word of the Lord, saith the Targum, smote him with a disease, for which there was no remedy.

Ver. 19. So he died of sore diseases.] These words seem to import, that there was a complication of other diseases, together with his dysentery: all which were out by reason of his sickness; so he died of sore diseases: and his people made no burning for him, like the burning of his fathers.

20 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem eight years, and departed without being desired: howbeit they buried him in the city of David, but not in the sepulchres of the kings.

very grievous, and a suitable punishment to his horrid wickedness.

His people made no burning for him,] See upon ch. xvi. 14.

Ver. 20. And departed without being desired.] Some think the meaning is, he was weary of his life, being so full of pain, as to desire to die, rather than live in such misery. But the most natural sense is, that his people did not wish he should live any longer, but were glad his reign was so short: as appeared by their contempt of him, in making no burning for him, nor burying him in the sepulchre of the kings, as it here follows.

They buried him in the city of David, but not in the sepulchres of the kings.] They showed some respect to him, but not such as expressed any esteem for him.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Ahaziah succeeding, reigneth wickedly. 5 In his confederacy with Joram the son of Ahab, he is slain by Jehu. 10 Athaliah, destroying all the seed royal, save Joash, whom Jehoshabeath his aunt hid, usurpeth the kingdom.

1 AND the inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah his youngest son king in his stead: for the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp had slain all the eldest. So Ahaziah, the son of Jehoram king of Judah, reigned.

2 Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign; and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Athaliah the daughter of Omri.

3 He also walked in the ways of the house of Ahab: for his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly.

4 Wherefore he did evil in the sight of the LORD, like the house of Ahab; for they were his

CHAP. XXII.

Ver. 1. The inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah his youngest son king] They declared him king, and set him on his father's throne: but the kingdom was his of right, without the suffrage of the people.

For the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp] Mentioned in the foregoing chapter, ver. 16.

Had slain all the eldest.] This band of men came up with the Arabians, but, it seems, acted by themselves, and killed those in cold blood, whom the Arabians had carried captive (ch. xxi. 17).

Ver. 2. Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem.] Many ways there are to reconcile this with 2 Kings viii. 26, where it is said he was two-and-twenty years old when he began to reign (see my annotations on that place). The shortest and plainest way is to acknowledge an error in the copyist or transcriber: for some Greek copies have here twenty-two years old; and so it is in the Syriac and Arabic translations: and our great primate Usher found it so, in a copy which he procured, at great charge, from that of the patriarch of Antioch. Piscator also acknowledges, there is no other way, that he knew, to solve this doubt.

His mother's name also was Athaliah the daughter of Omri.] His grand-daughter, for she was Ahab's daughter (ch. xxi. 6; and see 2 Kings viii. 26).

Ver. 3.] She had the greater power over him, because she had saved him, together with herself, when the other wives and children of Jehoram were carried away captive. And she is said to have advised him "to do wickedly," because she led him into a worse idolatry than that of Jeroboam's. Which is called "the way of the house of Ahab;" not because they were the first inventors of it, but the chief establishers of it in these parts. It did not consist merely in the worship of God by an image, which was the way of Jeroboam, but the worship of other gods besides the God of Israel: viz. Baal-gods, or Baalim. Supposing either by these to have easier access to the sovereign God the Lord of hosts; or that these they might resort unto at all times, and for all matters, as being nearer at hand, and not of so high a dignity. Whereas Jehovah, the God of Israel, Most High, either managed not smaller matters, or might not be troubled with them. For such was the conceit of the heathen, that the souls of great men after death had the honour to be agents between the supreme God and men, as being of a middle nature between them; which the Greeks called demons, and the scriptures call Baalim (see Mr. Mede, book i. discourse xliii. 243).

Ver. 4.] His father was so bad, that there was no need any other should endeavour to seduce him, while counsellors, after the death of his father, to his destruction.

5 ¶ He walked also after their counsel, and went with Jehoram, the son of Ahab, king of Israel, to war against Hazael king of Syria at Ramoth-gilead: and the Syrians smote Joram.

6 And he returned to be healed in Jezreel, because of the wounds which were given him at Ramah, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria. And Azariah, the son of Jehoram king of Judah, went down to see Jehoram, the son of Ahab, at Jezreel, because he was sick.

7 And the destruction of Ahaziah was of God, by coming to Joram; for when he was come, he went out with Jehoram against Jehu, the son of Nimshi, whom the LORD had anointed to cut off the house of Ahab.

8 And it came to pass, that when Jehu was executing judgment upon the house of Ahab, and found the princes of Judah, and the sons of the brethren of Ahaziah, that ministered to Ahaziah, he slew them.

he lived: but when he was dead, his mother's kindred thought it necessary to confirm him in his idolatry.

Ver. 5. He walked also after their counsel.] In other matters as well as in religion.

And went with Jehoram, the son of Ahab, king of Israel, to war against Hazael king of Syria.] Though he would not imitate his grandfather in that which was good in him, yet he followed his bad example; in joining with Ahab's son, as Jehoshaphat had with Ahab, in the like war.

Ver. 6.] These two verses have been explained in 2 Kings viii. 28, 29.

Ver. 7.] See how this was done in 2 Kings ix. 21, 27, and what I have noted there.

Ver. 8.] As they were going to Samaria (see 2 Kings x. 13, 14).

Ver. 9.] The story of his death is related here a little more particularly than in the book of the Kings (see what I have noted there concerning the whole, 2 Kings ix. 27, 28).

Ver. 10.] See 2 Kings xi. 1.

9 And he sought Ahaziah: and they caught him, (for he was hid in Samaria,) and brought him to Jehu: and when they had slain him, they buried him: Because, said they, he is the son of Jehoshaphat, who sought the LORD with all his heart. So the house of Ahaziah had no power to keep still the kingdom.

10 ¶ But when Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah, saw that her son was dead, she arose, and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah.

11 But Jehoshabeath, the daughter of the king, took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons that were slain, and put him and his nurse in a bed-chamber. So Jehoshabeath, the daughter of king Jehoram, the wife of Jehoiada the priest, (for she was the sister of Ahaziah,) hid him from Athaliah, so that she slew him not.

12 And he was with them hid in the house of God six years: and Athaliah reigned over the land.

Ver. 11. But Jehoshabeath, the daughter of the king,] i. e. Of the former king, Jehoram.

Took Joash the son of Ahaziah, &c.] See concerning this my annotations upon 2 Kings xi. 2.

So Jehoshabeath, the daughter of king Jehoram, the wife of Jehoiada the priest, (for she was the sister of Ahaziah.)] She was the sister of Ahaziah by the father's side, though not by the mother's: for Jehoram had many wives, as we read in the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 12.] See in the place above named what I have noted about the place wherein he was hid in the house of God: which the Targum here fancies was in the very holy of holies; into which none but the high-priest might enter, and that but once a year. But if this should pass for truth, we must not understand it of the most holy place itself, but of some chamber over it, as Beckius there observes, which will not justify this exposition; for, as I have observed before, there was no entrance into the room over it; nor is there any ground to think there was any building over it.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Jehoiada, having set things in order, maketh Joash king. 12 Athaliah is slain. 16 Jehoiada restoreth the worship of God.

1 AND in the seventh year Jehoiada strengthened himself, and took the captains of hundreds, Azariah the son of Jeroham, and Ishmael the son of Jehohanan, and Azariah the son of Obed, and Maaseiah the son of Adaiah, and Elishaphat the son of Zichri, into covenant with him.

CHAP. XXIII.

Ver. 1.] It is not to be supposed that he took all the captains of hundreds that were in the nation into confederacy with him: but such whom he could depend upon, whose names are here mentioned.

Ver. 2. They went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah.] These captains went about, and communicated the design to the Levites, as men that might be trusted with it.

And the chief of the fathers of Israel, Some of

2 And they went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah, and the chief of the fathers of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem.

3 And all the congregation made a covenant with the king in the house of God. And he said which were under the government of the king of Judah; and others, perhaps, were known to be well affected to religion, and so were invited to give their assistance. But it is most likely that Judah is here called Israel (as in several other places), the principal men of authority of which were acquainted with Jehoiada's intentions.

They came to Jerusalem.] To settle their resolution with Jehoiada.

Ver. 3.] When all the forenamed persons were assembled at the temple, the young king was pre-unto them, Behold, the king's son shall reign, as the LORD hath said of the sons of David.

4 This is the thing that ye shall do; A third part of you entering on the sabbath, of the priests and of the Levites, shall be porters of the doors;

5 And a third part shall be at the king's house; and a third part at the gate of the foundation: and all the people shall be in the courts of the house of the LORD.

6 But let none come into the house of the LORD, save the priests, and they that minister of the Levites; they shall go in, for they are holy: but all the people shall keep the watch of the LORD.

7 And the Levites shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand; and whosoever else cometh into the house, he shall be put to death; but be ye with the king when he cometh in, and when he goeth out.

8 So the Levites, and all Judah, did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest had commanded, and took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that were to go out on the sabbath: for Jehoiada the priest dismissed not the courses.

9 Moreover, Jehoiada the priest delivered to the captains of hundreds spears, and bucklers, and shields, that had been king David's, which were in the house of God.

10 And he set all the people, every man having his weapon in his hand, from the right side of the temple to the left side of the temple, along by the altar and the temple, by the king round about.

duced, and they all swore to be faithful to him. See 2 Kings xi. 4, where, in the following verses, most of this chapter had been explained already.

Ver. 4, 5.] See 2 Kings xi. 5—7, where this is delivered a little more largely.

Ver. 6. But let none come into the house of the Lord, save the priests, and they that minister of the Levites; Who were then in waiting in their course.

They shall go in, for they are holy: They were consecrated to the service of God, and were bound to attend there.

But all the people shall keep the watch of the Lord. That is, of the "house of the Lord," as was said before, ver. 5.

Ver. 7.] It appears by 2 Kings xi. 8, that part of the Levites were assigned to be the king's guard, which did not belong to their office (which was to guard the temple, and minister there); but upon this extraordinary occasion they were thus employed, as men upon whose fidelity Jehoiada might rely.

Ver. 8.] This is more distinctly set down in 2 Kings xi. 7, to which I refer the reader.

Ver. 9.] These seem to have been hung up as trophies in the house of God, after David's victories (see there, ver. 10).

Ver. 10.] See there, ver. 11.

Ver. 11. Then they brought out the king's son, and put upon him the crown,—and made him king. And Jehoiada and his sons anointed him. The same is said in 2 Kings xi. 12, only one thing is here added, that he was anointed by "Jehoiada and his sons." Among whom Zacharias was one, whom the king most basely requited. The Targum here hath a long 11 Then they brought out the king's son, and put upon him the crown, and gave him the testimony, and made him king: and Jehoiada and his sons anointed him, and said, God save the king.

12 ¶ Now when Athaliah heard the noise of the people running and praising the king, she came to the people into the house of the LORD.

13 And she looked, and, behold, the king stood at his pillar at the entering in, and the princes and the trumpets by the king: and all the people of the land rejoiced, and sounded with trumpets; also the singers with instruments of musick, and such as taught to sing praise. Then Athaliah rent her clothes, and said, Treason, Treason!

14 Then Jehoiada the priest brought out the captains of hundreds that were set over the host, and said unto them, Have her forth of the ranges: and whoso followeth her, let him be slain with the sword. For the priest said, Slay her not in the house of the LORD.

15 So they laid hands on her: and when she was come to the entering of the horse gate, by the king's house, they slew her there.

16 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between him, and between all the people, and between the king, that they should be the LORD's people.

17 Then all the people went to the house of Baal, and brake it down, and brake his altars and his images in pieces, and slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars.

18 Also Jehoiada appointed the offices of the house of the LORD by the hand of the priests the Levites, whom David had distributed in the house fable, that this was the crown taken from the head of the king of Ammon, wherein was a magnet, &c.

And said, God save the king. They said this with clapping their hands, as we read in the book of the Kings.

Ver. 12.] They ran from place to place proclaiming the king, and praising God, for setting him upon the throne. This is more briefly related in 2 Kings xi. 13.

Ver. 13.] In this verse something is added concerning their expressions of joy, with instruments of music, &c. otherwise it is the same with 2 Kings xi. 14.

Ver. 14.] See 2 Kings xi. 15, where this is expressed more plainly.

Ver. 15.] See 2 Kings xi. 16. For no doubt an usurper may be slain, by those who have the supreme power and authority: whether it be in a king, or the senate, or the people, as Grotius speaks. To which he adds, the tutors of young kings who are their pupils, such as Jehoiada, lib. i. De Jure Belli et Pacis, cap. 4, sect. 8, where he very wisely subjoins, that he cannot allow any private man to have a right to kill an usurper, sect. 19. Such a one Athaliah was, for she had no right to reign, but invaded the throne, by a tyrannical force, as Schickard calls it (cap. 1, Theor. 3, De Jure Regio).

Ver. 16.] I have explained this in 2 Kings xi. 17, where it is expressly said this covenant was made between the Lord, and the people, and the king (see there). Unto which I may here add, that there is no such difference between these two verses as may be imagined. For Jehoiada the priest sustaining the person of God, the covenant was made with God, not of the LORD, to offer the burnt-offerings of the LORD, as it is written in the law of Moses, with rejoicing and with singing, as it was ordained by David.

19 And he set the porters at the gates of the house of the LORD, that none which was unclean in any thing should enter in.

20 And he took the captains of hundreds, and with Jehoiada, who only represented God, to whom they promised obedience.

Ver. 17.] See 2 Kings xi. 18.

Ver. 18.] What is set down briefly, at the end of that eighteenth verse, that the "priests appointed officers over the house of the Lord," is here set down more largely in this verse, and in the next. The first words of which sound thus in the Hebrew, "he put the offices, the offices of the house of the Lord, in the hand of the priests and Levites." Who, perhaps, had been put out of their offices by the former wicked kings, or by Athaliah, and now were restored by Jehoiada, according to the regulations made by David.

Ver. 19.] These also had been constituted by David (see 1 Chron. xxvi. 1, &c.). For there is no earthly king, as Maimonides observes, whose palace is not encompassed with strong guards: and therefore much more fit was it that the dwelling-place of God, the King of kings, should be surrounded by his ministers, priests, and Levites, who should carefully watch that nothing did pollute it.

21 And all the people of the land rejoiced: and the city was quiet, after that they had slain Athaliah with the sword.

Ver. 20.] He would have those who had begun this work see it accomplished: and therefore they all accompanied the king from the temple to his palace, and saw him set on the throne of his father (see 2 Kings xi. 19), whereby he took possession of the kingdom, to which he had been anointed in the temple.

Ver. 21.] See this explained in 2 Kings xi. 20.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Joash reigneth well all the days of Jehoiada. 4 He giveth order for the repair of the temple. 15 Jehoiada's death and honourable burial. 17 Joash, falling to idolatry, slayeth Zechariah the son of Jehoiada. 23 Joash is spoiled by the Syrians, and slain by Zabad and Jehoabad. 27 Amaziah succeedeth him.

1 JOASH was seven years old when he began to reign; and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Zibiah of Beersheba.

2 And Joash did that which was right in the sight of the LORD all the days of Jehoiada the priest.

3 And Jehoiada took for him two wives; and he begat sons and daughters.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Joash was minded to repair the house of the LORD.

5 And he gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said to them, Go out unto the cities of Judah, and gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter. Howbeit the Levites hastened it not.

6 And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, and said unto him, Why hast thou not required of the Levites to bring in, out of Judah and out of Jerusalem, the collection, according to the commandment of Moses the servant of the LORD, and of the congregation of Israel, for the tabernacle of witness?

7 For the sons of Athaliah, that wicked woman, had broken up the house of God; and also

CHAP. XXIV.

Ver. 1, 2.] These two verses are the same with those 2 Kings xii. 1, 2.

Ver. 3.] He did not take these two wives for the king, but for himself: which was contrary to the constant tradition of the Jews, that the high-priest was to be so pure as to have but one wife at a time: which they endeavour to prove by scripture, from Lev. xxi. 13, 14. The Gemara Babylonica reports this, and Maimonides asserts it (see Braunius in his Selecta Sacra, lib. iii. cap. 2). Therefore Jehoiada is supposed to have had two wives before he was high-priest; or rather, one being dead, he took another. Or, as the Talmudists will have it, after he had divorced one he married another, as Mr. Selden observes, lib. iii. Uxor. Hebr. cap. 19. But, after all, it is not certain that Jehoiada was high-priest, for he is every where called "Jehoiada the priest;" and but once only (ver. 6), "the chief;" which doth not necessarily imply that he was the high-priest, but only a great man, because of his relation to the royal family; or because he was the chief head of the twenty-four families of the priests. But he seems to be distinguished from the high-priest in 2 Kings xii. 9, 10, and is not mentioned either in Ezra vii. or 1 Chron. vi.

Ver. 4.] As is related something more particularly in 2 Kings xii. 4, &c.

Ver. 5. Gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year. That something might be done every year, till the temple was put into good repair. What money this was that they were to collect, we are informed 2 Kings xii. 4.

See that ye hasten the matter. Howbeit the Levites hastened it not.] Things were in so bad a condition, that it required the work should be begun with speed: yet such was the negligence of the Levites, and the backwardness, perhaps, of the people to part with their money, that in the twenty-third of this king's reign nothing was done, as we are informed in 2 Kings xii. 6.

Ver. 6.] Such oblations as were freely made in Moses's time for the building of the tabernacle (see Exod. xxxv. 5). There was also, besides this voluntary oblation, a tax set upon them (see Exod. xxx. 12, 13). It is called the "tabernacle of witness," because here were kept the two tables in the ark, which all the dedicated things of the house of the LORD did they bestow upon Baalim.

8 And at the king's commandment they made a chest, and set it without at the gate of the house of the LORD.

9 And they made a proclamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the LORD the collection that Moses the servant of God laid upon Israel in the wilderness.

10 And all the princes and all the people rejoiced, and brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end.

11 Now it came to pass, that at what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, and when they saw that there was much money, the king's scribe and the high priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it to his place again. Thus they did day by day, and gathered money in abundance.

12 And the king and Jehoiada gave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the LORD, and hired masons and carpenters to repair the house of the LORD, and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the LORD.

13 So the workmen wrought, and the work was perfected by them, and they set the house of God in his state, and strengthened it.

14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, whereof were made vessels for the house of the LORD, even vessels to minister, and to offer withal, and spoons, and vessels of gold and silver: and they offered burnt-offerings in the house of the LORD continually all the days of Jehoiada.

15 ¶ But Jehoiada waxed old, and was full of days when he died; a hundred and thirty years old was he when he died.

16 And they buried him in the city of David among the kings, because he had done good in Israel, both toward God, and toward his house.

17 Now after the death of Jehoiada came the princes of Judah and made obeisance to the king: then the king hearkened unto them.

18 And they left the house of the LORD God witnessed the covenant between God and them (see upon Exod. xxv. 16).

Ver. 7. For the sons of Athaliah, that wicked woman, had broken up the house of God; That is, Ahaziah, and the sons of his brethren, mentioned ch. xxii. 8. For his brethren themselves were carried captive before their father died (ch. xxi. 17), or, as Abarbinel expounds it, she being a wicked woman, played the whore with another man, by whom she had several bastards, who committed this impiety: therefore they are called the sons of Athaliah, their father being unknown.

Also all the dedicated things] Which should have been employed in the reparation of it.

Did they bestow upon Baalim.] Gave them either to adorn the temples of those false gods, or to promote their worship.

Ver. 8.] This is more largely related in 2 Kings xii. 9 (see there).

Ver. 9.] One like to that, according as every man should freely offer.

Ver. 10. And all the princes and all the people rejoiced, and brought in, and cast into the chest,] The great men set so good an example to the people, that they cheerfully joined with them in this good work.

Until they had made an end.] Till every body had given something, or all that had a mind had offered, and they saw no more would be given: or, till the temple was repaired, and the work finished.

Ver. 11. At what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites,] Who brought it from the gate of the house of the Lord (ver. 8), that the king's officers might examine what the contribution amounted unto.

The king's scribe and the high priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it to his place again.] By the hands of the Levites, who brought it thither.

Thus they did day by day.] This is related a little more largely than in 2 Kings xii. 10 (see what I have noted there).

Ver. 12.] See 2 Kings xii. 11—13, &c. where this is more distinctly related. Only here we are told who put the money into the hands of those that were to oversee the work, viz. the king and Jehoiada, which is not there mentioned.

Ver. 13.] For the men were so honest, that there was no time spent in calling them to an account, how they laid out the money; which they did very faithfully (2 Kings xii. 15).

Ver. 14.] It is likely Athaliah and her wicked sons had embezzled the holy vessels, and employed them to the service of Baalim. But till the temple was completely repaired, none of the money was converted to this other pious use, of purchasing vessels for the sanctuary, as we are distinctly told in 2 Kings xii. 13.

Ver. 15.] He seems to have lived long after this work was finished, being well stricken in years when he undertook it. Many such examples of long-lived men are collected by primate Usher, in his Chronologia Sacra, par. i. cap. 12, p. 70.

Ver. 16. They buried him in the city of David] This shows a good disposition in the king and the people at this time, though they soon changed after he was dead and buried.

Because he had done good in Israel,] The good he had done was in Judah, which is often in this history called Israel: because they were the principal tribe among the Israelites, and were, indeed, the true Israel of God, while they continued to worship him sincerely.

Both toward God, and toward his house.] He had been an instrument of restoring the divine worship, which now they were sensible was a great blessing: and in repairing the decays which were in the temple, and furnishing it with vessels for the divine service.

Ver. 17. Now after the death of Jehoiada] In his lifetime they durst not attempt this, for though he was old and feeble he retained great authority.

Came the princes of Judah and made obeisance to the king.] Some of the great men, who in their hearts, continued Baalites, desired to be admitted into the king's presence, and made their addresses with great reverence, pretending the greatest devotion to his service. And so falling into discourse with him concerning the state of religion, and other affairs, desired, at last, they might have leave to worship Baal, which Jehoiada had destroyed.

Then the king hearkened unto them.] To this dangerous discourse he listened and consented to them:

of their fathers, and served groves and idols: and wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their trespass.

19 Yet he sent prophets to them, to bring them again unto the LORD; and they testified against them: but they would not give ear.

20 And the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus saith God, Why transgress ye the commandments of the LORD, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the LORD, he hath also forsaken you.

for fair words and flatteries easily deceive princes, as Grotius here observes: and they wanted not specious reasons to persuade the king not to be so strict, as to permit no God to be worshipped but only one. Some of the Jews fancy, that they flattered him with a conceit, that he himself was worthy of divine honour, being wonderfully preserved six years in the house of God; as the people flattered Herod after his oration, saying, "It is the voice of a god, not of a man."

Ver. 18. They left the house of the Lord God of their fathers, and served groves and idols: Though at the first, it is likely, these great men only worshipped Baal themselves: yet they had their emissaries who persuaded the people to join with them. So that the house of God was deserted, and they worshipped idols in the groves.

And wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their trespass.] Which God punished by the hand of Hazael king of Syria (see 2 Kings xii. 17, 18).

Ver. 19.] God's goodness was wonderful in sending his messengers to reduce such a base people: whose wickedness was no less wonderful, in that they hearkened to the great men among them rather than to the prophets of Almighty God.

Ver. 20. And the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people.] He had a divine monition to speak publicly to the people and reprove them: which that he might do and be heard of all, he got up into a high place where they might all both see and hear him. L'Empereur, in his Annotations upon Codex Middoth, p. 80, thinks, he got up into some desk or pulpit in the court of the priests.

Thus saith God, Why transgress ye the commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper?] This he spake with great vehemence, and, it is likely, enlarged upon this subject so long, that it raised their indignation. It is very remarkable, that though he spake by the spirit of prophecy, yet he only applied the general prediction of Moses, Deut. xxxi. 16, unto the present time: that they might all learn to have a greater regard to Moses, and continually meditate in his law: unto which if they had attended, they would have easily discerned who were true prophets and who were false.

Ver. 21. They conspired against him, and stoned him with stones at the commandment of the king,] Who, it is likely, was present when he reproved them; or, being told what he said, sent an order to kill him. Which shows their error, who think Joash was not an idolater himself, but only connived at the great men's idolatry, and gave them liberty to exercise it. Josephus rightly accuses him of this sin, of which, if he had not been guilty, he would not, sure, have slain the Lord's prophets who reproved it.

In the court of the house of the Lord.] This shows that they were there assembled; of which he took the advantage to put them in mind of their duty: and, if we believe the Jews, it was upon the 21 And they conspired against him, and stoned him with stones, at the commandment of the king, in the court of the house of the LORD.

22 Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son: and when he died, he said, The LORD look upon it, and require it.

23 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of the year, that the host of Syria came up against him: and they came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed all the princes of the people from among the people, and sent all the spoil of them unto the king of Damascus.

great day of expiation. For, as Bochartus observes (Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 1). Plebeius furor nullos habet limites, maxime cum religionis velum illi obtenditur; "popular fury hath no bounds, especially when the veil of religion is thrown over it."

Ver. 22. Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son:] This sin, besides the contempt of God's prophet, and of the place where he was murdered, had a horrid ingratitude in it: he being the son of him to whom the king owed his life and his kingdom. Who assisted his father at his unction, as some think, because it is said, ch. xxiii. 11, "Jehoiada and his sons anointed him." But if Jehoiada was high-priest, this son is not reckoned among the successors of Aaron in 1 Chron. vi. And therefore it is likely he was a younger son of Jehoiada: for if he had been his eldest, he would have had sufficient authority, without the spirit of prophecy, to reprove Joash for his idolatry: as Azariah resisted Uzziah when he would have usurped his office. Ludovicius Capellus therefore thinks it probable, that his brother the high-priest conniving at Joash's apostacy, this younger brother was inspired by God to reprove it. Which boldness Joash and his courtiers thought they might punish with some colour, by alleging, that he was not moved by God to it, but by his juvenile heat and rashness, which they stirred up the people to chastise (see Chronol. Sacra, p. 285).

When he died, he said, The Lord look upon it, and require it.] And so he did, both by external wars (ver. 23), and by a conspiracy against him (ver. 25). It is not to be thought, that he died with a spirit of revenge; but by the spirit of prophecy foretold God would punish them for their hard usage of him. Thus the apostle, 1 Tim. iv. 14, speaks of Alexander the coppersmith, who had greatly opposed him, "The Lord reward him according to his work:" which may be understood as a sentence pronounced against him.

The Jews tell a strange story in the Gemara Sanhedrin, cap. 11, how Nebuzar-adan, where he burnt the temple, saw blood bubbling up in a certain place; and inquiring into the matter he understood, that a priest and prophet of the Lord had been slain there, because he foretold their destruction. Whereupon he killed all the doctors of the law, but still the blood was not at rest: then all the scholars in their schools, but still it was not quiet: then all the priests, and at last many thousands of the people, but still it continued to bubble. So that he said, Zechariah, Zechariah, wouldst thou have me to destroy all the nation? and then it rested (sect. 24). In other books they say, there were seven transgressions upon this day, in which they killed a priest, a prophet, a judge, shed innocent blood, polluted the court of the Lord's house, and the sabbath, and the day of expiation.

Ver. 23. At the end of the year, that the host of Syria came up against him:] God was very speedy 24 For the army of the Syrians came with a small company of men, and the Lord delivered a very great host into their hand, because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers: so they executed judgment against Joash.

25 And when they were departed from him (for they left him in great diseases,) his own servants conspired against him, for the blood of the sons of Jehoiada the priest, and slew him on his bed, and he died: and they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings.

26 And these are they that conspired against him; Zabad the son of Shimeath an Ammonitess, and Jehozabad the son of Shimriah a Moabitess.

27 ¶ Now concerning his sons, and the greatness of the burdens laid upon him, and the repairing of the house of God, behold, they are written in the story of the book of the kings. And Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

in punishing this, and the rest of the wickedness they had committed.

They came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed all the princes of the people, from among the people,] Who had advised king Joash to restore the worship of Baal. This was a distinct war from that mentioned 2 Kings xii. 17, 18. Here Hazael is not said to have come up, but only his army, and that a small party. There it is not said, he took Jerusalem; but here he destroyed all the princes. There it is said, Joash diverted Hazael from him by presents; here, that they spoiled the city, and sent the prey to Syria. We are therefore thus to understand the whole: that when they did evil in the sight of the Lord, he sent Hazael to afflict them, who, we read in the book of Kings, took Gath, and set his face, as if he meant to set upon Jerusalem: whereupon Joash took the hallowed things, and thereby procured his departure from them. But in the end of the year Zechariah being murdered, this other war began; which is here related in this book.

And sent all the spoil of them unto the king of Damascus.] Who was not here at this invasion, but contented himself to send a few forces against Judah, as the next words tell us.

Ver. 24. For the army of the Syrians came with a small company of men, and the Lord delivered a very great host into their hand.] This declared the punishment the more remarkably to proceed from the hand of God, who took away their courage, so that with a great host they could not resist a handful of their enemies.

Because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers:] According to the prophecy of Zechariah, ver. 20.

So they executed judgment against Joash.] They left him in a miserable condition: for all punishments are called judgments among the Hebrews.

Ver. 25. For they left him in great diseases.] Many think he was sorely wounded in the battle; which brought him into great diseases. And they increased, it is likely, by the grief and anguish of his mind, to see his country ruined; and by the hatred and contempt into which he was fallen, which encouraged his own servants (as it follows) to conspire against him.

For the blood of the sons of Jehoiada the priest,] This doth not denote he killed more of his sons than one; but, according to the frequent use of this language, the plural number is put for the singular.

And slew him on his bed.] Perhaps they were of his bed-chamber, and so could more easily compass their design. Howsoever, he was so weak and feeble that he could make no resistance, and was so little esteemed, that his guard minded not what became of him. This bed was in his house of Millo, as we read 2 Kings xii. 21, which is said to be in the way to Silla: because there was another house of Millo, from which this is thus distinguished.

And they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings.] The same is said of Ahaz, xxviii. 27. Though the people could not punish wicked kings for their impieties while they lived; yet they set blots upon their memory when they were dead, as Grotius observes, lih. i. De Jure Belli et Pacis, cap. 3, sect. 16, Egregio temperamento, as he speaks, "by a most admirable temperation:" wherewith the sacredness of the supreme power was preserved, and yet kings out of fear of future judgment were kept from altering religion. But it may be doubted whether this was done perpetually: for we find bad kings builded themselves sepulchres (2 Kings xxi. 18, 26).

Ver. 26.] They were mongrel fellows, whose fathers were Jews, but their mothers aliens. For so the manner of this impious people was, to make marriages contrary to the law.

Ver. 27. The greatness of the burdens laid upon him.] Some by burdens understand the sore punishments God inflicted on him, called in scripture "the burden of the Lord:" others, the great tribute laid upon him by the Syrians, which was a heavy burden, and a sore punishment.

Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.] Though the father was not beloved, it did not hinder the succession of his son.

CHAPTER XXV.

1 Amaziah beginneth to reign well. 3 He executeth justice on the traitors. 5 Having hired an army of Israelites against the Edomites, at the word of a prophet he loseth the hundred talents, and dismisseth them. 11 He overthroweth the Edomites. 10, 13 The Israelites, discontented with their dismissal, spoil as they return home. 14 Amaziah, proud of his victory, serveth the gods of Edom, and despiseth the admonitions of the prophet. 17 He provoketh Joash to his overthrow. 25 His reign. 27 He is slain by conspiracy.

1 AMAZIAH was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

CHAP. XXV.

Ver. 1.] See 2 Kings xiv. 1.

Ver. 2.] He followed the right religion, and worshipped God aright, but not with such sincerity as David his father did (2 Kings xiv. 3). See Grotius upon xxvi. 4, where he observes, his son did in fact what the law required; but not with a solid piety.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, but not with a perfect heart.

3 ¶ Now it came to pass, when the kingdom was established to him, that he slew his servants that had killed the king his father:

4 But he slew not their children, but did as it is written in the law in the book of Moses, where the LORD commanded, saying, 'The fathers shall not die for the children, neither shall the children die for the fathers, but every man shall die for his own sin.'

5 ¶ Moreover, Amaziah gathered Judah together, and made them captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, according to the houses of their fathers, throughout all Judah and Benjamin: and he numbered them from twenty years old and above, and found them three hundred thousand choice men, able to go forth to war, that could handle spear and shield.

6 He hired also a hundred thousand mighty men of valour out of Israel for a hundred talents of silver.

7 But there came a man of God to him, saying, O king, let not the army of Israel go with thee;

Ver. 3.] They seem to have been men of some power and interest in the court, whom he durst not meddle with till he was well settled in his authority (see 2 Kings xiv. 5).

Ver. 4.] The very same is observed there, 2 Kings xiv. 6.

Ver. 5.] All that belonged to one family, he put under the command of one leader, whereby they became the more unanimous. Behold here, how their iniquities had diminished their numbers, since the days of Jehoshaphat (i. e. in the space of eighty-two years), for this king could bring but three hundred thousand fighting men into the field, and Jehoshaphat brought near four times as many (see upon ch. xvii. ult.).

Ver. 6.] In two things he showed his heart was not perfect with God (as it is noted ver. 2): for, first he sinned in making a league with the ten tribes, contrary to what the prophet Azariah had declared, ch. xix.: and secondly, he invited them to battle without any provocation; whereas he should have done as the Lord commanded, 1 Kings xii. 24, and left them to end their quarrels among themselves; only repelling them if they had invaded him, but no more.

Ver. 7. But there came a man of God to him,] This was the prophet Amos, father of the prophet Isaiah, if we will believe the Jews, particularly Kimchi upon this place: but this is a foolish tradition, built on a mistake that Amos the prophet was Isaiah's father.

For the Lord is not with Israel, to wit, with all the children of Ephraim.] In the Targum it is, "The Word of the Lord will not help Israel:" who had highly offended him by the idolatry which Jeroboam of the tribe of Ephraim introduced.

Ver. 8.] If he had a settled resolution not to desist, the prophet bade him go and try, whether with the greatest power he could muster up he should be able to prevail against the Lord, who could either help a few, or destroy a great many.

Ver. 9. What shall we do for the hundred talents which I have given to the army of Israel?] That which steeled with him was, the money he was likely to lose; for they would not return that, if he dismissed them from his army.

for the LORD is not with Israel, to wit, with all the children of Ephraim.

8 But if thou wilt go, do it, be strong for the battle; God shall make thee fall before the enemy: for God hath power to help, and to cast down.

9 And Amaziah said to the man of God, But what shall we do for the hundred talents which I have given to the army of Israel? And the man of God answered, The LORD is able to give thee much more than this.

10 Then Amaziah separated them, to wit, the army that was come to him out of Ephraim, to go home again: wherefore their anger was greatly kindled against Judah, and they returned home in great anger.

11 ¶ And Amaziah strengthened himself, and led forth his people, and went to the valley of Salt, and smote of the children of Seir ten thousand.

12 And other ten thousand left alive did the children of Judah carry away captive, and brought them unto the top of the rock, and cast them down from the top of the rock, that they all were broken in pieces.

The Lord is able to give thee much more than this.] This objection was presently answered, if he would but obey God, and trust in his goodness, who was able to give his faithful servants more than that came to: and, as Grotius notes, he is rich enough who is impoverished for God's sake.

Ver. 10. Then Amaziah separated them,—to go home again:] This argued some goodness in him, though his heart was not perfect with God.

Wherefore their anger was greatly kindled against Judah,] Because they looked upon them as enemies of God, and durst not employ them. St. Jerome thinks they carried idols along with them.

Ver. 11. Amaziah strengthened himself,] With his own men only.

Smote of the children of Seir] Who dwelt in mount Seir.

Ten thousand.] See 2 Kings xiv. 7, where this story is told more briefly: for what follows in the next verse is there omitted.

Ver. 12.] This was a very ancient punishment among the Romans, as we learn from Livy, Plutarch, Dionysius Halicarnassus, and others; and was used among other nations, as Mr. Selden shows, lib. i. De Synedriis, cap. 17, where he observes an illustrious example of this among the Israelites; who threw Jezebel down upon the stones out of the windows, by the command of Jehu.

Ver. 13. But the soldiers of the army which Amaziah sent back, that they should not go with him to battle,] The men of Ephraim, whom the prophet forbade him to join withal; and were therefore sent home.

Fell upon the cities of Judah,] They went away from Amaziah in a great rage (ver. 10), which instigated them to revenge the affront put upon them in this manner; taking hold of the fair opportunity which presented itself, by his war with Edom; which had drained his country of all the forces that should have opposed them.

And smote three thousand of them, and took much spoil.] Thus Amaziah was punished for having entered into a society with idolaters, though at the prophet's reproof he broke it off: and God, it is not unlikely, also suffered this calamity to fall upon him, 13 ¶ But the soldiers of the army which Amaziah sent back, that they should not go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from Samaria even unto Beth-horon, and smote three thousand of them, and took much spoil.

14 ¶ Now it came to pass, after that Amaziah was come from the slaughter of the Edomites, that he brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to be his gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burned incense unto them.

15 Wherefore the anger of the LORD was kindled against Amaziah, and he sent unto him a prophet, which said unto him, Why hast thou sought after the gods of the people which could not deliver their own people out of thine hand?

16 And it came to pass, as he talked with him, that the king said unto him, Art thou made of the king's counsel? forbear; why shouldst thou be smitten? Then the prophet forbore, and said, I know that God hath determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened unto my counsel.

17 ¶ Then Amaziah king of Judah took advice, and sent to Joash the son of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu king of Israel, saying, Come, let us see one another in the face.

18 And Joash king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, The thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife:

and there passed by a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trod down the thistle.

19 Thou sayest, Lo, thou hast smitten the Edomites, and thine heart lifteth thee up to boast: abide now at home, why shouldst thou meddle to thine hurt, that thou shouldst fall, even thou, and Judah with thee?

20 But Amaziah would not hear; for it came of God, that he might deliver them into the hand of their enemies, because they sought after the gods of Edom.

21 So Joash the king of Israel went up, and they saw one another in the face, both he and Amaziah king of Judah, at Beth-shemesh, which belongeth to Judah.

22 And Judah was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled every man to his tent.

23 And Joash the king of Israel took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, at Beth-shemesh, and brought him to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, from the gate of Ephraim to the corner gate, four hundred cubits.

24 And he took all the gold and the silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of God with Obed-edom, and the treasures of the king's house, the hostages also, and returned to Samaria.

25 ¶ And Amaziah, the son of Joash king of Judah, lived after the death of Joash, son of Jehoahaz king of Israel, fifteen years.

because he used his victory over the Edomites with too much cruelty.

Ver. 14. He brought the gods of the children of Seir,] Which he should have burnt with fire.

And set them up to be his gods, and bowed down himself before them,] A most prodigious sottishness, as the prophet shows him in the next verse. Ahaz was wiser (though very wicked), who sacrificed to the gods of those people who had overcome him: hoping they might be persuaded to help him also (xxviii. 23). Or perhaps Amaziah worshipped them for fear they should owe him a spite, and contrive some mischief against him, in revenge of what he had done against the Edomites (see Dr. Jackson, in his book of the Original of Belief, ch. 17, par. 5, 10).

Ver. 15.] Nothing need be said more to convince him of his monstrous stupidity, of which no account could be given. Unless we suppose them to have been such beautiful images, that he looked upon them till he fell in love with them, and doted upon them, so that he was bewitched into a senseless idolatry. Fabius Maximus (as Strigelius here notes) was much wiser; who, having conquered Tarentum, and being asked what should be done with their gods, Deos iratos Tarentinis relinqui jussit, "bade them leave their gods that were angry with the Tarentines." For what vanity is it (as he adds) to hope for any safety from those that cannot preserve themselves! but such is the madness of idolaters, that it is reproved by sober heathens.

Ver. 16. Art thou made of the king's counsel?] Yes, undoubtedly, for he was made so by God; and did nothing but what belonged to his office (Jer. i. 10). But Amaziah thought not of this; but scornfully asked him, who made him a counsellor of state?

Forbear; why shouldst thou be smitten?] He bids him meddle no more in this matter, lest he should be provoked to deal with him as they did with Zechariah (xxiv. 21).

Then the prophet forbore, and said, I know that God hath determined to destroy thee,] He forbore to advise or reprove him any further, but only denounced the sentence God had passed upon him for this contempt of him, and his other sins; which came to pass, ver. 20, 27.

Ver. 17. Then Amaziah king of Judah took advice,] He would not be advised by the prophet, but consulted those that led him to his destruction.

And sent to Joash, the son of Jehoahaz,] He was advised, it seems, without first desiring satisfaction for the damage done him (ver. 12), in which perhaps Joash had no hand, to make war upon him, and provoke him to battle (see 2 Kings xiv. 8, &c. where this and the following verses are explained).

Ver. 18, 19.] See this explained there, 2 Kings xiv. 9, 10.

Ver. 20.] God blinds the minds of those whom he intends to destroy for their sins.

Ver. 21.] For there was another Beth-shemesh in the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. xix. 38; Judg. i. 33).

Ver. 22.] These two verses are in the same words, 2 Kings xiv. 11, 12.

Ver. 23.] See there, ver. 13.

Ver. 24. He took—all the vessels that were found in the house of God with Obed-edom,] The Targum here explains it, that Obed-edom consecrated these vessels to God's service, when David brought the ark to his house; and God blessed him for his care in looking after it. But Kimchi judges better, who takes Obed-edom to have been set over these treasures, in the custody of which his son succeeded him.

The hostages also,] These hostages the Targum takes for the sons of the principal men of the city, with whom the generality of the Hebrew interpreters 26 Now the rest of the acts of Amaziah, first and last, behold, are they not written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel!

27 ¶ Now after the time that Amaziah did turn away from following the LORD, they made a con-agree. So Jarchi; the children of Israel did not restore to Amaziah the kingdom of Judah, but upon condition, that he should give him the children of great men for a security of his fidelity, and that he should not rebel against him hereafter.

Ver. 25.] See upon 2 Kings xiv. 17.

Ver. 26.] See there, ver. 18.

Ver. 27.] He turned from God before the death of Joash; therefore this conspiracy was laid a great while before it was discovered; and then he fled to spiry against him in Jerusalem; and he fled to Lachish: but they sent to Lachish after him, and slew him there.

28 And they brought him upon horses, and buried him with his fathers in the city of Judah.

Lachish, where it took effect. Or, as Jacobus Capellus conjectures (in his Hist. Sacra et Exotica), the wars abroad put a stop to this sedition at home; but when they were over, and he returned home, and had a son, then the conspiracy was renewed again, under the specious name of being guardians to the young prince, and taking better care of him than his father was likely to do.

Ver. 28.] That is, in the city of David, as it is explained 1 Kings xiv. 20.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 Uzziah succeeding, and reigning well in the days of Zechariah, prospereth. 16 Waxing proud, he invadeth the priest's office, and is smitten with leprosy. 22 He dieth, and Jotham succeedeth him.

1 THEN all the people of Judah took Uzziah, who was sixteen years old, and made him king in the room of his father Amaziah.

2 He built Eloth, and restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers.

3 Sixteen years old was Uzziah when he began to reign; and he reigned fifty and two years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Jecoliah of Jerusalem.

4 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father Amaziah did.

5 And he sought God in the days of Zechariah, who had understanding in the visions of God: and as long as he sought the LORD, God made him to prosper.

6 And he went forth, and warred against the Philistines, and brake down the wall of Gath, and the wall of Jabneh, and the wall of Ashdod, and built cities about Ashdod, and among the Philistines.

7 And God helped him against the Philistines, and against the Arabians that dwelt in Gurbaal, and the Mehunims.

8 And the Ammonites gave gifts to Uzziah: and his name spread abroad even to the entering in of Egypt; for he strengthened himself exceedingly.

9 Moreover, Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem at the corner gate, and at the valley gate, and at the turning of the wall, and fortified them.

10 Also he built towers in the desert, and

CHAP. XXVI.

Ver. 1. Uzziah,] Who was called also Azariah, 2 Kings xiv. 21; xv. 1.

Who was sixteen years old, and made him king] They made him king when he was sixteen years old; for his father left him an infant of four years old: so that there was an interregnum of twelve years; the kingdom being administered by a viceroy, or by the high-priest and the elders (see Ludovicus Capellus, in his Chronologia Sacra, p. 182).

Ver. 2.] He repaired it, after he had retaken it from the Israelites: this being, I suppose, one of the cities, that the soldiers, whom his father Amaziah dismissed, had taken (2 Kings xiv. 22), and which, while he lived, he could not recover.

Ver. 3, 4.] These two verses are the very same with those 2 Kings xv. 2, 3 (see there).

Ver. 5. He sought God in the days of Zechariah,] He persisted in the true religion, as long as Zechariah lived. By whom is not meant him whose book of prophecies is extant in the Bible, for he lived three hundred years after: nor the son of Jehoiada, who was slain some years ago: but, it is probable, the son of that Zechariah, who was called after his father's name, and was eminent for his divine wisdom.

Who had understanding in the visions of God.] It is not said he was a prophet, but that he was a man very skillful in expounding the ancient prophecies, and giving instruction out of them, as Grotius understands it.

As long as he sought the Lord, God made him to prosper.] Of which he gives instances in the following verses.

Ver. 6.] From this verse unto the fifteenth, this divine writer shows how excellent a prince this was, and how God prospered him, while he continued truly religious. For he was skilled in husbandry as well as in warlike affairs: and was very solicitous for the good of his people. The former of these is mentioned ver. 10, and the other in the rest of the verses: which tell us, how prudently he demolished all the fortifications of his enemies on the frontiers; and provided his own frontiers with works, garrisons, arms, and engines of war.

Ver. 7.] I have noted often before, that these Mehunims were a people in Arabia Deserta. See 1 Chron. iv. 41; 2 Chron. xx. 1; Judg. x. 11, 12, of which this place gives a clear proof.

Ver. 8. The Ammonites gave gifts to Uzziah:] Made him presents, that they might preserve his friendship.

And his name spread abroad, even to the entering in of Egypt; for he strengthened himself exceedingly.] His power grew so very great, that he was formidable, not only to the Philistines in the west, and to the Arabians and others in the east, but to the borders of Egypt in the south.

digged many wells: for he had much cattle, both in the low country and in the plains; husbandmen also, and vine-dressers in the mountains, and in Carmel: for he loved husbandry.

11 Moreover, Uzziah had a host of fighting men, that went out to war by bands, according to the number of their account by the hand of Jeiel the scribe, and Maaseiah the ruler, under the hand of Hananiah, one of the king's captains.

12 The whole number of the chief of the fathers of the mighty men of valour were two thousand and six hundred.

13 And under their hand was an army, three hundred thousand and seven thousand and five hundred, that made war with mighty power, to help the king against the enemy.

14 And Uzziah prepared for them, throughout all the host, shields, and spears, and helmets, and habergeons, and bows, and slings to cast stones.

15 And he made in Jerusalem engines, invented by cunning men, to be on the towers and upon the bulwarks, to shoot arrows and great stones withal: and his name spread far abroad; for he was marvellously helped till he was strong.

16 ¶ But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction: for he transgressed against the LORD his God, and went into the temple of the LORD to burn incense upon the altar of incense.

17 And Azariah the priest went in after him, and with him fourscore priests of the LORD, that were valiant men:

18 And they withstood Uzziah the king, and said unto him, It appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the LORD, but to the priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed: neither shall it be for thine honour from the LORD God.

19 Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censor

Ver. 9.] In his father's time the wall of Jerusalem was broken down four hundred cubits, as we read in the foregoing chapter, ver. 23, which, it is likely, was built again before this time. But Uzziah made it stronger by towers, which he built for its defence. One of which was at that very gate where the breach ended, viz. the corner-gate.

Ver. 10. He built towers in the desert.] To defend the shepherds from the sudden incursions of their enemies; particularly the Arabs, who had formerly broken in upon them (xxi. 16).

Husbandmen also, and vine dressers in the mountains.] Some therefore take the towers forementioned to have been country-houses, where husbandmen dwelt: and where their cattle in hard weather were sheltered; and the fruits of the earth were laid up.

In Carmel.] By this is not meant the famous mount of that name (for that was not in the tribe of Judah), but a very fertile country, as the word Carmel signifies in several places (Isa. xvi. 10; Jer. ii. 7; xlviii. 33).

For he loved husbandry.] As the greatest men (I have often observed) did in ancient times, and followed the plough, and fed cattle themselves (see 1 Kings xix. 19).

Ver. 11. Uzziah had a host of fighting men that went out to war by bands.] They were sent out by parties, several ways, for it appears by what follows they were very numerous.

According to the number of their account by the hand of Jeiel the scribe.] He was the secretary of war (as we now speak), who took an account of the several bands of men that went out, and of the number whereof they consisted.

And Maaseiah the ruler, under the hand of Hananiah.] These two, I suppose, were great officers, who were to oversee Jeiel; that there was no fraud in his account.

Ver. 12.] This is sufficient to show he had a very great army (there being so many principal persons employed to command them); but a particular account is given of them in the next verse.

Ver. 13.] Perhaps these were a standing force, ready to repel their enemies if they invaded them; besides that host, which went forth by bands, to annoy their enemies on all sides (ver. 11): and then he was grown much more powerful than his father (see xxv. 5).

Ver. 14.] All sorts of arms; both defensive and offensive: but here is no mention of swords; with which, I suppose, all the people were always provided.

Ver. 15. He made in Jerusalem engines, invented by cunning men, to be on the towers.] The Targum by these engines understand towers perforated: whereas the text plainly tells us they were engines, out of which they shot arrows and threw stones, from the towers and from the walls. Bochartus thinks the word properly imports, they were contrived for the projection of stones (lib. iii. of his Phaleg. cap. 7, and in his Canaan, lib. i. cap. 35).

His name spread far abroad.] Beyond the entering in of Egypt (ver. 8), unto distant countries.

For he was marvellously helped.] God aided him so wonderfully in all his undertakings, that he feared no enemy (ver. 7).

Ver. 16. But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction.] To the loss of all his authority. How hard is it to bear great prosperity with moderation and humble thankfulness!

For he transgressed against the Lord his God, and went into the temple of the Lord to burn incense upon the altar of incense.] What should tempt him to this folly, it is hard to give an account. Perhaps he had a vain ambition to imitate heathen princes; who in many places executed the priesthood also. And Jacobus Capellus thinks, that which puffed him up with pride was, that he had not only a son, viz. Jotham, but a grandson, Ahaz (ad A. M. 3231).

Ver. 17.] See my annotations on 1 Chron. vi. 10.

Ver. 18. They withstood Uzziah the king.] It is plain by this, that they did not withstand his attempt by force of arms: but by reasons, persuasions, and exhortations. And, perhaps, they surrounded the altar, so that he could not, without offering violence to them, approach it.

It appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the Lord, but to the priests.] They represented to him, that he invaded the office of the priests who were consecrated to this service: which he was not, and therefore ought not to meddle with it.

Go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed.] Had gone too far already, in going into the holy place; thereby he had offended the divine majesty: but they beseech him to proceed no further.

Neither shall it be for thine honour from the Lord God.] They represent to him, that he could get no honour, but lose very much by aspiring to this dignity of the priesthood, which the Lord had placed in other hands.

Ver. 19. Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censor in his hand to burn incense.] Which he would in his hand to burn incense; and while he was wroth with the priests, the leprosy even rose up in his forehead before the priests in the house of the LORD, from beside the incense altar.

20 And Azariah the chief priest, and all the priests, looked upon him, and, behold, he was leprous in his forehead, and they thrust him out from thence; yea, himself hasted also to go out, because the LORD had smitten him.

21 And Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a several house, not lay aside upon their admonition: but fell into a great passion, because he was hindered in that which he designed.

While he was wroth with the priests.] And perhaps, threatening that he would have his will.

The leprosy even rose up in his forehead] Where it could not be concealed, but was apparent to all that were present.

Before the priests in the house of the Lord, from beside the incense altar.] Where they stood to keep him from it.

Ver. 20. Behold, he was leprous in his forehead, and they thrust him out from thence;] There was no need to use force to thrust him out, for he hasted himself, as it follows, to be gone: therefore they only admonished him most earnestly to depart, because the law permitted not a leper to remain in a city, much less to come into the house of God.

Yea, himself hasted also to go out, because the Lord had smitten him.] And he was afraid of a sorer punishment, if he stayed there (see Grotius, De Imperio S. P. circa Sacra, p. 251).

Ver. 21. And Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death.] The punishment was capital for meddling rashly with divine ministrations, as we see from the beginning in the case of Nadab and Abihu (Lev. x. 1, 2, and see Num. iii. 10; xviii. 7). Now being a leper; for he was cut off from the house of the LORD; and Jotham his son was over the king's house, judging the people of the land.

22 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Uzziah, first and last, did, Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz, write.

23 So Uzziah slept with his fathers, and they buried him with his fathers in the field of the burial which belonged to the kings; for they said, He is a leper: and Jotham his son reigned in his stead.

the leprosy was a kind of death, because it separated those who were smitten with it, from the society of men, as if they were dead, and no part of this world.

And dwelt in a several house, being a leper;] In the Hebrew words are, "he dwelt in a house of freedom;" so such places were called, because such as were there were exempt from the common affairs and shut up from the conversation of men: whence such as are laid in their grave, are said to be "free among the dead" (Ps. lxxviii. 5), because removed from all the affairs and conversation of the world (see Dr. Hammond upon that place, annot. c).

Jotham his son was over the king's house.] See 2 Kings xv. 5.

Ver. 22.] This shows, the prophets were wont (as I have before observed) to write the history of their own times. For Isaiah prophesied in the beginning of Uzziah's reign, and, as Abarinel thinks, before Hosea, who lived in the same period of time; and prophesied before Jeremiah and Ezekiel.

Ver. 23. They buried him with his fathers in the field of the burial which belonged to the kings;] This was in the city of David, as we read in 2 Kings xv. 17.

For they said, He is a leper:] Therefore he was not buried in the sepulchre of the kings his predecessors; but had a several burial-place when he was dead, as he had a several house while he lived.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 Jotham reigning well prospereth. 5 He subdueth the Ammonites. 7 His reign. 9 Ahaz succeedeth him.

I JOTHAM was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Jerushah, the daughter of Zadok.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father Uzziah did: howbeit he entered not into the temple of the LORD. And the people did yet corruptly.

3 He built the high gate of the house of the LORD, and on the wall of Ophel he built much.

4 Moreover, he built cities in the mountains of Judah: and in the forests he built castles and towers.

CHAP. XXVII.

Ver. 1, 2.] The very same is said in 2 Kings xv. 33, 34.

Howbeit he entered not into the temple of the Lord.] Some imagine he was so frightened at what befel his father, that he did not so much as go into the court of the temple, or that he did not offer sacrifices in the temple, but in high places. But this doth not well agree with the words foregoing: therefore the meaning rather is, that he imitated his father in all that was good in him; but did not profanely enter into the temple to offer incense, as he did.

The people did yet corruptly.] For they offered incense in high places, 2 Kings xv. 35, and, as some think, committed idolatry.

Ver. 3. He built the high gate of the house of the Lord.] It was built before by Solomon, but he repaired it (2 Kings xv. 35), and, as some think, added a very glorious structure to it.

And on the wall of Ophel he built much.] The Targum translates it, "a palace:" but others understand by ophel a high place, or cliff, where there was a tower. Pellicanus thinks, the meaning is, that he much beautified, as well as repaired, the porch of the Lord's house, which was a hundred and twenty cubits high.

Ver. 4.] That is, he took care to fortify his kingdom strongly on all sides against his enemies.

Ver. 5. He fought also with the king of the Ammonites, and prevailed against them.] This people had been entirely subdued by David, as we read 2 Sam. x. xii. 31, but now it seems they had recovered so much strength, that they invaded the country of Judah; but were overthrown by Jotham.

II. CHRONICLES.

5 ¶ He fought also with the king of the Ammonites, and prevailed against them. And the children of Ammon gave him the same year a hundred talents of silver, and ten thousand measures of wheat, and ten thousand of barley. So much did the children of Ammon pay unto him, both the second year and the third.

6 So Jotham became mighty, because he prepared his ways before the LORD his God.

The children of Ammon gave him the same year a hundred talents of silver, &c.] He made them tributaries to him; and they began the very same year to pay the tribute.

Both the second year, and the third.] Either this was the agreement, that for three years they should make this acknowledgment; or, at the three years' end they grew so strong again, that they refused to continue it longer.

Ver. 6.] Directed his counsels and actions aright, according to the rule of God's word. Solomon Jarchi here observes, that all the kings of Judah had some ill thing laid to their charge, but only Jotham: for David himself sinned grievously in the matter of Uriah; Solomon was drawn away by his wives to countenance idolatry; Rehoboam forsook the law of God; and Abijah walked in his steps; Asa took the treasures of God's house, and sent them to the king of Syria; and likewise put the prophet in the stocks; Jehoshaphat entered into society with the wicked; and so he goes on with the rest. But in Jotham (saith he,) there is no fault found; which is a wonder, when there were so few good people among them: for his integrity was not so great, as the corruption of his 7 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jotham, and all his wars, and his ways, lo, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah.

8 He was five and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem.

9 ¶ And Jotham slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city of David: and Ahaz his son reigned in his stead.

people; who immediately after his death joined with Ahaz in his abominable idolatries.

Ver. 7. Now the rest of the acts of Jotham, and all his wars,] He had wars not only with the Ammonites, but with the Syrians, and with the ten tribes, as may be gathered from 2 Kings xv. 37.

Lo, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah.] The affairs of the kings of Judah are commonly said to be recorded in the chronicles of the kings of Judah: but this king's actions, it seems, were so eminent, that the Israelites also recorded some of them in their books.

Ver. 8.] This was said before, ver. 1, and it is not easy to give an account why it is here repeated. Unless it be true, which Kimchi saith, that Jotham was born the same year that his father was struck with a leprosy; but was not king till he grew up, and was instructed in the government; which was managed during his minority by the princes of the people. But Jacobus Capellus rather thinks he reigned sixteen years by himself alone; and then took his son into society with him, in the government of his kingdom.

Ver. 9.] See 2 Kings xv. 38.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 Ahaz reigning very wickedly is greatly afflicted by the Syrians. 6 Judah being captivated by the Israelites is sent home by the counsel of Oded the prophet. 16 Ahaz sending for aid to Assyria is not helped thereby. 22 In his distress he groweth more idolatrous. 26 He dying, Hezekiah succeedeth him.

1 AHAZ was twenty years old when he began to reign; and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem: but he did not that which was right in the sight of the LORD, like David his father:

2 For he walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, and made also molten images for Baalim.

3 Moreover, he burnt incense in the valley of the son of Hinnom, and burnt his children in the fire, after the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD had cast out before the children of Israel.

4 He sacrificed also, and burnt incense in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 Wherefore the LORD his God delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria; and they smote him, and carried away a great multitude of them captives, and brought them to Damascus; and he was also delivered into the hand of the king of Israel, who smote him with a great slaughter.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Ver. 1.] See 2 Kings xvi. 2, where there are the very same words.

Ver. 2.] He not only worshipped the golden calves (which was the way of the kings of Israel), but many other gods of the nations round about: which are all comprehended under the name of Baalim (see what I have noted upon Judg. ii. 11).

Ver. 3. He burnt incense in the valley of the son of Hinnom,] Where Moloch was worshipped.

And burnt his children in the fire,] Or, made them to pass through the fire: for the words are ambiguous. The Targum here saith, The Word of the Lord snatched Hezekiah out of the fire; because he foresaw three saints would spring from him: and here he tells a long tale of Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, who were thrown into the fiery furnace.

After the abominations of the heathen, whom the Lord had cast out] This was the most detestable idolatry that was practised among the ancient inhabitants of Canaan, as appears from Lev. xviii. 21, xx. 2-4, &c.

Ver. 4.] Not unto God, but unto his idols, whom he worshipped also "on the hills, and under every green tree," as it here follows.

Ver. 5. The Lord his God] The Lord is called "his God," because he was so by the right of his dominion over him, and his kindness to him for his father's sake.

Delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria;] That by this punishment he might return from his 6 ¶ For Pekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judah a hundred and twenty thousand in one day, which were all valiant men; because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers.

7 And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, slew Maaseiah the king's son, and Azrikam the governor of the house, and Elkanah that was next to the king.

8 And the children of Israel carried away captive of their brethren two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters, and took also away much spoil from them, and brought the spoil to Samaria.

9 But a prophet of the Lord was there, whose name was Oded; and he went out before the host that came to Samaria, and said unto them, Behold, because the Lord God of your fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage that reacheth up unto heaven.

10 And now ye purpose to keep under the children of Judah and Jerusalem for bondmen and bondwomen unto you: but are there not with you, even with you, sins against the Lord your God?

evil ways. These two kings, Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah king of Israel, seem to have come upon him together, whereby he was put to some distress.

They smote him.] That is, the Syrians slew many of his people.

And brought them to Damascus.] This was after that invasion mentioned 2 Kings xvi. 5.

Ver. 6.] Who therefore forsook them, and took away their courage, that they could make no resistance; for otherwise, it had not been possible to make so great a slaughter in one day.

Ver. 7.] They seem to have taken Jerusalem (though they did not keep it), and to have slain these great persons. The Targum translates the last words, "the arkapta of the king;" that is, as some interpret it, the captain of his host. But our translation comes nearest to the Hebrew, "second to the king." Who was inferior to the king alone; inasmuch that the LXX. translate it δευτερος, he that immediately followed the king, and succeeded him. His viceroy, as some interpret it.

Ver. 8. The children of Israel carried away captive of their brethren two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters.] This is an argument that they were quite dispirited, and had no heart to defend themselves, being not only slaughtered like sheep, but carried captive by droves.

And brought the spoil to Samaria.] Into their own country, towards Samaria; but they had not yet brought it into the city of Samaria (ver. 13).

Ver. 9. But a prophet of the Lord was there, whose name was Oded.] By this it appears that God continued his prophets among the Israelites, to bring them to repentance, if they would have hearkened to their admonitions.

He went out before the host that came to Samaria.] Bringing their captives and spoil in great triumph thither.

Because the Lord God of your fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand.] He would not have them lifted up with their victory; which was not to be ascribed so much to their valour, as to the anger of God against Judah, who abandoned them to their fury.

11 Now hear me, therefore, and deliver the captives again, which ye have taken captive of your brethren: for the fierce wrath of the Lord is upon you.

12 Then certain of the heads of the children of Ephraim, Azariah the son of Johanan, Berechiah the son of Meshillemoth, and Jehizkiah the son of Shallum, and Amasa the son of Hadlai, stood up against them that came from the war, 13 And said unto them, Ye shall not bring in the captives hither: for whereas we have offended against the Lord already, ye intend to add more to our sins and to our trespass; for our trespass is great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel.

14 So the armed men left the captives and the spoil before the princes and all the congregation.

15 And the men which were expressed by name rose up, and took the captives, and with the spoil clothed all that were naked among them, and arrayed them, and shod them, and gave them to eat and to drink, and anointed them, and carried all the feeble of them upon asses, and brought them to Jericho the city of palm trees, to their brethren: then they returned to Samaria.

And ye have slain them in a rage that reacheth up unto heaven.] That had no measure, and cried to heaven for vengeance upon the Israelites.

Ver. 10. And now ye purpose to keep under the children of Judah and Jerusalem] This seems to denote that they had sacked Jerusalem.

For bondmen and bondwomen unto you:] To use them as slaves of another nation, of whom they might make money, by selling them to their neighbour, or make them drudges to serve them for nought.

But are there not with you,—sins against the Lord your God?] He bids them consider that they who thought themselves God's favourites because he had made them so victorious, had sins enough to answer for: for which if he punished them as they deserved, they might be reduced to the same condition with the brethren of Judah.

Ver. 11.] If they did not set them at liberty, he threatens sudden destruction, which was ready to break forth upon them for their cruelty.

Ver. 12.] These persons had some goodness in them, as well as courage, and great authority with the people and soldiers.

Ver. 13. Ye shall not bring in the captives hither:] That is, into the city of Samaria.

We have offended against the Lord already.] By making such an unmerciful slaughter of their brethren.

For our trespass is great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel.] Or, "though our trespass is great," and deserves to be punished with a fierce wrath, as we have exercised against Judah.

Ver. 14.] To dispose of them as they pleased. A wonderful instance of obedience; in restoring not only the captives which were very valuable, but all the spoil also, which, no doubt, was considerable. What might not these great men have done, to bring them to repent of their idolatry, if they had been truly religious, and exerted their authority?

Ver. 15.] There were some nominated and appointed, I suppose, by the heads of the people, to take care of the captives, and see them well treated, who not only gave them necessary sustenance, but refreshed their weariness, like the good Samaritan in 16 ¶ At that time did king Ahaz send unto the kings of Assyria to help him.

17 For again the Edomites had come and smitten Judah, and carried away captives.

18 The Philistines also had invaded the cities of the low country, and of the south of Judah, and had taken Beth-shemesh, and Ajalon, and Gederoth, and Shoho with the villages thereof, and Timnah with the villages thereof; Gimzo also and the villages thereof: and they dwelt there.

19 For the Lord brought Judah low, because of Ahaz king of Israel: for he made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the Lord.

20 And Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria the parable, who poured oil and wine into the wounds of a poor traveller. This was an extraordinary goodness, not only to release poor captives without doing them hurt, or making any gain of them, but to dismiss them with a viaticum (as Strigelius speaks), giving them all things necessary for their return home. And it was still a greater kindness to provide vehicles for the infirm multitude, and bring them to their own country without hard travel. So great was the power of the prophet at this time, that he turned their barbarous cruelty into the tenderest humanity. But, as I said, they were not so easily converted from idolatry: unto which they had so strong an inclination, that nothing could persuade them to forsake it.

Ver. 16.] When Rezin king of Syria had invaded him, 2 Kings xvi. 6, 7. This is the first time that we read of the king of Assyria, except in 2 Kings xv. 19, where Pul, king of Assyria, is mentioned as a powerful prince, who invaded the Israelites. Before his time we read nothing of that monarchy, which grew by degrees to its greatness from small beginnings. For in David's time, or whosoever Ps. lxxxiii. was written, the king of Assyria was but a petty prince, like those of Moab and Ammon, and the like, with whom he joined (ver. 8), to enslave the Israelites: but now had swallowed up all those little princes, and grown to such a height that none could stand before them. But if their large empire had been of long standing, we should in all probability have heard of them before this time, as we do often afterward.

Ver. 17.] When Rezin fell upon them, the Edomites took that advantage, and made great ravage in the land of Judah.

Ver. 18. The Philistines also had invaded the cities of the low country.] Which lay next to them.

And of the south of Judah,—and they dwell there.] They prevailed so far as to make an inroad further into the country of Judah; and not only possessed themselves of the cities here mentioned, but settled in them. For in this weak condition into which Ahaz was fallen, they took their revenge for the mischief which Uzziah had done them, who subdued them as far as Gath (ch. xxvi. 6).

Ver. 19. For the Lord brought Judah low because of Ahaz] It was purely upon his account that God gave them up into the hand of the Philistines; for that very year in which Ahaz died, the prophet Isaiah foretold his son should afflict them (Isa. xiv. 27—29), and accordingly Hezekiah smote them as far as Gaza (2 Kings xviii. 8.)

King of Israel;] We cannot gather from hence that he is called "king of Israel," because he walked in their ways, for a good king is so called, xx. 2. And the Masorites observe, that six times we read the king of Israel instead of the king of Judah, because they all descended from Israel. So Beckius here ex-came unto him, and distressed him, but strengthened him not.

21 For Ahaz took away a portion out of the house of the Lord, and out of the house of the king, and of the princes, and gave it unto the king of Assyria: but he helped him not.

22 ¶ And in the time of his distress did he trespass yet more against the Lord: this is that king Ahaz.

23 For he sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus, which smote him: and he said, Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, therefore will I sacrifice to them, that they may help me. But they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.

pounds it, in a large sense, he was king of Israel: for Israel is not here opposed to Judah, but comprehends it. Therefore the Targum hath the king of Judah: and so the LXX. and the Vulgar Latin. For Israel was once the name of the whole people, and after the division of the kingdom, the two tribes were still a part of Israel, in the ancient state of the world. See Buxtorf; who observes, out of the Hebrew grammarians, that the manner of the scripture is to put the genus sometimes for the species, and the species for the genus (Vindiciæ Hebr. Veritatis, cap. 7, par. ii.).

For he made Judah naked.] Deprived them of the divine protection by his foul transgressions.

And transgressed sore against the Lord.] The Targum renders it, "The house of Judah ceased from the worship of God." Which Ahaz, in a manner wholly abolished, and thereby transgressed more grievously than all his predecessors.

Ver. 20. Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria came unto him.] As he desired by the messengers he sent to him (ver. 10).

And distressed him, but strengthened him not.] In 2 Kings xvi. 9, it is said, that he did help him: how therefore did he distress him? Both these are true, for as he did come to his assistance against the king of Syria, so he took Damascus, carried the people captive, and delivered Ahaz from the power of the Syrians (2 Kings xvi. 7—9). But this did Ahaz little good, for he helped him not to recover the cities the Philistines had taken from him, nor did he lend him any forces, nor enable him to recruit his own; but rather weakened him by exhausting his treasures, and by destroying Samaria, whereby the way was opened to invade his country the more easily in the next reign. Thus many countries in latter ages, by calling in the assistance of some foreign prince against their enemies, have been overrun, and conquered by those who came to their help.

Ver. 21.] Did not make his condition better, but so much the worse (see 2 Kings xvi. 8).

Ver. 22. In the time of his distress did he trespass yet more.] He was not at all amended by the sore calamities which fell on him, but introduced more idolatry than had been practised before.

This is that king Ahaz.] The word hu is sometimes a word of contempt, as Kimchi observes (Gen. xxxvi. ult. Num. xxvi. 9). And Ahaz deserved to be branded, as the most notorious offender that had ever been among the kings of Judah: and was remarkable for this also, that he never prospered in any thing he undertook.

Ver. 23. For he sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus, which smote him.] A most monstrous stupidity, to imagine they had any power over him, who could not defend themselves from Tilgath-pilneser: but being of opinion that they were gods, he sacrificed to 24 And Ahaz gathered together the vessels of the house of God, and cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God, and shut up the doors of the house of the LORD, and he made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem.

25 And in every several city of Judah he made high places to burn incense unto other gods, and provoked to anger the LORD God of his fathers.

them to appease them, that they might do him no further hurt; doing as the ancient Romans, who wooed by larger sacrifices the gods of their enemies to come over to their side, and be their friends, as Dr. Jackson discourses, in his Original of Unbelief, ch. 17, parag. 5.

Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, therefore will I sacrifice to them, that they may help me.] Not against the Syrians, but he foolishly imagined they might help him against the Edomites, Philistines, and other enemies.

But they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.] They were so far from being his friends, that they proved the destruction of him, and of his whole country: for though it was not in their power to do him either harm or good, yet his worshipping of them undid him and all his people.

Ver. 24. Ahaz—cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God.] That the priests might not be able to minister before God for want of them (xxix. 19), and that he might employ the money he made of them (for what he cut in pieces, I suppose, he sold) in building altars (as it follows) in every corner of Jerusalem.

26 ¶ Now the rest of his acts, and of all his ways, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

27 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city, even in Jerusalem; but they brought him not into the sepulchres of the kings of Israel: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

And shut up the doors of the house of the Lord,] That no man might come to worship God there, but sacrifice every where, but only where they should; and this continued till the beginning of his son's reign (xxix. 3).

Ver. 25. In every several city of Judah he made high places.] He took care the people should not think of going up to Jerusalem; by erecting, at his own charge, high places in every city, wherein to perform divine service to what God they pleased.

And provoked to anger the Lord God of his fathers.] With whom he did not join other gods, but worshipped him not at all.

Ver. 26.] In 2 Kings xvi. 19, it is only said, they were written in the book of the kings of Judah: but Ezra, it seems, found that the book of the kings of Israel contained some memorable passages of his reign; there being, as is here recorded, great wars between them and Judah.

Ver. 27. The kings of Israel.] They are called the kings of Israel, because they had an ancient right to govern the whole twelve tribes.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 Hezekiah's good reign. 3 He restoreth religion. 5 He exhorteth the Levites. 12 They sanctify themselves, and cleanse the house of God. 20 Hezekiah offereth solemn sacrifices, wherein the Levites were more forward than the priests.

1 HEZEKIAH began to reign when he was five and twenty years old; and he reigned nine and twenty years in Jerusalem; and his mother's name was Abijah the daughter of Zechariah.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father had done.

3 ¶ He, in the first year of his reign, in the first month, opened the doors of the house of the LORD, and repaired them.

4 And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the east street,

5 And said unto them, Hear me, ye Levites; sanctify now yourselves, and sanctify the house of the LORD God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthiness out of the holy place.

6 For our fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD our God, and have forsaken him, and have turned

CHAP. XXIX.

Ver. 1.] See upon 2 Kings xviii. 1, 2, where I have noted, that Ahaz therefore was very young when he begat Hezekiah. And we may grant, as Jacobus Capellus thinks, that he was but ten years old (though, as I have there shown, Bochartus thinks he was more); for though this was wonderful, yet not incredible, as his words are. For he refers us to Scaliger in his first oration against Pareus, where he mentions a city, in which a boy not twelve years old begat a child of a girl, a cousin of his, not ten years old: and adds, Rem notam narro, &c. “I tell a known story,” whose memory is still fresh in Aquitain (see his Histor. Sacra et Exotica, ad Annum Mundi, 2292).

Ver. 2.] The same is recorded in 2 Kings xviii. 2.

Ver. 3. He, in the first year of his reign, in the first month.] This demonstrates his great piety and zeal for God, that he began so soon to reform religion, and did not stay till he was established in his throne.

For the surest way to establish himself, he thought, was to establish true religion; though he ran a great hazard in attempting the abolishing idolatry, which had been confirmed by some years' prescription.

Opened the doors of the house of the Lord.] Which his father had shut up (ch. xxviii. 24).

And repaired them.] For by long neglect they were gone to decay.

Ver. 4.] And he brought in the priests and the Levites.] Whose business it was to take care of religion, and look after things sacred, and admonish kings of their duty. But Hezekiah was before-hand with them, and prevented their endeavours; not only exciting them to reform what was amiss, but using the most proper arguments to press them to it.

And gathered them together into the east street,] Which was before the east gate of the temple, where the entrance into it was.

Ver. 5.] The abomination, as the Jews translate it; that is, the altar of Damascus, and all the idols that away their faces from the habitation of the LORD, and turned their backs.

7 Also they have shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burned incense nor offered burnt offerings in the holy place, unto the God of Israel.

8 Wherefore the wrath of the LORD was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them to trouble, to astonishment, and to hissing, as ye see with your eyes.

9 For, lo, our fathers have fallen by the sword, and our sons, and our daughters, and our wives, are in captivity for this.

10 Now if it is in mine heart to make a covenant with the LORD God of Israel, that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.

11 My sons, be not now negligent: for the LORD hath chosen you to stand before him, to serve him, and that ye should minister unto him, and burn incense.

12 ¶ Then the Levites arose, Mahath the son were upon it (see 2 Kings xvi. 10, &c.). These were brought by Ahaz into the temple; that is, into the court of the priests, which is called the holy place in Lev. vi. 16, &c.

Ver. 6. For our fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil] He urges them to this pious work, from the consideration of the great sin of their forefathers, and their horrible contempt of the service of God, as it follows in the next words.

And have turned away their faces from the habitation of the Lord, and turned their backs.] This seems to signify that Ahaz brought in a way of worship directly contrary to the law of God; which commanded them to worship towards the ark, which was placed in the west. But he ordered they should turn their backs upon that (which was a disrespect and contumely to the Divine Majesty), and worship towards the east, where he had set his altar. And at last he shut up the doors of the temple, that they should not worship there at all, as it is again observed in the next verse.

Ver. 7. Also they have shut up the doors of the porch,] That none might enter into the temple, but it might be left a desolate place.

And put out the lamps,] The priests having nothing to do there.

And have not burned incense nor offered burnt-offerings in the holy place,] But made high places in every city, to burn incense unto other gods, as it is ver. 25 of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 8.] After the confession of their sins, he represents to them the calamities wherewith God had punished them. And also sent such a panic fear and terror into them (such as is mentioned ch. xx. 22), that they could not stand before their enemies, but became a scorn to them. For it had not been possible that they should slay such a vast number of them in one day (as we read ch. xxviii. 6) if they had not been perfectly astonished, and bereaved of their senses.

Ver. 9. Are in captivity for this.] Or rather, were in captivity, till the tender mercy of God released them. And it is likely some were still in captivity to other nations, though the Israelites had dismissed their captives: for they were distressed in Ahaz's time by the Edomites, and the Philistines; the former of which carried away captives, as we read xxviii. 17, 18.

Ver. 10.] He resolved therefore to renew the cove-of Amasai, and Joel the son of Azariah, of the sons of the Kohathites; and of the sons of Merari; Kish the son of Abdi, and Azariah the son of Jehialelel: and of the Gershonites; Joah the son of Zimmah, and Eden the son of Joah:

13 And of the sons of Elizaphan; Shimir, and Jeiel: and of the sons of Asaph; Zechariah, and Mattaniah:

14 And of the sons of Heman; Jehiel, and Shimei: and of the sons of Jeduthun; Shemaiah, and Uzziel.

15 And they gathered their brethren, and sanctified themselves, and came, according to the commandment of the king, by the words of the LORD, to cleanse the house of the LORD.

16 And the priests went into the inner part of the house of the LORD to cleanse it, and brought out all the uncleanness that they found in the temple of the LORD into the court of the house of the LORD. And the Levites took it, to carry it out abroad into the brook Kidron.

nant between God and the people, because he foresaw there was immediate destruction impending upon the whole nation for their iniquities, unless they did heartily and speedily repent of them; for they were grown to the greatest height of impiety, his father having by degrees proceeded to the utmost pitch of idolatry: which, though God had many ways punished very severely, yet he persisted in his wickedness; and to the very end of his life amended nothing, but grew worse and worse: therefore this good king thought it absolutely necessary forthwith to make a thorough reformation, and engage the whole nation in a solemn covenant to worship God purely. Thus Conradus Pellicanus.

Ver. 11. My sons, be not now negligent:] He beseeches the Levites, in the most tender language, no longer to go along with the people in their error, but to bestir themselves to make them better.

For the Lord hath chosen you—to minister unto him, and burn incense.] This was the work of the priests, unto whom he speaks as well as to the Levites, remembering them what their office was to which they were peculiarly chosen, viz. to take care to see his laws observed, and to minister to him, according to his directions; and therefore not to omit the performance of their duty in the house of God, now that it was open to them.

Ver. 12–14.] These were the principal persons among the Levites, who readily complied with the king's exhortation, and engaged their brethren also (as it here follows) in the same work, which they undertook, of cleansing the house of the Lord.

Ver. 15. They gathered their brethren, and sanctified themselves,] By washing their bodies, I suppose, and other rites prescribed by the law.

And came, according to the commandment of the king, by the words of the Lord, to cleanse the house of the Lord.] The king had a great power in things commanded by God: the exercise of which power is here very properly called “the commandment of the king, by the words of the Lord:” or, as in the margin, “in the business of the Lord.” The like we read, ch. xxx. 12 (see Grotius, in his book De Imperio Summarum Potestatum circa Sacra, p. 59).

Ver. 16. The priests went into the inner part of the house of the Lord,] That is, into the sanctuary (for into the most holy none might go but the high-priest), whither the Levites might not come.

And brought out all the uncleanness—into the 17 Now they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify, and on the eighth day of the month came they to the porch of the Lord: so they sanctified the house of the Lord in eight days; and in the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end.

18 Then they went in to Hezekiah the king, and said, We have cleansed all the house of the Lord, and the altar of burnt-offering, with all the vessels thereof, and the shew-bread table, with all the vessels thereof.

19 Moreover, all the vessels, which king Ahaz in his reign did cast away in his transgression, have we prepared and sanctified, and, behold, they are before the altar of the Lord.

court of the house of the Lord.] That is, the court of the priests, where the Levites attended upon them, and ministered unto them.

To carry it out abroad into the brook Kidron.] They cast the filth into the valley of the son of Hinnom, or Tophet, through which Kidron ran (2 Kings xxiii. 10, 12).

Ver. 17. Now they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify.] This was the month Abib, as our great primate Usher observes, but not on the day he was made king, but nine months after his father's death (see his Chronol. Sacra, p. 82).

On the eighth day of the month came they to the porch of the Lord:] Which they cleansed together with the outward courts, and the chambers of the temple, in which they spent eight days more, as the next words signify. The house having been long shut up, and nobody coming into it, must needs be full of dust, and the vessels become rusty: in the scouring of which, and restoring them to their splendour, and wiping the walls of the house, they must necessarily spend a great deal of time, for the neglect had been great, and their diligence extraordinary: it being probable, that this sanctification was by washing both the walls of the house, and the floor, and every thing else.

So they sanctified the house of the Lord in eight days:] The pollution was so universal, and their exactness so great in restoring all things to their purity, that they could not finish their work in less time. Some think they spent eight days in cleansing all the places from filth; and other eight days in sanctifying the temple, and all belonging to it: though how this sanctification was performed we are not told.

Ver. 18.] All which they set in their right places, after they had removed all defilements from them.

Ver. 19. All the vessels, which king Ahaz in his reign did cast away in his transgression.] The Targum explains it very significantly, "Which he profaned, and rendered abominable by idols of other countries, particularly from Damascus." And so Kimchi, "Which he translated to idolatrous uses."

Have we prepared and sanctified.] The Targum gives a quite contrary sense of the words, "We have set them apart and hidden them, and prepared others in their place." And, indeed, the Talmudists (as Beckius here observes upon the Targum) are of opinion, that all the vessels which Ahaz profaned in his reign were set aside, and others consecrated in their stead: for they thought them not any longer fit to be employed in the divine service. But Kimchi understands these words as we do, that they purged and purified the vessels which he had profaned.

They are before the altar of the Lord.] Before the altar of burnt-offering (I suppose), unto which 20 ¶ Then Hezekiah the king rose early, and gathered the rulers of the city, and went up to the house of the Lord.

21 And they brought seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he goats, for a sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah: and he commanded the priests, the sons of Aaron, to offer them on the altar of the Lord.

22 So they killed the bullocks, and the priests received the blood, and sprinkled it on the altar: likewise, when they had killed the rams, they sprinkled the blood upon the altar: they killed also the lambs, and they sprinkled the blood upon the altar.

they went the next morning, and offered sacrifices; with the blood of which, perhaps, they were further purified.

Ver. 20.] Now he engaged the principal persons in the city to join with him in his reformation of religion, when all things were ready for the performance of the duties thereof.

Ver. 21.] It is very observable that the word tsaphir, which here signifies the he-goat, was never used by the Hebrews till after the captivity of Babylon, when we find it in Daniel, who lived in the captivity (ch. viii. 21). And here being used, and in no other place beside, it is some argument that Ezra was the author of this book, which he wrote after their return from that captivity, in which he had learned the Chaldee language, and hence mixed some Chaldee words with the Hebrew, whereof this is one. And therefore Daniel, to explain it, adds the Hebrew word seir to it, just as in the New Testament the word ἁ παρῖπ is added to abba.

He commanded the priests, the sons of Aaron, to offer them on the altar of the Lord.] There are two laws in the book of Moses, requiring a sacrifice to be offered for the sin of the whole congregation, when they were in an error. The first is in Lev. iv. 13, 14, where a bullock is required to be offered, when they were ignorantly seduced to do something forbidden by the law, though they did not forsake their religion. The other is in Numb. xv. 22—24, where a goat is commanded to be offered together with a bullock, when they acted contrary to their religion, and were fallen by error into the practice of external rites. And the bullock was offered for a burnt-offering in token that they owned no other God but the Lord, nor any other religion but that prescribed by Moses; and the goat for a sin-offering, that they might expiate the guilt they had contracted, by doing contrary to their religion. Now this good king Hezekiah, being sensible, that they had not only acted contrary to their religion, but in effect abolished it, by shutting up the doors of the temple, and omitting the daily sacrifice, and every where exercising strange worship, appointed seven bullocks for a burnt-offering, and as many goats for a sin-offering (though the law never required more than one goat), thinking these numerous sacrifices (together with rams and lambs) were, if not necessary, yet very fit, because of the great and long neglect of his divine service, and because of the multitude and long continuance of their other sins against the Lord, for which they now begged forgiveness. Thus after the captivity they offered twelve bullocks for burnt-offerings and twelve goats for sin-offerings (Ezra viii. 35), according to the number of the children of Israel: for, as they knew one goat was necessary, so they thought a great number would be becoming in such cases.

23 And they brought forth the he-goats for the sin-offering before the king and the congregation; and they laid their hands upon them:

24 And the priests killed them, and they made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, to make an atonement for all Israel; for the king commanded, that the burnt-offering and the sin-offering should be made for all Israel.

25 And he set the Levites in the house of the Lord with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, according to the commandment of David, and of Gad the king's seer, and Nathan the prophet; for so was the commandment of the Lord by his prophets.

26 And the Levites stood with the instruments of David, and the priests with the trumpets.

27 And Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt-offering upon the altar. And when the burnt-offering began, the song of the Lord began also with the trumpets, and with the instruments ordained by David king of Israel.

28 And all the congregation worshipped, and the singers sang, and the trumpeters sounded: and all this continued until the burnt-offering was finished.

Ver. 23.] According to the direction of the law, Lev. viii. 15.

Ver. 23.] As the law also directed, Lev. iv. 14, 15; viii. 22.

Ver. 24.] The burnt-offering, to acknowledge the Lord to be the only God: and the sin-offering, to make expiation for all their offences against his supreme authority. And they were made not only for Judah but for all Israel: a great many of the ten tribes being now joined to them.

Ver. 25.] What king David had ordained was approved by the prophets: who liked the design, and, by authority from God, settled this course of divine service (1 Chron. xxiii. 5; xxv. 1; 2 Chron. viii. 14; xxiii. 18). The Targum here translates the last words, "For by the Word of the Lord this ordinance was made by the prophets."

Ver. 26.] Which were ordained by Moses, Numb. x. 10.

Ver. 27. When the burnt-offering began, the song of the Lord began also] When the drink-offering was poured out, then began the song: as the practice is described in aftertimes, by the son of Sirach, Ecclus i. 25, 26, &c. (see Dr. Lightfoot in his Temple Service). What the song of the Lord was, we are told ver. 30.

With the trumpets, and with the instruments ordained by David] See Chron. xxv. 1, 6. These hymns and doxologies were in the nature of prayers to God, as Mr. Mede observes, book ii. ch. 6, p. 365.

Ver. 28.] They all adored, as soon as the sacrifice and the praises of God began: and continued praising God till all was done.

Ver. 29.] As they began so they concluded the service, with adoration of the divine majesty.

Ver. 30. Hezekiah the king and the princes] Who now joined with him in furthering the reformation.

Sing praise unto the Lord with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer.] These were the prophets who composed the songs that the Levites sung, as I observed upon 1 Chron. xxv. 6. But the author of the psalms ascribed to Asaph (in the book of Psalms), seems to be one that lived in aftertimes: perhaps of the same family with this famous Asaph, who lived in David's days, and so called by his name.

29 And when they had made an end of offering, the king and all that were present with him bowed themselves, and worshipped.

30 Moreover, Hezekiah the king, and the princes, commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the Lord with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer: and they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshipped.

31 Then Hezekiah answered and said, Now ye have consecrated yourselves unto the Lord, come near, and bring sacrifices and thank-offerings into the house of the Lord. And the congregation brought in sacrifices and thank-offerings; and as many as were of a free heart, burnt-offerings.

32 And the number of the burnt-offerings, which the congregation brought, was threescore and ten bullocks, a hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt-offering to the Lord.

33 And the consecrated things were six hundred oxen, and three thousand sheep.

34 But the priests were too few, so that they could not slay all the burnt-offerings: wherefore their brethren the Levites did help them till the work was ended, and until the other priests had

They sang praises with gladness.] Not only upon this day, but continually, as David had appointed; and Jehoshaphat in his reign restored (xx. 19, 20). But this order had been interrupted in the time of succeeding idolatrous princes, especially in the time of Ahaz; but now revived by this good king Hezekiah.

Ver. 31. Now ye have consecrated yourselves unto the Lord.] By offering sacrifices of reconciliation with him, whom they had acknowledged to be their Lord; and were anew entered into their office.

The congregation brought in sacrifices and thank-offerings.] These were peace-offerings, whereby they acknowledged God's great goodness to them: and gave him thanks for this happy change of religion.

And as many as were of a free heart, burnt-offerings.] These were not like the sacrifices of thanksgiving, as Kimchi observes, which were in great part eaten by the offerers: for burnt-offerings were entirely consumed upon the altar, in honour of God: and therefore it argued greater piety and largeness of heart to offer them.

Ver. 32.] These were not so many in number as had been offered in former times; for the nation was now grown poorer, in comparison to what it was heretofore.

Ver. 33.] All these were devoted to the service of God, besides the burnt-offerings before mentioned.

Ver. 34. But the priests were too few.] For they who had sacrificed to idols were excluded from their ministry: and they who had not, were not at all prepared and sanctified to do their duty. For it appears by what follows, they were backward unto this work to which Hezekiah called them; and therefore could not prepare all the burnt-offerings (which was their proper work, Lev. i. 5), much less all the other sacrifices, which were numerous.

So that they could not slay all the burnt-offerings.] This was the work of the priests (Lev. i. 6), and could not be done but by those who were skilful in the business. So Bochartus observes out of the heathen poet, that it was practised with great art and industry (Μισθόλορον ἐπισταμίνας) by those who had knowledge and skill to do it dexterously (Hieroicozon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 33, p. 324).

sanctified themselves; for the Levites were more upright in heart to sanctify themselves than the priests.

35 And also the burnt-offerings were in abundance, with the fat of the peace-offerings, and the drink-offerings for every burnt-offering.

Their brethren the Levites did help them, till the work was ended.] In cases of great necessity, they did not stand nicely upon the observation of the ceremonial law. For both now, and in the days of Josiah (xxxiv. 11), some things were admitted, which that law did not allow. For, as now the Levites flayed the sacrifices (which was the work of priests alone, Lev. i. 6), so all the people were allowed to keep the passover in the second month; and the Levites offered the paschal lambs, which were brought by those that were unclean, and the unclean ate them.

And until the other priests had sanctified themselves;] Then the Levites might no longer continue to do their proper work.

For the Levites were more upright in heart to sanctify themselves than the priests.] In the foregoing reign, as Jarchi thinks, such as feared God (that is, would not worship idols) were forced to conceal themselves, and lie hid: so that when Hezekiah came to the service of the house of the Lord was set in order.

36 And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, that God had prepared the people: for the thing was done suddenly.

to the crown, they did not presently appear, nor were they forward to be cleansed and sanctified. But the Levites were men of greater integrity than the priests: at least there were more men of zeal found among them, that readily offered themselves to the service of God (see xxx. 17).

Ver. 35.] This is another reason why the number of the priests was not sufficient to discharge the work of this day: because there were not only abundance of burnt-offerings to be flayed, but the fat of peace-offerings to be burnt, and a drink-offering to attend every burnt-offering, which must necessarily employ many hands.

Ver. 36. Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, that God had prepared the people;] Had given this good mind to them, to join so forwardly in this reformation.

For the thing was done suddenly.] Which argued a divine motion; whereby they were excited without long persuasion.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 Hezekiah proclaimeth a solemn passover on the second month for Judah and Israel. 13 The assembly, having destroyed the altars of idolatry, keep the feast fourteen days. 27 The priests and Levites bless the people.

1 AND Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah, and wrote letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come to the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, to keep the passover unto the Lord God of Israel.

2 For the king had taken counsel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, to keep the passover in the second month.

3 For they could not keep it at that time, because the priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, neither had the people gathered themselves together at Jerusalem.

CHAP. XXX.

Ver. 1. Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah, and wrote letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh,] I look upon the last words as signifying, that more particularly he wrote letters to these two tribes, as he sent messengers to the rest: for they were the tribes nearest to him. Whom he could not command, but only invite and admonish them of their duty. For they were bound by the law, as well as the people of Judah (see ver. 5), and great numbers of them had settled themselves in the land of Judah, in the reign of Asa (xv. 9).

That they should come to the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, to keep the passover unto the Lord God of Israel.] This was a festival that used to be celebrated in this very month wherein he began his reformation: which he resolved therefore to keep with great solemnity; and it could be kept nowhere but at Jerusalem; whither he invited the Israelites to come: and it seems, Hoshea king of Israel, at this time, did not forbid the messengers of Hezekiah to come and invite them, nor his people to go; as Jacobus Capellus observes: which I cannot but look upon as a remarkable instance of God's goodness towards this sinful people in the kingdom of the ten tribes, that he raised up, at the very last, when they were ripe for destruction, such a king to reign over them, as had so much goodness in him, that he did not hinder any of his subjects who would go and worship at Jerusalem.

Nor did he prohibit those from coming into his country, who were sent to invite them to it: so that the Israelites could not pretend they were compelled to be idolaters, for fear of the king's displeasure.

Ver. 2.] The time being elapsed (by such means as here follow) for its observation in the first month (which was the proper season), he took advice with those who were his proper council in such matters, to keep it in the next. For by the "princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem," are meant the great synagogue, consisting of the senate of that city, and the other senators called from other places. So Grotius understands it upon St. Matt. x. 17. And thus our Mr. Thorndike also, in fewer words; He means the consistory called the princes, as they are called in the prophet Jeremiah, xxvi. 10, 11 (see Rites of the Church, p. 231). For Jehoshaphat having settled judges in every city, it is likely they remained in some authority till this time.

Ver. 3. For they could not keep it at that time,] At the time appointed by the law, on the fourteenth day of the first month: for the reason here following.

Because the priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, neither had the people gathered themselves together] Ahaz had made such confusion in the worship of God, by shutting up the doors of the temple (that no divine service might be there performed), and by erecting idols every where, and many other ways; that as the priests, by long disuse, could not be sanctified so soon as was necessary, nor the 4 And the thing pleased the king and all the congregation.

5 So they established a decree, to make proclamation throughout all Israel, from Beer-sheba even to Dan, that they should come to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel at Jerusalem; for they had not done it of a long time in such sort as it was written.

6 So the posts went with the letters from the king and his princes throughout all Israel and Judah, and according to the commandment of the king, saying, Ye children of Israel, turn again unto the LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and he will return to the remnant of you that are escaped out of the hand of the kings of Assyria.

7 And be not ye like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against the LORD God of their fathers, who, therefore, gave them up to desolation, as ye see.

8 Now be ye not stiffnecked, as your fathers were, but yield yourselves unto the LORD, and enter into his sanctuary, which he hath sanctified for ever; and serve the LORD your God, that the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you.

9 For if ye turn again unto the LORD, your brethren and your children shall find compassion before them that lead them captive, so that they shall come again into this land: for the LORD your God is gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him.

10 So the posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh, even unto Zebulun: but they laughed them to scorn and mocked them.

11 Nevertheless divers of Asher and Manasseh and of Zebulun humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem.

12 Also in Judah, the hand of God was to give them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the princes, by the word of the LORD.

13 ¶ And there assembled at Jerusalem much people to keep the feast of unleavened bread in the second month, a very great congregation.

14 And they arose, and took away the altars people have time to assemble: so the temple itself could not be purged till the sixteenth day of the first month (xxix. 17), and consequently the time was passed for keeping the passover, which was to have been on the fourteenth: they thought it best therefore to adjourn it to the next month, rather than stay till the next year; especially since God himself allowed, in some cases, those that could not keep it in the first month to keep it in the second (Num. ix.) And what was allowed to particular persons they thought might be allowed to the whole congregation of Israel.

Ver. 4.] The advice of the great council was approved by the king, and by every one else.

Ver. 5. So they established a decree,] This was the work of a court, or great council.

To make proclamation] By the king's authority.

From Beer-sheba even to Dan,] From one end of the country to the other.

That they should come to keep the passover unto the Lord God of Israel at Jerusalem;] The ten tribes had never kept it, since the division of the kingdom by Jeroboam (at least not in such manner as the law prescribed), being hindered by his threatening interdicts from going to Jerusalem; as their forefathers were by their long tedious travels in the wilderness (Josh. v). And as for Judah, it appears from ver. 26, they had never kept it with such solemnity, since the time of Solomon.

Ver. 6. So the posts went with the letters from the king and his princes] They sent posts, that timely notice might be given to every one, to prepare themselves for this service.

The kings of Assyria.] That is, Pul and Tiglath-pileser, who had carried a great many of them captive (2 Kings xv. 29; 1 Chron. v. 26).

Ver. 7.] And would certainly give them up also, if they continued to provoke him, as they did.

Ver. 8. Be ye not stiffnecked,] It is a metaphor (as I have observed elsewhere) from refractory oxen, which will not go forward; but withdraw their necks and their shoulders from the yoke, and go backward.

But yield yourselves] In the Hebrew, "give your hand;" concerning which phrase, see 1 Chron. xxix. 24.

And enter into his sanctuary which he hath sanctified for ever;] Come to worship at Jerusalem: which was the only place appointed by God for his service, as long as that law lasted.

That the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you.] Which otherwise was ready to make an utter end of them, as it had done of their brethren.

Ver. 9.] These were the contents of the letter, which Hezekiah sent throughout all Israel: concluding with a most exuberant grace (as Strigelius justly calls it), which not only promised to them that they should continue in their land: but they also, who were carried captive, should be restored to them. This, no doubt, Hezekiah had authority from God to declare to them, that he might move them to repentance. For Moses had declared this, which Hezekiah applies to them in their circumstances.

Ver. 10.] Being long accustomed to serve other gods, their hearts were so hardened, that the generality of the ten tribes scoffed at this most gracious invitation to repentance. For which they paid very dearly shortly after: Shalmaneser coming six years after this, and taking Samaria, and carrying the whole nation captive (2 Kings xvii. 6; xviii. 10).

Ver. 11.] Here is not so much as one of Ephraim mentioned: but in some other tribes there were those found who laid to heart their apostasy, and came to Jerusalem, humbly begging pardon. Yet Ephraim is mentioned afterward as partaking of the passover (ver. 18), some of them, it is likely, upon consideration following the example of their brethren, though at first they mocked at the message.

Ver. 12. In Judah, the hand of God was to give them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the princes,] There was a marvellous unanimity in Judah, who were so obedient to the motions of the divine grace (without which so great a change could not have been made), as generally to comply with the king's proclamation, made with the consent of the princes.

By the word of the Lord.] They looked upon it as a divine command, which was brought to them by that authority. And it appeared so to be, by the mighty power of God, which wrought their hearts to a cheerful obedience.

Ver. 13.] This confutes the fancy of the Talmudists, who say, Hezekiah added a month to this year by intercalation; that is, made another month, Adar, that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into the brook Kidron.

15 Then they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the priests and the Levites were ashamed, and sanctified themselves, and brought in the burnt-offerings into the house of the LORD.

16 And they stood in their place after their manner, according to the law of Moses the man of God: the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites:

17 For there were many in the congregation that were not sanctified; therefore the Levites had the charge of the killing of the passovers for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the LORD.

18 For a multitude of the people, even many of Ephraim and Manasseh, Issachar and Zebulun, had not cleansed themselves, yet did they eat the passover otherwise than it was written:

which was the last month in the year: and so kept this passover in the first month of the next year. But this is directly contrary to the express words of this verse, which says, they kept it in the second month. Nor is the opinion of the Karaites truer, who fancy, that though they kept the passover in the second month, yet they did not keep all the parts of it, but only offered the sacrifice of the paschal lamb; the feast of unleavened bread being performed in the first month. But this doth not agree with ver. 21, which saith expressly, "they kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days."

Ver. 14. They arose and took away the altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense] They began as soon as they came to Jerusalem, to show their zeal against idolatry, by throwing down the altars that Ahaz had erected in high places, either for sacrifice or burning incense, which were very many (see xxviii. 24).

And cast them into the brook Kidron.] They stamped them to powder, I suppose, and then cast it into this brook.

Ver. 15. The priests and the Levites were ashamed.] They blushed to see the people so forward, and themselves so negligent.

And sanctified themselves, and brought in the burnt-offerings] They that had not done it already (xxix. and ver. 3 of this chapter) now sanctified themselves, that they might perform their office; there being many sacrifices to be offered upon this day (see upon Deut. xvi. 2).

Ver. 16. And they stood in their place after their manner.] That they might despatch their business the more readily.

The priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites.] Private persons, as well as the Levites, might receive the blood from the beast, but the priests alone could sprinkle it.

Ver. 17. The Levites had the charge of the killing of the passovers] The passover doth not only signify the paschal lamb, but all the sacrifices that accompanied it, as I have shown in the forenamed place (Deut. xvi. 2).

For every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the Lord.] Abundance of the people that came to keep this passover were not clean; and therefore they needed the more sacrifices to be offered for their cleansing, which was one reason why the Levites but Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, The good LORD pardon every one 19 That prepareth his heart to seek God, the LORD God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary.

20 And the LORD hearkened to Hezekiah, and healed the people.

21 And the children of Israel that were present at Jerusalem kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with great gladness: and the Levites and the priests praised the LORD day by day, singing with loud instruments unto the LORD.

22 And Hezekiah spake comfortably unto all the Levites that taught the good knowledge of the LORD: and they did eat throughout the feast seven days, offering peace-offerings, and making confession to the LORD God of their fathers.

23 And the whole assembly took counsel to keep other seven days: and they kept other seven days with gladness.

were employed in it, otherwise there had not been a sufficient number to perform this duty.

Ver. 18. For a multitude of the people,—had not cleansed themselves,] And therefore ought not, according to the law, to have come to the sanctuary, much less eaten the passover.

Yet did they eat the passover otherwise than it was written.] They did not understand after such a long night of ignorance and superstition, what ceremonies were required for their cleansing; or rather they had not time to use them. Yet, having an eager and pious desire to commemorate their wonderful deliverance out of the Egyptian bondage, they were permitted in their uncleanness to eat the passover, lest they should be discouraged, if they were denied it, in their return to the true religion.

The good Lord pardon every one] He had a confidence that God was so gracious, that he would not stand strictly upon the observation of external rites, when he saw men's hearts honest and upright.

Ver. 19. That prepareth his heart to seek God,] Who with pure and holy intentions came disposed to worship God, and acknowledge him to be the Lord.

Though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary.] But wanted such ritual purifications as were required of those that were admitted to worship God at the sanctuary.

Ver. 20.] Some imagine that God smote them with some disease, because of their impurity, which upon his prayer was cured. But the scripture uses this phrase, for granting pardon, and freeing men from the guilt of sin, as is apparent from Isa. vi. 10, "Lest they should be converted, and be healed;" i. e. pardoned.

Ver. 21. The children of Israel—kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days] Which was appointed to be observed after the killing of the passover (see Exod. xii. 15, 16, &c.). All the seven days they sang praises to God with music, when the sacrifices were offered.

Ver. 22. Hezekiah spake comfortably unto all the Levites that taught the good knowledge of the Lord:] He encouraged them to continue to instruct the people more fully in their duty, by commending them for their care and diligence; and promising, it is likely, to reward them for what they had done in propagating the true knowledge of God.

Making confession to the Lord] Acknowledging his great goodness unto them, which is called confessing in the holy language (1 Chron. xvi. 23, 24).

24 For Hezekiah king of Judah did give to the congregation a thousand bullocks and seven thousand sheep; and the princes gave to the congregation a thousand bullocks and ten thousand sheep: and a great number of priests sanctified themselves.

25 And all the congregation of Judah, with the priests and the Levites, and all the congregation that came out of Israel, and the strangers that came out of the land of Israel, and that dwelt in Judah, rejoiced.

26 So there was great joy in Jerusalem: for since the time of Solomon the son of David king of Israel there was not the like in Jerusalem.

27 ¶ Then the priests the Levites arose and blessed the people: and their voice was heard, and their prayer came up to his holy dwelling-place, even unto heaven.

Ver. 23. The whole assembly took counsel] They advised, it is likely, with those mentioned ver. 2.

They kept other seven days with gladness.] They did not observe other seven days of unleavened bread, but offered sacrifices, with praises and thanksgivings, and feasting seven days.

Ver. 24. For Hezekiah—did give to the congregation a thousand bullocks, and seven thousand sheep, &c.] Part of these sacrifices was offered unto God, and the priests had another part, and the rest was distributed to the multitude, that they might feast and be merry all the seven days, which was an extraordinary solemnity; but by this means not only all the Israelites were provided for who kept this great feast, but all the strangers also that came with them to Jerusalem.

And a great number of the priests sanctified themselves.] So that there was a sufficient number to offer the sacrifices, and to sprinkle the blood, though not to slay them all.

Ver. 25.] From hence we may conclude, that many strangers that were in the kingdom of Israel became proselytes, at this time, to the true religion revived in Judah.

Ver. 26.] He held a wonderful great feast for a vast number of people fourteen days, as we read 1 Kings viii. 65.

Ver. 27. Then the priests the Levites arose and blessed the people:] That is, such of the Levites as were priests stood up and dismissed the congregation with a blessing: for it was their office alone to bless (1 Chron. xxiii. 13), and this blessing is ordained in the law of Moses, by a divine commandment (Numb. vi. 22, 23), and was continued by them as long as the sanctuary stood. Yea, it was used, if we may believe the Jews, not only in the temple, but in the synagogues; not only in the land of Canaan, but in all countries where they met to worship God, and they think themselves bound to it by the divine law (see Campegius Vitrina, in his book De Synagoga Veteri, par. ii. lib. iii. cap. 20).

Their voice was heard, and their prayer came up to his holy dwelling-place.] This shows that their blessing was a prayer to God to bless them, of which the blessing ordained by Moses is a proof. And, perhaps, God at this time, by some visible token, testified his acceptance of them: but it is not likely the divine writer would have concealed such a miracle.

CHAPTER XXXI.

- 1 The people is forward in destroying idolatry. 2 Hezekiah ordereth the course of the priests and Levites, and provideth for their work and maintenance. 5 The people's forwardness in offerings and tithes. 11 Hezekiah appointeth officers to dispose of the tithes. 20 The sincerity of Hezekiah.

1 Now when all this was finished, all Israel that were present went out to the cities of Judah, and brake the images in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars out of all Judah and Benjamin, in Ephraim also and Manasseh; until they had utterly destroyed them all. Then all the children of Israel returned every man to his possession into their own cities.

2 ¶ And Hezekiah appointed the courses of the priests and the Levites after their courses, every man according to his service, the priests

CHAP. XXXI.

Ver. 1. When all this was finished.] In the latter end of the second month, after the passover, and the following festivals were over, and they had received good instructions from the pious Levites (xxx. 22), they now produced the fruit of all this, by destroying the monuments of idolatry which Ahaz had made in all the fenced cities of Judah (xxviii. 25).

Out of all Judah and Benjamin, in Ephraim also and Manasseh;] They had no authority in the kingdom of Israel, to which Ephraim and Manasseh belonged: but some think, that as Hezekiah sent letters to all Israel to come and keep the passover, so he went by a divine motion to those tribes which were nearest to him, and, without the consent of Hoshea king of Israel, destroyed their images, and other idolatrous monuments. But these words may signify no more than that he did this in all parts of Ephraim and Manasseh, who were fallen off to Judah, and come under his government (ch. xv. 9).

Then all the children of Israel returned every man to his possession,] This argues great zeal, that they would not return home till they had done all they could to establish and promote true religion. Of so great import it is (as Pellicanus here observes) to have a good king, and a well instructed people.

Ver. 2. Hezekiah appointed the courses of the priests and the Levites after their courses.] He restored the order which David had instituted; which had been interrupted since the days of Jehoshaphat, who walked in the ways of David (ch. xvii. 3). Not only upon such solemn feasts as the passover (which they had lately kept), but every day they sung praise to God, when the sacrifices were offered.

In the gates of the tents of the Lord.] That is, in the Lord's house: which anciently was a tent, as he represents to David, 2 Sam. vii. 6. And all houses were called by that name, Ps. lxi. 25.

Ver. 3.] There was a particular sacrifice, I suppose, offered for the king every day, at his own cost and charge. Besides which, Hezekiah likewise main-and Levites for burnt-offerings and for peace-offerings, to minister, and to give thanks, and to praise in the gates of the tents of the LORD.

3 He appointed also the king's portion of his substance for the burnt-offerings, to wit, for the morning and evening burnt-offerings, and the burnt-offerings for the sabbaths, and for the new moons, and for the set feasts, as it is written in the law of the LORD.

4 Moreover, he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem to give the portion of the priests and the Levites, that they might be encouraged in the law of the LORD.

5 ¶ And as soon as the commandment came abroad, the children of Israel brought in abundance the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly.

6 And concerning the children of Israel and Judah that dwelt in the cities of Judah, they also brought in the tithe of oxen and sheep, and the tithe of holy things which were consecrated tained the morning and evening sacrifices every day, and especially on the sabbaths, and new moons, and solemn feasts: because the condition of the people was so low, that they could not every one pay the tax that was laid on them on purpose for the maintenance of these sacrifices. Yet the first-fruits and the tenths he ordered to be carefully paid, as it here follows. And these words it is possible may mean no more, but that he made an allowance out of his own estate, for the support of all the expenses, ordinary and extraordinary at the altar.

Ver. 4.] He commanded the people that dwell in Jerusalem] That by their good example others might be stirred up to their duty.

To give the portion of the priests and the Levites.] For the service of God could not be maintained, unless there was a due provision made for the maintenance of his ministers, who were always supported out of the public stock. For they who minister to the community, ought by the law of nature (as Estius well observes) to be maintained by it. For their ministry is not appointed for themselves, but for the salvation of all the people.

Ver. 5. Honey.] The Targum translates the word "honey of dates," as the Jews commonly understand it, and so expound Deut. viii. 8, where seven sorts of things are mentioned, of which they brought the first-fruits. But though honey was not offered in sacrifice to God (which is their reason why they will not here understand honey, properly so called), yet I see no reason why they might not bring the first-fruits of it, and give it to the priests for their own use.

Of all the increase of the field.] Which Kimchi expounds of the fruits of the rest of the trees; viz. fig-trees and pomegranates.

All the tithe of all things] They paid tithe, saith he, not only of the corn, but of the fruit-trees, and of the herbs, which were not due by the law: such herbs as those mentioned by our Saviour, mint, anise, and cummin (Mat. xxiii. 23), though these seem to have been of a later date, invented by the Pharisees.

Ver. 6. Concerning the children of Israel and Judah, that dwell in the cities of Judah.] As many of the Israelites as were under the power and dominion of Judah did the same that they did.

They also brought in the tithe of oxen and sheep.] As the inhabitants of Jerusalem had brought in the tithe of such things as are forementioned, which they unto the LORD their God, and laid them by heaps.

7 In the third month they began to lay the foundation of the heaps, and finished them in the seventh month.

8 And when Hezekiah and the princes came and saw the heaps, they blessed the LORD, and his people Israel.

9 Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps.

10 And Azariah the chief priest, of the house of Zadok, answered him and said, Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the LORD we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty: for the LORD hath blessed his people: and that which is left is this great store.

11 ¶ Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare chambers in the house of the LORD; and they prepared them.

12 And brought in the offerings, and the tithes, and the dedicated things, faithfully; over which Cononiah the Levite was ruler, and Shimei his brother was the next.

had in their store-houses; so they in the country brought in also the tithe of oxen and sheep, which were not kept in the cities.

The tithe of holy things which were consecrated unto the Lord] That is, saith Jarchi, the tithe which the Levites paid to the priests. But Kimchi takes it for things consecrated, which they had dedicated to God's service; of which they also gave tithe, though they were exempted from the law of tithing.

Laid them by heaps.] In a great abundance, as is before said.

Ver. 7.] They began to offer first-fruits in the third month, when their harvest began; and finished the tithing in the seventh month, when their harvest was ended (Exod. xxiii. 16).

Ver. 8.] They gave thanks to God, who had given them such plenty of good things, and likewise given them a heart to offer so plentifully: and they commended the people, and prayed God to increase their store. For that is the meaning of blessing the people, praising their liberality, and praying God to reward it.

Ver. 9.] Asking them, as some understand it, what they meant to let them lie so carelessly, as if they were neglected, and not lay them up in some safe place. But others think he means, how it came to pass, that there were still such great heaps left, and no more spent. Which the following answer seems to favour, though the next words incline to the former.

Ver. 10. Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zadok] The head of the family of the priests, of the line of Zadok.

Since the people began to bring the offerings] Which was from the very beginning of harvest.

We have had enough to eat, and have left plenty, &c.] His meaning seems to be, that they had not spared to make use of the plentiful provision which was brought to them; and had also laid up as much as they had room to receive, and all these heaps were still left.

Ver. 11.] To build new store-houses, besides those which Solomon had made; because there was not room enough wherein to lay all the offerings, and tithes, and other dedicated things.

Ver. 12.] As he took care they should all be faithfully laid up, so he set trusty persons to see that they were no less faithfully preserved, for their proper uses. Of which these two brethren were the chief.

13 And Jehiel, and Azariah, and Nahath, and Asahel, and Jerimoth, and Jozabad, and Eliel, and Ishmachiah, and Mahath, and Benaiah, were overseers, under the hand of Cononiah and Shimei his brother, at the commandment of Hezekiah the king, and Azariah the ruler of the house of God.

14 And Kore the son of Imnah the Levite, the porter toward the east, was over the free-will-offerings of God, to distribute the oblations of the Lord, and the most holy things.

15 And next him were Eden, and Miniamin, and Jeshua, and Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah, in the cities of the priests, in their set office, to give to their brethren by courses, as well to the great as to the small:

16 Beside their genealogy of males, from three years old and upward, even unto every one that entereth into the house of the Lord, his daily portion for their service in their charges, according to their courses;

Ver. 13. And Jehiel, &c. were overseers under the hand of Cononiah and Shimei his brother.] These were inferior officers, under the command of the two forenamed brethren, who had the principal oversight, and these were assistant to them.

At the commandment of Hezekiah the king, and Azariah] For so it was ordered by the king, with the advice of Azariah, who was before mentioned (ver. 10), as a chief person among the priests.

Ver. 14. And Kore—the porter toward the east,] At the entrance of the house of God.

Was over the free-will-offerings of God to distribute the oblations] Unto the priests and Levites, to whose uses they were appointed by God: or, as some think, to give out so much flour, oil, wine, frankincense, &c. as was necessary for the sacrifices.

The most holy things.] So they called the burnt-offerings, and the offerings for sin, and the trespass-offerings, and the two lambs for peace-offerings, on the last day of the feast of tabernacles, as Beekius observes out of Maimonides.

Ver. 15.] These were to take care of those who stayed in their cities, while others came in their courses to wait at Jerusalem. None of which wanted the portion allotted to them, both for themselves and for their little children.

Ver. 16.] Though none of the Levites were permitted to come into the house of the Lord, to do service, till they were twenty years old; yet their males (as Mr. Selden observes from this place), who were three years old or more, were allowed to come into the temple with their parents; and in the distribution, the other infants being pretermitted, these were provided for. Kimchi here observes, that males under three years old were not capable of entering into the house of the Lord: but females, neither then, nor after they were older, were capable of this privilege.

Ver. 17.] These words “twenty years old” (as the same great person observes) relate not to the priests, but to the Levites: who, according to the law of 17 Both the genealogy of the priests by the house of their fathers, and the Levites from twenty years old and upward, in their charges by their courses:

18 And to the genealogy of all their little ones, their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, through all the congregation: for in their set office they sanctified themselves in holiness:

19 Also of the sons of Aaron the priests, which were in the fields of the suburbs of their cities, in every several city, the men that were expressed by name to give portions to all the males among the priests, and to all that were reckoned by genealogies among the Levites.

20 ¶ And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and wrought that which was good and right and truth before the Lord his God.

21 And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it with all his heart, and prospered.

Moses, were not obliged to their function, till they were thirty years old, Numb. iv. 3. But David, in the latter end of his reign, a little before the building of the temple, admitted them to officiate at the age of twenty years, 1 Chron. xxiii. 26, 27 (see Selden, De Successione, ad Pontif. lib. ii. cap. 4).

Ver. 18.] The forenamed officers gave to every family their portion; not only to the priests, but to their wives and children: of which (it appears by these verses) an exact register was kept, according to which they made their distribution.

They sanctified themselves in holiness:] Or, rather, according to the Hebrew, “For in faith,” or “with fidelity” (some translate it in the margin in trust), “they sanctified themselves in holiness;” that is, attended upon their ministry at the house of God, nothing doubting they should be provided of all things necessary. For this seems to be a reason, why such care was taken of their wives and children, because their husbands were wholly given up to the service of God, and could not follow any other employment whereby to provide for the maintenance of their families.

Ver. 19.] Care was taken of those that lived in the country, though at the greatest distance, as well as of those that lived in or near Jerusalem, or waited in their courses there. They that were not in waiting, but at home with their families, had provision made for them, as if they had been at the house of God. The forenamed persons were entrusted with this business, to see that none wanted a maintenance.

Ver. 20.] Whatsoever he thought was pleasing to God, conformable to the law, and profitable for his people, he performed with integrity of heart.

Ver. 21.] Whatsoever he went about, either for the advancement of religion, or the good government of his people, he did it sincerely, and with great zeal; so that God prospered him both in peace and in war.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 Sennacherib invading Judah, Hezekiah fortifieth himself, and encourageth his people. 9 Against the blasphemies of Sennacherib, by message and letters, Hezekiah and Isaiah pray. 21 An angel destroyeth the host of the Assyrians, to the glory of Hezekiah. 21 Hezekiah praying in his sickness, God giveth him a sign of recovery. 25 He waxing proud is humbled by God. 27 His wealth and works. 31 His error in the ambassage of Babylon. 32 He dying, Manasseh succeedeth him.

1 AFTER these things, and the establishment thereof, Sennacherib king of Assyria came, and entered into Judah, and encamped against the fenced cities, and thought to win them for himself.

2 And when Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib was come, and that he was purposed to fight against Jerusalem,

3 He took counsel with his princes and his mighty men to stop the waters of the fountains, which were without the city; and they did help him.

4 So there was gathered much people together, who stopped all the fountains, and the brook that ran through the midst of the land, saying, Why should the kings of Assyria come and find much water?

5 Also he strengthened himself, and built up all the wall that was broken, and raised it up to the towers, and another wall without, and repaired Millo in the city of David, and made darts and shields in abundance.

6 And he set captains of war over the people, and gathered them together to him in the street of the gate of the city, and spake comfortably to them, saying,

7 Be strong and courageous, be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him: for there be more with us than with him:

CHAP. XXXII.

Ver. 1. After these things, and the establishment thereof,] After the reformation of religion, and the establishment of it, by settling the maintenance of the priests and Levites (whom he appointed, according to the ordinance of David, to attend in their courses), he prospered so, that he resolved to be subject no longer to the king of Assyria: who thereupon came and invaded his country (2 Kings xviii. 7).

Sennacherib—entered into Judah,] This was in the fourteenth year of the reign of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 13.

And encamped against the fenced cities,] Many of which he took: God thinking fit to try the faith of Hezekiah, and by disappointing Sennacherib, to get himself the greater glory.

And thought to win them for himself,] To conquer the whole country, even Jerusalem itself.

Ver. 2. ] His success puffed him up, so that he designed, as plainly appeared, to besiege the capital city of the kingdom.

Ver. 3. He took counsel with his princes and his mighty men] Though the prophet Isaiah had assured him of God's protection, he did not neglect to consult the best means of his preservation.

To stop the waters of the fountains,] To fill them up with earth, that it might not be known there was any water there; which they turned another way, and by pipes and channels under ground brought it to Jerusalem.

They did help him,] Assisted him in this work.

Ver. 4. Who stopped all the fountains, and the brook that ran through the midst of the land,] That is Gihon, as Kimchi understands it, which some take to be Kidron. It was no easy thing to dry up this brook: but it is supposed the head of it was not far from the city, which being stopped up they diverted the current, and, by conveyance under ground, brought it into great pits within the city; which received the water for the use of the people. For we read afterward (ver. 30), of his stopping up a course of water, which was above; and bringing it down to this west side of the city.

Why should the kings of Assyria come and find much water?] Water was scarce in this country; therefore they thought it prudent to distress their enemies by the want of it. He speaks of kings, in the plural number either because there were many kings that served under the king of Assyria, or because he was the great king, as he styled himself.

Ver. 5. And built up all the wall that was broken,] There was a great breach made in it by Joash king of Israel in the days of Amaziah (ch. xxv. 23): which, I suppose, was repaired in his son's days, who was a very powerful prince (ch. xxvi. 9), and therefore he speaks here of some other breach, which had been made since that time; and perhaps in the same place, where through neglect the wall might possibly be fallen down.

And raised it up to the towers,] It was broken down from the gate of Ephraim to the corner-gate (as we read in the forenamed places), where there were towers, for the defence of the gates, unto which he carried the wall: so that it was entirely raised up again.

And another wall without,] He compassed the city with another wall without the old one; for its stronger defence.

And repaired Millo] Some understand by Millo the wall that was about Zion, on the north part of the city: or the street within the city from the palace to the temple. Which he repaired, that is, fortified and made strong with a wall, to defend the entrance of it.

And made darts and shields in abundance,] Both offensive and defensive weapons; of which he took care there should be no want.

Ver. 6. In the street of the gate of the city,] In the street of the principal gate, which was very large.

And spake comfortably to them,] Encouraged them to stand by him, in defence of their city, religion, and liberties: which he assured them God would protect, as it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 7. ] It is the part of a good commander to show himself undaunted before his soldiers; but especially to persuade them, that, having a good cause, God is on their side: which the Targum in the next verse explains thus: "The Word of the Lord

8 With him is an arm of flesh: but with us is the LORD our God, to help us, and to fight our battles. And the people rested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah.

9 ¶ After this did Sennacherib king of Assyria send his servants to Jerusalem, (but he himself laid siege against Lachish, and all his power with him,) unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah that were at Jerusalem, saying,

10 Thus saith Sennacherib king of Assyria, Whereon do ye trust, that ye abide in the siege in Jerusalem?

11 Doth not Hezekiah persuade you to give over yourselves to die by famine and by thirst, saying, The LORD our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

12 Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high places and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall worship before one altar, and burn incense upon it?

13 Know ye not what I and my fathers have done unto all the people of other lands? were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of mine hand?

14 Who was there among all the gods of those nations, that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that your God should be able to deliver you out of mine hand?

15 Now therefore let not Hezekiah deceive you, nor persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him; for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his people out of mine hand, and out of the hand of my fathers: how much less shall your God deliver you out of mine hand?

16 And his servants spake yet more against the LORD God, and against his servant Hezekiah.

17 He wrote also letters to rail on the LORD God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of mine hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of mine hand.

18 Then they cried with a loud voice, in the Jews' speech, unto the people of Jerusalem that were on the wall, to affright them, and to trouble them, that they might take the city.

19 And they spake against the God of Jerusalem as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were the work of the hands of man.

20 And for this cause Hezekiah the king, and the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven.

21 ¶ And the LORD sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains, in the camp of the king of Assyria: so he returned with shame of face to his own land. And when he was come into the house of his god, they that came forth of his own bowels slew him there with the sword.

our God is our helper." Which signifies as Beckius there thinks, more persons than one in the holy Trinity.

Ver. 8.] Relied on what he said, as if it had been spoken to them by God himself.

Ver. 9.] See 2 Kings xviii. 17, &c.; in which place, and in ch. xix. 10, &c. the following speech is set down more largely: which here is abridged.

Ver. 10.] See 2 Kings xviii. 19. The last words seem to signify, that for fear of the king of Assyria, they durst not stir out of the gates of Jerusalem: for so we translate the last words in the margin, the strong hold of Jerusalem.

Ver. 11.] See 2 Kings xviii. 22. He did not intend, it appears by this, to storm the city, but to keep them pent up till they were starved.

Ver. 12.] It is evident from hence, that the worship of one God alone was known to be the religion of the Jews. But Sennacherib would have had them believe, Hezekiah had dishonoured him by confining his worship and service to one narrow corner: which was before diffused and spread all over the city and country: and therefore would not help them (see there, 2 Kings xviii. 22).

Ver. 13.] If the Lord had a mind to help them, he would have them believe that he was not able: because no gods had been able to deliver those that worshipped them from his power.

Ver. 14.] Upon this argument he enlarges himself very much in 2 Kings xviii. 32—35.

Ver. 15.] See 2 Kings xviii. 29, 30.

Ver. 16.] The Targum translates it, "They spake perversely against the Word of the Lord God," &c. Which plainly declares, that paraphrast took the Word of God to be a divine person, whose servant Hezekiah was.

Ver. 17. He wrote also letters] One of these letters is set down at large in 2 Kings xix. 9—14.

As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people, &c.] He insists upon this so often and so long, it being the most popular argument he could use.

Ver. 18.] By a surrender of it into their hand (see 2 Kings xviii. 26, 27, &c.)

Ver. 19.] They ignorantly fancied, there was no difference between the God of the universe, whom the Jews worshipped, and the gods of particular countries, who pretended to no power but only there; though in truth they had no power at all, being made by those that worshipped them.

Ver. 20.] See 2 Kings xix. 1, 2, &c. 25, 26, &c.

Ver. 21.] The Lord sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains,] With a vast number of common soldiers, as we read 2 Kings xix. 35. The Hebrew text no where mentions the name of the angel, nor of the time of the year when this stroke was given, nor the kind of plague whereby they were destroyed: but the Targum saith, The Word of the Lord sent Gabriel to do this execution, who in the passover night smote them with lightning. Which is related in the Babylonian Talmud, after the same manner, as Beckius observes upon the Targum.

One would think, that Artabanus had read or heard something of this sudden and dreadful overthrow, when he dissuaded Xerxes from invading Greece, being swoln with confidence that nothing could withstand him. "Dost thou not observe (saith he) how the highest and magnificent buildings are wont to be struck with thunder, when the lower escape? Φαίει γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς τὰ ὑπερέχοντα πάντα κολούειν," "for God loves to depress all things that are lifted up." And a little after, in the same speech, he admonishes him, Οὐ γὰρ ἐγὼ φρονέω ἄλλον μῆγα ὁ Θεὸς ἢ ταυτὸν "for God doth not allow any other to think highly of 22 Thus the LORD saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other, and guided them on every side.

23 And many brought gifts unto the LORD to Jerusalem, and presents to Hezekiah king of Judah: so that he was magnified in the sight of all nations from thenceforth.

24 ¶ In those days Hezekiah was sick to the death, and prayed unto the LORD: and he spake unto him, and he gave him a sign.

25 But Hezekiah rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him; for his heart was lifted up: and therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem.

26 Notwithstanding, Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart, both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so that the wrath of the LORD came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah.

27 ¶ And Hezekiah had exceeding much riches and honour: and he made himself treasures for silver, and for gold, and for precious stones, and for spices, and for shields, and for all manner of pleasant jewels;

28 Store-houses also for the increase of corn, and wine, and oil; and stalls for all manner of beasts, and cotes for flocks.

29 Moreover he provided him cities, and possessions of flocks and herds in abundance; for God had given him substance very much.

30 This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper water-course of Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David. And Hezekiah prospered in all his works.

31 ¶ Howbeit, in the business of the ambassathemselves, but only himself" (Herodotus, lib. vii. cap. 10).

When he was come into the house of his god, they that came forth of his own bowels, slew him there.] See 2 Kings xix. 37. And with him the Assyrian empire began to fall, and never recovered its former strength, though it still continued in great power. For the next year after Sennacherib's death the Medes revolted, being encouraged to it, no doubt, by this great defeat at Jerusalem: and by their example several other nations fell off from the Assyrians and asserted their liberty, as Hermannus Conringius hath observed out of Herodotus, in his Adversaria Chronologica, cap. 4. But still their monarchy continued, as appears by what follows in the next chapter of this book.

Ver. 22.] That is, defended them from all their enemies; just as a shepherd doth his sheep, whom he leads into places of safety.

Ver. 23. Many brought gifts unto the Lord to Jerusalem, and presents to Hezekiah] His neighbours were so far from molesting him, that many came to worship God, and to do honour to Hezekiah, who was so highly in God's favour.

So that he was magnified in the sight of all nations] That is, all the neighbouring countries, who heard of these things, had him in great esteem.

Ver. 24.] Or, as it is in the margin, "wrought a miracle for him." See a large account of this in the twentieth chapter of the second book of the Kings, and my annotations there. Unto which this may be added, that Pliny saith, "The application of a very fat fig to a hard swelling is a present remedy;" Carbunculi, si sine ulcere est, quam pinguissimum fecum imponi, pene singulare remedium est (lib. xxiii. Nat. Hist. cap. 7). But the shechin wherewith Hezekiah laboured (which we translate bile) was not of this sort: for the word signifies the worst kind of ulcers: and therefore there was nothing in this application of a lump of figs to lessen the wonder.

Ver. 25. But Hezekiah rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him:] In his deliverance from so powerful an enemy as he could not resist: and from such a dangerous disease, as was incurable, without the special band of God.

For his heart was lifted up:] By the embassy sent to him from the king of Babylon, who came to inquire of the wonder done in the land. Which, together with the slaughter of Sennacherib's army, his shameful retreat, the presents which had been sent him from other countries, and the fame which he had got, made him have too high an opinion; though not of his power, which was very small; yet of his piety, which was very great. But instead of making him thankful, he grew so presumptuous of God's favour as to be forgetful of his benefits.

There was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem.] Who, it seems, were as insensible as himself of the mercies they had received: contenting themselves, that they were not idolaters, though they were not truly pious, and mindful of God's benefits.

Ver. 26. Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart.] Upon the admonition which the prophet Isaiah gave him; and the severe sentence he pronounced against him, and his family.

Both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem,] Who were awakened by the same threatening.

So that the wrath of the Lord came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah.] But peace and truth were in his days, as he speaks, 2 Kings xx. 19.

Ver. 27.] All which he showed to the king of Babylon's ambassadors (2 Kings xx. 13).

Ver. 28.] In the Hebrew the words are, "for beast and beast;" that is, every beast: as in Esther ix. 21. "Year and year;" that is, every year: and ver. 28, "Generation and generation;" i. e. every generation.

Ver. 29.] The great riches of these countries consisted in abundance of cattle, of all sorts, as I have often observed.

Ver. 30. Hezekiah also stopped the upper water-course of Gihon.] He seems to speak of the same thing which is mentioned before, ver. 4, being a work of such great labour and art, that Ezra thought to make it memorable, by taking a more particular notice of it, among his great works. From the mention of the upper water-course, Kimchi gathers, there were several streams of the torrent.

And brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David.] The rivulet, I suppose, had many windings before, and did not come straight down to the city, as now it was made to do.

Hezekiah prospered in all his works.] It is likely, he contrived many other things for the benefit of the city of Jerusalem; none of which miscarried.

Ver. 31. Howbeit, in the business of the ambassadors of the princes of Babylon.] Which is mentioned at large, 2 Kings xx. 10, 11; Isa. xxxviii. 7, 8. In the former of which places I have endeavoured to give an account of it. But Bochartus, I find, strongly opposes the opinion of the body of the sun's going back: in his Canaan, lib. i. cap. 14, p. 4, where he observes, that the scripture in both places speaks of the shadow's going back ten degrees; and then it is said, the sun went back, that is, the shadow of the sun, or the light of the sun, which succeeded to the dors of the princes of Babylon, who sent unto him to inquire of the wonder that was done in the land, God left him to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart.

32 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and his goodness, behold, they are written in the vision of Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, going back of the shadow. And it must be confessed, that if the sun had gone back, it would not have been a miracle in Judea alone, but all the world over: and the king of Babylon needed not have sent to inquire about the wonder in that land, because it would have been a wonder in his land, and in all lands, as well as in Judea. And so it was, for I have observed there out of Herodotus, that in Egypt they knew something of the unusual motion of the sun: and, perhaps, they now observed it in Babylon, and only sent to inquire whether Isaiah foretold it, which was a great wonder. I have met also with one, who thinks, that the Babylonians being worshippers of the sun, it was part of Hezekiah's sin, that he did not take this occasion to persuade the ambassadors to worship God, who made and commanded the sun; and could stop the course of it when he pleased.

God left him to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart.] God suffered him to behave himself according to his own inclinations, without any special motion from him; that Hezekiah might know he was not so strong as he imagined, if he were left to himself without God. But it is generally thought, the last words relate rather to God: who made proof of him, as he had done of many other good men, whether he would entirely obey him, or not. He tries none in that sense of which St. James speaks; viz. for an ill intent, or to lead men to destruction; but and in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

33 And Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem did him honour at his death. And Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

for a good end, to improve them, and bring them to salvation. Thus he tempted Abraham, Gen. xxii. 1, and the children of Israel, Exod. xv. 25; xvi. 5, and Ezekiel, and many others, that it might appear how they stood affected to him: which God, no doubt, knew, and now saw the pride and vanity that lurked in Hezekiah's heart: which was hid from every one but God himself, who now suffered him to discover it for his humiliation. For it was a greater crime to be again puffed up, as he had been before his dangerous sickness.

Ver. 32. They are written in the vision of Isaiah] Who hath recorded his prayer, which he made to God in his sickness.

The book of the kings of Judah] See xxvii. 7.

They buried him in the chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David:] Which was a part of that honour which they did him, mentioned in the next words; for he deserved it above all the kings which they had since the time of David.

All Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem did him honour at his death.] Buried him, perhaps, with such solemnity and expenses as were made at the funeral of king Asa, ch. xvi. 14. Maimonides saith, they appointed a company of students in the law to sit at his sepulchre, and to mourn seven days together (see Schickard, in his Jus Regium, p. 173). But this I look upon as merely rabbinical.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 Manasseh's wicked reign. 3 He setteth up idolatry, and would not be admonished. 11 He is carried into Babylon. 12 Upon his prayer to God he is released, and putteth down idolatry. 18 His acts. 20 He dying, Amos succeedeth him. 21 Amos reigning wickedly, is slain by his servants. 25 The murderers being slain, Josiah succeedeth him.

1 MANASSEH was twelve years old when he began to reign: and he reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem:

2 But did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, like unto the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD had cast out before the children of Israel.

3 ¶ For he built again the high places which Hezekiah his father had broken down, and he reared up altars for Baalim, and made groves, and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served them.

4 Also he built altars in the house of the LORD, whereof the LORD had said, In Jerusalem shall my name be for ever.

5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the LORD.

6 And he caused his children to pass through

CHAP. XXXIII.

Ver. 1.] See 2 Kings, ch. xxi. 1, where his mother's name is set down, which is here omitted.

Ver. 2.] The very same words are in the forenamed place, ver. 2. And here it follows, ver. 9, that he did worse than those abominable heathens; not only committing all the sins of his forefathers, but endeavouring to exceed them, and leave nothing undone wholly to subvert the worship of God.

Ver. 3. He reared up altars for Baalim,] Imitated Ahab king of Israel, as it is explained there, 2 Kings xxi. 3.

And made groves,] These groves, I suppose, were made about the temple, which was utterly forbidden (Deut. xvi. 21), being a heathenish rite (Judg. vi. 25); and mentioned by Isaiah (lxvi. 17), among the abominable idolatries they practised secretly in their gardens. Yet the Jews in aftertimes did plant trees about their proscuchæ, their oratories, or place of prayer, as Scaliger observes in his Fragmenta, at the end of his book De Emend. Temporum, p. 25. But they were not in the law touching the temple.

Ver. 4. Also he built altars in the house of the Lord.] In the court of the priests (see 2 Kings xxi. 4).

Whereof the Lord had said, In Jerusalem shall my name be for ever.] This was the greater profanation, because God had chosen this place to settle his presence in it.

Ver. 5.] In the court of the people of Israel, and in the court of the gentiles (see there, ver. 5).

Ver. 6. He caused his children to pass through the

the fire in the valley of the son of Hinnom: also he observed times, and used enchantments, and used witchcraft, and dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards: he wrought much evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger.

7 And he set a carved image, the idol which he had made, in the house of God, of which God had said to David, and to Solomon his son, In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen before all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:

8 Neither will I any more remove the foot of Israel from out of the land which I have appointed for your fathers: so that they will take heed to do all that I have commanded them, according to the whole law and the statutes and the ordinances by the hand of Moses.

9 So Manasseh made Judah and the inhabit-fire] There is mention made only of his son in the book of the Kings, but here of his children, whom he consecrated to Moloch.

Also he observed times, and used enchantments,] He seems to have studied to find out what God had forbidden in his law, that he might practise it (see there, 2 Kings xxi. 6).

Ver. 7.] This verse and the next are the same with 1 Kings xxi. 7, 8, where see my annotations. I shall only add here, that this seems to have been an image of more than ordinary note, which he set up with a great deal of ceremony. For among the heathens, whom he imitated, images did not become gods, that is, were not made objects of worship, till being placed in the most holy part of their temples, there they were consecrated by being anointed and crowned by sacrifices, prayers, and adorations; and then setting up candles burning before them: all which was concluded with a festival, which sometimes was made anniversary. Many plain instances there are of this, particularly in Minutius Felix, who mentions the unctions, coronation, adoration, and prayers, whereby they were consecrated.

Ver. 9.] A most prodigious change, from the height of piety in his father's time into the sink of impiety in this: which strange vicissitude of things should admonish us not to be secure, as Victorinus Strigelius notes. Who being professor of theology at Heidelberg, left this remark in his lectures on this place near a hundred and forty years ago:

"Now we have the word of God abundantly in all wisdom; and pious princes patronise both those that preach, and those that learn the gospel. But this plenty of the word we now enjoy (I tremble to speak it, but I must speak it, because it will come to pass) shall be taken away: and that sad mournful time will come, when the public assemblies of the church shall be scattered, and a few pious souls shall meet with fear in a corner, to communicate among themselves the fragments of the heavenly doctrine, and give God thanks for those remainders;" which we have seen fulfilled in that country, and in France, and other places.

Ver. 10. The Lord spake to Manasseh, and to his people:] By his servants the prophets (see ver. 18). The Jews say in Seder Olam Rabba (cap. 20), that Joel, Nahum, and Habakkuk, prophesied in his time; but he was so wicked, that they would not so much as mention his name in the beginning of their prophecies, which is not a good reason.

But they would not hearken.] Neither he nor his people regarded what they said.

Ver. 11. The Lord brought upon them the cap- ants of Jerusalem to err, and to do worse than the heathen, whom the Lord had destroyed before the children of Israel.

10 And the Lord spake to Manasseh, and to his people; but they would not hearken.

11 ¶ Wherefore the Lord brought upon them the captains of the host of the king of Assyria, which took Manasseh among the thorns, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon.

12 And when he was in affliction, he besought the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, 13 And prayed unto him; and he was entreated of him, and heard his supplication, and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. Then Manasseh knew that the Lord he was God.

14 Now after this he built a wall without the tains of the host of the king of Assyria.] The royal family failing in Babylon, the king of Assyria (Esarhaddon) brought that kingdom under his yoke again, and held it thirteen years, as primæ Usher observes in his Annals. And he hearing, from the ambassadors of Merodach-baladan, what great treasures were in Jerusalem, and that Hezekiah was dead, and Manasseh had forsaken that God who did such great things for his father, sent an army against him which he could not withstand.

Which took Manasseh among the thorns,] In a thicket where he had hid himself, but was discovered.

Bound him with fetters,] With iron chains fastened to his wrists, or to his legs, as we understand it.

Carried him to Babylon.] Which the king of Assyria, it is likely, had made his seat, to secure his late conquests. This was in the twenty-second year of his reign, as the Jews compute in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 24, when they carried away with him the idol in Dan, according to Judg. xviii. 30. But however that be, it is very evident that the Assyrian monarchy was not fallen by the defection of the Medes and other nations, which I before mentioned, but still continued in great power; Babylon itself, which rebelled at the same time with the Medes, being again subdued to its obedience, as appears by their sending Manasseh bound thither. So that they had not only Cœle-Syria and Phenicia, but Mesopotamia and Chaldea under their dominion, as Conringius observes, in the book beforenamed, upon the foregoing chapter, ver. 21. How long their power continued the scripture doth not tell us; but Manasseh, after his return from his captivity, seems to have been a free prince, subject unto none, maintaining forces in all his fenced cities (ver. 14 of this chapter).

Ver. 12.] This was three and thirty years before his death, as the Jews make account, in the book before mentioned. But both Kimchi and Abarinel confess that this relies upon a weak foundation, as doth the other thing, that he was carried away in the twenty-second year of his reign.

Ver. 13.] So true it is that vexatio dat intellectum, "trouble and vexation give understanding," and make men know God and themselves. Which is not universally true; for some are far from being brought to a right sense by their miseries: as Ahaz, this king's grandfather, was never without some sore affliction or other, and yet never relented. But though R. Johanan was so charitable as to think that Manasseh had his part in the other world, yet the doctors in the title Sanhedrin (cap. 11, sect. 1) exclude him from any portion in it, and say he was only restored to his kingdom, but not to life eternal. For this is the doccity of David, on the west side of Gihon, in the valley, even to the entering in at the fish gate, and compassed about Ophel, and raised it up a very great height, and put captains of war in all the fenced cities of Judah.

15 And he took away the strange gods, and the idol-out of the house of the LORD, and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the house of the LORD, and in Jerusalem, and cast them out of the city.

16 And he repaired the altar of the LORD, and sacrificed thereon peace-offerings and thank-offerings, and commanded Judah to serve the LORD God of Israel.

17 Nevertheless, the people did sacrifice still in the high places, yet unto the LORD their God only.

18 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and his prayer unto his God, and the words of the seers that spake to him in the name of the LORD God of Israel, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel.

19 His prayer also, and how God was entreated of him, and all his sins, and his trespass, and the places wherein he built high places, and set up groves and graven images, before he was humbled, behold, they are written among the sayings of the seers.

20 ¶ So Manasseh slept with his fathers, and they buried him in his own house: and Amon his son reigned in his stead.

21 ¶ Amon was two and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned two years in Jerusalem.

22 But he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as did Manasseh his father: for Amon sacrificed unto all the carved images which Manasseh his father had made, and served them:

23 And humbled not himself before the LORD, as Manasseh his father had humbled himself: but Amon trespassed more and more.

24 And his servants conspired against him, and slew him in his own house.

25 ¶ But the people of the land slew all them that had conspired against king Amon: and the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.

trine they there laid down: There were three kings, and four private men, who have no portion in eternal life: the three kings are Jeroboam, Ahab, and Manasseh; the four private men, Balaam, Doeg, Ahithophel, and Gehazi. But they have no ground for this sentence pronounced upon Manasseh, but the wickedness of his successor; from whence they argue the father's repentance was not sincere. The folly of which sufficiently appears from this history of him and his father Hezekiah.

Ver. 14.] He provided for the safety of his kingdom, and in the first place built a wall for the defence of Jerusalem; which some think was that which his father made (ch. xxxii. 5), which he repaired and strengthened, after it had been thrown down, perhaps by the king of Assyria's forces, when they carried him captive. The fish-gate was the gate where they sold fish (as the Targum expounds it), which was brought from Joppa. Concerning Ophel, see xxviii. 3.

Ver. 15.] He had profaned the house of the Lord, but had not shut up the doors as Ahab did; and therefore he is said only to have purged it from idols, but not to have opened it as Jacobus Capellus observes. Here particular notice is taken of the idol mentioned verse 7, which confirms what I have noted there.

Ver. 16. He repaired the altar of the Lord, and sacrificed thereon] For now he was sensible there was no other God but the Lord, who had wonderfully delivered him out of captivity, and restored him to his kingdom when he implored his mercy.

And commanded Judah to serve the Lord] This was a proof of his true repentance, that he endeavoured to bring his people back to the service of God, whom he had misled (ver. 9) to the worship of idols. But, as Kimchi notes, he was not able to do so much good as he had done mischief, for the people continued their inclination to idolatry; and neglected the study of the law of God. For in Josiah's reign (which presently followed) it was a matter of great surprise that they found the book of the law, when they were repairing the temple: the copies of it, as the Jews think, having been destroyed in the time of Manasseh and Amon. But it is not credible, which were preserved in the hands of the ten tribes, and without which the church could not have been reformed.

Ver. 17.] This was an error so rooted that very good kings could not correct it, such as Asa and Jehoshaphat, in whose days the people worshipped the true God, but in an unlawful place, as they now did.

Ver. 18.] So Judah is now called, who with Benjamin were all that were left of the children of Jacob, who was named Israel. But these books here mentioned are not those which we now have, but others that were lost in the captivity.

Ver. 19. His prayer also, and how God was entreated of him,] He mentions his prayer again; because, I suppose he made more than one. As if he had said, "how he continued to pray till God was entreated of him."

And set up groves] This is one of the places which plainly prove (as I have often noted) that asherim (which we translate groves) signifies not the groves themselves, but the images or statues that were set up in them. For groves are planted, not set up or erected, as it is here said of Manasseh, that "he set up groves:" that is dedicated and consecrated, as that word signifies among Greek and Roman writers (see xxxiv. 1: 2 Kings xiv. 23: Jer. xvii. 2).

They are written among the sayings of the seers.] Or of Hosai (as we translate it in the margin), who was a prophet, it is likely, in those times, by whom many memorable things in his reign were recorded: particularly his prayer, which he recorded, as Isaiah did the prayer of Hezekiah his father.

Ver. 20.] See 2 Kings xxi. 18. It is likely he left it in his last will, that he would be buried privately, as not worthy to lie by his ancestors.

Ver. 21.] As the sons of Jeroboam, and of Baasha, and of Ahab, reigned two years and no longer.

Ver. 22.] See 2 Kings xxi. 20, 21.

Ver. 23. And humbled not himself—as Manasseh his father] He followed him in his sin, but not in his repentance.

But Amon trespassed more and more.] Some of the Jews say, that he burnt the book of the law: others, that he lay with his own mother. But the great sin which the holy scriptures charge him with, is his idolatry, which he more and more introduced, and never repented of it.

Ver. 24, 25.] These two verses are the very same with those 2 Kings xxi. 23, 24, (see there).

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 Josiah's good reign. 3 He destroyeth idolatry. 8 He taketh order for the repair of the temple. 14 Hilkiah having found a book of the law, Josiah sendeth to Huldah to inquire of the Lord. 23 Huldah prophesieth the destruction of Jerusalem, but respites thereof in Josiah's time. 29 Josiah, causing it to be read in a solemn assembly, reneweth the covenant with God.

1 JOSIAH was eight years old when he began to reign: and he reigned in Jerusalem one and thirty years.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand nor to the left.

3 ¶ For in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father: and in the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images.

4 And they brake down the altars of Baalim, in his presence: and the images that were on high above them he cut down: and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images, he brake in pieces, and made dust of them, and strewed it upon the graves of them that had sacrificed unto them.

5 And he burnt the bones of the priests upon their altars, and cleansed Judah and Jerusalem.

6 And so did he in the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even unto Naphtali, with their mattocks round about.

7 And when he had broken down the altars and the groves, and had beaten the graven images into powder, and cut down all the idols throughout all the land of Israel, he returned to Jerusalem.

8 ¶ Now in the eighteenth year of his reign, when he had purged the land, and the house, he sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, and Maaseiah the governor of the city, and Joah the son of Joahaz the recorder, to repair the house of the Lord his God.

9 And when they came to Hilkiah the high priest, they delivered the money that was brought into the house of God, which the Levites that kept the doors had gathered of the hand of Ma-

CHAP. XXXIV.

Ver. 1, 2.] These two verses are the same with 2 Kings xxii. 1, 2, only there the name of his mother is set down, which here is omitted.

Ver. 3. While he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David] He gave very early proofs of his pious inclinations; for when he was but sixteen years old, and had newly taken on him the administration of affairs, he began to worship God publicly, and propounded David to himself for his pattern.

In the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, &c.] When he was twenty years old, he began to bring others to the true religion, by reforming abuses in the worship of God. For now he had got more authority, and therefore destroyed idolatrous worship, which he was inclined to do before, and had it in his mind when he was a mere youth. This is not so distinctly noted in the book of the Kings, where nothing is recorded of him till what he did in the eighteenth year of his reign. And this is the more remarkable, because he began the reformation here spoken of before Jeremiah began to prophesy, which was not till the next year, in the thirteenth of king Josiah (see Jer. i. 2.)

Ver. 4. They brake down the altars of Baalim, in his presence.] I have elsewhere observed that Baalim were demi-gods, as Mr. Mede truly calls them.

And the images that were on high above them he cut down.] The Hebrew word chamamim, which we translate images, as most think, hath some relation to the sun; because it comes from a word that signifies heat. And Aben Ezra translates it "houses made for the worship of the sun." The LXX. sometimes translate it εἰδωλα, sometimes βεβηλωματα, but do not tell us what idols and abominations these were. Jo. Geusius thinks it was the idol called Thammuz, by which name Osiris, Jupiter Ammon, or the sun, was understood. And, indeed, the worship of all the host of heaven is mentioned together with the worship of Baalim, in the idolatry which Manasseh committed, ch. xxxiii. 3.

And the groves, &c. he brake in pieces.] Here again asherim signifies the "idols in the groves;" for the groves themselves were not "broken in pieces," but cut down.

And made dust of them, and strewed it upon the graves of them that had sacrificed] To declare his detestation of the smallest remainders of them.

Ver. 5.] Whereby he polluted these altars, and made them abominable, and purged the nation from their idolatry, which was very great. For it is likely these were not Levitical priests, but priests made by their idolatrous kings, either of other nations, or such as they could draw in of their own nation (after the manner of Jeroboam), to officiate to their strange-gods.

Ver. 6. So did he in the cities of Manasseh, &c.] Though Shalmaneser had carried away the main body of the ten tribes from their own land, yet there remained a great many of the poor people behind, as appears from this place, and from ver. 9, 33.

Mattocks] Some translate it mauls, others forks, or such-like instruments.

Ver. 7.] For it appears by the book of the Kings more fully, that he went himself in person through the whole country to see this work done, which otherwise might have been performed negligently.

Ver. 8. In the eighteenth year of his reign.] When he was twenty-six years old he proceeded farther, having disposed the people to offer freely towards the reparation of the house of God, as it here follows.

The house.] That is, the house of God. Here is a more perfect narrative of the reparation of the temple than was given in the book of the Kings, where only Shaphan is mentioned as sent to Hilkiah; but here two other men of great authority are joined with him, and ordered to see the work set forward.

Ver. 9.] These last words import, that these Levites (having received what was given at the door of the tabernacle which they kept) travelled all the country over, to collect what money they could gather from well-disposed people, who contributed to this work. Which money the three forenamed persons received nasseh and Ephraim, and of all the remnant of Israel, and of all Judah and Benjamin, and they returned to Jerusalem.

10 And they put it in the hand of the workmen that had the oversight of the house of the LORD, and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the house of the LORD, to repair and amend the house;

11 Even to the artificers and builders gave they it, to buy hewn stones and timber for couplings, and to floor the houses which the kings of Judah had destroyed.

12 And the men did the work faithfully: and the overseers of them were Jahath and Obadiah, the Levites, of the sons of Merari; and Zechariah and Meshullam, of the sons of the Kohathites, to set it forward: and other of the Levites, all that could skill of instruments of music.

13 Also they were over the bearers of burdens, and were overseers of all that wrought the work in any manner of service; and of the Levites there were scribes, and officers, and porters.

14 ¶ And when they brought out the money that was brought into the house of the LORD, Hilkiah the priest found a book of the law of the LORD given by Moses.

15 And Hilkiah answered and said to Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the LORD. And Hilkiah delivered the book to Shaphan.

16 And Shaphan carried the book to the king, and brought the king word back again, saying, All that was committed to thy servants, they do it.

17 And they have gathered together the money that was found in the house of the LORD, and have delivered it into the hand of the overseers, and to the hand of the workmen.

18 Then Shaphan the scribe told the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath given me a book. And Shaphan read it before the king:

19 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the law, that he rent his clothes.

20 And the king commanded Hilkiah, and Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Abdon the son of Mical, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asaiah a servant of the king's, saying, 21 Go, inquire of the LORD for me, and for them that are left in Israel and in Judah, concerning the words of the book that is found: for great is the wrath of the LORD that is poured out upon us, because our fathers have not kept the word of the LORD, to do after all that is written in this book.

22 And Hilkiah, and they that the king had from them when they returned to Jerusalem: and, besides this, Shaphan alone seems to have been sent to Hilkiah, to sum up the money that had been offered at the temple for this use (2 Kings xxii. 4.)

Ver. 10. They put it in the hand of the workmen that had the oversight] Who were appointed to take care of the work, and to see it done. The overseers gave it to the artificers mentioned in the next verse, who were to buy materials, and employ them in the reparation.

Ver. 11. It seems both the outside and inside, the floor and the roof, were run to ruin by long neglect, since the days of Joash, when the temple was last repaired: which the Jews (in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 24) make account was two hundred and eighteen years.

Ver. 12. The men did the work faithfully:] So that no account was taken of them.

And other of the Levites, all that could skill of instruments of music.] That is, all those who were well skilled in music, and performed their part in the service of the temple: which is here mentioned to signify that the principal Levites were set over this work to see it well done.

Ver. 13. And were overseers of all that wrought the work] There being great numbers of them, they might well inspect every person that was employed in this work.

And of the Levites, there were scribes, and officers, and porters.] These overseers were deputed to several employments; for which none so fit as the Levites, who understood all manner of things belonging to the house of God: being to do constant service there.

Ver. 14. When they brought out the money that was brought into the house of the Lord,] And thereupon had begun the reparation of the house.

Hilkiah the priest found a book of the law of the Lord given by Moses.] The word given is not in the Hebrew: which must be applied not to the book, but to the law of the Lord given by Moses. For we cannot certainly from hence conclude, that this was the very authentic book which Moses laid up by the ark (see 2 Kings xxii. 8); because in the Hebrew it is said the book of the law of the Lord "by the hand of Moses." Which doth not signify the book was written by his own hand, but that the law therein contained was delivered to the people "by the ministry of Moses." So the phrase, "by the hand," is used in very many places, Exod. xxxv. 29; Lev. x. 11; xxvi. 45; Numb. iv. 37, 45, &c. (see 2 Kings xviii. 8, and in this book, xxxv. 6).

Ver. 15.] Who read it, 2 Kings xxii. 9.

Ver. 16.] When he came to give an account to the king, how he had executed his command (ver. 8, 9, &c.), he delivered the book to him.

Ver. 17.] See 2 Kings xxii. 9.

Ver. 18, 19.] These two verses are word for word in 2 Kings xxii. 10, 11, where I have explained them. I shall only here add, that Jacobus Capellus thinks, the reading of the law, on every sabbath and festival (which was divided for that purpose into several sections), was as old as the time of Joshua; but was neglected in the reign of wicked kings, particularly in that of Abaz. If it were again restored by Hezekiah (which is uncertain), it was again abolished by Manasseh; and perhaps not renewed when he repented: howsoever, discontinued again by Amon. So that both priests and people, omitting the reading of the law, both publicly and privately (for the public omission caused a private neglect), no wonder, that upon finding the book of the law, and hearing it read, they were startled at it; as if one were risen from the dead (Histor. Sacra et Exotica, ad A. Mundi 3373).

Ver. 20.] He that is called here Abdon, is in 2 Kings xxii. 12, called Achbor: otherwise there is no difference between this verse and that.

Ver. 21—23.] There is little difference in the words between these verses and 2 Kings xxii. 14, 15, &c. and none in the sense. He that is called there Harbas, appointed, went to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvath, the son of Hasrah keeper of the wardrobe; (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the college;) and they spake to her to that effect.

23 ¶ And she answered them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Tell ye the man that sent you to me,

24 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the curses that are written in the book which they have read before the king of Judah:

25 Because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be poured out upon this place, and shall not be quenched.

26 And as for the king of Judah, who sent you to inquire of the LORD, so shall ye say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, concerning the words which thou hast heard;

27 Because thine heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself before God, when thou heardest his words against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, and humbledst thyself before me, and didst read thy clothes, and weep before me; I have even heard thee also, saith the LORD.

28 Behold, I will gather thee to thy fathers, is here called Hasrah (some pronouncing his name one way, and some another). And the Targum translates those words (ver. 27), "Thou didst humble thyself before God," &c. in this manner: "Thou didst humble thyself before the Word of the Lord, when thou didst hear his words against this place." Which plainly suppose the Word to be a divine Person, who spake to Moses, and gave him the law.

Ver. 29.] See 2 Kings xxiii. 2.

Ver. 30. The priests, and the Levites,] In 2 Kings xxiii. 2 it is said, "the priests and the prophets" went up. The Levites are omitted there, as the prophets are omitted here: but both make up a complete narrative of the persons that went up to the house of the Lord. For among the priests and Levites there were some prophets, such as Jeremiah, Zephaniah, and others.

He read in their ears all the words of the book] One cannot think that Josiah and all the nation were wholly strangers to the words contained in this book (though perhaps they seldom had read it), who considers that Jeremiah and other prophets were now living, who were very conversant in this book, and instructed the people out of it. But they did not sufficiently attend to the words of it; and therefore Josiah gathered a solemn assembly on purpose, that they and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace, neither shall thine eyes see all the evil that I will bring upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of the same. So they brought the king word again.

29 ¶ Then the king sent and gathered together all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem.

30 And the king went up into the house of the LORD, and all the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests, and the Levites, and all the people, great and small; and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant that was found in the house of the LORD.

31 And the king stood in his place, and made a covenant before the LORD, to walk after the LORD, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all his heart, and with all his soul, to perform the words of the covenant which are written in this book.

32 And he caused all that were present in Jerusalem and Benjamin to stand to it. And the inhabitants of Jerusalem did according to the covenant of God, the God of their fathers.

33 And Josiah took away all the abominations out of all the countries that pertained to the children of Israel, and made all that were present in Israel to serve, even to serve the LORD their God. And all his days they departed not from following the LORD, the God of their fathers.

might hear it read, and be moved to observe that which most affected them. But it is not to be supposed that the whole book was all read at one time, but by parcels at several times, that they might consider and weigh it. Especially that passage in Deut. xxviii. 38, where Moses foretold the captivity of Samaria, and afterward of Judah, and their king: which, Kimchi thinks, Hilkiyah might bid Shaphan take special notice of, and read it to the king, which, (if it be true) no doubt, he remarked to the people, that, if it were possible, they might be brought to repentance, and prevent the great calamities which were threatened to them.

Ver. 31.] See 2 Kings xxiii. 3.

Ver. 32.] He did not compel them, but they offered themselves freely, upon his persuasion, to renew their covenant with God, and promised to be firm to it: which, perhaps, at that time they really resolved; though they soon revolted.

Ver. 33.] This is more largely related in 2 Kings xxiii. 4—6, and the following verses. He persuaded them to perform all acts of religious worship unto God, and unto none else. But though he suppressed all external idolatry, yet in their hearts they strongly inclined to it, and often practised it, as appears from Jer. iii. 10; xxv. 3, 4, &c.

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 Josiah keepeth a most solemn passover. 20 He, provoking Pharaoh-necho, is slain at Megiddo. 25 Lamentations for Josiah.

1 MOREOVER Josiah kept a passover unto the LORD in Jerusalem: and they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month.

2 And he set the priests in their charges, and encouraged them to the service of the house of the LORD,

3 And said unto the Levites that taught all Israel, which were holy unto the LORD, Put the holy ark in the house which Solomon the son of David king of Israel did build; it shall not be a burden upon your shoulders; serve now the LORD your God, and his people Israel,

4 And prepare yourselves by the houses of your fathers, after your courses, according to the writing of David king of Israel, and according to the writing of Solomon his son;

5 And stand in the holy place, according to the divisions of the families of the fathers of your brethren the people, and after the division of the families of the Levites:

6 So kill the passover, and sanctify yourselves, and prepare your brethren, that they may do according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

7 And Josiah gave to the people, of the flock, lambs and kids, all for the passover-offerings, for all that were present, to the number of thirty thousand, and three thousand bullocks: these were of the king's substance.

8 And his princes gave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: Hilkiah and Zechariah and Jehiel, rulers of the house

CHAP. XXXV.

Ver. 1. Josiah kept a passover unto the Lord] This was in the eighteenth year of his reign, immediately after he had made a glorious reformation, by abolishing all idolatry. And accordingly it is related next to that in 2 Kings xxiii. 21—23, but very briefly, as the other is very largely.

On the fourteenth day of the first month.] At the time prescribed by the law, Exod. xii. 6. For there was no need, it seems, to adjourn it till the second, as they did in the days of Hezekiah.

Ver. 2.] To do their duty in their several places, so that nothing might be omitted, which was required to be done at this great festival.

Ver. 3. And said unto the Levites that taught all Israel, which were holy unto the Lord,] That is, the Levites were holy unto the Lord. And therefore may be rendered “and were holy,” &c. i. e. peculiarly dedicated to this service of ministering to the priests, and instructing the people.

Put the holy ark in the house which Solomon—did build;] Jarchi thinks that Manasseh, or his son Amon, had removed the ark from its place, as other enormous things had been done by such wicked kings (2 Kings xvi. 14; xxviii. 24, of this book), which may give a more probable sense of those words, xxxiii. 23, that “Amon trespassed more and more,” than that which some of the Jews mention: for it was a great addition to his sin, if he displaced the ark. Other Jews, indeed, interpret it after another manner, and make a fable out of these words, as Const. L’Empereur observes upon Codex Middoth, p. 97, and Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple, p. 91. But nothing is more natural than to think that Hilkiah himself had removed the ark while the temple was repairing, there being defects in the most holy place as well as other parts of it: and it was not fit to let the ark be exposed to the workmen. Yet Jacobus Capellus thinks it better to say, the word tenu ought not to be translated put, but keep, or look after, the ark in the house which Solomon built. For now, that they were eased of carrying it on their shoulders, they ought to employ themselves more carefully in all other offices about it; ad A. Mundi 3374.

It shall not be a burden upon your shoulders;] That is, hereafter: for they were to carry it to a settled place, there to remain; and then they would be obliged no further to bear it on their shoulders, as they had done before it was fixed in the temple.

Serve now the Lord your God, and his people Israel,] Serve God in singing, and playing upon instruments, when the sacrifices of God's people are offered, and you shall be excused from your former burdens.

Ver. 4. After your courses,] See 1 Chron. xxiii; xxiv., and the following chapters.

The writing of Solomon] See 2 Chron. viii. 14.

Ver. 5. Stand in the holy place,] In the court of the priests, where they were wont to stand when they ministered unto God.

According to the divisions of the families of the fathers of your brethren the people,] Who were to bring for every family a lamb, as Moses commanded, Exod. xii. 3.

After the division of the families of the Levites,] Who were appointed to kill the lamb for them.

Ver. 6. Prepare your brethren,] That they might be capable to eat of it.

Do according to the word of the Lord by the hand of Moses,] Who commanded it to be eaten in one house, Exod. xii. 46. He seems to require, that as the rest of the tribes came according to their families, into which they were divided; so the Levites would give them a good example, and come according to their families.

Ver. 7. Josiah gave to the people, of the flock, lambs and kids,] For the lamb might be taken either from the sheep or from the goats (Exod. xii. 5). That the people might be at no charge; at least thirty thousand families were provided for at the king's charge.

Three thousand bullocks;] These bullocks were for offerings upon the seven days of unleavened bread which followed the passover.

Ver. 8. His princes gave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites:] As Josiah provided paschal lambs for the people, so some great men provided not only for them, but for the priests and the Levites, that they also might offer without charge.

Hilkiah and Zechariah and Jehiel,] It appears by these words, that the princes here mentioned were not rulers of the people, but the chief of the priests. For Hilkiah was the high-priest; and the other two were the heads of the two great families of the priests, Eleazar and Ithamar: who are called the “captains of the host,” as I observed upon 1 Chron. xxv. 1 (see my annotations there). This is a little more largely of God, gave unto the priests for the passover-offerings two thousand and six hundred small cattle, and three hundred oxen.

9 Conaniah also, and Shemaiah, and Nathaneel, his brethren, and Hashabiah, and Jeiel, and Jozabad, chief of the Levites, gave unto the Levites for passover-offerings five thousand small cattle, and five hundred oxen.

10 So the service was prepared, and the priests stood in their place, and the Levites in their courses, according to the king's commandment.

11 And they killed the passover, and the priests sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites flayed them.

12 And they removed the burnt-offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto the LORD, as it is written in the book of Moses: and so did they with the oxen.

13 And they roasted the passover with fire according to the ordinance: but the other holy offerings sod they in pots, and in caldrons, and in pans, and divided them speedily among all the people.

14 And afterward they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: because the priests and distinctly expressed by Bertram, in his Republika Judaica, cap. 15, where he saith Zechariah was the chief among the second priests of the race of Eleazar, who was properly called nagid, the captain of the temple: as Jehiel was the most illustrious person among the second priests, who were the progeny of Ithamar, and was properly called pakid; and was set over the Gershonites and Merarites, as Zechariah was over the Kohathites.

Rulers of the house of God.] Who were the same with those who in the New Testament are called the συναγωγισται of the temple, who governed the rest of the priests (so Bertram, De Republica Judaica, p. 296, 300).

Small cattle.] That is, lambs and kids.

Three hundred oxen.] That through the whole festival they might be able to rejoice with their brethren.

Ver. 9. Conaniah also, and Shemaiah, &c.] Who were men of estates, as well as in great offices among their brethren.

Gave unto the Levites.] That they might be provided for as well as the priests, to make it a time of universal joy.

Ver. 10.] All things were disposed for the offering the paschal sacrifice; the priests standing in their place and the Levites attending them.

Ver. 11. They killed the passover.] That is, the Levites killed the lamb, and gave the blood to the priests.

The priests sprinkled the blood.] For they alone could perform this part of the service.

The Levites flayed them.] That the priests might have nothing to do, but to sprinkle the blood of every one of them: which took up a great deal of time (see xxix. 34).

Ver. 12. They removed the burnt-offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto the Lord.] It seems, some of the lambs were given by Josiah for burnt-offerings: and these they despatched as fast as they could, that they might give the paschal lamb to every family according to their divisions, after it had been offered to the Lord. For this was the principal offering upon this day.

the sons of Aaron were busied in offering of burnt-offerings and the fat until night; therefore the Levites prepared for themselves, and for the priests the sons of Aaron.

15 And the singers the sons of Asaph, were in their place, according to the commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the king's seer; and the porters waited at every gate: they might not depart from their service; for their brethren the Levites prepared for them.

16 So all the service of the LORD was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt-offerings upon the altar of the LORD, according to the commandment of king Josiah.

17 And the children of Israel that were present kept the passover at that time, and the feast of unleavened bread seven days.

18 And there was no passover like to that kept in Israel, from the days of Samuel the prophet; neither did all the kings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah kept, and the priests, and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel that were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

19 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah was this passover kept.

20 ¶ After all this, when Josiah had prepared

So did they with the oxen.] All of which were not offered for peace-offerings, but some for burnt-offerings: which they also offered as fast as they could, that they might not hinder the paschal lamb from being offered.

Ver. 13. They roasted the passover.] See Exod. xii. 8, 9. Though the paschal lamb was to be roasted; yet the other eucharistical sacrifices which attended it (as the Targum expounds it) might be boiled in water.

Divided them speedily among all the people.] Gave every one of the people a portion of the oxen that were offered for peace-offerings: and did it so speedily, that they had time to take care of themselves, as it here follows.

Ver. 14.] This is a great instance of the zeal and diligence of the priests, for whom the principal persons among them had made a large provision; but they did not eat of the paschal lamb nor of the peace-offerings till night, being employed in offering burnt-sacrifices, and burning the fat till that time: against which the Levites prepared for them and for themselves.

Ver. 15.] This seems to import that the singing and music continued till all the sacrifices were offered, that is, till night; and none were suffered to depart from the service, the porters standing at every gate to hinder them, if they attempted it. And their brethren, who were not singers, took care to provide for them their portion, when they had done.

Ver. 16, 17.] These two verses are a summary account of what went before, that the whole solemnity was performed in every part of it, according to the king's direction.

Ver. 18.] We do not read in the book of Samuel of any passover kept in his days; therefore the book wherein this was recorded is lost, as many other books of the prophets are. The last clause shows wherein this passover went beyond all other. David and Solomon were greater kings than he, and in several respects kept greater festivals; the number of people, while the ten tribes were united to the other two, being greater, and the multitude of sacri-the temple, Necho king of Egypt came up to fight against Charchemish by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him.

21 But he sent ambassadors to him, saying, What have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee this day, but against the house wherewith I have war; for God commanded me to make haste: forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not.

22 Nevertheless, Josiah would not turn his faces also greater: but in this Josiah excelled them all, that being nothing so rich, he was notwithstanding so liberal, as to provide all the sacrifices for the priests, the Levites, and the people, at this feast.

Ver. 19.] In the same year wherein he repaired the house of God, and the book of the law was found and brought to him; which, it is likely, put him in mind of this duty, ch. xxxiv. 8.

Ver. 20. After all this, when Josiah had prepared the temple,] Some time after the temple was repaired, and made fit for the service of God, and they expected great happiness to ensue such pious works, there was an unexpected change, which is here noted, to teach us not to be confident, nor rashly enterprise any thing, remembering the vicissitude of all earthly things.

Necho king of Egypt] Whom the Targum calls "Pharaoh the Lame," and so Kimchi, who saith he was lame in his feet, and thence called by the name of Claudus, as the Romans would have expressed it: who, from the like disposition of their bodies, gave names to their emperors; such as Crassus, Barbarosa, and others, as Beckius observes. This lameness proceeded from some wound he had received, for necho signifies wounded.

Came up to fight against Charchemish by Euphrates:] The city of Carcasius stood upon that river, and belonged to the Assyrians, with whose king Necho came to fight (2 Kings xxiii. 29).

Josiah went out against him.] See what I have noted there: unto which I shall here add, that by this it seems probable Josiah was in friendship with the king of Assyria, to whose assistance he seems to have voluntarily gone with his forces, by giving a diversion to the Egyptians. Certain it is, the Assyrian empire was not yet fallen; for in Josiah's days the prophet Zephaniah foretells the destruction of Nineveh (ch. ii. 13, &c.) Now Josiah reigned in the time of Cyaxarus king of the Medes, by whom Nineveh was destroyed, as Herodotus tells us. But it was then in a flourishing condition, for Phraortis, the predecessor of Cyaxarus, not contented with the kingdom of the Medes, but invading the Assyrians, after he had subdued the Persians, was defeated, and lost a vast army before Nineveh: which Herodotus Conringius thinks might possibly move Josiah to court the king of Assyria's favour, by opposing himself to the king of Egypt when he came to invade him. But a most judicious person in this kind of learning (whom I have often consulted) thinks this all wrong; and that though Nineveh was not yet destroyed, yet the empire was, in the eighteenth year of Josiah; from which some governor got some little part, and kept Nineveh till it was destroyed by Nabopolassar, in the first year of his reign. Therefore I should have said, Josiah was a friend of the king of Babylon, rather than of the king of Assyria. But I must leave those that are better skilled than I am in these matters to judge of them.

Ver. 21. What have I to do with thee, thou king face from him, but disguised himself, that he might fight with him, and hearkened not unto the words of Necho from the mouth of God, and came to fight in the valley of Megiddo.

23 And the archers shot at king Josiah: and the king said to his servants, Have me away; for I am sore wounded.

24 His servants therefore took him out of that chariot, and put him in the second chariot that he had; and they brought him to Jerusalem, and he died, and was buried in one of the sepulchres of Judah?] He had no controversy with him, and therefore prays him not to meddle in this war.

For God commanded me to make haste:] And therefore desires him not to give him any stop in his expedition. Some think he only pretended this, because he knew Josiah had a great reverence to God, and in obedience to him might desist from his purpose: and the Targum, with some of the Jews, thinks he calls his own idol by the name of God; though Kimchi thinks he speaks of the true God, who perhaps admonished him in a dream, as he did Abimelech, or sent him such a message by the prophet Jeremiah (as Grotius supposes), many of whose prophecies are directed to foreign nations: or, perhaps, he meant, that he felt a strong impulse unto this undertaking, which he took to be from God.

That he destroy thee not.] Of which there was great danger, if he opposed the divine command.

Ver. 22. Josiah—disguised himself, that he might fight with him,] And not to be known to be the king of Judah.

And hearkened not unto the words of Necho from the mouth of God,] The Targum thinks that Josiah regarded not what Necho said, because he thought he spake only from his idol, for he could not imagine that the God of Israel had spoken to him. But these words import the contrary, and therefore Josiah should at least have inquired of God whether it was his mind that he should not oppose Necho.

And came to fight in the valley of Megiddo.] A place in the tribe of Manasseh (Josh. xvii. 11). So that Josiah may seem to have come against him, because he passed through his country without his leave: but I rather think, as I said before, he was in the interests of the king of Assyria. I observed upon 2 Kings xxiii. 29, that Herodotus tells the same story, but mistakes the name of Megiddo, and calls it Magdolin; which was a great city in Egypt, better known to him than the cities in Syria or Phœnicia. He also adds, that after this battle the king of Egypt took the great city in Syria called Cadytus: which Herm. Conringius thinks was the name of Jerusalem among the old Egyptians (Adversaria Chronolog. cap. 15). I think Jacobus Capellus hath well observed (in his Hist. Sacra et Exotica), that the Egyptians being a vain people, concealed from Herodotus, when he came to consult the affairs of their country, many things that were true, and imposed upon his belief many things that were false. For example, they did not tell him a word of the victory which Nebuchadnezzar got over Pharaoh-nechoh at Euphrates; but gloried in this victory over the Syrians: ad A. Mundi 3425.

Ver. 23.] His disguise did not secure him; for still he appeared, I suppose, as a great commander at whom the enemy would sooner aim than at common men.

Ver. 24. His servants therefore took him out of that chariot, and put him in the second] As all great captains have led horses, that if one fail they may mount another (which was the custom in wars in ancient of his fathers: And all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah.

25 ¶ And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah; and all the singing men and the singing women spake of Josiah in their lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel: and, behold, they are written in the lamentations.

time, as Bochart shows in his Hieroz. par. i. cap. 2, 9); so when they fought in chariots they had an empty one following them, into which they might go if the other proved unserviceable or inconvenient.

All Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah.] After the example of the prophet Jeremiah. For as bad as they showed themselves afterward to be, they had some sense of the great worth of this prince.

Ver. 25. Spake of Josiah in their lamentations to this day.] Whosoever they bewailed any calamity, they mentioned that as the greatest that had befallen them.

And made them an ordinance in Israel:] That they should never forget this fatal stroke, after which they never saw good days. This statute was made by the supreme authority, and was approved by the prophet Jeremiah, who joined in this lamentation; which warrants Christian kings and princes to appoint days for the yearly commemoration of great calamities, or great deliverances.

They are written in the lamentations.] Josephus, in his tenth book of the Antiquities of the Jews, ch. 6, 26 Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and his goodness, according to that which was written in the law of the Lord, 27 And his deeds, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah.

imagines the book of the Lamentations of Jeremiah, which now remains in the Bible, contains the mournful ditties sung at Josiah's funeral, and in aftertimes; which opinion St. Jerome follows; at least in those words Lam. iv. 20. R. Solomon thinks Josiah was bewailed; but it is manifest all this is a mistake; for that book was written after the destruction of Jerusalem, which is lamented in it, and the words now mentioned plainly relate to Zedekiah, not to Josiah: who was not taken but killed. Therefore the lamentations here mentioned are lost, which were written immediately after Josiah was slain.

Ver. 26. The rest of the acts of Josiah, and his goodness, &c.] That is, his piety, or (as we translate it in the margin) his kindnesses, that is, his great love to his people, of which there are great instances in the foregoing part of this history.

According to that which was written in the law of the Lord.] Which he made his rule in all that he did.

Ver. 27.] It seems the Israelites, who were left in the land of Samaria, continued to keep records of what was done in the land of Judah itself.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 Jehoahaz succeeding is deposed by Pharaoh, and carried into Egypt. 5 Jehoiakim reigning ill is carried bound into Babylon. 9 Jehoiachin succeeding reigneth ill, and is brought into Babylon. 11 Zedekiah succeeding reigneth ill, and despiseth the prophets, and rebelleth against Nebuchadnezzar. 14 Jerusalem, for the sins of the priests and people, is wholly destroyed. 22 The proclamation of Cyrus.

1 THEN the people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and made him king in his father's stead in Jerusalem.

2 Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign; and he reigned three months in Jerusalem.

3 And the king of Egypt put him down at Jerusalem, and condemned the land in a hundred talents of silver, and a talent of gold.

4 And the king of Egypt made Eliakim his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem, and turned his name to Jehoiakim. And Necho took Jehoahaz his brother, and carried him to Egypt.

5 ¶ Jehoakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord his God.

6 Against him came up Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and bound him in fetters, to carry him to Babylon.

7 Nebuchadnezzar also carried of the vessels

CHAP. XXXVI.

Ver. 1.] Not by right of succession, but by a faction of the people.

Ver. 2.] See 2 Kings xxiii. 30, 31.

Ver. 3.] He heard, it is possible, that he meditated revenge for the death of his father, and therefore deposed him; and also set a great fine on the people who joined with him (see 2 Kings xxiii. 33).

Ver. 4. And the king of Egypt made Eliakim his brother king—and turned his name to Jehoiakim.] As a mark he was made king by him, and owed his dignity to his favour. So Pharaoh changed the name of Joseph; and Nebuchadnezzar, the names of Daniel and his three companions.

Necho took Jehoahaz.] See 2 Kings xxiii. 31.

Ver. 5.] See 2 Kings xxiii. 36, 37.

Ver. 6. Against him came up Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon.] The first words "against him" are emphatical; for when he came up before, he did not come up properly against Jerusalem, but against Pharaoh-necho. And therefore it is said, not that he came up against that city, but merely that he "came up into the land" (Jer. xxxv. 11), when he made Jehoiakim his servant three years. So that his coming up had no other effect but to make him tributary to Nebuchadnezzar.

And bound him in fetters, to carry him to Babylon.] See 2 Kings xxiv. 1, &c. The Targum explains it, He put brazen chains upon his hands and fetters upon his legs. But he did not carry him to Babylon, for Nebuchadnezzar altered his mind, and permitted him to reign at Jerusalem as his tributary; though he carried away, as it follows, some of the vessels of the temple, and also certain choice persons, as we read in the first of Daniel.

Ver. 7.] He carried away a great many in the next king's reign (2 Kings xxiv. 13, 14), but it seems he of the house of the LORD to Babylon, and put them in his temple at Babylon.

8 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and his abominations which he did, and that which was found in him, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

9 ¶ Jehoiachin was eight years old when he began to reign; and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

10 And when the year was expired, king Nebuchadnezzar sent and brought him to Babylon, with the goodly vessels of the house of the LORD, and made Zedekiah his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem.

11 ¶ Zedekiah was one and twenty years old began to do it in this. And they were so hardened, as to believe those false prophets, who assured them these vessels should shortly be brought again from Babylon, and give no credit to Jeremiah, who told them they prophesied a lie; for these vessels should be so far from being brought from Babylon, that all the remaining vessels should be carried after them, and there be till the day when God visited them (see Jer. xxvii. 16, 17, 21, 22).

Ver. 8.] There was a book, it is likely, that had this title; but what was said there to be "found of him," is not here mentioned. The Targum saith, "the iniquity that was found in him." But what was that iniquity? To this they answer in the Talmud, that he had the name of an idol in his forehead: or, as others say, there were found in his body certain marks and impressions in honour of idols. So St. Jerome, He had made those marks in his body, which God had forbidden in Lev. xix. 28 (see our learned Dr. Spencer, lib. ii. De Leg. Rit. Hebr. cap. 14, sect. 2). But there are those that think it is meant of the innocent blood that he shed (2 Kings xxiv. 4). But that was the sin of Manasseh; therefore the plainest meaning is, that he was found guilty of disloyal intentions against the king of Babylon, which he concealed a great while, but at last they were discovered (2 Kings xxiv. 1).

Ver. 9. Jehoiachin was eight years old when he began to reign; In 2 Kings-xxiv. 8, it is said, that he was "eighteen years old" when he began to reign. See my annotations on that place: unto which may be added, that Abarbanel thinks there is no difference between these two places; but that the word for eight is governed by another that is wanting, signifying ten. But the common solution is, that when his father had reigned one year, he made his son joint sovereign with him, that the people might be settled in their affection to him before he left the throne, which was ten years after. So long he reigned with his father, and eight years alone, which made eighteen in all (see Buxtorf, in his Vindiciæ Hebr. Veritatis, par. ii. cap. 2, p. 408). But there are those who take the meaning to be, that he was eight years old, when he (that is, his father) began to reign: or, as our primate Usher thinks, it was the eighth year, not of his age, but of the captivity of Babylon, to which some principal persons were obnoxious (Chronologia Sacra, pag. ult.). But some great men think here is an error of the copyist, for he was eighteen years old.

He reigned three months and ten days] It seems Nebuchadnezzar repented of his making him king; being afraid, as Kimchi thinks, that by the evil counsel of his courtiers, he would be persuaded to rebel, when he began to reign; and reigned eleven years in Jerusalem.

12 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD his God, and humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet, speaking from the mouth of the LORD.

13 And he also rebelled against king Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him swear by God: but he stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning unto the LORD God of Israel.

14 ¶ Moreover, all the chief of the priests, and the people, transgressed very much, after all the abominations of the heathen, and polluted the house of the LORD which he had hallowed in Jerusalem.

15 And the LORD God of their fathers sent to them by his messengers, rising up betimes, and after the example of Jehoiakim. Jacobus Capellus thinks the people set him up to be their king; and therefore he resolved to dethrone him, sending his servants against him, and then coming himself and taking Jerusalem (see 2 Kings xxiv. 10, 11).

Ver. 10.] See 2 Kings xxiv. 11, 12. For God had threatened none of Jehoiakim's seed should sit upon the throne of David. They might be set upon his throne, as the same Capellus observes, but not remain or continue possessed of it. "Sedere enim dicuntur, non transitoria, sed quæ aliquamdiu pedem figunt," ad A. M. 3399.

Ver. 11.] See 2 Kings xxiv. 18.

Ver. 12.] "From the mouth of the Word of the Lord," saith the Targum: which shows, that by the Word here he meant a divine person. It is a wonderful thing, that having seen so many of the people carried away captive, together with their king Jehoiakim, they should not at all relent, but go on in those ways which had led others to destruction. But so incorrigible were this people, that Ezekiel tells us, they who were carried away captive (among whom he was one) persisted in their rebellion, and were not at all amended. His whole book is full of complaints of their impentence. And in the thirteenth chapter he tells us, they still entertained false prophets (unto whom they hearkened rather than to Ezekiel), who saw visions of peace for Jerusalem, when there was no peace; as he there speaks, ver. 16, that is, made the people believe Jerusalem should not be taken; and so hardened their hearts in their obstinate wickedness.

Ver. 13. Who had made him swear by God: That he would be true and faithful to him.

But he stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart] His wickedness was so great, that God gave him up to commit this further crime of perjury, to his utter ruin (2 Kings xxiv. 20).

Ver. 14.] There was such a universal corruption, and that to such an abominable height, that there was no hope of their growing better, they being perfectly ripe for utter destruction.

Ver. 15. Rising up betimes, and sending;] To rise betimes signifies in scripture to do a thing with care, diligence, and affection: for good husbands, especially fathers of families (from whom this expression is borrowed), were wont to get up early to look after their business, and to quicken and encourage their servants to their duty. Such was the compassion and care of God for his people, that he gave them seasonable, timely, and early admonitions to their duty, and notice of their danger, before it was too late.

Because he had compassion on his people, and on sending; because he had compassion on his people, and on his dwelling place:

16 But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy.

17 Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age; he gave them all into his hand.

18 And all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of his dwelling place.) To this compassion they owed a succession of prophets in every king's reign, as I have before noted, who most earnestly called upon them to reform. Yet, if they did in a good king's reign grow something better, they immediately revolted as soon as he was dead, and a bad one came in his place. Such a strange propensity they had to idolatry: which is the more wonderful when we consider, that this nation, which was so prone to idolatry, when they had so many prophets among them to admonish them against it, were not at all inclined to it, when they had no more any prophets to instruct them, nor any miracles wrought among them; that is, after their return from the captivity of Babylon, when prophecy in a little time ceased; and yet they were steadfast in the service of God, according to the law of Moses. The best account that I am able to give of this is, that before the captivity sufficient care was not taken for the building of synagogues for the teaching of the law, if there were any at all; for we find no mention of them in these books: whereas they abounded in every place after the captivity; inasmuch, that the Jews say, there were several hundreds in Jerusalem alone, wherein the law was read and taught, which was a most powerful means to keep them constant to the religion they professed: for, as Josephus reports, by this means the people came to be so acquainted with their laws, that if any person asked any question concerning them, ἴσως ἢ τίποτα πάντα, ἢ τοιοῦτα τοῦ ἰαυτοῦ, "he would more readily tell every thing, than his own name."

Ver. 16. But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words.] As the corruption was universal, so they were incorrigible; not only rejecting, but despising, and setting at nought the means of their cure.

Until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy.] Till the implacable wrath of God came upon them: there being no hope they would repent, and be healed, but they must die and perish.

Ver. 17. He brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary.] Unto which, it is likely, they fled for safety, after the manner of all nations, who took their holy places to be inviolable: but they found no protection there; the Chaldees being a rough nation and having no regard to them.

He gave them all into his hand.] To kill them, or sell them for slaves, as he thought good.

Ver. 18. All the vessels of the house of God.] Which are numbered in the next book, Ezra i. 9—11. The former treasures, by a special providence of God, were preserved, and restored in the reign of Cyrus to the house of the Lord; but the other, it is likely, were looked upon as spoil, and spent by the king and his great men.

the Lord, and the treasures of the king and of his princes, all these he brought to Babylon.

19 And they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof.

20 And them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon, where they were servants to him and his sons, until the reign of the kingdom of Persia:

21 To fulfil the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her sabbaths: for as long as she lay desolate she kept sabbath, to fulfil threescore and ten years.

Ver. 19.] See 2 Kings xxv. 9, 10. But it is a very absurd supposition of some, who think that all the sacred books were now also burnt, and restored again by Ezra after the captivity out of his memory. For who can believe, that among all the priests, and prophets too, that were carried captive, none of them should take care to carry a bible with them? Jeremiah also remaining in the land, we may be confident was not without it. It is plain also, that Daniel had his prophecy, and the books of Moses, in Babylon (Dan. ix. 2, 3). And Josephus says that Cyrus was shown the prophecy of Isaiah, wherein his name was expressly mentioned; which shows, they had copies of these books in their captivity. But this extravagant fable was brought upon the stage by the apocryphal Esdras (ch. xiv.), and was not known till the beginning of the third century, when that author, half Jew, and half Christian, lived.

Ver. 20.] Which gave them liberty to return to their country. Such was the law of war in ancient times; all the people of a city or country that were conquered became slaves to the conqueror; and appertained to the public or private persons who had taken them, according to the laws settled in every nation for the dividend of the booty. Thus we find at the sacking of Troy, all that remained alive were made slaves, even queen Hecuba, and her daughters. The Greek and Roman histories are full of such examples.

Ver. 21.] Because the Jews, among other precepts, had violated that of letting their land rest from ploughing and sowing every seventh year, God gave their land a long sabbath, or rest, for no less than ten times seven years: which Jeremiah threatened, ch. xxv. 9, 12; xxix. 10. If it be true, that they had neglected this law for the space of four hundred and thirty years; but had ploughed their ground, &c. in the seventh, as well as in all other years; then the judgment of God upon them was very remarkable, in making their ground rest, and be free from tillage, just as long as it should have been if they had observed his law: for in the space of four hundred and thirty years, there ought to have been sixty and five years of rest and intermission (See Guallelmus Vorstius, upon David Ganz's Tzemuch David, p. 212).

To fulfil threescore and ten years.] These years ended in the first or second year of Cyrus; but when they began is variously disputed. Hermannus Witsius hath already argued strongly, that it was in the fourth year of Jehoiakim: for then Jeremiah said, "The whole land shall be a desolation, and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years," ch. xxv. 11, which is farther explained, ver. 17, 18. Which is the opinion also of Hermannus Conringius, in his Adversaria Chronologica, cap. 14, and of Johannes Vorstius, in his Exercitatio Secunda de Captivitate Babylonica; and thus our Usher, ad A. Mun-

22 ¶ Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the LORD spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah might be accomplished, the LORD stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying, di 3394. Though other great men date these seventy years from the captivity of Zedekiah (see Scaliger, De Emend. Temporum, lib. vi. p. 575).

Ver. 22, 23.] These two verses, which conclude this book, begin the next, where I will explain them; and only take notice here, that thus the Targum trans-23 Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdoms of the earth hath the LORD God of heaven given me, and he hath charged me to build him an house in Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? The LORD his God be with him, and let him go up.

lates this proclamation: "Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdoms of this earth hath the Word of the Lord God of heaven delivered unto me; and he commanded me to build him a sanctuary in Jerusalem," &c. Which evidently shows, this paraphrast believed the Word dwelt in the sanctuary.

THE BOOK OF EZRA.

It is generally thought by all sorts of writers, that Ezra himself wrote this book which bears his name. And there is the less doubt of it, if he wrote the foregoing book: for he begins this book as that ended; which is an argument they had the same author; it being an ancient way of writing, as Grotius observes out of Polybius, who concludes one book, and begins the next with the same words. But the learned Huetius is of opinion, that Ezra did not write the first six chapters of this book, but some other person; for it is evident they were written in the time of Darius, when the author speaks of himself as then at Jerusalem (ch. v. 3, 4, 9). Whereas Ezra went up from Babylon in the reign of Artaxerxes (ch. vii. 1), and then, it is manifest, wrote the four remaining chapters, as appears from ch. vii. 27, 28; ix. 5; x. 1. Therefore, when the Talmudists and other Hebrew doctors say Ezra wrote this book, they are to be understood, he thinks, to speak of the latter part of it.

CHAPTER I.

1 The proclamation of Cyrus for the building of the temple. 5 The people provide for the return. 7 Cyrus restoreth the vessels of the temple to Sheshbazzar.

1 Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the LORD by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the LORD stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying,

2 Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The LORD God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of

CHAP. I.

Ver. 1. In the first year of Cyrus king of Persia,] This is that famous Cyrus, who, a hundred and forty years before the temple was destroyed, and two hundred years before he was born, was mentioned by name in the prophecy of Isaiah, as designed by God for the restoring his people (Isa. xlv. ult. xlv. 1—4). Which prophecy, it is probable, Daniel showed to Cyrus, which made him set forth the following edict: which was not put forth in the first year of his empire, for then the Jews were not his subjects, but the first year after his conquest of Babylon, where the Jews then lived in captivity (see Scaliger, in his Isagoge, lib. iii. p. 260, and De Emend. Temporum, lib. vi. p. 576).

That the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled,] Who foretold, that after seventy years were accomplished, the king of Babylon and the Chaldeans should be destroyed, and the people of Judah restored to their own land (see ch. xxv. 12; xxix. 10).

The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation—and put it also in writing,] God, who had so long ago designed him for this work, suggested these thoughts to him, and excited him to prosecute them; which he did, not only by causing his will and pleasure to be proclaimed, but to be put in writing, that none might mistake his meaning.

Ver. 2. The Lord God of heaven] It is an observation of Mr. Mede, that as, before the captivity, when they spake of God they called him "the Lord of hosts;" so the constant style of the holy books after the captivity, is the "God of heaven." As here and ch. vi. 10; vii. 21. But it is a question, whether Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes, penned these writings themselves, wherein they proclaimed the God of the the earth; and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah:

3 Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel (he is the God) which is in Jerusalem.

4 And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, beside the freewill offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem.

5 ¶ Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Jews to be "the Lord God of heaven:" or whether they were drawn up by some of the Jews that attended upon them. It seems likely to me, that God, who raised up the spirit of Cyrus to be a peculiar instrument of the freeing his people from slavery, did enlighten his mind to understand that there was but one only God whom the Jews worshipped, and who spake in those holy books which were shown him. And Artaxerxes might call the law of Moses the "law of the God of heaven," knowing the Jews worshipped no other God, whose law this was.

Hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth;] That is, all those large dominions which the Assyrians and Babylonians had enjoyed.

And he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah.] So he understood from Isaiah xlv. 13, where God saith of Cyrus, "he shall build my city," of which the temple was the principal part: and more plainly, ch. xlv. 28, "he shall say to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." Josephus hath thus paraphrased upon these words, "Ἐπεὶ μὲν ὁ Θεὸς τῆς οἰκουμένης ἀπέδειξε βασιλεία, &c. "Because the greatest God hath constituted me the king of the world, I believe him to be him whom the people of Israel adore. For he foretold me king by his prophets, and that I should build his temple at Jerusalem, in the land of Judea."

Ver. 3.] Not of the Jews only, but of Israel also, who were under his government, the Assyrians and Medes being his subjects. And so Josephus (as I observed before) says, that Zerubbabel sent the edict of Cyrus into Media, to the rest of the ten tribes: to whom he not only makes a promulgation of liberty to go to their own country, but desires them to go, and prays God to be with them and prosper them in building God's house, whom he acknowledges to be the true and only God. This was a marvellous encouragement to them.

Ver. 4. Whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth,] This seems to relate to such as were desirous to go up with their brethren, but were forced to stay behind for want of necessities to support them in so long a journey.

Let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, &c.] He therefore requires his officers to furnish them with such things as they needed.

Beside the freewill offering for the house of God] Which he supposed the richer sort of Jews would readily make to assist their poor brethren; though they themselves being well settled in Babylon, did not think fit to stir till they saw how these would succeed.

Ver. 5. Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin,—with all them whose spirit God had raised,] There were some of other tribes

Levites, with all them whose spirit God had raised to go up to build the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem.

6 And all they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, beside all that was willingly offered.

7 ¶ Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods;

8 Even those did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, and numbered them unto Sheshbazzar the prince of Judah.

besides Judah and Benjamin that went up (1 Chron. ix. 3), though these were the principal, who all needed a special motion from God to quicken and encourage them to this enterprise; the difficulties being so great which they were to encounter in a long journey, and their country lying waste when they came thither; this made those who had got possessions in Babylon to choose to stay there.

To build the house of the Lord] This was the design, which people of great piety cheerfully undertook, that the public worship of the true God might be restored, whom they now worshipped only in private.

Ver. 6. All they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, &c.] Such was the authority of the king, and such was the influence of God upon their hearts, that all their neighbours encouraged them to this work, and enabled them to undertake this journey to Jerusalem.

Beside all that was willingly offered.] Their brethren freely offered them their assistance, though they did not think fit to go along with them.

Ver. 7.] Where by a singular providence they had been preserved till this time, being looked upon as sacred things, which Nebuchadnezzar would not turn to his own private use, but dedicated to his gods. Some think the ark was among the sacred things which Cyrus caused to be restored; but it should first be proved that it was carried away from Jerusalem to Babylon, which now here appears to be true. The argument they bring for it is, that in the second temple sacrifices were offered as in the first, and all solemn days observed, especially the great day of expiation, when the law ordained the blood should be sprinkled before the mercy-seat, which could not be done when there was none; and there was none, if there was no ark. But, as the Jews universally acknowledge, this was one of the five things wanting in the second temple; so, unless the divine glory had been there also, the ark would have signified little. Therefore, it is more likely, that by the absence of these, God would signify, he was withdrawing his presence from that house of stone, to dwell in the temple of Christ's body: who offered himself to God, and thereby put an end to those figurative sacrifices.

Ver. 8. Mithredath] This was a name frequent among the Persians, derived from their god Mithra: as Cyrus himself had his name (Hesychius saith) from the sun, which in their language was called Kipos.

And numbered them un'o Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah.] Which was another name for Zerubbabel, mentioned ch. iii. 2, 8, v. 14, 16. For it was common in the time of the captivity for the great men of Judah to have two names: one of their own country, which was domestic; another of the Chaldeans, which was 9 And this is the number of them: thirty chargers of gold, a thousand chargers of silver, nine and twenty knives,

10 Thirty basons of gold, silver basons of a second sort four hundred and ten, and other vessels a thousand.

used at court (Dan. i. 7). Nehemiah had two names: and this of Sheshbazzar seems to have been a good omen of their flourishing condition; being compounded of two words, signifying fine linen and gold. On the contrary, Zerubbabel was a name importing the misery of the people of Israel at that time; for it is as much as an exile or stranger in Babylon, where he was born. Thus pious men, even in the midst of the honours they had at court (for Josephus saith, Zerubbabel was one of the guard of the king's body), were admonished not to forget their brethren, but sympathize with them in their miseries.

Ver. 9.] See Dr. Lightfoot, of the Temple, p. 233, 234.

Ver. 11. All the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred.] Here seems to be some difficulty: for all the vessels that are specially named, make no more in number than two thousand four hundred and ninety-nine. To which many think this a sufficient answer, that it is said in 2 Chron.

11 All the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred. All these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of the captivity that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem.

xxxvi. 18, Nebuchadnezzar carried away all the vessels, both great and small. Now, in the account that is here given, the larger vessels only, which were of greater bigness and price, are mentioned: but the gross sum comprehends all, both great and small, and amounts to the number of five thousand and four hundred. But Tremellius solves this, by translating the last words of the former verse otherwise than we do; not of other vessels a thousand, but other vessels by thousands, viz. almost three thousand, wanting one hundred: which our Mr. Mede judges a true translation, in his Daniel's Weeks, book iii. p. 700.

All these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of the captivity that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem.] Which restoration of the Jews unto their own land seems to be a greater miracle than the first conquest of it: for Joshua did that by force of arms; but these exiles recovered their country without any force at all; and were settled in it, notwithstanding many great impediments to hinder it.

CHAPTER II.

1 The number that return, of the people, 36 of the priests, 40 of the Levites, 43 of the Nethinims, 55 of Solomon's servants, 62 of the priests which could not show their pedigree. 64 The whole number of them, with their substance. 65 Their oblations.

1 Now these are the children of the province that went up out of the captivity, of those which had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away into Babylon, and came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city;

2 Which came with Zerubbabel: Jeshua, Nehemiah, Seraiah, Reelaiah, Mordecai, Bilshan, Mizpar, Bigvai, Rehum, Baanah. The number of the men of the people of Israel:

3 The children of Parosh, two thousand an hundred seventy and two.

4 The children of Shephatiah, three hundred seventy and two.

5 The children of Arah, seven hundred seventy and five.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. Now these are the children of the province] Some by the province understand Babylon; in which these people were most of them born, and had all lived a long time. But I think it more likely to be meant of Judea, which was made a province when it was conquered, and Gedaliah constituted the governor of it; and in this book is called the "province of Judea," ch. v. 8.

Whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away] Their parents and ancestors had been carried away by him, and they in them.

And came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city] See Jer. xxxii. 15: Neh. xi. 3. Their land and their cities had been laid so desolate, and had been so long neglected, and were infested also by such bad neighbours, that it was a great piece of generosity in these men to return thither: and their names are recorded to the eternal honour of them, and of their posterity; they being the first planters of this country, after it had been laid waste.

Ver. 2. Which came with Zerubbabel: Jeshua, Nehemiah, &c.] These were their heads, who undertook to conduct them: among whom Zerubbabel was the prince, or leader in chief; as Jeshua was high-priest, who is mentioned next to him. Nehemiah, who follows after him, is not the same, whose hook comes after this: for he did not go now, but afterward; or, if he did, he returned to Babylon again (see our famous Reynolds, in his Censure of the Apocryphal Books, prælect. cxi. cxviii.) Nor is it likely, that this Mordecai was the same with him that was Esther's cousin, but some other person: there being another of that name mentioned in the book of the Chronicles (see the same Reynolds, prælect. cxlvii.)

The number of the men of the people of Israel:] They who were called the "children of the province" before, are now called the "people of Israel:" for from him they were derived, though most of them were of the tribe of Judah.

Ver. 3.] He begins first to reckon up the families that went up; of which this was one of the largest, descended from Parosh, who was their ancestor.

Ver. 4.] This was another family, descended from this man. The same is to be said of the rest.

Ver. 5.] So many gave in their names in Babylon, that they intended to return into Judea: but it appears by Neh. vii. 10, that there came no more thither than six hundred fifty and two: therefore it is supposed, that the rest altered their minds, or died by the way. The same must be said of several other differences between this account and that in Nehemiah.

6 The children of Pahath-moab, of the children of Jeshua and Joab, two thousand eight hundred and twelve.

7 The children of Elam, a thousand two hundred fifty and four.

8 The children of Zattu, nine hundred forty and five.

9 The children of Zaccai, seven hundred and threescore.

10 The children of Bani, six hundred forty and two.

11 The children of Bebai, six hundred twenty and three.

12 The children of Azgad, a thousand two hundred twenty and two.

13 The children of Adonikam, six hundred sixty and six.

14 The children of Bigvai, two thousand fifty and six.

15 The children of Adin, four hundred fifty and four.

16 The children of Ater of Hezekiah, ninety and eight.

17 The children of Bezai, three hundred twenty and three.

18 The children of Jorah, a hundred and twelve.

19 The children of Hashum, two hundred twenty and three.

20 The children of Gibbar, ninety and five.

21 The children of Beth-lehem, a hundred twenty and three.

22 The men of Netophah, fifty and six.

23 The men of Anathoth, a hundred twenty and eight.

24 The children of Azmaveth, forty and two.

25 The children of Kirjath-arim, Chephirah, and Beeroth, seven hundred and forty and three.

26 The children of Ramah and Gaba, six hundred twenty and one.

27 The men of Michmas, a hundred twenty and two.

28 The men of Beth-el and Ai, two hundred twenty and three.

29 The children of Nebo, fifty and two.

30 The children of Magbish, a hundred fifty and six.

31 The children of the other Elam, a thousand two hundred fifty and four.

32 The children of Harim, three hundred and twenty.

33 The children of Lod, Hadid, and Ono, seven hundred twenty and five.

34 The children of Jericho, three hundred forty and five.

35 The children of Senaah, three thousand and six hundred and thirty.

36 ¶ The priests: the children of Jedaiah, of the house of Jeshua, nine hundred seventy and three.

37 The children of Immer, a thousand fifty and two.

38 The children of Pashur, a thousand two hundred forty and seven.

39 The children of Harim, a thousand and seventeen.

40 ¶ The Levites: the children of Jeshua and Kadmiel, of the children of Hodaviah, seventy and four.

41 ¶ The singers: the children of Asaph, a hundred twenty and eight.

42 ¶ The children of the porters: the children

Ver. 6.] Here seems to be two families joined together, one from Pahath-moab, the other from Jeshua-joab (as the other may be translated), which both together make the greatest body of those that went up: and six more added themselves; for in Neh. vii. 11, they are said to have been two thousand eight hundred and eighteen.

Ver. 20.] Or, as it is in Neh. vii. 25, the children of Gibeon; these being the citizens of that city. For this is not the name of a man, but of a place; and so are several that follow: which hath made some think, that the foregoing are not the names of men, but of cities, or countries, the people of which are called the children of such places; which is frequent in the scripture language, where we read of the children of Zion, the children of Egypt, the children of the East, &c.

Ver. 21.] These were such as belonged to that city; unto which they went up (ver. 1).

Ver. 22.] This was a town near to Beth-lehem.

Ver. 23.] A famous place in the tribe of Benjamin, where the prophet Jeremiah was born. But there are those who think it not improbable, that these were cities in the country of Babylon; which the Jews had built, and called by the names of those cities in their own country, from whence they were banished; of which they were desirous to preserve a remembrance. Thus the Spaniards at this day have cities in America, called Corduba, Granada, Carthage, &c. that they may not suffer the memory of their ancient country to perish, when they were removed to a far distant land. But I see no ground for this.

Ver. 24.] Or, of Beth-azmaveth, as it is called Neh. vii. 28.

Ver. 26.] These seem to have been cities in the tribe of Benjamin: and so, it is likely, were the foregoing, and some of those that follow.

Ver. 31.] There is another Elam mentioned ver. 7, which argues the former to be the name of a town; from which the very same number of persons went up that there did from this.

Ver. 33.] These were three towns in the tribe of Benjamin, which makes it probable Harim was so likewise.

Ver. 35.] It is uncertain whether this be the name of a person, or of a place; but the greatest number of persons went from hence that did from any of the forementioned.

Ver. 36. The priests:] Having numbered the people that went from Judah and Benjamin, he proceeds now to the tribe of Levi; and first mentions the priests.

The children of Jedaiah, of the house of Jeshua.] He is mentioned in 1 Chron. xxiv. 7, as a principal person among the priests (see Dr. Lightfoot, p. 916).

Ver. 37.] He is mentioned also in 1 Chron. xxiv. 14, as head of one of the twenty-four courses of priests.

Ver. 38.] He is mentioned also 1 Chron. ix. 12.

Ver. 39.] See 1 Chron. xxiv. 8, where he is mentioned as head of another course of the priests.

Ver. 40.] See Neh. vii. 43.

of Shallum, the children of Ater, the children of Talmon, the children of Akkub, the children of Hatita, the children of Shobai, in all a hundred thirty and nine.

43 ¶ The Nethinims: the children of Ziha, the children of Hasupha, the children of Tabbaoth, 44 The children of Keros, the children of Siba, the children of Padon, 45 The children of Lebanah, the children of Hagabah, the children of Akkub, 46 The children of Hagab, the children of Shalmai, the children of Hanan, 47 The children of Giddel, the children of Gahar, the children of Reaiah, 48 The children of Rezin, the children of Nekoda, the children of Gazzam, 49 The children of Uzza, the children of Paseah, the children of Besai,

50 The children of Asnah, the children of Memunim, the children of Nephusim,

52 The children of Bazluth, the children of Mehida, the children of Harsha, 53 The children of Barkos, the children of Sisera, the children of Thamah, 54 The children of Nezhiah, the children of Hatipha.

55 ¶ The children of Solomon's servants: the children of Sotai, the children of Sophereth, the children of Peruda, 56 The children of Jaalah, the children of Darkon, the children of Giddel, 57 The children of Shephatiah, the children of Hatil, the children of Pochereth of Zebaim, the children of Ami.

58 All the Nethinims, and the children of Solomon's servants, were three hundred ninety and two.

59 And these were they which went up from Tel-melah, Tel-harsa, Cherub, Addan, and Immer; but they could not show their father's house, and their seed, whether they were of Israel:

60 The children of Delaiah, the children of Tobiah, the children of Nekoda, six hundred fifty and two.

61 ¶ And of the children of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai; which took a wife of the daughters of Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name;

62 These sought their register among those

Ver. 43. The Nethinims:] These are generally taken to be of the race of the Gibeonites; who being given to the service of the temple were called Nethinims, which imports as much as given. But this is a mistake, the Nethinims being those whom David gave to help the Levites, as I have observed before.

The children of Ziha, the children of Hasupha, the children of Tabbaoth,] It is not said how many came from each family: but it appears there were several families of them, and their whole number is mentioned in ver. 58.

Ver. 45.] The number of these families, and those that follow, is not set down particularly; but they are all comprehended in that sum mentioned ver. 58.

Ver. 55. The children of Solomon's servants:] These were a distinct people among the Jews; but it is uncertain who they were. Some take them to have been originally descended from slaves, whom Solomon took in war, and who afterward became proselytes. But there was no war in his days; therefore others think they were such of other nations as came to serve Solomon in servile work during the building of the temple: who being proselyted, he deputed them to the perpetual conservation and reparation of it; as Joshua had done the Gibeonites, to be hewers of wood and drawers of water there. Or, they were some of the relics of the Canaanites, who delivered up themselves to Solomon, 1 Kings ix. 20, 21. Whosoever they were, it appears from ver. 55, of this chapter, that they had the same employment with the Nethinims about the temple, or something like it; for they are numbered together with them.

The children of Sotai,—Sophereth,—Peruda,] These and they that follow in the next two verses, are the families of the forenamed persons.

Ver. 58.] This makes it probable, that the Nethinims and the children of Solomon's servants (as I said before), were employed in the same or the like employment; being both mentioned together; to whose honour it must be observed, that, though they were not of the children of Israel, and were despised by them (there being decrees made by the Sanhedrin, as the Jews tell us, that they should not marry with the Gibeonites, who they fancy are here meant), yet they were more forward to return to Jerusalem, and build the house of the Lord (where they were to serve in lower ministries), than the Levites themselves. For there were greater numbers of them returned than of the Levites and singers, as appears by comparing this verse with ver. 40, 41.

Ver. 59.] These are names of some cities in Chaldea, or Mesopotamia, from whence many went along with them to Judea: and, as some think, they were Jews or proselytes who were carried captive by Shalmaneser into Assyria. Now these could not show the families from whence they were derived, and so could not obtain any certain possession in Judea; as the rest did, who knew to what family and city they belonged.

Ver. 60.] These were persons who could not make out their pedigree; and yet were desirous to live among the people of God, and see his worship restored.

Ver. 61.] This person whosoever he was, thought it so great an honour to be descended from such a noble family as that of Barzillai, that he chose to be called by that name, which he preferred before his own in the family of the priests: by which vain ambition he lost his title to the priesthood, because he could not make out his pedigree from the priests, but from Barzillai.

Ver. 62. These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found:] The words may be more plainly translated out of the Hebrew, in this manner, "These being numbered among the priests (or, reckoned in the priestly genealogy) sought the register, the record of it in writing, but could not find it." The Jews were so careful to keep the priesthood pure, that they preserved an exact account of the parents, the kindred, and the quality of every priest; because there were some women the priests might not marry, whose children were accounted impure; as Mr. Selden hath shown at that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found; therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.

63 And the Tirshatha said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim.

64 ¶ The whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore.

large, lib. ii. De Success. ad Pontific. cap. 2, p. 213. cap. 3, p. 215. But when the city and temple were burnt, and the people carried away in a tumultuous, confused manner into Babylon, many tables of genealogy perished, and could not be recovered.

Therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.] Not permitted to perform the office of priests; because it did not appear that they were legally descended from priests.

Ver. 63. And the Tirshatha] Some think (particularly Jacobus Capellus), that by the Tirshatha is here meant Zerubbabel: it being a general name, they suppose, for all chief governors. So Nehemiah is called, ch. viii. 9, x. 1, whom others therefore will have to be here meant; who was a kind of judge (as the Persian word signifies), and gave the sentence which here follows, when he came to Judea: which was a good while after this first company arrived there. Others interpret it, the king's commissioner: for Zerubbabel was no more (see J. Reynolds, in his Censure of the Apocryphal Books, prælect. cxviii).

Said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things,] That is, they should not partake of the sacrifices offered for sin, nor of the right shoulder of peace-offerings, nor of the shew-bread; which were almost holy, and the portion of the priests alone. This shows that Tirshatha, whosoever he was, had great power and authority: who could lay such a restraint upon those that had been held for priests.

Till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim.] Till the Lord himself should show (when he vouchsafed such a high-priest as was in the first temple), whether they were of the line of Aaron or not. He doth not quite reject and exclude them, but left them their claim; yet would not admit them to enjoy that which was the sole right of the priests: which he could not determine whether it belonged to them; but the oracle being ceased, waited till God, who knew all things, should declare it. Thus careful they were to distinguish families, that strangers might not come to inherit among God's people; and especially that the priesthood might not be invaded by any who were unqualified for it (see Buxtorf. in his Historia Urim et Thummim, p. 323, 327).

It is evident from this place, that the urim and thummim were either lost or burnt with the temple; and whether they were after this restored, that is, whether any priest with this authority was raised up after the captivity was ended, we are nowhere informed. If there was, it was only (as our Dr. Jackson well speaks, book i. on the Creed, ch. 11) to give this people a farewell of God's extraordinary speaking to them, either by priests or by prophets, till Christ came. Josephus confesses, that revelation by urim and thummim did cease two hundred years before his time: but more probably this, as other kinds of prophecy, and many extraordinary tokens of God's power and presence (sometimes most frequent in this nation), did cease with that generation which returned from captivity, or immediately after the finish-

65 Beside their servants and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven; and there were among them two hundred singing men and singing women.

66 Their horses were seven hundred thirty and six; their mules, two hundred forty and five;

67 Their camels, four hundred thirty and five; their asses, six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

ing of the second temple: as if, during all that time (to use the words of that great man before mentioned), God had appointed a fast, or vigil, as an introduction to the fulness of time; wherein (as Joel prophesied, ver. 28), God would pour out his Spirit upon all flesh; upon the gentile, as well as the Jew (Mal. i. 11). For this cause God imposed this long fast upon the Jews, that he might humble them, and teach them, that he was not their God alone, but of the gentiles also. The Jews generally acknowledge there was no urim and thummim under the second temple: and even they that say there was (because it was necessary the high-priest should have his garments complete), yet say, there was no answer from God given by it; which is as much as to say, there was none at all (see Buxtorf. Hist. Urim et Thummim, cap. 5).

Ver. 64.] This was but a small number in comparison with that vast multitude which came out of Egypt, yet more than double to that number which was carried away captive by Nebuchadnezzar. But here occurs a small difficulty (like that in the end of the foregoing chapter); for if we put together the several sums before mentioned, they amount to no more than twenty-nine thousand eight hundred and eighteen; so there wants above twelve thousand to make up this number of forty thousand three hundred and threescore. But where shall we find them? say the Jews, in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 29. To which they there answer, that they were of the rest of the tribes of Israel, who came up with those of Judah and Benjamin: or they might be Levites, or other Israelites, who could not make out their descent. Which is a very solid answer, for there is no doubt but many of their brethren of the ten tribes incorporated themselves with the two tribes in captivity, and took the advantage of returning with them; which may be the meaning of those words in the first chapter, ver. 5, "Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, with all them whose spirit God had raised to go up:" that is, saith Diodate, all those of other tribes, according to 1 Chron. ix. 3.

Ver. 65. Beside their servants and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven:] Though all that returned were not Jews, but some of the ten tribes joined with them; yet they did not amount, slaves and all, to fifty thousand. Now what is this number to what they were in Jehoshaphat's time, when Judah had in it two hundred thousand fighting men?

There were among them two hundred singing men and singing women.] Whether these were now become servants is not certain; but it seems to be manifest from 1 Chron. xxv. 5, 6, that women, as well as men, sung in the house of the Lord.

Ver. 66.] Their poverty appears, as by the small number of servants that attended them, so by the little parcel of cattle which they had to carry them.

Ver. 67.] Most of the people therefore travelled on foot, for these would but suffice to carry their baggage (as we speak), or little more.

68 ¶ And some of the chief of the fathers, when they came to the house of the LORD which is at Jerusalem, offered freely for the house of God to set it up in his place:

69 They gave after their ability unto the treasure of the work, threescore and one thousand

Ver. 68. Some of the chief of the fathers when they came to the house of the Lord which is at Jerusalem,] That is, to the place in which the temple stood, unto which it seems their pious affections carried them, as soon as they came to Jerusalem.

Offered freely for the house of God] Made a new offering besides that which they brought out of Babylon from their brethren there, mentioned ch. i. 4, 6. By this it appears, that the Jews were not made such poor slaves in Babylon as wrought for their lords and masters, but had liberty to trade and get riches for themselves: some of them being advanced to considerable offices in the king's court: otherwise they could not have been able to offer such sums as are mentioned in the next verse. And the like contribution, though not so large, was made for the support of the second company that went up from Babylon, as Josephus tells us, lib. xi. cap. 4, where he saith, the Jews in Babylon gave their brethren who were going to their own country, a hundred pound of gold, and five thousand of silver. But most of these rich men continued still in Babylon, being well settled there, and in a thriving condition: insomuch that R. Eliezer was wont to say (as he is quoted by a converted Jew,) "The bran only returned to Judea, the fine flour still remained in Babylon" (see Jer. xxix. 4, 5, 28.) But this is a conceit advanced to elude the prophecies which belong to their return from Babylon, and apply them to their present captivity from the Romans.

Ver. 69. They gave after their ability unto the treasure of the work] Which was presently erected, according to the ancient pattern in David's time (1 Chron. xxvi. 20).

drams of gold, and five thousand pound of silver, and one hundred priests' garments.

70 So the priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, dwelt in their cities, and all Israel in their cities.

One hundred priests' garments.] Garments, as well as gold and silver, were wont to be laid up in treasures, as appears by our Saviour's words, "Lay up for yourselves treasures, where neither moth nor rust do corrupt," Matt. vi. 20. Moths do not corrupt silver and gold, but only garments (see Job xxvii. 16).

Ver. 70. So the priests, and the Levites, &c. dwell in their cities.] They are here set down in that order wherein they are reckoned from ver. 36, and the good order is observed that was among them, every one going to the city where his ancestors dwelt; and so did all Israel, as well as Judah and Benjamin (ch. vi. 16, 17). Thus the foundation of this poor commonwealth was laid in a marvellous concord, there being no strife nor contention among them that came up, though of different orders and qualities: but they had one heart and soul, like the first Christians, without which unity no people can be preserved. And that it may be cherished, they must avoid those things that destroy it, which are (as Joh. Wolfius here observes) principally φιλονεικία and κοινηπραγμοσύνη, "self-love," and "meddling in other men's matters."

All Israel in their cities.] When the ten tribes were carried captives by Shalmaneser into Assyria, they were not carried away entirely, but some of every tribe left, who, with Judah and Benjamin, were afterward carried to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, and now restored by Cyrus. By this our primate Usher explains what we read afterward (ch. vi. 17, 18), that they offered twelve he-goats, according to the number of the children of Israel (ad A. Mundi 3468.); and, indeed, there were some relics of the ten tribes till their last destruction (Acts xxvi. 7).

CHAPTER III.

1 The altar is set up. 4 Offerings frequented. 7 Workmen prepared. 8 The foundations of the temple are laid in great joy and mourning.

1 AND when the seventh month was come, and the children of Israel were in the cities, the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem.

2 Then stood up Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren the priests, and Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and his brethren, and builded the altar of the God of Israel, to offer burnt-offerings thereon, as it is written in the law of Moses the man of God.

3 And they set the altar upon his bases; for fear was upon them because of the people of

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1.] We are nowhere told in what month they began their journey from Babylon. But from ch. vii. 9, we understand it was a journey of four months from thence to Jerusalem; so that we may safely conclude they came out in the spring-time in the first or second month, and having spent a short time in settling themselves in their several cities, the seventh approached, or drew nigh (so it must be understood, and should be rendered), in which was the first feast that fell out after they came into Judea; which they assembled themselves unanimously to celebrate at Jerusalem.

Ver. 2. Then stood up Jeshua] He was the high-priest, called Joshua in Hag. i. 1.

And Zerubbabel] He is called there the governor of Judah, being appointed by the king of Persia to that office. And he is there put before Joshua, as here he is put after: the viceroy and the high-priest being pares dignitate aut suppres, as Bochartus speaks (see below ver. 8, ch. iv. 3, v. 2).

And builded the altar—to offer burnt-offerings] Which were the most ancient offerings of all others.

As it is written in the law of Moses] Where, in the very beginning of the book of Leviticus, there is an order for the burnt sacrifices before any other.

Ver. 3. They set the altar] Before they began to lay the foundation of the temple; for they would not have sacrifices wanting while it was building.

Upon his bases:] That is, in the place, some think, where it anciently stood. Which was done Maimonides saith, by the authority of the prophets, who were then among them. Here the reader must remember what I have observed upon 1 Chron. ix. 11.

those countries; and they offered burnt-offerings thereon unto the LORD, even burnt-offerings morning and evening.

4 They kept also the feast of tabernacles, as it is written, and offered the daily burnt-offerings by number, according to the custom, as the duty of every day required;

5 And afterward offered the continual burnt-offering, both of the new moons, and of all the set feasts of the LORD that were consecrated, and of every one that willingly offered a free-will-offering unto the LORD.

6 From the first day of the seventh month began they to offer burnt-offerings unto the LORD. But the foundation of the temple of the LORD was not yet laid.

7 They gave money also unto the masons, and to the carpenters; and meat, and drink, and oil, 21, 23, that till the temple could be built, they erected a tabernacle wherein the service of God was performed, as it was before Solomon's temple was built. But I noted there, ver. 18, that it did not stand on mount Moriah, but on mount Zion; and therefore the altar was also there, and not in the place where it anciently stood, till the temple was finished.

For fear was upon them because of the people of those countries:] The particle ki, when we translate for, signifies although; and so it had been better rendered here, Although they were in great fear of their evil neighbours, yet notwithstanding they would not desist from restoring the worship of God. But if we take it as we translate it, the meaning is plain that they were the more zealous to restore the worship of God, that they might upon all occasions flee to him for succour against their enemies, of whom they were in dread.

They offered burnt-offerings—morning and evening.] Which is called in the law of Moses the "continual burnt-offering," Exod. xxix. 38—42; Numb. xxviii. 3, 6.

Ver. 4. They kept also the feast of tabernacles, as it is written,] See Exod. xxiii. 16. The seventh month was so remarkable for many solemnities appointed to be held in it, that I cannot think they kept only the feast of tabernacles. For on the very first day of the month there was to be a holy convocation (Numb. xxix. 1, &c.), on which they began to offer sacrifice, as it is said here, ver. 6: and on the tenth day was another holy convocation, which was the most solemn in all the year, being the great day of atonement (Numb. xxix. 7). With these, I suppose, they began; and especially on the tenth day begged pardon of God for their sins, which had cast them out of their land; and then proceeded on the fifteenth day to thank God for their restoration by keeping the feast of tabernacles.

And offered the daily burnt-offerings by number, according to the custom,] On every day of the feast, which lasted seven days, there were special sacrifices appointed by the law, and in great numbers; as may be seen Numb. xxix. 13, 17, &c. which put this poor people to great expenses: but their piety now was such, that they valued nothing so much as the service of God.

Ver. 5, 6.] The meaning of these two verses is, that holy rites of sacrificing were restored, and so were kept and continued ever after in their several seasons, on the new moons, and other festival solemnities. And they began with the morning and evening burnt-offering, which was never to be omitted, but in every 8 ¶ Now in the second year of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem, in the second month, began Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and the remnant of their brethren the priests and the Levites, and all they that were come out of the captivity unto Jerusalem; and appointed the Levites, from twenty years old and upward, to set forward the work of the house of the LORD.

solemnity was to have the precedence, and be offered in the first place (see Numb. xxviii. 3, 4, &c.).

Ver. 7. They gave money also unto the masons, and to the carpenters;] To prepare materials for the building.

And meat, and drink, and oil, unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre,] Who wanted these things more than money, as appears by the history of Solomon's building (1 Kings v. 10).

To bring cedar trees from Lebanon] As they had done in the days of Solomon (1 Kings v. 9).

According to the grant that they had of Cyrus] Who commanded, I suppose, those of Tyre and Zidon to assist them.

Ver. 8. In the second year of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem,] That is, to the place where the house of God formerly stood.

In the second month,] All the time before this, in the latter end of the last year, was spent, it is probable, in removing the rubbish, and preparing the ground for laying the foundation, as much as the winter would permit: which was not a season to begin the work, but after the passover, I presume, they entered upon it.

Began Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak,] Here Zerubbabel is put before Jeshua, as ver. 2, Jeshua was put before him: whereby we learn they were of equal dignity, in the account of the Jews. For Zerubbabel was not a king, but a governor of the province of Judea, under the king of Persia, as Nehemiah was (ch. v. 14, 15), under whom there were princes and rulers, that is, the heads of families (ch. ix. 2), and below them there were "captains of thousands," &c. and other subaltern "officers" (ch. x. 8, 14); and after all, in the fourth place, "the great congregation;" which Bertram makes account was the government of the Jews after their return from the captivity (see him, De Repub. Jud. cap. 13, where he undertakes to make out the four orders from Neh. v. 7, &c.).

And appointed the Levites, from twenty years old and upward,] For since the time of David, they were thought fit at twenty years of age to attend the service of God in his house.

Ver. 9. Then stood Jeshua] Not Jeshua the high-priest before mentioned, but another Jeshua, who was a Levite, mentioned ch. ii. 40.

Kadmiel and his sons, the sons of Judah, together,] Who is called there Hodaviah.

To set forward the workmen] They being made overseers of the work.

The sons of Henadad, with their sons and their br

10 And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the LORD, they set the priests in their apparel with trumpets, and the Levites the sons of Asaph with cymbals, to praise the LORD, after the ordinance of David king of Israel.

11 And they sung together by course, in praising and giving thanks unto the LORD; because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever toward Israel. And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the LORD, because the foundation of the house of the LORD was laid.

then the Levites.] These were afterward added to the forenamed, as their assistants.

Ver. 10. And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord, they set the priests, &c. with cymbals, to praise the Lord,] While the sacrifices, I suppose, at the same time were offered, they sung praise to God with such instruments as they had: which were only cymbals, for it is likely they had not yet got harps and lutes. The apocryphal Esdras saith, they laid the foundation in the new moon; but Calvinus thinks it more probable to have been laid the day after, the new moon being a festival.

After the ordinance of David] See 1 Chron. xvi. 7; xxv. 1.

Ver. 11. They sung together by course] That is, answered one to another: for from hence was derived the manner of praying and praising God in the Christian service alternately, as Mr. Mede observes, book i. discourse xvi. where he notes how the seraphims cried one to another, saying, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts," &c. Isa. vi. 3.

In praising and giving thanks unto the Lord;] Thus many of the Psalms of David begin, cvii. cxviii. and cxxxvi. which last psalm, it is probable, was now sung entirely, in every verse of which these words are repeated, "his mercy endureth for ever."

And all the people shouted with a great shout,] That is, every one expressed their thankfulness and joy, in such manner as they were able; the priests and Levites with singing and music, and the people with shouting, which is a natural expression of joy, and as acceptable as the most artificial composures.

12 But many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men, that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice; and many shouted aloud for joy:

13 So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people: for the people shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off.

Ver. 12. But many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men, that had seen the first house,] As many of them might have done, it not being above threescore (or, as some compute, sixty-one) years since it was burnt. And some of them lived long after this, which was the first year of Cyrus: for some prolonged their days (as Huetius observes) till the second year of Darius Hystaspes, which was eighteen years after the first of Cyrus.

When the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice; and many shouted aloud for joy:] The younger sort shouted, but many of the ancient people disturbed their acclamations with howlings. For though the temple was intended to be built as large as the former, upon the same foundation; yet there were not such goodly stones to lay for the foundation, as there were for Solomon's (1 Kings vii. 9, 10), nor could they hope to build it so magnificently as he had done, nor was there any appearance of the divine glory, or of a priest with urim and thummim, and such-like things: which indeed were sad, but ought not to have made them weep so loud, and interrupt the public joy. Thankfulness for small beginnings would better have become them, than complaints that their condition was no better.

Ver. 13.] There was a great confusion among them by these contrary passions, which was very lamentable when God had been so very good to them all. Notwithstanding which, the young people continued to shout as loud as they could, and made the noise of their joy to be heard farther off than the others' weeping was.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The adversaries, being not accepted in the building of the temple with the Jews, endeavour to hinder it. 7 Their letter to Artaxerxes. 17 The decree of Artaxerxes. 23 The building is hindered.

1 Now when the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin heard that the children of the captivity builded the temple unto the LORD God of Israel;

2 Then they came to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, Let us build with you; for we seek your God, as ye do; and we do sacrifice unto him since the days of Esar-haddon king of Assur, which brought us up hither.

3 But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. When the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin] These were the Samaritans, who were grieved at their return (ver. 10). They being neighbours were soon informed, not only of their return from captivity, but of their building the temple.

Ver. 2. Let us build with you;] This people, no doubt, were desirous to partake of the privileges which were granted to the Jews by the king of Persia: and so not only offered their assistance towards the building of the temple, but would have been one people with them. So the following words import.

For we seek your God, as ye do;] They pretend to be of the same religion with them, which is the greatest bond of union: but in truth they were not; for though they worshipped God, yet they joined other feigned gods with him, and therefore could not be admitted into communion with them at the temple.

Since the days of Esar-haddon king of Assur, which brought us up hither.] The same with him mentioned 2 Kings xix. 39, who brought a second colony, after that brought by Shalmaneser when he first conquered them, to people the country better; and sent a priest also to instruct them, from whom they pretended to have received God's true religion.

Ver. 3. Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God;] They knew them very well of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel, as king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us.

4 Then the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building,

5 And hired counsellors against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia, even until the reign of Darius king of Persia.

6 And in the reign of Ahasuerus, in the beginning of his reign, wrote they unto him an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.

what they were; viz. a mixed people not purely of the seed of Israel, and of a medley religion, not worshipping God purely; and therefore they would have nothing to do with them. And, indeed, they soon discovered their hypocrisy by writing against the work, which they would have hindered by making divisions if they had been among them.

But we ourselves together will build—as king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us.] They resolve to admit no other people to join with them, but to pursue the grant which king Cyrus had made to them alone, and to none other. These were the two reasons why they rejected them, because they were not of the same people, and the king of Persia had granted this license to build the temple only to the Jews.

Ver. 4. Then the people of the land] That is, the forenamed Samaritans.

Weakened the hands of the people of Judah,] Discouraged them in their undertakings by false reports and slanders, and, perhaps, by threatenings.

And troubled them in building,] Laid all the impediments they could in their way, by hindering materials or provisions from coming to them, or by enticing away their workmen, or such-like means.

Ver. 5. And hired counsellors against them, to frustrate their purpose,] They bribed some of the council of the king of Persia to obstruct the work; a frequent mischief in courts, as Grotius notes: or, perhaps, there were some of the officers of the king of Persia in Samaria, Syria, and Judea, whom they corrupted to cross this design.

All the days of Cyrus] Who being engaged in war with the Lydians and Scythians, could not attend to such affairs as this; but it went on slowly: which his son Cambyses regarded not at all, being no friend of the Jews nor of religion.

Even until the reign of Darius] Till Darius the son of Hystaspes, who, killing the magi (who after Cambyses had possessed themselves of the kingdom), was made king; and marrying Atossa the daughter of Cyrus, and loving her very much, confirmed the decree of Cyrus, and followed his steps that he might stand the safer himself. It is a great controversy indeed between learned men, whether this Darius, or Darius Nothus, be here meant: and there are strong arguments on both sides, which it is an immense labour to examine, with the objections against them. It hath been lately done in brief by a judicious writer, who after all is constrained to conclude with a non liquet. But yet he thinks the most weighty reasons incline to Darius Hystaspes (see Hermannus Witsius, Miscellanea Sacra, lib. i. cap. 20).

Ver. 6. In the reign of Ahasuerus,] Who this was is very uncertain; there being many who think,

7 ¶ And in the days of Artaxerxes wrote Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their companions, unto Artaxerxes king of Persia; and the writing of the letter was written in the Syrian tongue, and interpreted in the Syrian tongue.

8 Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, wrote a letter against Jerusalem to Artaxerxes the king in this sort:

9 Then wrote Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their companions; the Dinaites, the Apharsathchites, the Tarpelites, the Apharsites, the Archevites, the Babylonians, the Susanchites, the Dehavites, and the Elamites,

10 And the rest of the nations whom the great that after Cyrus this was nomen gentilitium (as they call it), the name of all their kings (as Pharaoh was of all the kings of Egypt), who were called Xerxes, or Artaxerxes (from Ahasuerus, as Grotius thinks), besides the name they had before they came to the crown. Some therefore say this was Cambyses (so primate Usher, ad. A. M. 3476), others Darius Hystaspes, others Artaxerxes Mnemon, or Longimanus; whose disputes are very long about this matter, but leave one no more satisfied than before he began to read them.

Wrote they unto him an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.] Importing that they intended to set up for themselves, and not to depend upon the king of Persia.

Ver. 7. In the days of Artaxerxes] Who is before called Ahasuerus; which is supposed to be his Chaldee name, as Artaxerxes was his Persian. But Dr. Alix, who had examined these things, looks upon it as absurd to suppose Ahasuerus to have been the name of all the Persian kings, and takes this Artaxerxes to have been the son of Xerxes, viz. Artaxerxes Longimanus.

Wrote Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeel,—unto Artaxerxes] These men first drew up the letter, which they intended to send to the king, being governors, I suppose, under him, on this side of Euphrates; such as the Greeks call tetarechs.

And the writing of the letter was written in the Syrian tongue, and interpreted in the Syrian tongue.] The meaning may be, that they sent a brief address to the king in the Syrian tongue, and expounded their business more largely to some of his counsellors in the same tongue. Or, by the first we may understand the letter or characters, and by the other the words: so that the meaning is, it was written both in Syrian characters, and in Syrian words. For sometimes a letter or other writing is sent in the character of one language, and in words of another; as Chaldee and Syrian words are written in the Hebrew characters, and we oftentimes write Hebrew words in the English characters. But this letter was written, and was to be read in the same language.

Ver. 8. Rehum the chancellor and Shimshai the scribe wrote a letter] These two were principal persons in these countries; who either joined with the other three before mentioned in the same letter, or wrote another letter of the same import.

In this sort:] Containing the same complaint against the Jews.

Ver. 9.] These nine nations came out of Assyria, Persia, Media, Susiana, and other provinces of that vast empire; who with one consent joined in this letter or petition. For, perhaps, the king being loath to do any thing hastily upon the motion of that letter and noble Asnapper brought over, and set in the cities of Samaria, and the rest that are on this side the river, and at such a time.

11 ¶ This is the copy of the letter that they sent unto him, even unto Artaxerxes the king: Thy servants the men on this side the river, and at such a time.

12 Be it known unto the king, that the Jews which came up from thee to us, are come unto Jerusalem, building the rebellious and the bad city, and have set up the walls thereof, and joined the foundations.

13 Be it known now unto the king, that if this city be builded, and the walls set up again, then will they not pay toll, tribute, and custom, and so thou shalt endamage the revenue of the kings.

14 Now, because we have maintenance from mentioned ver. 8, sent to have the opinion of all these nations, or the principal persons among them; and of all other on this side the river Euphrates, as it here follows.

Ver. 10. And the rest of the nations whom the great and noble Asnapper brought over, and set in the cities of Samaria. Some take Asnapper to be another name for Shalmaneser, or for Esar-haddon, who sent these colonies hither. But it is more reasonable to think he was some great commander, who was intrusted by one or both of those kings to conduct them, and "bring them over" (the river Euphrates), and see them settled in these countries.

At such a time.] Which was expressed, no doubt, in the letter; but here it is only noted in general, that the year and the day were mentioned, when it was subscribed.

Ver. 11.] This was the title of their letter: the letter itself followeth.

Ver. 12.] This was a mere calumny: for they attempted no such thing as to build the walls of Jerusalem. But they speak in ambiguous words (as Huetius observes) concerning the building of this city; which in one sense was true. For they built houses, without which it could not be inhabited; but they did not go about to encompass it with walls, to defend the city against the incursions of their enemies; which was not begun till a great while after. They are fallacious words, therefore, whereby they imposed upon the king's belief, when they say, "they set up the walls thereof:" for they only set up the walls of their houses, not of their city. And there is a demonstration they did no more; for when it is said there was an order from the king, that this city should not be built, and accordingly the work was stopped, it is thus expressed (ver. 24), "then ceased the work of the house of God, which is at Jerusalem." It is not said, The work of building the walls of the city ceased, (for they were about no such thing,) but "the work of the house of God," which was all they did. Thus wicked men compass their ends by lies and fallacies; with which they prepossess men's minds against the truth. As for their calling it a "rebellious and bad city," there was some colour for it; their latter kings having rebelled against the king of Babylon. And besides, the laws and customs of the Jews were such, as would not permit them to conform to the manner of other nations; which made their neighbours have an ill opinion of them, as an unsociable people.

Ver. 13. If this city be builded,—then will they not pay toll, tribute, and custom.] They pretend the Jews would be no longer in subjection, if their city was built; but set up for themselves, as a free people.

the king's palace, and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, therefore have we sent and certified the king, 15 That search may be made in the book of the records of thy fathers: so shalt thou find in the book of the records, and know, that this city is a rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have moved sedition within the same of old time: for which cause was this city destroyed.

16 We certify the king, that if this city be builded again, and the walls thereof set up, by this means thou shalt have no portion on this side the river.

17 ¶ Then sent the king an answer unto Rehume the chancellor, and to Shimsai the scribe, and to the rest of their companions that dwell in

By the first of these words Grotius understands that which every head paid to the king, which we call poll-money; by the second, the excise (as we now speak) that was upon commodities and merchandise; and by the last, the rent which their land paid. But a late learned man thinks, the first word rather signifies that part which every man paid out of his estate, according as it was valued; the second, that which was paid for every head; and the third, that which was paid upon the highways, by every traveller who brought in wares, or carried them out (Herman. Witsius, in his Miscell. par. ii. Exerc. xi. n. 20).

So thou shalt endamage the revenue of the kings.] They pretend to study nothing but the profit of the king; and that neither he nor his successors might lose any of the duties owing to the crown.

Ver. 14. Because we have maintenance from the king's palace.] In the Hebrew it is, "we are salted with the salt of the palace;" i. e. "received their salary" from the king, as Junius translates it. For it seems, they received their stipend in salt (from whence it was called a salary), which the son of Sirach mentions among the things necessary to human life (Ecclus. xxxix. 31). And Homer calls it "a divine thing," because, as Plutarch expounds him, it seasons all food, and gives a relish to it (see Dr. Cudworth, of the Lord's supper, p. 68).

It was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour.] It did not become them who received maintenance from the king to see him wronged any way:

Therefore have we sent and certified the king.] Which they would have him think was the sole cause of their writing, to inform him in the truth.

Ver. 15.] In the chronicles of the kings that had reigned before him; whom they call his fathers, because they were his predecessors in that kingdom, wherein he now reigned. This search shows, this letter was written a long time after the edict of Cyrus. They mix some truth with abundance of falsehood: for this city could not be rebellious in old time, being subject to none; till, in latter times, it was conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, against whom they rebelled.

Ver. 16.] This was a most groundless suggestion, that they should either be able to conquer all the neighbouring countries, as far as Euphrates, or draw them all into a rebellion with them against the king.

Ver. 17.] This was a matter of such concern, that the king despatched a speedy answer to be communicated to all the people, mentioned, ver. 9, 10.

Ver. 18.] It was read, in all likelihood, before the king in council.

Samaria, and unto the rest beyond the river, Peace, and at such a time.

18 The letter which ye sent unto us hath been plainly read before me.

19 And I commanded, and search hath been made, and it is found that this city of old time hath made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein.

20 There have been mighty kings also over Jerusalem, which have ruled over all countries beyond the river; and toll, tribute, and custom, was paid unto them.

21 Give ye now commandment to cause these men to cease, and that this city be not builded, [Ver. 19. Search hath been made.] In the public records (see ch. v. 17; vi. 1, 2; Esther ii. 23; vi. 1).

And it is found that this city of old time hath made insurrection against kings, &c.] One instance or two of it, in latter times, served to fasten this odious character upon them; as if they had been always guilty of these crimes.

Ver. 20. There have been mighty kings also over Jerusalem, which have ruled over all countries beyond the river;] Such, indeed, were David and Solomon; who, as their records showed, ruled over all countries on this side Euphrates.

And toll, tribute, and custom, was paid unto them.] As now they were to the king of Persia: which seemed to justify what this people suggested in their letter, ver. 16, only they wanted such mighty kings as they then had, and were never likely to have such again.

Ver. 21.] He gave no order about the temple, but only about the city; which he was made to believe they were fortifying. He kept his ears open, like a good king, to further information; which if he should have different from theirs, he might give other orders. For this was not a law of the Medes and Persians that could not be revoked; but only an edict, depending wholly upon the will and pleasure of the king, which he might have reason to alter hereafter.

Ver. 22.] By their negligence, if they permitted them to proceed to fortify Jerusalem. It is very observable, that in neither of their letters, nor in the king's answer, is there one word of the command which Cyrus gave; nor any thing said of the building of the temple: which was the great thing in which they were employed; and the building of which could be no damage to the king. But though we do not know by what trick the decree of Cyrus was now smothered, yet their silence about it proves (as the forenamed Dr. Alix suggests to me) that this complaint was moved neither in the time of Darius the First, who lived in the court of Cyrus, and married his daughter, nor of Xerxes his son, as Josephus thinks (taking Xerxes for Artaxerxes), but in the beginning of Artaxerxes Longimanus; who began to reign seventy-one years after the first of Cyrus, in which the edict was published.

Ver. 23.] They went up in haste to Jerusalem unto the Jews.] So they of the captivity are now called, though there were many Israelites among them; because they chiefly consisted of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin. But it must be noted, that all Israel (as this author speaks, ch. ii. ult.), are included under the name of Jews. For liberty was granted to them all by the edict of Cyrus (which cannot be noted too often), in virtue of which they might return when they pleased. But the holy writers mention only until another commandment shall be given from me.

22 Take heed now that ye fail not to do this: why should damage grow to the hurt of the kings?

23 ¶ Now when the copy of king Artaxerxes' letter was read before Rehun, and Shimshai the scribe, and their companions, they went up in haste to Jerusalem, unto the Jews, and made them to cease by force and power.

24 Then ceased the work of the house of God which is at Jerusalem. So it ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius king of Persia.

those who returned in a body: after which the prophets admonish those who remained in captivity to return to their own land; as we see in the book of Zechariah.

And made them to cease by force.] They threatened, I suppose, to force them to desist, if they did not presently obey the king's order: which was only that the city should not be built: but the temple being a part of it, they would have it understood that it was comprehended in this order.

Ver. 21. Then ceased the work of the house of God which is at Jerusalem.] It did not quite cease; for when the Jews understood that this edict did not prohibit the building of the temple, but only of the city, they went on with their work again without asking any leave; since they knew Artaxerxes did not forbid it. But it went on so slowly, that in a manner it ceased, till the beginning of the reign of Darius, as it here follows.

So it ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius.] They that take Darius Nothus to be here meant, are pressed with very great difficulties. For, from the first year of Cyrus, who gave order for the building of the temple, till the sixth year of Darius Nothus, in which they suppose it was finished, there were at least a hundred and thirteen years, as Scaliger and Calvisius make account: but as others think, a hundred and seventeen; and, according to Cocceius, a hundred forty and two. Now all this time Zerubbabel was in the government of Judea, and Jeshua in the high-priesthood: but so long an authority in church or state was never heard of in any age; and they must have lived some time before and after, and consequently they must be of a vast age: and therefore so long a space was not between the beginning and the conclusion of this work. Besides, Haggai supposes (ch. ii. 4), that some remembered the glory of the first house, and compared it with the glory of the second: which, if this was in the sixth year of Darius Nothus, they must be at least a hundred and fourscore years old; which is not likely. Several solutions are given to this, which do not satisfy those who believe Darius Hystaspes is here meant: whose second year was the eighteenth after the first of Cyrus, as Huetius reckons: and this is the most ancient opinion. But it is built only upon the authority of Josephus, who was followed by many after the second century: but before, they took this Darius to be Darius Ochus, as Dr. Alix assures me, who thinks the long life of Zerubbabel and Jeshua is no objection against it; but is to be looked upon as an extraordinary effect of the divine goodness, for the re-establishment of the commonwealth, and of the worship of God: as the life of Jehoiada was prolonged for the same reason (2 Chron. xxiv. 15).

CHAPTER V.

1 Zerubbabel and Jeshua, incited by Haggai and Zechariah, set forward the building of the temple. 3 Tatnai and Shethar-boznai could not hinder the Jews. 6 Their letter to Darius against the Jews.

1 THEN the prophets, Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo, prophesied unto the Jews that were in Judah and Jerusalem in the name of the God of Israel, even unto them.

2 Then rose up Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and began to build the house of God which is at Jerusalem: and with them were the prophets of God helping them.

3 ¶ And at the same time came to them Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and their companions, and said thus unto them, Who hath commanded you to build this house, and to make up this wall?

4 Then said we unto them after this manner, What are the names of the men that make this building?

5 But the eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews, that they could not cause them to cease, till the matter came to Darius: and then they returned answer by letter concerning this matter.

6 ¶ The copy of the letter that Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and his companions the Apharsachites, which were on this side the river, sent unto Darius the king:

7 They sent a letter unto him, wherein was written thus: Unto Darius the king, all peace.

8 Be it known unto the king, that we went into the province of Judea, to the house of the great God, which is builded with great stones, and timber is laid in the walls, and this work goeth fast on, and prospereth in their hands.

9 Then asked we those elders, and said unto them thus, Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls?

10 We asked their names also, to certify thee, that we might write the names of the men that were the chief of them.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo.] The grandchild of Iddo; for his father's name was Berachiah.

Prophesied unto the Jews—even unto them.] Or rather against them, as the Hebrew words may be interpreted: for they reproved them because they did not build the temple. They both prophesied in the second year of Darius, as appears by the beginning of their prophecies: one in the sixth month, the other in the eighth. This second year of Darius, as Dr. Alix observes to me, was a sabbatic year, from which there were seven weeks, or forty-nine days, as well for the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem, which was in the twentieth of Artaxerxes, as for settling a right policy in church and state, which was finished by Nehemiah, the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes, which was also a sabbatic year. And from this second of Darius, whom God gave order by these precepts to set upon this work, he thinks, is the true beginning of the sixty-two weeks (spoken of, Dan. ix.), till the appearing of the Messiah.

Ver. 2. Then rose up Zerubbabel—Jeshua—and began to build the house of God] It had been begun a good while ago, but went on very slowly, till these great men, excited by the prophets, set the work forward.

With them were the prophets of God helping them.] Calling upon them to labour strenuously in the work: for God was with them, to protect, defend, and prosper them (Hag. i. 13, 14; ii. 4).

Ver. 3.] These were men in authority under the king of Persia, who managed the public affairs in these countries; but seem to have been of a better spirit than Rehum, and the rest mentioned in the foregoing chapter; who, it is likely, were either dead, or put out of their places by this new king. They fairly question them by what authority they built the temple, and the wall about it: for they do not mean the wall of the city, which was not building.

Ver. 4.] Many take these to be still the words of Tatnai, and his companions. But it is more natural to take them for the answer of the Jews: who not only told them by what authority they built the temple, but also gave them the names of those who were the great undertakers of the work; after which it is likely they inquired, ver. 10. But then the word "what," is not the note of an interrogation, but it is to be translated, "We said unto them after this manner, What were the names," &c. From which place Huetius argues, that he who wrote this chapter was now present when this question was asked, and answer made to it; and therefore Ezra was not the writer: for this was in the second year of Darius, and he did not come to Jerusalem till the seventh year of Artaxerxes, called Longimanus (ch. vii. 1, 8.)

Ver. 5.] By the favour and good providence of God, the king's ministers in those parts became their friends, so far, as not to prohibit them to go on with their work: but referred the matter to the consideration of Darius himself; to whom they make a very fair and honest report of the case. The matter being laid before Darius, they received answer from him by letter what should be done in it.

Ver. 6.] The Apharsachites were one of the nations mentioned before in the former letter to Artaxerxes (ch. iv. 9), of which, perhaps, these two great men were.

Ver. 7.] They seem to write with greater affection than the former did, wishing the king all prosperity and happiness, which the other did not, but only called themselves his servants (ch. iv. 11).

Ver. 8. To the house of the great God.] So the Jews spake to distinguish their God from all others, who were the gods only of small countries, every one of which had their particular gods.

Which is builded with great stones.] The Talmudists, Jarchi, and Kimchi, and others, translate it marble stones, and the LXX. choice stones.

This work goeth fast on, and prospereth] It was advanced so far, and such diligence was used, that if a stop was not put to it, it would be speedily finished.

Ver. 9, 10.] They made a very diligent inquiry, that they might give the king a perfect account of the matter, and he might the better judge of it.

11 And thus they returned us answer, saying, We are the servants of the God of heaven and earth, and build the house that was builded these many years ago, which a great king of Israel builded and set up.

12 But after that our fathers had provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, he gave them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away into Babylon.

13 But in the first year of Cyrus the king of Babylon, the same king Cyrus made a decree to build this house of God.

14 And the vessels also of gold and silver of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple, that was in Jerusalem, and brought them into the temple of Babylon, those did Cyrus the king take out of the temple of Babylon, and they were delivered unto one whose name was Sheshbazzar, whom he had made governor;

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is in Jerusalem, and let the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then came the same Sheshbazzar, and laid the foundation of the house of God which is in Jerusalem: and since that time, even until now, hath it been in building, and yet it is not finished.

17 Now therefore, if it seem good to the king, let there be search made in the king's treasure house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that a decree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send his pleasure to us concerning this matter.

Ver. 11.] They own their religion which was of very ancient standing; their God having been worshipped many ages ago in this house which was built by Solomon.

Ver. 12.] They give them a short account how it came to be destroyed for their sins, and how they were punished on that account.

Ver. 13—16.] These last words show it had gone on very slowly and negligently ever since the first of Cyrus, they being in a poor condition, and hindered in the work by the Samaritans; after which the people grew sluggish, being set upon building their own houses, which they carried on with greater earnestness than the house of God, as Haggai reproves them. However in these last verses, the Jews gave Tatnai a faithful account of the whole matter: and he very worthily represented it to the king, as they informed him, without any addition or diminution of his own. For he did not accuse them of building the walls of Jerusalem; which shows, he and his companions were not their enemies; but impartially wrote what they affirmed to be true.

Ver. 17. Let there be search made in the king's treasure house, which is there at Babylon.] Where the records of the kingdom were kept very carefully, as the treasures used to be.

Whether it be so, that a decree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house] It is likely the elders desired the records might be searched and examined, whether they said true or not; and accordingly, the governors reported their desires to the king, as a speedy way to be satisfied about this matter. For these do not seem to be like the Samaritans in the foregoing chapter, who endeavoured to obstruct the work, but were only desirous to be informed of the truth of what the Jews pretended, that so the building of the temple might either be permitted or prohibited, according as the king found the grant of Cyrus to be.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Darius, finding the decree of Cyrus, maketh a new decree for the advancement of the building. 13 By the help of the enemies, and the directions of the prophets, the temple is finished. 16 The feast of the dedication is kept, 19 and the passover.

1 THEN Darius the king made a decree, and search was made in the house of the rolls, where the treasures were laid up in Babylon.

2 And there was found at Achmetha, in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, a roll, and therein was a record thus written:

3 In the first year of Cyrus the king, the same

Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid; the height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits;

4 With three rows of great stones, and a row

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1.] In the house where the records of the kingdom were kept: but by what follows, it appears that in Babylon they found nothing.

Ver. 2.] They searched therefore at Achmetha, which was afterward called Ecbatana, where the kings of Persia sometimes kept their courts: and there was found a volume concerning the affairs of Judea, wherein was the following record. This argued a great goodness in Darius, that he did not presently decree against them, because nothing that they alleged was found in Babylon; but caused a search to be made in another place, where he knew records were preserved.

Ver. 3. In the first year of Cyrus the king] This, perhaps, was the inscription of the following memorial.

The height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits;] Or rather, "the length thereof," as these last words may be translated. They had liberty to make it of these dimensions if they pleased, but no bigger: and these exceeded the proportions of Solomon's temple, if we suppose it to have been thirty cubits in height, except the porch, which was a hundred and twenty. But I have shown elsewhere, that it is probable all the temple of Solomon was in length a hundred and twenty cubits, and this house was but half so high. This Josephus saith, who saw this second temple of new timber: and let the expenses be given out of the king's house:

5 And also let the golden and silver vessels of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took forth out of the temple which is at Jerusalem, and brought unto Babylon, be restored, and brought again unto the temple which is at Jerusalem, every one to his place, and place them in the house of God.

6 Now therefore, Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai, and your companions the Apharsachites, which are beyond the river, be ye far from thence:

7 Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews build this house of God in his place.

(lib. xv. Archæolog. cap. 14). Ἐρθεῖ δ' αὐτῷ πρὸς τὸ μέγεθος εἰς ὧσος ἐξήκοντα πηγυεῖς, &c., "It wanted (speaking of this temple) to make it great, sixty cubits in height; for so much higher was the first temple which Solomon built."

Ver. 4.] He ordered it to be built at his own charge, for so he saith God commanded him (ch. i. 2), "God hath charged me to build him a house at Jerusalem." Yet we do not find that the Jews made use of his bounty, as Pellicanus observes, because they would not provoke too much the envy of the Samaritans, who were angry at his kindness to them. And therefore they carried on the work at their own cost, till Darius now commanded they should have what they desired out of his revenue, to finish what they had begun.

Ver. 5.] Thus far the decree of Cyrus is recited, which justified the truth of all the allegations of the Jews in the foregoing chapter. Now follows the decree of Darius thereupon.

Ver. 6. Now therefore, Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai,] It is most likely that he set down in his letter to these men the forementioned decree of Cyrus, as it was found in the records, and then gave the following command.

Be ye far from thence:] Come not near Jerusalem to give them any hinderance or disturbance.

Ver. 7. Let the work of this house of God alone;] Obstruct not the work, but rather further it.

Let the governor of the Jews—build this house of God in his place.] In the place where it stood before. Zerubbabel is constantly called the governor of the Jews, never their king (Hag. i. 1, 14; ii. 2, 21), and so some of his successors (Mal. i. 9). For in Babylon, as Josephus relates, he was οὐρανοφύλαξ, "a keeper of the king's body," and τῶν αἰχμαλώτων Ἰουδαίων ἡγούμενος, "the captain of the captive Jews" who in one word was called αἰχμαλωτοφύλαξ. Therefore he was appointed by Cyrus, and afterward by Darius, to govern the province of Judea in the king's name, and at his charge to see the temple built at Jerusalem. But learned men give no credit to what Josephus says of his great office in Babylon.

Ver. 8. I make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews] Whose names they had given in to him (ch. v. 10).

For the building of this house] As he had ordered they should not be hindered, so he made a farther order that they should give them assistance in what they were about.

Forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not hindered.] That the work might not stop for want of money to go forward, which he ordered to be paid them without delay.

Ver. 9. For the burnt-offerings of the God of heaven,] So he had learned to call the God of Israel

8 Moreover I make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God: that of the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not hindered.

9 And that which they have need of, both young bullocks, and rams, and lambs, for the burnt-offerings of the God of heaven, wheat, salt, wine, and oil, according to the appointment of the priests which are at Jerusalem, let it be given them day by day without fail;

10 That they may offer sacrifices of sweet savours unto the God of heaven, and pray for the life of the king, and of his sons.

11 Also I have made a decree, that whosoever shall alter this word, let timber be pulled down after the example of Cyrus, who acknowledges God had made him so great as he had Darius.

Wheat, salt, wine, and oil,] For meat-offerings to attend upon the burnt-offerings.

According to the appointment of the priests] This was a great honour done to God's ministers, who might have whatsoever they desired for his service.

Let it be given them day by day without fail:] That the morning and evening burnt-sacrifices might never fail to be offered every day.

Ver. 10. That they may offer sacrifices of sweet savours unto the God of heaven,] From this place principally Mr. Mede proves at large, that sacrifices were a rite of supplication unto God; such ones namely, whereby the supplicant came not with a naked petition, but presented something unto his God, whereby to find favour in his sight, and obtain his petition: whence we find Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, where they pitched their tents, to have built an altar also (which was a place for sacrifice), and there "called upon the name of the Lord." And by this place it appears, that the sacrifices and oblations presented by gentiles were not refused by the Jews, when they desired their prayers to God for them. The Hebrew doctors indeed say, that all such sacrifices were eucharistical, not bistorical, that is, sacrifices of thanksgiving or acknowledgment to God (being burnt-offerings), not sacrifices of expiation, or sin-offerings. So Maimonides, in his treatise of sacrifices, "All the eucharistical sacrifices of the gentiles were burnt-offerings." There is a memorable passage in Josephus (lib. ii. De Bello Judaico, cap. 31), concerning Eleazar the priest, who, being admonished to admit the sacrifices and oblations of the gentiles, acknowledged that their ancestors adorned the temple with gifts offered by the gentiles, always accepting τῶν ἐξωθεν ἐσθίων δορῶν καὶ θυσίας, "the gifts and sacrifices of external nations."

The king, and—his sons.] Here it must be noted that Darius the First had no sons, but Darius the Second had, viz. Artaxerxes Mnemon, and Cyrus the younger, who were great men, and reigned in some manner with him. Artaxerxes Mnemon (as Dr. Alix makes account) was thirty-five years old in the second year of Darius; and Cyrus (who was slain in a battle against his brother) was a little younger.

Ver. 11. Whosoever shall alter this word, let timber be pulled down from his house, and being set up, let him be hanged thereon:] To make the decree more valid and better observed, he added this penalty; that if any acted contrary to it, a beam should be taken out of his own house, and, being set up, he should be hanged thereon. But Lud. De Dieu observes, that there is no construction in these words, which we from his house, and being set up, let him be hanged thereon; and let his house be made a dunghill for this.

12 And the God that hath caused his name to dwell there, destroy all kings and people, that shall put to their hand to alter and to destroy this house of God which is at Jerusalem. I Darius have made a decree; let it be done with speed.

13 ¶ Then Tatnai, governor on this side the river, Shethar-boznai, and their companions, according to that which Darius the king had sent, so they did speedily.

14 And the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo: and they builded, and finished it, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes king of Persia.

render, "being set up;" therefore he would have them translated after the LXX, "and standing, let him be beat upon it;" whipped, as we say, at a post, as the manner was among the Persians and other nations. Only among the Jews they that were beaten did not stand, but lay down (Deut. xxv. 2). But if a greater punishment be here meant, then he makes the first words refer to the wood, and the latter to the man, in this manner, "and from above let it fall upon him." That is, the stake, being lifted up, shall be struck into his body, and come out at his fundament; which was a cruel punishment among the eastern people, and still continued there.

Let his house be made a dunghill for this.] The pulling down of a beam from his house, supposes the pulling down of the house, which he orders should not be built again, but the place where it stood be made a dunghill. Thus the Romans pulled down the houses of very wicked men for their greater disgrace; of Sp. Cassius, for instance, and of Ovidius Pollio.

Ver. 12.] He was touched with such a sense of the greatness of the God of the Jews, that he prays, He who had all power in heaven and earth, would not only punish all those kings over whom he had no power (not being his subjects), who went about to obstruct this work, but destroy both them and their people. He concludes as he began, that forthwith this decree should be executed (ver. 8).

Ver. 13.] They were as punctual in executing his decrees as he desired, and that without any delay.

Ver. 14. They prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo.] Who directed and encouraged them in their work; representing to them, it is likely, the wonderful goodness of God, who had inclined the heart of the king of Persia to be so highly favourable to them.

According to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius.] If this Darius was he called Hystaspes, then it was Artaxerxes Longimanus his successor that is here meant; who, though he found the temple built, yet sent Ezra to beautify it, and to see things done there according to their law (ch. vii. 12, 21, 27). But some think him to be Artaxerxes Mnemon, who reigned with his father many years, and lived till he was ninety-four years old (Plut.).

Ver. 15.] Now they did in four years more than they had done in many years before. For, partly by their own poverty, and partly by the corruption of the courtiers of Persia, who hindered the necessary supplies; and partly by the envy of the Samaritans, who retarded them by their false accusations, and by 15 And this house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king.

16 ¶ And the children of Israel, the priests and the Levites, and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of this house of God with joy, 17 And offered at the dedication of this house of God an hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs; and for a sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel.

18 And they set the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God, which is at Jerusalem; as it is written in the book of Moses.

19 And the children of the captivity kept the passover upon the fourteenth day of the first month.

their interest in the governors of Syria; and partly by the sluggishness of the Jews, and their inclination to mind their own private interest more than the public good, the work went on so slowly, that not only the prophets reprehended them for it, but God punished them severely, by scarcity of provision, as we read in the prophet Haggai: but now, by the favour of this king, and by the zeal of God's prophets, it went on apace, and was speedily finished.

Ver. 16.] By the "children of Israel" are to be understood not only the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin (who were the chief) but all those of other tribes, many of which, from the time of Cyrus to the second of Darius, were come to their own country, though we have not a particular account of their names. This appears from the next verse. All these, together with the priests and Levites, agreed to dedicate this house with festival joy. Thus the temple at first was dedicated (1 Kings viii. 2; 2 Chron. vii. 4, &c.). That is, after it was built, being designed only for sacred uses, now they showed, by an example, how it should be used, which is the proper and simple sense of the word dedicate, as Selden explains it (lib. iii. De Synedr. cap. 13, sect. 5). But the Hebrew doctors observe, that by these sacrifices now offered, there was no new sanctity given to the place, but the old only restored.

Ver. 17. And offered at the dedication of this house of God, an hundred bullocks, &c.] A hecatomb was the noblest sacrifice among the heathen, of which we find often mention in their books; and with that the Jews began the dedication of the temple: to which they made many additional offerings, some of which were peace-offerings, on which they feasted, as the hundred bullocks, I suppose, were whole burnt-offerings.

According to the number of the tribes of Israel.] For it appears by many places before recited, that though the ten tribes were carried captive by Shalmaneser, yet many of them remained in their country, and were carried away by Nebuchadnezzar, together with Judah and Benjamin, with whom they returned out of Babylon, as many others of the ten tribes did, who were carried away at the taking of Samaria (see ch. ii. of this book, ver. 70; 2 Chron. xxxi. 5, 10, 11; xxxiv. 7, 9; xxxv. 3, 17; Ezra viii. 35; Acts xxvi. 7).

Ver. 18.] Where directions are given for their service, Numb. iii. 6; viii. 9, 10.

Ver. 19.] As was enjoined Exod. xii. 6. The Jews had the free exercise of their religion in Babylon (as I shall observe more largely afterward), where they circumcised their children, and also made proselytes;

20 For the priests and the Levites were purified together, all of them were pure, and killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves.

21 And the children of Israel, which were come again out of captivity, and all such as had separated themselves unto them from the filthiness of but the "children of the captivity" signified those who were come back from it, and ate the passover, which they could not have done if they had not been circumcised.

Ver. 20.] They had time to purify themselves between the day wherein the temple was perfected, and the day wherein this feast was to be kept, there being above a month between.

Ver. 21.] That is, all proselytes, who had entirely made themselves subject to the law of Moses; for others might not eat of it, but they might (Exod. xii. 48, 49). Now, as Pellicanus observes, there were many proselytes who quite forsook their heathenish religion, and were brought to the knowledge and worship of the true God, by the favour of Cyrus and Darius, kings of Persia. They had kept the passover before this, being in the place which God chose, and having an altar where they might sacrifice; but it was not a quiet and settled time, and they had much occasion to be among the heathen; and so, it is likely, could not easily purify themselves to eat of it, as they did now.

the heathen of the land, to seek the LORD God of Israel, did eat, 22 And kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with joy: for the LORD had made them joyful, and turned the heart of the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel.

Ver. 22.] God filled their hearts with joy, by turning the heart of the king, who now reigned over all the kingdoms which were formerly under the power of the Assyrians, who had grievously oppressed them, as the Persians who came in their stead now highly favoured them; who having conquered Babylon, were called the kings of Assyria. For we find in these books, the king of Persia, after that conquest, is called by the name of the king of Babylon (see Neh. xiii. 6), as the same king of Persia is here called the king of Assyria: for the kings formerly called by these names were possessed of vast dominions over many large provinces; which the Persian kings enjoying, they retained the ancient names of the former kings. For, as Joh. Vorstius observes, in his Dissert. De Quatuor Monarchiis, sect. 9, the kingdom of Babylon was not extinguished by little and little, but all at once: Cyrus possessed himself of it entirely, simul et semel; and, adding a vast dominion to the small one he had before, was called the king of those dominions which he conquered.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Ezra goeth up to Jerusalem. 11 The gracious commission of Artaxerxes to Ezra. 27 Ezra blesseth God for his favour.

1 Now after these things, in the reign of Artaxerxes king of Persia, Ezra the son of Seraiah, the son of Azariah, the son of Hilkiah,

2 The son of Shallum, the son of Zadok, the son of Ahiab,

3 The son of Amariah, the son of Azariah, the son of Meraioth,

4 The son of Zerariah, the son of Uzzi, the son of Bukki,

5 The son of Abishua, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the chief priest:

6 This Ezra went up from Babylon; and he was a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1. In the reign of Artaxerxes] The same Artaxerxes, I suppose, mentioned in the foregoing chapter, ver. 14. But R. Solomon and Aben Ezra fancy he was Darius before named.

Ezra the son of Seraiah, the son of Azariah, the son of Hilkiah,] He was descended from Seraiah, but not immediately begotten by him; for Seraiah perished when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldeans (2 Kings xxv. 18, 21): at which time Ezra, it is likely, was not in being; but he was his grandson, or great-grandson, and his descent is mentioned from him, because he was an eminent person, who flourished before the destruction of the temple, whereas his father or grand-father lived obscurely in their captivity (see 1 Chron. vi. 15).

Ver. 2, 3.] In this genealogy there are six generations omitted, between Azariah and Meraioth (as before there were some between Seraiah and Ezra), which are to be supplied out of 1 Chron. vi. 7, &c. which Kimchi, as I there observed, thinks was done for brevity's sake. For Ezra being author of that book, which was written first, and then of this, might think it needless to repeat all that he had there said at large.

Ver. 5.] See 1 Chron. vi. 4, 5.

Ver. 6. This Ezra went up from Babylon;] Not only by the king's leave and his commission, but with great authority, as appears from the end of this verse, and from ver. 25.

He was a ready scribe] He calls himself a scribe (as Buxtorf notes in his Tiberias,) not from writing and describing, but from declaring and explicating, those things that are contained in the scripture. For as sepher signifies a book, so sopher signifies one skilful and learned in that book, an interpreter and teacher out of it. And there being no book comparable to the book of the law, therefore sopher became a name of great dignity, and signified one that taught God's law, and expounded it to his people. Thus, in the New Testament, γραμματεῖς, "the scribes," were those that instructed the people. For when our Saviour is said to have taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes, it plainly shows that they were teachers, though not with such authority. See Jer. viii. 8, where the word scribe is thus used. And he calls himself a ready scribe, because he was expert in the law, and understood it thoroughly, both in all things belonging to the priesthood, and to the civil power; in which he was so well versed, that he could the LORD God of Israel had given: and the king granted him all his request, according to the hand of the LORD his God upon him.

7 And there went up some of the children of Israel, and of the priests, and the Levites, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, unto Jerusalem, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes the king.

8 And he came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the king.

9 For upon the first day of the first month began he to go up from Babylon, and on the first day of the fifth month came he to Jerusalem, according to the good hand of his God upon him.

10 For Ezra had prepared his heart to seek give a ready account of any part of it. And it is thought by some, he gathered together the most perfect copies of the law, and put out an accurate edition of it with all the prophetic books, and such poems as had any sacred authority among them, adding the history of following times. But Josephus saith nothing of it, and therefore it is looked upon by others as a Jewish chimera, who attribute many other things to him without ground.

The king granted him all his request.] Some think to rebuild Jerusalem, of which there is no mention any where; therefore he only granted him power, as he desired, to do such things as are mentioned below (ver. 14, 15, &c.).

According to the hand of the Lord his God upon him.] For God was so favourable to him, as to incline the king to give a gracious answer to his petition. And, indeed, these kings of Persia were so exceedingly kind to the Jews, that, in a grateful remembrance of the favour they showed them, in permitting them to build the temple again, and assisting them in it, they caused a figure of the city and palace of Shushan (where the kings of Persia resided) to be made in brass, in the east gate of the temple, which looked towards Persia; as we read in the Talmud, in the treatise called Middoth.

Ver. 7. There went up some of the children of Israel.] Of the ten tribes, or such Jews as remained still in Babylon, after leave given them by Cyrus to return into their own country.

And of the priests, and the Levites—unto Jerusalem.] This was the second company that went up to Jerusalem, consisting of such-like persons as went up first with Zerubbabel, Jeshua, and others (ch. ii. 2, 70). For hearing the temple was rebuilt, and the worship of God restored, we may very well think many went along with Ezra, who had not such a strong motive to go in the first of Cyrus.

Ver. 9. For upon the first day of the first month began he to go up from Babylon.] On the first day of the first month they went from Babylon to the river Ahava, where they spent three days in taking a view of the people that accompanied him (ch. viii. 15). After eight days more, part of which they had spent in fasting and prayer, they went forward (ch. viii. 21, 22, 31).

According to the good hand of his God upon him.] He had great reason to acknowledge the favour of God to them in conducting them safe to Jerusalem; for it was a long way thither, and a difficult journey, and they had many impediments (going with wives and children, flocks and herds), and were not without enemies to waylay them, whom he boasted he did not fear, but relied on the divine protection, as he told the king, ch. viii. 22.

the law of the LORD, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments.

11 ¶ Now this is the copy of the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the LORD, and of his statutes to Israel.

12 Artaxerxes, king of kings, unto Ezra the priest, a scribe of the law of the God of heaven, perfect peace and at such a time.

13 I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel, and of his priests and Levites, in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee.

14 Forasmuch as thou art sent of the king, and of his seven counsellors, to inquire concern-

Ver. 10.] He was intent upon this business, on which he had set his heart, as we speak, bending his thoughts and studies this way. For so the Hebrew word cun (which we translate prepare) signifies, to establish, confirm, and make things fixed and immoveable. And first, he set himself to “seek the law of the Lord,” that is, to inquire into it, and search after the will of God therein contained, that he might understand it himself: and then, like a good man, he set his heart to do what God commanded, and put in practice what he knew to be his duty, whereby he was the better qualified to teach others what he knew and did himself, which was the next thing to which he diligently attended. This was the right method of doing good, in which Nehemiah tells us he proceeded (ch. viii. beginning). Some think statutes and judgments are the same thing, comprehending all the precepts of Moses; but others take them to have a distinct meaning: the first signifying the ceremonial law about the divine worship; and the second, the moral precepts concerning common honesty and civil life.

Ver. 11.] Here Ezra declares that he was no ordinary doctor of the law, but of eminent rank among them, who had studied the law thoroughly, and was able in every case to determine what was to be done: or (as some understand the latter part of this verse), he was perfectly skilled in the words or language wherein the law was written (which in the captivity many perhaps had forgotten), and in the sense of every law. But this, I think, is not to be supposed, that they had forgotten their own language.

Ver. 12. Artaxerxes, king of kings.] For he had several kings who were subject to him.

Unto Ezra the priest, a scribe of the law.] So Ezra, I suppose, was wont to be styled by the Jews, who never spake of him, but as a man of greater dignity and honour than others.

Perfect peace, and at such a time.] On such a year and day, as was mentioned in the date of the letter.

Ver. 13.] None might leave his country without the king's permission, which he here gives to all the Jewish nation who were so disposed.

Ver. 14. Forasmuch as thou art sent of the king, and of his seven counsellors.] By whose advice this decree being made, it gave it the greater authority; for these were the principal men of the kingdom, as appears from the first of Esther, ver. 14.

To inquire concerning Judah and Jerusalem, according to the law of thy God.] By this composition he gave him authority to make inquisition in Judea, whether every thing there was done conformably to the law of Moses; that is, he granted to the Jewish nation an αὐτονομία, “a liberty to live by their own laws,” and to judge all causes according to them;

ing Judah and Jerusalem, according to the law of thy God which is in thine hand;

15 And to carry the silver and gold, which the king and his counsellors have freely offered unto the God of Israel, whose habitation is in Jerusalem,

16 And all the silver and gold that thou canst find in all the province of Babylon, with the free-will offering of the people, and of the priests, offering willingly for the house of their God which is in Jerusalem:

17 That thou mayest buy speedily with this money bullocks, rams, lambs, with their meat-offerings and their drink-offerings, and offer them upon the altar of the house of your God which is in Jerusalem.

18 And whatsoever shall seem good to thee, and to thy brethren, to do with the rest of the silver and the gold, that do after the will of your God.

19 The vessels also that are given thee for the service of the house of thy God, those deliver thou before the God of Jerusalem.

and, in the conclusion, granted them also an ἀποδομία, "a power to sentence men according to their own law" (ver. 25, 26).

Which is in thine hand;] He intrusted Ezra with this great power of being supreme inquisitor and judge, because he was so very well skilled in the law (which is meant by having it in his hand), which he had in such readiness, and was so very conversant in it, that he was able presently to determine and judge whether it were observed.

Ver. 15.] This is an argument that they had a high opinion of the God of Israel, and desired his favour, though they did not worship him alone, but imagined other gods had some power, though not so great as he.

Ver. 16.] He gave them leave to carry away all the money they could procure (so the word we translate find is used in other places) in his own country of Babylon, as well as what the Jews, who had a mind to stay still there, should offer for the service of the temple at Jerusalem.

Ver. 17.] That they might pray for the prosperity of the king and of his sons, as Darius ordered, ch. vi. 9, 10.

Ver. 18.] He authorizes Ezra to take other priests to his assistance, in disposing of the money that was not laid out in sacrifices; only he would have it employed to some sacred use.

Ver. 19.] He speaks of him as if he thought him a particular God, but afterward speaks of him as the God of heaven, as he had done before, ver. 12, which is a sign he took him to be the most high God, who had a special affection for Jerusalem, because he was there worshipped.

Ver. 20. Whatsoever more shall be needful] Either for the reparation (if any was wanting), or for the adorning of the house (see ver. 27).

Out of the king's treasure house.] Out of his exchequer, as we now speak.

Ver. 21. Do make a decree to all the treasurers] All the receivers, and other officers employed about the king's revenue.

That whatsoever Ezra the priest,—shall require of you, it be done speedily.] This was a wonderful large concession, that he should have whatsoever he desired; and that they should not make him attend upon them, and wait long for it, but furnish him immediately.

20 And whatsoever more shall be needful for the house of thy God, which thou shalt have occasion to bestow, bestow it out of the king's treasure house.

21 And I, even I Artaxerxes the king, do make a decree to all the treasurers which are beyond the river, that whatsoever Ezra the priest, the scribe of the law of the God of heaven, shall require of you, it be done speedily, 22 Unto an hundred talents of silver, and to an hundred measures of wheat, and to an hundred baths of wine, and to an hundred baths of oil, and salt without prescribing how much.

23 Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven, let it be diligently done for the house of the God of heaven: for why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons?

24 Also we certify you, that touching any of the priests and Levites, singers, porters, Nethinims, or ministers of this house of God, it shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom, upon them.

25 And thou, Ezra, after the wisdom of thy

Ver. 22.] He limits all the other expenses, except salt; without which no sacrifice could be offered: and therefore, since he would not have any sacrifice hindered, he did not prescribe any measure of that; but left them to take as much as they found necessary.

Ver. 23. Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven, let it be diligently done for the house of the God of heaven:] Here Jacobus Capellus cries out in a kind of rapture, O verba literis aureis regum palatiis inscribenda, atque adeo stylo adamantino fidelium omnium animis inculpanda! "O words to be written upon the palaces of kings in golden letters, and engraven on the minds of all the faithful with a style of adamant!" For they express an exceeding great sense of God, and of his supreme authority; and the regard that is due from the greatest kings and potentates to his most sacred commands (Historia Sacra et Exotica, ad A. M. 3543). The like is not easy to be found any where.

For why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons?] As he was afraid there would be, if the worship and service of God were here neglected through his default. An argument he was possessed with a greater dread of God's just displeasure, than the kings of Judah themselves were generally before the captivity. The mention of the king and of his sons, shows, that this agrees to Artaxerxes Mnemon exactly; but not to Xerxes (who was in Greece in the seventh year of his reign,) nor to Longimanus: but Artaxerxes Mnemon had then Ochus the husband of Esther, who was a great man, and some more. This remark I owe to the most learned Dr. Alix.

Ver. 24.] The king's revenue arose out of these three imposts, as appears by ch. iv. 13, from all which burdens, which were very great, the king freed every one of God's ministers, that they might the more cheerfully attend his service. And this was confirmed by some succeeding princes, as Bertram observes (De Republica Jud. p. 171), which the first Christian kings piously imitated, as J. Wolfius notes, "that they who watched and prayed for the public good, might be free from all other cares."

Ver. 25. After the wisdom of thy God, that is in thine hand,] According as the law of God directed, in which he was very expert (ver. 14).

God, that is in thine hand, set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God; and teach ye them that know them not.

26 And whosoever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king, let judgment be executed speedily upon him, whether it be unto death, or to banishment, or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment.

Set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people] Such as Moses ordered, Deut. xvi. 18. Here seems to be the original of the Sanhedrin, which continued but weakly till the time of the Maccabees.

Teach ye them that know them not.] Men well acquainted with the laws of God, who were able to instruct others that were ignorant. No Jewish king could have given more pious instructions. And the same Jacobus Capellus in the place above named thinks, that in this large power granted to Ezra, there was comprehended sufficient authority to build the walls of Jerusalem. But as the king did not expressly mention it, so the malignity of the Jews' enemies hindered it; and Ezra, being now grown old, was unable to cope with them. But this is not a good reason, for he lived thirteen years after this, able to stand and read the law from six to twelve of the clock.

Ver. 26. Whosoever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king.] By the "law of the king" is meant this decree, which was now made in favour of the Jews; giving them authority to execute their own laws again. As for the imperial laws Ezra had nothing to do with them, nor were the Jews to be governed by them, but by their own laws; unless any matters could not be determined by the divine laws: in that case they were to be judged by the king's law. So Joh. Vorstius understands these words disjunctively (in his Dissert. De Synedriis Hebr. sect. 36), that they should act according to the direction of the divine law; or, if any thing fell out that could not be decided by that, then according to the prescription of the laws of the king.

Let judgment be executed speedily upon him, whether it be unto death.] The Romans never allowed the Jews the power of life and death, which the Persians did. So it is commonly thought; but the contrary is plain from the Acts of the Apostles, which show they enjoyed that power, by their stoning St. Stephen.

Or to banishment, or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment.] That the word which we translate "banishment," signifies in the Chaldee (as we note in the margin of our bibles) rooting out; and therefore is by some interpreted disinheriting, or excommunicating from their society; so that he should be an outlaw, as we speak, the highest degree of which was called shammathah. And thus our Mr. Thorne-dike observes, that this rooting out is the same with that which in ch. x. 8, is called being divided or separated from the congregation of the captivity; being, indeed, a kind of temporal outlawry, unto which is joined confiscation of goods. And thus the greater excommunication among Christians is every where a temporal punishment; viz. in respect of some temporal punishment attending it in Christian states: which in Christianity is accidental, by an act of those states: but in Judaism was essential, so long as those temporal advantages, which were essential conditions of the law, were not forfeited. And this without doubt is the same punishment that is called "putting out of the synagogue" (see Rites of the Church in a Christian state, p. 28, and Review, p. 58, with Grotius, De Imper. Sum. Potest. cap. 9). I only add, that from such sentence it was in vain for them to appeal to any of the king's courts: for by this decree all matters were to be tried and finally judged by their own law.

27 ¶ Blessed be the LORD God of our fathers, which hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart, to beautify the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem:

28 And hath extended mercy unto me before the king, and his counsellors, and before all the king's mighty princes. And I was strengthened as the hand of the LORD my God was upon me, and I gathered together out of Israel chief men to go up with me.

Ver. 27.] To be so liberal in his gifts and privileges as is before expressed (ver. 15, 16, &c.).

Ver. 28. And hath extended mercy unto me] These words plainly show Ezra wrote this part of this book, if not the whole.

Before the king and his counsellors, and before all the king's mighty princes.] By whose advice and consent the large immunities before mentioned were granted to the Jewish nation.

I gathered together out of Israel chief men to go up with me.] Whose names follow in the next chapter. The marvellous kindness of the king in this grant to Ezra gave a great authority to him; and moved several of the greatest persons among the Jews still in Babylon, to resolve to accompany him to Jerusalem.

These last two verses are evidently the words of Ezra, acknowledging the divine goodness to him in giving him such favour with the king; whose words before are in the Syriac or Chaldee language; but these are in the Hebrew.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The companions of Ezra, who returned from Babylon. 15 He sendeth to Iddo for ministers for the temple. 21 He keepeth a fast. 24 He committeth the treasures to the custody of the priests. 31 From Ahava they come to Jerusalem. 33 The treasure is weighed in the temple. 36 The commission is delivered.

1 THESE are now the chief of their fathers, and this is the genealogy of them that went up with me from Babylon, in the reign of Artaxerxes the king.

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1.] Whose names he sets down to preserve their memory to future generations.

2 Of the sons of Phinehas; Gershom; of the sons of Ithamar; Daniel: of the sons of David; Hattush.

3 Of the sons of Shechaniah, of the sons of

Ver. 2. Of the sons of Phinehas; Gershom: of the sons of Ithamar; Daniel:] By the sons, he means the families of these two persons; two of which ha

4 Of the sons of Pahath-moab: Elihoenai the son of Zerahiah, and with him two hundred males.

5 Of the sons of Shechaniah: the son of Jahziel, and with him three hundred males.

6 Of the sons also of Adin; Ebed the son of Jonathan, and with him fifty males.

7 And of the sons of Elam: Jeshaiiah the son of Athaliah, and with him seventy males.

8 And of the sons of Shephatiah: Zebadiah the son of Michael, and with him fourscore males.

9 Of the sons of Joab: Obadiah the son of Jehiel, and with him two hundred and eighteen males.

10 And of the sons of Shelomith; the son of Josphiah, and with him an hundred and threescore males.

11 And of the sons of Hebai; Zechariah the son of Bebai, and with him twenty and eight males.

12 And of the sons of Azgad; Johanan the son of Hakkatan, and with him an hundred and ten males.

13 And of the last sons of Adonikam, whose names are these, Eliphelet, Jeiel, and Shemaiah, and with them threescore males.

14 Of the sons also of Bigvai; Uthai, and Zabbud, and with them seventy males.

15 ¶ And I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava; and there abode we in tents three days: and I viewed the people, and the priests, and found there none of the sons of Levi.

16 Then sent I for Eliezer, for Ariel, for Shemaiah, and for Elnathan, and for Jarib, and for Elnathan, and for Nathan, and for Zechariah, and for Meshullam, chief men; also for Joiarib, and for Elnathan, men of understanding.

17 And I sent them with commandment unto Iddo the chief at the place Casiphia, and I told them what they should say unto Iddo, and to his brethren the Nethinims, at the place Casiphia, that they should bring unto us ministers for the house of our God.

18 And by the good hand of our God upon us particularly names, Gershom and Daniel: not Daniel the prophet, but some eminent person of Ithamar's family.

Of the sons of David; Hattush.] His family was so noble, because Christ was to spring from thence, that special notice was taken of it.

Ver. 3. Of the sons of Shechaniah, of the sons of Pharosh; Zechariah:] This Shechaniah is said to be the son of Pharosh, to distinguish him from another Shechaniah mentioned ver. 5.

And with him] That is, with Zechariah.

Were reckoned by genealogy of the males an hundred and fifty.] It is not said how many there were of the other families: and we are not to think that none but males went up out of this family, and the rest that follow; for mention is made of their little ones, ver. 21, who had women, no doubt, to look after them.

Ver. 5. Of the sons of Shechaniah; the son of Jahziel, and with him three hundred males.] This was a person of great note, of whose family there went up almost twice as many as did of any other family.

Ver. 6, 7.] Concerning these, and the families that follow to ver. 15, there is little to be noted; but that out of them many went up with Zerubbabel in the reign of Cyrus (which appears by the account given in the second chapter), as now more went up with Ezra out of the very same families.

Ver. 13. And of the last sons of Adonikam.] They are called "the last sons," with respect to the first of them that went up with Zerubbabel. Or, these were the last that followed Ezra: which some look upon as a blot on Adonikam, that his family was the last that accompanied Ezra.

Ver. 15. I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava:] This seems to be the name of a river, as well as of a town, which stood on the bank of Euphrates, there where this stream emptied itself into it. Some take it for Adiabene, a city so called from Adiava, ver. 31.

There abode we in tents three days:] It is likely, that in the whole journey they lodged, not in cities and towns, but in tents, which they carried along with them; and could pitch where and when it was most commodious for them.

I viewed the people.] Took an account of their number, and of what tribe they were.

Found there none of the sons of Levi.] That is, none who were not priests; of whom there were some (ver. 29).

Ver. 16. Chief men:] Men of authority among the company, and the heads perhaps of several families. These eleven persons he sent for to come to him, that he might employ them in a message to a place, where he knew there were a great many Levites; as it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 17. And I sent them with commandment unto Iddo the chief:] Among the Levites, who dwelt at the place next mentioned, and there had the free exercise of their religion, as this and many other passages in this book plainly enough prove. And it is very probable, they had their synagogues (as they had afterward in their dispersion), or other places, where they met for religious worship. For we find the people resorting to Ezeckiel in their captivity, and him preaching to them the word of God, in many places of his book, particularly ch. xxxiii. 30, 31, &c. And Ezra, in all likelihood, was an instructor among them, as Joiarib and Elnathan also were, and Iddo, to whom these were sent. By which means many proselytes were made, who left their own country, and came with them to Jerusalem, when they returned (ch. vi. 21).

At the place Casiphia.] Several are of opinion, and particularly Stephanus Morinus lately, that this place was in the country of the Caspii, a people who gave denomination to the Caspian sea: where some of the Israelites were planted, who were carried captive by Shalmaneser, and still preserved their language and religion. But I look upon this as unlikely; the Caspian sea and the country about it being too far off for Ezra to send thither these messengers: who rather sent to a place in the province of Babylon, to which they went, and did a great deal of business, and returned in the space of twelve days. The truth is (as Dr. Alix observes), the Levites were not among the ten tribes, but in Chaldaea; and perhaps, some of them were transported into Parthia, where there was a city called Caspi, known to the old geographers.

I told them what they should say unto Iddo, and to his brethren the Nethinims, at the place Casiphia.]

they brought us a man of understanding, of the sons of Mahli, the son of Levi, the son of Israel: and Sherebiah, with his sons and his brethren, eighteen:

19 And Hashabiah, and with him Jeshaiab of the sons of Merari, his brethren and their sons, twenty:

20 Also of the Nethinims, whom David and the princes had appointed for the service of the Levites, two hundred and twenty Nethinims: all of them were expressed by name.

21 ¶ Then I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before our God, to seek of him a right way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance.

22 For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king, saying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.

23 So we fasted and besought our God for this: and he was entreated of us.

24 ¶ Then I separated twelve of the chief of the priests, Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren with them.

25 And weighed unto them the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, which the king, and his coun-

Who, it seems, were better disposed than many of the Levites, to whom they ministered. But R. Solomon and others translate the words quite otherwise; "He told them what they should say to Iddo and his brethren (or, to Achio), who were constituted in the place Casiphia." For it is plain they were not Nethinims, Iddo being called harosh, a prince, or chief, that is, among the Levites: by whose authority Ezra expected some Levites, whom he wanted to accompany him to Jerusalem, should be sent to him, as they were. Now this cannot be said of the Nethinims: for none of them were chiefs, or presidents of the Levites, but their ministers or servants, as appears from verse 20, and other places. Therefore the word Nethinim must here signify men appointed to live among the Jews of that place; or, who had their residence there.

That they should bring unto us ministers.] That is, Levites to attend upon the priests, as the Nethinims did upon the Levites.

Ver. 18. By the good hand of our God upon us.] God inclined their hearts to comply with his desire.

They brought us a man of understanding—and Sherebiah, with his sons and brethren, eighteen;.] They brought a man of understanding, viz. Sherebiah (so the words, I think, should be translated), with his sons and brethren, eighteen in number.

Ver. 19.] These were eminent persons also, though not equal to Sherebiah, who is noted as a man of great knowledge.

Ver. 20. Also of the Nethinims, whom David and the princes had appointed for the service of the Levites,] Every one knows, that the Gibeonites were appointed by Joshua to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, for the service of God's house; but a great many of them being destroyed by Saul, there were not enough remaining to serve in those ministries. And therefore David (as Bertram thinks, in his book De Repub. Jud. p. 277), appointed some other persons to the same employment; and afterward Solomon appointed more; who are called therefore Solomon's servants: all which, both Gibeonites and those who were added to them by David and Solomon, were known by the name of Nethinims, as much as to say dedictii, or ascriptii, men given, as the Hebrew word denotes: for, as the Levites were given to the priests (Numb. viii. 16, 19), so were these given to the Levites. And this is said to have been done by "David and the princes," because David advised with the consistory about it, who are called the princes, 2 Chron. xxx. 2: xxxi. 8 (see Mr. Thorndike, Rites of the Church, p. 231). But I have observed elsewhere, that these Nethinims were distinct from the Gibeonites, and of a higher rank in the service of God (see 1 Chron ix. 2).

All of them were expressed by name.] I suppose

Iddo sent the names of every one of them, though they are not all here mentioned.

Ver. 21.] He, being the leader of this colony, had authority from the king to command whatsoever he pleased for the good of it. And nothing was more necessary than humbly and sorrowfully to acknowledge their offence against God, and beg his gracious pardon; and that he would prosper them in their journey, and direct them in the best way to bring themselves and all they had safe to Jerusalem: which was the end of this fast.

Ver. 22.] He might have obtained from the king any thing that he desired; but he had so openly declared, that he depended solely upon God for safe conduct, that he was ashamed to ask a guard of the king to secure them in their passage, from those enemies that he knew would waylay them (ver. 31); for the king, not being much instructed in the divine matters, might imagine, that all were vain boasts which the Jews had made of the favour of God to them, and of the prophecies concerning their restoration: which made Ezra and others so confident, as only to desire leave to return to their own country; and as for a safe passage, they took no care, but to commit themselves to God, who would defend his own people that trusted in him. To ask therefore protection and defence from the king, would look as if they distrusted the power and favour of their God, concerning whom they had spoken so magnificently. But it was highly necessary they should beseech that of God, which they would not ask of the king; which they did by fasting and prayer.

Ver. 23.] Gave them some assurance that their petitions should be granted. Some think, this fast lasted eight days, beginning after the three days mentioned above, ver. 15. For they began to go out of Babylon on the first day of the month (ch. vii. 9), and they stayed at Ahava three days to take a view of their company; and went from thence on the twelfth (ver. 31). And therefore they must either keep this fast eight days, or else they were seven days in coming from Babylon, and other places, to Ahava; where a general rendezvous, as we speak, was appointed. And this I take to be most probable, that they came out of Babylon on the first day, and expected at Ahava till all their company was got together, which was about the seventh day: and they all rested three days to make a complete muster of the whole number, and fasted one day; and so began to take their journey from Ahava on the twelfth.

Ver. 24.] With whom he might intrust the gifts that had been offered for the temple. These ten men, perhaps, were principal Levites, who were added to the two priests to take this charge upon them (see ver. 29).

sellors, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered:

26 I even weighed unto their hand six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and silver vessels an hundred talents, and of gold an hundred talents;

27 Also twenty basons of gold, of a thousand drams; and two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.

28 And I said unto them, Ye are holy unto the LORD; the vessels are holy also; and the silver and the gold are a freewill offering unto the LORD God of your fathers.

29 Watch ye, and keep them, until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the LORD.

30 So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels to bring them to Jerusalem unto the house of our God.

31 ¶ Then we departed from the river of Ahava on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way.

32 And we came to Jerusalem, and abode there three days.

33 ¶ Now on the fourth day was the silver and the gold and the vessels weighed in the house of our God by the hand of Meremoth the son of Uriah the priest; and with him was Eleazar, the son of Phinehas; and with them was Jozabad the son of Jeshua, and Noadiah the son of Binnui, Levites;

34 By number and by weight of every one: and all the weight was written at that time.

35 Also the children of those that had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, offered burnt-offerings unto the God of Israel, twelve bullocks for all Israel, ninety and six rams, seventy and seven lambs, twelve he-goats for a sin-offering: all this was a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

36 ¶ And they delivered the king's commissions unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors on this side the river; and they furthered the people, and the house of God.

Ver. 25.] That they might have no excuse if they were any way embezzled.

Ver. 26.] Or, "a hundred silver vessels, according to their talents;" that is, every one a talent.

Ver. 27.] They were not worth their weight in gold; but they were of great value, being scarce and rare: as that metal called aurichalcum was; which might be the reason why there was no more than two of them.

Ver. 28. Ye are holy unto the Lord;] They being men consecrated to God's service, were bound above all others to be faithful in the discharge of their duty, especially being entrusted with holy things; which were therefore to be carefully delivered at Jerusalem, just as they were committed to their trust.

A free-will offering unto the Lord] Which made them still more sacred.

Ver. 29.] Where they were deposited, after they had given an account of them there, to the persons here mentioned; who received them by the same weight that they were delivered unto those that brought them.

Ver. 30.] This shows, that some of these twelve men (mentioned ver. 26), if not ten of them, were Levites, and not all priests.

Ver. 31. River of Ahava] Which ran by that city into Euphrates.

To go unto Jerusalem:] To pursue their intended journey.

The hand of our God was upon us,] To protect and strengthen them in so dangerous and long a journey.

He delivered us from the hand of the enemy, &c.] There were not only many enemies who hated them, and were desirous to cut them off, but many robbers who watched for a booty, whom God either diverted some other way, or disheartened from attempting any thing against them; or, perhaps, directed them (as they prayed, ver. 21) into some uncommon ways, in which people were not wont to travel, whereby they escaped their enemies.

Ver. 32.] Before they did any thing. For it was necessary to rest and refresh themselves awhile, after so tedious a journey, in which they spent above a quarter of a year (see ch. vii. 9). Their friends also, it is likely, came to visit them in these three days' time, and welcome them to Jerusalem.

Ver. 33.] The names of Eleazar and Phinehas continued through many generations among the priests, because they were two very eminent persons in Aaron's family. And, as there were some Levites charged with this treasure to bring it to Jerusalem, so there were some of them who saw them discharge themselves of their trust.

Ver. 34.] There was a public record made of it; and the persons forementioned, who brought the money and the vessels, were discharged by a public instrument, signed by them that received it. Or, perhaps, the meaning may be, that there was an inventory taken of the goods belonging to the temple, which the priests were charged withal, as the stewards of a family are wont to be with the goods belonging to it.

Ver. 35. Also the children of those—which were come out of the captivity,] That is, this company who came up from Babylon with Ezra.

Offered burnt-offerings] To express their gratitude to God for their restoration.

Twelve bullocks for all Israel,] One for every tribe.

For a sin-offering:] For all Israel, whether still remaining in Babylon, or returned to Jerusalem.

All this was a burnt-offering] All the rest (except the he-goats) were a burnt-offering; whereby they acknowledged the Lord for their God.

Ver. 36. They delivered the king's commissions unto the king's lieutenants, &c.] That they might know the king's pleasure, and what privileges he had granted them, which are recited in the foregoing chapter.

They furthered the people, and the house of God.] Yielded obedience to the king's orders.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Ezra mourneth for the affinity of the people with strangers. 5 He prayeth unto God with confession of sins.

1 Now when these things were done, the princes came to me, saying, The people of Israel, and the priests, and the Levites, have not separated themselves from the people of the lands, doing according to their abominations, even of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites.

2 For they have taken of their daughters for themselves, and for their sons; so that the holy seed have mingled themselves with the people of those lands: yea, the hand of princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass.

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1. When these things were done,] When he had shown his commission, and it appeared that he had power to reform all abuses, and see the laws of Moses observed by all the Jews (ch. vii. 14).

Have not separated themselves from the people of the lands,] Some of the great men came to him with a grievous complaint, that unlawful marriages were practised among them with those wicked nations whom God had forbidden them to mingle withal: which was the more to be lamented, because not only the people, but the priests themselves and the Levites, were guilty of this sin.

Doing according to their abominations,] This is commonly an expression, signifying worshipping of idols, which are called abominations in scripture; but here signifies only imitation of the heathen in promiscuous marriages with any nation whatsoever, which would soon lead them to commit idolatry. For these words in the Hebrew run thus, "Have not separated themselves from the people of the land, according to their abominations;" (the word doing is not there); which Mr. Mede rightly interprets, "according to the several kinds of idolaters in the land round about them."

Even of the Canaanites, &c.] By this it appears, that, as marriages with the seven nations of Canaan were expressly forbidden (Deut. vii. 2, 3), so Ezra thought that law extended to all other nations, who were not proselyted to the Jews' religion. And this is the common opinion of the Hebrew doctors, as Mr. Selden shows, lib. v. De Jure Nat. et Gent. cap. 12. For even before the law of Moses, it seems to be thought unlawful, after they had received the covenant of circumcision, for the seed of Abraham to marry with other nations that were uncircumcised (Gen. xxxiv. 14).

Ver. 2.] They are called a holy seed, because of the covenant of God with them, which made them a peculiar people, separated from all other nations. The case was the more dangerous, because the great men of the nation were the principal offenders (ch. x. 18, 23), whose example the people followed without fear of punishment. It is likely, those princes who informed Ezra of this enormous practice had endeavoured to reform them, but could not, because they were opposed by as great men as themselves. But we must not cast away all hope, though we cannot presently reform men's lives: the time may come when it may be done.
