Ver. 26.] These are the words of God in answer to the boasts of the proud Assyrian; wherein he puts him in mind, that all his successes ought to be ascribed to God: that it was his providence predetermined these events, and brought them to pass in their appointed time, and made him the instrument of the divine vengeance upon such cities as deserved utter destruction, and weakened the hands of their inhabitants, so that they were not able to defend themselves.

Ver. 28.] God lets him know, that none of his designs were hid from his all-seeing eye, and that he perfectly knew how much ill-will he bore in mind against his city and sanctuary; and as the successes he had already gained were owing to him, so he could put a stop to them whenever he pleased. The phrase of going out and coming in is used for leading out armies to war, and bringing them home again (see Numb. xxvii. 21. Deut. xxxi. 2 Josh. xiv. 11).

Ver. 29.] I have thee as much in my power as the fisherman can manage the fish, when he hath put a hook into his jaws (see Job xli. 2): and as the rider can curb the horse, and turn him which way he pleases, when the bit is in his mouth. And now I will turn thee back unsuccessful, and thou shalt be glad to get home again with all speed (see ver. 34).

Ver. 30.] God directs these words to king Hezekiah, and tells him that this shall be a sign of God's favour and protection to him and his people, that although this year the enemy had destroyed all the crop that was sown; and the next year being the sabbatical year, the law forbade them either to sow or reap; yet they should want no provision for these two years: and in the third year they should sow in peace, and reap the fruits of their labour. Concerning the house of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward :

32 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of mount Zion : the zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

33 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank against it.

34 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the LORD.

35 For I will defend this city to save it for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

seventh year, which was the sabbatical year, or year of rest, see Lev. xxv. 4, &c.

Ver. 32.] See note on ix. 7.

Ver. 33.] See note on xxix. 3.

Ver. 36.] Smote them with a pestilential disease, as Josephus and most expositors understand the words (see note on xxxi. 8).

Ver. 38. Esar-haddon his son reigned in his stead.]

36 Then the angel of the LORD went forth, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred and fourscore and five thousand : and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

37 ¶ So Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

38 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword ; and they escaped into the land of Armenia : and Esar-haddon his son reigned in his stead.

Called Sarchedon, in Tobit (i. 21), and Asordan, in the Septuagint, a word near akin to Assaradinus, by which name he is called in Ptolemy's canon. Under his government, the Assyrian and Babylonian kingdoms were joined into one monarchy ; he reigned thirteen years over the latter, as appears by the forementioned canon ; though he reigned in all above forty years from his father's death.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1 IN those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Set thy house in order : for thou shalt die, and not live.

2 Then Hezekiah turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the LORD,

3 And said, remember now, O LORD, I beseech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept sore.

4 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD to Isaiah, saying,

5 Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears : behold, I will add unto thy days fifteen years.

6 And I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria : and I will defend this city.

7 And this shall be a sign unto thee from the LORD, that the LORD will do this thing that he hath spoken ;

8 Behold, I will bring again the shadow of the degrees, which is gone down in the sun dial of Ahaz, ten degrees backward. So the sun returned ten degrees, by which degrees it was gone down.

9 ¶ The writing of Hezekiah king of Judah, when he had been sick, and was recovered of his sickness :

10 I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave : I am deprived of the residue of my years.

11 I said, I shall not see the LORD, even the

CHAP. XXXVIII.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains an account of Hezekiah's sickness, which happened at the time of Sennacherib's invasion, of his miraculous recovery, and the song of thanksgiving which he wrote upon that occasion.

Ver. 1. In those days was Hezekiah sick] See the note on the sixth verse.

Set thy house in order : for thou shalt die.] Settle thy worldly concerns ; for this disease, by the course of nature, will prove mortal.

Ver. 3. Hezekiah wept sore.] One reason of his great concern is supposed to be, because he should leave his kingdom in great distraction, under the terrors of a foreign invasion, and without any heir to take the government upon him, for Manasseh was not born till three years after this (compare 2 Kings xx. 6. xxi. 1).

Ver. 6.] From hence it appears, that Hezekiah's sickness was before the destruction of Sennacherib's army, though it be not mentioned till afterward, because the sacred writer would not interrupt the thread of that story (see the note on xxxii. 10).

Ver. 8. So the sun returned ten degrees.] It is the common opinion that the sun itself went back, but the heavenly bodies were restored again to their regular position, as much being deducted from the next night as was added to this day. But some think this a particular miracle wrought by the shadow's going back upon the sun-dial of Ahaz, and not taken notice of in other countries, which occasioned an embassy from Babylon to inquire about the truth of it (2 Chron. xxxii. 31).

By which degrees it was gone down.] These ten degrees are supposed to be marks of so many hours by which the shadow went down, as the text expresses it both here and 2 Kings xx. 11. But there is no need LORD, in the land of the living: I shall behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world.

12 Mine age is departed, and is removed from me as a shepherd's tent: I have cut off like a weaver my life: he will cut me off with pining sickness: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

13 I reckoned till morning, that, as a lion, so will he break all my bones: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

14 Like a crane or a swallow, so did I chatter: I did mourn as a dove: mine eyes fail with looking upward: O LORD, I am oppressed; undertake for me.

15 What shall I say? he hath both spoken unto me, and himself hath done it: I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul.

16 O LORD, by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit: so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live.

we should understand it of the declining part of the day, or the afternoon, for the word may be understood in general of a progressive motion; and Bishop Patrick tells us from Dr. Alix, this miracle was wrought about ten o'clock in the morning; nor can we be certain what portion of time is meant by these degreess, for the division of the day into hours seems not to have been so ancient an invention: that is commonly ascribed to Anaximander or Anaximenes, who flourished about two hundred years after, and probably learned it from the Chaldeans. To this purpose we may observe, that Daniel is the only writer of the Old Testament that mentions an hour as a division of time, and there is no Hebrew word that signifies such a portion of time.

Ver. 11.] The good men under the law had* but imperfect notions of a future state, and thought it a great unhappiness to be deprived by death of the communion of saints here upon earth. Hezekiah might also be concerned to think, that the public worship of God might be less frequented, after it had lost so zealous a patron as himself.

Ver. 12. Mine age [or life]—is removed from me as a shepherd's tent:] Shepherds do not pitch their tents long in one place, but remove for the convenience of pasture (see the note on xiii. 20).

I have cut off like a weaver my life:] My sins are the cause that the thread of my life is cut off, like that of a weaver.

From day even to night] I concluded I should die before night (compare Job. iv. 20).

Ver. 13. I reckoned till morning, that, as a lion, so will he break all my bones:] When night came, I reckoned I should die before the next morning, my pains were so great as if the whole frame of my body were just ready to be dissolved.

From day even to night] The second day of my illness I had the same expectations of death, which I had the day before: upon the third day he recovered (see 2 Kings xx. 8).

Ver. 14. Like a crane or a swallow, so did I chatter:] My pains sometimes made me cry out aloud; at other times my strength was so low, I could only inwardly groan and bemoan myself.

Mine eyes fail with looking upward:] I had scarce strength to lift up mine eyes to heaven, I even despaired of any help from thence, but yet I could not forbear crying out, O Lord, thou seest that death is 17 Behold, for peace I had great bitterness: but thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.

18 For the grave cannot praise thee, death can not celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.

19 The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day: the father to the children shall make known thy truth.

20 The LORD was ready to save me: therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the LORD.

21 For Isaiah had said, Let them take a lump of figs, and lay it for a plaister upon the boil, and he shall recover.

22 Hezekiah also had said, What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the LORD?

come like a cruel executioner to seize me, and it is thou only canst relieve me, and deliver me out of his hands.

Ver. 15. What shall I say? he hath both spoken unto me, and himself hath done it:] The suddenness of my deliverance surprises me, so that I want words to express my thankfulness: all I can say is, that no sooner did God promise to restore my health, but I immediately found the effects of his goodness.

I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul.] The sense is more intelligible in our old translation, which renders the words thus, "I will, so long as I live, remember this bitterness of my life:" that is, the remembrance of the misery I endured, shall continually excite me to renew my thankfulness for this thy mercy.

Ver. 16.] As all men's lives are thy gift; so I shall always acknowledge the preservation of mine to be owing to thy goodness in promising, and thy faithfulness in making good thy promise.

Ver. 17. Behold, for peace I had great bitterness:] The words may be translated, "Behold, my grievous anguish is turned into ease."

Ver. 18.] The dead cannot be instruments of promoting thy glory here, or making known thy goodness to others (compare Ps. xxx. 9, cxv. 17).

Ver. 19. The father to the children shall make known thy truth.] Thy wonderful mercy towards me shall be recorded to after-ages, and fathers shall mention it to their children, as an instance of thy faithfulness.

Ver. 20.] We will sing this and other hymns which Hezekiah had ordered to be used in the public worship (see 2 Chron. xxix. 25. 30).

Ver. 21.] There might be some natural virtue in such a plaster for ripening the sore, as physicians have observed; but the speediness of the cure must be ascribed to a supernatural cause.

Ver. 22.] This relates to ver. 20, where Hezekiah promises to make his grateful returns for God's mercies in the most public and solemn manner, and thereby make good that part of the promise which Isaiah gave him, that in "three days he should be able to go up to the house of the Lord" (2 Kings xx. 5). To confirm the truth of which promise, Hezekiah demanded the sign mentioned in the following verses there, and in the seventh and eighth verses of this chapter.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 AT that time Merodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah: for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered.

2 AND Hezekiah was glad of them, and shewed them the house of his precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not.

3 ¶ THEN came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country unto me, even from Babylon.

4 THEN said he, What have they seen in thy house? And Hezekiah answered, All that is in my house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

5 THEN said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD of hosts:

6 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thy house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

7 AND of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

8 THEN said Hezekiah to Isaiah, Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. He said moreover, For there shall be peace and truth in my days.

CHAP. XXXIX.

ARGUMENT.—The king of Babylon sending ambassadors to congratulate Hezekiah's recovery, the king received them with great kindness, and with some degree of vanity showed them all his treasures and rarities: to reprove this piece of pride, Isaiah by God's direction acquaints him, that the time will come when all these boasted riches shall be carried to Babylon, and even the heirs of the royal family should be treated as slaves and captives there. This history is inserted here as a proper introduction to the succeeding prophecies, many of which relate to the Babylonian captivity, and the return of the Jews from thence.

Ver. 1. Merodach-baladan, the son Baladan.] Merodach was the name of an idol worshipped by the Babylonians, and Baal or Bel was another (see Jer. 1. 2). And these two idols, with the addition of Adan, or Adon, which signifies lord, gave a name to this king of Babylon. It was usual for the Babylonian kings to take their names from the idols they worshipped. Thus we find one of their kings was called Evil-merodach (2 Kings xxv. 27). Nebo was another idol of the Babylonians (see xlvi. 1 of this prophecy): from whence Nabonassar, Nebuchadnezzar, and several other kings of Babylon, took their names. And Daniel had the name of Belteshazzar given him, "according to the name of my god," saith Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iv. 8. This king is here called "the son of Baladan;" which Baladan Archbishop Usher supposes to be the same person who is called in profane authors Belesis, or Belesus, and Nabonassar, from whence the famous computation of time called Era Nabonassari took its name (see Annales Vet. Test. ad A. M. 3257).

Sent letters and a present to Hezekiah.] As many other princes did (see 2 Chron. xxxii. 23). One reason of sending this embassy was, to satisfy himself about the prodigy of the sun's going backward upon the king's recovery (Ibid. ver. 31). The Babylonians were famous for the study of astronomy, which made their king the more inquisitive about so extraordinary a phenomenon.

Ver. 2. The precious ointment.] The balsam that grew near Jericho was reckoned the very best of that kind (see Josephus, Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 6. and De Bello Judaic. lib. v. cap. 4.)

Ver. 3.] See the note on v. 26.

Ver. 4. There is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.] This he did in "the pride of his heart," as we read, 2 Chron. xxxii. 26, 31, which occasioned the prophet to denounce the following judgment.

Ver. 7.] Even some of thy posterity and of the royal family, shall they put into servile offices in the king of Babylon's court (see this fulfilled in Daniel and his companions, Dan. i. 3, &c.).

Ver. 8.] The expression denotes the king's submitting to, and acquiescing in, God's decree (compare 1 Kings ii. 38).

For there shall be peace and truth in my days.] The king thought it a great favour, that God would delay that punishment which he might have inflicted presently, and prolong the tranquillity of his kingdom for some time (see 2 Chron. xxxii. 26).

CHAPTER XL.

1 COMFORT ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God.

CHAP. XL.

ARGUMENT.—Here begins a new section of this prophecy, as was observed at the beginning of the book; wherein the prophet raises his style, and describes the future glories of the church with a loft-

2 SPEAK ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that tinness of expression suitable to the dignity of the subject. He had plainly foretold the Babylonish captivity in the foregoing chapter, and in this he revives the Jews with the comfortable promise of a return from thence. This is the ground-work of a great part of the following prophecy: but the many her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins.

3 ¶ The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God.

4 Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain:

5 And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

6 The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field:

7 The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: because the spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass.

predictions we find in the succeeding chapters of this prophecy, relating to the life and death, the character and offices of the Messiah, and the flourishing state of the church under him, can never be supposed to receive their due accomplishment, unless we assert that the prophet was carried on from his first subject to a farther view of the enlargement of the church under the gospel, and the bringing the fulness of the gentiles into it. And these prophecies are so worded in many places, that the literal sense of the text does better agree with the gospel-times, than with those that were nearer the prophet's view; as may be particularly observed in some passages of this very chapter. I shall conclude this argument with that judicious observation of our learned Mr. Thorndike (De Jure finendi Controvers. cap. 4. p. 60. 61), "Equidem quæ Judæis post reditum a captivitate magna et gloriosa promissa sunt, cepisse quidem impleri fateor sub Maccabæis, liberoque ex postliminio ejus populi statu. Et tamen quæ de idolis destruendis, et de proselytis aggregandis ibi prædicuntur, si sub Evangelio implenda non fuissent, non solum nihili facienda, sed ne vera quidem fuissent, cum pro magno id pollicentur, quod præ idololatriæ aut Mahumedismi fecunditate nullius momenti sit."

Ver. 1.] The prophet addresses himself to God's messengers, whose office it was to publish the glad tidings of peace and salvation (see lii. 7). The Septuagint understand the words of the priests, and read the beginning of the next verse thus, "O ye priests, speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem."

[Comfort ye my people.] Compare xlix. 13. lii. 9. The times of the Messiah are called the "consolation of Israel" (Luke ii. 25), and one of the names of the Messiah was to be Menahem, i. e. the Comforter, according to the rabbins (see Lightfoot, vol. i. p. 209). The prophet here speaks to those that were to "bring glad tidings to Zion," ver. 9, as the words should be there translated.]

My people.] Mr. White, in his preface, p. 11, makes it a difficult question to resolve whom the prophet here means, if the words be applied to the gospel-times. Now I think it is very easy to give an answer to this question out of the gospel, viz. that the prophet speaks of those "who waited for the consolation of Israel, and looked for redemption in Jerusalem" (Luke ii. 25. 38). Of which kind were all the pious and well-disposed persons who lived at the same time of our Saviour's appearing. Mr. White indeed affirms, "that the greatest part of the people thought themselves to stand in no need of comfort;" but this is so far from being true, that we find by many passages of the gospels, that the main body of the Jewish nation were in great expectation of the Messiah at that time, and much pleased with the thoughts of his being near at hand; though afterward many of them were disappointed at the meanness of his outward appearance, and thereupon took up an incurable prejudice against him.

Ver. 2. Cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished,] Any state of servitude or hardship is compared to a state of warfare in scripture (see 2 Tim. ii. 3, 4). Thus the word is applied to the attendance of the Levites in the service of the sanctuary, Numb. iii. 23. viii. 24. The phrase here alludes likewise to the discharge given to soldiers after so many years' service (compare Job. vii. 1).

For she hath received at the Lord's hand double for all her sins.] That is, double in proportion to God's usual severity in punishing men's sins (compare Jer. xvi. 18. xvii. 18. Rev. xviii. 6). "God punishes men less than their iniquities deserve (Ezra ix. 13); yet he showed greater severity against the sins of the Jews, than towards those of other nations (see Dan. ix. 12. Amos iii. 2). Some translate the words thus: "She shall receive from the Lord double for all her sins;" taking the word sins for the punishments due to sin, as it is often used; and then the sense will be, She shall be fully made amends for her sufferings, and receive twice as much as she had before, as Job did, Job. xiii. 10 (compare lxi. 7).

Ver. 3. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness,] The prophet calls the way by which the Jews were to return from captivity into their own country, by the name of the wilderness, alluding to their passing through the wilderness in their way from Egypt to Canaan. In other places the prophet compares God's care in conducting them home from their dispersions, to his miraculous leading them through the wilderness (see xli. 18. xlix. 10).

Ibid. and ver. 4.] The first intention of the prophet in these two verses is to declare, that God will remove all impediments which might hinder the return of his people into their own country (compare lvii. 14. lxii. 10). To the same purpose are several expressions we meet with in the following chapters, of "God's opening rivers in the wilderness, of conducting his people by the springs of waters, making his mountains a plain," &c. (see xli. 18. xlix. 10, 11). Which expressions allude to the custom of princes to send harbingers before them, to make the roads easy and commodious for their passage. The same metaphor is used by Homer, Iliad. ó. ver. 260, where Apollo, promising to assist Hector, saith,

Αὐτὰρ ἐγὼ προάροισι ζωὴν ἱπποισι κέλευθον
Πᾶσαν λειαιέω—

"I will go before, and make smooth all the passages."

But to this exposition it must be added, that the very letter of the text does more exactly suit to the office of John Baptist, who "prepared the way of the Lord," by preaching "in the wilderness."

Ver. 5. All flesh shall see it together:] The manifestation which God shall make of himself by the gospel, will be such a blessing as all nations shall have a share in.

Ver. 6. The voice said, Cry,] By the voice is meant the voice of God, who is introduced as commanding his messenger or prophet to proclaim this important truth; that all men are weak and impotent, and it is God alone and his promises that can be safely relied on. The words in their first intent import, that the 8 The grass withereth, the flower fadeth : but the word of our God shall stand for ever.

9 ¶ O Zion, that bringeth good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain ; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength ; lift it up, be not afraid ; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God !

10 Behold, the LORD God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him : behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.

11 He shall feed his flock like a shepherd : he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young.

restoration of the Jewish nation, after a seventy years' captivity, was not to be brought to pass by any human force or wisdom, but merely by the power and goodness of God (see Zech. iv. 6). Which observation is still more remarkably verified in the revelation of the gospel, the great design of which is to exalt God, and to humble man ; whose promises are the only foundation of a lasting happiness, and these are wholly owing to the mercy of God, and shall be effected without any human means or assistance, "that no flesh may glory in his presence" (see 1 Cor. i. 29—31. 1 Pet. i. 25).

Ver. 7. Because the spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it :] Or, "because the wind of the Lord bloweth upon it" (compare Ps. ciii. 16). As wind and storms deface the beauty of the grass and flowers ; so the breath of God's displeasure blasts the counsels of men, and brings them and their designs to nought (see ver. 24).

Ver. 8. But the word of our God shall stand for ever.] See note upon ver. 6.

Ver. 9. O Zion, that bringest good tidings !—O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings !] The marginal reading gives a much better sense, "O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion ! O thou that tellest good tidings to Jerusalem !" and this reading agrees better with what follows, "Say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God" (compare likewise xli. 27. lii. 7). The Hebrew mebasshereth, though of the feminine gender, yet is masculine in sense, and so it is used Ps. lxxviii. 11. Just as kohleth, of the same gender, is used for Solomon the Preacher, Eccles. i. 1.

Get thee up into the high mountain ;] They that were to publish any proclamation, used to get up to the top of some high hill, from whence their voice might be heard a great way off (see lii. 7. Judg. ix. 7. 2 Chron. xiii. 4). The same ceremony was used among the Jews in giving notice of their solemn festivals.

Lift it up, be not afraid ;] For God will certainly make his words good.

Behold your God.] See the note on xlviii. 16.

Ver. 10.] His arm shall rule for him :] He will visibly exert his power, and establish the kingdom of the Messias, without calling in any human assistance (compare lix. 26, and see the note upon ver. 6).

His work before him.] Or rather, according to the marginal reading, "His recompense before him" (compare xlix. 4. lxii. 11). The gospel does in the 13 Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his counsellor hath taught him ?

14 With whom took he counsel, and who instructed him, and taught him in the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and shewed to him the way of understanding ?

15 Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance : behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing.

16 And Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt offering.

17 All nations before him are as nothing ; and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity.

18 ¶ To whom then will ye liken God ? or what likeness will ye compare unto him ?

19 The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold, and casteth silver chains.

clearest manner set forth the different rewards of the righteous and the wicked (see Matt. xvi. 27. Rev. xxii. 12).

Ver. 11. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd :] As the care which God took in providing for, and protecting, his people, is resembled to the office of a shepherd (see Ps. xxiii. 1. lxxx. 1. xcv. 7. c. 2) : so the office of the Messias is often described by the prophets under the same metaphor (see Ezek. xxxiv. 23. xxxvii. 24). In allusion to which places our Saviour calls himself the "good shepherd" (John x. 11), and describes himself as "coming into the world to seek and save that which was lost, and bringing home the wandering sheep upon his shoulders rejoicing."

He shall gather the lambs with his arm, &c.] As a shepherd gathers his lambs together, that none of them be lost, carries those in his bosom that are not able to go, and gently drives the ewes that cannot bear the fatigue of travel : such gentleness shall Christ use towards the weak ones of his flock, giving them instruction according as they were able to bear it, and taking all possible care to reduce the stragglers into his fold (see John x. 16. xxi. 15, 16. Mark iv. 33). These expressions may have some relation to God's care in conducting his people into their own country from Babylon (compare xlix. 10), but do more eminently belong to Christ, as appears by the many allusions in the New Testament to this and such-like passages in the Old (see Heb. xiii. 20. 1 Pet. ii. 25. v. 4. Rev. vii. 17).

Ver. 12.] Here begins a lofty description of God's almighty power, showing that he is great above all his works, and able to do beyond what we can think or conceive ; and the design of it is to persuade the people to place their whole trust in him, and to rest assured what he hath promised he is able to perform (see ver. 27, 28), and withal to arm them against idolatry (see ver. 18, &c.).

Ver. 13, 14.] These two verses inform us, that God's wisdom is as great as his power, that he "works all things after the counsel of his own will," without asking advice of any, or acquainting them with the measures of his proceedings.

Ver. 15. He taketh up the isles] The Hebrew language calls all those countries islands, which we go to by sea (see note on xi. 11). From thence it comes to signify any place or country (see xx. 6. lix. 18).

Ver. 16.] If we were to make an oblation suitable to the greatness of the divine majesty, the forest of 20 He that is so impoverished that he hath no oblation chooseth a tree that will not rot; he seeketh unto him a cunning workman to prepare a graven image, that shall not be moved.

21 Have ye not known? have ye not heard? hath it not been told you from the beginning? have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth?

22 It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in:

23 That bringeth the princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.

24 Yea, they shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown: yea, their stock shall not take root in the earth: and he shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble.

25 To whom then will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One.

26 Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number: he calleth them all by names by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one faileth.

27 Why sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest, O Israel, My way is hid from the Lord, and my judgment is passed over from my God?

28 ¶ Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no searching of his understanding.

29 He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength.

30 Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall:

Lebanon would not suffice for wood, nor the beasts that live in it for an offering (compare Ps. l. 10—12).

Ver. 18.] The Jews, being to live among the idolatrous Babylonians during their captivity, were by all means to be cautioned against practising their idolatries. This makes the prophet so frequently enlarge upon the vanity and folly of idol-worship, in this latter part of his prophecy. Jeremiah gives the Jews the same caution (x. 2, 3), and especially in those remarkable words (ver. 11, of that chapter), "The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens:" which are written in Chaldee, that the Jews might be able to answer the idolaters in their own language.

What likeness will ye compare? See note on xlv. 13.

Ver. 19. Casteth silver chains. By which the idols are fastened to walls or pillars.

Ver. 20.] He that cannot be at the charge of a costly image overlaid with gold or silver, provides himself with a wooden one, and gets an artificer to make it for him, and fasten it with nails that it should not fall down (see xli. 7. Jer. x. 4).

Ver. 21. Have ye not known? There was a general tradition of the creation of the world still conveyed from one age to another, even among the heathens, which, together with the arguments which natural reason suggested to them, that all things must derive their original from one principle, was sufficient to instruct them in the knowledge of the one true God, to preserve them from idolatry, and convince them that God could not be like the work of men's hands (see Rom. i. 19, 20, &c.).

Have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth? The words run thus in the original: "Have ye not understood, or, considered, the foundations of the earth?" i. e. by whom they were laid, even by "him that sitteth upon the circle of the earth," &c. as it follows. The verb bûn signifies to consider (see note on xxviii. 19).

Ver. 22. It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth. As supreme Lord and governor of the world.

That stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain. Like the curtain of a tent (compare Hab. iii. 7). The heavens are described in scripture as God's tabernacle, or the seat of his glorious presence (see Ps. civ. 2, and lxxv. 1 of this prophecy).

Ver. 23.] He removeth one prince or monarchy, and setteth up another (see Ps. lxxv. 7, Dan. ii. 21):

and will put an end to the Babylonish monarchy, and set up the Persian, in order to return the captivity of his people.

Ver. 24.] Either he never suffers them to thrive, or, if they make a figure for some time, a sudden blast of his displeasure (see ver. 7) makes them wither, and puts an end to their flourishing condition.

Ver. 26. Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things. A man cannot lift up his eyes to heaven, and view the exact order and regular motions of the heavenly bodies, but he must be convinced that there is a wise author of nature, who at first created, and still preserves this system of things. Thus, Tully expresses the natural sense mankind hath of this matter (Tuseul. Quæst. lib. i.): "Cum videmus speciem primum candoremque celi, deinde conversionis celeritatem, tum vicissitudines dierum atque noctium, commutationesque temporum quadripartitas, eorumque omnium moderatorem solem, lunamque—et stellas eosdem cursus constantissime servantes—hæc cum cernimus, possumusne dubitare quin his præsit aliquis effector?" The heavenly bodies are called God's hosts or army, because he presides over them, and places them in their proper rank and order, and they exactly keep those stations that he hath appointed them, and fulfil those commands which he hath given them (compare Ps. cxlvii. 4).

For that he is strong in power; not one faileth. God's works have this remarkable pre-eminence above men's, that they never wear out or need repairing (see Ps. cxix. 90, 91. The words of Seneca are observable to this purpose (Epist. lviii.): "Manent cuncta, non quia æterna sunt, sed quia defenduntur cura regentis: immortalia tutore non egent, hæc conservat artifex, fragilitatem materiæ vi sua vincens."

Ver. 27.] These are the desponding words of the people detained under captivity, who were apt to think that God did not regard their condition.

Ver. 28.] We cannot fathom the depths of his providence, nor assign the reasons of all his proceedings; but this we may be sure of, that his delaying to deliver his people does not proceed from want either of ability or knowledge, since he "upholds all things by the word of his power," and his wisdom extends itself to all the parts of the creation.

Ver. 30.] Those that make the greatest boast of their strength, as young men are apt to do, shall find it fail them, whenever God withdraws his support:

31 But they that wait upon the LORD shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with he means the Chaldeans and the choice men of their armies; so the word bachurim signifies, xxxi. 8.

Ver. 31. As eagles;] Eagles are observed to enjoy a vigorous old age, whence comes the proverb, aquila wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint.

senectus: and this healthy constitution of theirs seems to have given rise to the vulgar opinion, as if they grew young again after they had been old (see Ps. ciii. 5).

CHAPTER XLI.

1 KEEP silence before me, O islands; and let the people renew their strength: let them come near; then let them speak: let us come near together to judgment.

2 Who raised up the righteous man from the east, called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings? he gave them as the dust to his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow.

3 He pursued them, and passed safely; even by the way that he had not gone with his feet.

4 Who hath wrought and done it, calling the generations from the beginning! I the LORD, the first, and with the last; I am he.

5 The isles saw it, and feared; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near, and came.

6 They helped every one his neighbour; and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage.

7 So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smootheneth with the hammer him that smote the anvil, saying, It is ready for the soldering: and he fastened it with nails, that it should not be moved.

8 But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend.

9 Thou whom I have taken from the ends of CHAP. XLI.

ARGUMENT.—In this and the five following chapters,

God is introduced as pleading his own cause against the false gods of the heathen, and challenging the idols to show such instances of their power and goodness in protecting their votaries, as might be alleged in his behalf with respect to his care and providence over the Jews. These instructions were very proper to confirm that people in their religion, and preserve them from being drawn aside to comply with the Babylonish idolatry: and they likewise contain in them a plain prediction of the calling of the gentiles, and their turning from idols to serve the true and living God.

Ver. 1. Keep silence before me, O islands;] God summons the heathen nations to plead their cause before him, and in order to it, commands silence to be kept, according to the form observed in solemn courts of justice. By islands are meant those heathen nations that were parted from Judea by the sea (see the note on xi. 11). In this sense, those that live upon the Mediterranean sea are called the “islands of the gentiles,” Gen. x. 5. Accordingly the word is rendered ἄνθρωποι, gentiles, by the LXX. in the fifth verse of this chapter, and xlii. 4.

Let the people renew their strength:] Let them muster up the whole strength of their cause, and make the best plea they can for themselves (see ver. 21).

Ver. 2. Who hath raised up the righteous man from the east,] Many expositors understand this of Abraham, whom God called from the other side of Euphrates, which lay eastward of Judea; but I think it is rather meant of Cyrus, as appears by comparing this place with the twenty-fifth verse of the chapter, and with xlv. 13, xlv. 11. And Cyrus is here described as typically representing Christ (see the note on xlv. 1); being first of all styled righteousness (the righteous man our English renders it), which is one of the titles of Christ (see Jer. xxiii. 5, 6); and then is said to come from the east, by which name Christ is also described Zech. iii. 8, where the word tsema, which our interpreters translate branch, does properly signify the east, and is accordingly rendered Ἀνατολή by the LXX.: which very word is applied to Christ, in allusion to that prophecy of Zechariah, by St. Luke, i. 78, where our English translates it the day-spring, but the margin reads the sun-rising.

Called him to his foot,] i. e. Called him to follow him, as the phrase is elsewhere rendered (see Exod. xi. 8. Judg. iv. 10. viii. 5. 2 Kings iii. 9).

Gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings?] The same things are said of Cyrus, ver. 25, of this chapter, and xlv. 1, &c.

Ver. 3.] He shall be a successful conqueror, even when he pursues his enemies through strange and unknown countries. The preter-perfect tense is here put for the future; a way of speaking common in the prophets (see note on xxi. 9).

Ver. 4.] By “calling the generations from the beginning,” is meant God’s disposing and ordering the several successions of ages, and allotting the proper seasons for the bringing his own designs to pass (compare xlv. 7). God is represented in scripture as doing everything by his bare word and command, the creatures immediately answering his call as dutiful servants (see Job xxviii. 34, 35).

Ver. 5—7.] Remote countries were astonished at the sudden rise of the conqueror Cyrus, and joined in an alliance together to check his growing greatness; just as several artificers that are concerned in the trade of idol-making, assist one another in carrying on their common interest, and stir up the zeal of others in the defence of image worship (see Acts xix. 25). This passage may fitly be applied to the heathen powers combining together to support their idolatry, and suppress the Christian religion.

Ver. 8.] The expressions are very endearing: it is honourable to be God’s servant, still more so to be his chosen servant, and to be descended from one to whom he vouchsafed the title of friend, as God did to Abraham (2 Chron. xx. 7), the greatest honour that any man is capable of: which glorious privilege Christ was pleased to communicate to his disciples (John xv. 13).

Ver. 9. Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away.

10 ¶ Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness.

11 Behold, all they that were incensed against thee shall be ashamed and confounded: they shall be as nothing; and they that strive with thee shall perish.

12 Thou shalt seek them, and shalt not find them, even them that contended with thee: they that war against thee shall be as nothing, and as a thing of nought.

13 For I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee.

14 Fear not thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Israel; I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy redeemer, the Holy One of Israel.

15 Behold, I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth: thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff.

16 Thou shalt fan them, and the whirlwind shall scatter them: and thou shalt rejoice in the Lord, and shalt glory in the Holy One of Israel.

17 When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Israel will not forsake them.

18 I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water.

19 I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrtle, and the oil tree; I will set in the desert the fir tree, and the pine, and the box tree together:

20 That they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of the Lord hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it.

21 Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the king of Jacob.

the earth,] As I have taken your forefathers out of Egypt, so will I take you out of Chaldaea, as I did likewise your father Abraham (Gen. xi. 31). The preter-perfect tense may be taken here for the future as before, ver. 3. Assyria and Egypt are usually joined together, as the most remarkable countries from whence the Jewish captivity should return (see the note on xi. 16). In like manner, at the end of the world, "Christ will gather his elect from the four winds" (Matt. xxiv. 31), and of "them whom God hath given him, he will lose none" (John vi. 38).

Ver. 10. I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness.] I will support thee with my power, and thereby make my fidelity, in fulfilling my promises, appear to the world.

Ver. 11.] God's truth shall at last prevail against all opposition, and the kingdom of Christ shall subdue and break in pieces all its adversaries (see Dan. ii. 44, compare Isa. liv. 17. lx. 12).

Ver. 12. Thou shalt seek them, and shall not find them.] i. e. If thou shouldst go about to seek them, thou shouldst not be able to find them. The expression denotes utter destruction (see Ps. x. 15. xxxvii. 36).

Ver. 13. I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand.] The joining of right hands hath in all nations been looked upon as a token of friendship, or of entering into a mutual league and covenant.

"Heus ubi pacta fides, commissaque dextera dextræ?"

"Where is the plighted faith and right hands join'd?"

Ovid Epist.

So God saith here, that he will take Israel by his right hand, and support him with his own right hand, (ver. 10).

Ver. 14. Fear not, thou worm Jacob,] Though thou art despicable and trampled upon by every body (see Ps. xxii. 6).

Ver. 15. I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth:] Concerning the manner of thrashing or beating out their corn in Judea, see the note on xxi. 10. xxviii. 28. From thence the word is applied to the crushing or subduing an enemy (see Jer. li. 33. Hab. iii. 12).

Thou shalt thresh the mountains—and shalt make the hills as chaff.] By the mountains and hills, are probably meant the greater and lesser kingdoms or countries which were enemies to God's truth and people: so the phrase signifies, ii. 14. Ps. lxxii. 3. The expressions in this and the following verse allude to the custom of the eastern countries, of having their thrashing-floors upon the tops of hills (see xvii. 13).

Ver. 17, 18.] God promises his people that he will furnish them with all sorts of accommodations for their return home; that they should neither be afflicted with heat nor thirst, two calamities that are very incident to travellers in hot countries (compare xlix. 10. Jer. xxxi. 9). And the latter of these was particularly grievous to the Israelites in their passage through the wilderness, to which this place alludes; as also to God's miraculous supplying them with water there out of the rock (compare xlviii. 21) which ran in a stream like a river, and followed them a great part of their journey, see Ps. cv. 41. 1 Cor. x. 4: and was, as the apostle there tells us, a mystical representation of Christ and the benefits of the gospel (see note on xxx. 24).

Ver. 19. I will plant in the wilderness the cedar,] As it were on purpose to shelter my people in their return home from the scorching heat of the sun (compare Baruch v. 8). Nothing is more refreshing in hot countries, than a shade or covert from the scorching beams of the sun (compare xxv. 4, 5. xxxii. 2. Ps. cxxi. 6).

The shittah tree,] Called "shittim-wood," Exod. v. and elsewhere.

Ver. 20.] The many wonderful steps by which the restoration of the Jewish nation shall be brought about, will convince all considering persons that it is the work of God; and his power will still more undeniably discover itself in the propagation of the gospel, and the enlightening those that sit in darkness with the saving truth of it (see the notes on xlv. 3).

Ver. 21.] He challenges the idolaters to plead the cause of their idols, and give convincing proofs of their divinity (see ver. 1).

22 Let them bring them forth, and shew us what shall happen: let them shew the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come.

23 Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods: yea, do good, or do evil, that we may be dismayed, and behold it together.

24 Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of nought: an abomination is he that chooseth you.

25 I have raised up one from the north, and he shall come: from the rising of the sun shall he call upon my name: and he shall come upon princes as upon mortar, and as the potter treadeth clay.

Ver. 22.] Let the idols plead their own cause, or do you their worshippers do it for them, and prove they ever gave any true oracles or prophecies relating to former times, and that the event hath exactly answered the prediction, and this will give credit to any predictions they shall make relating to things future.

Ver. 23. Show the things that are come] God only can certainly foreknow future events, especially such as depend upon contingent causes, and the determinations of men's free will. But this does not hinder but that some of the predictions of the heathen idols or oracles might be true, or else they would hardly have been able to have kept up their credit. But the event answered their predictions in such cases chiefly, where prudent conjecture might go a great way; such might be the prediction of Saul's death by the evil spirit at Endor (1 Sam. xxviii. 19). Evil spirits, being very nimble and active, may likewise foretell in one place what they see in another. This account Athanasius gives of the oracle, which foretold the overflowing of the Nile; which he supposes the evil spirit might do, by having seen the rains which fall in Ethiopia some time before, and cause that inundation (see Athanas. Life of Anthony the Hermit, p. 456. tom. ii. edit. Commel.). But there is no comparison between such predictions and the prophecies recorded in scripture, where there is a series of remarkable events foretold, reaching from the beginning of the world to the end of it: together with a punctual prediction of names and other circumstances several ages before the event (see xlv. 10).

Yea, do good, or do evil.] The heathens worshipped some of their gods, in hopes to receive good from them, and others for fear they should do them a mischief, who were, for that reason, called, by the Greeks and Romans, dii averrunci, and Ἀποτρόπαιοι. The prophet, alluding to this opinion saith, that the evil spirits the heathens worshipped can neither do good nor hurt; they cannot do good because they are naturally evil; neither can they do hurt any farther than God is pleased to permit them: beside that the images, to whom their exterior worship is paid, are dead and insensible things, that cannot help themselves, much less any body else (see Jer. x. 5). And therefore, as it is God only that can "make peace and create evil" (Isa. xlv. 7), all worship is due to him alone.

Ver. 24. Behold, ye are nothing.] Of no use or value: so the phrase is used Job xiii. 6, where we read "physicians of nothing" in the Hebrew; but our translation rightly renders the words, "physicians of no value." Idols are often called in the Old Testament ellilim, i. e. nothings, and vanities and lies, to show that they are not what they pretend to be, but 26 Who hath declared from the beginning, that we may know? and beforetime, that we may say, He is righteous? yea, there is none that sheweth, yea, there is none that declareth, yea, there is none that heareth your words.

27 The first shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them: and I will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings.

28 For I beheld, and there was no man; even among them, and there was no counsellor, that, when I asked of them, could answer a word.

29 Behold, they are all vanity; their works are nothing: their molten images are wind and confusion.

are only senseless images, and the representations for dead men (see 1 Cor. viii. 4).

And your work of naught:] Whatever oracles or predictions you pretend to give out are cheats and lies (see ver. 29).

Ver. 25.] Cyrus is described as coming from the east, ver. 2, and here he is represented as coming from the north and the east too, because his father was a Persian, and his mother a Median (see the note on xxi. 7). Media lay northward of Babylon; accordingly the army which Cyrus led against Babylon is described as coming out of the north (Jer. l. 9. 41), because it chiefly consisted of Medes (see note on xiii. 17).

Shall he call upon my name:] Cyrus made public profession of his belief in the great "God of heaven and earth" (Ezra i. 2).

He shall come upon princes as upon mortar, and as the potter treadeth clay.] The words may better be rendered, "He shall come and tread down princes like mortar, and as a potter treadeth clay" (see ver. 2. xlv. 1, &c. compare Ps. xviii. 42).

Ver. 26. Who hath declared from the beginning, that we may know?] Upon such an evident prediction of an event that was not to be fulfilled till near two hundred years afterward, God, in a triumphant manner, demands which of the idols could show any such token of his divinity.

That we may say, He is righteous?] i. e. His claim to divinity is just (see xliii. 9).

Yea, there is none that sheweth:] None of the idols can give you an answer, or seem to regard what you say; just as Baal gave no answer to the importunate clamours of his priests (see 1 Kings xviii. 29).

Ver. 27.] The verse may be better translated thus "I that am the first [i. e. the author and disposer of all things; see ver. 4] will give unto Zion and unto Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings, saying, Behold them:" i. e. Behold the wonderful works which God hath wrought for you; or, Behold thy people returning to their ancient habitations (compare xl. 9).

Ver. 28.] If one were to look about and make the strictest inquiry, there would not be found a man among the idol-priests or prophets, that was able to return an answer to any question that is asked him. Images are elsewhere called dumb idols (see Hab. ii. 18. 1 Cor. xii. 2).

Ver. 29.] See ver. 24. The Septuagint render the latter part of the sentence, "they that make you are vain; for the true reading in the Greek is not πλάσσαντες, as the common editions have it; but πλάσσοντες as the learned Dr. Grabe hath observed in his dissertation, De Vitiis LXX. Interpr. p. 55.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 BEHOLD my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.

2 He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.

3 A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth.

4 He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law.

CHAP. XLII.

ARGUMENT.—The chapter begins with a character of Christ, of his meekness and gentleness, and his success in calling the gentiles. Afterward the prophet upbraids the Jews for their blindness and incredulity, and foretells the judgments that they should bring upon them.

Ver. 1. Behold my servant, whom I uphold;] The following prophecy is applied to Christ by St. Matthew (xii. 18), and cannot, with any show of probability, be expounded of any other person. The Septuagint understand it of Israel, or the Jewish nation, and read the text thus: "Jacob is my son or servant, I will uphold him; Israel is mine elect, my soul doth choose or accept him." They probably took this text to be parallel with xlix. 3. But the gloss of theirs is rejected by St. Matthew, though in most other places the evangelist follows that translation. If we should try to explain this prophecy of Cyrus, as Grotius doth and his echo, Mr. White, allowing him to be a deliverer of the Jews; yet in what sense can he be styled the "light of the gentiles" (ver. 6)? He is taxed with cruelty by several historians, and it is not likely that the people were much easier under his government, than when they were subjects to the Babylonian monarchy. Beside that, "a light to the gentiles" signifies one that should enlighten their minds, and instruct them in the truth; and in that sense Mr. White himself explains the phrase in the parallel text xlix. 6. I conclude, then, that the natural import of the words, as well as the authority of the New Testament, do plainly determine this and many other texts here and in the following chapters to an evangelical sense; the Holy Spirit taking occasion, from the deliverance of the Jews out of their captivity, to give the prophet a view of a more glorious redemption, which should be accomplished by the Messias.

My servant whom I uphold;] Christ is often called God's servant by Isaiah (see xlix. 3. 5. l. 10. lii. 13. liii. 11); as he is also by Zechariah (iii. 8), as being sanctified and sent into the world upon a message of the highest importance, that ever any person was employed about; and this title agrees very well with those many declarations our Saviour made of his "coming into the world to do the will of him that sent him" (see John iv. 34. vi. 38. xiv. 31); and it is perhaps, in this respect that St. Paul saith, "Christ took upon him the form of a servant" Phil. ii. 7), God is said to uphold him here, and to hold his hand, ver. 6, because his person was under the particular care and protection of providence (see John viii. 29. xvi. 32); and as the evangelist observes, none of the designs of his enemies against his life could take effect till "his hour was come" (John vii. 30. viii. 20).

5 ¶ Thus saith God the LORD, he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein:

6 I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thy hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles;

7 To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house.

Mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth;] Christ is emphatically styled God's beloved, and the son of his love (Matt. iii. 17. John iii. 35. Eph. i. 6. Col. i. 13).

I have put my spirit upon him:] See the notes on xi. 2. lxi. 1.

He shall bring forth judgment to the gentiles.] He shall make known God's laws and judgments to them (see ver. 4).

Ver. 2.] He shall instruct those that oppose themselves with all meekness and gentleness; he shall patiently "endure the contradictions of sinners against himself," and not in angry or clamorous manner vindicate himself against their calumnies.

Ver. 3. A bruised reed shall he not break.] He will have a tender regard for afflicted consciences, and such as are bowed down under the burden of their sins: and where the least spark of grace appears, he will not quench it, but take the utmost care to keep it alive and improve it. After this example, St. Paul exhorts the pastors of the church to "restore those who have been overtaken in a fault with the spirit of meekness" (Gal. vi. 1).

He shall bring forth judgment unto truth.] By this method he shall make the truth and justice of his cause appear against all gainsayers, and obtain a complete victory over his adversaries; to which sense St. Matthew reads the sentence, till he send forth judgment unto victory; expressing the sense rather than the words of the original.

Ver. 4. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth.] We may reasonably suppose, that this prophecy relates to the propagating of the gospel in the world, as that work was carried on, not only by Christ, but also by messengers. For Christ himself was "not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. xv. 24); and consequently, could be a "light to the gentiles" only as he commissioned others to preach the gospel to them (see Eph. ii. 17). And taking the words in this comprehensive sense, they import, that our Saviour would not be discouraged at the difficulties he or his apostles were like to meet with in the discharge of their office, but would still continue unwearied in well-doing, till at last they should surmount all opposition, plant judgment and truth in the earth, and make the remotest parts of the world own their dependence upon him as their Lord, and submit to his laws.

The isles shall wait for his law.] By the isles are meant the gentiles (see the note on xi. 11). In what sense they may be said to wait for Christ's law, see the note on lx. 9.

Ver. 6. I, the Lord have called thee in righteousness, &c.] I, who am God almighty, have called thee to this high dignity, to fulfil my righteous purposes (see xli. 2). And in order to that end, I will sustain and defend thee (see the note upon ver. 1): and I

8 I am the LORD: that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images.

9 Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them.

10 Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth, ye that go down to the sea, and all that is therein; the isles, and the inhabitants thereof.

11 Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages that Kedar doth inhabit: let the inhabitants of the rock sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains.

12 Let them give glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands.

13 The LORD shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war: he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall prevail against his enemies.

14 I have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy and devour at once.

15 I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools.

16 And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them.

17 ¶ They shall be turned back; they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods.

am able to make my words good, because all things subsist by my word and decree, and all men owe their being and preservation to me (ver. 5).

And give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the gentiles;] This can in no tolerable sense be applied to any but Christ, who is called the "Angel of the covenant," Mal. iii. 1, and was the "Mediator of the new covenant," into which both Jews and gentiles were to be admitted (see Jer. xxxi. 31).

Ver. 7. To open the blind eyes.] Compare Acts xxvi. 18, which place seems to be a paraphrase upon this verse.

To bring out the prisoners from the prison, &c.] To free those from chains of their sins who were the captives of Satan (compare xxi. 1, Rom. viii. 21, 2 Tim. ii. 26, 2 Pet. ii. 19). To the same sense we may best explain that difficult text in St. Peter (1 Pet. iii. 19), concerning the "spirits in prison," to whom Christ is said to have preached by the ministry of Noah: understanding it of those wicked people of the old world who were under the bondage of sin and corruption, and whom the spirit of Christ, who was in the prophets from the beginning of the world (see 1 Pet. i. 11), endeavoured to reclaim by the ministry of Noah; who was "a preacher of righteousness" (2 Pet. ii. 5), and for the space of a hundred and twenty years (see Gen. vi. 3), "while the ark was preparing," exhorted the world to repentance, for fear the "flood should come and sweep them all away:" God's spirit all that time "striving with men," and trying to reclaim them.

Ver. 8.] My name JEHOVAH denotes me to be the only true God, and I will assert my honour by vindicating the cause of my church and people, and not suffer my truth to be extinguished, nor false gods and false ways of worship to usurp that glory which is due to myself alone (compare xlviii. 11). And this God did in an extraordinary manner, by the publishing of the gospel, which gave a fatal blow to the heathen idolatry. By another is meant a strange or false god, the word god being understood (see Ps. xvi. 4, and compare Isa. xliii. 12).

Ver. 9.] The punctual accomplishment of my former predictions, ought to give credit to what I foretell now, though it seem a new and a strange thing to you.

Ver. 10—12.] An exhortation to all the inhabitants of the earth, both far and near, and even the most barbarous people, such as were the Arabians who dwelt in Kedar (see Ps. cxx. 5): all of them are exhorted to give glory to God, for his wonderful mercy in making himself known to the gentile world by the gospel (compare xlv. 23, xlix. 13, lv. 12, Ps. xevi. 11, &c. xcviii. 4, &c.). The expressions here, and in the parallel texts, denote the joy to be so great and universal, that even the inanimate parts of the creation are said to be affected with it, and are exhorted to bear a part in this general chorus.

Ver. 13. He shall stir up jealousy [or his zeal] like a man of war.] God is described here as rousing up his indignation against his enemies, which had for some time lain asleep, and whetting his courage like a man of war, through a sense that his honour now lies at stake (compare lix. 17), and falling upon his adversaries with the utmost fury.

Ver. 14.] God had been long silent, and not interposed in behalf of his own cause (compare Ps. lxxxiii. 1): and this his forbearance had increased the presumption of his enemies; he declares now that he could no longer contain himself, no more than a woman in the pangs of travail can forbear crying out; but he must give vent to his just resentments for the injuries offered to himself and his oppressed people, by bringing some exemplary punishment upon their oppressors. When men's provocations come to a great height, God is represented, in scripture, as if his patience were quite tired out, and he could no longer forbear punishing them (see Jer. xv. 6, xlv. 22).

Ver. 15.] As God's mercy is represented by "pouring water upon the thirsty ground" (see xxxv. 6, 7, xlv. 3): so his wrath is described as if it were a consuming fire, which parches up everything, and reduces it to barrenness (see ver. 25 of this chapter, and 1. 2, and Zech. x. 11). This was literally fulfilled in Cyrus's taking Babylon; when, in order to it, he drained the river Euphrates, by cutting several new channels to carry off the water, and marched his army through it into the city (see the note on xlv. 27).

Ver. 16.] If we understand the words of the people's return from captivity, they import, that God would provide means for their restoration which they did not think of, and would remove all impediments that might lie in the way of their return (compare xl. 4, Jer. xxxi. 9). In like manner God will enlighten the world by his gospel, and reduce men into the ways of truth, notwithstanding all the opposition that inveterate error and prejudice can make to the contrary.

Ver. 17.] This must relate to that destruction of the heathen images and idolatrous worship which followed upon the settlement of Christianity in the Roman empire; and may receive a farther accomplishment, as the truth of the gospel shall more and more 18 Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see.

19 Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the LORD's servant?

20 Seeing many things, but thou observest not; opening the ears, but he heareth not.

21 The LORD is well pleased for his righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make it honourable.

22 But this is a people robbed and spoiled; they are all of them snared in holes, and they are hid in prison houses: they are for a prey, and none delivereth; for a spoil, and none saith, Restore.

23 Who among you will give ear to this? who will hearken and hear for the time to come?

24 Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the LORD, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law.

25 Therefore he hath poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle: and it hath set him on fire round about, yet he knew not; and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart.

prevail in the world (see the note on i. 29). The words cannot be said to receive their just completion, in the destruction of the Babylonish monarchy by the Persians: for that turn of affairs gave no check to idolatry, the Persians being as much strangers to the true God as the Babylonians. Indeed, Strabo gives this testimony to the Persians, Πέρσαι ὁράματα καὶ λατρείας οὐκ ἵπσουσιν, "the Persians set up neither images nor altars" (lib. xv. Geograph.); but yet they represented the divine majesty by the external symbol of fire.

The phrase of being "turned back," signifies any disappointment, being a metaphor taken from the discomfiture of forces in war (see Ps. lxx. 3).

Ver. 18.] The prophet, speaking still in the person of God, now turns his discourse to the Jews, and upbraids them with their blindness and incorrigibility under all the means of instruction which had been afforded them. To this evil temper they were to ascribe all those judgments God had already inflicted upon them, which should at last end in a total captivity; and should have still more astonishing effects upon their rejecting the Messiah (compare vi. 10, 11, and see the notes upon that place).

Ver. 19. Who is blind, but my servant? The prophets often upbraid the Jews with blindness, in not considering and laying to heart what they said to them from the mouth of God (see Jer. v. 21, Ezek. xliii. 2).

Or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? This may be understood of some of the prophets (compare xlv. 16); several of whom were unfaithful in their office, and irregular in their lives (see xliii. 17, Jer. v. 31, xxiii. 14). The expression may comprehend the priests too, who are called likewise the "messengers of the Lord" (Mal. ii. 7).

Who is blind as he that is perfect. That should be so by his profession. The word is meshullam in the Hebrew; from whence the Arabic Mussulman is derived, a title the Mahometans give to themselves.

Ver. 21.] The verse might be translated plainer thus: "The Lord took delight in this people for his righteousness' sake; he hath given them an excellent law, and thereby made them honourable" (compare Deut. iv. 6—8). Their law, if they would have kept close to it, would have been both their ornament and defence.

Ver. 22.] A description of their miserable condition, when their city was taken, their country left desolate, themselves made captives and slaves, or else forced to hide themselves in dens and caves, and even there in danger of being laid wait for and caught by the enemy, without any body to plead for them, or assert their liberty.

Ver. 23.] Who among you captives, will take warning by the judgments you feel already?

Ver. 24. Who gave Jacob to the spoil, and Israel to the robbers? First to the Assyrians, and afterward to the Babylonians, who are called spoilers, xxi. 2, xxxiii. 1.

Ver. 25.] This was literally fulfilled when the Chaldean army took their city, and burnt both that and their temple, 2 Kings xxv. 9 (compare likewise the 13th verse of this chapter). To know signifies sometimes the same as to consider (see Hos. vii. 9, and the note upon xxviii. 19).

CHAPTER XLIII.

I BUT now thus saith the LORD that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine.

CHAP. XLIII.

ARGUMENT.—After the threatenings mentioned at the latter end of the foregoing chapter, God here revives his people with comfortable promises, and assurances that he will never utterly forsake them, but will do such miracles for their deliverance, in aftertimes, as shall obscure the memory of those which he wrought for them heretofore. Towards the conclusion, he renews his expostulations with them for their ingratitude and neglect of his service, which will be justly punished with the destruction of their temple, and depriving them of the opportunities of public worship.

Ver. 1. But now thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, fear not: "God created thee for his glory," as it is explained ver. 7, 21, to be his peculiar people: so God's elect are called "the work of his hands," xxix. 23, xlv. 11, lx. 21. And those God "will never utterly forsake" (Ps. cxxxviii. 8). By Jacob and Israel are meant the two remaining tribes of Judah and Benjamin in the first place, as below ver. 22, 23, and above xli. 8, though it is probable that many of the promises mentioned here and in the following chapters, relate to that general restoration of the Jews so often spoken of by the prophets.

I have redeemed thee. Out of the house of bondage, to be my peculiar people; and have ever since exercised a very particular providence over you; and have abundantly testified my care of you.

I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine. I have made a particular choice of thee for my peculiar

2 When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.

3 For I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour: I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.

4 Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee: therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy life.

5 Fear not: for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west;

6 I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth;

7 Even every one that is called by my name: for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him.

8 ¶ Bring forth the blind people that have eyes, and the deaf that have ears.

people, and singled thee out from the rest of the world (see Exod. xxxi. 2); and ever since have treated thee with uncommon instances of kindness and familiarity. When a person of great dignity calls an inferior by his name, it is a token of a particular intimacy, and doing him a great deal of honour (compare xlv. 4, xlix. 1, Exod. xxxiii. 12).

Ver. 2.] I will deliver thee when thou art in the greatest straits and difficulties. To "pass through fire and water," is a proverbial expression, to signify being exposed to all kind of dangers (see Ps. lxi. 12).

Ver. 3. I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.] This most interpreters understand of that diversion which the Egyptians, the Jews' allies, in conjunction with Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, gave to Sennacherib's forces, when they were just ready to fall upon the Jews (see xxxvi. 9, and notes upon xviii. 1). If we take the words in this sense, we must understand the Cush, or Ethiopia, mentioned in the thirty-seventh chapter, of Arabia, because it is joined here with Seba, which is part of that country (see likewise xlv. 14). It is certain that Cush sometimes signifies Arabia, though not always, as Bochart maintains. If we do not approve of this explication, this verse must relate to some historical passage not recorded elsewhere in scripture. Some, indeed, would refer the place to the destruction of the Ethiopians under Asa (2 Chron. xiv. 12): but I take those not to have been Arabians (and such probably are meant here); but Ethiopians properly so called, because they are joined with Lubims, 2 Chron. xvi. 8, who certainly are Africans.

Ver. 4. Therefore will I give men for thee,] The Chaldeans and their forces (see ver. 14).

Ver. 5, 6.] This may have partly been fulfilled in the return of the Jews from Babylon, and other countries under that monarchy; but withal they import some more general restoration of that nation (see xi. 11, 12): or else we may interpret the words of the gathering together of God's elect into one body (see Eph. i. 10, and the following verse here, and the note upon liv. 7).

Ver. 7.] Every one that is called by the name of God's servant (see lxiii. 19, James ii. 7). The expressions denote the bringing the gentiles into the 9 Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled: who among them can declare this, and shew us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, It is truth.

10 Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servant whom I have chosen: that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me.

11 I, even I, am the Lord; and beside me there is no saviour.

12 I have declared, and have saved, and I have shewed, when there was no strange god among you: therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God.

13 Yea, before the day was I am he; and there is none that can deliver out of my hand: I will work, and who shall let it?

14 ¶ Thus saith the Lord, your redeemer, the Holy One of Israel: For your sake I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down all their church, and making them "fellow-heirs, and of the same body" with the Jews; for he "hath created them too for his glory, and to show forth the praises of him that hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Pet. ii. 9, and compare xlix. 6, Amos. ix. 12, John xi. 52). The conversion of the Jews, and the bringing the fulness of the gentiles into the church, will be coincident in time, and each of these events will help to advance and carry on the other (see the notes on lxvi. 12, 19).

Ver. 8.] The old translation, published under king Henry VIII. expresses the sense more plainly thus, "Bring forth the people which is blind, and yet hath eyes; which are deaf, although they have ears." By which are meant the heathen idolaters, who, like the images they worship, "have eyes and see not" (Ps. cxv. 7).

Ver. 9. Who among them can declare this,] God makes the same challenge to the idolaters and their gods, which he did xli. 21, 22.

Or let them hear, and say, It is truth.] If they cannot make good their own pretensions, let them hear what proof I have to allege on my side, and acknowledge that what I say is truth.

Ver. 10. Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servant] God's people and his prophets will always bear witness to his truth, who have received such pregnant proofs of his divinity (see 1 John v. 10). By "my servant" is eminently meant the Messiah (see xlii. 1); who is expressly called "God's witness," lv. 4 (compare Rev. i. 5), although all God's messengers are in an inferior degree his witnesses, being "set for the defence and confirmation" of his truth (see John i. 7, Acts i. 8).

Before me there was no god formed.] An ironical expression, alluding to the forming or making of idols (see xlv. 10).

Ver. 12. I have shewed, when there was no strange god among you:] The sense might be plainer expressed thus, "I have shown [these things] and not any strange god among you." The word god is here understood, as it is in xlii. 8, and Ps. xvi. 4).

Ver. 13. Before the day was I am he:] Before all time, I am still the same (compare Ps. xc. 2).

Ver. 14. For your sake I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down all their nobles,] The preterper-nobles, and the Chaldeans, whose cry is in the ships.

15 I am the LORD, your Holy One, the creator of Israel, your King.

16 Thus saith the LORD, which maketh a way in the sea, and a path in the mighty waters;

17 Which bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army and the power; they shall lie down together, they shall not rise: they are extinct, they are quenched as tow.

18 ¶ Remember ye not the former things, neither consider the things of old.

19 Behold, I will do a new thing; now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it? I will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert.

20 The beast of the field shall honour me, the dragons and the owls: because I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen.

fect tense is here used for the future (see xxi. 2, xli. 3). For your sakes I will send Cyrus to conquer Babylon, and make captives both of their nobles and people; or else the prophet may be supposed to direct this and the following discourses to the Jews who were in captivity.

Whose cry is in the ships.] Who glory in the number of their ships, with which they carry on a great trade upon Tigris and Euphrates. So the Septuagint and the Vulgar Latin understand the place. Others explain it of the Chaldeans flying to their ships for refuge against the forces of the enemy, who had surprised their city; or of their being sent prisoners on ship-board by the conqueror.

Ver. 16, 17. Who maketh a way in the sea, &c.] Who led his people safely through the Red sea, and overthrew Pharaoh and his army that pursued them.

Ver. 18, 19.] The new wonders I will do for you shall obscure the memory of the old ones (see Jer. xxiii. 7, 8).

Ver. 19.] As of old I conducted my people through the wilderness, so that they wanted no sort of accommodation, either for meat or drink (see Deut. viii. 15, 16), so now I will give as pregnant proofs of my presence with them, when I return their captivity (see xli. 18, 19).

Ver. 20. There shall be such plenty of water, that the beasts which dwell in the wilderness shall be refreshed by it, and shall join with my people in making their thankful acknowledgments for these miracles of my mercy (see the note on xlii. 10, 11). The dragons and owls are elsewhere joined together, as creatures which frequent solitary and desolate places (see Job xxx. 29, Mic. i. 8, and the notes upon xlii. 22 of this prophecy). The verse alludes to God's miraculous supplying the Israelites with water in the wilderness (see note on xli. 17, 18).

Ver. 21.] See above, ver. 1, 7.

Ver. 22.] The prophet in this and the following verses, assigns the causes of the Jews' captivity, which were chiefly their forsaking the worship of the true God; not calling upon him in their trouble, but applying themselves to idols for help, and performing God's service in a careless manner, as if it were a tedious and unprofitable burden (see Mal. i. 13).

Ver. 23, 24. Thou hast not brought me the small cattle of thy burnt offerings;—neither hast thou filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices:] The burnt-offerings

21 This people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise.

22 ¶ But thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob; but thou hast been weary of me, O Israel.

23 Thou hast not brought me the small cattle of thy burnt offerings; neither hast thou honoured me with thy sacrifices. I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with incense.

24 Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money, neither hast thou filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices: but thou hast made me to serve with thy sins, thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities.

25 I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.

26 Put me in remembrance: let us plead together: declare thou, that thou mayest be justified.

were those which were all burnt or offered upon the altar, called here the lambs (our English reads the small cattle) of thy burnt-offerings, a lamb being always offered for the daily burnt-offering (Exod. xxix. 38). The sacrifices, properly so called, were those offerings, part of which belonged to the priest, or was eaten by those that offered the sacrifice, after the fat had been offered upon the altar (see Lev. iii. 16, iv. 31, vii. 25, 33). God complains here that he had not been honoured either of these ways: the meaning of which complaint is, that although the Jews were punctual in offering sacrifice (for, i. 11, he speaks of the multitude of their sacrifices as a burden to him), yet they did not perform this service with a devout mind; just as God saith (Amos v. 25), "Have ye offered to me sacrifices for forty years in the wilderness?" That is, did you do it out of a religious principle, or a sincere regard to my honour? No; because, as it follows, you were fond of the idolatry you brought with you out of Egypt. To the same sense are those words of Zechariah (vii. 5), "Did ye at all fast to me, even to me?"

Or else the words of the text may relate to those idolatrous times, in the reigns of Ahaz and Manasseh, when the temple-service quite ceased, and the house of the Lord was shut up (see 2 Chron. xxviii. 24), or else profaned by having an idol set up in it, and idolatrous worship performed there (2 Kings xxi. 7).

I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with incense.] My service has not been burdensome or expensive to thee. The offering here spoken of is the mincha, or bread-offering, for so the word should rather be rendered than meat offering, as our English translates it; for it answers to the ἀλοχύται, and the mola, or furtum, of the Greeks and Romans. This offering always accompanied the other sacrifices, and had frankincense laid upon it (see Lev. ii. 2, 15). These expressions countenance the latter interpretation of the foregoing words, and seem to import the discontinuance of the public worship in the temple; for to the same purpose it follows;

Ver. 24. Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money.] To make the sweet incense, which was daily offered upon the altar, set apart for that purpose (see Exod. xxx. 7, 8, 34, 36, xl. 27, Ecclus. xxiv. 15).

But thou hast made me to serve with thy sins.] Instead of the service due to me from thee, thou hast 27 Thy first father hath sinned, and thy teachers have transgressed against me.

28 Therefore I have profaned the princes of made me undergo a sort of bondage by thy wicked practices, which have brought an ill report upon my name and religion (see Ezek. xxxvi. 20), and have quite tired out my patience (compare Amos ii. 13, Mal. ii. 17).

Ver. 26. Put me in remembrance :] Put me in remembrance of thy good deeds, if thou hast anything to allege in thy own behalf; I should be glad if thou couldst acquit thyself of the crimes laid to thy charge.

Ver. 37.] Your ancestors, reckoning from Adam downward, have been sinners, and you have trod in their steps (compare Ezek. xvi. 3). And your prophets and teachers, who ought to have been guides to the people, have led them into sin and error (see the note upon xlii. 19).

Ver. 28. Therefore I have profaned the princes of the sanctuary :] I have suffered the Babylonians to profane my sanctuary, to abuse the chief priests, and pollute whatsoever is sacred (compare xlvii. 6, Lam. ii. 6, 7, iv. 14).

And have given Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches :] Made then a proverb of execration and reproach to all the neighbouring nations (compare Psalms lxxix. 4, Jer. xxiv. 9, Daniel ix. 16, Zech. viii. 13.) The words are addressed to the Jews, as if they were already in captivity (see ver. 14).

CHAPTER XLIV.

1 YET now hear, O Jacob my servant; and Israel, whom I have chosen :

2 Thus saith the LORD that made thee, and formed thee from the womb, which will help thee; Fear not, O Jacob, my servant; and thou, Jesurun, whom I have chosen.

3 For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring :

4 And they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water courses.

5 One shall say, I am the LORD's; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the LORD, and surname himself by the name of Israel.

6 Thus saith the LORD the King of Israel, and his redeemer the LORD of hosts; I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God.

7 And who, as I, shall call, and shall declare it, and set it in order for me, since I appointed the ancient people? and the things that are coming, and shall come, let them shew unto them.

8 Fear ye not, neither be afraid: have not I

CHAP. XLIV.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter begins with comfortable promises after the former threatenings, as the last did. The prophet then proceeds to arm them against idolatry, upon the same grounds and arguments as he did ch. xl. and exhorts them to put their whole trust in God, who would certainly deliver them by Cyrus, whom he foretells by name above a hundred years before he was born.

Ver. 2. Thus saith the Lord that made thee, and formed thee] He speaks of the Jewish people under the character of a single person: and as God hath sometimes designed certain persons for particular offices from their birth and conception (see xlix. 5, Jer. i. 15), so he set apart the posterity of Abraham to be his people from the very original of the family.

And thou, Jesurun :] Jesurun is a name given to the Jews by Moses, Deut. xxxii. 15, it signifies upright, because they were called to be a holy people to the Lord.

Ver. 3.] God's blessings are often represented under the metaphor of rivers and streams, which water ground and render it fruitful (see the note on xxx. 25). And the latter part of the verse explains what blessings are here intended, viz. the plentiful effusion of God's Spirit, which is mentioned by the prophets as the peculiar character of the gospel-times (see liv. 13, Jer. xxi. 34, Ezek. xi. 19, xxxvi. 27, Joel ii. 28). And the pouring out such abundant measures of grace and mercy, especially upon the ignorant and unbelievers, is usually set forth under the metaphor of watering barren land (see xi. 9, xxv. 7, xxx. 25, xli. 18, and the notes upon these last two places).

Ver. 4.] They shall flourish as if they were planted in rich meadows, or by the banks of rivers (compare Ps. i. 3).

Ver. 5. One shall say, I am the Lord's :] This relates to the increase of the church by the accession of the gentiles (see ver. 3).

Another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord :] Some render it, "Another shall write upon his hand, I am the Lord's," as if the expression alluded to the custom of soldiers receiving a mark upon their hands, to signify to what commander they belonged. See Dr. Spencer, De Legib. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 14. sect. 1, where he observes that idolaters often had a mark or character of the god they worshipped, imprinted upon their hand or shoulder: in allusion to which custom, it is said of the worshippers of antichrist, that they "receive his mark in their hand" (Rev. xiii. 16, xiv. 9).

Ver. 7.] "God, who is the first and the last" (ver. 6), claims to himself the ordering and disposing of all the affairs of the world, from the time that he created man upon it; or from the time that he chose Abraham and his family to be his peculiar people; over whom he hath all along exercised a particular providence, and hath from time to time foreshown what should befall them, which accordingly hath come to pass. An instance of prescience which none of the idols can pretend to (compare xli. 4, 22, xliii. 9, xlv. 21, xlviii. 3).

Ver. 8. Fear ye not :] Do not distrust my care and providence over you (see ver. 21).

told thee from that time, and have declared it? ye are even my witnesses. Is there a God beside me? yea, there is no God; I know not any.

9 ¶ They that make a graven image are all of them vanity; and their delectable things shall not profit; and they are their own witnesses; they see not, nor know; that they may be ashamed.

10 Who hath formed a god, or molten a graven image that is profitable for nothing?

11 Behold, all his fellows shall be ashamed: and the workmen, they are of men: let them all be gathered together, let them stand up; yet they shall fear, and they shall be ashamed together.

12 The smith with the tongs both worketh in the coals, and fashioneth it with hammers, and worketh it with the strength of his arms: yea, he is hungry, and his strength faileth: he drinketh no water, and is faint.

13 The carpenter stretcheth out his rule; he marketh it out with a line; he fitteth it with planes, and he marketh it out with the compass, and maketh it after the figure of a man, according to the beauty of a man: that it may remain in the house.

14 He heweth him down cedars, and taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest: he planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it.

15 Then shall it be for a man to burn: for he will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread; yea, he maketh a god, and worshippeth it; he maketh it a graven image, and falleth down thereto.

16 He burneth part thereof in the fire; with part thereof he eateth flesh; he roasteth roast, and is satisfied: yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, Aha, I am warm, I have seen the fire:

17 And the residue thereof he maketh a god, even his graven image: he falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and saith, Deliver me; for thou art my god.

18 They have not known nor understood: for he hath shut their eyes, that they cannot see; and their hearts, that they cannot understand.

19 And none considereth in his heart, neither

Have I not told it thee from that time?] The Hebrew particle meaz should be translated "from the beginning," or of old, as our translators themselves render it in this prophecy, xlviii. 3, 5, Ps. xciii. 2, Prov. viii. 22, and so it should be translated in other places of this prophecy, particularly xvi. 13, xlv. 21, xlviii. 8.

Ye are even my witnesses.] See note on xliii. 10.

Ver. 9. Their delectable things shall not profit;] Their delectable or pleasant things (as the word hamudim is elsewhere rendered) are their images, upon which they laid out all the cost they could to make them look rich and glorious (compare Dan. xi. 38).

They are their own witnesses: they see not, nor know;] The makers of images are sufficiently convinced that their idols are senseless things; which one would think should make them ashamed of their folly in worshipping them.

Ver. 11.] The time will come when all the craftsmen in the art of idol-making, and all the zealous assertors of this kind of worship, shall be ashamed and confounded at their own folly, to think that the work of men's hands could have any thing of divinity in it (compare xlii. 17, xlv. 16, Ps. xcvii. 7).

Ver. 12.] To give an account of the original of images, is sufficient to expose men's folly in worshipping them (see before, xli. 6, Jer. x. 3). This argument the ancient apologists often insist upon, to show the absurdity of the heathen idolatry; but none of them more elegantly than Minutius Felix, in the following words: "Quando igitur hic [Deus] nascitur? ecce funditur, fabricatur, scalpitur: nondum Deus est. Ecce plumbatur, construitur, erigitur: nec adhuc Deus est. Ecce ornatur, consecratur, oratur: tunc postremo Deus est, cum homo illum voluit et dedicavit." Which runs thus, in Mr. Reeve's excellent translation: "But when, pray, does it commence divine? behold, it is cast, fashioned, and filed: well, it is no god yet. Behold, it is soldered, put together, and set upon its legs: well, it is no god yet. Behold, it is bedecked, consecrated, prayed to: then, then, at last, behold a complete god, after man hath vouchsafed to make and dedicate him."

Yea, he is hungry, and his strength faileth, &c.] This shows this idol-maker to be but a man (ver. 1), subject to the same infirmities and necessities with other men, and that his god is not able to preserve his life. Some think the words express the eager zeal of the workman, who denies himself necessary refreshment, that he may finish the work he hath undertaken.

Ver. 13.] In this and the following verses, the prophet, with great smartness of argument, exposes the absurdity of image worship: for what an absurdity is it for a man to dress his meat and make his god with the same stick of wood: or to think that a piece of timber hath any more divinity in it than it had before, because it is fashioned and carved into the figure of a man.

This way of arguing does not suppose that the heathens took their images for gods; for that is a contradiction in terms, and as absurd as to think that a man and his picture are the same thing: but the design of the prophet's argument is, to show the absurdity of setting up images as the resemblances of God, and the representative objects of worship; or the supposing them to have some divine power lodged within them: inasmuch as they have no qualities that answer such a character, being endued neither with power, life, nor understanding; and are indeed nothing but what they appear to be, bare, senseless matter, wood, or stone. Besides that, nothing is a greater dishonor to God, than to suppose him like the image of a corruptible creature. For the same reason, the author of the book of Wisdom makes the worship of images more inexcusable than the worship of the heavenly bodies, or of the elements, because these are worshipped for their own sakes, those upon the account of their representation (Wis. xiii. 2, 10).

Ver. 14. Which he strengthens for himself among the trees of the forest:] Which he had picked out as fit for his purpose, and nourished up till it came to its due growth.

Ver. 15. Yea, he maketh a god.] Of the remaining part (see ver. 17).

Ver. 16. With part thereof he eateth flesh;] He dresseth flesh, in order to eat it (ver. 19).

Ver. 18. For he hath shut their eyes.] The old translation expresseth the sense better, "their eyes are stopped:" for the verb transitive is often taken in an impersonal sense (see xxii. 19). So Exod. vii. 13, we is there knowledge nor understanding to say, I have burned part of it in the fire; yea, also I have baked bread upon the coals thereof; I have roasted flesh, and eaten it: and shall I make the residue thereof an abomination? shall I fall down to the stock of a tree?

20 He feedeth on ashes: a deceived heart hath turned him aside, that he cannot deliver his soul, nor say, Is there not a lie in my right hand?

21 ¶ Remember these, O Jacob and Israel; for thou art my servant: I have formed thee; thou art my servant: O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of me.

22 I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins: return unto me: for I have redeemed thee.

23 Sing, O ye heavens; for the Lord hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth:

read, "He hardened Pharaoh's heart;" which is explained in the next verse, by "Pharaoh's heart was hardened." Thus, Isa. ix. 6, the Hebrew reads, "He shall call his name Wonderful," &c. which our English translation rightly renders, "His name shall be called Wonderful," &c. Again, Luke xii. 20, it is in the Greek, "They require thy soul of thee;" which our interpreters translate, "Thy soul shall be required of thee."

Ver. 20. He feedeth on ashes: As ashes have no nourishment, so his zeal and devotion shall not avail him.

A deceived heart hath turned him aside, Vulgar errors and prejudice have perverted his understanding, that he cannot discern the most gross and palpable falsehood, nor free himself from the delusions of it. The old English translation does very well express the sense of this verse: "Thus doth he but lose his labour, and his heart, which is deceived, doth turn him aside," &c.

Ver. 21. Remember these [things] O Jacob, &c.] The prophet applies his discourse against idols to those of the captivity, and exhorts them seriously to reflect upon what he had said, when they should come to live among the idolaters.

Ver. 22.] The preter-perfect tense may here stand for the future, as in many other places (see xliii. 14). God encourages them to trust in his mercy, by assuring them, that upon their repentance he will so fully forgive their sins, that no sign of his displeasure shall appear, and they shall never rise up in judgment against them any more, just as a cloud vanisheth when it is dispersed by the sun or the wind. The same metaphor is used by Demosthenes, in a sentence which Longinus does very much admire, πρὸς ὑψίους, cap. 34. τὸ αὐτὸ τοῦ ἡέρος τὸν αὐτὸν τὸ πῦρ παραστάντα κινδύνον, παραχρῆν ὑπὸ τῆς ἡλίου φέρον. "That vote made the danger which before hung over the city vanish like a cloud." This general promulgation of pardon, "is a preaching of the gospel beforehand," as St. Paul speaks, and is designed, as many of the promises in the prophets are, to prepare men's minds for the receiving it (see Acts xiii. 38, 39, Luke xxiv. 47).

Ver. 23.] An apostrophe to the whole creation, to join in praising God for his wonderful mercies; which shows that they are such as all the world are some way concerned in: and such are only the mercies of the gospel, for which the earth ought to rejoice, because the benefits of it are extended to all mankind, and the angels in heaven will sympathize with men break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein: for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himself in Israel.

24 Thus saith the Lord, thy redeemer, and he that formed thee from the womb, I am the Lord that maketh all things: that stretcheth forth the heavens alone: that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself;

25 That frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish:

26 That confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built, and I will raise up the decayed places thereof:

27 That saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers:

below, because their joy in the conversion and salvation of mankind, and in their being reunited to that blessed society of which Christ is the head. See Col. i. 20, and compare with the text here, xlii. 10—12, Ps. xevi. 11, &c. xeviii. 4, &c. which places are, by all Christian interpreters, expounded of the times of the gospel. But Mr. White puts in his exception to this exposition, because Jacob and Israel "are mentioned here, who have the least share in this redemption. But I think St. Paul hath long ago answered this objection, when he tells us, that the "children of the promise are counted for the true seed of Israel" (Rom. ix. 8). We will allow Mr. White, that the redemption of the Jews from captivity may be primarily intended here as a type of a more general redemption to be accomplished by Christ; but to confine the words to the former sense, exclusive of the latter, is neither agreeable to the genuine import of the words, nor to the general sense of the Christian church.

Ver. 25.] God taketh pleasure in confounding the wisdom of the wise men of the world, and baffling the fine schemes of human policy, especially those forbidden arts of divination, which the Chaldeans so much valued (see xlvii. 13, Jer. l. 36).

Ver. 26.] But as he discovers the folly and madness of such false prophets, so he punctually fulfilleth the predictions of his own prophets. The title of God's servant does eminently belong to the Messiah in this prophecy, who was "that prophet that should come into the world" (see note on xlii. 1); but is in a lower sense ascribed to other prophets, and may here be understood of Isaiah himself (compare xliii. 10, l. 10): and God's messengers are as well those prophets that lived before Isaiah's time, such as are Hosea, Joel, and Amos; as those who followed, such as Jeremy, Micah, Ezekiel, &c. who all foretold the restoration of the Jews.

Ver. 27.] God opened a way for Cyrus to take Babylon, by suggesting to him a method for draining the river Euphrates, and making it passable for his army, (compare Jer. l. 38, li. 36).

Ver. 28.] I will make him my instrument in gathering my people together, and leading them home as a shepherd does his flock. Kings and princes are often styled shepherds in scripture (see Jer. vi. 3, xlix. 19, l. 6, Zech. xi. 8, 16). So in Homer, Agamemnon is often called παιστήν λαῶν; "the shepherd of the people."

This is one of the most remarkable prophecies of 28 That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure: even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid.

scripture, where Cyrus "is called by his name," as the prophet expresseth it, xlv. 4, above a hundred years before he was born. In like manner Josiah is prophesied of by name, above three hundred and twenty years before his birth (see 1 Kings xiii. 2).

CHAPTER XLV.

1 Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him: and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut.

2 I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight; I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron:

3 And I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I, the Lord, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel.

4 For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me.

5 ¶ I am the Lord, and there is none else, there is no God beside me: I girded thee, though thou hast not known me:

6 That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none beside me. I am the Lord, and there is none else.

7 I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things.

CHAP. XLV.

ARGUMENT.—The subject is much the same with that of the former chapter, concerning Cyrus's commission from God, and the successes he will bless him with: then follows an exhortation to the people, to wait God's time for their deliverance, who is not unmindful of them, and will magnify his own glory in their salvation. In the latter part of the chapter, the prophet seems to carry his views to another restoration of his people at the latter times, when they shall be converted to the Christian faith, and return from their several dispersions.

Ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus,] God gives the title of anointed to Cyrus, the same which is usually given to David and other kings of the Jews, who were God's immediate deputies, to show that he was raised up to be an immediate instrument of Providence, in restoring the Jews' captivity. Many of the ancient fathers understand this verse of Christ; which opinion was partly occasioned by some of the copies of the Septuagint, which read Κυρίῳ for Κύρῳ, which reading is followed by Barnabas in his epistle (ch. 12), as also by Tertullian, Cyprian, and others. But that the deliverance here foretold was a figure of the redemption to be accomplished by Christ, plainly appears from several passages in this chapter, and particularly from ver. 8, 17, 20, &c. And as our learned Mr. Thorndike hath observed, Cyrus may as well be a figure of Christ as Nebuchadnezzar. Antiochus Epiphanes, the prince of Tyre, and other idolatrous and persecuting tyrants, are spoken of in the prophets, as types and forerunners of antichrist (see his book De Jure finendi. Controvers. cap. 4. p. 58).

Whose right hand I have holden.] See xli. 10.

I will loose the loins of kings.] As girding, or "girding the loins," signifies enduing with strength (see ver. 5), so "loosing the loins" is taking away men's strength or courage, and leaving them no power to make resistance (see Dan. v. 6, and the notes upon Isa. v. 27).

To open before him the two leaved gates;] To give him admittance into cities and palaces (see the following verse)

Ver. 2. I will go before thee,] See the note on xl. 3. I will break in pieces the gates of brass.] To every side of the great wall which encompassed Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar made five-and-twenty gates of solid brass, amounting in all to a hundred. (See Dr. Prideaux, ad ann. A. C. 570).

Ver. 3. I will give thee the treasures of darkness,] Such as are laid up safe, and never see the light Grotius hath observed out of Pliny, what immense riches Cyrus found in his conquests: the Babylonian empire being of ancient fame and greatness, and Asia that part of the world which was most remarkable, at that time, for its riches and luxury.

That thou mayest know that I the Lord, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel.] That I, the Lord, who have so highly favored thee (see the note on xliii. 1), and have mentioned thy name so long beforehand, as the peculiar instrument of my providence, am the only true God, and Israel is my people.

Ver. 4. I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me.] Beside the name of Cyrus, I have given thee the surname of my anointed, and my shepherd, and I have taken this particular notice of thee, not for thine own sake, who art a stranger to the true God, but for the sake of my people Israel, that thou mayest be their deliverer.

Ver. 5. I girded thee, though thou hast not known me:] It is I that endued thee with strength for war (see Ps. xviii. 39), though thou art ignorant of me. Cyrus was bred among idolaters, but afterwards was instructed by the Jews in the knowledge of the true God, as appears from Ezra i. 2.

Ver. 6.] My interposing so visibly in behalf of my own people, and returning their captivity by such unexpected means, will convince the heathen part of the world that I am the only true God (see Ps. cii. 15, 16).

Ver. 7.] The latter part of the sentence explains the former: light being often put for happiness, and darkness for adversity. The sense is, that all the vicissitudes of good or ill success are to be ascribed to Providence: God sets up one kingdom, that of Cyrus, and pulls down another, the Babylonian monarchy.

I form the light, and I create darkness.] Dr. Prideaux hath given a clear account of this sentence:

8 Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness: let the earth open, and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together; I the LORD have created it.

9 Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! Let the potsherd strive with the potsherd of the earth. Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou? or thy work, He hath no hands?

10 Woe unto him that saith unto his father, What begettest thou? or to the woman, What hast thou brought forth?

“These words (saith he) being directed to Cyrus, king of Persia, must be understood as spoken to the Persian sect of the Magians, who held light and darkness, good and evil, to be the supreme beings, without acknowledging the great God who is superior to them both” (Script. Connect. par. i. p. 215, edit. 8vo). In opposition to this opinion, the prophet instructs king Cyrus, that light and darkness, good and evil, are under the direction and disposal of almighty God.]

Ver. 8.] A passionate wish of the people to see those blessed times in which heaven and earth should conspire to illustrate God’s righteousness (or faithfulness), and advance man’s happiness (compare Ps. lxxxv. 11). This was in some measure verified upon the return from captivity, when the laws and worship of God were re-established; but must certainly look farther than that deliverance, even to him that was to be the Lord “our righteousness,” and the “author of eternal salvation” (see the note upon ver. 1).

Ver. 9.] In reference to that earnest wish, mentioned ver. 8, the prophet warns the people not to be too impatient, but to wait God’s time for the accomplishing this redemption. Men may contend or argue with their equals, saith he, with those who are made of the same clay with themselves, but they must not presume to inquire of God the reasons of his proceedings, or find fault with his works of creation or providence, as if they were not wisely contrived or well timed.

He hath no hands?] The expression either means, he had no hand in making it, or, he hath no contrivance, it is not well put together.

Ver. 10.] The same question varied: he who findeth fault with second causes, does indirectly blame God almighty, the original cause of all things; for the instruments of providence are all in God’s hands, and they act according to those measures which he directs.

Ver. 11.] Some read the latter part of the verse by way of interrogation, “Do you ask of me,” &c. and take it in the same sense with the two former verses, for a proof of their presumption, who were too inquisitive into the reasons of God’s purposes. But I rather understand it with our English translation in a favourable sense; which is confirmed by the introduction, “Thus saith the Lord, the Holy One of Israel:” a preface which always ushers in some gracious promise (compare xliii. 1, 3, 14, xlv. 6, xlviii. 17). So I take the words to import thus much: that although God be not obliged to render an account of his proceedings to his creatures; yet he is graciously pleased to comply with their curiosity, and to resolve any questions which are proposed concerning the final issue of his people’s captivity. Nay, he represents himself as ready to serve them, and to do everything that can be desired in favour of his elect, whom he calls here his “sons, and the work those of his hands” (compare xxix. 23, Jer. xxxi. 9).

11 Thus saith the LORD, the Holy One of Israel, and his Maker, Ask me of things to come concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands command ye me.

12 I have made the earth, and created man upon it; I, even my hands, have stretched out the heavens, and all their host have I commanded.

13 I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways: he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the LORD of hosts.

14 Thus saith the LORD, The labour of

Ver. 12.] The words assure us, that God is able to make good whatever he promises (compare xlii. 5, xlv. 24).

Ver. 13. I have raised him up in righteousness.] This is to be immediately understood of Cyrus, whom God raised up to be the instrument of executing the divine justice upon the Babylonians, and fulfilling God’s mercy towards the Jews. In this particular he was a type of Christ, as hath been observed upon xli. 2.

He shall build my city.] He shall give orders for the building it (Ezra i. 2). [Cyrus only gave order for the building of the temple (Ezra i. 2); but the consequence of that would be the rebuilding of the city, as being the metropolis of the kingdom, and the place to which the whole nation were to repair at their solemn feasts. Compare xlv. 28.]

He shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward.] Princes are commonly governed by politic considerations, and expect a reward for their labour (see Ezek. xxix. 18). There being nothing of that kind to move Cyrus to restore the Jewish captivity, that resolution could proceed only from a divine impulse. The words may likewise be fitly applied to the freedom of that redemption which Christ hath obtained for us (compare lii. 3).

Ver. 14. The labour of Egypt, &c.] This verse cannot be understood of Cyrus’s conquests, as Grotius and some others do explain it; for the words thee and thine so often repeated in this verse, are all of the feminine gender in the Hebrew, and consequently must be understood of Jerusalem, the city mentioned ver. 13. Therefore I conceive the place is principally meant of the flourishing state of the church (often described under the figure of a city) when the gentile world should come into it, bring in their riches to the adorning and support of it, and submit themselves to its government, as being the only seat and temple of truth (compare xviii. 7, xxiii. 18, xlix. 23, lx. 9, 10, 14, 16, Ps. lxxviii. 30, 31).

The words may be supposed in some degree verified in Cyrus’s devoting the tribute coming out of those rich provinces of Egypt, Ethiopia, and Seba, to the building and service of God’s temple. Some of the succeeding Persian monarchs settled revenues upon the temple for the offering sacrifices for themselves and their families (see Ezra vi. 10). The same was done in aftertimes by Alexander the Great, and several of the Syrian and Egyptian kings (see 2 Macc. iii. 2, 3. v. 16), and some of the Roman emperors, as may be seen in Josephus, particularly lib. i. De Bell. Jud. cap. 17, and Philo’s Legatio ad Caium.

Men of stature.] The Chaldee paraphrast explains it by “men of merchandise,” such as deal in weights and measures; which sense agrees very well with the Egypt, and merchandise of Ethiopia and of the Sabeans, men of stature, shall come over unto thee, and they shall be thine: they shall come after thee; in chains they shall come over, and they shall fall down unto thee, they shall make supplication unto thee, saying, Surely God is in thee; and there is none else, there is no God.

15 Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself, O God of Israel, the Saviour.

16 They shall be ashamed, and also confounded, all of them: they shall go to confusion together that are makers of idols.

17 But Israel shall be saved in the LORD with an everlasting salvation: ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end.

18 For thus saith the LORD that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited; I am the LORD; and there is none else.

Hebrew, and better with the scope of the place than the common interpretation.

In chains they shall come over;] They shall confess themselves to be conquered, and yield submission. The phrase alludes to the custom of carrying captives in triumph with chains about their necks: see Ps. cxlix. 8, which Psalm both Jews and Christians interpret of the days of the Messias.

Ver. 15.] This may be understood with respect to the unsearchableness of God's counsels, spoken of before, ver. 9, 10, in which sense our first translators at the Reformation understood it, and render the verse, "O how profound art thou, the God and Saviour of Israel!" Or else it may be spoken with regard to the times when God hid away his face, and seemed to neglect his people (compare lvii. 17, Ps. xlv. 24). Whereas he doth now openly show himself in their favour, to the shame and confusion of idolaters, as it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 16.] See the note on ver. 6. This and many other passages, where the prophet foretells the confusion and destruction of idolatry, have a plain aspect upon the overthrow of the heathen idolatry, upon the planting of the gospel.

Ver. 17.] This must relate to the times of the gospel (see the notes upon ver 18, 23).

Ver. 18.] The words are commonly explained to this purpose, that if God did not create the world to lie empty and uninhabited, much less will he suffer the lot of his own inheritance, Judea, to lie desolate, but will certainly restore its captivity: the establishing a political government being sometimes expressed by creation (see the notes on li. 16): but I think this sense hardly comes up to the full import of the words. Mr. Mede, p. 578 of his Works, hath observed, that at the eleventh verse God condescends to declare to his servants the "things that are to come:" and St. Paul hath applied the twenty-third verse to the day of judgment (Rom. xiv. 11); so that, in that learned person's judgment, the scope of the place directs us to explain it of that "new heaven and new earth wherein dwells righteousness," which St. Peter tells us we are to expect at the end of the world, "according to God's promise" (2 Pet. iii. 13); which promise must relate to some of the prophecies of the Old Testament, which speak of that matter. This earth, the text saith, "God created not in vain;" that is, not to be "subject to vanity," as the present earth is (see Rom. viii. 20), but to be inhabited by 19 I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth: I said not unto the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain: I the Lord speak righteousness, I declare things that are right.

20 ¶ Assemble yourselves and come; draw near together, ye that are escaped of the nations: they have no knowledge that set up the wood of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save.

21 Tell ye, and bring them near; yea, let them take counsel together: who hath declared this from ancient time? who hath told it from that time? have not I the LORD? and there is no God else beside me; a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside me.

22 Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else.

23 I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not the mystical Israel, who shall be "saved with an everlasting salvation" (ver. 17). These are the same who are called the "escaped of the nations" (ver. 20), and those that are "saved out of all the ends of the earth" (ver. 22). What is said also in ver. 14 hath some relation to the latter times, as may be gathered by comparing it with some of the parallel texts referred to in the notes.

Ver. 19. I have not spoken in secret;] I have delivered my laws, and will plainly and perspicuously, not in dark and dubious terms, such as the heathen oracles were delivered in, which were spoken out of caves and grottos.

I said not—Seek ye me in vain;] The worship of idols is often condemned as vanity and lost labour (see the following verse, and ch. xlv. 20, Jer. x. 5).

I the Lord speak righteousness;] My laws are all of them holy, just, and good: whereas the profoundest mysteries of their heathen gods consisted in impure and obscene rites.

Ver. 20. Draw near together, ye that are escaped of the nations;] Ye Jews, that are returned home from the several parts of the world, whither ye have been dispersed, assemble yourselves together, and return solemn thanks to God for your deliverance; and consider what proofs he hath given of his power, in protecting his people, sufficient for ever to confound and silence the idols and their worshippers.

Mr. Mede, p. 915 of his Works, supposes those "that are escaped of the nations" here, to be the same with the "nations of them that are saved," or escape, mentioned Rev. xxi. 24, and thinks this interpretation is confirmed by ver. 22 of this chapter: "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth" (see likewise ver. 18).

Ver. 21. Tell ye, and bring them near;] A general challenge to the idols, to give such proofs of their divinity, by foreshowing things to come (compare xli. 1, 22, xliii. 9, xlv. 7).

Who hath told it from that time?] Or rather, "from the beginning" (see note on xlv. 8).

Ver. 22. This relates to the calling of the gentiles, and especially to the bringing in the fulness of the gentiles at the end of the world (see Rom. xi. 25, Matt. xxiv. 14, and the following note).

Ver. 23. And shall not return, &c.] That is, it shall be fully accomplished (compare lv. 11). Here God confirms by an oath the truth of what was foretold, ver. 22. That the time should certainly come when return. That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.

24 Surely, shall one say, in the LORD have I righteousness and strength: even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed.

25 In the LORD shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory.

all the world should give glory to him, by paying him solemn worship and adoration, and by swearing or professing allegiance to him (see note on xix. 18). And this shall be verified both in the gentiles (ver. 22), and in the Jews (ver. 25), who, after the fulness of the gentiles is come in, shall all be saved, as St. Paul tells us, Rom. xi. 25, 26.

The same apostle applies this text to the day of judgment (Rom. xiv. 11), when it will receive its utmost accomplishment; not only wicked men, but even apostate spirits, being summoned to appear before the tribunal of God and Christ (compare Phil. ii. 10).

We may farther observe, that what the prophet speaks here in the person of God, is applied by St. Paul to Christ, i. e. to the second person of the blessed trinity. See like instances in vi. 1, compared with John xii. 41, in viii. 14, compared with Rom.

ix. 33, and 1 Pet. ii. 8, in Ps. cii. 25, compared with Heb. i. 10. Many more such instances might be given, and all of them are plain proofs of the divinity of Christ, and that the prophets of the Old Testament had all along an eye to the times of the New, and spoke of the Messiah as God (see more of that matter in the notes upon xlviii. 16).

Ver. 24.] This likewise is very applicable to Christ, who is called the Lord "our righteousness," Jer. xxiii. 5, and "is made unto us righteousness," 1 Cor. i. 30.

Ver. 25.] The sense is the same with the beginning of the former verse: to be justified, is a term taken from the forms of law, and signifies to be acquitted, or pronounced innocent, and come off victorious in a cause (see Ps. li. 4). Here it is opposed to that shame denounced against the obstinate, ver. 24.

CHAPTER XLVI.

1 BEL boweth down, Nebo stoopeth, their idols were upon the beasts, and upon the cattle: your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the weary beast.

2 They stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden, but themselves are gone into captivity.

3 ¶ Hearken unto me, O house of Jacob, and all the remnant of the house of Israel, which are borne by me from the belly, which are carried from the womb:

4 And even to your old age I am he; and even to hoar hairs will I carry you: I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you.

5 ¶ To whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like?

6 They lavish gold out of the bag, and weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith; and he maketh it a god: they fall down, yea, they worship.

7 They bear him upon the shoulder, they carry him, and set him in his place, and he standeth; from his place shall he not remove: yea, one shall cry unto him, yet he can be not answer, nor save him out of his trouble.

8 Remember this, and shew yourselves men: bring it again to mind, O ye transgressors.

9 Remember the former things of old: for I

CHAP. XLVI.

ARGUMENT.—The chapter begins with foretelling the taking of Babylon by Cyrus, who is particularly described, ver. 11. From thence the prophet takes occasion to insult over the Babylonish idols, who could neither preserve themselves nor their worshippers: and he exhorts the Jews still to trust in God, who had, from the beginning of their nation, nourished them with the tenderness of a parent; and who, by foretelling things at the greatest distance, gave an undeniable proof that all events were at his disposal.

Ver 1. Bel boweth down, Nebo stoopeth.] Two principal idols of the Babylonians: Bel is the same with Baal, as Selden conjectures (De Diis Syris, Syntagm. i. cap. 2). Nebo gave names to several of their kings, as Nabonassor, Nebuchadnezzar, &c. (see note on xxxix. 1). The image of these deities were carried in triumph by the Persians, as part of the spoil, as it was usual for conquerors to do, in token of a complete victory (see Grotius upon the place). Livy records it as an instance of the moderation of Fabius Maximus, that when he retook Tarentum, he would not suffer the statues of their gods to be carried with the rest of the plunder, but said, "Relinquamus Tarentinis Deos iratos" (lib. xxvii. cap. 18).

Ver. 2.] The deities which were worshipped in the idols, could not deliver their own images, which became burdensome to those that carried them away, so that the gods themselves must own that they are conquered too. The expressions in this and the former verse allude to the custom of carrying idols in procession, which was a solemn piece of worship paid to them; whereas now they were carried about by their enemies, by way of contempt and derision.

Ver. 3. Hearken to me, O Jacob, and—Israel.] The same which are called Jacob and Israel, xliiii. 1 (see the note there), and xlv. 1.

Which are carried from the womb.] The expressions allude to the carrying of idols, either in procession (ver. 7), or in triumph (ver. 1). Instead of being carried by his worshippers, as the helpless idols are, God carries and supports his people, as a father does his children in his arms (see Deut. i. 31).

Ver. 4. I am he;] Or, "I am the same God:" so the phrase is translated, Ps. cii. 27.

Ver. 6.] The same argument against idolatry, which was made use of xl. 19, xli. 6, xlv. 12. It was very proper to repeat this argument often, for the sake of those that were to live among the Babylonians.

am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me.

10 Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.

11 Calling a ravenous bird from the east, the man that executeth my counsel from a far country: yea, I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it.

12 ¶ Harken unto me, ye stouthearted, that are far from righteousness:

13 I bring near my righteousness; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry: and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.

where authority and custom would powerfully recommend idolatry (compare Jer. x. 1, &c. Baruch vi).

Ver. 8. Show yourselves men:] By making use of your reason: whereas the idolaters are as senseless as the images which they worship (see Ps. cxv. 8).

Ver. 9.] Remember what I have formerly done for you, both in Egypt, and after your settlement in Canaan.

Ver. 10.] The same argument of God's power and providence, which is insisted on xlv. 7, xlv. 21.

My counsel shall stand.] God's foretelling the most distant and casual events, is a sensible proof of his overruling providence.

Ver. 11. Calling a ravenous bird from the east.] A description of Cyrus, whom God is said to have "raised up from the east" (xli. 2, 25). Conquerors that overrun and ravage whole countries, are elsewhere compared to birds of prey (see Ezek. xvii. 3, 4, Esdr. xii. 11).

The man that executeth my counsel] See xlv. 28, xlv. 13.

try: yea, I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it.

12 ¶ Harken unto me, ye stouthearted, that are far from righteousness:

13 I bring near my righteousness; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry: and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.

From a far country.] Cyrus' army was made up of confederates of very distant nations (see Jer. i. 41).

Ver. 12. Ye stouthearted.] Or, "ye stubborn-hearted" as it is better translated in the Bishop's Bible, published under queen Elizabeth; such as do not think it reasonable to acquiesce in my promises, which whosoever believeth, it "shall be counted to him for righteousness" (Gen. xv. 6).

Ver. 13. I bring near my righteousness.] I will give visible instances of my mercy and fidelity, and place them before the eyes of those that are most insensible of them; and the salvation of my people shall not be delayed beyond the prefixed time appointed for the accomplishment of it (compare Hab. ii. 3, and see the note upon xiii. 22).

I will place salvation in Zion, for Israel my glory.] Or, "I will give salvation [in or to] Zion, and my glory to Israel:" as the translation just now mentioned renders the words.

CHAPTER XLVII.

1 COME down, and sit in the dust. O virgin daughter of Babylon, sit on the ground: there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate.

2 Take the millstones, and grind meal: uncover thy locks, make bare the leg, uncover the thigh, pass over the rivers.

3 Thy nakedness shall be uncovered, yea, thy shame shall be seen: I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.

4 As for our redeemer, the LORD of hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.

5 Sit thou silent, and get thee into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms.

6 ¶ I was wroth with my people. I have pol-

CHAP. XLVII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet had intimated the destruction of the Babylonish monarchy in a few words, at the beginning of the last chapter; and here he foretells it more plainly, and denounces it as a just judgment upon that government for its cruelty and pride: the unexpectedness of such a calamity adding great weight to it, being such a surprising turn of affairs, as none of the Chaldean arts of divination could foresee, or be able to prevent.

Ver. 1. Come down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon.] Sit in a mournful and disconsolate posture (see note on iii. 26). The prophet calls her the "virgin daughter of Babylon," as one that had never yet been conquered (see note on xxiii. 12).

There is no throne.] The pomp and state of thy empire is come to an end (compare Ps. lxxxix. 44).

Ver. 2. Take the millstones, and grind meal.] From being mistress of kingdoms, thou shalt become a mean slave; thy captives shall be set to grind, which was reckoned the lowest degree of drudgery (see Ex. xi. Judg. xvi. 21). Such was the pistrinum, or turning the mill, among the Romans.

Uncover thy locks.] Thy hair shall hang about thy ears, without being dressed up, or adorned with a diadem: thou shalt lose all that finery and those ornaments in which thou didst pride thyself, as marks of thy state; and the persons of the greatest quality shall be despoiled of their gaiety, and carried captives in a mean and ragged condition.

Uncover the thigh, pass over the rivers.] Those who are bred in the nicest degree of tenderness shall be stripped naked, and forced to go barefoot over rivers, when they are led captives by the Persians.

Ver. 3. Thy nakedness] See note on iii. 17.

I will not meet thee as a man.] Thou shalt feel the most dreadful effects of my anger, and I will show no humanity or pity towards thee. The latter part of the sentence sounds literally thus, "I will not meet a man," which seems to be a hypallage, or an inverted sentence, for "a man shall not meet me;" i. e. no man shall put a stop to my fury, by endeavouring to succour thee: nor shall any intercession for thee prevail with me (see Jer. vii. 16, xv. 1, Ezek. xiv. 14). The verb pagang is sometimes used for making intercession (see liii. 12).

Ver. 4. As for our redeemer.] See Jer. i. 34.

Ver. 5.] Silence and darkness are opposed to that noise and gaiety which are seen in rich and populous cities, which being destroyed are reduced to a melancholy silence and solitude. The same thing is expressed in Jeremy, by "taking away the voice of mirth, and the light of the candle" (Jer. xxv. 10). Babylon hath been for many ages a heap of ruins; for luted mine inheritance, and given them into thine hand: thou didst shew them no mercy; upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke.

7 ¶ And thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever: so that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart, neither didst remember the latter end of it.

8 Therefore hear now this, thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly, that sayest in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me; I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children:

9 But these two things shall come to thee in a moment in one day, the loss of children, and widowhood: they shall come upon thee in their perfection for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments.

10 ¶ For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness:

the city Bagdad, commonly taken for the same place, is situate three days' journey from it (see the note upon xiii. 19).

Ver. 6. I have polluted mine inheritance,] Whereas I formerly appropriated Judea to myself, and distinguished it from all other countries by peculiar marks of my favour and protection, now I laid it open to the insults of idolaters, and suffered them to profane the city and sanctuary which was called by my name.

Thou didst shew them no mercy;] God often punishes the persons, whom he makes instruments of his vengeance upon others, for those very things which they did by his appointment, because they exceeded their commission, and were more intent upon satisfying their own ambition and cruelty, than executing his commands [so Isa. x. 7, the prophet speaking of the Assyrian, whom he calls "the rod of God's anger," adds "howbeit he meaneth not so;" his intent is not to execute God's will, "but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations;" he intends only to satisfy his revenge and ambition.] See Zech. i. 15, where God saith of the Babylonians, "I was but a little displeased [with my people] and they helped forward their affliction." For the same reason God saith, Hos. i. 4, that "he will avenge the blood of Jezreel on the house of Jehu," though Jehu was expressly commanded to smite the house of Ahab (2 Kings ix. 7). But he exceeded his commission, when he slew all Ahab's great men, or officers of state; and when he had destroyed the family of Ahaziah (2 Kings x. 11, 14).

Upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke.] Thou hast showed no pity upon old folks, whose age commands respect, and whose feebleness deserves compassion (compare Deut. xxviii. 50).

Ver. 7.] I shall always be the chief city and mistress of the world (see ver. 5), and shall never know any change of fortune: whereas the consideration of the instability of all worldly greatness, should have induced thee to use thy success with moderation.

Ver. 8. I am, and none else beside me;] Words full of insolence and blasphemy, whereby she arrogated that self-sufficiency to herself, which belongs to none but God (see xlv. 5).

I shall not sit as a widow.] Cities are commonly described as the mothers of their inhabitants, and their kings and princes as their husbands. And when they are bereaved of these, they are said to be widows and childless (see iii. 26, xlix. 21). As Babylon, in the pride of her heart, thought herself exempt from the calamities of fortune; so mystical Babylon is described as guilty of the same pride and carnal secuity (Rev. xviii. 7). And those arrogant pretences of the Roman church to infallibility, indefectibility, and supremacy, too nearly resemble the description of Babylon in this and the foregoing verse.

11 ¶ Therefore shall evil come upon thee: thou shalt not know from whence it riseth: and mischief shall fall upon thee: thou shalt not be able to put it off: and desolation shall come upon thee suddenly, which thou shalt not know.

12 Stand now with thine enchantments, and with the multitude of thy sorceries, wherein thou hast laboured from thy youth; if so be thou shalt be able to profit, if so be thou mayest prevail.

13 Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels. Let now the astrologers, the stargazers, the monthly prognosticators, stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee.

14 Behold, they shall be as stubble; the fire will consume them (Rev. xviii. 7). And those arrogant pretences of the Roman church to infallibility, indefectibility, and supremacy, too nearly resemble the description of Babylon in this and the foregoing verse.

Ver. 9. These two things shall come to thee in a moment in one day.] The great strokes of providence are described as coming suddenly and unexpectedly, "as a thief in the night:" that "when men shall say Peace, peace, then sudden destruction shall come upon them" (see 1 Thess. v. 3, compare Luke xvii. 27—29), thereby to deter men from indulging their carnal security, and to put them in mind of that continual dependence they ought to have upon God (see Dan. iv. 30, 31, 35, 37).

For the multitude of thy sorceries,] By sorceries may either be meant those forbidden arts of divination, mentioned more particularly ver. 13, or else the wicked schemes of worldly policy, whereby great and potent kingdoms oppress and undermine lesser states and principalities (compare Nah. iii. 4).

Ver. 10. Thou hast trusted in thy wickedness: thou hast said, None seeth me.] Thou hast thought that thy cunning and policy would still support thee, and that God did not regard thee, and would never call thee to an account for all thine enormities.

Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, it hath perverted thee;] The words may mean, either thy skill in the arts of human policy; or else thy pretended foreknowledge of future events by the positions of the heavens; and the Chaldeans being famous all the world over for their skill in astrology.

Ver. 11.] With all thy skill in fortune-telling, thou shalt not be able to foresee the evil that is coming upon thee, or to prevent it.

Ver. 13. Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels.] The several projects thou hast tried to divert thy calamities, are all lost labour (compare lvii. 10).

Ver. 14. They shall be as stubble;] They shall have no more power to withstand the calamities coming upon them, than stubble hath to resist the violence of the fire (see xl. 24, xli. 2).

There shall not be a coal to warm at,] They shall be utterly consumed, so as to be reduced to ashes, and not so much as a coal left that may give warmth or afford comfort (compare xxx. 14).

Ver. 15.] The words may more plainly be rendered thus: "Thus shall thy merchants deal with thee, with whom thou hast laboured, even from thy youth." By merchants are meant either the dealers in the deceitful wares of divination and astrology (compare ver. 12): or, in general, any of those cunning factors (so shall burn them; they shall not deliver themselves from the power of the flame: there shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it.

the word is used (Hos. xii), who have contributed by their counsels or their traffic, to maintain the grandeur of the Babylonish empire (compare Rev. xviii. 11, 12, 15, 23).

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1 HEAR ye this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, which swear by the name of the LORD, and make mention of the God of Israel, but not in truth, nor in righteousness.

2 For they call themselves of the holy city, and stay themselves upon the God of Israel; The LORD of hosts is his name.

3 I have declared the former things from the beginning: and they went forth out of my mouth, and I showed them; I did them suddenly, and they came to pass.

CHAP. XLVIII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet applies himself to the Jews as under the state of captivity, and reproves them for their stubbornness and refractory temper, notwithstanding the many evidences God hath given of his providence over them: a pregnant instance of which was his raising up a succession of prophets among them, to give them notice of such events as none of the heathen idols could foretell. This obstinacy of theirs, the prophet tells them, was the occasion of their captivity, and exhorts them to be reformed by their afflictions, and fit themselves for that deliverance which God hath promised them.

Ver. 1. Which are called by the name of Israel.] Who value yourselves for being descended from Jacob, and called after his name, but do not show yourselves to be true Israelites by your deeds.

And are come forth out of the waters of Judah.] The derivation of posterity from the head of a family is often compared to the streams that issue forth from a spring or fountain (see Numb. xxiv. 7, Ps. lxxviii. 26, Prov. v. 16, 18).

Which swear by the name of the Lord.] To swear by the name of God is a solemn part of divine worship, and an appealing to him as the true God, and sovereign judge of the world (see xix. 18, xlv. 23, Deut. vi. 13, Ps. lxxiii. 11). In like manner, the swearing by idols was the owning them for true gods (see Zech. i. 5), for which reason the Jews were forbidden to make mention of the names of the heathen gods (Exod. xxiii. 13).

Ver. 2.] This vain confidence of the Jews, and relying upon their external privileges, is elsewhere reprov'd (see Jer. vii. 4, Mic. iii. 11, Rom. ii. 17). Jerusalem had the title of holy city given to it, as being the place of God's residence, where he had placed his name (see lii. 1, Ps. xlviii. 1, lxxxvii. 3, 2 Kings xxi. 7).

Ver. 3. I have declared the former things from the beginning.] See the note on xlv. 7. The "former things" are opposed to new things, ver. 6 (compare xlii. 9), and so they may point at the former prophe-

4 Because I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass;

5 I have even from the beginning declared it to thee: before it came to pass I shewed it thee: lest thou shouldest say, Mine idol hath done them, and my graven image, and my molten image, hath commanded them.

6 Thou hast heard, see all this: and will not ye declare it? I have shewed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them.

7 They are created now, and not from the becies relating to the two confederate kings (ch. vii.), and to Sennacherib (ch. x.) as the new things—and things to come, as they are called xli. 22, relate to the Babylonian captivity, and their return from thence, as they were figures of the gospel-times.

I did them suddenly, and they came to pass.] They punctually came to pass at the time foretold, even when there was no likelihood of such an effect being produced. So we read (Mal. iii. 1), "The Lord shall suddenly come to his temple;" i. e. precisely at the time appointed by God (see the note on xlv. 13).

Ver. 4.] the Jews are elsewhere reprov'd as a "stiff-necked people" (see Exod. xxxii. 9, Acts vii. 51). The metaphor is taken from oxen that draw back, and refuse to put their necks under the yoke (compare Neh. ix. 29, Zech. vii. 11).

Ver. 5.] God ordained a succession of prophets to foretell the most remarkable events that should happen to the Jews, on purpose to prevent their ascribing them to idols: a suggestion which their infidelity and obstinacy might prompt them to allege (see 2 Kings i. 3).

Ver. 6. Thou hast heard, see all this; and will not ye declare it?] The old translation, published under king Henry VIII. has given the sense of the words very perspicuously thus, "Thou heardest it [before], and, behold, it is come to pass: and shall not ye yourselves confess the same?" Some render the words thus: "If thou hast heard, foretell all this: would you not have declared it?" i. e. would not your idols have given out prophecies concerning these things, if they had foreknown them?

I have shewed thee new things from this time.] I have lately discovered to thee some new works of providence, such as thou never wast before acquainted with, relating to thy deliverance out of captivity by Cyrus (compare xlii. 9, xliii. 19).

Ver. 7. They are created now.] They are called new things in opposition to God's wonders of old time (see the texts last cited).

Even before the day when thou heardest them not.] The words may be better rendered thus, in conjunction with the former sentence: "They are created now, and not from the beginning, nor before the day (the same with from the beginning, see xliii. 13), nor ginning; even before the day when thou hearest them not; lest thou shouldest say, Behold, I knew them.

8 Yea, thou hearest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from that time that thine ear was not opened; for I knew that thou wouldest deal very treacherously, and wast called a transgressor from the womb.

9 ¶ For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off.

10 Behold, I have refined thee, but not with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction.

11 For mine own sake, even for mine own sake, will I do it: for how should my name be polluted? and I will not give my glory unto another.

12 ¶ Hearken unto me, O Jacob and Israel, hast thou heard them," till I revealed them. Or thus, "nor before this day hast thou heard them;" making the copulative in the Hebrew word velo to be redundant.

Ver. 8. From that time that thine ear was not opened.] The latter part of the sentence should be thus translated, "Nor was thine ear opened of old, or from the beginning," as the particle meaz is translated twice in this very chapter, ver. 3, 5 (see note on xlv. 8). The prophet persists in repeating what he had said in the foregoing verses, that it was God alone that could make known these events so long beforehand, and that he did it because he knew their proneness to idolatry, and therefore would take away any pretence that could be made of ascribing this foreknowledge unto idols. "To open the ear" is a Hebrew phrase, signifying to make known (see l. 5), the same thing is otherwise expressed by "revealing the ear;" see xxii. 14, 1 Sam. ix. 15, Job xxxvi. 10, where that phrase is translated by "opening the ear."

For I knew that thou wouldest deal very treacherously.] The sense seems imperfect before these words, which may thus be supplied: "I did foreshow thee these things, because I knew thou wouldest deal treacherously." The verb bagad does properly signify a wife being unfaithful to her husband (see Jer. iii. 20): and from thence it is applied to the sin of idolatry, which is often styled "spiritual whoredom," as being a breach of that covenant which the Jews made with God as their king and husband (see liv. 5, Jer. iii. 14, and Bishop Patrick's Preface to his Comment on the Canticles).

And wast called a transgressor from the womb.] Thou wast addicted to idolatry from thy very infancy; from the very time thou livest in Egypt (see Ezek. xx. 8, xxiii. 3, 19, 27).

Ver. 9.] See the note on ver. 11.

Ver. 10. I have refined thee, but not with silver.] Not with such a furious heat, as is requisite to melt down silver, for then thou wouldest have been utterly consumed (see Jer. xxx. 11, Ezek. xxii. 20).

I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction.] I have taken this method to purge thee from thy dross, and render thee a chosen people to myself. The words may be rendered, "I have tried, or proved thee in the furnace of affliction:" for the verb bahar is sometimes equivalent to bahan (see Prov. viii. 10, x. 20).

Ver. 11. For mine own sake,—will I do it.] God puts the people in mind, that the mercies he vouchsafes to them in restoring their captivity, are not due to their merits, but are wholly to be ascribed to his my called; I am he; I am the first, I also am the last.

13 Mine hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the heavens: when I call unto them, they stand up together.

14 All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; which among them hath declared these things? The Lord hath loved him: he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans.

15 I, even I, have spoken; yea I have called him: I have brought him, and he shall make his way prosperous.

16 ¶ Come ye near unto me, hear ye this; I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time that it was, there am I: and now the Lord God, and his Spirit, hath sent me.

own goodness, and the regard he hath to his honour, which would suffer in the opinion of the heathen, if those that valued themselves for being his peculiar people should be utterly forsaken by him (compare lii. 5, Ps. lxxix. 10, Ezek. xx. 9, xxxvi. 20—22).

I will not give my glory unto another.] I will not give occasion to the heathen to think that their gods are too powerful for me, which would more and more confirm them in their idolatry, and sacrilegious robbing me of mine honour (see note on xlii. 8).

Ver. 12, 13.] An exhortation to the Jews to hearken to the voice of that God who had called them from the rest of the world, and chosen them to be his peculiar people, and who alone is the maker and sovereign Lord of all things. The word called, alludes to God calling Abraham out of an idolatrous country and kindred, to be his servant (Gen. xii. 1).

Ver. 13. They stand up together.] As servants ready to execute my commands (see xl. 26).

Ver. 14. Which among them hath declared these things?] A general challenge to the idols and their worshippers, to bring proof that ever such a remarkable turn of providence, as that of the Jews' restoration, was foretold by any of the heathen oracles (compare xli. 22, xliii. 9, xlv. 7, xlv. 21).

The Lord hath loved him.] The prophet speaks of Cyrus, whom God made the peculiar object of his favour, and the conqueror of the Chaldeans and deliverer of his people; wherein he was a type of the Messiah (see the note on xlv. 1).

Ver. 15.] Compare xlv. 1, 2, &c.

Ver. 16. I have not spoken in secret.] See xlv. 19. From the time that it was, there am I.] The first two words in the Hebrew, meneth hejothah, may be translated, "before the time that this was" [declared or foretold]. So the same particle in mejom signifies, xliii. 13, where our translators rightly render it, "before the day was;" so xviii. 2, min hu signifies qforetime: or thus, "Before the time that it happened, then I" [foretold], or then I [had a being], as the same words sham ani may very fitly be rendered, Prov. viii. 27, for the scope of that place is to show the eternity of the divine wisdom. And missham signifies "from that time," Isa. lxx. 20. This interpretation will make the sense run clearer to this purpose: I have not delivered my predictions in ambiguous terms, because I am from all eternity, and being present to all the successions of time, can clearly foresee those distant events which my providence produces.

And now the Lord God, and his Spirit, hath sent me.] The foregoing part of the verse shows that the 17 Thus saith the LORD, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; I am the LORD thy God which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go.

18 O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea:

19 Thy seed also had been as the sand, and the offspring of thy bowels like the gravel thereof; his name should not have been cut off nor destroyed from before me.

words are spoken by God; and since it is here affirmed that the "Lord God hath sent him," we can understand the words of none other but the second person of the blessed trinity, who was sent into the world by his Father, and was anointed to his prophetic office by the Holy Spirit (see xi. 2, xlii. 1, xli. 1; compare Zech. ii. 10, 11). Here, indeed, only the divine nature of the Son of God is directly spoken of; but it is usual, in Scripture, to apply that to one part of his nature which properly belongs to the other, because of the "communication of properties," as the schoolmen term it. Thus St. Paul saith, that the "Jews tempted Christ in the wilderness" (1 Cor. x. 9); meaning the Logos, who afterward assumed human nature, and was called the Christ. It need not seem strange that Christ is introduced speaking these words: for we find many other texts which are spoken of God in the Old Testament, applied to Christ in the New; to show us that almost all the prophecies of the Old Testament relate to the times of the gospel, and are to receive their utmost completion then (see the note on viii. 14, xlv. 23). And this will still appear more probable, if we consider that several passages in this chapter, as well as the general strain of these prophecies concerning the restoration of Israel, have a plain aspect upon some farther restoration of the church in the latter times, and its deliverance from that mystical Babylon described in the Revelation (see xlv. 20, 22, 23, and the notes upon ver. 20 and 22 of this chapter).

Ver. 17. Who teacheth thee to profit,] Who giveth thee laws for thy good, to direct thee in the right way.

Ver. 18.] Thou hadst then been as remarkable for virtue and holiness as for peace and prosperity: or righteousness may be taken as equivalent to happiness (see note on xlii. 1).

20 ¶ Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter it even to the end of the earth; say ye, The LORD hath redeemed his servant Jacob.

21 And they thirsted not when he led them through the deserts: he caused the waters to flow out of the rock for them: he clave the rock also, and the waters gushed out.

22 There is no peace, saith the LORD, unto the wicked.

Ver. 19.] They have not been diminished by invasions, captivities, and other judgments.

Ver. 20.] A divine admonition to the Jewish exiles to depart out of Babylon with all speed, not to linger or make any delays out of kindness to the place, or fondness for the idolatries there practised: just so Lot was commanded immediately to depart out of Sodom, and not so much as "look behind him," or show any token of affection for the place (Gen. xix. 17). This admonition is renewed, lii. 11, repeated by the prophet Jeremiah, i. 8, li. 6, 45, and applied by St. John to mystical Babylon, Rev. xviii. 4. And the prophet orders this message to be published "to the ends of the earth," which implies that it is a matter of general concern.

Ver. 21.] The preterperfect tense is here used for the future, a common figure in the prophets (see note on xxi. 10). The words import, that God will take the same care of his people in their return home from captivity, as he did in their passage from Egypt through the wilderness (see note on xli. 18).

Ver. 22.] This conclusion of the chapter relates to the reproofs and exhortations given at ver. 4, 8, 10, 17, 18; and it is an admonition to the Jews who make a good use of the blessings here promised, or else they could not hope for any lasting peace or prosperity. But as several passages of this, the foregoing, and succeeding prophecies, have a further aspect upon the future deliverances of the church, as hath been observed upon ver. 16, so I am apt to think these words have an eye upon the general restoration of the Jews so often mentioned in the prophets, which none of them will have a share in but such as repent and reform (see Ezek. xx. 34, 38). The same admonition is given to the church with respect to the deliverance out of mystical Babylon, Rev. xvi. 15.

CHAPTER XLIX.

1 LISTEN, O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far; The LORD hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name.

CHAP. XLIX.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet returns to the same subject he had been discoursing upon, from chap. xli. to the end of the forty-sixth; and takes occasion from the return of the Jewish captivity, which he had clearly foretold, v. 20 of the foregoing chapter, to foreshew the great enlargement of the church in aftertimes, by the conversion of the Jews and the coming in of the fulness of the gentiles. Mr. White, indeed, is of opinion, that in this, as well as many other parts of the prophecy, Isaiah had only the restoration of his own nation in view; but I cannot be surprised to find, that any person who sets up for a literal commentator, can think that all those glorious things, which are spoken here of the city of God, can be literally fulfilled in the return of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, when the condition of the nation was at best nothing near so flourishing as it had been in the days of David and Solomon.

Ver. 1.] Listen, O isles, unto me:] See xli. 1.

The LORD hath called me from the womb;] Some persons have been designed by God for certain offices from their very birth, as Jeremiah was (see Jer. i. 5), and St. Paul (Gal. i. 15), and John Baptist (Luke i. 15), and Isaiah, if we understand these words as any way relating to himself: but it is in an eminent manner true of Christ, whom God hath in a peculiar manner sanctified, or set apart for his offices of king, priest, and prophet, and sent him into the world to execute the same (see Luke i. 35; John x. 36).

From the bowels of my mother] See the note on xliii. 1.

Ver. 2. He hath made my mouth like a sharp sword;]

2 And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me;

3 And said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.

4 Then I said, I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain: yet surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God.

5 ¶ And now, saith the Lord that formed me from the womb to be his servant, to bring Jacob again to him, Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God shall be my strength.

6 And he said, It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth.

7 Thus saith the Lord, the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One, to him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a servant of rulers, Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the Lord that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee.

8 Thus saith the Lord, In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee: and I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages;

9 That thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places.

10 They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither

The prophets are often described as the executioners of those judgments which they denounce against sinners (see the notes on vi. 10, and compare Jer. v. 14, Hos. vi. 5), and in this sense we may apply the expression to Isaiah, or any other prophet; but it is most remarkably true of Christ (see the note on xi. 4).

In the shadow of his hand hath he hid me.] The phrase signifies being under God's immediate protection (see li. 16). This likewise was in an eminent manner verified of Christ (see Ps. xci. 11, John viii. 29).

And made me a polished shaft;] Another metaphor representing the efficacy of God's word, as spoken by his prophets and messengers.

Ver. 3.] If we follow this translation, which seems to express the Hebrew best, the words can be applied to none but Christ, as the head and representative of the church, the Israel of God, who was to "raise up the tribes of Jacob, and restore the preserved of Israel" (ver. 5, 6), as, on the contrary, the word Christ sometimes is taken for the church (see 1 Cor. xii. 12). But some render the words thus, "Thou art my servant, Israel is he in whom I will be glorified by thee." Concerning the title of servant, see the note on xlii. 1.

Ver. 4.] The words contain an objection to what was affirmed, ver. 3, that God should be glorified by his ministry, which he here complains is altogether unsuccessful: however, his comfort is, that God is his judge, who will reward him according to the sincerity of his endeavours.

As the Hebrew avon signifies both sin and the punishment of it, so penulah signifies both the work and its reward: it is taken here in the latter sense (compare xl. 10, lxii. 11).

Ver. 5, 6.] There is a various reading in the Hebrew of this verse, which produces a different sense, according as the particle lo is read with an aleph or a vau. If we follow the first reading, which our translators prefer, the sense is, that although Christ's ministry be unsuccessful in gathering the Jews into the church, yet the preaching of his apostles should meet with better success among the gentiles, and should enlighten those that dwell in the remotest parts of the world. If we follow the other reading, the words will import, that God hath ordained "Christ to be a light to the gentiles, as well as the glory of his people Israel." These words are applied by St. Paul to the preaching of Christ unto the gentiles (Acts xiii. 47, xxvi. 23), and cannot with any show of probability be understood of Isaiah, whatever Grotius or others pretend.

Ver. 7.] The words describe the wonderful progress of the gospel, from small beginnings; that the author of it, from being the contempt of all the great men of the world, should come to be the object of their adoration (see ver. 23). This may in a lower sense be understood of that regard which Cyrus and other succeeding monarchs had for the Jewish nation and temple (see the note on xlv. 14), whereas during the captivity they had been the scorn of all their neighbours (see Ps. lxxix. 4, Lam. ii. 15, Dan. ix. 16).

Ver. 8.] The first publishing of the gospel is that time which God pitched upon as a season of mercy (see 2 Cor. vi. 2), according to the decree which he had concerted with his Son from all eternity. Accordingly, when that fulness of time was come, God sent him into the world to be the Mediator of that new covenant, which he would make both with the Jew and gentile (see xlii. 6). If we suppose this verse to have any relation to the Jews' return from captivity, the sense will be, that the expiration of the seventy years was the time of grace, in which God determined to hear and answer the prayers of his devout servants (see Ps. cii. 17), and restore them to their native country, to repeople the land which lay desolate.

To establish the earth,] To order and settle it by good laws and government (compare Ps. xvi. 10).

To cause to inherit the desolate heritages;] If we expound the words in a spiritual sense, they imply the repairing what is decayed by ignorance and corruption, and making that fruitful which lay barren before. The gentiles are metaphorically described by the wilderness and ground that lies barren and uncultivated (compare xliii. 19, 20, xlv. 3, li. 3).

Ver. 9. Go forth:] See note on xlii. 7.

Their pastures shall be in all high places.] They shall not want any accommodation in their return home: they shall be as well provided for as a flock of sheep that want neither pasture nor water, though they should feed on the top of barren mountains (see the following verse, and the notes on xxx. 25, xli. 18).

Ver. 10.] The spiritual sense of this and the foregoing verse, imports a plentiful enjoyment of God's ordinances (compare Amos viii. 11), together with freedom from persecution (see the notes on iv. 6, xxv. 4). The words are applied by St. John to the heavenly state of the New Jerusalem (Rev. vii. 16, 17), it being usual with the prophets to describe the flourishing times of the church militant, by such expresshall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them.

11 And I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted.

12 Behold, these shall come from far: and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.

13 ¶ Sing, O heavens: and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains: for the Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted.

14 But Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me.

15 Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee.

16 Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.

17 Thy children shall make haste: thy destroyers and they that made thee waste shall go forth of thee.

18 ¶ Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold: all these gather themselves together, and come to thee. As I live, saith the Lord, thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all, as with an ornament, and bind them on thee, as a bride doeth.

19 For thy waste and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction, shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away.

20 The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me: give place to me that I may dwell.

21 Then shalt thou say in thine heart, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? and who hath brought up these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where had they been?

22 Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.

23 And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the sions as properly belong to the church triumphant, because every advancement of God's kingdom in this world is a prelude, or earnest, of the kingdom of heaven.

Ver. 11. My highways shall be exalted.] Or rather, "My causeways shall be exalted;" the Hebrew word mesillah signifies such ways as are raised with stone in low and marshy ground. So the sense is exactly parallel with that of xl. 4, "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain shall be brought low" (see the note there).

Ver. 12. These shall come from far:] See the note on xliii. 5, 6.

These from the land of Sinim.] "From the south country," the Vulgar Latin renders it, to answer to the north and west mentioned before: it may either mean Pelusium in Egypt, called Sin, Ezek. xxx. 15, or the wilderness of Sin, mentioned Exod. xvi. 1, both which lay southward of Judea.

Ver. 13.] See the note on xlv. 23.

Ver. 14.] The words of the Jews despairing under their captivity (compare Lam. v. 20, 22).

Ver. 15.] God is often described as bearing a fatherly affection towards his people (see Ps. ciii. 13, Mal. iii. 17). But here the comparison is raised higher, and he speaks of himself as having the same tenderness for them as a mother towards the fruit of her womb (compare Jer. xxxi. 20, Hos. xi. 8). God still retains that kindness for the posterity of Abraham, that he will never cast them off utterly (see Rom. xi. 28, 29).

Ver. 16.] Thou art as dear to me, and as deeply imprinted in my memory, as if thy picture were drawn upon my hand, or engraven in a seal, and worn upon my arm, so as to be always in my sight (compare Exod. xiii. 9, Cant. viii. 6). Some explain the phrase, as if it were a metaphor taken from an architect, who draws the model of a new building, so as to have it always lie before him: in like manner should the platform of their city be always before God's eyes, in order to the re-edifying of it.

Ver. 17. Thy children shall make haste:] To return homeward. Some render it, "Thy builders shall make haste," in opposition to the destroyers mentioned in the following sentence. But the following verse favors the first interpretation.

Thy destroyers,—shall go forth of thee.] See the same sense a little varied in the expression, ver. 19.

Ver. 18.] The words allude to the affection that mothers have for their children, who pride themselves in them as their greatest ornament.

Ver. 19.] This must be understood either of the accession of the gentiles into the church (see ver. 22, 23), typified by Judea, re-peopled after it had lain desolate (see the note on ver. 8): or else we may suppose the words point at some future restoration of the Jewish nation: for we do not find the catalogues of those who returned, recorded in Ezra and Nehemiah, to answer this prophecy: nor did the Jews repossess the whole extent of Palestine after the captivity, or make that figure in the world which they had done in former times, and especially before the separation of the ten tribes.

Ver. 20. The children which thou shalt have,] Those which thou shalt have after thou hast been for some time in a desolate condition (see liv. 1).

Shall say again in thy ears,] Or rather, "Shall yet say in thine ears," i. e. the time is yet to come when they shall say thus.

Ver. 21, 22.] In the former verse, Jerusalem is represented as in a surprise to find herself on a sudden replenished with inhabitants after an utter desolation: and in the latter, an account is given of this miraculous change, viz. that God would put it in the hearts of the gentiles, whither the Jews were led captives, to send them home again, with all necessary provisions for their journey (see Ezra i. 4). This may yet receive a farther accomplishment (compare xi. 12, lx. 4).

Ver. 23. Kings shall be thy nursing fathers,] Cyrus, Artaxerxes, and other Persian monarchs, showed signal favour to the Jews; and Esther, Darius' queen, one of their own countrywomen, saved the nation from utter destruction. But this prophecy was more remarkably fulfilled in the favours which Constantine and his mother Helen, and other Christian princes earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet: and thou shalt know that I am the LORD: for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me.

24 ¶ Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captive delivered?

25 But thus saith the LORD, Even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children.

26 And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh: and they shall be drunken with their own blood, as with sweet wine: and all flesh shall know that I the LORD am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty One of Jacob.

and princesses, have shown to the church, taking it into their care and protection, and sheltering it under their government (compare Numb. xi. 12).

They shall bow down to thee] To lie prostrate at one's feet was the highest act of adoration amongst the eastern nations (see Gen. xlii. 26, 2 Sam. xviii. 28, Luke xvii. 16), and is applied here to denote the great honour and deference which the Christian emperors and kings should pay to the church, submitting themselves to its laws, and owning themselves its disciples; it being the custom of disciples to sit at their master's feet, and receive instructions from them in that posture. To the same custom the phrase of "licking up the dust of thy feet" may allude (compare xlv. 14, iii. 15, lx. 14, Rev. iii. 9). It may not be impertinent to observe farther, the great honour and respect paid by the first Christian emperors and empresses to the bishops of the church, who always bowed down their heads to them, when they desired their blessing (see Valesius's notes upon Theodoret, lib. iv. cap. vi).

Ver. 24.] An objection urging the seeming impossibility of rescuing the Jews from such a powerful enemy as the Babylonish empire, who had made an entire conquest over them.

Ver. 25.] God answers this difficulty, by telling them that he will take this matter into his own hands, and plead their cause with their enemies.

Ver. 26.] Those that are allied to us by country or kindred, or any other relation, are called our own flesh (see Judg. ix. 2, 2 Sam. v. 1, Neh. v. 5). So the phrase here imports, that God will set these enemies of his people one against the other, and make them kill and destroy each other (see note on ix. 20). Accordingly, Cyrus first conquered a great many of the allies of the Babylonians, and made them serviceable in reducing the capital city of that empire.

CHAPTER L.

1 Thus saith the LORD, Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, whom I have put away? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away.

2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke

I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst.

3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

4 The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary: he wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned.

CHAP. L.

ARGUMENT.—God encourages his people still to depend upon him, by assuring them, that he hath not rejected them, but their sins have constrained him to deal severely with them. And the prophet shows both his divine commission to publish to them the glad tidings of redemption, and his readiness to discharge that office, whatever discouragements or ill treatment he might meet with upon that account, wherein he was an exact type or figure of Christ.

Ver. 1. Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement.] The covenant which God made with his people is commonly represented under the notion of a marriage contract (see note on xlviii. 8). In allusion to this notion, God demands of the captives, who despaired of his mercy (see xlix. 14), to produce the bill of divorce which he had given to their mother: whereas, on the contrary, he was ready to receive her, whenever she would return from her idolatries and other iniquities (see Jer. iii. 1).

Or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you?] Those that were poor used to sell their children and sometimes themselves, to their creditors, for the discharge of their debts (see Exod. xxi. 7, Neh. v. 5, Lev. xxv. 39). The same power masters had over their servants (Matt. xviii. 25). God tells them he had no occasion to exercise such a power over them, but it was owing to their own sins that they were made slaves to foreign nations (compare lii. 3, Ps. xlv. 12).

Ver. 2. When I came, was there no man?] How comes it to pass, saith God, that, when I sent messages to you by my servants the prophets, there was no man would take any notice of them (see Jer. xxxv. 15)! In the same sense Christ is said to "come and preach peace," that is, by his apostles and ministers, (Eph. ii. 17).

When I called,] compare lxv. 12, lxvi. 4, Prov. i. 24.

At my rebuke, I dry up the sea, &c.] For a proof of his power, God appeals to the miracles he wrought in Egypt (Exod. vii. 18), at the Red sea, and at Jordan (Ps. lxxiv. 12—15).

Ver. 3.] The expressions allude to the Egyptian darkness (Exod. x. 21); sackcloth was the habit of mourners, and is here put for a dark or black colour (compare Rev. vi. 12).

Ver. 4. The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned.] The prophet saith, that God hath appointed him to perform the office of an instructor and comforter to those that were weary under the yoke of captivity: wherein he was an exact type of Christ, whose office it was to speak comfort to those 5 ¶ The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back.

6 I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting.

7 ¶ For the Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded: therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed.

8 He is near that justifieth me: who will contend with me? let us stand together: who is mine adversary? let him come near to me.

9 Behold, the Lord God will help me; who who were wearied under the burden of their sins (Matt. xi. 28).

He wakeneth morning by morning; he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned.] Every morning he putteth me in mind of the discharge of my office, as masters rouse up their scholars betimes to learn their lesson. The words may be rendered, "He wakeneth mine ear to hear, as scholars" [are awakened]: for the Hebrew limmudim signifies both teachers and disciples: and it is taken in the latter sense by our translators, viii. 16. If we take the word in this sense, the phrase which is translated "the tongue of the learned," in the foregoing sentence will signify a docile or teachable tongue, which obeys the dictates of its instructor (see the following verse).

Ver. 5.] He hath given me instructions for the discharge of mine office, and I immediately complied with his commands, and set about the execution of it. The phrase of "opening the ears" is explained in the notes upon xlviii. 8. Herein too Isaiah was a type of Christ (compare Ps. xl. 6—8).

Ver. 6. I gave my back to the smiters.] The prophets generally met with very ill treatment from the men of their own times (see Acts vii. 52). And though we have no particular account of Isaiah's sufferings, yet it appears from this verse, that his lot was no better than that of his brethren; and the Jews have a tradition, that he was at last sawn asunder by the command of king Manassch. The expressions of this verse were literally fulfilled in Christ (see Matt. xxvi. 67, xxvii. 26).

My cheeks to them that plucked off the hair;] By way of contempt and reproach (see Lam. iii. 30). The Septuagint render the words, σχιζόμενος μέτωπόν, "I gave my cheeks to blows:" which was literally fulfilled in our Saviour, Mark xiv. 65, John xviii. 22, where the evangelists used the word πάστιγμα, as if they alluded to this prophecy.

Ver. 7. Therefore have I set my face as a flint.] So as not to be brow-beaten, or put out of countenance, by my adversaries (compare Ezek. iii. 8, 9). It requires an extraordinary degree of courage to reprove popular vices, when their abettors are numerous and powerful.

is he that shall condemn me? lo, they all shall wax old as a garment; the moth shall eat them up.

10 ¶ Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God.

11 Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks: walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled. This shall ye have of mine hand; ye shall lie down in sorrow.

[Ibid. and ver. 8. He is near that justifieth me, &c.] God will stand by me and pronounce me innocent, and then I need not fear or be dismayed at the worst accusations the malice of mine enemies can suggest against me. Here is a solemn process or trial supposed, such as our Saviour underwent, whom God would in a signal manner justify, or acquit from that unrighteous sentence which men had pronounced against him (see the note on xlv. 25).

Ver. 9.] Compare li. 8, Job. xiii. 27. They shall quickly die, and all their wicked designs shall perish with them (compare li. 12). Thus Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the chief priests, are long since perished, but Christ lives and abides for ever.

Ver. 10.] Let those who fear God, and reverently obey all the indications of his will made known to them by his prophets, though their present circumstances look never so dismal, and they have no glimmering of hope or comfort; yet let them continue to rely upon God, who in due time will visit them with light and salvation. The meaning of God's servant hath been already explained upon xlv. 26.

Ver. 11. That compass yourselves about with sparks.] Or, "that increase the flame," as the Septuagint render the latter part of the sentence: for the Hebrew verb azar, whose original sense is to bind, signifies likewise to increase or strengthen, as Abraham a Schultens hath shown in his Observat. Arab. in Genesin, cap. 2. The expression denotes those that seek for worldly comforts, and neglect those consolations which come from God: the prophet pursues the same metaphor which he had used in the foregoing verse.

Walk in the light of your fire,] Make your best of these your comforts, but I will forewarn you that you shall find yourselves sadly disappointed; you shall sink under your calamities, as a beast that faints under his burden, without any hopes of recovery out of them (compare xliii. 17). "Walk in the light of your fire," is an ironical expression, like that of Christ, "sleep on now, and take your rest" (Matt. xxvi. 45): and that of Amos, "come to Beth-el, and transgress" (Amos iv. 4).

CHAPTER LI.

1 HEARKEN to me, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the LORD: look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged.

CHAP. LI.

ARGUMENT.—The chapter begins with an exhortation to the pious persons of the captivity, still to rely upon the promises of God, which shall be eminently fulfilled in Christ (ver. 4, 5). The prophet puts them in mind, that God had given them abundant proofs of his power and goodness when he delivered them out of the bondage of Egypt. Afterward the prophet bewails the miseries of Jerusalem, and tells her that God will take pity of her sufferings.

Ver. 1. Hearken to me,] Compare ver. 7. Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, &c.]

2 Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you: for I called him alone, and blessed him, and increased him.

3 For the LORD shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the LORD; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.

4 ¶ Hearken unto me, my people; and give ear unto me, O my nation: for a law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgment to rest for a light of the people.

5 My righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth, and mine arms shall judge the people; the isles shall wait upon me, and on mine arm shall they trust.

6 Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath: for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner: but my salvation shall be for ever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished.

7 ¶ Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law; fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.

8 For the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool; but my righteousness shall be for ever, and my salvation from generation to generation.

9 ¶ Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the LORD: awake, as in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art thou not it that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the dragon?

10 Art thou not it which hath dried the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?

11 Therefore the redeemed of the LORD shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head: they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away.

12 I, even I, am he that comforteth you: who art thou, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass;

13 And forgettest the LORD thy maker, that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and hast feared continually every day because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he were ready to destroy? and where is the fury of the oppressor?

14 The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed, and that he should not die in the pit, nor that his bread should fail.

These metaphorical expressions are explained in the following verse. The expressions may allude to the springs which issue forth from between the rocks (compare xlviii. 1).

Ver. 2. Look unto Abraham your father, and to Sarah] As God gave an original to your nation, from Abraham and Sarah, two persons past age for having children; so he could multiply their posterity, though they should be reduced to a small number.

For I called him alone,] The Hebrew word is echad one, i. e. when he was but one single person, without child or family. Abraham is elsewhere styled one, as being singled out from the rest of his kindred to be the original or head out of the Jewish nation (see Mal. ii. 10, 15, Heb. xi. 12).

Ver. 3.] A proverbial expression (see Joel ii. 3). This promise primarily relates to the peopling of Judea after it had lain waste during the captivity; but mystically implies the restoring truth and righteousness, when ignorance and corruption had overspread the face of the world (see the note on xlix. 8). This latter sense the following words plainly point at.

Ver. 4.] The latter part of the sentence may more properly be rendered, "I will cause my judgment to break forth for a light to the people;" for the verb ragang, as many other Hebrew words, has two contrary significations (see the note on xxii. 18), and signifies both to rest and to break forth. To this sense it may most conveniently be expounded, Jer. xlix. 19, where our translation reads, quite contrary to the design of the place, "I will make him suddenly run away from her:" whereas the scope of the text requires the words to be thus rendered: "I will stir him up, and make him run (or seize) upon her." But to return to the text before us; the prophet speaks of such a law as should break forth and enlighten the most distant people, expressed by the isles in the next verse, which can be no other than the gospel, as will plainly appear by comparing this text with xlii. 4, 6, where it is said that Christ is ordained "to be a light to the gentiles, to set judgment in the earth," and that "the isles should wait for his law."

Ver. 5. Mine arm shall judge the people;] That power of God which shall accompany the preaching of the gospel (compare ver. 9, Ps. lxxvii. 4, xcviii. 9, 1 Cor. i. 24).

The isles shall wait upon me,] See the notes upon xi. 11, lx. 9.

Ver. 6.] When heaven and earth shall be dissolved, then is the time for fulfilling that righteousness and salvation, which I promise to my servants (see 2 Pet. iii. 12, 13, compare Matt. xxiv. 35).

Ver. 7.] They that have the law of God deeply imprinted upon their minds, with the obligations lying upon them to obey it, and the advantages they will receive by the practice of it, will never be moved or drawn aside from their duty by the flouts or reproaches of the ungodly (see Ps. exix. 51, 52).

Ver. 8.] See the note on l. 9.

Ver. 9. Awake, awake, put on strength,] The prophet, by an elegant figure, addresses himself to God, to stir up his strength, and exert it in behalf of his oppressed people, as he did in former times, when he delivered them out of the Egyptian bondage.

Art thou not it that hast cut Rahab,] Egypt is sometimes called by the name of Rahab (see Ps. lxxxvii. 4, lxxxix. 10): the word signifies strong or proud (see the note on xxx. 7).

Wounded the dragon] See the note on xxvii. 1.

Ver. 11.] See the notes on xxxv. 10.

Ver. 12.] See the note on l. 9.

Ver. 13. Where is the fury of the oppressor?] It shall so suddenly vanish, that if you look after it there shall no footsteps of it remain (compare Job xx. 7).

Ver. 14.] The Hebrew runs plainly thus: "the captive exile shall be quickly delivered, he shall not die in the pit [or prison], neither shall his bread fail."

Die in the pit,] The pit is that part of the prison

15 But I am the LORD thy God, that divided the sea, whose waves roared: The LORD of hosts is his name.

16 And I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, 'Thou art my people.'

17 ¶ Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the LORD the cup of his fury; thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out.

18 There is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth; neither is there any that taketh her by the hand of all the sons that she hath brought up.

called the dungeon (see Jer. xxxvii. 16, xxxviii. 6, Lam. iii., Zech. ix. 11).

Ver. 15.] The connexion of this verse with what goes before will better appear, if we render it, "For I am the Lord thy God," &c. God's dividing the Red Sea is here alluded to: compare Ps. lxxiv. 13, Job xxvi. 12, which place may not improbably be expounded with relation to the same miracle; for the whole verse runs thus, "He divideth the sea with his power, and by his understanding he smiteth through the proud:" where the Hebrew word rendered proud is Rahab, the name of Egypt, as hath been observed upon ver. 10 of this chapter.

Ver. 16. I have put my words in thy mouth,] I have made thee my oracle, I have entrusted thee with the office of declaring my gracious promises to the godly, and my threatenings to the wicked. This may be understood in a lower sense of Isaiah, but is chiefly meant of Christ (compare xlix. 2, 1. 5, 6, lix. 21).

Shadow of mine hand,] See xlix. 2.

That I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth,] A political government in the prophetic idiom is often expressed by the several parts of the creation: according to which analogy, rulers and magistrates are denoted by the heavenly bodies, and inferior people by the earth (see the note on xiii. 10): if we take the words here in this metaphorical sense, they import, that God publishes these gracious promises by the ministry of Isaiah, in order to the restoring of the Jewish nation, and settling them in a political government again, subsisting by themselves and governed by their own laws. But the words do farther imply a promise of that new state of things, called afterward a new heaven, and a new earth (lxv. 17, lxvi. 22), wherein Christ will reward his saints and eminent servants, and where he himself will immediately preside over them (Rev. xx. 4; see the note on xlv. 18).

Ver. 17.] The prophet speaks of Jerusalem, as one lying astonished under the stroke of God's judgments, which are commonly represented under the notion of a cup of intoxicating liquors, because they amaze men, and bereave them of their judgment and discretion. Drinking the dregs of this cup is the same with taking it off to the bottom, where the strongest and most nauseous part of the portion was settled; and implies that God did not in the least spare her, but poured out the full measure of his wrath upon her (compare Ps. lxxv. 8, Jer. xxv. 15, 16, Ezek. xxiii. 32—34, Rev. xiv. 10). Some suppose the metaphor to be taken from that intoxicating liquor which was wont to be given to condemned persons, to stupefy them before their execution; such as was offered to Christ (Matt. xxvii. 34).

19 These two things are come unto thee; who shall be sorry for thee? desolation, and destruction, and the famine, and the sword: by whom shall I comfort thee?

20 Thy sons have fainted, they lie at the head of all the streets, as a wild bull in a net: they are full of the fury of the LORD, the rebuke of thy God.

21 ¶ Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted, and drunken, but not with wine:

22 Thus saith thy Lord the LORD, and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people, Behold I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink it again:

23 But I will put it into the hand of them

Ver. 18.] Although she is in this helpless distracted condition, and hath most need of support and comfort, yet there are none of her own children that are able to give it her (see ver. 20): and therefore it is from God alone that she must expect relief (ver. 22).

Ver. 19.] Desolation and destruction, and the famine, and the sword:] Abraham à Schultens, in his observations upon Job, remarks, that the Hebrew word shod, desolation, is properly used of famine (see Job v. 22). So that "desolation and famine, destruction and the sword," are equivalent terms, and are the two evils here mentioned. To make the sense plainer, he thus translates the words, "these two things are come upon thee—desolation and destruction, even the famine and the sword:" the copulative particle being sometimes used by way of explanation: so 1 Sam. xxviii. 3, "They buried him in Ramah, even in his own city:" where it is in the Hebrew, "and in his own city" (see likewise 1 Sam. xvii. 40).

Who shall be sorry for thee?] Who is there left to take pity on thee, since thy children are all in as miserable a condition as thyself (see the eighteenth and the following verse).

By whom shall I comfort thee?] What human means of comfort is there left for thee (compare Amos vii. 2).

Ver. 20.] A description of the miserable condition of the city when it was just taken by the enemy, and the choicest men for youth and courage lay weltering in their own blood in every street, struggling for life like a wild bull taken in a toil, and sinking under the weight of God's wrath. When God delivered up Zedekiah into the hands of his enemies he is said to "spread his net upon him" (Ezek. xii. 13, xvii. 20).

Ver. 21. Drunken,] See ver. 17.

Ver. 22. Thou shalt no more drink it again:] Some render the words, "thou shalt no longer drink thereof" (compare Ezek. xxxix. 28). If we follow the common translation, and understand this of Jerusalem, it must mean that such a judgment should not come upon it again in several ages; a long continuance being often styled for ever, in the Hebrew. But by comparing this verse with ver. 16, and with liv. 9, we may conclude, that this prophecy hath a farther prospect upon a new state or restoration of the Jews, which is still to be expected (see likewise xxxv. 8, 9, lii. 1, lx. 15, lxii. 8).

[Thou shalt no more drink it again:] The words should rather be translated, "thou shalt no longer drink thereof." So the particle nod plainly signifies, Ezek. xii. 28, Hos. i. 6; see Noldius, p. 682.]

Ver. 23. I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee;] Compare xlix. 26, Jer. xxv. 29, Rev. xviii. 6.

that afflict thee; which have said to thy soul, Bow down, that we may go over; and thou hast laid thy body as the ground, and as the street, to them that went over.

Bow down, that we may go over:] The expression alludes to the custom of conquerors to tread upon the necks of the conquered (see Josh. x. 24, Ps. lxvi.

12). The phrase of "bowing down the soul," signifies undergoing great oppression and misery (see Ps. lvii. 6).

CHAPTER LII.

1 AWAKE, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean.

2 Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion.

3 For thus saith the Lord, Ye have sold yourselves for nought; and ye shall be redeemed without money.

4 For thus saith the Lord God, My people went down aforetime into Egypt to sojourn there; and the Assyrian oppressed them without cause.

5 Now therefore, what have I here, saith the Lord, that my people is taken away for nought? they that rule over them make them to howl, saith the Lord; and my name continually every day is blasphemed.

6 Therefore my people shall know my name: therefore they shall know in that day that I am he that doth speak: behold, it is I.

7 ¶ How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that

CHAP. LII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet congratulates Jerusalem upon her restoration after the captivity, and tells her how everything about her would put on a new face upon that joyful occasion. In which description he hath plainly an eye to the renovation of the church under the gospel. And in speaking upon this subject, he very naturally brings in a description of Christ in his state of humiliation and sufferings, together with the glory which would accrue to himself, and the advantages which all true believers would receive from thence. But, according to Mr. White's interpretation, this prophecy must come in very abruptly, without connexion with what goes before, or what comes after.

Ver. 1. Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion:] Thou hast for a long time been in a state of silence and obscurity, like one dead and buried; rouse up thyself, and resume thy former prowess and dignity (compare li. 17).

Put on thy beautiful garments,] Jerusalem is described as lying in the dust, in a disconsolate condition, ver. 2. but here the prophet exhorts her to change her sackcloth or mournful dress for a festival one (compare lxi. 3).

Henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean.] No aliens or infidels, such as the Babylonians, shall invade thee (compare Nah. i. 15). This mystically implies the church's being purified from all corruptions, and the contagion of the wicked (see the note on xxxv. 8).

Ver. 2. Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem:] The city before lay in the dust, and was buried in its own ruins (compare iii. 26, xlvii. 1). But now she is exhorted to rise from the ground, where she had lain prostrate (li. 23), and sit upon her throne or seat of authority, as the mother-city of the Jewish nation.

Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck,] Captivity and slavery are often expressed by the yoke of bondage (see Deut. xxviii. 48, Jer. xxviii. 14).

Ver. 3.] "For your iniquities you sold yourselves" (l. i). So foolish a bargain you made, as to venture the parting with your liberty, only to enjoy your sins and idolatrous customs: you received no valuable consideration when you thus enslaved yourselves; and therefore, to make the sale and the redemption correspondent to each other, you shall be rescued out of this oppression gratis, which I will do by Cyrus (see xlv. 13). The words, in the mystical sense, may fitly be applied to the miserable captivity to which sinners enslave themselves, and the freedom of that redemption which Christ hath wrought for them (compare I Pet. i. 18, Rom. iii. 24).

Ver. 4.] Compare Jer. l. 17. By the Assyrian, is meant the succession of Assyrian kings, Tiglath-pileser, Sennacherib, and the rest, down to Nebuchadnezzar; for the kings of Babylon are sometimes styled kings of Assyria (see note on xiv. 25). The Jews had given these princes no just cause for their ill usage of them; though God for just reasons made them his instruments in punishing a wicked people. Egypt and Assyria are often joined together as the two great oppressors of God's people (see the note on xi. 16).

Ver. 5.] What have I here,] Or, "what have I to do here?" (see note on xxii. 16) that is, what have I to do with the Babylonians? when I gave my people into their hands, as the instruments of my vengeance (see Jer. xxvii. 5, 6), I never made over to them the right that I have in my people.

That my people is taken away for nought? my name continually every day is blasphemed.] They have no valuable consideration given them for their liberty (ver. 3), nor did they injure the Babylonians first, that they should requite them in this manner, ver. 4, (to this sense the word hinman is often rendered without cause: see Ps. xxxv. 7, 19, lxix. 4, cix. 3, cxix. 161, Lam. iv. 52), they met with ill usage, and I got no honour by it. On the contrary, "my name is continually blasphemed:" that is, the infidels take occasion from my delivering up my people into their hands, to reproach me as if I were either forgetful of them, or unable to help them (see the note upon xlviii. 11).

Ver. 6.] They shall know my power, that it is I have made this promise of restoring them, who am always ready at hand to make good what I say: so some render the latter part of the verse, "That I am he that doth speak, and I am ready at hand" [to perform it].

Ver. 7.] A poetical description of the messenger who first brought the good news of Cyrus's decree for the people's return home; whom the watchmen, publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!

8 Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion.

9 ¶ Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem.

10 The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.

11 ¶ Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord.

12 For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the Lord will go before you; and the God of Israel will be your reward.

13 ¶ Behold, my servant shall deal prudently, ye shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.

14 As many were astonished at thee; his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men:

15 So shall he sprinkle many nations: the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider.

mentioned ver. 8, are supposed to descry afar off from the tops of the mountains, making all possible haste to publish this happy news; a signal instance of God's overruling providence, and of the peculiar care he hath for his church. This text is very fitly applied by St. Paul to the first preachers of the gospel, Rom. x. 15, the very word importing good tidings of peace and salvation, whereby the kingdom of God was erected among men. Accordingly we may observe, that those Psalms wherein we find that expression, "The Lord reigneth," are by the generality of interpreters, both Jewish and Christian, expounded of the times of the Messiah (see Ps. xciii. xvi. xcvii).

Ver. 8. Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice;] By watchmen are meant preachers or prophets (see lvi. 10, Ezek. xxxiii. 7). The words may be understood particularly of Haggai and Zechariah, with respect to the return from the captivity; and may be applied to the first preachers of the gospel in aftertimes.

They shall see eye to eye;] That is, clearly and evidently; the phrase means the same as face to face.

Ver. 9. Sing together;] See xlix. 8, li. 3.

Ver. 10. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm;] He hath given evident tokens of his power and holiness.

All the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God;] The plain import of the words, and the parallel text, Ps. xcvi. 3, show, that this must be understood of the revelation of the gospel.

Ver. 11. Depart;] See the note on xlviii. 20.

Touch no unclean thing;] The expression is taken from the legal pollutions contracted by touching any thing that was unclean (see Lev. xxii. 4-6); and is a command to God's people, and the priests especially, to cleanse themselves from all those defilements they may have contracted by living among the wicked.

Be ye clean, ye that bear the vessels of the Lord;] The priests under the law had the charge of the holy vessels, and all the furniture of the temple, committed to them (see Numb. iii. 8): and they were particularly enjoined to keep themselves free from all manner of pollutions (see Lev. xxi. xxii). The mystical sense of which command extends to all Christians (see 2 Cor. vi. 17), who are called a "holy priesthood," 1 Pet. ii. 5.

Ver. 12.] Your fathers "were thrust out of Egypt in haste" (Exod. xii. 33), but ye shall have sufficient notice of your departure out of Babylon, that ye may purify and prepare yourselves for it: and God himself shall be both in the head and rear of you, and, like the pillar of cloud in the wilderness, shall be both your guide and defence (see Exod. xiv. 19, 20).

Ver. 13. My servant shall deal prudently;] Or, "shall prosper," as the margin reads, more agreeably to what follows. Here begins a new section [the Chaldee paraphrase understands the person spoken of here, and to the end of the following chapter, to be the Messiah], which contains so clear a prophecy of the "sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow," that all Christian interpreters forsake Grotius here, even those that too servilely copy after him in other places, and think that this prophecy can be applied to none but Christ, who is here called God's servant in an eminent sense (see the note on xlii. 1).

He shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high;] He shall be exalted to be the head of a numerous offspring, to "justify many, and to divide the spoil with the strong" (liii. 10-12). The glories of the Messiah are elsewhere in the prophets set forth in the most magnificent terms. And the Jews have a remarkable saying recorded in some of their oldest writers, "That the Messiah should be exalted above Abraham, be extolled above Moses, and be higher than the angels:" a sentence that seems to have been derived to them from a more ancient tradition; for we find St. Paul in the Epistle to the Hebrews, proves the supereminent dignity of Christ, by the same topics, by showing him to be greater than Abraham (Heb. vii. 6, 7): worthy of more honour than Moses (iii. 3, 5, 6), and higher than the angels (i. 4, &c).

Ver. 14. As many were astonished at thee;] The prophet speaks of that surprise and astonishment men were seized with, by the unexpected change they observed in Christ's outward appearance, at the time of his sufferings, and the strange alteration between him that was so lately followed by multitudes, with acclamations and hosannahs, and revered as "the great prophet that should come into the world," and the same person suffering on the cross, and treated as "the scorn of men, and the outcast of the people" (see Matt. xxvii. 39, 42).

His visage was so marred;] See liii. 2.

Ver. 15. So shall he sprinkle many nations;] His sufferings, however they may render him despicable for the present, yet shall bring great benefit to others, and in the end redound to his own glory: he shall purify whole nations by his blood, and present them holy to God. The expression alludes to the legal aspersions, by which the people were sanctified (compare Ezek. xxxvi. 25, Heb. ix. 13, 14, 1 Pet. i. 2).

The kings shall shut their mouths at him;] The greatest kings and princes shall submit themselves to him, laying their hands upon their mouths, and hearkening to his instructions with the profoundest reverence and attention (compare Job xxix. 9, 10, xl. 4, and see above, xlix. 13).

For that which had not been told them shall they see;] Those nations and their kings shall be instructed in such heavenly truths, as human reason could never be able to discover. The gospel is called a "mystery kept secret from ages and generations," the knowledge of which could not be attained but by divine revelation (see Rom. xvi. 25, Eph. iii. 5, 9).

CHAPTER LIII.

1 Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?

2 For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him.

3 He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not.

CHAP. LIII.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter describes the circumstances of our Saviour's sufferings so exactly, that it seems rather a history of his passion, than a prophecy: and it is so undeniable a proof of the truth of Christianity, that the bare reading it, and comparing it with the gospel-history, hath converted some infidels.

Ver. 1. Who hath believed our report?] This is spoken in the person of Christ and his apostles: Who, say they, among our own countrymen, hath believed our preaching or doctrine? So the word shemuah signifies, xxviii. 9. And although God hath showed such visible tokens of his power (compare lii. 10), in those miracles by which he hath given testimony to our mission, yet how few of our own nation are convinced by them (compare John xii. 37, 38, Rom. x. 16)?

Ver. 2. He shall grow up before him as a tender plant.] The prophet assigns the cause of the Jews rejecting Christ, viz. the meanness of his outward appearance. The Messiah is elsewhere described under the resemblance of a branch or scion growing out of the stem or stock of David (see xi. 1, Jer. xxiii. 5). But here he is resembled to a little sucker, the literal interpretation of the word ijonck, and to a branch growing out of a dry ground, which looks withered, and does not promise either life or fruit.

The word shoresh, root, should rather be translated branch, or shoot (see the note on xi. 10).

He shall grow up before him] That is, before the Lord, mentioned ver. 1, under his immediate care and inspection; so the expression of “dwelling before God,” signifies abiding under his protection, Ps. lxi. 7. Or before him may signify here, according to God's determinate counsel and purpose, as the phrase denotes, Rom. iv. 17.

He hath no form nor comeliness;] The meanness of his outward circumstances, especially when he came to be condemned as a malefactor, made his person appear despicable (compare lii. 14). From this text Justin Martyr, Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian, and others of the ancient fathers, concluded our Saviour's person to have been deformed; an opinion in my judgment not at all probable. In the fourth and following centuries, a quite contrary notion was advanced by St. Jerome, and others, viz. that Christ was a person of extraordinary comeliness, which they grounded chiefly upon that place of the forty-fifth Psalm (ver. 3), “Thou art fairer than the children of men,” &c. From these two contrary opinions we may conclude, that the making or setting up the image or the picture of Christ, was no part of religious worship in the early ages of 4 ¶ Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

5 But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

Christianity, or else there would have remained some more certain tradition concerning his outward shape and person.

[That we should desire him.] He that is described as the “desire of all nations,” Hag. ii. 6 (where the word is the same as in the Hebrew here), did not appear at all desirable to those of his own nation.]

Ver. 3. Acquainted with grief:] “Enduring the continual contradiction of sinners,” and all the ill treatment that the malice of men or devils could suggest (see Luke xxii. 53).

We hid as it were our faces from him;] Out of aversion or contempt (compare i. 15, liv. 8, lix. 2). So to “turn away our face from the needy” (Ecclus. iv. 5), is to disregard him, and take no pity on his sufferings.

Ver. 4. He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows:] He hath borne the evils and punishments which were due to our sins. The two Hebrew verbs, nasa and sabal, properly signify to bear the punishment due to sin. The former is taken so in that noted expression, when any person is said to “bear his iniquity;” i. e. the punishment of his iniquity: the latter signifies properly to have iniquity laid upon one as a burden, which is the same with undergoing the punishment due to it. So this word is used, Lam. v. 7, “Our fathers have sinned, and are not; and we have borne their iniquities;” that is, we have been punished in their stead. It is used again in the same sense, at ver. 11 of this chapter.

Yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.] His enemies looked upon him as forsaken of God, and derided him for his vain boasts that God was his Father (see Matt. xxvii. 43).

Ver. 5.] He suffered those chastisements or punishments by which our peace with God was wrought, and satisfaction was made to the divine justice (see Rom. v. 1, Eph. ii. 14).

Ver. 6. All we like sheep have gone astray;] A proverbial expression (see Ps. cxix. 176, Zech. x. 2, Matt. xviii. 11, 12, Luke xv. 4).

The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.] The letter of the Hebrew runs thus: “The Lord hath made the iniquities of us all to meet on him,” or “to fall upon him,” as the verb pagang signifies, Judg. viii. 21, xv. 12, Amos v. 19.

Ver. 7. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted,] The words may better be rendered, It was exacted of him, and he answered the demand: that is, he gave that satisfaction which God's justice demanded for our sins.

Yet he opened not his mouth:] All the hard usage he met with did not prevail with him to utter an intemperate expression, or to make any return to the ill language which was given him (see 1 Pet. ii. 22, 23). Nay, he even abstained from making his just he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth.

9 And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

defence, any farther than it was necessary for him to plead his innocence (see Matt. xxvi. 63, xxvii. 12).

He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter,] Meekly submitting to the violence of his persecutors, and not offering to make the least resistance (see Matt. xxvi. 52, 53). "To go as an ox, or lamb, to the slaughter," is another proverbial expression, which we meet with Prov. vii. 22, Jer. xi. 19, but of a different signification, denoting a false security, or insensibility of danger; to which sense it is explained by Jeremiah himself, in that place, "I knew not," saith he, "that they had devised devices against me." And therefore that text is very importantly alleged by Grotius here, to justify his applying this part of the prophecy to Jeremiah's case.

Ver. 8. He was taken from prison and from judgment;] We do not read that imprisonment was any part of Christ's sufferings: so I think the marginal reading is to be preferred, "He was taken away by distress and judgment:" or it may be rendered, "He was carried away to execution (so the participle of lukkak is used, Prov. xxiv. 11) by tyrannical oppression, and a sentence of condemnation." The word notzer, which our translation renders prison, is rendered oppression, Ps. cvii. 39.

Who shall declare his generation?] Who can declare the wickedness of the men of that age or generation, who cut off this innocent person in so unjust a manner! The Hebrew word dor, often signifies the men of such an age or place (see Gen. vii. 1, Deut. xxxii. 5, 20, Ps. lxxviii. 8). In the same sense is דור frequently used in the New Testament, particularly Matt. xii. 45, xxiii. 36. Some commentators understand this text of Christ's eternal generation, but then I conceive the word in the Hebrew should have been toledoth.

Ver. 9.] Some render the words thus, "His grave was appointed with the wicked (being crucified with malefactors), but he was with the rich in his death," being buried in the monument of Joseph of Arimathea; or, "his sepulchre was with the rich:" so Schindler renders the word bemothau, as if it were derived from bamah. Others to this purpose, "God delivered him, even to the grave and to death, into the hands of the wicked and powerful." The word rich is sometimes taken, in an ill sense, for a tyrant or oppressor (see Job xxvii. 19, compared with ver. 13): and so they understand it here, and translate the latter part of the verse thus, "Not for any violence that he had done, or that any deceit was found in his mouth." The very same Hebrew particles, val to, being thus translated, Job. xvi. 17. Or else, taking those particles in that sense, we may very well join this sentence to the following verse, thus, "although he had done no wickedness, neither was any deceit in his mouth, yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him."

Ver. 10. When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed.] Our Saviour's words, John xii. 24, are a commentary upon this place, where, speaking of the benefits that would follow from his death, he saith, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."

[He shall see his seed.] This may be properly understood of our Lord's disciples, called Christians, after his name. Nothing is more usual than to call teachers by the name of fathers (see 2 Kings ii. 12, xiii. 14), and them that follow his instructions by the name of children. In this sense we read of the "children of Abraham," the "children of God," and the "children of wisdom." The Chaldee, LXX, and Vulgar Latin, join the following words to this sentence, "He shall see a seed which shall prolong their days;" i. e. the church, which shall continue unto the end of the world.]

He shall prolong his days,] "Being raised up from the dead, he shall die no more" (Rom. vi. 9).

The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.] The redemption and salvation of mankind is often called God's good pleasure, as being both highly acceptable to him, and likewise proceeding purely from his good pleasure and free grace (see Eph. i. 5, 9, 2 Thess. i. 11, John vi. 39).

Ver. 11. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied;] He shall rejoice to find that his death and sufferings have not been in vain, but the means of saving so many: to this sense some understand that text of St. Paul, where he saith, that Christ, "for the joy which was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame," (Heb. xii. 2).

By his knowledge] By such a knowledge of Christ as produceth faith and obedience (see John xvii. 3, Phil. iii. 8, 9, 2 Pet. i. 3).

Shall my righteous servant] St. John alludes to this place, when he calls our Saviour, Jesus Christ the righteous, 1 John ii. 1 (concerning the title of servant, see the note on xlii. 1).

Justify many;] The writers of the New Testament allude to this text, when they say, that "Christ gave his life a ransom for many" (Matt. xx. 28); "his blood was shed for many" (Matt. xxvi. 28); "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many" (Heb. ix. 28); and "by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous" (Rom. v. 19), where the οἱ πολλοί, "the many," are equivalent to "all men," as appears by the foregoing verse.

Ver. 12. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great,] The words may be rendered more exactly to the Hebrew, thus, "I will bestow many upon him;" or, "I will give him his share or possession in many;" to this sense the Septuagint render it, κατανομήσει πολλὰς. Thus the expression is equivalent to that of Ps. ii. 8, "I will give him the heathen for his inheritance," &c. Any gift is expressed in the Hebrew by a share or lot in a division: the phrase alludes to the division of the land of Canaan among the twelve tribes by lot (see Ps. xvi. 5, 6).

He shall divide the spoil with the strong;] The expression alludes to the custom of conquerors to divide the spoils of their victory with their officers and sol-strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgress-diers (see ix. 3. Josh. xxii. 8, Judg. v. 30, Prov. xvi. 19, Zech. xiv. 1). So Christ, after he had conquered the powers of darkness by his cross (see Col. ii. 15), should ascend triumphantly into heaven, "leading captivity captive, and distributing gifts unto men" (Eph. iv. 8). But I must observe, that the Septuagint and Chaldee paraphrase render the words, "He shall divide the spoils of the strong;" as if the Hebrew particle eth stood for meeth, as it does Gen. iv. 1, and elsewhere; and then the sense will be, that Christ shall turn Satan out of that kingdom, which he had usurped over mankind, and assert his own right to it (see John xii. 31). And this interpretation of the words, our Saviour himself may be thought to allude to, when, speaking of his conquest over Satan, he saith, "When a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils" (Luke xi. 22).

sors; and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.

Because he hath poured out his soul unto death:] He hath poured forth his blood, wherein the life or animal soul doth consist (see Lev. xvii. 11). The same reason of Christ's exaltation is assigned, Phil. ii. 9.

CHAP. LIV.

ARGUMENT.—In the foregoing chapter the prophet described the sufferings of Christ, and here he prophesies of the increase and glory of the church which should follow upon it; which, indeed, were to commence from the time of Christ's passion, but would not be completed till his second coming, and after the Jews were again restored to God's favour.

Ver. 1. Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear;] Or, "thou that hast not borne" children a great while. The prophet had described Jerusalem, during the captivity, as a desolate woman, forsaken of her husband, and bereaved of her children (xlix. 21; compare lxii. 4): here he bids her rejoice and comfort herself after her affliction, because her children should be much more numerous than they were in her most flourishing condition. This cannot be literally true of the Jewish nation, who never made such a figure after the captivity as they did in the days of David and Solomon; and consequently can be only imperfectly understood of Jerusalem, as she was a type of the Christian church, according to St. Paul's exposition of that text, Gal. iv. 27. Expounding the words to this sense, they import, that the church, after her spouse, Jesus Christ, was taken from her by death, and she left in a disconsolate, forlorn condition, and her children orphans (see John xiv. 18), desponding and comfortless (Luke xxiv. 21), from such mean and contemptible beginnings, should spread herself over the world, and will still receive a farther enlargement when the fulness of the Jews and gentiles is come in.

For more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife,] She that was desolate without inhabitant, shall have more children than ever she had formerly whilst she was married; i. e. while God owned his covenant relation to her, and the land, of which she was metropolis, was full of people (see ver. 5, and lxii. 4).

Ver. 2.] The prophet describes the city of Jerusalem, the figure of the Christian church (God's tabernacle, Rev. xxi. 3), under the metaphor of a tent, or tabernacle, the most ancient way of dwelling; and bids her enlarge her borders in proportion to the increase of her inhabitants (compare xlix. 19, 20, xxxiii. 20).

Ver. 3. Thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left;] Thy people shall become so numerous, that thou shalt be forced to seek out new habitations for them.

Thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles,] This may be understood, in a low sense, of the Jews enlarging their borders, by the conquests of Judas Maccabeus, over their neighbouring countries (see 1 Macc. v.), and their inhabiting those cities in Judea which had been left desolate, it may be, ever since the captivity of the ten tribes; but the words do plainly imply the enlargement of the church, by admitting the gentiles within her territories, and that the minds of rude and barbarous nations should be cultivated with the knowledge of the true God (see the note on xlix. 8).

Ver. 4.] The favour and affection God will show towards thee now, will make thee forget all thy former disgraces and afflictions, both those thou sufferedst in Egypt, and afterward in the times of the judges, and those which thou enduredst in the time of thy captivity, when God rejected thee, and left thee in a state of widowhood (see ver. 6, l. 1). This verse, and ver. 6, may have a particular regard to God's calling of the Jews, and restoring them to favour, after they had been rejected a great while (see the note upon ver. 13, and compare lx. 15, lxi 7, lxii. 4).

Ver. 5. For thy Maker is thine husband;] Though God had cast thee off for some time (ver. 1), yet he still owns the relation of a husband towards thee, and will show true marks of his conjugal affection to thee (see the note on xlviii. 8).

The God of the whole earth shall he be called,] And now the time is coming when he shall not be called the God of the Jews only, but also of the gen-ly One of Israel; The God of the whole earth shall he be called.

6 For the LORD hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God.

7 For a small moment have I forsaken thee: but with great mercies will I gather thee.

8 In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the LORD thy Redeemer.

9 For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.

tiles, whom he shall admit into the same covenant relation to himself, with the Jews (compare Zech. xiv. 9, Rom. iii. 29).

Ver. 6.] God is now reconciled to thee again, after having cast thee off, and left thee in a desolate and mournful condition (see ver. 1, 4). He will now cherish thee, as if he were newly married to thee (see lxii. 4). "A wife of youth" signifies a wife that a man was married to in his youth, who was his first love, and therefore not easily to be parted with (see Prov. v. 18, Mal. ii. 14).

Ver. 7. For a small moment have I forsaken thee;] God's anger towards his servants is short, when compared with that everlasting kindness he will show towards them (see Ps. xxx. 5). The same rule holds true of the church in general, whose "light afflictions are but for a moment," in comparison of that eternal glory he hath promised them; an earnest of which will be that millennium of rest, which is to usher in the heavenly state, and seems to be described in the following part of the chapter.

But with great mercies will I gather thee. This was to be understood, either of the gathering together of the Jews from their several dispersions (compare xi. 12, xxvii. 12, xliii. 6); or of the uniting the Jews and gentiles in one body, under Christ their head, which will be the effect or consequent of the former (see lvi. 8, lx. 4, lxvi. 18, Gen. xlix. 10, Eph. i. 10); or, lastly, it may be expounded of the gathering together of the saints at the last day, when there shall be an entire separation made between them and the wicked (see Matt. xiii. 41, 49, xxiv. 31, xxv. 32, 1 Thess. iv. 17, 2 Thess. ii. 1). This place may most probably be understood in the first sense.

Ver. 9.] God's irrevocable promise is elsewhere called his oath, though the formality of swearing was not used (see Ps. lxxxix. 3, cv. 11, cxxxii. 11). This solemn promise which God here makes, must relate to such a time when God will not afflict his people any more: and as it would not have been true if it were applied to the Jews returning from Babylon, for their whole nation and government was afterward utterly ruined by the Romans; so neither can it be made good so long as the present state of the world continues.

Mr. White hath, with great sagacity, discovered the fulfilling of this prophecy, in the present dispersion of the Jews over the world; which most other writers speak of as a remarkable judgment of God upon that nation, that they should never incorporate with any other community, but continue as a separate people from the rest of the world, living everywhere, like strangers, only upon sufferance: and this 10 For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the LORD that hath mercy on thee.

11 ¶ O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.

12 And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

13 And all thy children shall be taught of the LORD; and great shall be the peace of thy children.

14 In righteousness shalt thou be established:

sort of exile is threatened, as a punishment to be inflicted upon them for their heinous sins, by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 64—66, and by Hosea, iii. 4.

Ver. 10. For the mountains, &c.] Compare li. 6.

Ver. 11. I will lay thy stones with fair colours,] We read of "stones of divers colours," 1 Chron. xxix. 2, where the word in the original is the same as it is here, and probably means a stone of a red or shining colour. This and the next verse may, in a qualified sense, be applied to the rebuilding the city and temple after the captivity; but must have some farther meaning in it, if we compare it with that old prophecy mentioned in Tobit, xiii. 16, 17, which Mr. Mede hath showed must relate to the latter times (see his Dissertat. upon the last chapter of Tobit), and with Rev. xxi. 18, &c. The church of Christ, and the society of antichrist, are described as two cities; the latter called "mystical Babylon," Rev. xvii. 5, the former, the "new and heavenly Jerusalem," Rev. xxi. 2, 10, to distinguish it from the earthly city of that name, and is there described as "coming down from God," and adorned with all those gifts and graces which can render it glorious and durable, which are metaphorically represented under the figure of a four-square solid and beautiful structure, consisting all of gold and precious stones.

Ver. 12. Thy borders.] The Hebrew word here, which is commonly rendered a border, the Septuagint translate a wall, which makes the words exactly parallel with Rev. xxi. 18.

Ver. 13.] This signifies that plentiful effusion of grace which the prophets mention as the peculiar character of the gospel-times (see the note on xlv. 3). The effects of it were very signal in the first times of the gospel (see John vi. 45, compared with Jer. xxxi. 34, see likewise Acts iv. 33, 1 Cor. i. 4, 5). And there shall be another remarkable effusion of it, when God shall "pour the spirit of grace and supplication" upon the Jews, in order to their conversion, according to the prophecy of Zechariah, xii. 10, confirmed by the assertion of St. Paul, 2 Cor. iii. 16, who expressly tells us, that the time will come when the heart of that people "shall turn to the Lord, and then the veil shall be taken away" from it: and then they shall be the instruments of bringing in the remainder of the unconverted gentiles (see lxvi. 19, 20). And therefore we are not to make the sense of the present Jews any objection against interpreting some of the ancient prophecies with relation to their conversion, as Mr. White seems to do (see his argument upon the fortieth chapter of this prophecy), the generality of them being a profligate race of people, abandoned of God and goodness: but even such thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear: and from terror; for it shall not come near thee.

15 Behold, they shall surely gather together, but not by me: whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake.

16 Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy.

17 ¶ No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord.

wretches God is able to convert whenever he pleases, and, as John Baptist told their forefathers, can out of "these stones raise up children unto Abraham" (Matt. iii. 9).

Ver. 14.] God's mercy and thy own integrity shall be thy defence and protection, so that thou needest not fear either any threatening or invasion from foreign enemies (see lii. 1, lx. 18).

Ver. 15. They shall surely gather together, but not by me.] I foresee your enemies will make attempts against you; but as they do it without my direction, so neither shall they be blessed with my assistance.

Whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake.] Or, "shall fall to thee," as the Hebrew literally imports: that is, shall come over to thy side; in which sense the phrase is used, Jer. xxxvii. 14. So the meaning of the sentence will be this; whosoever comes against thee, instead of continuing thy enemy, will become thy convert, as St. Paul was at the beginning of Christianity.

Ver. 16.] I have created the maker of offensive weapons, and them that use them; and both being under my government and direction, no design formed against thee shall be prospered by me.

Ver. 17. Every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn.] God will protect and maintain thy innocence against all the malicious suggestions of thine enemies, either men or devils (compare l. 8, 9, Rev. xii. 10).

Their righteousness is of me.] I will acquit them, and pronounce them innocent or justified; this shall be the portion and privilege of my faithful servants (see xlv. 24, 25). Or righteousness may be equivalent to salvation (see lxiii. 1, 2).

CHAPTER LV.

1 Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price.

2 Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.

3 Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live: and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David.

4 Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people.

5 Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall

CHAP. LV.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet publishes the free offers of grace by the gospel, and exhorts men not to reject them, but to turn to God by a sincere repentance, who will graciously pardon and accept them.

Ver. 1. Come ye to the waters.] The divine grace is often represented under the emblem of springs and streams of water (see the notes upon xxx. 25, xlv. 3). In like manner divine knowledge, the food and support of the soul, is expressed by the metaphors of meat and drink, which sustain the body (see John vi. 27, and so to the end of the chapter). Under this metaphor the prophet here exhorts men to make use of those means of instruction which the gospel so freely offers. Christ himself expounds the words to this sense, John vii. 37.

Come ye, buy, and eat.] Buying sometimes signifies in general gaining or procuring anything. In this sense Solomon uses the word, when he bids us "buy the truth and sell it not;" i. e. spare no pains to learn it (Prov. xxiii. 23, see likewise Rev. iii. 18). It is added, "without money and without price," to show that divine knowledge is of far greater value than to be purchased with money, being the gift of God, and not to be obtained but by earnest prayer and sincere endeavours (compare Eccles. ii. 25, 26).

Ver. 2.] All the pretences to religious knowledge, but such as proceed from God himself, are vain and useless; they can neither instruct men in the truth, nor lead them to happiness.

In fatness.] By fatness is meant all sorts of delicious food (see xxv. 6); and the expression here denotes the true knowledge of God and of happiness, as was observed upon the first verse (compare likewise the following verse).

Ver. 3. I will make an everlasting covenant with you.] The gospel is often called an "everlasting covenant" (see lxi. 8, Jer. xxxii. 40, l. 5) in opposition to the law, which was designed but for a time, and was to give way to a better. And by the terms of this covenant, God will fulfil those promises which he made to David, of establishing his throne for ever (see 2 Sam. vii. 16, Ps. lxxxix. 28): which will not be fully verified, but in the Messiah, of whose "kingdom there shall be no end" (see Acts xiii. 34).

Ver. 4. I have given him for a witness to the people.] David is in the prophets often put for Christ, in whom all the promises made to David are to be fulfilled (see Jer. xxx. 9, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, Hos. iii. 5). And as all the prophets are God's witnesses (see the note on xliii. 10), so that title does in an eminent manner belong to the Messiah, who was the "great prophet that should come into the world:" accordingly he is styled "the faithful witness" (Rev. i. 5), and "for this cause came he into the world, that he should bear witness to the truth," as he speaks himself (John xviii. 37).

A leader and commander to the people.] The word run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee.

6 ¶ Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near:

7 Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.

8 ¶ For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord.

9 For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.

10 For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater:

11 So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

12 For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.

13 Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

nagid, which is translated leader, signifies likewise a prince, or ruler; and so it is translated, Dan. ix. 26, where the same title is given to the Messias.

Ver. 5. Thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not.] Christ is elsewhere styled the "light of the gentiles" (see xlii. 6, xlix. 6).

He hath glorified thee.] See the note on lii. 13.

Ver. 6.] A general exhortation to men, to make use of the means and opportunities of grace which the gospel offers. To the same purpose are those exhortations we read in the New Testament, "not to receive the grace of God in vain" (2 Cor. vi. 2), and to "hearken to God's voice while it is called to-day" (Heb. iii. 13). Which places intimate, that men may outlive their day of grace, and either themselves be "hardened through the deceitfulness of sin;" or else God may "remove their candlestick," and take away those means of instruction from them, which they made no better use of (see Matt. xxi. 43).

Ver. 7.] A general promulgation of pardon, such as properly belongs to the gospel-state (compare Matt. xi. 28, Luke xxiv. 47, Acts xiii. 38, 39).

Ver. 8, 9.] My purposes in revealing the gospel carry in them such marks of goodness and condescension in forgiving sins (see ver. 7), and of truth and faithfulness in fulfilling my promises (see ver. 10, 11), that they as far exceed the measures of human proceedings, as heaven is high above the earth.

Ver. 10, 11.] You find by experience that the rain and snow fulfil my pleasure, and answer the ends for which I send them down upon the earth: and you may be assured that my word and promise shall be much more effectual, and fulfil all my gracious purposes and designs, of bringing men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God.

Ver. 12. Ye shall go out with joy.] This may be particularly meant of the Jews' return from captivity, as the second verse in the next chapter is to be applied to them: but then we are to consider their call out of Babylon to be an emblem of a greater deliverance; when God will call men by the gospel "out of darkness into his marvellous light:" upon which account the Christians are called a "chosen generation," and "a peculiar people," whom God hath separated to himself from the rest of the world (see 1 Pet. ii. 9, Gal. i. 5). Compare the phrase go out, with xlii. 7, xlix. 9. The words may be understood of the final restoration of the Jews, which shall be accompanied with bringing in the fulness of the gentiles (compare xxxv. 10).

The mountains and the hills] See note on xlii. 10.

Ver. 13. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree.] Spiritual blessings are often represented under the emblems of fruitfulness and plenty (compare xxxv. 2). So here we may take the words as importing that virtue and holiness shall spring up instead of vice and wickedness: good men being elsewhere compared to fruitful trees (see Ps. i. 3, Luke vi. 44, 45): as the wicked are resembled to briars and thorns (see the note on ix. 18). Or else the words may import a renovation of the world, and restoring it to a paradisaical state, as some understand the promise of a "new heaven and new earth," mentioned lxx. 17).

It shall be unto the Lord for a name.] It shall turn to God's praise, and be an everlasting monument or memorial of his goodness. Thus the expression, "for a name," is used Jer. xiii. 11, where, "for a name, for a praise, and for a glory," are used as equivalent terms. So Ezek. xxiii. 10, where our translation reads, "she became famous among women," it is in the original, "she became a name among women."

CHAPTER LVI.

1 Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed.

2 Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil.

3 ¶ Neither let the son of the stranger, that

CHAP. LVI.

ARGUMENT.--The exhortations in this chapter, to the ninth verse, are particularly directed to the Jews under captivity, and to the proselytes who were joined to them; many strangers, by conversing with the Jews, who were dispersed in foreign countries, being persuaded to embrace the religion. The prophet encourages the latter to hope that God will accept them, though they cannot lay claim to all the privileges the natural Jews valued themselves so much upon. God tells them (ver. 8) that he will, in due time, add many other gentiles to his church, and make them one body with bath joined himself to the Lord, speak, saying, The Lord hath utterly separated me from his people: neither let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree.

4 For thus saith the Lord unto the eunuchs that keep my sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant;

5 Even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off.

6 Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant;

7 Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people.

8 The Lord God which gathereth the outcast of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered unto him.

9 ¶ All ye beasts of the field, come to devour, yea, all ye beasts in the forest.

10 His watchmen are blind; they are all ignothe Jews: which prediction relates to the times of the gospel.

Ver. 1.] Compare xvi. 13. An exhortation resembling that of John Baptist (Matt. iii. 2), whereby men are required to prepare their minds, and render themselves fit objects of God's mercy.

Ver. 2. That keepeth the sabbath from polluting it.] The sabbath was ordained as a sign or token of God's covenant with his people (see Exod. xxxi. 13, Ezek. xx. 12), whereupon the observation of it was the distinguishing character of a Jew, by which he declared himself a worshipper of the true God, who created heaven and earth, and instituted the sabbath as a memorial of that creation. The "keeping the sabbath" is a precept here more particularly mentioned, because it might be observed under the captivity, when many other ceremonial laws, particularly those concerning sacrifice, could not.

Ver. 3. Son of the stranger.] The strangers were those who joined themselves with the Jews in worshipping the true God, without being circumcised, or obliging themselves to observe the whole law of Moses. They are called "devout Greeks," or "religious proselytes," and the "worshippers of God," in the Acts (see xiii. 47, xvii. 4, xviii. 7). God here declares his accepting of such, thereby preparing a way for the gospel institution, when the partition-wall between the Jews and gentiles should be broken down.

I am a dry tree.] Fruitfulness was one of the principal blessings promised under the law (see Gen. xlix. 25, Deut. xxviii. 4). In like manner, barrenness was both a curse and a reproach (see note on iv. 1).

Ver. 5.] Eunuchs were forbid "to enter into the congregation of the Lord," or join themselves with the Jews in their public assemblies (Deut. xxiii. 1). Here God tells them the time is coming, when these restraints shall be taken off; the inward endowments of the soul shall be sufficient to give pious persons a title to the communion of saints, and their names shall be written in "the book of life," a more lasting remembrance than posterity can entitle them to (see Col. iii. 11).

Ver. 6. The sons of the stranger, [compare lx. 10] — every one that keepeth the sabbath] The words of the fourth commandment do plainly include all "strangers that lived within the gates of the Jews," expressed elsewhere by the "stranger that sojourneth with thee" (Exod. xii. 48, see likewise Lev. xxv. 47). So the Septuagint understood the words of the fourth commandment, and render them, ὁ προσήλυτος ὁ παρακλινὴν ἐν σοί: "the proselyte that sojourns with thee." And yet the later rabbins maintain, that the precept of the sabbath only obliges such proselytes as are circumcised (see Selden, De Jure Nat. et Gentium, lib. iii. cap. 12).

Taketh hold of my covenant.] The sabbath was ordained as a sign or token of God's covenant with his people (see the note upon ver. 2). So that keeping the sabbath was one sort of initiation into that covenant.

Ver. 7. Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, &c.] This may be understood of those gentile worshippers, who paid their devotions in the "court of the gentiles," a place within the precincts of the temple, set apart for that purpose. Many of these came from distant countries to Jerusalem, at the solemn festivals (see John xii. 20, Acts viii. 27). But we are likewise to understand the words, of the gentiles coming into the Christian church, and joining in the worship of it.

Their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted] We may understand the words partly of those sacrifices which the gentile converts did offer under the second temple: but the calling of the temple the "house of prayer," doth make it probable that the sacrifices here mentioned are chiefly to be understood of those "spiritual sacrifices" of prayer and thanksgiving, which are proper to the Christian worship (see Heb. xiii. 15, 1 Pet. ii. 5). What Calvin saith upon the place, Loquitur propheta figuris, quæ suæ convenient ætati, "The prophet uses such expressions," with relation to the gospel-times, "as are taken from the usages of his own time," is a good rule for explaining the idioms of the prophetic writings, where the state of the Christian church is often described by representations taken from the Jewish temple and government (see the notes on xix. 19, lvi. 23).

For all people.] It was designed for other nations, as well as the Jews, to say their prayers in, at its first dedication by Solomon (see 1 Kings viii. 41, 42). Although the number of proselytes was not considerable till the times of the second temple.

Ver. 8.] The gathering the dispersed Jews into one body and people again, is but an earnest of what I will do, when "at the fulness of time I shall gather together in one all things by Christ," Eph. i. 10 (see the note on liv. 7).

Ver. 9.] A new chapter should have been begun here; for this is a new prophecy, setting forth, in the remainder of this and in the following chapter, the sins and miseries which ushered in and ended in the captivity: when, first, Pharaoh-nechoh made the land tributary (2 Kings xxiii. 33); then bands of the Chaldeans, Syrians, Ammonites, and Moabites, invaded it (ibid. xxiv. 2); and at last Nebuchadnezzar completed its destruction (compare the expressions here with Jer. xii. 9, Hab. ii. 17).

Ver. 10.] The cause of these miseries is imputed here to the ignorance and carelessness of their governors, both in church and state (see the following rant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber.

11 Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand; they all look to their verse), whom the prophet compares to dumb dogs, that give no warning of approaching thieves, or enemies, but give themselves up to sleep and idleness.

Ver. 11. They are greedy dogs] Or, impudent, so the word naz elsewhere signifies (see Prov. vii. 13, xxi. 29). In like manner Homer describes impudence, by κύνες ὀφθαλμοῦ ἔχον, "having the eyes or look of a dog."

Shepherd] The word shepherd signifies civil governors, as well as ecclesiastical guides (see xliv.

own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter.

12 Come ye, say they, I will fetch wine, and we will fill ourselves with strong drink; and to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant.

28, Jer. xxv. 34, xlix. 19, Zech. xi. 3, 5, 8, &c. xiii. 7).

Every one for his gain, from his quarter.] That is, every one from his quarter minds only his own advantage; they are all alike, from one end to the other: so the word mikkatzeb signifies from every quarter, Gen. xix. 4.

Ver. 12. To-morrow shall be as this day,] This they said to deride the threatenings of destruction which the prophets denounced against them.

CHAPTER LVII.

1 THE righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart; and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come.

2 He shall enter into peace: they shall rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprightness.

3 ¶ But draw near hither, ye sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and the whore.

4 Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? are ye not children of transgression, a seed of falsehood,

5 Enflaming yourselves with idols under every green tree, slaying the children in the valleys under the cliffs of the rocks?

6 Among the smooth stones of the stream is thy portion; they, they are thy lot: even to them hast thou poured a drink offering, thou hast offered a meat offering. Should I receive comfort in these?

CHAP. LVII.

ARGUMENT.—The same subject is continued which was begun in the last chapter; and in this the prophet reproves the idolatries which were so publicly practised in the latter times of the kings of Judah, and which provoked God to deliver up his people captives to the Babylonians, from whence nevertheless he promises to deliver them, at the latter end of the chapter.

Ver. 1. The righteous perisheth,] This may be understood either of Hezekiah or of Josiah: Hezekiah had a promise made him that peace should continue during his days (xxxix. 8). Josiah had likewise a promise of dying in peace, and not seeing the evil which God would bring upon Jerusalem (2 Kings xxii. 20).

No man layeth it to heart:] No man reflects with himself how sore a judgment it is to have good men, and especially pious princes, taken away in bad times, who might either by their prayers avert impending judgments, or, by their prudence and vigilance, apply proper remedies to the public calamities.

Merciful men are taken away,] The Hebrew word asaph signifies to be gathered, and is used of men's being laid in the sepulchres of their ancestors; which is elsewhere expressed, by being "gathered unto their people." So Josiah is said to be "gathered to his grave" (2 Kings xxii. 20). In other places the word is joined with being buried (see Jer. viii. 2, xxv. 33). So we read, Job xxvii. 19, "The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered;" where the word were better translated buried.

Ver. 2. They shall rest in their beds,] As death is compared to sleep, so the grave is resembled to lying down in a bed (see xiv. 18). Particularly we read, 2 Chron. xvi. 14. of the "bed of spices" in which king Asa was laid: and if we understand the text before us, of the death of some of their good kings, the phrase may allude to the costly funerals with which they honoured the memory of their pious princes deceased.

Each one walking in his uprightness:] Or, "that hath walked in his uprightness."

Ver. 3.] The prophet summons those that practise the sorceries and idolatries of the heathen to come and hear their doom: these he calls the "sons of the sorceress," and the "seed of the adulterer;" as our Saviour calls the wicked Jews, "an adulterous generation" (Matt. xvi. 4). Adultery being taken in a spiritual sense for departing from God, and breaking that faith and allegiance which is due to him, and especially for renouncing him, and worshipping idols (see the note on xlviii. 8). Men are called in scripture the children of those whose practices they imitate (see John viii. 39, 41, 44).

Ver. 4.] Gestures of scorn and contempt, by which this idolatrous crew declared their hatred and despite to God's true servants.

Ver. 5. Enflaming yourselves with idols] Idolatry being spiritual adultery, is sometimes compared to the rage of lust (see Ezek. xvi. xxiii.). It is true, too, that those shady groves dedicated to idol-worship, were a shelter for all manner of impurities (see Hos. iv. 13, 14).

Under every green tree] See i. 29, Ezek. vi. 13.

Slaying the children in the valleys under the cliffs of the rocks?] Offering them in sacrifice unto Moloch: a sin severely prohibited (Lev. xx. 2, &c.), and yet much practised in the times of the idolatrous kings of Judah (see 2 Chron. xxviii. 3, 2 Kings xxiii. 10, Ezek. xvi. 20). And the "valley of Hinnom" was chiefly noted for this inhuman practice (see Jer. vii. 31).

Ver. 6. Among the smooth stones of the stream [or, of the valley] is thy portion, &c.] The words may be understood of the altars built there, or of stone pillars, erected for idolatrous worship, which they used to anoint with oil, or pour out their offerings upon them, such as the text here mentions: from whence came 7 Upon a lofty and high mountain hast thou set thy bed: even thither wentest thou up to offer sacrifice.

8 Behind the doors also and the posts hast thou set up thy remembrance: for thou hast discovered thyself to another than me, and art gone up; thou hast enlarged thy bed, and made thee a covenant with them; thou lovedst their bed where thou sawest it.

that proverbial speech concerning a superstitious man, πάντα λίθον λιταγὴν προσκυνῶν, "A worshipper of every shining stone;" mentioned by Clem. Alexandrinus (Strom. lib. vii.). The same learned writer supposeth these to be the most ancient monuments of divine worship, and older than the use of statues and images; for we find that Jacob, in compliance with the then received practice, as it is likely, "set up a pillar at Bethel, and poured oil upon it," Gen. xxviii. 18 (see Clem. Alexandr. Strom. lib. i. p. 348. D. and Protrept. p. 29. D.).

A drink offering,—a meat offering.] To the sacrifices of beasts were generally added an offering made of flour mixed with oil, which our translators render a meat offering (but might better be translated a bread offering, see the note on xliii. 23), and a certain quantity of wine for a drink offering (see Numb. xv. 4, 5, Joel i. 9).

Ver. 7.] Sacrificing upon the high places was an idolatrous practice often taken notice of, and consequently the bed here mentioned may most fitly be understood of such a bed as was used at feasts, and was prepared for the entertainment which was made with part of the oblation (compare Ezek. xxiii. 41, Amos ii. 8). It was the custom of the Jews, as well as of the Romans, to lie upon beds or couches at their meals (see 1 Sam. xxviii. 23, Amos vi. 4): the same custom is mentioned Mark vii. 4, and in other places of the gospel, where the English reads, he sat down to meat, it is in the Greek, he lay down.

Ver. 8. Behind the doors—hast thou set up thy remembrance.] Thou hast set up monuments of thy idolatry in every corner. The Hebrew verb zakar, with its derivatives, is used for any object, monument, or place of divine worship, as Dr. Spencer hath observed (De Legib. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 5).

[Behind the doors also and the posts.] They that did not care their idolatry should be discovered, set up their idols in secret places. See Deut. xxvii. 15.]

For thou hast discovered thyself to another than me, and—enlarged thy bed.] The prophet describes their idolatry under the metaphors of a harlot's being false to her husband's bed (see ver. 3). So he tells them, that they had committed spiritual adultery when they went up to the high places to sacrifice (see ver. 7); that they had multiplied their idolatries, as an unchaste woman does her lovers; that they had broken their covenant with God, whom they had acknowledged to be their Lord and husband, and made a new contract with idols to serve them (see the note on xlviii. 8). The word bed is of an ambiguous sense, and besides its proper signification, is taken for the furnishing out a religious feast (see the note upon ver. 7).

Ver. 9. Thou wentest to the king with ointment.] The Jews are often upbraided for making leagues with idolatrous princes, and courting their favour by presents (see xxx. 6, Hos. vii. 11, xii. 1): sometimes 10 Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way; yet saidst thou not, There is no hope: thou hast found the life of thine hand; therefore thou wast not grieved.

11 And of whom hast thou been afraid or feared, that thou hast lied, and hast not remembered me, nor laid it to thy heart? have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not?

12 I will declare thy righteousness, and thy works; for they shall not profit thee.

13 ¶ When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee; but the wind shall carry them all away; vanity shall take them: but he that put-they courted the king of Assyria, at other times the king of Egypt, as it best served their interest.

And didst debase thyself even to hell.] Thou didst court the favour of these foreign princes by thy ambassadors, in the most abject and submissive terms.

Ver. 10. Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way;] Thou hast tried all ways to save thyself from the evils that threaten thee: thou hast sought the friendship of foreign princes, and of their gods (see 2 Chron. xxviii. 21, 23.) And though thou hast found thyself disappointed in all these projects; yet still thou conceivest hopes of receiving benefit from their friendship and alliance.

Thou hast found the life of thine hand, &c.] Thou hast made a shift by these methods to support thyself for the present, therefore thou dost not feel any remorse for thy evil practices.

Ver. 11. Of whom hast thou been afraid or feared, that thou hast lied.] The fear of God's displeasure ought, in all reason, to outweigh all other fears and apprehensions (see li. 12, 13), and deter thee from breaking that faith and covenant whereby thou art engaged to him (see ver. 3, 8). Departing from God is called, in other places, "dealing treacherously with him" (Jer. iii. 20, v. 11).

Have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not?] The Bishops' Bible, published under queen Elizabeth, translates the place thus: "is it not because I held my peace, and that of a long time, therefore thou fearest me not?" Sinners take encouragement to continue in sin, from God's patience and long-suffering (see Ps. l. 21, Eccles. viii. 11).

Ver. 12.] I will show thee thy deserts, and give thee a view of thy deeds, which then will appear quite of another sort, than what thy own self-conceit makes thee believe them to be; and see whether thou canst ground any hope or comfort in them.

Ver. 13. Let thy companies deliver thee;] Let thy allies or associates help thee, whose assistance thou hast taken such pains to procure (see ver. 9). But they will not be able to deliver themselves (compare Jer. xxii. 22).

But he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land,] Those that still depend upon me, and make use of none of these indirect means to preserve themselves, shall return from captivity, and enjoy their native country, and the opportunities of attending upon my service, either by themselves, or in their posterity. The prophets, after they have denounced God's threatenings against the Jews, do usually conclude with promises of receiving them again into favour upon their amendment: to show that that nation have still a title to the promises made by God unto their fathers, whenever they will render themselves worthy to receive them (see Rom. xi. 29).

Ver. 14. And shall say, &c.] Or, "it shall be said," or "orders shall be given:" for the verb active is here used impersonally, as is frequent in other places teth his trust in me shall possess the land, and shall inherit my holy mountain ;

14 And shall say, Cast ye up, east ye up, prepare the way, take up the stumbling block out of the way of my people.

15 For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy ; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones.

16 For I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth : for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls which I have made.

(see the note on xlv. 18). The words imply that God will take care of facilitating the return of the faithful out of captivity, and will remove all impediments that may hinder their passage home, just as if harbingers were to go before them, and plane the roads for them (see xl. 3, xlii. 10).

Ver. 15.] Though my throne be in heaven, yet I do not disdain to converse with the lowly and meek, and such as humble themselves under my hand, whom I will relieve, and comfort in their afflictions (compare lxvi. 2, John xiv. 23).

Ver. 16.] God hath compassion upon the work of his hands, and does not deal with men according to the rigour of justice, else they would quickly be brought to nothing (see Ps. lxxviii. 39, ciii. 13, 14, Jer. x. 24).

Ver. 17. For the iniquity of his covetousness] See lvi. 11, lix. 4, &c.

I hid me, and was wroth,] God's withdrawing his mercy or protection, is expressed by hiding his face (see viii. 17, Deut. xxxii. 20, Job xiii. 24, Lam. iii. 44).

Ver. 18. I have seen his ways, and will heal him:] I have seen a reformation of his manners, and will remove my heavy judgments (compare lviii. 8, lix. 20, Jer. xxxi. 19, 20).

17 For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him : I hid me, and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart.

18 I have seen his ways, and will heal him : I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to his mourners.

19 I create the fruit of the lips ; Peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the LORD ; and I will heal him.

20 But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.

21 There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.

And restore comforts unto him and to his mourners.] To those that mourn over the desolations of God's church and people, and lament for the sins which brought down these sad calamities (compare lxi. 2, lxvi. 10, Jer. xiii. 17, Ezek. ix. 4).

Ver. 19. I create the fruit of the lips ;] I give new occasion for praise and thanksgiving, by the mercies I confer upon my people (compare Heb. xiii. 15).

Peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near,] As God's promises of favour upon repentance, mentioned in the foregoing verses, have a great deal of the gospel-spirit in them : so the peace here proclaimed cannot be properly understood but of those terms of pardon which Christ hath offered both to Jew and gentile, as St. Paul expounds the text, Eph. ii. 17.

Ver. 20, 21.] The wicked cannot hope to enjoy either peace of mind, or outward prosperity ; their inward guilt gives them perpetual disquiet, makes them restless and unsettled, and God will not vouchsafe them those outward blessings which he promises to such as are sincere converts (see ver. 15, 18, and the note upon xlviii. 22).

CHAPTER LVIII.

1 Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins.

2 Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God : they ask of me the ordinances of justice ; they take delight in approaching to God.

3 ¶ Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not ! wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge ? Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure, and exact all your labours.

4 Behold, ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness : ye shall not fast as ye do this day, to make your voice to be heard on high.

5 Is it such a fast that I have chosen ? a day

CHAP. LVIII.

ARGUMENT.—God having promised mercy to those that repent, and threatened judgments to the obstinate, in the fifteenth and following verses of the last chapter, the prophet here instructs them how they ought to perform the duties of repentance and humiliation upon the solemn times set apart for that purpose: such was the great day of expiation (Lev. xvi. 29), and other fasts appointed upon extraordinary occasions.

Ver. 1. Show my people their transgression.] Especially the iniquities of their holy things, and the hypocrisy of their religious services (see the following verses).

Ver. 2. Yet they seek me daily.] To seek God is the same as to draw nigh unto him in his ordinances, such as are prayer, repentance, reading or hearing his word, or any other religious exercise, which may inform us of his will, and procure us his favour.

Ver. 3. Wherefore have we afflicted our soul,] By fasting and humiliation: a phrase used particularly of the great day of expiation (Lev. xvi. 29, xxiii. 27).

In the day of your fast you find pleasure, and exact all your labours.] Or, as the words may more significantly be rendered, “you find wherewithal to please yourselves, and you are rigorous in grieving, or burdening others.” You gratify your own passions, especially your covetousness, and you oppress the poor, and so are defective in the duties both of justice and charity, as it follows.

for a man to afflict his soul? is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the LORD?

6 Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?

7 Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him? and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?

8 ¶ Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily: and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the LORD shall be thy reward.

9 Then shalt thou call, and the LORD shall answer; thou shalt cry, and he shall say, Here I am. If thou take away from the midst of thee the yoke, the putting forth of the finger, and speaking vanity;

10 And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon day:

11 And the LORD shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not.

12 And they that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places: thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations; and thou shalt be called, The repairer of the breach, The restorer of paths to dwell in.

13 ¶ If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day, and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the LORD, honourable; and shalt honour him, not do-

Ver. 4. Ye fast for strife, and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness:] Your fasts have the appearance of devotion, but their true design is only to promote parties and contention, and to oppress the innocent: such was that fast we read of, I Kings xxi. 10.

Ye shall not fast as ye do this day, to make your voice to be heard on high.] The prophet seems to have made this discourse upon some extraordinary day of humiliation, when it was usual for the prophets to make public exhortations to the people (see Jer. xxxvi. 6): and he tells them in this verse, that their fasts ought not to be like this which they now kept, which consisted only in being noisy in the worship of God, as if their outward vehemency would make their prayers reach to heaven; whereas it was sincere and inward piety alone which gave access to the throne of grace. Solemn humiliations are elsewhere expressed by "crying unto the Lord" (Joel i. 14), and "crying mightily unto God" (Jonah iii. 8).

Ver. 5.] These were ceremonies which accompanied fasting (see Matt. vi. 16, Jonah iii. 6).

Ver. 6. Is not this the fast that I have chosen?] It is a common phraseology of scripture, to express the preference that is due to one thing before another, by terms which express the rejecting of that which is less worthy: so when God saith, "I will have mercy and not sacrifice" (Hos. vi. 6), the meaning is, that mercy is to be preferred before sacrifice. Just thus the prophet speaks of fasting here, as a thing in itself of little or no use (though elsewhere God expressly enjoins it, both in the Old and New Testament: (see Lev. xxiii. 29, Matt. ix. 15): to show how much mercy is to be preferred, without which fasting will not avail anything.

To loose the bands of wickedness, &c.] These several expressions signify the forbearing severe exactions upon insolvent debtors, griping usury (see Neh. v.), and especially keeping servants in slavery, without allowing them the benefit of release at the end of seven years, which the law expressly required (Exod. xxi. 2), but the hard-hearted Jews would by no means comply with (see Jer. xxxiv. 8, &c.).

Ver. 7. And that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?] From those of thine own kindred, thy brethren, or countrymen (see the notes on ix. 20, xlix. 26).

Ver. 8. Then shall thy light break forth as the morning.] As the light breaks forth out of the darkness; so thy low and afflicted condition shall be suddenly changed into a happy and glorious one (compare ix. i. 2, Job xi. 17, and here, ver. 10).

Thine health shall spring forth speedily:] As calamities are often expressed by wounds or sickness (see i. 7, Jer. xv. 18): so the restoring any person or nation to their former prosperity, is expressed by healing them (see xix. 22, lvii. 19, Jer. ix. 22).

The glory of the Lord shall be thy reward.] God's favour protecting thine innocence, shall both guide and defend thee (see the note on lii. 12).

Ver. 9. If thou take away—the yoke,] See ver. 6.

The putting forth of the finger,] The expression probably alludes to some gesture they used in their conversation, whether of mocking or threatening others: or it may signify any the least attempt towards the invading the right of others (compare lix. 3, see Ps. cxxv. 3). "To put forth the hand unto iniquity," is to offer at something which is not consistent with righteousness or justice.

Speaking vanity:] Vanity here means falsehood and deceit, which is too often used in men's dealings with each other: so the word is taken, lix. 4, where our translation renders it iniquity.

Ver. 10. If thou draw out thy soul to the hungry.] If thou extend thy compassions to him that is in need. A charitable temper is commonly expressed by a large soul, as a niggardly person is called a narrow-souled man, whose thoughts and affections are confined wholly to himself and his own concerns.

Ver. 11. Drought is put for any sort of want, because dry ground is barren, and destitute of all conveniences for the support of life. And therefore God's grace and blessing is often represented by the metaphor of watering dry ground with streams and rivers, as it follows here, "thou shalt be like a watered garden," &c. (compare xxx. 24, xxxv. 6, xli. 18, xlv. 3).

Make fat thy bones:] The phrase denotes a good habit of body (compare Job xxi. 24, Prov. iii. 8): as dry bones signify the state of death (Ezek. xxxvii. 4).

Ver. 12. They that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places:] Shall rebuild those houses and cities which have of a long time laid ruinous (compare lxi. 4, and see the note there), and have been razed from the very foundations (see Ps. cxxxvii. 7).

The restorer of paths to dwell in.] When the cities which have lain desolate are reinhabited, the roads that lead to them will be again frequented (compare Judg. v. 6, Ps. cvii. 7).

Ver. 13.] If thou abstain from following thy own ing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words :

14 Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord ; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places ways and pleasure on the sabbath, the day dedicated to my service. From hence it appears, that the precept of keeping the sabbath-day holy, did not enjoin merely a bodily rest ; but implied likewise setting the day apart for the services of religion. Why the prophet lays such stress upon keeping the sabbath-day, see the note on lvi. 2 (compare likewise Jer. xvii. 21, 22, &c.).

Ver. 14. Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord ; Thou shalt be such a proficient in godliness, that God's service shall become delightful unto thee of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father : for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

(see Ps. xxxiv. 8) ; not burdensome, as it was to those Jews whom the prophet Amos reproves (viii. 5).

I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, I will exalt thee above thy neighbouring nations, and give thee possession of their mountains, whither they use to betake themselves, as to an impregnable fortress (compare Deut. xxxii. 13, xxxiii. 29, Ezek. xxxvi. 2).

And feed thee with the heritage of Jacob Thou shalt enjoy the land I gave to him, and all those blessings which I promised to him and his posterity.

CHAPTER LIX.

1 BEHOLD, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save ; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear :

2 But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear.

3 For your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity ; your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness.

4 None calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth ; they trust in vanity, and speak lies ; they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity.

5 They hatch cockatrice' eggs, and weave the spider's web : he that eateth of their eggs dieth, and that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper.

6 Their webs shall not become garments, neither shall they cover themselves with their works :

their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands.

7 Their feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood : their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity ; wasting and destruction are in their paths.

8 The way of peace they know not ; and there is no judgment in their goings : they have made them crooked paths : whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace.

9 ¶ Therefore is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us : we wait for light, but behold obscurity ; for brightness, but we walk in darkness.

10 We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes : we stumble at noon day as in the night ; we are in desolate places as dead men.

CHAP. LIX.

ARGUMENT.—The Jews seem to call God's power into question, because he did not deliver them from their enemies, as he had formerly done. In answer to which cavil, the prophet tells them, it is not defect of power in God, but their own sins which hinder him from showing his former favours toward them. However, he promises that God will at length visit and redeem them, not out of any regard to their merits, but purely for the sake of his own honour, and to make good his former promises.

Ver. 1, 2.] The reason of the continuance of your calamities is not want, either of power in God to deliver you, or of goodness to hear your prayers : but your own iniquities make him a stranger to you, interrupt the correspondence that used to be between God and his people, and stop the course of his blessings.

Ver. 4. None calleth for justice, &c.] There is no consideration had for justice, either in the public judicatories, or in men's private dealings. The arguments taken from right and wrong have no place in resolutions.

They conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity.] They form mischievous designs in their minds, which they afterward put in execution (compare Job xv. 35, Ps. vii. 14).

Ver. 5.] The same sense couched in metaphorical terms ; their villanous contrivances being compared first to a cockatrice's eggs, which are rank poison in themselves, and when they are hatched produce a venomous serpent : and then to a spider's web, both for the artificial fineness of them, and because they are as so many nets to entrap others.

Ver. 6.] Though their contrivances are finely wrought, yet they are too thin and weak to be of any real advantage (see Job viii. 14) : and their works can neither cover nor defend the actors.

Ver. 8. They have made them crooked paths :] They have turned aside out of the way of God's commandments, which are a plain and straight way (compare Ps. cxxv. 5, Prov. ii. 15, iv. 27).

Ver. 9. Therefore is judgment far from us,] Because we have no regard for justice nor honesty, God will not plead our cause against our oppressors.

We wait for light, but behold obscurity ;] We still hope for better times, but are under a cloud, in a dismal condition. Compare lviii. 8, where happiness is expressed by the "breaking forth of light."

Ver. 10. We grope for the wall like the blind,] We are surrounded with darkness, and have no glimmering of light or comfort ; so that we know not which way to turn away ourselves (compare Deut. xxviii. 29).

We are in desolate places as dead men.] We are banished from the world, as the dead that have no longer any portion in it : the same sense is thus expressed, Ps. xlv. 19, "Thou hast smitten us into the place of dragons" (or serpents, that frequent sol-

11 We roar all like bears, and mourn sore like doves: we look for judgment, but there is none; for salvation, but it is far off from us.

12 For our transgressions are multiplied before thee, and our sins testify against us: for our transgressions are with us: and as for our iniquities, we know them;

13 In transgressing and lying against the LORD, and departing away from our God, speaking oppression and revolt, conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood.

14 And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter.

15 Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey: and the LORD saw it, and it displeased him that there was no judgment.

16 ¶ And he saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor: therefore his arm brought salvation unto him; and his righteousness, it sustained him.

itary places: see the note upon xiii. 10), "and covered us with the shadow of death."

Ver. 11. We roar all like bears, and mourn sore like doves:] Sometimes we cry aloud; at other times we bemoan ourselves after a more silent manner (compare xxxviii. 14).

Ver. 12.] Our sins are so public and notorious, that they fly in our faces, as it were, and our conscience gives full evidence against us.

Ver. 13. In transgressing] See lvii. 11.

Ver. 14.] Justice is described as if it were afraid to venture itself among such a crew of miscreants, where truth and integrity can find no admittance, or else are trampled under foot, and treated with the utmost contempt and insolence.

Ver. 16. He saw that there was no man,] The words are parallel with those of Ezek. xxii. 30, "I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land—but I found none." To the same purpose God saith here, that it was just matter of wonder, that scarce a righteous man should be found that might intercede with him by his prayers for the averting the divine judgments (compare lxiv. 7). When things were come to this pass, he wrought for his own name's sake, and was resolved to exert his power for the delivering of his people, not out of any regard to their merits, but purely for his own honour, and to make good his former promises (compare lxiii. 5).

His righteousness, it sustained him.] His justice in protecting the innocent, and punishing the wicked, made him go through with the undertaking, in spite of all opposition.

Ver. 17. The prophet describes God as a warrior completely armed; the two most considerable pieces of armour are those which defend the vital parts, the head and breast. To these he compares God's faithfulness in performing his promises, and that salvation, or deliverance, which he will work for his people.

He put on the garments of vengeance for clothing,] His indignation against his enemies, and his zeal for his own honour (see the note on ix. 7), supplied 17 For he put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation upon his head; and he put on the garments of vengeance for clothing, and was clad with zeal as a cloke.

18 According to their deeds, accordingly he will repay, fury to his adversaries, recompence to his enemies; to the islands he will repay recompence.

19 So shall they fear the name of the LORD from the west, and his glory from the rising of the sun. When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the LORD shall lift up a standard against him.

20 ¶ And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the LORD.

21 As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the LORD; My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the LORD, from henceforth and for ever.

the place of other accoutrements which belong to a soldier.

Ver. 18. To the islands he will pay recompence.] He will severely punish the foreign nations which have been the oppressors of God's people (see ver. 10, 11), and make them feel the same miseries they have inflicted upon others (see the note upon xxi. 2). The Jews call all countries islands which they go to by sea (see note on xi. 11).

Ver. 19. From the west, and—from the rising of the sun.] God's thus appearing in behalf of his people, shall make his name and power known far and near.

When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard.] When nothing seems able to withstand the enemy, but he carries all before him, as the flood overturns a country, then God himself will give him a remarkable check, and visibly interpose in behalf of his oppressed people (compare xxxi. 9).

Ver. 20. The Redeemer shall come to Zion,] This and the following verse are expounded by St. Paul of that general restoration of the Jewish nation, which he assures us shall come to pass in the latter times (see Rom. xi. 26, 27, compare Obad. ver. 17, 21). And the words of the foregoing verse, which speak of God's name being feared from one end of the world to the other, do plainly look that way, as also the following chapter.

Unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob,] God's promises are only made to the penitent (compare lvii. 15, 18, lviii. 8, and see the notes upon xxvii. 12, xlviii. 22, liv. 13).

Ver. 21.] This must be understood of Christ, the great prophet and oracle of the church, who came from heaven to declare unto us the whole counsel of God, and whom we are to hear and obey in all things (compare li. 16, lxi. 1). The words contain a promise to the church, his spiritual children (compare viii. 18), of being "guided by God's Spirit into all truth," and that this Spirit shall "continue with them for ever." Which promise shall receive its utmost completion, when God's "people shall be all righteous, and shall be taught of him" (see liv. 13, lx. 21).

CHAPTER LX.

1 ARISE, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee.

2 For behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the LORD shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

3 And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.

4 Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: all they gather themselves together, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side.

5 Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged; because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee.

6 The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; all they from Sheba shall come: they shall bring gold and incense; and they shall shew forth the praises of the LORD.

7 All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee: they shall come up with acceptance on mine altar, and I will glorify the house of my glory.

8 Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?

9 Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the CHAP. LX.

ARGUMENT.—We may suppose the ground-work of the prophecies, contained in this and the two following chapters, to be the Jews' restoration from captivity: but any discerning reader may easily be satisfied, that the prophet takes occasion from thence to describe the glories of Christ's kingdom, which began upon the first publication of the gospel, but will not be completed till the fulness of the Jews and gentiles are come into the church; which is the general subject of the prophecies which follow to the end of the book. The reasons Mr. White hath advanced against this interpretation, shall be considered under each verse of this chapter, from whence he takes them.

Ver. 1.] It is a usual metaphor to describe happiness by light, and affliction by darkness. So here Jerusalem is bid to arise from the ground or the dust where her afflictions had laid her low, and like the morning star, or sun, to give light to all about her, and communicate to others part of that honour and lustre which she hath received from God, the true sun of righteousness (compare Mal. iv. 2).

Ver. 2, 3.] When ignorance, like a thick darkness, overspreads the world, then shall the light of God's truth, like the "day-spring from on high," diffuse itself over the earth, and excite the gentiles to seek instruction from the church as from an oracle (compare ii. 3).

Ver. 3. And kings to the brightness of thy rising,] The graces and glories of the church shall attract the eyes of kings, and make them willing to become her proselytes (compare xlix. 23).

Ver. 4.] The prophet describes the fulness of the church by the gentiles coming into it, and bringing the dispersed remainder of the Jews along with them (see the note on xi. 12), whom they are said to take the same care of in their journey as a nurse does of a sucking child. For to that sense, I think, the last words of the verse should be rendered "And thy daughters shall be nursed at their side" (compare xlix. 22. Deut. i. 31).

Ver. 5. Then thou shalt see, and flow together,] Thy joy shall break out upon thee like an overflowing river; and the sudden transports of it shall produce an astonishment like that which ariseth from the impressions of fear: for which reason the effects of one passion are ascribed to the other: the prophet Jeremian useth the same metaphor (xxxiii. 9).

"They shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and all the prosperity that I procure unto it." The same figure occurs in Lucretius, lib. ii. init.

———"Ita me quædam divina voluptas Inlicit, atque horror."——

Because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee.] A multitude of people is compared to many waters, xvii. 12, Rev. xvii. 15. Or the words may be understood of the multitude of those that came from the sea, as if the sea had transported all its passengers hither (see ver. 9). Others explain it of the riches which are brought by sea, and dedicated to God's service (see ver. 6), in which sense the word hamon is used, Eccles. v. 10, and so the Septuagint here understand it. The following words explain this of the fulness of the gentiles coming into the church.

The forces of the gentiles] Others render it, "The riches of the gentiles" (see ver. 6, 16, and lxi. 6).

Ver. 6. The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah:] The Arabians had great stocks of camels, and such like beasts of burden (see Judg. i. 5, vii. 12), Ephah was a son of Midian (see Gen. xxv. 4), from whom part of that country had its name.

They shall bring gold and incense;] The conversion of heathen nations is elsewhere expressed by their bringing offerings to God, and dedicating part of their wealth to his service (see xviii. 7, xxiii. 18). This may be farther verified in that glorious state of the church described Rev. xxi. 24, 26.

Ver. 7. All the flocks of Kedar—the rams of Nebaioth] Kedar and Nebaioth were two sons of Ishmael, who settled themselves in Arabia (see Gen. xxv. 13). Their substance did chiefly consist in their cattle, with which they travelled from one place to another, according as they could find pasture (see Judg. vi. 5, and the note upon xxi. 13).

They shall come up with acceptance on mine altar,] This may in some measure be understood of the offerings brought out of the neighbouring countries to the second temple (see the note on xlv. 14). But the whole scope of the chapter plainly regards the coming of the gentiles into the church, and dedicating part of their substance to the service of God: nor is this expression a demonstration to the contrary, as Mr. White too confidently pronounces, inasmuch as nothing is more usual than for the prophets to describe the state of the Christian church, by representations taken from the Jewish temple ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee.

10 And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee; for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee.

11 Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought.

12 For the nation and kingdom that will not and service (see the notes on xix. 19, lvi. 8, lxvi. 23).

Ver. 8.] A flock of birds resembles a dark cloud: so the prophet here compares the multitudes of people that flock to the church, to a flock of pigeons that fly to their dove-houses.

Ver. 9. The isles that wait for me,] Compare xlii. 4, li. 5. The expression denotes their readiness to embrace the gospel whenever the means of grace are offered to them. So Christ is said to be "the desire of all nations," Hag. ii. 7, as he that alone could answer all their wishes and expectations.

The ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far,] Ships of Tarshish mean any ships of trade or commerce (see the note on ii. 16). These, the text saith, shall be principally subservient to God's design in bringing the sons of Zion (which, taken in a mystical sense, is the mother of all believers, Gal. iv. 26) from distant countries, who will bring their free-will offerings and religious acknowledgments along with them (see ver. 6). The words are an allusion to the law which enjoined that "none should appear empty before the Lord," at the times of the solemn festivals (Deut. xvi. 16). To which custom of going up to Jerusalem at those solemn times, the expressions, so often found in the prophets, allude, of the "gentiles seeking after the Lord," of their "going up to Jerusalem," and the like (see the note on ii. 3). So that it is a great mistake in Mr. White, to conclude from such-like expressions in this chapter, that the prophet's words cannot be expounded of the gentiles coming into the church.

Unto the name of the Lord thy God,] God chose the temple in Jerusalem "to place his name there" (1 Kings viii. 29); and this temple was a type of the Christian church (see Ezek. xlviii. 35, 2 Cor. vi. 16, 2 Thess. ii. 4).

Ver. 10. The sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee;] This may be, in some measure, fulfilled in the assistance which Cyrus and his successors gave to the restoring and re-edifying of the city and temple (see note on xlv. 14). But the words received a farther accomplishment in the honours which the gentiles (commonly called strangers by the Jews, see lvi. 3) and their kings paid to the church of Christ (compare xlix. 23, Zech. vi. 15), and may yet receive a farther accomplishment (see Rev. xxi. 24).

In my favour have I had mercy on thee.] I will abundantly recompense thee for the afflictions which I have brought upon thee (compare liv. 7, 8).

Ver. 11. It is a sign of a settled peace, and that there is no fear of an enemy, when the gates of a city stand always open (compare Ezek. xxxviii. 11). So the poet describes a profound peace, by apertis otia portis. The phrase signifies withal, that there shall be such a confluence of people to the church, and serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted.

13 The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious.

14 The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the Lord, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.

15 Whereas thou hast been forsaken and even of the highest rank and dignity, that the gates must continually stand open to give them admittance.

Ver. 12.] This must relate to the latter days, as the scripture calls them, when the church shall become "a great mountain, and break in pieces all the kingdoms of the earth," according to Daniel's prophecy (Dan. ii. 35, 44), and then the faithful shall "have power over the nations, and rule" the refractory "with a rod of iron," as it is foretold Rev. ii. 26, 27.

Ver. 13.] Lebanon was reckoned one of the pleasantest parts of Judea (see xxxiii. 9, xxxv. 2): and was particularly beautiful for its tall cedars (see xxxvii. 24). So the expression denotes, that the cedars, and whatever other trees grow in Lebanon, shall contribute to the re-edifying and beautifying God's temple, which is called here the "place of God's feet," as the ark is elsewhere called his footstool, because the divine Shechinah, or glory, sat between the two cherubims, which were placed over the ark (see Ps. cxxxii. 7). This implies, in the spiritual sense, everything that tends to the adorning and perfecting the church, which is called the house and building of God (see 1 Tim. iii. 15, 1 Cor. iii. 9, Eph. ii. 20, and compare Zech. vi. 12, 13).

Ver. 14. The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee;] They shall acknowledge the errors of their fathers, and instead of being persecutors, shall become proselytes.

They that despised thee, &c.] See the note on xlix. 23, and compare Rev. iii. 9.

The city of the Lord, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.] Mr. White is pleased to say, in his argument upon this chapter, that the "church cannot, with any propriety of speech, be called the city of the Lord, or the Zion of the Holy One of Israel." This must seem a strange assertion to any one that hath read the New Testament, where the church, as consisting of all its members, both militant and triumphant, and united together under God and Christ, is expressly called "mount Zion, the city of the living God, and the heavenly Jerusalem;" of which the city on earth called by that name was a figure, Heb. xii. 22. "The Lamb," i. e. Christ, is said to "stand upon mount Zion," Rev. xiv. 1. Christ is called the "corner-stone placed in Zion," whereon the church is built and supported, 1 Pet. ii. 6, and he is called the Deliverer, or Redeemer, "that shall come out of Zion," Rom. xi. 26.

Ver. 15.] This may in the first sense be fitly applied to Jerusalem, which, during the captivity, lay desolate, and was the subject of scorn and reproach to all her neighbours (see Lam. ii. 15): but afterward recovered some degree of her ancient glory. And may be applied to the church and nation of the Jews, whenever God shall please to restore them, after their having been so long rejected by him (compare lxi. 4, 7). But some of the expressions hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations.

16 Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shalt suck the breasts of kings: and thou shalt know that I the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty One of Jacob.

17 For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron: I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness.

18 Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise.

used in this verse, as well as the context, do plainly look further; and import, that although the true professors of Christianity, in several ages and places, have been the subject of men's scorn and contempt (see Matt. x. 22, Luke vi. 22); and the church itself is to continue for some ages in a mournful and sackcloth condition (see Rev. xi. 3): yet it shall at last surmount all these difficulties, and be placed out of the reach of the malice of its enemies.

Ver. 16. Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles.] Ye shall be nourished with their riches, as a child is with the breast (see ver. 6, xlix. 23, lxi. 6, lxvi. 12).

Ver. 17. For brass I will bring gold.] A description of golden days, as we commonly call them: and as it is said of Solomon's times, that gold and silver were so plenty, there was no use made of inferior metals (1 Kings x. 21, 27); in pursuance of the same metaphor, the New Jerusalem is described as made of pure gold (Rev. xxi. 18).

Thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness.] Peace here is put for men of peace, as the word is used Ps. cxx. 7, and righteousness for righteous men, as our translators render the word, xli. 2. The prophet says, that in those happy days he hath been describing, the very officers of the public revenues, and collectors of the taxes, shall be lovers of peace, and observers of justice: a sort of men generally blamed for being guilty of exaction and oppression (see Luke iii. 13): the same sense is more plainly expressed in the following words.

Ver. 18. Violence shall no more be heard.] Thou shalt be secure from violence and injustice at home, and from invasion or war from abroad.

But thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise.] Or, as the sense might more plainly be expressed, "Thou shalt call Salvation thy walls, and Praise thy gates:" God's protection and salvation shall be unto thee instead of walls and bulwarks, 19 The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory.

20 Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.

21 Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified.

22 A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time.

and the praises which thou continually offerest up to him for his mercies, shall supply the room of gates and bars (compare xxvi. 1, Ps. xxxii. 7).

Ver. 19.] God's favour and the light of his countenance shall give thee greater comfort and lustre, than the light of the sun and moon doth to the world: which promise will be fully verified in the state of the New Jerusalem, where there will be no vicissitude of day and night, for the "glory of God, and of the Lamb, are the light thereof" (Rev. xxi. 23, xxii. 6.)

Ver. 20.] Thou shalt see no more sorrow nor affliction, which are often expressed by darkness, and the sun and moon's withdrawing themselves (see the notes upon xiii. 10).

Ver. 21. Thy people also shall be all righteous.] Compare i. 26. This character can belong only to the New Jerusalem (see Rev. xxi. 27). For in the present state of the church, the chaff and tares will always be mixed with the wheat, till Christ come to part them (see Matt. iii. 10, xiii. 30).

They shall inherit the land for ever.] This must be meant of the blessed millennium, when Christ and his saints shall reign upon earth (see Matt. v. 5, Rev. v. 10, xx. 4, xxi. 3, 4, 7).

The branch of my planting, the work of my hands.] God's elect, those whom he hath called by an extraordinary measure of grace, and appointed to be "heirs of salvation," are styled "his own plantation," and "the work of his hands:" regeneration being frequently called a new creation, because men's justification and salvation is wholly owing to God's grace and goodness (see xxix. 23, xlv. 11, Matt. xv. 13, John xv. 2, Eph. ii. 10).

Ver. 22. This glorious kingdom of Christ shall take its rise from small beginnings: so Daniel describes Christ's kingdom as a stone, which in process of time became "a great mountain, and filled the whole earth" (Dan. ii. 35), which will be verified in God's due time.

CHAPTER LXI.

1 THE Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to

CHAP. LXI.

ARGUMENT.—The same subject is still prosecuted, and Christ is introduced declaring his commission, full of grace and comfort to his church, with particular promises of grace to the Jewish church, whom he promises to receive into favour again, after she had been a long time rejected and forsaken; who thereupon is represented as in a transport of joy and thankfulness.

Ver. 1. The Lord hath anointed me.] Anointing denotes some extraordinary gift or grace bestowed upon men by God, because the three great offices of king, priest, and prophet, were conferred by this ceremony. The descent of the Holy Ghost upon the human nature the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound;

2 To proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn;

3 To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; That they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the LORD, that he might be glorified.

of our Saviour, supplied this external unction (see Acts x. 38), and qualified him for the office of a prophet beyond all others that were before him, because he had the Spirit given to him "without measure" (John iii. 34), and in this respect was "anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows" (see the note upon xi. 2).

We have Christ's own authority for applying this text to himself (Luke iv. 18).

To preach good tidings unto the meek;] Or, "To preach the gospel to the poor," as the words are rendered by the Septuagint, whom the evangelists follow (Luke iv. 18, Matt. xi. 5). The humble and poor in spirit have a peculiar title to the privileges of the gospel (see the notes on xi. 4, xxvi. 6). And persons of a mean condition, such whose affections were not too much set upon the glories of the world, were those who most readily embraced it, when it was first preached (see 1 Cor. i. 26, 27, Jam. ii. 5).

He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted;] To give ease to those that are grieved and wearied with the burden of their sins: a metaphor taken from surgeons binding up wounds (see i. 6).

The opening of the prison to them that are bound;] See the notes upon xlii. 7. The Septuagint render the latter part of the sentence, "recovering of sight to the blind," and so St. Luke reads; which interpretation several learned men have shown to be very agreeable to the original.

Ver. 2. To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord;] In allusion to the proclaiming the year of jubilee, which was done by sound of trumpet (Lev. xxv. 9), when there was a general release of all manner of servitude, debts, and obligations (Jer. xxxiv. 8); a type of that freedom which Christ hath purchased for us.

The day of vengeance of our God;] Mr. White observes, that our Saviour takes no notice of this passage in his recital of this prophecy (Luke iv. 18), from whence he concludes, that he is no way concerned in it: it was not, indeed, the business of Christ's first coming, to take vengeance of his enemies, and for that reason he might not mention it at his first entrance into his office; though we find, in several of his discourses, he threatened the Jews with destruction for their rejecting him (see Matt. xxi. 43, 44, xxii. 7, xxiii. 36); and he calls the destruction of Jerusalem "the days of vengeance" (Luke xxi. 22), the very expression of the text; which does most properly relate to his second coming, when he will not only reward his servants, but justify their innocence, by the terrible judgments he will inflict upon his and their enemies (compare xxxiv. 8, lxiii. 4, lxvi. 14, Deut. xxxii. 36, 43, Jer. li. 9, 10, Mal. iv. 3, Luke xix. 27, 2 Thess. i. 6, 7).

To comfort all that mourn;] That mourn for their own iniquities, and for the public sins and calamities (see the notes on lvii. 18). In like manner, our Saviour's sermon upon the mount begins with promising comfort to those that mourn (Matt. v. 4).

Ver. 3. To appoint [comfort] unto them that mourn

Vol. III.—46

4 ¶ And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

5 And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vine-dressers.

6 But ye shall be named the priests of the LORD: men shall call you the Ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.

in Zion;] A description of the change that should be in their outward habit and appearance, in proportion to the change of their circumstances. Whereas, whilst they were mourners, they used to put ashes on their heads (see 2 Sam. xiii. 19, Lam. ii. 10); now they should wear a crown or diadem (for the word pear signifies an ornament proper for the head, Ezek. xxiv. 17) in token of their joy (see the note on xxxv. 10). They should likewise anoint themselves, which they abstained from in times of mourning (see Dan. x. 3, Matt. vi. 17); and change their mourning garments for festival ones (see Zech. iii. 3—5, Luke xv. 22).

Trees of righteousness;] The righteous are elsewhere resembled to fruitful and flourishing trees (see Ps. i. 3, xcii. 12).

The planting of the Lord;] See lx. 21.

Ver. 4;] We may interpret this to a spiritual sense, of repairing what is decayed by ignorance and corruption (see the notes upon xlix. 8): but if we suppose the Jews, after their conversion, to return into their own land, an opinion countenanced by several prophecies of the Old Testament (see the notes upon xi. 11), we may fitly explain this text of their reedifying their ancient habitations (compare Ezek. xxxvi. 33—36). And this interpretation agrees very well with the following words, "the desolations of many generations."

Ver. 5;] By strangers and aliens may be meant those gentiles who are "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise," as St. Paul calls them, Eph. ii. 12 (compare lxii. 8). And the promise of "having power over the nations," is not only made to Christ, but likewise to his faithful servants (see Rev. ii. 26, 27, and the note upon xiv. 2).

Ver. 6. Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord, &c.;] If we suppose these words contain a peculiar promise to the Jews, after their conversion, they import, that God will restore to them that honourable title of being a kingdom of priests, formerly given to them (Exod. xix. 6), and admit them to a near attendance upon himself: accordingly some learned men suppose the Jewish church represented in the Revelation, by the "four-and-twenty elders" (alluding to the four-and-twenty courses of the priests), clothed in white raiment (as priests), and having on their heads crowns of gold," as advanced to a regal dignity (Rev. iv. 8): but this privilege of being "priests to God," does in some degree belong to all Christians (see 1 Pet. ii. 5); especially when they shall come to be wholly freed from the bondage of sin, and continually employed in God's service (see Rev. v. 10, xx. 6).

In their glory shall ye boast yourselves;] All that cost and riches, which the gentile converts shall dedicate to the service of God, shall redound to your honour and the glory of that religion which you teach and profess (compare lx. 5, 6, 16, lxvi. 12, Rev. xxi. 24).

But I must not conceal an ingenious exposition of these two verses, communicated to me by a learned 7 ¶ For your shame ye shall have double; and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double: everlasting joy shall be unto them.

8 For I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt-offering; and I will direct their work in truth, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

9 And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed.

friend, to this purpose. First of all (so he interprets and in the beginning of the fifth verse), the gentiles shall minister, and feed the flock, i. e. the church; whose office is likewise expressed here, by their being ploughmen and vine-dressers; as the church is called God's vineyard (v. 7), and believers, his husbandry, or tillage (1 Cor. iii. 9). Afterward (so he explains the copulative particle van at the beginning of the sixth verse; in which sense it is sometimes taken; see 2 Kings iv. 35, Ps. xci. 16, you Jews shall be converted and become ministers of the church, and the gentiles shall make a plentiful provision for you, as the priests under the law were maintained by the sacrifices and offerings which were brought to the temple; and yourselves, having been made partakers of that grace and knowledge, for which the gentiles so much value themselves, you shall become the glorious instruments of converting the remainder of them, who as yet continue in unbelief (see lxvi. 19, 20).

Ver. 7. For your shame ye shall have double.] An allusion to God's blessing Job after his afflictions, when "he gave him double to what he had before" (Job xlii. 10, compare Zech. ix. 12). Hereby ye shall have abundant recompense for the shame and reproach ye underwent during your long rejection (see liv. 4).

Therefore in their land shall they possess the double.] This double honour and reward mentioned in the foregoing sentence. As the first born had a double share in his father's estate (Deut. xxi. 17), so the Jews, when converted to the Christian faith, shall recover their birthright which they had forfeited by their infidelity, as Esau did, and be esteemed the first-born, or elder brethren, in the church of God. Accordingly some learned men, who expound the elders in the Revelation of the Jewish believers (see the note upon ver. 6), observe, that in those visions of the church which relate to the times antecedent to the general conversion of the Jews, the elders are placed after the four living creatures, as having lost their dignity and precedency (see Rev. v. 8, 11, xiv. 3).

Some translate the whole verse thus, "Instead of your double (or re-iterated) shame and confusion, they shall rejoice in their portion; therefore they shall possess their land a second time (so the Septuagint render the words), everlasting joy shall be unto them;" i. e. they shall no more be driven out of it (compare lx. 15).

Ver. 8. I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt-offering;] God saith at the end of the verse, that he "will make an everlasting covenant with them," which must be understood of the gospel (see lv. 3). To the tenor of that covenant, consisting of inward righteousness (see Jer. xxxi. 33), he opposes that outward ceremonial service prescribed by the former covenant, which very often had no inward devotion accompanying it. Nay, some were so presumptuous, as to think they could propitiate God Almighty, by offering to him part of what they had got by deceit and violence.

I will direct their work in truth,] I will give them

10 I will greatly-rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

11 For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations.

grace to serve me in spirit and in truth; or, as the words may be translated, "I will give them their reward faithfully." The Hebrew word penulah signifying both work and reward (see xl. 10, lxii. 11).

Ver. 9. Their seed shall be known among the Gentiles.] They shall be illustrious or remarkable among the gentile Christians (so the word known is used, Ps. lxxvii. 1. Prov. xxxi. 23); they shall be acknowledged for God's ancient people, to whom all the promises of the gospel were made, and to whom they principally belong (see Acts iii. 26, xiii. 46); they shall be esteemed as the first-born, or the elder brethren in the church; and this shall make them amends for the shame they underwent before (see ver. 7, and the note there).

Ver. 10.] The Jewish church is here introduced as speaking (see note upon lxiii. 1) and returning her thanks to God for these great favours, that he hath advanced her and her children to such honour after their dispersion, and thereby hath made her glorious in the eyes of the world (ver. 9, compare xlix. 18), and hath given her occasion of perpetual joy and triumph, which useth to be expressed by putting on the richest and costliest garments (see ver. 3). This seems to relate to the times of the marriage of the Messiah with the Jewish synagogue, of which their cabalistical writers speak so much (see Bishop Patrick's Preface to his exposition on the Canticles): or rather, to his marriage with the whole church, both of Jews and gentiles (see Rev. xix. 7). "The garments of salvation," and the "robe of righteousness," allude to the high-priest's robes, which were made for "glory and beauty," Exod. xxviii. 2 (compare Ps. cxxxii. 9, 16). "The robe of righteousness" is an allusion to the linen ephod, an emblem of righteousness and holiness (see Rev. xix. 8); as also of joy and gladness (see Eccles. ix. 8): which is likewise denoted by the "garments of salvation," i. e. such festival attire as should testify their joy in God's salvation. This habit very fitly belongs to those who are named to be "priests of the Lord" (ver. 6), and the word which our translation renders decked himself, properly signifies a priest's habiting himself with the ornaments proper to his office.

As a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.] So the New Jerusalem is described as "a bride adorned for her husband," Rev. xxi. 2 (compare lxii. 4, 5).

Ver. 11.] As surely as the earth in due time brings forth its plants, and a garden its seeds, so surely will God make the salvation of the Jewish church and people remarkable before all the world, and make it matter of "praise in the earth" (lxii. 7). Righteousness is sometimes equivalent to happiness, or salvation (see note upon lxii. 1): or if we take it in the common sense of the word, to which the "robe of righteousness," mentioned in the foregoing verse, does very well agree, then the sense is, that when holiness and goodness flourish, this redounds to the praise and honour of God, who will then be glorified by all men.

CHAPTER LXII.

1 FOR Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.

2 And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory : and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the LORD shall name.

3 Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the LORD, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

4 Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken ; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate : but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah, and thy land Beulah : for the LORD delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

5 ¶ For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee : and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night : ye that make mention of the LORD, keep not silence,

7 And give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

8 The LORD hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength, Surely I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies ; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast laboured :

9 But they that have gathered it shall eat it,

CHAP. LXII.

ARGUMENT.—The same subject is still continued, and the former promises of restoring the Jewish church and nation are again confirmed by a solemn oath of God's (ver. 8), which to me is an evident proof, that this prophecy relates to a scene of affairs that is still future.

Ver. 1.] The prophet speaks here in the person of the Messias, as he did at the beginning of the last chapter, and saith that he will never cease interceding with God, till the redemption of Israel be brought to pass (compare ver. 6, 7, of this chapter).

Ibid. and ver. 2. Until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, &c. Till the glory and salvation, with which God will honour it, be illustrious in the eyes of all the world (compare lx. 1—3). Righteousness is elsewhere joined with salvation, as equivalent to it (see xlv. 13, lxi. 10) ; as it is joined with glory, in the following verse, to the same sense (see likewise xlviii. 18, liv. 17).

Thou shalt be called by a new name, That of Hephzi-bah, mentioned ver. 4 (compare likewise lxxv. 15). Giving new names to persons denotes the altering their state and condition (see Gen. xxxii. 28, Hos. i. 6, ii. 1).

Ver. 3. A crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, Or rather, “by the hand (or power) of the Lord.” A crown being the most glorious part of royal attire, whatever is most precious, honourable, or ornamental, is signified by that name (see Job xxxi. 36, Zech. ix. 16, 1 Thess. ii. 19). Or the phrase may mean, that God will make Jerusalem his bride (see the following verse, and lxi. 10). For it was the custom to put a crown upon the head of the bride and bridegroom at the time of their marriage (see Cant. iii. 11, Ezek. xvi. 8, 12).

Ver. 4.] The covenant relation between God and his people, is represented by his being their husband (see liv. 5, Jer. iii. 15). This title includes both love and protection : but when God forsook them, and delivered them up for a prey to their enemies ; this was a sort of divorcing himself from them, which is implied in the word azubah, forsaken (see xlix. 14, liv. 6). And when the land lay desolate, it was in a state of widowhood (see liv. 1). But now God saith, he will renew his former love towards them, and “take delight in them, as a bridegroom doth in his bride” (ver. 5). “Their land shall be married” to him again, and no longer in a state of widowhood and desolation, but inhabited and replenished with people ; for so the Septuagint translate the word tibbael (see the following verse).

Ver. 5.] The word marry is not to be taken strictly, for it would be improper to say that children married their mother ; but as it implies living with their mother, now she is owned by her husband : her former desolations implying both loss of children and widowhood (see xlvii. 9, xlix. 21).

Ver. 6.] The word shomerim doth properly signify those priests and Levites who kept watch day and night about the temple ; and some of them at certain hours sung psalms of prayer and praise (see 1 Chron. ix. 27, 33, xxiii. 32, 2 Chron. viii. 14, xiii. 11, Ps. cxxxiv. 2). This their office or charge is called mishmereth in the Hebrew, a word derived from the same root with shomerim. To these the prophet compares those pious persons, who will in all ages be importunate with God for completing this blessing.

Ibid. and ver. 7. Ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence, &c. The marginal reading is better, “Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, keep not silence.” The expression alludes to the same office of the priests and Levites, who by their daily prayers and intercessions put God in mind of the state of the church, and continually importuned him for the welfare thereof. The scripture elsewhere speaks of God after the manner of men, as one that might be overcome by importunity (see Luke xi. 8, 9, xviii. 5—7).

Ver. 8.] Lifting up the hand was a ceremony used in swearing (see Deut. xxxii. 40, Ezek. xx. 5, 15). And here God swears by that very hand which uses to be held up at the taking of an oath, i. e. by his power and might, as it follows, that the enemies of his people should never interrupt that peace and plenty which he gives them, but they should quietly enjoy his blessings with hearts full of thankfulness for them. This must relate to some happier condition than the Jews enjoyed after their return from captivity, when their enemies frequently invaded them, and at last the Romans destroyed both their temple and nation. And the oath which ushers in this promise, proves that it will be exactly and punctually performed.

Ver. 9.] The expressions allude to the ordinances of the law, which required the people to spend their first-fruits, and other hallowed things, at the temple, in a thankful acknowledgment to God for his blessings (see Deut. xii. 11, 12, xiv. 23, 26).

and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.

10 ¶ Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people.

Ver. 10. Prepare you the way of the people, &c.] The prophet, relying upon God's oath (ver. 8), speaks of the general restoration of the Jews, as if it were actually a doing; and exhorts those nations, through whose territories they were to pass in their return homeward, to go out of their cities and repair the roads, raising causeways in the lower grounds, and levelling the rough and stony places (compare xl. 3, lvii. 14). By this figure the prophet signifies a removal of all obstacles which might hinder their return.

Lift up a standard for the people.] To gather the dispersed (see xi. 12).

11 Behold, the LORD hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.

12 And they shall call them, The holy people, The redeemed of the LORD: and thou shalt be called, Sought out, A city not forsaken.

Ver. 11. The Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world.] He hath caused the great trumpet to sound, as a signal, to gather the dispersed Jews together (see the notes upon xxvii. 13); or he hath sent preachers of the gospel to all parts of the world, in order to the conversion of the Jews.

Thy salvation cometh.] Thy Saviour cometh (compare xl. 9, 10, Zech. ix. 9, Rev. xxii. 12).

Ver. 12. The holy people,] As being taken into covenant again (see the note upon ver. 4).

Sought out, A city not forsaken.] Or rather, Sought to, a city had in great request (compare ver. 4, and Jer. xxx. 17).

CHAPTER LXIII.

1 Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.

CHAP. LXIII.

ARGUMENT.—The last three chapters contained a description of the glorious state of the church in the latter days, when it should be enlarged by the conversion of the Jews, and the fulness of the gentiles. Now the prophet comes to describe the “day of vengeance,” mentioned lxi. 2. The beginning of the chapter is by way of dialogue between the prophet, or the church, and Christ, where the latter is described as returning in triumph from the slaughter of his enemies; which seems to be much the same scene as was represented ch. xxxiv. (see likewise Joel iii. 12—14). Then follow, from the seventh verse of this chapter to the end of the sixty-fourth, devout meditations upon God's former mercies to his people, mixed with expostulations for his forsaking them, and casting them off, and humble acknowledgments of their sins, which deserved such treatment.

Ver. 1. Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah?] The Idumeans joined with the enemies of the Jews, in bringing on the destruction of Jerusalem at the time of the captivity; for which they are severely reproved by the prophets, and threatened with utter excision (see Ps. cxxxvii. 7, Obad. ver. 10, &c. Ezek. xxv. 12): which accordingly came to pass (see Mal. i. 3). But I have already observed, in the note upon xi. 14, that it is usual for the prophets to denote the enemies of the church in general, by the name of some country, which was remarkable for its hatred towards the Jewish nation, as the Idumeans were.

And the prophet seems to take a hint from some remarkable calamity that befell the Edomites, to describe some more general judgment that should be inflicted upon the enemies of God's church and truth. Compare ch. xxxiv. where I observed upon the fifth and sixth verses, that the words Edom and Bozrah

2 Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat?

3 I have trodden the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will may be taken in an appellative sense, so as to denote in general, a field of blood, or place of slaughter. The word Edom signifies originally red as blood, and Bozrah denotes a vintage, which, in the prophetic idiom, imports God's vengeance upon the wicked (see Lam. i. 15, Joel iii. 13, Rev. xiv. 19, xix. 15). The prophets often apply the names of places to the subject-matter they are treating of: so, Joel iii. 15, the nations are summoned to the “valley of Jehoshaphat,” because the word Jehoshaphat signifies God's judgment. Again, Hos. i. 5, 11, “the valley of Jezreel,” and “the day of Jezreel,” are an allusion to the etymology of the word Jezreel, which signifies the arm of God, or the seed of God (see likewise Mic. i. 10, 14, and lxxv. 11, 12, of this prophecy).

Travelling in the greatness of his strength?] Like a general marching in triumph at the head of his army, and carrying tokens of victory upon his raiment. Some explain the word toch in an active sense, as implying the driving his enemies before him, and bearing down all opposition.

I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.] Christ's answer to the foregoing question: I am come now to fulfil all my promises, and deliver you from your enemies. Several parts of the prophetic books are written in the form of a dramatic poem, where several persons are introduced, speaking by turns, and answering one another: so, for example, ch. lxi. Christ is introduced at the beginning of the chapter, making gracious promises to the church, to which the church answers with suitable returns of joy and thankfulness (ver. 10). So the Song of Solomon is a divine dialogue between the bridegroom, the spouse, and a chorus of virgins; and in the Revelation, Christ is often introduced as speaking in that sacred drama. This observation will sometimes account for the altering of the prophet's style from the first to the second or third person.

Ver. 2. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel,] The dialogue is still continued, and this question is tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment.

4 For the day of vengeance is mine in heart, and the year of my redeemed is come.

5 And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me; and my fury, it upheld me.

6 And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth.

7 ¶ I will mention the lovingkindnesses of the LORD, and the praises of the LORD, according to all that the LORD hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his lovingkindnesses.

8 For he said. Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour.

9 In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old.

proposed by the church, or the prophet in her name. Christ, in like manner, is described as "clothed in a garment dipped in blood" (Rev. xix. 13).

Ver. 3. I have trodden the winepress alone:] This answer of Christ exactly agrees with what is said of him in the same chapter of the Revelation, ver. 15, that "he treads the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God" (see the note upon ver. 1). [Of the people] See the note upon ver. 5.

Ver. 4.] See the notes upon xxxiv. 8, lxi. 2.

Ver. 5. I looked, and there was none to help:] Things were come to that extremity, that there was no appearance of succour by any human means. Those who, by their office and character, ought to have stood up in defence of oppressed truth and innocence, even they, contrary to what might have been justly expected, betrayed so good a cause, or had not the courage to defend it. So that it was time for God to interpose, and to appear in defence of his own honour and people (compare lxi. 16).

My fury, it upheld me.] I was resolved to vindicate my own honour, and my zeal and concern for my people made me go through with the undertaking, in spite of all opposition. Compare Zech. viii. 2, where God saith, "I was jealous for Zion with great fury."

Ver. 6. I will tread down the people in mine anger.] Both the Septuagint and vulgar Latin translate this, and the following sentences of this verse, in the preterperfect tense, "I have trodden down," &c. which agrees better with the context; where Christ is described as having his garments already stained with blood.

Make them drunk in my fury.] God's judgments are often represented by a cup of intoxicating liquor, because they astonish men, and bereave them of their usual discretion (see note on li. 17).

Ver. 7.] Here the prophet, or the church, speaks, and breaks out into a grateful acknowledgment of God's former mercies to his people, which are so many earnest of his goodness for the time to come.

Ver. 8. Surely they are my people.] They are the people with whose ancestors I made an everlasting covenant, and they have a title to my favour, as well as their forefathers (see Rom. xi. 28, 29). And now their afflictions have so far corrected them, that they will not prevaricate or apostatize any more. So he became their Saviour, as he had been in former times.

[Children that will not lie.] God is introduced as speaking after the manner of men, and expecting what effect his gracious dealings might in all reason have produced. Compare Zeph. iii. 7, and see the note there.]

Ver. 9. In all their affliction he was afflicted.] When there was a necessity of punishing them in order to their amendment, he had a compassionate sense of the evils which they suffered (see Deut. xxxii. 36, Judg. x. 16, Ps. cvi. 41, 45). The Hebrew copies have a different reading here; the text reads lo, with an aleph, which signifies not, and the margin reads lo, with a vau, which signifies him: our translation follows the marginal reading, the Septuagint that of the text; and joining the latter part of the eighth verse with the ninth, they translate the whole period very agreeably to the present Hebrew text, thus, "He was their Saviour out of all their trouble: it was not a messenger, nor an angel, but himself delivered them:" which translation agrees very well with the sense of the original, as will appear by the following note.

The angel of his presence saved them.] The angel, who conducted them by the pillar of cloud and of fire, was no other than the Logos, or second person of the blessed Trinity, according to the sense of the ancient Jews, as Dr. Alix hath proved at large, in his Judgment of the Jewish Church against the Unitarians, ch. 13—15. This divine person is sometimes indeed called an angel, as Exod. xiv. 19; but, at other times, the incommunicable name of Jehovah is given to him. So Exod. xiii. 21, it is said expressly, that the "Lord went before the people in a pillar of cloud by day, and of fire by night" (compare Exod. xiv. 24). In the same book God saith of him, that "his name is in him," i. e. his godhead (xxiii. 21). Again, he is called God's presence, Exod. xxxiii. 14, an expression parallel to that of the text. So Deut. iv. 37, we read, "God chose their seed after them, and brought thee out by his presence;" for so the Hebrew bepanau plainly signifies: but our translators have made no sense at all of the place, by rendering it, "and brought thee out in his sight." God, to show his anger for the sin of the golden calf, threatens the people, that he would not lead them himself, but only send his angel with them (Exod. xxxiii. 2, 3). At this the people were much disheartened (ver. 4); and Moses earnestly intercedes with God, that the divine presence might still accompany them (ver. 15); i. e. that God would continue to go before them in the pillar of cloud and of fire. According to this interpretation, St. Paul saith, that the "Jews tempted Christ in the wilderness" (1 Cor. x. 9), meaning the Logos, who, after his assuming human nature, was Christ. When the tabernacle was set up, this Shecinah, or token of God's presence, took up his residence over the ark (Numb. vii. 89), and the cloud covered the top of the tabernacle (Exod. xl. 34, 38). And then the Lord is said "to come down in the pillar of cloud" (Numb. xii. 5), and solemn adoration is paid to him, when this symbol of the divine presence appeared (Exod. xxxiii. 10, Numb. xvi. 19, 22). All these circumstances laid together, prove that the person who led the people through the wilderness could be no created being, though he is sometimes called an angel, because he took upon him the office and ministry of angels, as he afterward took upon him the "form of a servant." But in the text he is styled, an

10 ¶ But they rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit: therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.

11 Then he remembered the days of old, Moses, and his people, saying, Where is he that brought them up out of the sea with the shepherd of his flock? where is he that put his holy Spirit within him?

12 That led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm, dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name?

13 That led them through the deep, as an horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble?

14 As a beast goeth down into the valley, the Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest: so didst thou lead thy people, to make thyself a glorious name.

15 ¶ Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory: where is thy zeal and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels and of thy mercies toward me? are they restrained?

16 Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou, O Lord, art our father, our redeemer; thy name is from everlasting.

17 ¶ O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways, and hardened our hearts from thy fear? Return for thy servants' sake, the tribes of thine inheritance.

18 The people of thy holiness have possessed a distinguished manner, the "Angel of God's presence," and in Malachi, the "angel of the covenant" (Mal. iii. 1); for so the words should be translated.

He bare them,] See the note on xlv. 3.

Ver. 10.] God's Spirit strove with the men that lived before the flood (Gen. vi. 3, 1 Pet. iii. 19); the same good Spirit directed Moses and the elders that had the government of the Jews in the wilderness (see the following verse here, Numb. xi. 17, and Neh. ix. 20). Therefore, the people's frequent murmurings and rebellions were not so much against them, "as against the Lord," as Moses truly upbraids them, Exod. xvi. 8.

Ver. 11. Then he remembered the days of old,] God is represented by an elegant figure, as recollecting with himself what he had done for his people, and using that as a motive why he should still own and defend them. The same argument is urged by Moses, Exod. xxxii. 11, 12, Numb. xiv. 13, 14, &c. or the word he may be understood of Israel, as remembering God's peculiar providence to their fathers, and then expostulating with him under their long captivity, in the following words (ver. 15, &c.).

With the shepherd of his flock?] Or, "With the shepherds of his flock," as the margin reads, i. e. Moses and Aaron (see Ps. lxxvii. 5, 20).

Where is he that put his holy Spirit within him?] That gave his spirit to Moses and the seventy elders, to direct them in the government of his people (see Numb. xi. 17, Neh. ix. 20); and afterward sent them prophets to lead and instruct them (compare Hag. ii. 5).

Ver. 13.] As a horse goes or carries a man upon plain ground without tripping. The wilderness sometimes signifies the plain, or champaign country, and is opposed to the mountains (see Jer. ix. 10, Lam. v. 19, Joel i. 19).

Ver. 14.] As a beast goes down to his pasture; or as a camel or such-like beast of burden travels through a champaign country; so the Spirit of the Lord conducted the people of Israel in the promised land of rest and security (see Dent. xii. 9). The verb ijarad signifies simply to go, or go forward, as well as to go down (see Gen. xliii. 5, 1 Sam. xxix. 4, xxx. 15, 16, 2 Kings ii. 2).

Ver. 15.] Where is thy love and thy concern for thy people (see ver. 5), and the power thou usedst to exert for their deliverance? Where is the yearning of thy bowels, i. e. thy tender compassions and mercies which thou formerly showedst towards me, and which the holy writers compare to the affection a mother bears to her children (see xlix. 15, Jer. xxxi. 20, Hos. xi. 8).

Ver. 16. Doubtless thou art our father,] Our only hope is in the relation we have to thee, that thou hast vouchsafed to call thyself our father (see Dent. xxxii. 6, 1 Chron. xxix. 10, Mal. i. 6, ii. 10, John viii. 39, 41). For it is in vain to boast ourselves that we are children of Abraham or Jacob; they neither know our condition, nor, if they did, can they afford us any relief.

Thy name is from everlasting,] See the note upon ver. 19.

Ver. 17. Why hast thou made us to err from thy ways,] The words might better have been rendered, "Why hast thou suffered us to err from thy ways?" For the form called hiphil in Hebrew, often denotes only permission, and is rendered elsewhere to that sense by our translators: so Ps. cxix. 10, "O let me not wander [or go wrong] from thy commandments;" where the verb is in hiphil: and again, Prov. x. 3, "The Lord will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish:" where the verb is in the same form. Thus we are to understand the same kind of expression, Ps. cxli. 4, "Incline not my heart to any evil thing:" so our new translation renders the verb; but the old one translates it much better: "O let not my heart be inclined to any evil thing." In the same sense that expression of Jeremiah is to be understood (iv. 10), "Thou hast greatly deceived this people," i. e. suffered them to be deceived by false prophets. To the same sense many interpreters understand those words of Ezek. (xiv. 9), "I the Lord have deceived that prophet." And in general we may observe, that the scripture commonly speaks of what is permitted by providence, as if it were directed by it. To give but one instance out of many: God is said to "move David to number the people" (2 Sam. xxiv. 1); whereas it appears, by comparing the text with 1 Chron. xxi. he only permitted Satan to move him to it.

Hardened our heart] See vi. 10.

Return for thy servants' sake,] As God is said to absent himself, when he disregards the prayers of his people (see Ps. lxxiv. 1); so he is said to return to them, when he answers their requests with seasonable relief, (see Zech. i. 3, Mal. iii. 7). Or the words may be thus translated, "Turn, for thy servants, the tribes of thine inheritance:" i. e. turn their captivity for the sake of thy servants Abraham and Israel (ver. 16), to whom thou madest the promises.

Ver. 18.] i. e. Have possessed "thine inheritance," mentioned ver. 17. The prophet calls it "a little while," in comparison of God's promise, which, as the Jews commonly understood it, gave them the possession of Canaan for ever (see Gen. xvii. 8). But some translate the whole verse thus, "Our adversaries have possessed thy holy people as a thing of nought, they have trodden down thy sanctuary." If we understand this of the devastations made by the Romans, under Titus, and by the Mahometans since, the phrase is exactly parallel to the words of Christ (Luke xxi. 24), "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles."

Ver. 19.] The words might better be rendered, "We are thine of old, thou hast not ruled over them," &c. Menolam, "of old," is used in the same sense, ver. 16, where the English reads, "thy name is from everlasting;" the sense is, thy name is called upon us, so the Septuagint understand it; or, thou art called the God of Abraham, or of Israel, from ancient times; and therefore we humbly beg thee not to cast us off utterly, whilst thou makest thyself known to the gentiles, who, till of late, never were thy people, nor in covenant with thee (see lxvi. 1). The word thine is not in the Hebrew; so some render the verse thus, "We have been for a great while [as] those over whom thou didst not bear rule, nor were we called by thy name." Thou hast rejected us altogether, and dost disregard us, as if we had never had any relation to thee, nor ever were called thy people: which sense agrees very well with the present condition of the Jewish nation, which hath continued for many ages without king, or prince, or sacrifice, as the prophet Hosea foretold, iii. 4.

19 We are thine: thou never barest rule over them; they were not called by thy name.

CHAPTER XLIV.

1 OH that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence,

2 As when the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil, to make thy name known to thine adversaries, that the nations may tremble at thy presence!

3 When thou didst terrible things which we looked not for, thou camest down, the mountains flowed down at thy presence.

4 For since the beginning of the world men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, beside thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him.

5 Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness, those that remember thee in thy ways; behold, thou art wroth; for we have sinned: in those is continuance, and we shall be saved.

6 But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; and we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away.

7 And there is none that calleth upon thy

CHAP. LXIV.

See the argument of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 1. Oh that thou wouldest rend the heavens,] The prayer, begun lxiii. 15, is continued throughout this chapter, in the name of the church and people of the Jews, as languishing and disconsolate under the long rejection they at present suffer; and the chapter begins with an earnest wish that God would show himself as visibly in favour of his ancient people, as he did when he came down upon mount Sinai, when thunder, and lightning, and tempests, that shook heaven and earth, did testify his presence (see Exod. xix. 16, 18).

That the mountains might flow down at thy presence.] A poetical description of the thunder and lightning which shook mount Sinai, and the violent rains which accompanied this tempest, and made the mountains look as if they were melted down (compare Judg. v. 5, Ps. lxxviii. 8, Mic. i. 4). God's appearance is commonly represented in scripture as accompanied with thunders and tempests, in allusion to his descent upon mount Sinai (see Ps. xlviii. 7, 8, &c. Mic. i. 3, 4, Hab. iv. 5, 6, 10).

Ver. 2.] The sense would be plainer if a supplement were made between the two parts of this sentence, thus, "As when the melting fire [or the fire of the founder] burneth [and as] the fire causeth the waters to boil:" the prophet compares this "flowing down of the mountains" to the melting of metals by the force of a vehement fire, and to the boiling over of water when it is heated.

Ver. 3.] Such terrible instances of thy power, thou showedst to our forefathers (see Exod. xxxiv. 10). who are here spoken of in the first person, as being of one blood with their posterity. But I think the words will bear another interpretation, which agrees better with what follows, "When thou shalt do terrible and unexpected things; when thou shalt come down (and visibly interpose for the deliverance of thy people), the mountains shall melt at thy presence." And then follows very appositely in the next verse.

Ver. 4.] The methods of thy dispensations, whereby thou wilt fulfil thy promises made to thy people, are beyond any thing we can think or conceive.

Ver. 5. Thou meetest him that rejoiceth] Thou preventest with the blessings of thy goodness, those that take pleasure in the ways of thy commandments, and live under a continual sense of thy providence.

Behold, thou art wroth; for we have sinned, &c.] We have been guilty of great offences, whereby we have provoked thine anger, but thy mercies endure for ever, and thy gracious promises are still the same; and this encourages us still to trust in thy goodness (compare Mal. iii. 6). The pronoun [those] refers to God's ways, by which we may understand, not only his laws, but likewise the dispensations of his providence (compare lv. 9, Exod. xxxiii. 13, Ps. cxiii. 7). But the latter part of the verse may thus be translated, "Behold, thou art wroth; because we have sinned continually against those (ways), and shall we be saved!"

Ver. 6. All our righteousness are as filthy rags;] The best actions of the best men have a great alloy of imperfection. When the Hebrew language would express the most excellent in its kind, it makes use of the plural number: thus wisdoms signifies the most excellent, or divine wisdom, Prov. i. 20, ix. 1. So here righteousnesses is the most perfect righteousness men can attain to.

Our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away.] Like a wind that blasts and withers both leaves and fruit (compare Jer. iv. 11, Hos. xiii. 15).

Ver. 7. There is none that calleth upon thy name,] There is nobody layeth our calamities to heart so name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee: for thou hast hid thy face from us, and hast consumed us, because of our iniquities.

8 But now, O LORD, thou art our father: we are the clay, and thou our potter; and we all are the work of thy hand.

9 ¶ Be not wroth very sore, O LORD, neither remember iniquity for ever: behold, see, we beseech thee, we are all thy people.

as to raise his mind into a devout posture, and to make God his refuge in his adversity (compare xxvii. 5). Or, there is none that try to avert God's judgments by their intercessions, which is compared here to the laying hold of a man's hand when he is just going to strike.

For thou hast hid thy face from us,] The particle ki should be translated "therefore," as it is in Ps. cxvi. 10, where the English translation rightly renders the sense, "I believed, and therefore have I spoken." And thus the Greek particle ἵνα may most fitly be translated, Luke vii. 47, "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; therefore she loved much;" which sense agrees best with the design of the foregoing parable.

Ver. 10. Thy holy cities are a wilderness.] By "holy cities," in the plural number, may be meant Zion (which was properly called the "city of David:" see 2 Sam. v. 9), and Jerusalem, as they are 10 Thy holy cities are a wilderness, Zion is a wilderness, Jerusalem a desolation.

11 Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire: and all our pleasant things are laid waste.

12 Wilt thou refrain thyself for these things, O LORD? wilt thou hold thy peace, and afflict us very sore?

sometimes divided into the upper and lower city. And grammarians observe, that the word Jerusalem is in the dual number in the Hebrew, because it was divided into the upper and lower city.

Ver. 11. Our holy and our beautiful house,—is burnt.] This relates to the burning of the temple by the Romans, who made an entire destruction of it according to our Saviour's prediction (Matt. xxiv. 2).

All our pleasant things are laid waste.] Judea is called the "pleasant land," Dan. viii. 9, and the "glory of all lands," Ezek. xx. 6, but the Romans utterly laid it waste, partly in Vespasian's time, and partly in Adrian's; but the words chiefly relate to the temple, whose glory and beauty was laid waste, and which the Jews valued themselves upon above all things (see Ezek. xxiv. 21, 25).

Ver. 12.] Wilt thou neither show thy compassion towards thy servants, nor thy resentments to thine enemies (compare xiii. 14, lxxv. 6)

CHAPTER LXV.

1 I AM sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name.

2 I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walk in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts;

3 A people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense upon altars of brick;

CHAP. LXV.

ARGUMENT.—In the beginning of this chapter, God answers the foregoing complaints of the Jews concerning their dereliction, and tells them that they rejected the preaching both of Christ and his apostles, whereas the gentiles readily complied with it. He then rebukes them for their incredulity, idolatry, and hypocrisy; but promises mercy to those that repent, and gives a description of that new Jerusalem state, which should commence from their restoration.

Ver. 1. I am sought of them that asked not for me:] There is a manifest impropriety in the expression of the first part of the sentence; so the words should rather be rendered, "I am found of them that asked not for me:" the verb, which commonly signifies to seek, being by a metonymy put for finding (compare Eccles. iii. 6). Or the words may be translated thus, "I am preached to them that ask not for me:" for the verb darash signifies to teach or instruct: in which sense it is used Ps. exi. 2, where our translation reads, "sought out of all them that have pleasure therein;" but the sense is, known, or "learned by those that have pleasure therein." And the word midraseh, derived from this verb, signifies a commentary or exposition.

Behold me, to a nation that was not called by my name.] I made myself manifest (compare xli. 27), to those that were not in covenant with me, i. e. to the gentiles (see lxiii. 19).

Ver. 2. I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people,] But I did not make myself known to the gentiles till you Jews had rejected me, after I had used all the arts of persuasion and entreaty to you, in order to your conversion. "To spread out the hand," is a gesture of begging or importunity (see i. 15, Jer. iv. 41, Lam. i. 17). St. Paul expounds these two verses of the calling of the gentiles after that the Jews had rejected the gracious counsel of God against themselves (Rom. x. 20, 21).

Ver. 3. A people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face:] The reigning sins of the Jews are reckoned up in this and the two following verses: and those are of two sorts, 1. Their ancient idolatry, the "iniquities of their fathers" (ver. 7), which the prophet describes as it was practised in his days. 2. Their spiritual pride and hypocrisy (ver. 5), which exactly answers the temper of the Jewish nation in the time of our Saviour.

That sacrificeth in gardens,] In groves and shady places (see the note on i. 29). Dr. Spencer understands the words of those sacrifices which were offered in gardens and orchards, in order to procure plenty of fruit (see the notes upon the last sentence of the following verse).

Burneth incense upon altars of brick;] God commanded that his altar should be built of whole stones, neither hewn, nor polished (Exod. xx. 25, Deut. xxvii.

4 Which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments, which eat swine's flesh, and broth of abominable things is in their vessels ;

5 Which say, Stand by thyself, come not near to me ; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day.

6 Behold, it is written before me : I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom,

7 Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the Lord, which have burned incense upon the mountains, and blas-

5) ; in opposition, as it is probable, to the heathen altars, which were more artificially contrived.

Ver. 4. Which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments.] As those did who practised necromancy, and consulted with infernal spirits (see Deut. xviii. 11). It was a common custom too among the heathens, for persons to lodge all night in the temples of their idols, particularly in that of Æsculapius, which were no better than monuments of the dead, in order to obtain such dreams as might be beneficial to them. [See the answer to Pontanelle's Hist. of Oracles, p. 140.] By the word netzarim, which our translation renders "monuments," Dr. Spencer (lib. ii. De Legib. Hebr. dissert. viii. cap. 3), understands solitary places, in which sense some take the word, xlix. 6. Such places being haunted by evil spirits, according to the opinion of the vulgar (see the note on xiii. 21).

Which eat swine's flesh.] This was expressly forbidden in the law (Lev. xi. 7), and the eating of it was a sort of religious ceremony, whereby apostates made a solemn renunciation of the Jewish religion (see 2 Macc. vi. 18, vii. 1). One reason why the religious Jews so much abhorred the eating of swine's flesh probably was, because the eating of it was a solemn rite of lustration among the Egyptian priests, who, at the full moon, offered part of it in sacrifice, and eat part of it themselves, though at other times they abhorred to touch it (see Herodot. lib. ii. cap. 47). Plato likewise acquaints us, that the sacrifice of a hog was a usual rite of initiation at the heathen mysteries (De. Repub. lib. ii). This passage is quoted by Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. xiii. where Vigerius in his notes shows that the sacrificing swine's flesh was used in the mysteries of Bacchus and Ceres : and Varro (lib. ii. De Re Rust.), derives ſc from ſciv, because it was one of the principal of the heathen sacrifices.

And broth of abominable things is in their vessels ;] This denotes the superstitious practice of "seething a kid in its mother's milk," with which they sprinkled the trees in their fields and gardens (see ver. 3), to make them more fruitful ; upon which account it is more than once forbidden in the law (see Exod. xxiii. 19, xxxiv. 26, Deut. xiv. 21). The Romans learned this superstition from the Egyptians probably, and worshipped Pales, or Ceres, with milk. So Ovid Fastor. lib. iv.

"Sylvicolam tepido lacte preare Palem."

Mr. White makes an objection against applying these passages to the modern Jews, because since Christ's time they have not been guilty of any of these kinds of idolatry, and consequently these sins cannot be assigned as a cause of their rejection. To which it may be answered, 1. That the prophet here objects to them the sins of their forefathers as well as their own : see ver. 7, and Deut. xxxii. 21, where their rejection phemed me upon the hills : therefore will I measure their former work into their bosom.

8 ¶ Thus saith the Lord, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not ; for a blessing is in it : so will I do for my servants' sakes, that I may not destroy them all.

9 And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains : and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there.

10 And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me.

is ascribed to their idolatries ; according to the tenor of God's covenant, whereby he hath threatened to "visit the iniquities of the fathers upon the children."

2. The prophet indeed, mentions only such idolatries as were practised in and about his own time ; but yet may comprehend under those heads all other kinds of that sin : just as the idolatries practised by some Christians, are called the doctrines of Balaam and Jezebel, Rev. ii. 14, 20, and the church where they were practised, is described by the name of Sodom and Egypt, xi. 8. And the Jews at this day acknowledge the compliances of several of their nation with the idolatries practised in those popish countries, where the inquisition is set up as one of their national sins (see Limborch's Amica Collatio cum Judæo).

Ver. 5. Stand by thyself.] Or, "I esteem thee as unclean : " so some render the verb kedashitika ; which hath two contrary significations, both to make holy, and to pollute, a thing usual in that language (see the note upon xxii. 17, 18). This description of a proud hypocrite, exactly agrees with the temper of the scribes and pharisees in Christ's time (see Matt. ix. 11, Mark vii. 4, John xviii. 28).

These are a smoke in my nose.] These are as offensive to me as smoke is to the nose, they are a perpetual provocation to me, and kindle my anger continually against them.

Ver. 6. It is written before me.] God's irrevocable purposes are often expressed as so many decrees entered into a register (see the note upon xxxiv. 16).

I will not keep silence, but will recompense.] I will not restrain my anger any longer (see xlii. 14), but recompense their sins double upon them (see Jer. xvi. 18, and the notes upon xl. 2).

Ver. 7.] See lvii. 7, Ezek. xviii. 6, xx. 27, 28.

Will I measure their former work into their bosom.] The iniquities of their forefathers, aggravated by the addition of their own (compare Matt. xxiii. 32, 35, 36, and see the note upon ver. 4).

Ver. 8.] As a few good grapes are found among a cluster of bad ones, and one speaks to another that would pluck it from the tree to spare it, because some of the grapes may come to good : so I will not destroy the whole nation, for the sake of the few good persons which spring out from among the rest. Those are called the remnant by St. Paul, Rom. ix. 27, xi. 5, where he alludes to i. 9, vi. 13, vii. 3, x. 21, of this prophecy.

Ver. 9. I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob.] Out of this stock shall arise a better generation, who shall repossess the inheritance of their ancestors. Judea being a hilly country, is elsewhere expressed by the mountains of Israel (see xiv. 25, Ezek. xxxvi. 1).

Mine elect shall inherit it.] These are called the election by St. Paul, Rom. xi. 7.

Ver. 10.] The blessings of the gospel are sometimes represented under the emblems of temporal happiness (see the note upon iv. 2). But if we take the words 11 ¶ But ye are they that forsake the LORD, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that troop, and that furnish the drink offering unto that number.

12 Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not.

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed:

14 Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit.

15 And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name:

16 That he who blesseth himself in the earth shall bless himself in the God of truth: and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth; because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes.

in their literal sense, they denote the great plenty and security these elect should enjoy (compare xxx. 23). Sharon was one of the richest parts of Judea (see xxxiii. 9, xxxv. 2): and so was the valley of Achor, which was remarkable for being the first tract of ground the Israelites took possession of, after their entrance into the promised land: and therefore is called a "door of hope" by Hosea (ii. 15), because it gave them first footing in that country, and encouraged them to hope that they should become masters of the whole.

Ver. 11. But ye are they—that forget my holy mountain.] The prophet now directs his discourse to the sinners and idolaters, whom he had reprov'd and threatened, ver. 2, 3, &c. By "my holy mountain" is meant God's temple and worship, a figure of the Christian church (see the note on ii. 2).

That prepare a table for that troop.] It was customary both among the Jews and gentiles, after some part of the sacrifice had been offered upon the altar, to make a feast of the remainder (see lvii. 7, Ezek. xxiii. 41). This is called the "table of devils," to whom the gentiles sacrificed, 1 Cor. x. 21. It is a great dispute among the critics what idol Gad was, which several interpreters here translate troop, as if it were some heavenly constellation. But the word likewise signifies fortune, or good luck, and so it is translated by the Septuagint, Gen. xxx. 11, and in this place too; for it appears from St. Jerome's commentary upon this verse, that the Greek copies in his times read Ἐπιμαρζόντες τῇ τύχῃ τράττειν, καὶ πληρύνειν, τῷ Διαιμονίῳ κίεσθαι.

That furnish a drink offering to that number.] Or to Meni, which is the word in the Hebrew: by which some understand the sun (see Huetius in Comment. on Origen, p. 109, 110, and Menagius upon Laertius, lib. viii. n. 34). Bochart, and Dr. Spencer (De Legib. Hebr. lib. iii. cap. 2), take it to signify a hero, worshipped by the Egyptians: Dr. Pocock (Not. ad Specim. Hist. Arab. p. 92), understands by it an idol of the Arabians, and others an idol of the Armenians: Minni being a province in Armenia (see Jer. li. 27).

[By Gad and Meni, Huetius understands the moon and the sun: fortune being under the influence of the former, and the genius which the heathens allotted to every man under the direction of the sun. See Huetiana, n. 120, and his second epistle to Bochart, published by Tilladot.]

Ver. 12. Will I number you to the sword.] An allusion to the etymology of the word Meni, which is derived from the verb manah, which signifies to number; such paronomasias are frequent in the prophets (see the note upon lxiii. 1). If we understand this place of the final restoration of the Jews, as the series of the prophecy directs, then this and the following verses are to be explained of that discrimination which God will make between the obedient and disobedient among that people, bringing back the former into their own country, and punishing the latter with utter destruction, as he did the rebels in the wilderness (compare xxvii. 12, Ezek. xi. 17, 21, xx. 34, 38, Amos ix. 8, 9).

When I spake, ye did not hear.] I have given frequent calls to you by my servants the prophets, and the apostles, and even by my Son, and yet ye refused to hearken (compare Matt. xxi. 34, 43).

And did choose that wherein I delighted not.] i. e. which I extremely abhorred: we meet with the same kind of expression, Jer. vii. 31, where God, reproving them for sacrificing their children to Moloch, saith, I commanded it not, i. e. I expressly forbade it. This figure is called meiosis by the rhetoricians, where a great deal more is understood than is expressed.

Ver. 13, 14.] God will make a great difference between his faithful servants and such unbelievers as you are. They shall have their losses and wants plentifully made up to them; whereas you that have so long abused the means of grace, shall be wholly deprived of it. This is expressed in Christ's parables, by being "shut out of the kingdom of heaven," excluded from the "marriage feast," and "cast into outer darkness, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth" (see Matt. viii. 11, 12, Luke xiii. 24, 25, &c. xiv. 23, 24).

Ver. 15. Ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen.] Mine elect (see ver. 9, 22), shall look upon you as a standing monument of God's indignation, and shall use this as a common form of imprecation, "God do so to me as he has done to the wicked Jews" (compare Jer. xxix. 22): "Of them shall they take up a curse," saith the prophet there, "saying, God make thee like Zedekiah, and like Ahab" (see likewise Zech. viii. 12).

God shall slay thee.] See ver. 12, and lxvi. 16.

Call his servants by another name.] See the note on lxii. 2. This may mean changing the name of Jew into that of Christian.

Ver. 16. That he who blesseth himself in the earth.] Or, "he who blesseth himself," &c. For this may be reckoned a new sentence that hath no dependence upon what went before, and it implies the utter abolishing of idolatry, that all religious invocation, whether of prayer, swearing, or the like, should be performed in the name of God, and of him alone. The total extirpation of idolatry is a blessing reserved for the last times (see the note on i. 29). By the earth we may mean here the gentiles, who are often styled κόσμος, the world, in the New Testament.

[The God of truth.] The Hebrew reads amen; so the expression may properly be understood of Christ, who is the true God (1 John v. 20), and called amen, or the truth, Rev. iii. 14, probably in allusion to this.

17 ¶ For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.

18 But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

19 And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

20 There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.

21 And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

22 They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.

23 They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.

24 And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.

25 The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, place (compare 2 Cor. i. 20): and the words import, that all spiritual blessings shall be derived from him.]

Because the former troubles are forgotten.] Or, "When the former troubles," &c. The "new heavens," and "new earth," mentioned in the following verse, are not subject to any of those errors and miseries, to which the present state of the world is obnoxious (see ver. 19, and Rev. xxi. 3, 4, &c.)

Ver. 17. I create new heavens and a new earth.] The conversion of the Jews will be in the last times of this world (see Hos. iii. 5): and then will follow the "new heavens and earth," which are to commence after the dissolution of this world (see 2 Pet. iii. 13, Rev. xxi. 1). Such a new state of things, St. Peter tells us, we are to expect "according to God's promise," which must relate to some prophecies of the Old Testament, and particularly to this and the following chapter, both the apostles using the very same expressions which are found here.

The former shall not be remembered.] The glory of the "new heavens and earth," shall so far surpass the happiest days that ever were seen in former times, that they shall not deserve to be mentioned, there being no comparison between them (compare Jer. iii. 16).

Ver. 18. I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.] This may be best expounded of the New Jerusalem, which shall "come down from God," when the new heavens and new earth are created; see Rev. xxi. 1, 2, and compare lxvi. 22, where "there shall be no more death, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor pain," (ibid. ver. 4, and the following verse here.) Though some learned men suppose, that, upon the restoration of the Jews there may be some particular privileges belonging to the earthly Jerusalem, as the metropolis of that nation (see the note upon lxvi. 20). But we must not be too positive as to any particular description of these distant events.

[Rejoice for ever in that which I create.] The learned bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, in his Defence of Christianity, chap. ii. sec. 2, translates the words, "Rejoice for the age to come, which I create." The age to come was a known expression among the Jews for the times of the Messiah. See the note upon ix. 6, in which text the same learned writer understands the phrase Ab ed, to the same sense, translated in our English, everlasting Father.]

Ver. 20. There shall be no more thence an infant of days,] "From thence," or "from that time" (see note on xlvi. 16), there shall be no untimely deaths, either of infants who are abortive, or never grow up to man's estate; or of old men who do not live out the full term of life.

For the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.]

The sense would be plainer, if the words were translated thus: "For he that dies a hundred years old, shall die a child:" and the "sinner that dies a hundred years old, shall be accursed." The prophet describes this renovation of the world as a paradisaical state, and such as the patriarchs enjoyed before the flood, when men commonly lived near a thousand years. So he that died at a hundred years of age would have been looked upon as dying in the age of childhood, and be judged to have been cut off in the beginning of his years, as a punishment for some great sins he had committed. Hesiod describes what he calls the silver age of the world, in much the same expressions, Έγρ. καὶ Ἡμ. lib. i. ver. 129.—

Ἄλλ' ἑκατὸν μὲν ταῖς ἔτεσσι παρὰ μνηστὲς καθύψ' ἔτρεφετο ἀτάλαντον, μέγα νηπίος—

"A boy of a hundred years old played about with his mother, an overgrown child."

The words of the text seem to imply, that the millennial state shall not be free from all manner of sin, though there shall be no place there for idolatry and apostasy. Accordingly some learned men suppose, that the lukewarm Laodicean state of the church, which is described, and reproved, Rev. iii. 14, &c. is to be contemporary with some part of the millennium.

Ver. 21.] A blessing promised to the Jews upon their conversion, in contradiction to that curse which Moses denounced against them for their disobedience (Deut. xxviii. 30); and it implies both security from the invasion of enemies, and from untimely death (compare lxvi. 8).

Ver. 22. As the days of a tree are the days of my people,] Not like the fading of a leaf, to which our present mortal state is often compared. The Septuagint translate it, "As the days of the tree of life, shall be the days of my people," expressing the sense and import of the words.

Ver. 23. Nor bring forth for trouble;] As those do who enjoy not the fruits of their labour (see ver. 21, 22).

Ver. 24.] God will prevent them with his blessings, and gratify their desires before they ask: a sure token of his favour and love towards them, as his rejecting men, and casting them off, is expressed by his "hiding away his face from them," and refusing to hear their prayers (see Prov. i. 23, Isa. i. 15, Jer. xiv. 12, Lam. iii. 8, 44).

Ver. 25. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, &c.] Concerning the metaphorical sense of these expressions, see the notes upon xi. 6, xxxv. 9. But since the renovation here spoken of extends to the whole creation (see Rom. viii. 21), they may imply the correcting the noxious qualities of fierce or venomous creatures.

and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock : and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the LORD.

[Dust shall be the serpent's meat.] The curse pronounced upon the serpent, Gen. iii. 14, shall then be fully accomplished : Christ having "put all enemies under his feet," and especially the devil, who is the head of them. See Micah vii. 17, Rom. xvi. 20, 1 Cor. xv. 27.

CHAPTER LXVI.

1 THUS saith the LORD, The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool : where is the house that ye build unto me ? and where is the place of my rest ?

2 For all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the LORD : but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word.

3 He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man ; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck ; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood ; he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol. Yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations.

4 I also will choose their delusions, and will bring their fears upon them ; because when I called, none did answer ; when I spake, they did not hear : but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not.

5 ¶ Hear the word of the LORD, ye that tremble at his word ; Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the LORD be glorified : but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.

CHAP. LXVI.

ARGUMENT.—In the beginning of the chapter God answers the complaints of the Jews concerning the destruction of the temple, which they so passionately bewail, lxiii. 18, lxiv. 11, and instructs them in the evangelical way of worshipping God in spirit and in truth, and not by sacrifices, or a carnal worship. He then assigns the causes of his rejecting the Jews, and calling the gentiles, but promises in due time to unite them into one glorious and flourishing church.

Ver. 1.] A temple in the Jewish notion was God's place of residence, or his habitation, where he resided as a king in a palace : accordingly the cherubims were his throne, the ark was his footstool, the priests were his immediate attendants, and the shew-bread and sacrifices were the provision for his table. Such a notion of a temple was common both to Jews and gentiles, [only with this difference, that the gentiles thought the setting up an image a necessary part of the dedication of a temple, to secure, as they imagined, the presence of the deity to whom it was dedicated. Templi nulla ratio, quod non coronat simulacrum, saith Isidore.] Such a notion seems to confine God's presence to a certain place, and therefore was not so suitable to the greatness of the divine majesty. It is under this acceptance of the word, that God reproves the Jews for laying such stress upon their temple worship, and comforts them under the loss of it, which they speak of with so much concern, lxiv. 11. And it is under the same notion that the Christian apologists join temples with images, and profess that their religion allows of neither.

Ver. 2. All those things hath my hand made, and all those things have been.] I fill heaven and earth, which are the works of my hands, and are still sustained and supported by me. "All those things are mine ;" so the Septuagint translate the latter part of the sentence.

But to this man will I look, &c.] Such a one is a living temple of God (see lvii. 15).

Ver. 3. He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man ;] Without this devout temper of mind, killing an ox for a burnt-offering is no more acceptable to God, than if a man offered his son in sacrifice to Moloch.

He that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck ;] The price of a dog was forbid to be brought into the house of the Lord, by way of vow, or free-will offering (see Deut. xxiii. 18).

He that offereth an oblation, as he that offereth swine's blood ;] Which being one of the principal sacrifices among the gentiles, was in a particular manner abominable to God (see the notes upon lxv. 4).

He that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol.] Or, "maketh a memorial with incense," as the margin reads. The verb zachar, to commemorate, signifies any act of divine worship (see the note upon lvii. 8).

Their soul delighteth in their abominations.] Compare lxiv. 12. This may relate to their idolatrous practices, mentioned lxv. 3, 4, 11, and ver. 17 of this chapter. Or their very ceremonious worship may be reproved in these terms, because, since the revelation of the gospel, God had rejected it, and declared it to be a plain contradiction to his will, and an affront to his authority.

Ver. 4. I also will choose their delusions.] I will punish them in their own way, and set over them the scribes and pharisees, who shall govern them by their traditions instead of the word of God ; or I will suffer "false Christs and false prophets" to deceive them, (see Matt. xxiv. 24, John v. 43).

Will bring their fears upon them ;] This was exactly fulfilled, when they crucified Christ for fear of the Romans (John xi. 48), which very sin was punished by an utter destruction from that very people.

Because when I called, &c.] See lxv. 12.

Ver. 5.] Harken to this, you Jews, that embraced the gospel upon the preaching of Christ and the apostles : your brethren have hated you for my sake, and cast you out of their synagogues (compare Luke vi. 22), and in derision called upon God to do some extraordinary thing in your behalf ; but God's providence at the destruction of Jerusalem shall interpose visibly for your deliverance, and leave them to perish in their city. This was remarkably verified when the Christians had a divine warning to leave the city, and thereupon retired to Pella, and escaped the common destruction (see Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 5, Epiph. Hæres. xxx.).

Ver. 6.] The prophet seems to hear the noise of the ruin of the city and temple, sounding in his ears ; "The voice from the city" may fitly be expounded the temple, a voice of the Lord that rendereth recompense to his enemies.

7 Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man-child.

8 Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

9 Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith the Lord: shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

10 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her:

11 That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory.

12 For thus saith the Lord, Behold I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: then shall ye suck, ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

13 As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

14 And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb: and the hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

15 For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, of that story which Josephus relates (De Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 12), concerning one Jesus the son of Anani, who, for a considerable time before the war began, or the city was besieged, went about the streets, crying, "Woe, woe, unto Jerusalem!" and neither threatenings nor stripes could prevail with him to be silent. And the "voice from the temple" was verified in that voice, which, Josephus tells us in the same chapter, was heard in the temple a little before the final destruction of it, saying, "Let us depart hence."

Ver. 7. Before she travailed, she brought forth:] Here begins a new paragraph, containing a description of the sudden increase of the Christian church, upon God's rejecting the Jews, and destroying their temple and worship. The very destruction of the Jewish polity making way for the growth of the gospel, inasmuch as it abated that opposition which the Jewish zealots all along gave to the spreading of it; and the abolishing the Jewish worship contributed very much to the abrogating the law of Moses, and burying it with silence and decency (see Rom. xi. 11).—The church is described here as a travelling woman, the mother of all true believers (see liv. 1, Gal. iv. 26).

Before her pain came, she was delivered of a man-child.] The expressions import how suddenly and quickly Christianity was spread and propagated over the world. And this latter sentence alludes to the Hebrew women being delivered of their male children, before the midwives could come to them, (Exod. i. 19). The propagating the kingdom of Christ, is, in like manner, described by a woman's travelling, and bringing forth a man-child, Rev. xii. 1, 2, 5, which place plainly alludes to the words here.

Ver. 8. Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day?] The suddenness of this event is as surprising, as if the fruits of the earth, which are brought to perfection by slow degrees, should blossom and ripen all in one day. And the fruitfulness of this spiritual increase is as wonderful, as if a whole nation were born at once, or by one woman. We may understand the former part of this sentence of the speedy propagation of the gospel through the world, and the latter part of it of the sudden conversion of the Jews, and their union with the gentiles into one church, when God "will remove the iniquity of the land in one day," as it is foretold, Zech. iii. 9 (compare Mic. v. 3). These two events, though distant in time, yet will agree very much in the swiftness of their progress.

She brought forth her children.] Without pain or difficulty, no ill accident interposing to hinder their birth; as it follows,

Ver. 9.] Shall I disappoint a work, of which I myself was the author, when every thing is ripe for execution, and the effect just ready to be produced (compare xxxvii. 3)? The prophet still carries on the comparison between the natural and spiritual birth (compare Gal. iv. 19).

Ver. 10. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem—all ye that love her:] Let all that wish her well congratulate her for the favours God hath shown to her, and particularly let the gentiles rejoice with the Jewish church (see Deut. xxxii. 43), for her advancement shall redound to their benefit (see ver. 12).

Rejoice—all ye that mourn for her:] See the note on lvii. 18.

Ver. 11. That ye may suck, and be satisfied] Or, "Because ye shall suck," &c. She will nourish the faithful with her doctrine, as a tender mother does her children with her breasts. The prophet persists in comparing the church to a child-bearing woman.

Be delighted with the abundance of her glory.] You shall share in the glory God hath conferred upon the Jewish church, and shall be edified by the gifts and graces that God will plentifully bestow upon her (see below, ver. 19, and Rom. xi. 12).

Ver. 12. I will extend peace to her.] All manner of prosperity (compare xlviii. 18, lx. 5).

The glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream:] The riches of the gentiles shall flow in upon you, by their liberality and charity (see lxi. 6), or, I will impart to her all that grace and knowledge, for which the church of the gentiles value themselves; St. Paul says (Rom. xi. 11), that the "Jews will be provoked to emulation" by the gentile believers, by their coming into the church in great numbers, and the Jews seeing them favoured with all the privileges of God's people and themselves utterly rejected; and that this will be a principal means of working their conversion. And when they are converted, they will be extraordinary instruments in God's hands, for the converting the remainder of the heathen world (see ver. 19, compared with lx. 4, 5, and Rom. xi. 12, 15, 25, 31).

Ye shall be borne upon her sides, &c.] Compare lx. 4, and see the note on ver. 11 of this chapter.

Ver. 14. When ye see this,—your bones shall flourish] You Jews shall recover your ancient strength and beauty, and be renewed in as wonderful a manner, as if dry withered bones should recover their youth and moisture: or, as if the dead bones in a charnel-house should have life and vigour infused into them (compare Ecclus. xlv. 12, xlix. 10), then will be fulfilled that "resurrection of the dry bones," spoken of by Ezekiel, xxxvii. 1, &c. for that vision relates to the restoration of the Jewish nation, after it had lain for and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire.

16 For by fire and by his sword will the LORD plead with all flesh: and the slain of the LORD shall be many.

17 They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh and the abomination, many ages in a dead, hopeless condition. In like manner, St. Paul calls the receiving the Jews into the church, "Life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15.

The hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants,] Then shall the kingdom or power of the Messiah be manifested in a distinguishing protection of his people, and destruction of his and their enemies.

Ver. 15. The Lord will come with fire,] God is called a "consuming fire," Dent. iv. 24, and his vengeance often resembled to fire, which consumes every thing in an instant (see ix. 5, xxx. 30, see the following verse).

With his chariot like a whirlwind,] An allusion to the old way of fighting with chariots (compare v. 28, xxi. 7, 9). God is elsewhere described, as "making the clouds his chariot" (Ps. civ. 3, Hab. iii. 8), and as compassed about with tempests and darkness (Ps. xviii. 10).

Ver. 16.] This seems to denote the discomfiture of Gog and Magog, who are to be destroyed by fire. See Ezek. xxxix. 6, 9. They are described in the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth chapters of that prophecy, as coming in a great body against the land of Israel after the restoration of the Jews, and their return into their own land, and their receiving an utter overthrow. Or, this may be understood of the battle of Armageddon (Rev. xvi. 14, xix. 19), where the armies of Satan and antichrist are to be vanquished by the lamb and his followers: or of the discomfiture of Satan's army, mentioned Rev. xx. 8, 9, which shall be destroyed by fire from heaven. The scriptures do in general declare there shall be a great destruction of Christ's enemies here upon earth before the general judgment or consummation of all things: compare with the context here, ch. xxxiv. lxiii. 1, 6, Ps. cx. 5, 6, Jer. l. li. a great part of which chapters certainly relate to the latter times, Ezek. xxxviii. xxxix., Joel iii. 11, 14, Mic. v. 8, &c. Zech. xii. 2, &c. xiv. 1, 13, Rev. xiv. 20, xvi. 14, xix. 19. But we must not be too positive in assigning the particular place, time, or manner, how these prophecies shall be fulfilled, because the events are secrets, whose causes lie hid as yet in the depths of providence. And the very great obscurity of the prophecies, which are supposed to relate to these matters, is to me a convincing argument that they are not yet fulfilled.

Ver. 17. They that—purify themselves in gardens] Concerning "sacrificing in gardens," see the note upon lxx. 3. But there were several sorts of lustrations or purifications used among the heathens, from whence the Jews learned their idolatrous customs; some of which were performed by washings, for which purpose they had fountains in their sacred groves and gardens.

Behind one tree in the midst,] Several critics agree, that by the Hebrew word achad is meant the sun, which, Macrobius saith (Saturnal. lib. i. cap. 23.) was called by the Assyrians adad, a word which he tells us there signifies one, and therefore is probably derived from the Hebrew, achad. If we follow this and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the LORD.

18 For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory.

19 And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan, to the isles afar off, interpretation, the words may be best translated thus; "Behind [the chapel] (or shrine) of the sun, in the midst" [of the garden].

Eating swine's flesh,] See the note upon lxx. 4. The abomination,] The same which is called "broth of abominable things," lxx. 4 (see the note there).

The mouse,] The heathens used some sort of meats by way of purification, or lustration, and chiefly such as were not used in common food; such were several of those meats forbidden by the law, and called abominable by Moses (Dent. xiv. 3): of this kind probably was the mouse, which was expressly forbidden to be eaten, Lev. xi. 29, Jamblichus Syrus, in Photius, cod. 94, reckons mice among the several sorts of animals, by which the heathens practised magic or divination, and saith, that some derived the word μυστήριον from μῦς.

Concerning the reasons for applying these ancient idolatries to later times, see the notes upon lxx. 4. Malmonides observes (More Nevochim, lib. iii. cap. 29, p. 424), from the books of the Zabians, who were ancient idolaters, that they used "to offer to the sun," the idol mentioned in this very verse, seven bats and seven mice, which he thinks was the reason why these creatures were reckoned abominable in the law of Moses, and forbidden to be eaten.

Ver. 18. I know their works,] The word know is not in the Hebrew; some supply the ellipsis thus, should I bear their works? &c. Such a kind of deficiency is supplied in that manner by our translators, Numb. xiv. 27.

I will gather all nations and tongues;] This may most probably be understood of the gathering of the Jews and gentiles into one church (see the note upon liv. 7, and compare Rev. xiv. 6).

Ver. 19. I will set a sign among them,] A signal to gather the believing Jews together from their several dispersions (see xi. 22, lxii. 10). A sign (oth in the Hebrew) is the same with an ensign, or standard, and so it is used, Ps. lxxiv. 4.

I will send those that escape of them unto the nations,] The "escaped of Israel" are mentioned before (iv. 2), and mean those "that are escaped of the nations" (xlv. 20); i. e. who are returned home out of their several dispersions. Some of these, God saith, he will send to be preachers and apostles to the unconverted gentiles, as St. Paul, when he was converted, was ordained to be an apostle of the gentiles: whose conversion, according to Mr. Mede, carries in it an earnest, and an emblem of the general conversion of that nation (see his Works, p. 891). Without question their conversion will be a signal instance of the power of God's grace, and a convincing argument to others of the truth of the gospel, as hath been observed upon ver. 12.

To Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, &c.] They shall go out and make conversions in all the parts of the world: Tarshish denotes the eastern parts (see note upon xi. 16); Pul and Lud the south; Tubal and Javan the north; and the islands the west.

Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow,] Some suppose that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

20 And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord.

Pul to be the same people who are elsewhere called by the name of Phut, which is usually joined with Lud: and is rendered Libya, or the Libyans, by most interpreters (see Jer. xlv. 9, Ezek. xxvii. 10, xxx. 5). But Bochart thinks Pul to be the same with Phil, or Philis, a city upon the river Nile; and then these two names will denote the Egyptians and Ethiopians.

To Tubal and Javan,] Tubal is elsewhere joined with Meshech (see Gen. x. 2, Ezek. xxxviii. 2), and they are generally thought to denote the Tartars, Scythians, and those who live in the most northern parts of the world. By Javan are meant the Ionians, Grecians, and the neighbouring nations, who live on the north side of the Mediterranean sea.

To the isles afar off,] This expression denotes the westerly parts of the world; for the "islands of the sea," a phrase elsewhere used, mean the same with the islands of the Western sea (see the notes upon xi. 11, xxiv. 14). And the prophet Hosea, speaking of the return of the Jews from their dispersions in several parts of the world, saith, "When the Lord shall roar like a lion (which denotes some efficacious call of providence, or powerful preaching of the gospel), then the children shall tremble (or come flying, as the following verse explains it) from the west" (Hos. xi. 10). So that by the "isles afar off, which have not heard God's fame," may be meant even the West Indies themselves.

Ver. 20. They shall bring all your brethren for an offering] The words may be understood, either of the Jews, "that have escaped," converting the gentiles, and bringing them for "an offering to God," the very phrase which St. Paul uses, speaking of this subject (Rom. xv. 16), or else, that they shall convert their own brethren that still remain scattered in the remote countries of the gentiles. Or, the place may be understood, in general, of the mystical Israel, which "shall be saved from all the ends of the earth" (see xlv. 17, 22, 25).

Upon horses, and in chariots—to my holy mountain Jerusalem,] God's "holy mountain," commonly signifies the church in the prophetic writings (see the note upon ii. 2). So the expressions of going up to God's holy mountain, in the several conveniences of carriage here mentioned, are an allusion to the Jews going up with their gifts and offerings to Jerusalem at the solemn festivals (compare lx. 9). Or we may understand it, in a more literal sense, of the Jews returning to their own country, from their several dispersions, and hastening to Jerusalem, with joy and singing psalms, as the Septuagint express the sense. But this interpretation does not agree so well with the "new heavens and new earth" mentioned in the twenty-second verse, of which state these things were spoken.

Ver. 21.] All that have a share in this blessed state (called the "new heaven and new earth," in the following verse) shall be priests unto God, and attend upon his service without distraction (compare 21 And I will also take of them for priests and for Levites, saith the Lord.

22 For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain.

23 And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord.

Rev. xx. 6). Or the words may import the restoring the Jews to their ancient privilege of being "a kingdom of priests" to God, and continually attending his service (see lxi. 6).

Ver. 22.] This new state of things, already described lxxv. 17, &c. is created to be inhabited by the mystical Israel, "who shall be saved from all the parts of the earth with an everlasting salvation" (xlv. 17, 18, 22, 25).

Ver. 23.] These saints shall not have set times for God's worship, but shall be perpetually employed in serving and praising him (see Rev. iv. 8, vii. 15). The worship of the new Jerusalem is represented by the practice of the Jewish temple, as if the prophet had said, that state shall be one continued festival. It is usual with the prophets to describe the gospel dispensations by the usages of their own times (see the note upon xix. 19, lvi. 7, and compare Zech. xiv. 16). These metaphors are continued even in the writings of the New Testament, where the church is represented by the twelve tribes of Israel (Luke xxii. 30, Rev. vii. 4). The Christians are called Jews, Rom. ii. 28, 29, Rev. ii. 9, and the heavenly sanctuary is described by the model of the Jewish tabernacle, Rev. iv. 5, 6, xi. 1, 2, 19, xv. 5, 6.

Mr. White, in his argument upon this chapter, and elsewhere, insists upon these and such-like expressions, as irrefragable arguments, that the sense of this prophet is to be confined to occurrences in or near his own time. But this way of arguing shows him not to have thoroughly considered the genius of the prophetic writings, which as they are always full of metaphors, and love to give but dark hints of things, wrapped up in symbols and figures, so the very life and spirit of them consist in pointing out the times of the Messiah, and the state of God's kingdom under his administration: according to that maxim delivered by the angel, Rev. xix. 10, that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy," without which it is but a kind of dead letter.

Ver. 24. They shall go forth,] Without the circuit of the "new Jerusalem" (Rev. xxi. 12), or the "camp of the saints" (Rev. xx. 9). The expression alludes to the custom of the Jews, of executing offenders without the camp or city, and excluding all unclean persons out of it (see Num. v. 1, 4, Heb. xiii. 11—13).

Look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me,] Those enemies of God, that were slain in the battle, mentioned ver. 16.

Their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched,] They shall be like so many putrefying carcases, lying slain in the field of battle, and overrun with worms and stench; they shall be a lasting monument of God's justice like Sodom, set forth for an example of the divine vengeance, of that eternal fire which is prepared for the ungodly in hell (compare Judith xvi. 17, Eccles. vii. 17, Mark ix. 44).

They shall be an abhorring unto all flesh,] Their reproach shall be perpetual; men shall abhor them

24 And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

as they do the stench of a camp of dead bodies, or the filth of the valley of Hinnom, the figure and picture of hell (see the notes upon xxx. 33, and compare Ezek. xxxix. 11, 16).

THE PROPHECY AND LAMENTATIONS

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD,
WILLIAM,

BY DIVINE PROVIDENCE,

LORD ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY;

PRIMATE OF ALL ENGLAND, AND METROPOLITAN;

AND ONE OF HIS MAJESTY'S MOST HONOURABLE PRIVY-COUNCIL.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

THE following papers, written in pursuance of a Commentary formerly published upon the prophet Isaiah, I humbly beg leave to offer to your Grace; entreating your favourable acceptance of my sincere endeavours to give some farther light to the writings of the Prophet that succeeds next in order.

Who was a burning as well as a shining light in the church of God; and whose fervent piety and zeal discover themselves, in many affectionate strains of an ardent devotion, and in the warmth and vigour of a moving eloquence, so justly admired by all attentive readers: a talent that all men must acknowledge your Grace to be a perfect master of: you having, in an inferior station, given abundant proofs of your great abilities, both in exhorting, and convincing gainsayers.

One great use of the writings of the prophets, is to instruct us in the signs of the times; and though the warnings they give had a particular aspect upon their own age, yet they were likewise 'written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come.' This rule, if we should apply to our own case, and compare some circumstances of the present times, with the representation this prophet gives of his own, when, through a general corruption, both of principles and practice, men were so far from being 'ashamed of their abominations' (Jer. vi. 15), that they openly avowed and justified them: the parallel will give us just cause to apprehend, that as we have equalled the Jews in sin, we may be made like them in punishment. But we are willing to hope better things, and cannot but look upon it as an earnest of God's favourable intention towards this church, that his providence hath advanced a person to preside over it, so excellently qualified as your Grace is, with piety, learning and prudence, and all other accomplishments, requisite to support and adorn that high station.

Which that your Grace may long and prosperously enjoy to the glory of God, and the service of his church, and that your wise and steady conduct may be a blessing to the present age, and endear your memory to posterity, shall always be the earnest prayer of,

My Lord,

Your Grace's most obedient and dutiful servant,
WILLIAM LOWTH.

CONCERNING THE AUTHOR AND THE SUBJECT

OF THE ENSUING

PROPHECY.

THE Prophet Jeremy is called the son of Hilkiah (i. 1), whom Clemens Alexandrinus (Strom. lib. i. p. 390, edit. Oxon.) supposes to be the same Hilkiah who was high-priest in the reign of Josiah (see 2 Kings xxii. 4, 8).

But this opinion seems not so probable, because then the prophet would not have been described as living with the inferior priests at Anathoth, inasmuch as the high-priest and his family always kept their residence at Jerusalem. He was very young when he was called by God to the prophetic office (i. 6); in the exercise of which he continued above forty years, and is said by St. Jerome in his argument to this prophecy, to have been stoned to death at Tahapanes in Egypt, whither he and the remains of the Jews, after the destruction of Jerusalem, were carried by Johanan and the rest of their leaders, xliii. 7 (see the note upon that place).

There were several collections of Jeremy's prophecies: one made by God's command in the fourth year of Jehoiakim (xxxvi. 2). This contained all the prophecies he had published to that time; as well against the other nations, as against the Jews. The former of these in our present collection are put by themselves, at the end of the book, from ch. xlv. to the end of the list: but in the present copies of the Septuagint, they follow immediately after the thirteenth verse of the twenty-fifth chapter.

Another collection of these prophecies is mentioned, i. 3, comprehending all that Jeremy had uttered to the time of the captivity. These may probably be supposed to have been collected by Baruch's amanuensis: and were put together without any regard to the order of time, just as we find the collection of psalms was made.

To this was added another collection of Jeremy's prophecies, published about the time of his going down into Egypt, contained in ch. xlii.—xliv. at the end of which, Esdras, or some others, after the captivity, who undertook the completing the scripture-canon, added those prophecies which Jeremy had spoken against the gentiles, thinking it most proper to put them by themselves, because they treat of a different subject from the rest of the book; and one of them, viz. that against Elam (xlix. 34), bears date after the first collection made by Jeremy himself in the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign.

The reason why the fifty-second chapter was added at the end of the book, shall be assigned in the argument of that chapter.

CHAPTER I.

1 THE words of Jeremiah the son of Hilkiah, of the priests that were in Anathoth in the land of Benjamin:

2 To whom the word of the LORD came in the days of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, in the thirteenth year of his reign.

3 It came also in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.

4 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

5 Before I formed thee in the belly I knew during the seventy years of captivity; and continued down to aftertimes (see Zech. vii. 5, viii. 19).

Ver. 4.] This seems to have been a visible appearance of the divine majesty, performed by the Son of God, or the second person of the blessed trinity (see the notes on Is. vi. 1), who appeared in a human shape, as a prelude to the incarnation; first to Adam (Gen. iii. 8), then to Abraham (Gen. xviii. 2), afterward to Joshua (Josh. v. 13), as, also, to Ezekiel (Ezek. i. 26), and to Daniel (Dan. vii. 15, 18, x. 6, 10). Of the same kind was this vision represented to Jeremiah (compare the ninth verse of this chapter with the forementioned texts of Daniel). It is out of this glory, or Shechinah, the following words were uttered.

Ver. 5. Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee:] Some persons have been designed for certain offices, by a particular decree of God, from or before their coming into the world. So was John Baptist (Luke i. 15), and St. Paul (Gal. i. 15), and the prophet Jeremiah here in the text. This favour is expressed by knowing him, or taking especial notice of him; as if a prince should single one particular person out of a multitude, and call him by name, and appoint him to some honourable office, or trust. So God expresses the peculiar favour he had for Moses, by saying, I know thee by name (Exod. xxxiii. 12, 17). The same thing is likewise expressed by God's sanctifying him, or setting him apart for the prophetic office: the same phrase being applied to our Saviour himself, whom God in an eminent manner sanctified, or set apart for the offices of king, priest, and prophet, and, in due time sent him into the world to execute the same (John x. 36); who, therefore, is called, by way of eminence, τὸ Ἅγιον (Luke i. 35), "that holy person," for so the neuter is sometimes taken (see John iii. 6, 1 John v. 4).

CHAP. I.

ARGUMENT.—The first chapter contains the general commission which God gave to Jeremiah to execute the prophetic office, as well to the Jews in particular, as to the heathen countries round about them: and a promise of the divine assistance in the discharge of his duty.

Ver. 1.] Anathoth was one of the cities allotted to the priests (see Josh. xxi. 13, 18): that town was but three miles from Jerusalem, as St. Jerome tells us in his preface to this prophecy, but yet was in the land of Benjamin, as, indeed, was part of Jerusalem itself (see Josh. xviii. 28). Judah and Benjamin lying so near together, makes them sometimes reckoned but as one tribe (see 1 Kings xi. 32).

Ver. 2, 3. In the days of Josiah] Jeremiah prophesied for the space of forty-one years and upward, if we take in the prophecies he uttered in Egypt after the captivity (ch. xliii. xlv.), which are not included within this period. We may observe from the sixth verse of this chapter, that Jeremy was very young when he was called by God to the prophetic office.

Unto the carrying away Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.] The Jews underwent several captivities before their final desolation. The first was when Jehoiakim was carried away captive, in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12). There was another captivity in the eighteenth year of his reign (see below, lii. 29). Then followed, in the next year, that captivity which accompanied the destruction of the temple and city of Jerusalem, in the fifth month (see ibid. ver. 21). In memory of which calamity, the "fast of the fifth month" was observed thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations.

6 Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child.

7 ¶ But the LORD said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

8 Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD.

9 Then the LORD put forth his hand, and touched my mouth. And the LORD said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth.

10 See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came

Ordned thee a prophet unto the nations.] To other nations as well as the Jews (see xxv. 15, 18—20, and the latter part of this prophecy, from the forty-sixth chapter).

Ver. 6.] He excuses himself from taking the prophetic office, by reason of his youth, which made him unable to speak with that authority which is requisite for the discharge of so weighty a function (see below, ver. 8, 17, 18, and compare Exod. iv. 10, vi. 12). We cannot infer from hence, that Jeremy was at this time within the years of childhood: for he may call himself a child by way of extenuating his abilities; so Solomon calls himself a little child, 1 Kings iii. 7, who at that time was married, as appears by the first verse of that chapter, and must have been at least twenty years old. And the word child or youth, is elsewhere used of those who are arrived at the first years of manhood. So Isaac is called a lad, or youth, Gen. xxii. when he must have been between twenty and thirty years old. Accordingly, the Romans extended the word adolescens, or youth, to thirty years of age (see Casaub. in Polyb. p. 29, et Exercit. in Baron. n. 99).

Ver. 7.] God refuses to accept of his excuse, and renews his commission to him to execute the prophetic office. So God refused to accept of the excuse Moses made upon a like occasion (see Exod. vi. 30, vii. 1, 2).

Ver. 8.] The style of God's commission to his prophets and messengers commonly runs in these words, "I am with thee" (see Exod. iii. 12, Dent. xxxi. 8, Josh. i. 5): importing that God, who sent them, will enable them to discharge the office he has committed to them, and will give them strength proportionable to the business they undertake. To reprove the faults of all persons, the great men of the world, as well as those of lower degree, with that plainness and impartiality which the prophets used, requires a more than ordinary degree of courage; for which cause the promise of God's assistance was particularly necessary to encourage them in the discharge of that unthankful office; and in confidence of that assistance, they are exhorted to be strong and of a good courage: not to fear nor be dismayed (see Deut. xxxi. 8, Josh. i. 9, Ezek. ii. 6, iii. 9).

Ver. 9. Then the Lord put forth his hand, [see the note on ver. 4.] and touched my mouth:] Whereas the prophet complained (ver. 6), that he could not speak; God, by this visible sign, assures him, that he had conferred upon him the gift of utterance, and imparted his will and purposes in such a measure to unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree.

12 Then said the LORD unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I will hasten my word to perform it.

13 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying, What seest thou? And I said, I see a seething pot; and the face thereof is toward the north.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, Out of the north an evil shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land.

15 For, lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah.

16 And I will utter my judgments against him, that his words ought to be esteemed the oracles of God (compare Isa. vi. 7, li. 16).

Ver. 10.] The prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them. So Ezekiel saith he was "sent to destroy the city" (xliii. 3); that is, to prophecy concerning its destruction. And Isaiah is commanded to "make the heart of the Jews fat;" i. e. to foretell their obduration and incredulity (vi. 10). In the same sense we are to understand the text here, that God had appointed Jeremiah to declare his purposes concerning the overthrow or restoration of kingdoms and nations, according as they either repented of their sins, or persisted in their evil doings (compare xviii. 7). In pursuance of these directions, some of the following prophecies foretell the destruction of the Jewish nation, and several of the neighbouring countries (see xxv. 15, &c): others of them contain predictions of the restoration of the Jews (as ch. xxx. xxxi.), and also of several other nations against which he had prophesied (see xlviii. 47, xlix. 6, 39).

Ver. 11, 12.] The almond is one of the first trees that buds and blossoms in the spring; so a branch of that with buds and blossoms upon it, is a proper emblem to denote God's hastening the execution of the predictions he made by his prophet, who lived to see most of his prophecies fulfilled. The Hebrew words shaked, an almond-tree, and shoked, hastening, have an affinity in their sound (such paronomasias being frequent in scripture; see the note upon Isa. xxiv. 17): so that not only the nature of the almond-tree, but the very sound of the Hebrew word that signifies it, denotes God's hastening to fulfil the prophecies which Jeremiah uttered by his directions.

Ver. 13.] The steam of a seething-pot doth fitly represent God's judgments, which are often compared to a fire, as the afflictions of the Israelites are to a "smoking furnace" Gen. xv. 17). This steam was represented to the prophet as raised by a fire, or driven by a wind coming from the north; for the latter part of the verse may be better rendered thus: "And the appearance of it was as coming from the north." So that the pot or caldron itself may denote Judea or Jerusalem in particular (expressed in the same figure, Ezek. xi. 3, 7, xxiv. 3), set on fire and consumed by an army of Chaldeans, who lay northward of Judea (see iv. 6, vi. 1).

Ver. 15. I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north,] There were lesser kings and princes, who were either allies or tributaries to the Babylonian empire (compare xxxiv. 1, l. 41, li. 27). God saith, them touching all their wickedness, who have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands.

17 ¶ Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee: be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them.

all these shall join their forces with the Chaldean army in order to the conquest of Judea. The word family is equivalent to people here, and viii. 3, x. 25, where these words, "The families that call not upon thy name," are equivalent to "the kingdoms that call not upon thy name," in Ps. lxxix. 6.

They shall set every one his throne] Each prince shall pitch his royal pavilion, with all the marks of sovereignty belonging to it, in token of having obtained a complete victory, and taken entire possession of the city (see xliii. 10).

Ver. 16.] Then I will no longer speak unto them by my prophets, whose threatenings they have not regarded, but the judgments I bring upon them shall declare their wickedness, and the vengeance due unto them for their idolatries (compare iv. 12, where the words are the same in the original).

Ver. 17. Gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee:] It being the custom of the eastern countries to wear long garments, which they girded up about their loins, when any business required nimbleness or expedition: the phrase signifies dispatching any message with all possible vigour and intention of mind as well as of body (see Job xxxviii. 3, 1 Pet. i. 13). We may apply both senses to the text here; for God commands the prophet instantly to undertake the office

18 For, behold, I have made thee this day a defended city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land.

19 And they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the LORD, to deliver thee.

he designed him for, and to discharge it with courage and presence of mind, as it follows.

Lest I confound thee before them.] The Hebrew verb is the same in both parts of the sentence, which may literally be rendered thus: "Be not confounded at their faces (when thou appearest in their presence), lest I confound thee before them." God exhorts him not to be dismayed at the scoffs and ill treatment he should meet with from hardened sinners especially, from such who think their power and authority set them above reproof, and will bear them out in whatsoever they do (see Ezek. xi. 6). He tells him it is better to bear the reproaches of men, than the reproofs of God, who will call him to a strict account how he hath discharged his duty (see 1 Cor. ix. 16, 17).

Ver. 18.] God promises to defend him against all the open assaults and secret contrivances of his enemies, the kings, princes, and priests, as well as those of an inferior rank (see xv. 10, xx. 2, xxiii. 18, &c. xxvi. 10, xxxv. 15, xxxviii. 6).

Ver. 19. They shall not prevail against thee:] They shall no more be able to prevail against thee, than they could against an impregnable wall or fortress (ver. 8).

I am with thee—to deliver thee.] I will show my power in delivering thee out of all thy troubles, when thy adversaries shall become a prey to their enemies (see xxxix. 11, 12, and ver. 8 of this chapter).

CHAPTER II.

1 MOREOVER the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

2 Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the LORD: I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown.

CHAP. II.

ARGUMENT.—God expostulates with his people, for their ungrateful returns to his former benefits: and upbraids them with their fondness for the idolatries of the neighbouring countries.

Ver. 2. Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem,] In the most public parts of the city, that every one may hear.

I remember thee,—the love of thine espousals,] I remember my first kindness to thee, when I delivered thee out of Egypt (compare Hos. ii. 15): and espoused thee to myself to be my own peculiar people. The covenant which God made with the Jews at mount Sinai, is commonly represented under the metaphor of a marriage contract (see iii. 15, Ezek. xvi. 8, 60). Upon this account, idolatry is called "going a whoring after other gods:" because it is the same degree of unfaithfulness to God, which an adulteress is guilty of in respect of her husband.

When thou wentest after me,—in a land that was not sown.] When I conducted thee through the wilderness, and there fed thee miraculously (see ver. 6).

3 Israel was holiness unto the LORD, and the first fruits of his increase: all that devour him shall offend; evil shall come upon them, saith the LORD.

4 Hear ye the word of the LORD, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel: 5 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, What iniquity have

Ver. 3. Israel was holiness unto the Lord, and the first fruits of his increase:] The Jews were then consecrated to me as a holy nation (see Exod. xix. 5, 6), as a people particularly dedicated to me, as the first fruits of the increase of the ground are, by their law, consecrated to God (Exod. xxiii. 19).

All that devour him shall offend; evil shall come upon them.] The words were better rendered in the preter-perfect tense, as the future is often taken; "all they that devour him were trespassers, evil came upon them;" i. e. they that went about to destroy God's people were reputed by him as sacrilegious persons, as if they had devoured holy things, and accordingly met with remarkable punishments. Such were the Egyptians, Amalekites, &c. From the verb here rendered to offend comes asham, "a trespass-offering," which was particularly appointed to be offered by those who had ignorantly taken of the holy things set apart to God's service (see Lev. v. 15, xxii. 14, 16).

Ver. 4.] Compare xxxi. 1. The prophet directs his discourse to the twelve tribes, as he does afterward, iii. 14, &c. Nor was the captivity of the ten tribes so total, but that there were some Israelites still re-your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain?

6 Neither said they, Where is the Lord that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, that led us through the wilderness, through a land of deserts and of pits, through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death, through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt?

7 And I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof and the goodness thereof; but when ye entered, ye defiled my land, and made mine heritage an abomination.

8 The priests said not, Where is the Lord?

maining among the Assyrian colonies (see 2 Chron. xxxiv. 9, xxxv. 18).

Ver. 5. What iniquity have your fathers found in me,] The same expostulation God makes by his prophet, Micah, vi. 3.

Walked after vanity, and are become vain?] That they have forsaken me, and followed the idolatrous worship of the heathens (compare 2 Kings xvii. 15). Idols are commonly styled vanities (see particularly in this prophecy, x. 15, xiv. 22, xvi. 19), and "things of nought" (xvi. 14), because "an idol is nothing in the world," as St. Paul speaks, 1 Cor. viii. 4. Not being what it pretends to be, nor can it bring any profit to them that worship it (see below, ver. 8).

Ver. 6. That led us through the wilderness,] God's sustaining such a vast multitude in a barren desert, was an amazing instance of his almighty power, and his goodness and care over his people (see Deut. viii. 15, 16, xxxii. 10).

Through a land of deserts and of pits,] The Hebrew word shacha, a "pit," sometimes is put for destruction, as Ps. xxx. 3, and is near akin to the word shachath, which signifies death and corruption. The Chaldee paraphrase upon Job xxx. 14, explains shoah, desolation, by shaka. Thus we may expound it here, a place where there were no comforts or conveniences of life: to the same sense it is called in the following words, "a land of the shadow of death."

Ver. 7. I brought you into a plentiful country,] The Hebrew reads, "into the land of Carmel," which was so plentiful a part of Judea, that the word from thence came to signify a fruitful place, in general (see Isa. x. 15, xxix. 17, xxxii. 15). Judea is commonly called by Moses, "a land that flows with milk and honey."

But when ye entered, ye defiled my land,] By your sins (Lev. xviii. 25, Numb. xxxv. 34), chiefly by your idolatries (Psalm cvi. 38); that sin receiving great aggravation from hence, that the people should thereby renounce God's authority in the very land, whose propriety he had reserved to himself (Lev. xxv. 23), though he had graciously bestowed upon them the use of it.

Ver. 8. The priests said not, Where is the Lord?] The priests, whose office it was to instruct others in their duty (see Mal. ii. 6, 7), were ignorant or regardless of it themselves: and this was the principal reason of that degeneracy of manners which prevailed among the people (see Hos. iv. 6).

The pastors also transgressed against me,] A pastor or shepherd is taken in the prophets for a civil magistrate, as well as an ecclesiastical governor, as has been observed upon Isa. lvi. 11. In the former sense it is used in several places of this prophecy (see vi. 3, xxv. 34, xlix. 19). Which sense agrees best with the scope of the text here, which is to show, that all and they that handle the law knew me not; the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that do not profit.

9 ¶ Wherefore I will yet plead with you, saith the Lord, and with your children's children will I plead.

10 For pass over the isles of Chitim, and see; and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing.

11 Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit.

12 Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and orders and degrees of men in authority had contributed to that corruption of manners which had overspread the nation (compare ver. 26 of this chapter).

The prophets prophesied by Baal,] See xxii. 13, and the notes upon ver. 5 of this chapter, and vii. 31.

Ver. 9. I will yet plead with you,] The expression is taken from the pleas of plaintiff and defendant used in the courts of judicature (see Isa. xliii. 26). It imports God's laying before them their demerits, how defective they have been in their duty, and what ungrateful returns they have made to him for all his favours (see ver. 35 of this chapter). And this he doth sometimes by word of mouth, and by the messages of his prophets (see Hos. ii. 2, Mic. vi. 2). And sometimes he does it by his judgments, the manifest tokens of God's vengeance due to men's sins (see Isa. lxvi. 16, Jer. xxv. 31, Ezek. xx. 36, xxxviii. 22).

With your children's children] According to the tenor of the law, whereby God threatens to "visit the sins," particularly the idolatry, of "the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation."

Ver. 10.] The isles of Chittim are the countries lying upon the Mediterranean sea (see the notes on Isa. xxiii. 1), which lay west of Judea. Kedar, being part of Arabia, was eastward from thence; for Arabia is commonly called the "east country" in scripture (see Gen. x. 30, xxv. 6, Job i. 3); and particularly the inhabitants of Kedar are called the "men of the east," xlix. 28 of this prophecy. So the sense of the verse is, if you search from east to west, from one end of the world to the other, you will find no instance like this of the Jews' apostasy, mentioned in the following verse.

Ver. 11.] Men are very tenacious of the religion of their forefathers, and hardly prevailed upon to part with it, though the change be never so reasonable; whereas the Jews have changed the worship of the true God, who was their strength and their glory, for idols and vanities that cannot save nor protect them (ver. 5). God is called the glory of the Jews, because he chose the ark for the place where his glory should reside; for the same reason the temple is called the "throne of his glory," xiv. 21, and they are said to have "changed their glory into the similitude of an ox," Ps. cvi. 20 (a text exactly parallel with this place), when they made the golden calf; and instead of the divine Shechinah, which should go before them, they chose that senseless idol to be their conductor. God may be called their glory for another reason, viz. because he chose them to be his peculiar people, and took them into his immediate care and protection; a privilege which no other nation could boast of (see Deut. iv. 7).

Ver. 12.] This is such a horrible wickedness, that be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord.

13 For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water.

14 ¶ Is Israel a servant? is he a homeborn slave? why is he spoiled?

15 The young lions roared upon him, and yelled, and they made his land waste: his cities are burned without inhabitant.

16 Also the children of Noph and Tahapanes have broken the crown of thy head.

17 Hast thou not procured this unto thyself, in that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, when he led thee by the way?

18 And now what hast thou to do in the way the heavens themselves should be affrighted to behold it, and the celestial bodies withdraw their light and influences from that part of the world where such enormities are practised. Such rhetorical apostrophes to heaven and earth, import the unusualness, and likewise the indignity, of the things spoken of; implying them to be such, that if men take no notice of them, the elements themselves will testify against such practices (compare Isa. i. 1, Mic. i. 2, vi. 2, Job xx. 27).

Ver. 13.] God is the author and giver of all blessings, both spiritual and temporal, from whom all good gifts are derived, as from an inexhaustible spring or fountain (see Ps. xxxvi. 9). And wherever else men place their happiness, whether in false religions, or in the uncertain comforts of worldly blessings, they will find themselves disappointed, just as they that expect to find water at broken cisterns or conduits. This particularly reflects upon the Jews renouncing the worship of the true God, and their dependence upon him, and betaking themselves to the alliance and protection of idolaters (see ver. 18, 25, 36).

Ver. 14.] God redeemed Israel from the bondage of Egypt, and adopted him to be his son (Exod. iv. 22). So that the servitude he now undergoes, and his being made a prey to so many foreign enemies, cannot be owing to his birth or primitive condition, but must be imputed to his sins, of which his slavery is the consequent (compare Isa. i. 1, lii. 3).

Ver. 15.] i. e. The kings of Syria, Assyria, and other neighbouring countries (see Isa. i. 7). Tyrants and oppressors are commonly compared to lions (see below, li. 17, Job iv. 10, 11, Ps. xxxiv. 10, lviii. 6, Ezek. xix. 3, 6, Nah. ii. 11, 12).

Ver. 16.] Or, "feed upon thy crown;" so the margin reads; i. e. destroy and devour the principal, or best parts of the country. So the best spices are called "the head of spices," Exod. xxx. 23, Cant. iv. 14. If we follow the reading of the text, the prophet pursues the metaphor of the lions, mentioned ver. 15, whose custom it is to "tear the arm with the crown of the head," Deut. xxxiii. 20. Concerning Noph and Tahapanes, see xliii. 7, xlv. 1. By their children or inhabitants are meant the Egyptians in general. The verse may relate to the conquest that the same Pharaoh-nechoh made of Judea (2 Kings xxiii. 33), which, though it happened after the time that this prophecy was uttered, may be spoken of here as already past; a way of speaking usual in the prophets (see the note upon Isa. xxi. 9).

Ver. 17. When he led thee by the way? Who would have been thy guide and conductor, thy strength and support (see Deut. xxxii. 10), if thou hadst not hearkened to his voice.

of Egypt, to drink the waters of Sihor? or what hast thou to do in the way of Assyria, to drink the waters of the river?

19. Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee: know therefore and see that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and that my fear is not in thee, saith the Lord God of hosts.

20 ¶ For of old time I have broken thy yoke, and burst thy bands; and thou saidst, I will not transgress; when upon every high hill and under every green tree thou wanderest, playing the harlot.

21 Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed: how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?

Ver. 18.] The kings of Egypt and Assyria were the two most potent monarchs in the neighbourhood of Judea; and, according as either of those prevailed over the other, the Jews made their court to him who was the stronger, and desired his assistance. This is expressed by "drinking the water of Sihor," or Nile, called so for its blackness or muddiness (see Isa. xxiii. 3); and of Euphrates, called here "the river" by way of eminence (compare Isa. xxvii. 12). The expressions allude to ver. 13, where human assistances are called "broken cisterns," and opposed to God, who, by reason of his all-sufficiency, is styled the "fountain of living waters." The Septuagint render Sihor, Ἰνδός, as if it were the same with the river Gihon, mentioned Gen. ii. 13. It is certain many of the ancients understood Gihon to be the Nile, particularly the author of Eccles. xxiv. 27. And Ludolphus observes, that the Nile is now called by that name in the Ethiopic language (see the Commentary upon his Ethiopic Hist. lib. i. n. 56).

The waters of Sihor? Some suppose Sihor to be the same with "the river of Egypt" (see the note upon Ezek. xlvii. 19, and upon Amos vi. 14).

Ver. 19.] The miseries that your own sins have brought upon you, are a sufficient instruction to you to break off your evil courses, and to return to God by a sincere repentance.

Ver. 20. For of old time I have broken thy yoke,—and thou saidst, I will not transgress; Upon several deliverances I gave thee, that out of Egypt, and in the times of the judges, thou didst promise to serve me faithfully (see Exod. xix. 8, Josh. xxiv. 18, Judg. x. 16, 1 Sam. xii. 10).

When upon every high hill,—thou wanderest, The sense would run easier, if we read, "yet upon every high hill," &c. and so the particle ki is translated, xxii. 24 of this prophecy. God upbraids them with the breach of promise, that after all their resolutions of amendment, they still relapsed to the former sin of worshipping idols upon high places, and in shady groves, which the law expressly forbade (Deut. xii. 2, Ezek. xvi. 24). The idolatrous kings built temples for their idols upon high mountains and high places (see 1 Kings xii. 31, xiii. 32). These were still frequented after the religious kings had destroyed all other monuments of idolatry (see 1 Kings xv. 24, xxii. 43).

Ver. 21.] The laws which I gave thee, and the means of grace which I afforded thee, were sufficient to have made thee fruitful in every good work, though now thou art strangely degenerate. The church is often represented under the metaphor of a vine (see Isa. v. 1, and the parallel texts referred to 22 For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much sope, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord God.

23 How canst thou say, I am not polluted, I have not gone after Baalim? see thy way in the valley, know what thou hast done: thou art a swift dromedary traversing her ways;

24 A wild ass used to the wilderness, that snuffeth up the wind at her pleasure; in her occasion who can turn her away? all they that seek her will not weary themselves; in her month they shall find her.

25 Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst: but thou saidst, There is no hope: no; for I have loved strangers, and after them will I go.

there in the margin), and the means of grace under the notion of planting (see Isa. lx. 21, lxi. 3, Matt. xv. 13, 1 Cor. iii. 6).

Ver. 22.] Though thou usest ever so many methods of washing away thy sins, such as are the rites of expiation prescribed by the law, or practised by idolaters; though thou insistest never so much upon thy own innocence and justification (see ver. 23), yet the marks or stains of thy sins will always appear in the sight of God, till they are done away by a sincere repentance and reformation. Expositors are divided about the sense of the word niktam, which our translators render marked: and in which sense the word is taken for a spot or mark, in the Chaldee and Syriac tongues. But Bochart thinks the word catham with caph, equivalent to catham with cheth, and expounds it hidden, or laid up: as men's sins are said to be, when God, perhaps, bears with them for the present, but intends to call them to account in due time (see Deut. xxii. 34, Job xiv. 17, Hos. xiii. 12).

Ver. 23. I have not gone after Baalim? The Jews, it seems, have found out distinctions, whereby to reconcile the worship of the true God with those religious rites, which they paid to the deities of the heathen, called here Baalim. These they pretended were only inferior demons or spirits, or the souls of men departed, and might be worshipped in subordination to the supreme God. The word Baalim answers in the Hebrew to κύρις πολλοί (1 Cor. viii. 5), whom St. Paul mentions as the inferior deities of the heathen.

See thy way in the valley, know what thou hast done:] That horrible practice of the Jewish idolaters in burning their sons and daughters in the fire, in the valley of Hinnom (see vii. 32), is an effectual confutation of those pretences whereby they justified their innocence, since this was a way of worship expressly forbidden by God (Lev. xx. 2, &c.): and such an impious one, as none but the devil could invent.

Ibid. and ver. 24. Thou art a swift dromedary traversing her ways, &c.] The particle as, is to be supplied in both these sentences, as it is frequently understood (see note on Isa. xxi. 8). The prophet persists in comparing their fondness for variety of idols to the rage of lust (which metaphor is pursued at large by Ezekiel, ch. xvi. xxiii.), and upon that account he resembles them to these wild beasts, which have their constant seasons of breeding, and are then violently set upon satisfying their lust, and not to be caught or tamed. The comparisons withal set forth the indefatigable pains the Jews took in applying themselves to foreign princees for their succour and alliance (compare ver. 36), instead of relying upon 26 As the thief is ashamed when he is found, so is the house of Israel ashamed; they, their kings, their princes, and their priests, and their prophets, 27 Saying to a stock, Thou art my father; and to a stone, Thou hast brought me forth: for they have turned their back unto me, and not their face: but in the time of their trouble they will say, Arise, and save us.

28 But where are thy gods that thou hast made thee? let them arise, if they can save thee in the time of thy trouble: for according to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah.

29 Wherefore will ye plead with me? ye all have transgressed against me, saith the Lord.

30 In vain have I smitten your children; they

God, and a strict observance of his laws. These practices of theirs are often reproved in the prophets (see Isa. xxx. 1, &c., lvii. 9, 10, Hos. v. 13, xxi. 1).

In her month they shall find her.] The hunters know the seasons of catching these wild creatures, and never try to take them but in a proper time. And it is as much in vain to offer any arguments to this people, to reclaim them from their eager pursuit after idolatry. The time of affliction is the only season when they will hearken to God's voice (see ver. 27, Hos. v. 15).

Ver. 25. Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst:] Do not wear out thy shoes, or sandals, and expose thyself to thirst and weariness, in undertaking long journeys, to make new alliances with idolaters. Some think in these expressions, their persisting in idolatry is compared to the lewdness of common harlots, and the sottishness of an habitual drunkard (compare Ezek. xvi. 25, Deut. xxix. 19).

Thou saidst, There is no hope:] The words of desperate sinners, who are resolved to continue in their wickedness, in spite of all the reasons that can be offered to the contrary (compare xviii. 12).

For I have loved strangers.] Or strange gods (compare iii. 13, Deut. xxxii. 16). They were resolved to be like the heathen round about them; to court their friendship, and to partake of their idolatries.

Ver. 26.] As a thief hath nothing to say for himself, but is perfectly confounded when he is taken in the very act; so the house of Israel have no manner of plea wherewith to excuse their idolatry, but only an impudent denial of the fact itself (see ver. 23).

Ver. 27. Saying to a stock, Thou art my father.] Giving the title of father due to God, as the sovereign author and preserver of all things (see iii. 19), to senseless images, which are indeed no better than what they appear to be, wood and stone (see the note on Isa. xlv. 13).

They have turned their back unto me.] A token of contempt and aversion (see xviii. 17, xxxii. 33). The word noreph, properly signifies the hinder part of the neck, but is used for the back parts, particularly xlviii. 39, we read, "how Moab turned the back with shame!"

In the time of their trouble they will say.] As they did formerly (see 1 Sam. xii. 13, Ps. lxxviii. 34).

Ver. 28.] God returns the same answer he formerly did, when their distresses made them seek him by a forced submission (see Judg. x. 14). Every county and city hath its peculiar deity, according to the custom of the heathen (see 2 Kings xvii. 30, 31, Hos. viii. 11, x. 1).

received no correction; your own sword hath devoured your prophets, like a destroying lion.

31 ¶ O generation, see ye the word of the LORD. Have I been a wilderness unto Israel? a land of darkness? wherefore say my people, We are lords; we will come no more unto thee?

32 Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? yet my people have forgotten me days without number.

33 Why trimmest thou thy way to seek love? therefore hast thou also taught the wicked ones thy ways.

34 Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocents: I have not found it by secret search, but upon all these.

35 Yet thou sayest, Because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me. Behold, I will plead with thee, because thou sayest, I have not sinned.

36 Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way? thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria.

37 Yea, thou shalt go forth from him, and thine hands upon thine head: for the LORD hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them.

Ver. 29. Wherefore will ye plead with me?] Why do you insist upon your innocence (see ver. 35)? Why do you lay claim to my former promises, as if you had not forfeited your title to them by your sins?

Ver. 30. In vain have I smitten your children;] The design of God's judgments is men's reformation: and where they do not attain this end, it shows that such a people are incorrigible. The words are directed to the land of Judea, whose inhabitants are called its children, v. 7 (compare Isa. i. 5).

Your own sword hath devoured your prophets;] You are so far from receiving correction, that you take away the lives of those prophets who reprove you, and exhort you to amend your ways (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, Neh. ix. 26, Acts vii. 52).

Ver. 31. O generation, see ye the word of the Lord.] Consider what I say to you from the mouth of God: Have ye not been plentifully provided for by him? has he been backward in bestowing his kindness upon you? To this sense some render the latter part of the sentence a backward land, a land of snow, clouds, and dark vapours, where the fruits spring or ripen late, for want of the kindly warmth of the sun; a character that did by no means belong to Judea.

We are lords;] Words that imply casting off God's authority, and rejecting him from being their Lord and sovereign (compare Ps. xii. 4).

Ver. 32.] God was the glory and ornament of the Jewish nation, upon whose favour and protection they so justly valued themselves, and were thereby distinguished from other nations (see Deut. iv. 7, 8, 2 Sam. vii. 23, 24). So that it is a just matter of astonishment, that this people, called by his name, should now for so many years renounce their relation to him, who is their truest glory (see ver. 11).

Ver. 33. Why trimmest thou thy way to seek love?] The prophet alludes (as before, ver. 20) to the practices of a common harlot, who decks herself, and uses all the inveigling arts that may recommend her to her gallants: in like manner have the Jews tried all methods to gain the friendship and assistance of foreign idolaters, who are called her lovers (see iii. 1, iv. 13, xxii. 22). Noldius expounds it, Why dost thou justify thy ways, or insist upon thy innocence (compare ver. 35)? and translates the particle taken [therefore] whereas (see his Concordance, p. 507).

Therefore hast thou also taught the wicked ones thy ways.] Thou hast by this means, not only confirmed those nations in their idolatrous practices, but hast also taught them to practice new idolatries which they were not accustomed to.

Ver. 34. In thy skirts is found the blood of the souls (or lives) of the poor innocents:] Of the children offered in sacrifice to Moloch (see ver. 23, xix. 4, Ps. cvi. 38). The guilt of that innocent blood was as evident upon them as if they had murdered them with their own hands, and the stains of their blood had been found upon their clothes.

I have not found it by secret search,] It is become a national sin (see vii. 31, xix. 4, 5). Some render the former part of the sentence thus: "Thou didst not find them breaking up" [a house, like thieves], who might be killed immediately upon the spot, according to the law (Exod. xxii. 2); i. e. thou didst not find them guilty of any such notorious wickedness as to deserve present death.

Ver. 35.] The people insisting still upon their own innocence, God tells them he will debate the case with them, and prove the contrary (see before, ver. 9, 23, 29).

Ver. 36.] He reproves them for their various methods of courting the alliance of foreign idolaters, which implied a distrust of God's protection (see before, ver. 13, 18, 23, 25). Ahaz made himself tributary to the king Assyria, but it turned to his disgrace and ruin (see 2 Chron. xxviii. 21). In like manner shall ye be disappointed in your expectations of succour from Egypt (see xxxvii. 5, 7, Lam. iv. 17, 2 Kings xxiv. 7).

Ver. 37.] The ambassadors thou sendest to Egypt shall return with disappointment and confusion (see 2 Sam. xiii. 19). For God will not prosper these unlawful means thou makest use of for thy preservation (see ver. 36).

CHAPTER III.

1 THEY say, If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, shall he return unto her again? shall not that land be greatly polluted? but thou hast played the harlot

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT.—Under the metaphor of a woman's being false to her husband, God sets forth the idolatry both of Israel and Judah: he earnestly exhorts them to repentance, and promises, upon their repentance, in due time to receive them into favour.

Ver. 1. Shall not that land be greatly polluted?] The words allude to Deut. xxiv. 4, where it is said, that if a man take her to wife again, who had been with many lovers; yet return again to me, saith the LORD.

2 Lift up thine eyes unto the high places, and see where thou hast not been lien with. In the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness; and thou hast polluted the land with thy whoredoms and with thy wickedness.

3 Therefore the showers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain; and thou hadst a whore's forehead, thou refusedst to be ashamed.

4 Wilt thou not from this time cry unto me, My father, thou art the guide of my youth?

5 Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Behold, thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest.

6 ¶ The LORD said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot.

7 And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it.

8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also.

9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks.

10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the LORD.

11 And the LORD said unto me, The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.

divorced from him, it is "such an abomination as causeth the land to sin." Such a practice would give encouragement to a community of wives, which must produce all manner of uncleanness and confusion.

But thou hast played the harlot with many lovers;] Thou hast entered into a confederacy with many foreigners (see the note on ii. 38); and learned their idolatries (compare ii. 20): a thing expressly forbidden in the law of Moses (see Exod. xxxiv. 16, Deut. xii. 30, 1 Kings xi. 1, 2).

Ver. 2.] Idolatry is usually expressed by "going a whoring after other gods" (see the note on ii. 2); who were worshipped in the high places (see ii. 20). Their fondness for idolatry is compared to the lewdness of a common strumpet, who "lies in wait for men as for a prey" (Prov. xxiii. 28), or, "as a robber" (so the margin reads), the same comparison which is here used; the Arabians being remarkable for living upon robberies, and lying in wait for travellers.

Ver. 3. The showers have been withholden,] Compare ix. 12, xiv. 4, God threatens, as a punishment of the people's sins, to make the heavens iron (Deut. xxviii. 22). The climate of Judea wanted rain at two seasons; the first was just after seed time (see Isa. xxx. 23), called the former rain; the other not long before harvest, called the latter rain (Joel ii. 23, compared with Amos iv. 7).

And [yet] thou hadst a whore's forehead,] All my judgments have made no impression upon thee, nor hast thou any remorse for thy wickedness (compare vi. 15, viii. 12).

Ver. 4.] Notwithstanding their former obstinacy, God calls them still to repentance, to acknowledge the duty they owe to God, both as their father (see ver. 19), and their husband: for under both these ties God was related to them (see ii. 27, and ver. 14 of this chapter). God calls himself the guide of their youth (compare Prov. ii. 17), as having espoused them in the days of their youth before their manners were corrupted by idolatry (see ii. 2, Hos. ii. 15).

Ver. 5. Will he reserve his anger for ever?] God puts words into the people's mouths in this and the foregoing verse, whereby they might express their humiliation, and hope in his mercy, which they might still expect to find upon their true repentance, though upon account of their long provocations they had reason to despair of it.

Thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest.] Thy behaviour hath been in direct opposition to these kind admonitions; thou dost still persist in malicious wickedness, and by thy actions showest the utmost hatred and despite against God and goodness.

Ver. 6. The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah] This relates to the time when Josiah made a great reformation, and purged the land from the idols which had been set up in every part of it (see 2 Kings xxiii.); wherein the people did outwardly comply with him, but still retained a kindness for their former idolatries (compare ver. 10 of this chapter with Zeph. i. 5, and 2 Kings xxiii. 26, 27).

Ver. 7.] I sent to her frequent messages by my prophets, exhorting her to repentance (see 2 Kings xvii. 13). The two kingdoms of Israel and Judah are described as sisters in iniquity. The same metaphor is applied to Samaria and Jerusalem, the two metropolises of those kingdoms (Ezek. xxiii. 4, &c.). The word treacherous, properly denotes a wife's being unfaithful to her husband (see ver. 20); and from thence it is applied to the sin of idolatry, which is spiritual whoredom, as hath been already observed.

Ver. 8.] Or, "when for the sake of the adultery which backsliding Israel had committed, I had put her away." The same metaphor is still pursued; God's casting off the ten tribes is expressed by giving them a "bill of divorce;" but such a one as differed from the common bills of divorce in this particular, that God was ready to receive them again, whenever they would return from their idolatries (see ver. 1 of this chapter). Upon which account, God denies that he had given his people a bill of divorce, Isa. i. 1, meaning such a one as was irreversible.

Ver. 9. The lightness [or fame] &c.] See ii. 7, 27.

Ver. 10.] See the note on ver. 6. That the generality of the people did not join sincerely in Josiah's reformation appears from hence, that immediately upon his death, they relapsed into the grossest idolatry (see below, vii. 18, xix. 4, &c. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 33).

Ver. 11.] Because Judah hath sinned against greater convictions, and would not take warning by that desolation which God brought upon the whole kingdom of Israel for their idolatries (compare Ezek. xvi. 51).

Ver. 12.] The sin of the ten tribes being attended with more favorable circumstances than that of Judah, the prophet is commanded to call them to repentance, with promises of pardon. In order to this end, he is bid to direct his speech northward, i. e. towards Assyria and Media, whither the ten tribes were carried away captive, which countries lay north of Judea (see ver. 18, l. 9, 41, compared with li. 11, 27), 12 ¶ Go and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the LORD; and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you: for I am merciful, saith the LORD, and I will not keep anger for ever.

13 Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the LORD thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the LORD.

14 Turn, O backsliding children, saith the LORD; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:

15 And I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.

16 And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the LORD, they shall say no more, 'The ark of the covenant of the LORD: neither shall it come to mind: neither shall they remember it; neither shall they visit it; neither shall that be done any more.'

17 At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the LORD; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the LORD, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart.

18 In those days the house of Judah shall 14); whereas, at that time, when Jeremiah lived, the princes, the priests, and prophets, were the ringleaders in seducing the people, and enticing them to idolatry (see ii. 8).

Ver. 16.] The words imply, that the Jews shall be gathered together from their several dispersions, and restored to their own country (see the notes on Isa. xi. 11, lxi. 4). In those times the Mosaic covenant shall be utterly forgotten, and passed over in silence as not worthy to be mentioned (compare Isa. lxi. 17); and all the external marks and ceremonies thereto belonging shall be laid aside. Such as were the ark, where the tables of the covenant were laid up, and the temple, which was the repository of the ark itself (compare xiv. 22); where, by the law of Moses, the Jews were bound to pay their yearly attendance, and offer up their solemn worship to God.

Neither shall that be done any more.] The margin reads, "neither shall it be magnified any more;" to which sense the verb nasah is rendered by our translators, 1 Sam. xii. 6. But the original will bear this sense, which agrees better with the scope of the place: "neither shall any more sacrifice be offered there." In which sense the same verb is elsewhere taken (see Exod. xxix. 38, Ps. lxxv. 15).

Ver. 17.] Jerusalem is often called the "city of God" (see Ps. xlviii. 1, lxxxvii. 3): whereupon it is a fit type or figure of the church of God (see Isa. lxxvi. 20, Zech. viii. 3): which the text tells us shall be called the "throne of the Lord;" i. e. God shall give evident proofs of his peculiar residence there, as the king and protector of his people, and in a more eminent manner than ever he did at the temple in Jerusalem (compare xiv. 21). To this church "all the nations shall be gathered," as it follows; i. e. the Jews and gentiles shall then be joined in one religious body or society, and worship God with "one mind and one mouth."

The expression alludes to the Jews going up to Jerusalem at their solemn festivals (see the notes upon Isa. ii. 3, lx. 9, lxxvi. 20).

To the name of the Lord,] To the church where God hath placed his name, as he promised to do in Solomon's temple (1 Kings viii. 29,) and where he will give evident tokens of his power and presence.

Neither shall they walk, &c.] God's restoring his ancient people the Jews, shall be attended with the bringing in of the "fulness of the gentiles" into the church, and the utter abolishing of all false and idolatrous ways of worship (compare Rom. xi. 25, 26, and see the notes on Isa. i. 29, lxxvi. 12, 19).

Ver. 18. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel,] Most of the prophecies which mention the restoration of the Jews join Judah and Israel together, as equal sharers in that

The restoration of Israel, as distinct from Judah, is the subject of several other prophecies (see the note upon ver. 18).

Ver. 13. Only acknowledge thine iniquity,] Repentance is a condition necessarily required in order to their being restored to God's favour (see Deut. xxx. 1—3).

Hast scattered thy ways] Hast gone a whoring after the gods of the neighbouring nations; for the word translated strangers, signifies strange gods (compare ii. 25). The phrase "thou hast scattered thy ways," is taken from the lewdness of common harlots, who promiscuously prostitute themselves to all comers (compare Prov. xxx. 20).

Ver. 14. Turn, O backsliding children,] The prophet directed his speech, ver. 12, to the ten tribes: and now he addresses himself to Judah as well as to Israel, as being equally concerned in the mercies here promised (see ver. 17, 18, and iv. 1—3).

For I am married unto you:] See ii. 2, and compare xxxi. 32. The phrase here and in the text last mentioned is the same, baalti bakem, which Dr. Pocock is inclined to interpret to the sense of disreputing, or disdaining, and quotes some rabbies who expound the words to this sense, "I have of late disregarded you, but now I will take or choose you, one of a city," &c. (see his miscellany notes upon Porta Mosis, p. 146).

I will take you one of a city, and two of a family,] The word family here is equivalent to a country or kingdom (compare i. 15, Zech. xiv. 17, 18). Some expound the words to this sense: Although there be but one of you in a city, or two in a country, I will not leave those behind, but will give them a share in the general restoration of their brethren (compare Isa. xxvii. 12). Others suppose that the words relate to their return from Babylon, when the whole congregation was but "forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty, beside their servants" Ezra ii. 64), a small number in comparison of those that stayed behind. But I conceive that this verse, as well as the context, relates to the general restoration of the Jews, yet to come; and they import, that there shall be but a few of the Jews in comparison, to whom this promise shall belong, viz. those who are elsewhere called the remnant (see the notes on Isa. i. 9, iv. 2, x. 22, and compare Ezek. xx. 38, Zech. xiii. 8, 9).

Ver. 15.] This is likewise an evangelical promise (compare xxiii. 4). Implying, that under the happy times here foretold all governors, both civil and ecclesiastical, should faithfully discharge their trust, in duly governing and instructing the people committed to their charge; and all that are in authority shall answer that character God gives of David, that he was "a man after his own heart" (1 Sam. xiii.

walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers.

19 But I said, How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations? and I said, Thou shalt call me, My father; and shalt not turn away from me.

20 ¶ Surely as a wife treacherously departeth from her husband, so have ye dealt treacherously with me, O house of Israel, saith the LORD.

21 A voice was heard upon the high places, blessing (see xxx. 3, xxxi. 1, l. 4, 20. Isa. xi. 13, Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 22, Hos. i. 11, Zech. x. 6).

They shall come together] See before ver. 12, i. 15, and compare xxxi. 8.

Ver. 19. How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land.] How can it be consistent with the divine justice, for God to receive such a rebellious people into favour, to own them for his children, and restore them to the possession of that goodly inheritance which he gave to their fathers? Judea is elsewhere called a "pleasant land," the "glory of all lands," and the "land which God had espied out" for his chosen people (see Ezek. xx. 6, Dan. viii. 9, xi. 16, 41, 45).

A goodly heritage of the hosts of nations?] The words may be rendered, "a goodly heritage of the desire of nations," taking tsებათ [host] as the same in sense with tsēbi, the foregoing word, and as a derivative from the Chaldee verb tsēba, which signifies to desire (Dan. v. 19, vii. 19). This sense the Chaldee paraphrast follows. If we take tsებათ in the usual sense which our translators follow, the phrase will import that land which the armies of the gentiles are to possess in the latter times, to which this prophecy relates (see Ezek. xxxviii. 8); when, according to our Saviour's prediction, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles" (Luke xxi. 24). But after all, I am apt to think that the Septuagint have hit upon the true sense of this place, who render it, "the inheritance of the Almighty God of the nations;" taking the word tsēbi for a title belonging to God, denoting his superlative excellence. The word is used in a sense near akin to this, 2 Sam. i. 19, where it denotes the regal dignity of Saul. A great regard is to be paid to the authority of that version, because the compilers of it had better opportunities of knowing the extent of the Hebrew language than we can have at this distance, and might have very good reasons for rendering some words in a singular and unusual signification, and such a one as the later rabbins and lexicographers have not observed. Upon these grounds, Bishop Pearson, Dr. Pocock, and other learned men, justify several passages in that translation, which are cited in the New Testament, and show that the sense of the original is truly expressed by it.

Thou shalt call me, My father;] Upon this condition I will restore thee into grace and favour, that thou acknowledge those benefits which thou hast from time to time received at my hands, and vow faithful obedience to me (compare Deut. xxxii. 6, I Chron. xxix. 10).

When the Jews called upon God as their Father in their prayers, they did it chiefly by way of confession, when they would acknowledge his former favours, together with the ungrateful returns they had made to him, and withal desired to express their weeping and supplications of the children of Israel: for they have perverted their way, and they have forgotten the LORD their God.

22 Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings. Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the LORD our God.

23 Truly in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains: truly in the LORD our God is the salvation of Israel.

24 For shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers from our youth; their flocks and their herds, their sons and their daughters.

25 We lie down in our shame, and our con-trust in his mercies (compare ver. 4 of this chapter, Isa. lxiii. 16, lxiv. 8). To address ourselves with an humble confidence and assurance to God as our Father, is the peculiar prerogative of us Christians, who have "received the adoption of sons," whereupon God "hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father" (Gal. iv. 5, 6).

Ver. 20. As a wife treacherously departeth from her husband.] The Hebrew reads, "from her friend;" in which sense the word is taken, Hos. iii. 1. Idolatry being the breach of that covenant which God made with the Jews as their Lord and husband, is properly compared to the sin of whoredom, or a woman's being unfaithful to her husband's bed, as hath already been observed in several passages of this and the foregoing chapter (compare v. 11, 12, Isa. xlviii. 8). The word reang, translated husband, properly signifies a friend, as our margin observes; but it is elsewhere used for a husband (see Cant. v. 16).

O house of Israel.] An expression denoting all the families or tribes of the Jews (compare ii. 4): called the "children of Israel" in the following verse.

Ver. 21.] The prophet, foreseeing that the Jews will at length be touched with a hearty repentance for all their misdoings, represents them as bewailing themselves upon the high places, the scenes of their former idolatries (compare xxxi. 9, l. 4, Zech. xii. 10).

Ver. 22.] This verse contains a dialogue between God and his people, wherein he offers gracious terms of pardon to them, and they make sincere professions of obedience to him.

Ver. 23.] A continuation of that form of confession, begun ver. 22, drawn up with reference to the present state of the idolatrous Israelites; wherein they express their abhorrence of those idols they worshipped upon the hills and mountains (see ver. 6); and declare their firm adherence to, and dependence upon the Lord their God. Idolatry was the great and crying sin of the Jews, in which case God particularly declared that he would "visit the sins of the fathers upon the children" (see Exod. xx. 5, Isa. lxv. 7). Accordingly the Jews have a proverbial saying among them, that "there is no judgment inflicted upon Israel, wherein there is not an ounce of the golden calf."

Ver. 24.] All the miseries of our captivity, implying the loss of our goods and substance, and the dispersion of our families and nearest relations: all these calamities which we and our forefathers have felt, are the effects of our idolatry, of which we are now heartily ashamed, and which hath brought shame and confusion upon us (compare Ezek. xvi. 61, 63). The idol Baal was by way of reproach called Bosheth, that is, shame (see xi. 13, Hos. ix. 10).

Ver. 25. We lie down in our shame, and our confusion covereth us:] The expressions are taken from fusion covereth us; for we have sinned against the LORD our God, we and our fathers, from our those who cast themselves down upon the ground, and cover themselves with dust or ashes, out of grief and anguish of mind (compare vi. 26, Isa. l. 11).

By way of conclusion to the notes upon this chapter, I shall consider an objection which the Jews advance from the twenty-first and following verses of it; where the dispersion of that nation is charged upon their idolatry, and their conversion, expressed by their deserting and renouncing that sin. From these passages, and others of a like nature, particularly Isa. lxxv. 7, they conclude that their present forlorn condition is not to be ascribed to their rejecting the true Messiah, as we Christians believe.

To this objection an answer may be returned in these two particulars:

1. That the prophecies belonging to this matter, which were uttered near the times of the Babylonish captivity, or before the people's return from it, do so intermix the promises relating to their first or second restoration, that it is no easy matter to discern the transition from one to the other: the like ambiguity may be observed in many prophecies relating to the first and second coming of the Messiah. And we may assign a sufficient reason why the prophecies that treat of the first and second dispersion of the Jews

should be delivered in such doubtful expressions; viz. because it would have discouraged the Jews from returning out of Babylon into their own country, if any ancienter prophecies had given them a distinct account of a second dispersion of their nation, and of the cause of so dreadful a calamity.

But, secondly, we may observe that some prophecies in the Old Testament do plainly ascribe the destruction of the Jewish church and nation to their rejecting and putting to death the Messiah. To this purpose those words of Moses are very remarkable (Deut. xviii. 29), "It shall come to pass, that every soul that will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people," as St. Peter explains the sense of that prophecy, Acts iii. 23. Daniel expressly assigns their sin of "cutting off the Messiah," as the cause of the destruction of their city and temple (Dan. ix. 26). And Zechary, who lived after the people's return from their first captivity, describes the mourning of the whole nation for their sin of piercing or crucifying Christ, as a preparative to their general restoration (Zech. xii. 10, xiii. 1); which repentance of theirs is only expressed in general terms by our prophet, at the twenty-first verse of this chapter, and xxxi. 9.

CHAPTER IV.

1 IF thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the LORD, return unto me: and if thou wilt put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remove.

2 And thou shalt swear, The LORD liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; and the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in him shall they glory.

3 ¶ For thus saith the LORD to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns.

4 Circumcise yourselves to the LORD, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem: lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

5 Declare ye in Judah, and publish in Jerusalem; and say, Blow ye the trumpet in the land:

CHAP. IV.

ARGUMENT.—The first four verses contain an earnest exhortation to repentance, which should have been joined to the former chapter, as being a continuation of the same subject. Afterward the prophet gives a very pathetic description of the miseries of his country, when it should be made the seat of war.

Ver. 1.] By Israel may be here meant the whole body of the Jewish nation (see ii. 4, iii. 20). Or else the prophet addresses himself to Israel in this verse, and to Judah in the third. The words here exhort the people not to satisfy themselves with an outward profession of repentance, but to make proof of their sincerity by quitting their evil practices, and particularly their idolatry; for so the word shikkutsim, abominations, commonly signifies. If thou dost this, saith God, thou shalt never more be removed out of thy land, or carried away captive.

Ver. 2. Thou shalt swear,] Swearing by the name of God is mentioned elsewhere as a solemn part of religious worship, and opposed to the custom of swearing by false gods, which was practised among idolaters (see Isa. xlv. 23, xlviii. 1, lxxv. 16, Amos viii. 14, Zeph. i. 5). But this religious invocation of the name of God, as the just judge of the world, must be used only for the manifestation of the truth, and the maintenance of right and justice.

The nations shall bless themselves in him,] A prediction of the gospel times, when the heathens should join with the true Israelites, in paying all solemn acts of worship and devotion to the true God alone (see Isa. lxxv. 16); and in ascribing all honour and glory to him and to his only Son, the Messiah, in whom all nations were to be blessed (see Gen. xxii. 18, Gal. iii. 8, and compare Isa. xlv. 25).

Ver. 3. For [or surely] thus saith the Lord] In this verse the prophet addresses himself to the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem, and exhorts them to repentance and reformation, under the metaphor of ploughing up their fallow ground, which had lain a long while uncultivated, and clearing it from thorns, that it might be capable of receiving good seed (compare Hos. x. 12, Matt. xiii. 5).

Ver. 4.] Compare ix. 23, a metaphor taken from Moses, Deut. x. 16, xxx. 6. From whence it appears, that this ceremony, as well as other rites of Moses's law, had a spiritual signification implied in them. Accordingly the apostles make moral applications of several branches of the ceremonial law (see Acts x. 14, 28, Rom. ii. 28, 29, 1 Cor. ix. 9, 2 Cor. vi. 14 Col. ii. 11). The same reasons the Jewish writers assign for several parts of the Mosaic institutions, particularly Philo and Josephus, Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 8, and lib. ii. contra Apionem.

Ver. 5, 6.] The prophet here begins a new discourse, and describes the dreadful preparations for war, such as "blowing a trumpet," and "setting up a cry, gather together, and say, Assemble yourselves, and let us go into the defended cities.

6 Set up the standard toward Zion: retire, stay not: for I will bring evil from the north, and a great destruction.

7 The lion is come up from his thicket, and the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way; he is gone forth from his place to make thy land desolate; and thy cities shall be laid waste, without an inhabitant.

8 For this gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl: for the fierce anger of the LORD is not turned back from us.

9 And it shall come to pass at that day, saith the LORD, that the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder.

10 Then said I, Ah, Lord God! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul.

11 At that time shall it be said to this people standard," for the assembling men together, in order to their leaving the open country, and retiring with their families and goods into the defended cities, both for their own safety, and that they might maintain those garrisons against the power of the enemy.

Ver. 7.] Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon (compare v. 6), whose monarchy is represented by a lion, Dan. vii. 4. He is called here the "destroyer of the gentiles," or rather nations; Judea and all the neighbouring countries being given up into his hands by God's decree (see xxv. 9, xxvii. 6).

Ver. 9. The heart of the king shall perish.] Great calamities often deprive men of their wonted courage, and that presence of mind which is necessary for the due management of their affairs; and sometimes a divine infatuation accompanies God's other judgments (see Isa. xix. 11, 12). The verb atad which is translated perish, does likewise signify to grow foolish or stupid; so it is taken, Deut. xxxii. 28. And the word still retains that signification in the Ethiopic language, as Ludolphus observes, in his Commentary in Historiam Ethjop. lib. i. n. 106.

The priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder.] Who have both agreed to make the people believe that none of these calamities should come upon them (see the following verse).

Ver. 10. Thou hast greatly deceived this people] i. e. Thou hast suffered them to be greatly deceived by their false prophets (see the note on Isa. lxiii. 17). These pretenders to prophecy studied only to speak pleasing things to the people, and soothe them up in their impenitency and carnal security; and thou hast in thy judgment given them up to follow these delusions (compare 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12).

Ver. 11. A dry wind] The same with a destroying wind, li. 1, a hot pestilential wind, as the Arabic translates it in that place, which destroys great multitudes in a moment, as travellers relate (see Dr. Prideaux, ad an. A. C. 710). The prophet describes the Chaldean armies invading Judea, under the metaphor of a dry parching wind, which blasts the fruits of the earth, withers the leaves upon the trees, and makes every thing look naked and bare.

Of the high places in the wilderness] The word sephajim, here translated high places, sometimes signifies valleys or plains (see the note on vii. 29).

and to Jerusalem, A dry wind of the high places in the wilderness toward the daughter of my people, not to fan, nor to cleanse.

12 Even a full wind from those places shall come unto me: now also will I give sentence against them.

13 Behold, he shall come up as clouds, and his chariots shall be as a whirlwind: his horses are swifter than eagles. Woe unto us! for we are spoiled.

14 O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved. How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?

15 For a voice declareth from Dan, and publisheth affliction from mount Ephraim.

16 Make ye mention to the nations; behold, publish against Jerusalem, that watchers come from a far country, and give out their voice against the cities of Judah.

17 As keepers of a field, are they against her round about; because she hath been rebellious against me, saith the LORD.

18 Thy way and thy doings have procured

In which sense it is fitly joined with the wilderness, which word is sometimes used for a plain or champaign country (see the note on ix. 10, xii. 12).

Ver. 12. A full wind from those places] A strong wind, such as the drying east or north winds, which come over large plains or deserts, commonly are (see the same metaphor applied to enemies and destroyers, xlix. 36, li. 1, Isa. xxvii. 8, Ezek. xvii. 10, xix. 12, Hos. xiii. 15).

Shall come unto me.] At my commandment (compare Matt. viii. 9). The winds, storms, and other meteors, are said to fulfil God's word, and attend upon his commands (see Ps. cxlviii. 8, Job xxxviii. 35).

Now also will I give sentence against them.] Or, "utter my judgments against them," as the phrase is translated, i. 16 (see the note there).

Ver. 13. He shall come up as clouds.] As clouds of a sudden overspread the face of the sky.

His chariots shall be as a whirlwind.] For their swiftness, and the destruction they make (compare Isa. v. 28).

His horses are swifter than eagles.] Moses threatened the Jews, that for their disobedience God would bring an enemy against them "as swift as the eagle flieth," Deut. xxviii. 49 (compare Lam. iv. 19, Hos. viii. 1, Hab. i. 8).

Ver. 15.] The rumour of the enemy's approach is heard first from Dan, which, being the most northern part of Judea, was first of all invaded (see viii. 16). And the evil tidings still increase, as the army marcheth forward towards Jerusalem, by the way of mount Ephraim.

Ver. 16. Make ye mention to the nations.] Publish it far and near.

That watchers—give out their voice against the cities of Judah.] The use of scouts or watchers is to warn men of the approach of the enemy (see vi. 17). But here the prophet by way of irony calls the Chaldean army by that name, whose business it would be to beleague the cities of Judah, and take care that nobody should escape out of their hands. And as the watchmen use to lift up their voice, to give notice of approaching danger; so these should make a great noise, but it should be to encourage one another to these things unto thee; this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thine heart.

19 My bowels, my bowels! I am pained at my very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me; I cannot hold my peace, because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war.

20 Destruction upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is spoiled: suddenly are my tents spoiled, and my curtains in a moment.

21 How long shall I see the standard, and hear the sound of the trumpet?

22 For my people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sottish children, and they have none understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good, they have no knowledge.

23 I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light.

fall on their adversaries, and subdue whatever opposes them.

[From a far country.] See v. 15.

Ver. 18.] These are the bitter effects of thine obstinacy in wickedness, which, like a deadly wound, or disease, toucheth the very heart and seat of life.

Ver. 19, 20.] The prophet in very moving expressions sympathises with the afflictions of his country, which he foresees will be the seat of war, and utterly ruined by a hostile invasion (compare Lam. i. 20. Isa. xxii. 4).

Ver. 20.] That is, their cities and houses, in allusion to the ancient way of dwelling in tents (compare x. 20, Isa. xxxiii. 20, liv. 2). The expressions may withal imply, that fortified towns can no more resist the progress of the enemy, than if they were so many shepherds' huts (compare Isa. xxxviii. 12).

Ver. 21.] See ver. 5. 6.

Ver. 22. They are wise to do evil, but to do good, they have no knowledge.] They have studied all the arts of sin and wickedness, but are perfect strangers to the obligations of religion and virtue; and they never show any quickness of thought, but when they are contriving to bring about some ill design.

Ver. 23—26.] The whole face of nature looks dismal; the inhabitants of the land and their houses, together with the fruits of the earth, are destroyed by the war; the birds of the air, and the beasts of the field, are consumed by the famine (compare vii. 20, ix. 10, xii. 4, xiv. 2, &c. Hos. iv. 3): so that the country looks as if it were reduced to its primitive chaos (compare Gen. i. 2). The heavens are covered with darkness, and the mountains tremble at the wrath of the Almighty. The prophets often describe God's judgments upon a land or nation, as if the whole frame of nature were in a state of dissolution, because these particular judgments are an earnest of the general judgment (see Isa. v. 25, 30, xiii. 10, with the notes upon those places).

Ver. 27. Yet will I not make a full end.] In the severest judgments God brings upon his people, he still reserves a remnant, to whom he will make good his promises (see xxx. 11, lxvi. 28): or the words may be understood to this sense: though I make the whole land desolate by sword and famine, yet still I have severer judgments in reserve (compare v. 10, 18): viz. the destruction of the city and temple, and the captivity of the people that outlive the former calamities. The former sense of the words may 24 I beheld the mountains, and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly.

25 I beheld, and, lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled.

26 I beheld, and, lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the LORD, and by his fierce anger.

27 For thus hath the LORD said, The whole land shall be desolate; yet will I not make a full end.

28 For this shall the earth mourn, and the heavens above be black: because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent, neither will I turn back from it.

29 The whole city shall flee for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen; they shall go into thickets, and climb up upon the rocks: every city shall be forsaken, and not a man dwell therein.

30 And when thou art spoiled, what wilt thou be confirmed, by comparing them with that passage, I Sam. iii. 12, "When I begin, I will also make an end;" i. e. I will make a thorough destruction, and pursue Eli's family with judgments, till I have utterly consumed it.

Ver. 28. Shall the earth mourn,] See ver. 23, 24.

I have spoken it, I have purposed it, &c.] God's purpose of delivering up the Jews into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar was irreversible, upon the supposition that the greatest part of them would continue impenitent, which he likewise foresaw (see ver. 22 of this chapter, and vii. 16, 27, 28, xiii. 14, xiv. 11, 12, xxv. 9—11). Though elsewhere, upon their repentance, to which God frequently exhorted them by his prophets (see xxv. 4, 5), he promises the removal of his judgments (see ver. 14 of this chapter, and vii. 3, xvii. 25, xviii. 11, xxii. 4, xxvi. 3, xxxvi. 3). Herein Jeremy's preaching was very different from that of the false prophets, who preached peace and safety to the people, without interposing the condition of repentance and reformation (see ver. 10 of this chapter, and xiv. 13, xxviii. 3, 4).

Ver. 29. Climb up upon the rocks:] To save their lives (compare Isa. ii. 10, 19, 1 Sam. xiii. 6).

Ver. 30. Though thou rentest thy face with painting,] The Hebrew reads, "though thou rentest thine eyes with painting." The use of their paint was to contract the eyelids, and make the eyes appear more large and full, which they thought a great beauty (see Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. xxxiii. cap. 6).

In vain shall thou make thyself fair;] The verse represents the people of the Jews, under the metaphor of a woman that sought, by the finery of her dress, and other allurements, to procure men's kindness, but all in vain. So should it be with them; all the arts they had made use of to engage the Egyptians, or other foreigners, to assist them against the Chaldeans, should stand them in no stead; nay, those very allies of theirs would join with their enemies (compare ii. 13, 18, 25, 36, xvii. 5, xxii. 20, 22, Lam. i. 2, 19, iv. 17).

Ver. 31. I have heard a voice as of a woman in travail, &c.] Here Jerusalem is very pathetically described by the character of a woman under the pangs of her first child-birth, when her pains as well as her fears are greatest: such, saith the prophet, is the anguish of Jerusalem, bewailing the loss of her children, by the devouring sword of the Chaldeans, and in vain imploring comfort and as-do? Though thou clothest thyself with crimson, though thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, though thou rentest thy face with painting, in vain shalt thou make thyself fair; thy lovers will despise thee, they will seek thy life.

31 For I have heard a voice as of a woman sistance. "To spread out the hands," is a gesture of begging or importuning (see Isa. i. 15, lxv. 2, Lam. i. 17).

The daughter of Zion,] "The daughter of Zion," or of Jerusalem, is the same with Zion, or Jerusalem in travail, and the anguish as of her that bringeth forth her first child, the voice of the daughter of Zion, that bewaileth herself, that spreadeth her hands, saying, Woe is me now! for my soul is wearied because of murderers.

(see vi. 2, 23, Lam. i. 6, ii. 1). So the "daughter of my people" is to be understood, ver. 11 of this chapter, and the "daughter of Babylon," Ps. cxxxvii. 8. Cities and countries are commonly represented as mothers, and their inhabitants as their children.

CHAPTER V.

1 RUN ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it.

2 And though they say, 'The LORD liveth; surely they swear falsely.

3 O LORD, are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return.

4 'Therefore I said, surely these are poor; they are foolish: for they know not the way of the LORD, nor the judgment of their God.

5 I will get me unto the great men, and will speak unto them; for they have known the way of the LORD, and the judgment of their God: but these have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds.

6 Wherefore a lion out of the forest shall slay them, and a wolf of the evenings shall spoil them, a leopard shall watch over their cities: every one that goeth out thence shall be torn in pieces: because their transgressions are many, and their backslidings are increased.

7 ¶ How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me, and sworn by them that are no gods: when I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery, and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses.

8 They were as fed horses in the morning: every one neighed after his neighbour's wife.

CHAP. V.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains a vehement expostulation with the Jews, for the manifold corruption of their manners, and the disorders both of their civil and ecclesiastical government. And as a punishment for all these enormities, God threatens the invasion of the Chaldeans.

Ver. 1. Seek in the broad places thereof [the streets of the greatest concourse], &c.] The prophet describes a general corruption of manners in much the same terms with those of the psalmist, "There is none that doeth good, no not one" (Ps. xiv. 3). And yet the same psalm afterward mentions "the generation of the righteous," and those "who made the Lord their refuge," ver. 5, 6. So that we may reasonably in both places understand the expressions, as only denoting the great scarcity of good men (compare viii. 6).

I will pardon it.] I will pardon the wicked for the sake of the righteous, if there be any number of the latter (see Gen. xviii. 26, &c.).

Ver. 2.] Even those that do not swear by false gods (as many among them do; see ver. 7), yet will venture to call the true God to bear witness to what is not true. A sign that even the professors of the true religion have no inward sense of it.

Ver. 3. Are not thine eyes upon the truth?] Thou searchest the hearts, and clearly discernest men's real dispositions from their hypocritical pretences, and therefore art perfectly acquainted with the obstinacy and stubborn temper of this people.

Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved;] All those heavy judgments thou hast brought upon them, have not wrought in them any true remorse for their sins, nor engaged them to amend their evil ways (see ii. 30).

Ver. 4.] I thought at first, saith the prophet, that such an unconcernedness for the duties of religion could be only charged upon the rude and ignorant vulgar, who have neither leisure nor opportunity of learning their duty.

Ver. 5.] One might expect from men of better education a truer sense of religion. But, alas! the great men of the world bid open defiance to God's laws, and cast off all obligations of duty and conscience; like headstrong oxen, that will not be brought under the yoke, but break through any bonds whereby you would restrain them, or bring them under discipline (compare vii. 24, 26).

Ver. 6.] He compares their enemies to beasts of prey (see ii. 15, iv. 7, Isa. xv. 9, Nah. ii. 11—13, Hab. i. 8).

Ver. 7. How shall I pardon thee for this?] God appeals to themselves, whether they can think it consistent with his justice to let such enormous offences as these go unpunished?

Thy children [see ii. 30] have forsaken me, and sworn by them that are no gods:] Compare Deut. xxxii. 21. Swearing is a solemn act of religion, and an appeal to God's power, justice, and truth (see iv. 2). So that to give such an honour to idols, is to rob God of his essential attributes. For this reason the Jews were strictly enjoined, "not to make mention of the names of false gods," that they might not be tempted to swear by them (see Exod. xxxiii. 13, Josh. xxiii. 7, Ps. xvi. 4).

Ver. 7, 8.] They abused the plenty which God gave them, thereby "making provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof." Expositors are very much divided in explaining two words of the Hebrew text 9 Shall I not visit for these things? saith the LORD: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

10 ¶ Go ye up upon her walls, and destroy; but make not a full end: take away her battlements; for they are not the LORD's.

11 For the house of Israel and the house of Judah have dealt very treacherously against me, saith the LORD.

12 They have belied the LORD, and said, It is not he; neither shall evil come upon us; neither shall we see sword nor famine:

13 And the prophets shall become wind, and the word is not in them: thus shall it be done unto them.

14 Wherefore thus saith the LORD God of hosts, Because ye speak this word, behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them.

15 Lo, I will bring a nation upon you from far, O house of Israel, saith the LORD: it is a mighty nation, it is an ancient nation, a nation whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say.

16 Their quiver is as an open sepulchre, they are all mighty men.

17 And they shall eat up thine harvest, and thy bread, which thy sons and thy daughters should eat: they shall eat up thy flocks and thine herds: they shall eat up thy vines and thy fig-trees: they shall impoverish thy fenced cities, wherein thou trustedst, with the sword.

18 Nevertheless, in those days, saith the LORD, I will not make a full end with you.

19 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when ye shall say, Wherefore doeth the LORD our God all these things unto us? then shalt thou answer them, Like as ye have forsaken me, and served strange gods in your land, so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not your's.

20 Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah, saying, here, mejazzanim or muzanim (for the word is differently read), translated fed; and mashkim, rendered by our translators, "in the morning:" but the sense they give of the whole verse is much the same. I shall therefore refer the curious reader to the critical remarks upon those two words, which may be found in Pool's Synopsis.

Ver. 9. Shall I not visit for these things? Do not such crimes as these deserve some remarkable judgments as their punishment (see ver. 7)?

Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? God's anger and vengeance signify in scripture the execution of his justice; the effects of which are as terrible against obstinate sinners, as if they proceeded from the highest resentment (compare xlv. 22, Ezek. v. 13, vi. 9, and see the note upon Isa. xxx. 27).

Ver. 10. Go ye up upon her walls, &c. God gives a commission to the Chaldeans to besiege and take Jerusalem. The sins it hath been guilty of make him disown the relation he formerly did bear to it, and he now declares, that he hath put it out of his protection, and delivered it up to the will of its enemies.

Make not a full end: See ver. 18.

Ver. 11.] See the note on iii. 20.

Ver. 12.] They have spoken unjustly and dishonourably of God, denying his government over human affairs; ascribing his judgments to chance or fortune, and disbelieving all threatenings of sword and famine, which the prophets have denounced in his name, which is in effect to give him the lie (see xiv. 13).

Ver. 13.] They encourage the people to despise God's messages by his prophets, telling them that the prophets and their words are no better than wind and vanity, and that their prophecies, being nothing but their own imaginations, shall return upon their own heads, and they shall feel the judgments themselves which they threaten to others.

Ver. 14.] The effect of those threatenings which are denounced by thy mouth, shall be as speedy and certain as that of fire is when put to dry wood. To the same sense are those words of Hosea (vi. 5), "I have hewed them by my prophets." Thus Christ is described as having "a sharp sword proceeding out of his mouth" (Rev. i. 16), because the judgments he denounces against the wicked are like the sentence of a judge, which is certainly followed with execution.

Ver. 15. I will bring a nation upon you from far. Babylon is called "a far country" Isa. xxxix. 3. Perhaps it is called a far country here, in comparison of the Philistines, Moabites, Amorites, and other borderers, who before were the Jews' oppressors.

The words "house of Israel" are, after the captivity of the ten tribes, applied to the two tribes remaining (see vi. 9, ix. 26, x. 1, Ezek. xiii. 5, xviii. 31).

It is an ancient nation. Babylon was built about a hundred years after the flood: and in a little time after Nimrod erected a kingdom there; whereupon that country is called "the land of Nimrod," Mic. v. 6.

A nation whose language thou knowest not, &c. Another part of that judgment denounced Deut. xxviii. 49. This is a great aggravation of the miseries of a foreign conquest, that there is no parleying or treating with such a conqueror, nor moving him to compassion, because they understand not each other's language. The common people among the Jews before the captivity did not understand the Chaldee tongue, called by them the "Syrian language" (see 2 Kings xviii. 26).

Ver. 16.] All their arrows shall do execution, so that their quiver may be looked upon as a common grave to their enemies.

Ver. 17. They shall eat up—thy bread. Bread is here put for bread-corn; and so it is used, Isa. xxviii. 28, xxx. 23.

Ver. 18. Nevertheless, in those days. Or, "yet even in those days," &c. i. e. I have still some judgments in reserve, viz. the destruction of your city and temple, and the carrying away the remainder of the nation captive to Babylon (see iv. 27).

Ver. 19. Wherefore doeth the Lord our God all these things unto us? Those that fall under the severity of God's judgments are apt to think so favourably of themselves, as to wonder why they should be singled out for examples of the divine vengeance, and of terror to others. And particularly the Jews thought this severe proceeding scarce consistent with those many gracious promises God had made unto their nation.

Then thou shalt answer them, &c. As much as to say, All God's promises were made upon condition of your obedience, and if you forsake God, you are not to expect that the promise of dwelling in this land should be made good to you any longer.

21 Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not:

22 Fear ye not me? saith the LORD: will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it?

23 But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone.

24 Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the LORD our God, that giveth rain, both the former and the latter, in his season: he reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest.

25 ¶ Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden good things from you.

Ver 21.] Who make no use of the senses and understanding which God hath given them (see Isa. vi. 9).

Ver. 22.] The keeping the waters within bounds, so that they cannot overflow the earth, is often mentioned in scripture, as an immediate effect of God's overruling power and providence (see Job xxxviii. 10, 11, Ps. xxxiii. 7, civ. 9, Prov. viii. 29). For water being specifically lighter than earth, by the common laws of gravitation, it should rise above it and overflow it. And then the adjusting the proportion of the tides, that they rise no higher to the prejudice of the lower grounds, is another remarkable instance of God's especial providence.

Ver. 24.] That giveth rain,] The vicissitude of seasons, of cold and heat, of drought and moisture, so wisely fitted for the growth of the fruits of the earth, and other uses of human life, is such a proof of a God and providence, as is obvious to the meanest capacity: upon which account it is frequently insisted on by the holy writers (see Ps. cxlvii. 8, Matt. v. 45, Acts xiv. 17).

Both the former and the latter, in his season:] The former rain came just after sowing time, to make the 26 For among my people are found wicked men: they lay wait, as he that setteth snares; they set a trap, they catch men.

27 As a cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit: therefore they are become great, and waxen rich.

28 They are waxen fat, they shine: yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked: they judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they prosper; and the right of the needy do they not judge.

29 Shall I not visit for these things? saith the LORD: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

30 ¶ A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land;

31 The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?

seed take root: the latter rain was just before harvest, to plump and fill the ears, called the "latter rain in the first month," Joel ii. 23, at which time the harvest began (see Deut. xvi. 9).

Ver. 25.] See iii. 3.

Ver. 26. They lay wait,] They use all the arts of fraud and cozenage, whereby they may overreach others, and make a prey of them and their substance (see the following verse).

Ver. 28. They overpass the deeds of the wicked:] They exceed the common instances of injustice and oppression, and make no conscience of enriching themselves with the spoils of the fatherless, and those who have most need of their charity and kindness.

Ver. 29.] The sins of oppression are commonly called crying sins; such as cry to heaven for vengeance against those that are guilty of them (see Mal. iii. 5, James v. 4).

Ver. 31.] Both priests and prophets agree to speak pleasing things to the people, thereby to keep up their interest and authority with them; and what can this end in, but a total corruption of manners? the consequence of which must be utter ruin and destruction.

CHAPTER VI.

1 O YE children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem, and blow the trumpet in Tekoa, and set up a sign of fire in Beth-haccerem: for evil appeareth out of the north, and great destruction.

CHAP. VI.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet encourageth the Chaldeans to come up and besiege Jerusalem, as a place abandoned by God for its incorrigibleness, and given up to the will of its enemies.

Ver. 1. Gather yourselves to flee out—of Jerusalem,] That you may avoid the miseries of a siege. Part of Jerusalem stood in the tribe of Benjamin (see the note on i. 1). The prophet here applies himself to the Benjamites, as living himself in that tribe.

Blow the trumpet in Tekoa, and set up a sign of fire in Beth-haccerem:] The design of those signals of war is to assemble men together, in order to their mutual defence; but it is in vain to attempt any such matter, and therefore the only use that can be made of them, is to give notice to the people, that they should disperse themselves, and fly from the approaching enemy. Beth-haccerem was a village between Jerusalem and Tekoa, as St Jerome informs us in his commentary upon this place. The name of this village is mentioned, Neh. iii. 14.

2 I have likened the daughter of Zion to a comely and delicate woman.

3 The shepherds with their flocks shall come unto her; they shall pitch their tents against her round about; they shall feed every one in his place.

For evil appeareth out of the north,] See i. 14.

Ver. 2.] Some render the verse thus: "I have likened the daughter of Zion to a pasture [so the word navah is rendered, Joel i. 19, ii. 22] and a pleasant habitation." And the words that follow (ver. 3) favour this interpretation.

Ver. 3.] The prophet, having likened Zion to a rich

4 Prepare ye war against her; arise, and let us go up at noon. Woe unto us! for the day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out.

5 Arise, and let us go by night, and let us destroy her palaces.

6 ¶ For thus hath the LORD of hosts said, Hew ye down trees, and cast a mount against Jerusalem: this is the city to be visited; she is wholly oppression in the midst of her.

7 As a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: violence and spoil is heard in her; before me continually is grief and wounds.

8 Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee; lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, They shall thoroughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine:

pasture in the foregoing verse, saith, that the shepherds and their flocks shall take possession of her, meaning the Chaldean generals (for in that sense shepherds are sometimes understood; see xxv. 34), and their armies, who should feed upon her, till they had quite devoured her. So the Chaldee paraphrase explains "shepherds with their flocks," by "kings with their armies."

Ver. 4. Prepare ye war against her;] God, by his prophet, gives a commission to the Chaldeans to fight against Jerusalem (compare li. 27, Joel iii. 9). The Hebrew reads, "sanctify war;" concerning which expression, see the note on Isa. xiii. 3.

Arise, and let us go up at noon.] The expressions denote the alacrity of the soldiers, and how ready they were to assault her openly at noon-day (compare xv. 8): or even in the heat of the day, which was a time of rest and intermission of labour in those hot countries (see 2 Sam. iv. 5).

Ver. 5.] The soldiers are described as so eagerly bent upon taking the city, that they express their regret for the loss of one day, that they could not arrive soon enough the first day of their approach to besiege it. Whereupon they resolved to lose no farther time, but march immediately, and take the advantage of the night to surprise its fortresses.

Ver. 6.] This siege is carried on by God's decree and command, as a just punishment for the oppressions and other crying sins the inhabitants are guilty of.

Ver. 7. Before me continually is grief and wounds.] I hear the continual complaints of those that groan under the oppression that they suffer, and are put to death unjustly and cruelly (compare Ps. lv. 9—11).

Ver. 8.] Take warning by the many threatenings and judgments I have denounced against thee; amend thy ways and doings, lest, if thou persist in thy wickedness, my mind and affection be utterly alienated from thee (see Ezek. xxiii. 17, 18, Hos. ix. 12), and I cast off all bowels of compassion towards thee, and give thee up to ruin and desolation. This threatening God fulfilled afterward, when he suffered the city and nation to be utterly ruined and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar; but it still received a farther completion, in that final desolation brought upon them by the Romans, under Titus Vespasian.

Ver. 9.] A comparison elsewhere used, to express the entire riddance that is made in a city or country by hostile depredations (see Isa. xvii. 6, xxiv. 13).

VOL. III.—50

turn back thine hand as a grape-gatherer into the baskets.

10 To whom shall I speak, and give warning, that they may hear? behold, their ear is uncircumcised, and they cannot hearken: behold, the word of the LORD is unto them a reproach; they have no delight in it.

11 Therefore I am full of the fury of the LORD; I am weary with holding in: I will pour it out upon the children abroad, and upon the assembly of young men together: for even the husband with the wife shall be taken, the aged with him that is full of days.

12 And their houses shall be turned unto others, with their fields and wives together: for I will stretch out my hand upon the inhabitants of the land, saith the LORD.

13 For from the least of them even unto the greatest of them every one is given to covet-

And as a grape-gatherer, when he thought he had done his work, afterward spies more bunches, and gathers them into his basket; so they that come after shall make an entire riddance of what was left by the former invaders, till at last there shall be nothing at all remaining (compare xlix. 9).

Ver. 10. Their ear is uncircumcised, and they cannot hearken.] As the ear when it is stopped up with filth, cannot hear; so their minds are so prepossessed by their lusts, that the word of God can find no admittance. Men's hearts, their lips, and their ears, are said to be uncircumcised, when they are not duly disposed for hearing the truth (compare iv. 4, ix. 26). And while men continue in this condition, they cannot give due attention to what God speaks to them. In the same sense Christ saith to the Jews, "How can ye believe, who receive honour one of another" (John v. 44), meaning, that such a temper was an obstacle to their believing on him, and hindered them from "receiving the truth in the love of it."

The word of the Lord is to them a reproach.] The subject of their scorn and derision (see xx. 8).

Ver. 11. I am full of the fury of the Lord; I am weary with holding in.] This mocking of God's messengers, and despising his word, is a great aggravation of their sins, and withal a sign that they are now grown incorrigible; so that I now feel myself pressed in spirit, and under a constraint of denouncing God's judgments against all orders and ranks of men, both young and old, women and children.

I will pour it out upon the children abroad, &c.] The prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them, as hath been observed i. 10. In the same sense, the prophet is here said to pour out the divine fury upon the children abroad, who take delight in playing in the streets (see Zech. viii. 5), and the young men who assemble in meetings for diversion or conversation (compare ix. 21).

Full of days.] "Full of days" denotes one that hath lived to the full term and period of human life (compare Isa. lxx. 20).

Ver. 12.] According to that threatening denounced by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 30.

Ver. 13. From the prophet—to the priest] Or, "both prophet and priest" (compare ix. 10). So in other places, where the Hebrew reads, "from small to great;" our translation renders it, "both small and great" (see 1 Sam. v. 9, xxx. 2).

ousness; and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely.

14 They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace.

15 Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore they shall fall among them that fall: at the time that I visit them they shall be cast down, saith the Lord.

16 Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.

17 Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Harken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.

18 ¶ Therefore hear, ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them.

19 Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it.

20 To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country? your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me.

21 Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will lay stumbling-blocks before this people, and the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish.

22 Thus saith the Lord, Behold, a people cometh from the north country, and a great nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth.

23 They shall lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy; their voice roareth like the sea; and they ride upon horses, set in array as men of war against thee, O daughter of Zion.

24 We have heard the fame thereof: our hands wax feeble: anguish hath taken hold of us, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

25 Go not forth into the field, nor walk by the way; for the sword of the enemy and fear is on every side.

26 ¶ O daughter of my people, gird thee with sackcloth, and wallow thyself in ashes: make thee mourning, as for an only son, most bitter lamentation: for the spoiler shall suddenly come upon us.

27 I have set thee for a tower and a fortress among my people, that thou mayest know and try their way.

Ver. 14.] Instead of making a deep search into the corruptions of the people, the true cause of all their maladies [compare Isa. i. 6], and applying corrosive medicines, i. e. sharp reproofs, which might give them a true sense of the danger of their condition, they have used only lenitives; as if a surgeon should slightly skin over a sore that festers underneath, by preaching such doctrines as might soothe them up in their sins, and their carnal security (see iv. 10, v. 12, 31, xiv. 13, xxiii. 14, 17, xxviii. 2, 3, Lam. ii. 14).

Ver. 15.] Nothing is a greater sign of an incorrigible temper than being past shame (compare iii. 3, viii. 12).

Ver. 16.] Do like travellers, when they are at a loss which way they must go: in like manner do ye inquire what way the patriarchs of old, the judges, the kings, and prophets, of former times walked in: imitate their practices, wherein you will find true comfort and satisfaction. and not the late devices of your princes and prophets, whereby you have been seduced into error, and betrayed into many mischiefs (compare xviii. 15).

Ver. 17.] You had not fell into these dangers if you had hearkened to the prophets I sent to you, (see xxv. 4), as so many watchmen, to warn you of the evils that threatened you (compare Ezek. xxxiii. 7). They faithfully discharged their duty, and gave you loud warnings of your sins, and the judgments they would bring upon you (see Isa. lviii. 1).

Ver. 18.] God appeals to all men and summons them to assemble themselves (compare Ps. vii. 11), and hear what he has to lay to the charge of his people (see Isa. i. 2).

Ver. 20.] Sheba was a part of Arabia Felix, and famous for its spices and perfumes (see Isa. lx. 6). The prophet reproves the hypoerisy of the Jews, whereby they sought to cover their inward corruption by the external shows of religion: which the prophets often declare to be of no value, when they do not proceed from a devout mind (see vii. 21, 22, Isa. i. 11).

We may apply to the same purpose a story which Plato relates in his second Alcibiades, where he treats of prayer, or the worship of God: "The Athenians (he tells us), in their wars with the Lacedemonians, having received many defeats, sent a messenger to the oracle of Jupiter Hammon, to ask the reason, why they, who had erected so many temples to the gods, and honoured them with so many oblations and sacrifices, should be less successful than the Lacedemonians, who fell much short of them in these particulars! The oracle returned this answer: 'I am better pleased with the prayer of the Lacedemonians than with all the oblations of the Greeks.' Now the prayer they made use of was a short petition, in which they begged the gods to give them all good things so long as they continued virtuous."

From a far country?] See the note upon Isa. xliii. 24. "A far country" seems equivalent with Sheba before mentioned, whose queen is said to have "come from the uttermost parts of the earth," Matt. xii. 42 (see the note upon Isa. v. 26).

Ver. 21.] Whatever attempts they make to deliver themselves from the evils which threaten them, I will cause their designs to miscarry, and they shall fall into those very snares which they sought to avoid.

Ver. 22. From the north country.] See i. 14, 15.

From the sides of the earth.] Or, "from the coasts of the earth," as the phrase is translated, l. 41. To the same sense the Chaldeans are said to come "from a far country," v. 15.

Ver. 23. Their voice roareth like the sea;] Compare Isa. v. 30. Hostile invasions are fitly compared to great inundations, that carry all before them, and lay a country waste (see Isa. xvii. 12, Dan. ix. 26).

They ride upon horses,] Of which there was a great scarcity in Judea; which made the Jews enter into alliances with Egypt that they might be furnished with horses from thence (see Isa. xxx. 16, xxxi. 1).

Ver. 26.] See iii. 25, iv. 8, Mic. i. 10.

Ver. 27.] The sense would be plainer, if the words were translated thus, "I have set thee (in) a watch-

28 They are all grievous revolters, walking with slanders: they are brass and iron; they are all corrupters.

29 The bellows are burned, the lead is consumed of the fire; the founder melteth in vain: for the wicked are not plucked away.

Ver. 28. Grievous revolters,] See ix. 3, &c.

They are brass and iron, &c.] They are no better than dross in comparison of purer metals (see Ezek. xxii. 18). Their impudence resembles brass, and their obstinacy may be compared to iron (compare Isa. xlviii. 4): and being hardened in wickedness themselves, they make it their business to corrupt others.

Ver. 29. The bellows are burned, &c.] All the means that can be used to purge this people of their dross proves ineffectual; the wicked are not separated from the righteous. Therefore your city shall be as one common furnace, wherein you shall be melted down all together (see Ezek. xxii. 19, &c.).

30 Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them.

The lead is consumed in the fire.] Before the use of quicksilver was known, they made use of lead for the refining their metals.

Ver. 30.] As base money is refused by every one, because it cannot bear the touchstone, so shall these hypocrites and evil-doers be rejected both by God and man; for none of their actions will bear the test of God's laws, or abide his severe trial. The word ἀσώπῳ, signifies a reprobate in the New Testament, in allusion to this place; and in pursuance of the same metaphor, God's laws and judgments are often compared to a refiner's fire (see Prov. xvii. 3, Isa. i. 25, Zech. xiii. 9, Mal. iii. 2, 3, 1 Pet. i. 7).

CHAPTER VII.

1 THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Stand in the gate of the Lord's house, and proclaim there this word, and say, Hear the word of the LORD, all ye of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the LORD.

3 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place.

4 Trust ye not in lying words, saying, The temple of the LORD, The temple of the LORD, The temple of the LORD, are these.

5 For if ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings; if ye thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour;

6 If ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt:

7 Then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers, for ever and ever.

8 ¶ Behold, ye trust in lying words, that cannot profit.

9 Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not;

10 And come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name, and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations?

11 Is this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers in your eyes? Behold, even I have seen it, saith the LORD.

12 But go ye now unto my place which was

CHAP. VII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet reproves the Jews' vain confidence in their temple, and the external observances of religion, when, at the same time, they rejected God's messages by the prophets, and defiled themselves with the worst sorts of idolatry.

Ver. 2. Stand in the gate of the Lord's house.] This most commentators understand of the east gate of the temple, which led directly up to it (see xix. 2).

Ver. 4. The temple of the Lord, are these.] As much as to say, God hath placed his name here (ver. 10), and chose these stately buildings as the place of his peculiar residence, and what reason is there to believe that he will ever forsake it, and give it up to be destroyed by strangers and idolaters (compare xviii. 18, Mic. iii. 11).

Ver. 8. Ye trust in lying words,] Uttered by your false prophets, who foretell peace, and soothe you up in your impenitency (see iv. 10, xiv. 13, 14).

Ver. 9.] The prophet does not charge them with the transgression of the ritual ordinances of Moses, but with the breach of the weightier matters of the law. Thus the prophets showed men a more excellent way of serving God, than by relying upon external performances, and thereby prepared their minds for the reception of the gospel.

Ver. 10. And come and stand before me in this house,] That is, in the courts before this house (see the note on xxvi. 7). Their making no scruple to come into God's immediate presence, with the defilements of their sins upon them, implied, that they thought the greatest sins, and even the worship of idols, consistent with the worship and service of the true God (compare Ezek. xxiii. 37-39).

We are delivered to do all these abominations?] Will ye interpret the deliverances God hath formerly vouchsafed to you, as so many licenses to commit new abominations? or, do you think when you offer your propitiatory sacrifices, that they will wipe away the guilt of all your past offences, and ye may securely renew your former ill practices, having such a certain and easy method of obtaining pardon?

Ver. 11.] Thus you make my house a place of sanctuary and protection to malefactors, who perform an outward service to me there, that they may continue the more securely in their sins.

Ver. 12.] God's ark and tabernacle were placed in Shiloh, as soon as ever the Israelites had taken possession of the promised land (Josh. xviii. 1), and yet I suffered the ark itself to fall into the hands of the in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel.

13 And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the Lord, and I spake unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye heard not; and I called you, but ye answered not;

14 Therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, as I have done to Shiloh.

15 And I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim.

16 Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee.

17 ¶ Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem?

18 The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto other gods, that they may provoke me to anger.

19 Do they provoke me to anger? saith the Lord: do they not provoke themselves to the confusion of their own faces?

20 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Be-

Philistines, and quite forsook that place of my residence (Ps. lxxviii. 60).

Ver. 13.] The phrase "rising up early," signifies diligence and assiduity (see Isa. i. 4). The same sense is elsewhere expressed in the Hebrew, by doing anything "in the morning," which our translators render early, Ps. xlv. 5, xc. 14 (see likewise Ps. cxliii. 8, Isa. xxxiv. 2).

Ver. 15.] That is, all the ten tribes, who are often called by the name of Ephraim, that being the principal tribe among them: their first king Jeroboam being of that tribe (see the note upon Isa. vii. 2).

Ver. 16.] Nothing but an universal reformation, which God foresaw would not be effected, could deliver the Jews from that captivity and desolation which he had threatened to bring upon them. In some cases the intercessions of good men have been so far prevalent as to rescue sinners from the punishments they deserved: but here God declares nothing but a general amendment shall avert the judgments threatened. The divine decree being without repentance irrevocable (see iv. 28, xiv. 11, 12), he forbids Jeremiah to interpose by his prayers for the reversing of it. But still the prophet might pray to God not to proceed to an utter destruction of his people; and accordingly we find he did pray to that effect (see iv. 7—9, and the notes on xvii. 25).

Ver. 18.] To make cakes to the queen of heaven.] As the gentiles offered to the moon, at the first appearance of the new moon, which custom Dr. Spencer proves out of Herodotus and Lucian, De Legib. Hebr. lib. iii. cap. 3. The word metecheth may signify all the host of heaven (compare xix. 13).

To pour out drink-offerings unto other gods.] They offered their meat-offerings and drink-offerings to other gods, in imitation of those which were offered to the true God (see Numb. xxviii. 5, 7).

Ver. 19.] Do they think to show their spite against me, as if they could hurt me by their wickedness?

hold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground; and it shall burn, and shall not be quenched.

21 ¶ Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Put your burnt-offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.

22 For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices:

23 But this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you.

24 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward.

25 Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have even sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early and sending them:

26 Yet they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, but hardened their neck: they did worse than their fathers.

27 Therefore thou shalt speak all these words

Will not their sins turn at last to their own utter confusion?

Ver. 20.] See iv. 25, 26, ix. 10, xii. 4.

It shall burn, and shall not be quenched.] It shall make a total destruction (compare xv. 14, Lam. ii. 3, iv. 11, Deut. xxxii. 22, Isa. xlii. 25, Ps. lxxviii. 63, lxxxix. 46).

Ver. 21.] The burnt-offerings after they were flayed were to be consumed wholly upon the altar (Lev. i. 9); whereas in the sacrifices of the peace-offerings only the fat was burnt upon the altar, the remainder belonged partly to the priest, and the rest was spent in a religious entertainment (see Lev. ii. 29, 34, Deut. xii. 11, 12). Here the prophet tells the Jews, they may if they please eat the flesh of their burnt-offerings, as well as of their peace-offerings, for God will accept neither of them from their hands (see vi. 20), and looks upon them only as common meats (compare Hos. viii. 13).

Ver. 22, 23. Obey my voice, &c.] It is a way of speaking usual in scripture, to express the preference that is due to one thing above another, in terms which express the rejecting of that which is less worthy: and thus I conceive we are to understand the text here, in correspondence with the parallel place of Hosea (vi. 6), "I will have mercy and not sacrifice." The words in both places implying, that God always laid a greater stress upon sincere obedience, than on external observances, and designed the latter, as so many mounds and fences, to guard and preserve the former. And thus much Maimonides himself grants, More Nevoch. par. iii. cap. 32. But several of the fathers infer from this text, that God never gave any command to the Jews about sacrifices, till after they had defiled themselves with idolatry, by offering sacrifices to the golden calf (see Justin Martyr, Dialog. cum Tryph. p. 237, and Iren. lib. iv. cap. 29).

Ver. 24. And went backward, and not forward.] The expression is taken from headstrong oxen, that draw unto them; but they will not hearken to thee: thou shalt also call unto them; but they will not answer thee.

28 But thou shalt say unto them, This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the LORD their God, nor receiveth correction: truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth.

29 Cut off thine hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places; for the LORD hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his wrath.

30 For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the LORD: they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it.

31 And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hin-nom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart.

32 ¶ Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place.

33 And the carcasses of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away.

34 Then will I cause to cease from the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride: for the land shall be desolate.

back, and refuse to put their necks under the yoke (see here, ver. 26, Nch. ix. 29, Hos. iv. 16). In the same sense the word backsliding is often applied to the Jews in this prophecy (see iii. 6, 10, 14, 22, viii. 5).

Ver. 26. They did worse than their fathers.] By setting up idols in the temple itself (see ver. 30, 2 Kings xxi. 7, and the notes upon iii. 11).

Ver. 29. Cut off thine hair, O Jerusalem.] This was commonly practised in the time of great sorrow and mourning (see xlvii. 5, xlviii. 37, and the notes upon Isa. xv. 2).

Take up a lamentation on high places.] See iii. 21. Lud. De Dieu observes, that the word sephajim sometimes signifies plains, or open places; which sense agrees very well with other texts where the word is used (see iv. 11, xii. 12). So the sense will be—make the most public and solemn lamentation.

The Lord hath rejected—the generation of his wrath.] This sinful generation, who have so highly provoked his anger. As God is said to reject or cast off his people, when he gives them up into the hands of their enemies, so he is said to choose them again at the restoration of their captivity (see Isa. xiv. 1, Zech. i. 17, ii. 12).

Ver. 30. They have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name.] Meaning the image and altars for idolatrous worship, which Manasseh had set up in the temple and the courts near it (see xxiii. 11, xxxii. 34, 2 Kings xxi. 4, 7, xxiii. 4). Which gave occasion to other profanations of the temple in aftertimes (see Ezek. viii. 5, 6, &c.).

Ver. 31. They have built the high places of Tophet, &c.] This unnatural custom of burning their children by way of sacrifice to Moloch, was derived from the Canaanites (see Ps. cvi. 38). The place where they performed this inhuman rite was called Tophet, from the tabrets which sounded there, to drown the cries of the children thus cruelly murdered; it is called here the “high place of Tophet,” because probably there was a temple or an altar built there to Moloch (see the note on ii. 20). And “the valley of the son of Hinnom,” or “the valley of Hinnom,” in the Hebrew, Gee Hinnom, from whence the word Gehenna is derived, to signify hell. The sacrifice here offered being a lively picture of hell torments.

Which I commanded them not.] On the contrary, I expressed the greatest detestation against this practice, and forbade it under the severest penalties (compare xxxii. 35, and Lev. xx. 1—5). The words are spoken by the figure, called meiosis, by which a great deal more is implied than is expressed; a way of speaking frequent in scripture. See Deut. xvii. 3, where the text, speaking of the worship of the host of heaven, adds, “which I have not commanded;” the meaning is, I expressly forbade it. So God, reproving the idolatry of the Jews, saith, “they chose things wherein I delighted not;” that is, which I utterly abhorred (Isa. lxv. 12), and Jeremiah (ii. 8), calls idols “things that do not profit;” that is, whose worship is not only insignificant, but likewise extremely hurtful and dangerous. By the same figure we are to expound these expressions: “a false balance is not good” (Prov. xx. 23), and “to have respect of persons is not good” (xxviii. 21), that is, is very wicked. St. Paul expresses the vilest sins, by calling them “things which are not convenient” (Rom. i. 28), therefore they put a very false gloss upon this text, that would infer from it that nothing is to be used in God’s worship, but what is expressly commanded in his word.

Ver. 32.] King Josiah first of all defiled this place, as the text speaks, 2 Kings xxiii. 10, that is, polluted it, or unconsecrated it, by burying dead bodies in it (compare ver. 16 of that chapter). And afterward, when great numbers died in the siege of Jerusalem, and the famine that followed upon it, it became a common burying-place of the Jews (see xix. 6), whereby was fulfilled that prophecy of Ezekiel (vi. 5), I will lay the dead carcasses of the children of Israel before their idols (compare Lev. xxvi. 30, Ezek. vi. 4, 5, 13).

Ver. 34. Voice of mirth.] See the note on xvi. 9.

The voice of the bridegroom.] Men will have no encouragement to marry, when they see nothing but ruin and desolation before their eyes (see xvi. 1—4).

CHAPTER VIII.

1 AT that time, saith the LORD, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the

CHAP. VIII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet upbraids the obstinacy and incorrigibleness of the people, and bewaileth the grievous judgments which God hath pronounced against them in general, against those bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves:

2 And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.

3 And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 ¶ Moreover thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD; Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?

5 Why then is this people of Jerusalem slid- den back by a perpetual backsliding? they hold fast deceit, they refuse to return.

6 I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle.

of a high degree, as well as such as are of a meaner condition.

Ver. 1.] When the city shall be taken, and exposed to the rage of the Chaldean army, they shall break open the monuments of kings, princes, and great men, hoping to find some treasure there; as Josephus tells us, that immense riches were deposited in David's sepulchre by his son Solomon, which were never taken away till Mircanus's time (see Antiq. lib. vii. cap. ult.).

Ver. 2.] The bones which shall be thus scattered about, shall not be gathered or laid up in their sepulchres. The word asaph is commonly used of men's being laid in the sepulchres of their ancestors, which is elsewhere expressed, by "being gathered unto their people." In this sense it is joined with being buried here, and xxv. 33, see likewise Job xxvii. 19. Not to enjoy the common rights of burial, is spoken of as an aggravation of men's calamities (see xxii. 19, xxxvi. 30, Eccles. vi. 3, Isa. xiv. 19, 20).

Ver. 3 Death shall be chosen rather than life] This denotes the extremity of misery: when men have no comfort left wherewith to alleviate their misfortunes, or make their life tolerable (see Rev. ix. 6).

Of this evil family,] See i. 15.

Ver. 4, 5. Shall he turn away (compare iii. 19), and not return, &c.] An expostulation implying that men are seldom so far gone in wickedness, as not to be touched with some remorse for their evil doings, and make some general resolutions of amendment. Whereas this people are guilty of one perpetual apostasy, as if they could deceive God by their hypocritical pretences, without making any steps towards a reformation. Some explain the fourth verse to this sense: are they so far plunged in sins and the miseries consequent thereto, that there is no hopes of their recovery out of their present ill state? If they will turn to God, will not he immediately be pacified, and return to them? According to which exposition, the verb shub, which is repeated, is taken in the same sense in both parts of the latter sentence: otherwise it must be taken in two contrary senses. Taking the words in this sense, God's answer follows in the next verse, "But why then is this people," &c., and so the particle maduang is to be rendered, ver. 19.

Ver. 5.] See the note upon vii. 24.

7 Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle and the crane and the swallow observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the LORD.

8 How do ye say, We are wise, and the law of the LORD is with us? Lo, certainly in vain made he it; the pen of the scribes is in vain.

9 The wise men are ashamed, they are dismayed and taken: lo, they have rejected the word of the LORD; and what wisdom is in them?

10 Therefore will I give their wives unto others, and their fields to them that shall inherit them: for every one from the least even unto the greatest is given to covetousness, from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely.

11 For they have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace.

12 Were they ashamed when they had com-

Ver. 6. I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright:] God is represented as "waiting that he may be gracious" to his people (Isa. xxx. 18), and by his "long suffering" giving men time and space for repentance (2 Pet. iii. 9).

As the horse rusheth into the battle.] Without any consideration or fear of approaching danger.

Ver. 7.] These birds know, by natural instinct, the seasons when to return to places of their former abode: whereas this people never think of returning to God. The holy writers send men to brute creatures for instruction, thereby to upbraid their stupidity (see Isa. i. 3, Prov. vi. 6).

Ver. 8. We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us, &c.] It is to no purpose to boast of your wisdom and skill in the knowledge of God's law, if you do not govern your lives by its directions; otherwise it was written and delivered to you in vain (compare Rom. ii. 17, &c.).

The pen of the scribes is in vain.] The title of scribe, as applied to the skill of transcribing or interpreting the law, is first given to Ezra (Ezra vi. 6), who was not merely a copier of the law, but likewise an explainer of the difficulties of it (see Neh. viii. 9, 13). As it is likely none made it their business to write copies of the law, but those who were well versed in the study of it, which would best secure them from committing mistakes in their copies; from hence the word signifies, in the New Testament, those who were learned in explaining the law, and answering the difficulties arising, concerning the sense of it. The Greek word γραμματεὺς, signifies a "learned man," Eccles. x. 5, xxxviii. 24, and is so translated by our interpreters in the latter of these two places. And the Chaldee paraphrase often interprets the Hebrew word nabi, prophet, by the Chaldee saphar, a scribe.

The expression in the text may relate to the answers which those who were skillful in expounding the law gave in writing, when they were consulted in any difficult case (compare xviii. 18).

Ver. 9.] The politicians are disappointed in every enterprise they undertake; and their ill success is an evident proof, that the fear of God, and governing ourselves by his word, is the truest wisdom.

Ver. 10—12.] See vi. 12—15.

Ver. 10. Inherit them:] Or, possess them; for the mitted abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore shall they fall among them that fall: in the time of their visitation they shall be cast down, saith the LORD.

13 ¶ I will surely consume them, saith the LORD: there shall be no grapes on the vine, nor figs on the fig-tree, and the leaf shall fade; and the things that I have given them shall pass away from them.

14 Why do we sit still? assemble yourselves, and let us enter into the defenced cities, and let us be silent there: for the LORD our God hath put us to silence, and given us water of gall to drink, because we have sinned against the LORD.

15 We looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and behold trouble!

16 The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan: the whole land trembled at the sound of the neighing of his strong ones; for they are come, and have devoured the land, and all that is in it; the city, and those that dwell therein.

17 For, behold, I will send serpents, cockatrices, among you, which will not be charmed, and they shall bite you, saith the LORD.

18 ¶ When I would comfort myself against sorrow, my heart is faint in me.

19 Behold the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people because of them that dwell in a far country: Is not the LORD in Zion? is not her king in her? Why have they provoked me to anger with their graven images, and with strange vanities?

20 The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved.

21 For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt; I am black; astonishment hath taken hold on me.

22 Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?

word inherit is sometimes taken for any sort of possession (see Ps. lxxxii. 8). So Israel is called the Lord's inheritance, x. 16, and elsewhere.

Ver. 13.] As both leaves and fruit wither and fade, when a tree is blasted or killed; so I will utterly deprive this people of all the blessings I had given them, those which are for use as well as those which are for ornament.

Ver. 14. Let us be silent there, &c.] This seems to be spoken in the person of the people, who lived in open towns and villages, exhorting one another to repair to Jerusalem, and other fortified places, to seek for quiet and refuge there. Whereas the prophet had before (vi. 1) exhorted the inhabitants of Jerusalem to flee even from thence. To this the prophet replies, in the following part of the verse, that God had, indeed, "put them to silence" in another sense than they meant: that is, he had taken away all their strength, and left them to be destroyed by their enemies; for so, to "put to silence" often signifies; see xlvii. 5, li. 6, Isa. xv. 1, Hos. x. 7, Obad. ver. 5, where the word is rendered cut off, in our Bibles.

Given us water of gall to drink,] A bitter cup means a severe judgment; which is often expressed by the "cup of God's wrath," or displeasure (see xxv. 15, 17, ix. 15, xxii. 15).

Ver. 15. We looked for peace,] We were willing to believe the false prophets, who foretold prosperous times (see iv. 10, xiv. 13).

Ver. 16. The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan:] The Chaldean army marched into Judea through the tribe of Dan (see iv. 25).

Neighing of his strong ones;] Abbirau, which is here translated strong ones, signifies horses in several places (see xlvii. 3, Judg. v. 22): and so it is understood here by the LXX.

Ver. 17.] Such enemies as you shall not be able to soften by any entreaties you can use. It is a received opinion, and that attested by many travellers, and other writers, that there are methods of charming venomous creatures, that they shall not bite nor hurt those that come near them. The expression here alludes to that tradition, as the words of the psalmist do, Ps. lviii. 5.

Ver. 18.] When I would apply comfort to myself, my heart misgives me, I find great reason for my fears, and none for my hopes.

Ver. 19. The voice of the cry of the daughter of my people because of them that dwell in a far country:] If we follow this translation, the words must be understood of the Jews lamenting their condition, because of the Chaldeans that were coming from a far country, to invade and destroy them. But I think the words may be rendered more agreeably to the Hebrew thus, "The voice of the cry of the daughter of my people from a land afar off." [Compare Isa. xxxiii. 17, where the phrase in the original is the same.] So that the prophet represents the doleful complaints of the Jews, under a state of captivity, as if God had quite forsaken and disowned them. To which he makes this reply, in the following words, Why then, or "But why, have you provoked me," &c. (compare ver. 5 of this chapter).

Ver. 20.] Another complaint of the people, that the summer, the season for marching an army, is past, and yet there is no prospect of assistance from Egypt, or any other of our allies.

Ver. 21. For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt;] See iv. 19, ix. 1. The words in the original run thus, "For the breach of the daughter of my people, I am broken" (see xiv. 17).

I am black;] I look ghastly, as those who are dying (compare xiv. 2, Joel ii. 6, Nah. ii. 10).

Ver. 22.] Gilead was famous for balm or turpentine [for that is the proper meaning of the Hebrew tsori], and such like healing gums (see xlv. 11, Gen. xxxvii. 25). This made a great many physicians and surgeons resort thither. The prophet applies this metaphorically to the state of the Jews, which was all over corrupted (compare Isa. i. 6), and asks whether there have been no methods used to heal these mortal wounds and distempers; or, if there have, how comes it to pass they should have so little success! implying, that God had sent his prophets as so many spiritual physicians, and they had given the best advice: but the fault lay wholly in the patients themselves, who refused to submit to their prescriptions; so we may apply the words spoken concerning Babylon (li. 9) to the present case: "We would have healed Babylon, but she is not," or rather, "she would not be healed." The words may likewise be understood of temporal deliverance, to this purpose: Is this people forsaken both of God and men, that there is no remedy left for their deliverance? (compare xxx. 12—14).

CHAPTER IX.

1 Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!

2 Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men; that I might leave my people, and go from them! for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men.

3 And they bend their tongues like their bow for lies: but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and they know not me, saith the LORD.

4 Take ye heed every one of his neighbour, and trust ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbour will walk with slanders.

5 And they will deceive every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity.

6 Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the LORD.

7 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them; for how shall I do for the daughter of my people?

8 Their tongue is as an arrow shot out; it speaketh deceit: one speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but in heart he layeth his wait.

9 ¶ Shall I not visit them for these things? saith the LORD: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this;

10 For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, because they are burned up, so that none can pass through them: neither can men hear the voice of the cattle; both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled; they are gone.

11 And I will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah desolate, without an inhabitant.

12 ¶ Who is the wise man, that may understand this? and who is he to whom the mouth of the LORD hath spoken, that he may declare it, for what the land perisheth and is burned up like a wilderness, that none passeth through?

13 And the LORD saith, Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein;

14 But have walked after the imagination of their own heart, and after Baalim, which their fathers taught them:

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the

CHAP. IX.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet bewails the manifold sins of the Jews, especially their falsehood and deceit, and threatens God's judgments, both against them and their neighbouring countries. He exhorts them to glory in God alone, and not in any worldly acquisitions, which they would find by sad experience to be altogether vain and unprofitable.

Ver. 1.] The prophet sympathizes with the calamities of his people, as before, iv. 19, viii. 21, and thereby excites them to a sense of their own misfortunes, that they may humble themselves under the mighty hand of God: according to that rule of the critic, "Si vis me flere, dolendum est primum ipsi tibi."

Ver. 2 They be all adulterers.] The expression seems here metaphorical, implying that they were apostates from God, to whose service they were engaged by the most solemn bond and covenant (see the notes on ii. 2, and compare Hos. vii. 4, Matt. xvi. 4, James iv. 4).

Ver. 3. They bend their tongues like their bow for lies;] So the psalmist compares the tongue to a bow, and words of calumny and falsehood to arrows, Ps. lxxiv. 3, 4 (see below, ver. 8 of this chapter).

From evil to evil.] From one degree of wickedness to a greater (see Ps. lxxix. 7).

Ver. 5. And weary themselves to commit iniquity.] They take more pains to carry on their ill designs, than the practice of truth and integrity would cost them.

Ver. 6.] The words of God to the prophet.

Ver. 7.] I will melt—and try them;] I will cast them into the furnace of affliction, that I may purify them from their dross (see vi. 29, 30, Isa. i. 25).

For how shall I do for the daughter of my people?] What can I do else for my people, but by all means try to save some out of the common destruction?

Ver. 9.] See v. 9, 29.

Ver. 10. For the habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, &c.] The prophet laments that general desolation which he sees coming upon the whole land, which will involve all the parts of it, both high and low, in one common destruction (compare iv. 24--26). The words which are translated "the habitations of the wilderness," the margin more properly renders, "the pastures of the wilderness" (compare Joel i. 19, ii. 22). The wilderness sometimes signifies the plain or champaign country, and is opposed to the mountains (see Isa. lxiii. 13, Lam. iv. 19, Joel i. 19).

Because they are burned up.] Destroyed with fire and sword (compare Isa. xlii. 25). Or we may understand the place of the great drought mentioned in this prophecy, xiv. 1.

Ver. 11. A den of dragons;] The word tannin, translated here dragons, among several other significations, is taken for a serpent, such as are usually found in ruins and desolate places (compare li. 37, Ps. xlv. 19, Isa. xlii. 22, xxxiv. 13).

Ver. 12.] Is there none of you so well acquainted with the will of God, and the methods of his providence, as to be able to declare the reasons why he has given such severe instances of his anger against this land? namely, for the sins of those who inhabit it (compare ver. 10, and the following verses).

Ver. 13, 14.] God himself declares the reasons of his judgments by the mouth of his prophet, viz. because they have forsaken his law, and followed the devices of their own hearts, and the idolatrous customs which they learned from their fathers.

Ver. 14. After Baalim.] See the note on ii. 23.

Ver. 15.] I will turn their plenty into scarcity of God of Israel; Behold, I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink.

16 I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known: and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them.

17 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Consider ye, and call for the mourning women, that they may come; and send for cunning women, that they may come:

18 And let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids gush out with waters.

19 For a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion, How are we spoiled! we are greatly confounded, because we have forsaken the land, because our dwellings have cast us out.

20 Yet hear the word of the LORD, O ye women, and let your ear receive the word of his all things. Compare this expression with that of Ps. lxxx. 5, "Thou feedest them with the bread of tears, and givest them plenteousness of tears to drink;" and 1 Kings xxii. 27, "feed him with the bread of affliction, and with water of affliction;" that is, use him with the most severe and rigorous treatment. The Hebrew word, which we here translate gall, properly signifies an herb, growing among corn, which is as bitter as gall; it is translated hemlock, Hos. x. 4, and both here and elsewhere joined with wormwood (see Deut. xxix. 18, Lam. iii. 19, Amos vi. 12). In this last text, the word laanah, commonly rendered wormwood, is translated hemlock.

Ver. 16. I will send a sword] A judgment mentioned by Moses (Lev. xxvi. 33), and fulfilled upon several of the Jewish captives in Egypt, and elsewhere (see xlv. 27, Ezek v. 2, 12).

Ver. 17, 18. Consider ye,] Consider the evil circumstances you are in, which call for mourning and lamentation: and since you yourselves are not sufficiently affected with the dangers that threaten you, send for those women whose profession it is to make public lamentations at funerals, and upon other sorrowful occasions, and let their mournful ditties excite and stir up true sorrow in you. The prophets elsewhere allude to this practice (see xlviii. 17, Ezek. xxviii. 31). Particularly the custom of hiring public mourners to attend the funerals of their friends, is mentioned, xxii. 18, 2 Sam. i. 24, 2 Chron. xxxv. 25, Eccles. xii. 5, Matt. ix. 23, compared with Mark v. 28. Such were the præfixæ among the Romans.

Ver. 18. Send for cunning women,] Such as were "skilful in lamentation," as Amos calls the common mourners that were hired upon solemn occasions (Amos v. 16).

Ver. 19. For a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion,] The prophet instructs them to bewail their state of captivity, in these and such like expressions.

Because we have forsaken the land,] We are forced to leave our native country: our land hath "spewed us out," according to the expression of Moses (Lev. xviii. 28), and would no longer bear with our abominations.

Ver. 20. O ye women,] God now speaks to the women in general, as being of more tender hearts than men, and calls them all seriously to mourning, and bids them instruct their daughters to join with them in a general lamentation; not only to act a part as those who are mourners by profession.

VOL. III.—51

mouth, and teach your daughters wailing, and every one her neighbour lamentation.

21 For death is come up into our windows, and is entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets.

22 Speak, Thus saith the Lord, Even the carcasses of men shall fall as dung upon the open field, and as the handful after the harvestman, and none shall gather them.

23 ¶ Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches:

24 But let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the LORD, which exercise loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: for these things I delight, saith the LORD.

25 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD,

Ver. 21. For death is come up into our windows, and—palaces,] Neither our houses, nor our palaces or fortifications can defend us against our enemies: but though we barricade our doors, the soldiers or their murdering instruments will find a way to enter by our windows, and assault us (Compare Joel ii. 9).

To cut off the children from without,] See note on vi. 11. The expression is elliptical, and may be thus supplied, [it proceeds] "to cut off the children," &c.

Ver. 22. As the handful after the harvestman, and none shall gather them,] We read, Deut. xxiv. 19, that if a sheaf was forgotten and left behind in the field, the owner should not go back to fetch it, but leave it to be taken up by the poor: this law made the harvestmen not so exact in gathering up the sheaves which they happened to drop, that they might give occasion for this sort of charity. The prophet makes use of this comparison to illustrate the number of slain that should lie about the fields; only with this difference, that whereas the poor used to gather up the sheaves left behind in the fields, these human bodies should rot upon the ground, without any one to take care of their burial (see the note on viii. 2).

Ver. 23, 24.] Let not men value themselves for their wisdom, strength, or riches, which are things in themselves of a very uncertain continuance, and such calamities are coming (see ver. 25, 26) in which they will stand the owners of them in very little stead. The only true valuable endowment is the knowledge of God, not as he is in himself, which is too high an attainment for poor mortals to pretend to, but with respect to his dealings with men; to have a serious sense of his mercies to the penitent, of his judgments to the obstinate, and of his truth and integrity in making good his promises and threatenings to both. It is in the exercise of these attributes God chiefly delights; and it is by these he desires to make himself known to the world; and he that forms an apprehension of God, chiefly with regard to these his perfections, will always demean himself suitably towards him. Judgment and righteousness are often equivalent terms; but if we distinguish them here, judgment denotes God's severity against the wicked, and righteousness his truth or holiness.

Ver. 25. With the uncircumcised,] Or, "with the uncircumcision," as it is in the Hebrew: so the Greek ἀνεύροτις is used by St. Paul for the persons who are uncircumcised (see Rom. ii. 26, 27, iii. 30, Gal. ii. 7, Col. iii. 11). Because the Jews valued them-that I will punish all them which are circumcised with the uncircumcised;

26 Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, and the children of Ammon, and Moab, and all that are in the utmost corners, that dwell in the wilderness: for all these nations are uncircumcised, and all the house of Israel are uncircumcised in the heart.

selves so much upon their circumcision, God tells them, when he sends his judgments abroad in the world, they shall find no more favour than those who are not circumcised.

Ver. 26. Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, &c.] See these judgments denounced more at large, xxv. 18, &c. The prophet places Judah among the heathen nations, because they were in effect uncircumcised as well as they; contenting themselves with the outward sign of circumcision, without endeavouring after the inward purity signified by it.

All that are in the utmost corners, that dwell in the wilderness:] The marginal reading is to be preferred before that of the text, "they that have the corners of their hair polled" (compare xxv. 23, 24, xlix. 32). The expression denotes those Arabians who cut their hair upon the fore part of the head round, and let the hair behind grow long; which custom of theirs Herodotus mentions in his Thalia, ch. 8, and tells us they did it in imitation of Bacchus. Others take notice that the Saracens used the same fashion in wearing their hair, dedicating it to Saturn. Plutarch saith, in the life of Theseus, that he cut his hair after the same manner, when he consecrated it to Apollo. In allusion to the same custom, the Solympæi, a colony of Phœnicians, are called Τετρακεφάλαι, roundheads, in Chœrilus, ap. Joseph. lib. i. contr. App. and the Abantes in Homer, Iliad. β. ἄνδρες ἀποκῶντες: "wearing their hair growing behind." And it is probable, that that precept in Lev. xix. 27, "ye shall not round the corners of your heads," hath reference to this custom, which was a rite in several countries near Judea, whereby they devoted themselves to the worship of some false god.

The house of Israel are uncircumcised] The Israelites, by breaking God's law, have made their "circumcision become uncircumcision," as St. Paul speaks (Rom. ii. 25), while they retain only the outward sign, and neglect the inward purity signified by it (Rom. ii. 29, see iv. 4 of this prophecy).

CHAPTER X.

1 HEAR ye the word which the LORD speaketh unto you, O house of Israel:

2 Thus saith the LORD, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them.

3 For the customs of the people are vain: for one cutteth a tree out of the forest, the work of the hands of the workman, with the ax.

4 They deck it with silver and with gold: they fasten it with nails and with hammers, that it move not.

5 They are upright as the palm tree, but speak not: they must needs be borne, because they cannot go. Be not afraid of them; for they cannot do evil, neither also is it in them to do good.

6 Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee, O LORD; thou art great, and thy name is great in might.

7 Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee doth it appertain: forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations, and in all their kingdoms, there is none like unto thee.

8 But they are altogether brutish and foolish: the stock is a doctrine of vanities.

CHAP. X.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet arms the Jews against the idolatry of the Chaldeans, among whom they were to live during the captivity, by setting forth the vast disparity between the true God and idols: then he bewails the calamities which were coming upon them, and beseeches God not to deal with them according to the utmost rigour of his justice.

Ver. 1. O house of Israel:] See the note on v. 15.

Ver. 2. Learn not the way of the heathen:] Do not follow the fond opinions of the heathen, amongst whom ye are to sojourn during the time of your captivity. Both the Chaldeans and Egyptians were famous for their skill in astrology. The prophet therefore warns the Jews, that when they were to live among those people, they should not regard the predictions which they made from the appearances of the heavenly bodies, from whose different aspects they pretend to foretell wars, the death of great men, and other calamities; whereby they terrified the people with the apprehension of impending evils.

Ver. 3, 4. One cutteth a tree out of the forest, &c.] He exposeth the folly of men's worshipping the works of their own hands, by the same arguments which are made use of by Isaiah, xliv. 10, 11, and have been explained in the notes upon that place.

Ver. 5. They are upright as the palm tree, but speak not:] The Hebrew may more properly be rendered thus, "They are made with due proportion, like a pillar;" the word tomar is rendered pillar by our translators, Cant. iii. 6, Joel ii. 30. They make a pretty figure, when they are set up, as being put together by the rules of art, but cannot speak, or show any signs of sense. Images are elsewhere called "dumb idols" (see Hab. ii. 19, 1 Cor. xii. 2).

They cannot do evil,] See the note upon Isa. xli. 23.

Ver. 7. For to thee doth it appertain:] Or, "to thee doth honour belong." The Hebrew word yaatha, is rather a noun than a verb, and signifies honour and excellency. To the same sense the Chaldee translates the words, "For thine is the kingdom." Some critics suppose the word Jah, the name of God, not to be a contraction of Jehovah; but to be derived from the same root yaah, and to import the superlative excellency of the divine majesty.

Among all the wise men—there is none like unto thee.] The princes and great men among the heathens, who were remarkable for their wisdom, and understanding the arts of government, were commonly deified after their death, and had divine ho-

Tarshish, and gold from Uphaz, the work of the workman, and of the hands of the founder: blue and purple is their clothing: they are all the work of cunning men.

10 But the LORD is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting king: at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation.

11 Thus shall ye say unto them, The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens.

12 He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion.

13 When he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

14 Every man is brutish in his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image: for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

15 They are vanity, and the work of errors in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

16 The portion of Jacob is not like them: for he is the former of all things; and Israel is the rod of his inheritance: The LORD of hosts is his name.

17 ¶ Gather up thy wares out of the land, O inhabitant of the fortress.

nours paid to them, as heroes, or Baalim (see note on ii. 23); but none of these can be compared with the supreme God (see Ps. lxxxix. 6).

Ver. 8.] "They that make images are like unto them," saith the psalmist (Ps. cxv. 8), equally stupid and insensible. The use and worship of them is grounded upon a false and foolish opinion, and tends to confirm the ignorant in that absurd fancy, that God is like the work of men's hands, and that images have some divine power lodged within them. For the same reason an image is called "a teacher of lies," Hab. ii. 18.

Ver. 9. Tarshish,] Ships of Tarshish sometimes signify any trading or merchant ships. But Tarshish may probably here denote some port in Spain, whither the merchants of Tyre and Zidon trafficked (see the note on Isa. ii. 16, xxiii. 1).

Gold from Uphaz,] Bochart supposes Uphaz to be the same with Ophir in India, near Zeilan; a place famous for gold (see the note on Isa. xlii. 12). Uphaz is probably the same place which is called Paz in Job xxviii. 17, where our translation reads, "jewels of fine gold," but it is in the Hebrew, "jewels of Paz."

Blue and purple] See Baruch vi. 12, 72.

Ver. 10. He is the living God,] Images are dead and senseless things (see ver. 14). Whereas God is the author and fountain of life and understanding, and we all live in and by him. The present copies of the Septuagint are defective here; but the learned Dr. Grabe conjectures, that the Septuagint anciently read here, Θεὸς ζῶντων, "the God of the living," which is still read in Theodotion's translation, and followed by the Syriac and Arabic versions; and that our Saviour alludes to this place, when he saith (Matt. xxiii. 32), "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living" (see his Dissert. de Vitiis LXX. Interpretum, p. 44).

Ver. 11.] This verse is written in Chaldee, as if the prophet designed to put these words in the mouths of the Jews, wherewith they might make a public profession of their own faith in the true God, and be able to answer the heathens that would entice them to idolatry. The prophet foretells, that there shall be a final period put to idolatry (see ver. 15, Isa. ii. 18, xlv. 16, Zech. xiii. 2). God hath already blotted out the names of many of the heathen idols, as an earnest of the utter destruction of the remainders of idolatry in his due time.

Ver. 12, 13.] Here follows a noble and lofty description of God's power and providence, whereby he sets forth his pre-eminence above dead and senseless idols.

Ver. 13. When he uttereth his voice, &c.] When God giveth the word of command, and signifies his will and pleasure (compare Job xxxviii. 34): or when he sends his thunder, called in scripture the "voice of God," the clouds immediately fall down in abundance of rain, and that moisture coming upon the ground that was scorched with heat before, does not only cool and refresh it, but makes all vegetables grow and flourish in it: and as God causes the vapours to ascend up in clouds from every quarter of the earth, so he joins two contrary things together, ordaining great flashes of lightning to break forth with the rain: the moisture of the rain preventing the ill effects that might otherwise proceed from the scorching heat of the lightning.

Bringing forth the wind out of his treasures,] He causeth great and mighty winds to come from unknown places and causes, as if he brought them out of a hidden treasure or repository, where they had been laid up till he had occasion for them.

Ver. 14. Every founder is confounded by the graven image,] The founders or makers of idols may be convinced of their sottishness, by their own art or skill, who must needs know, what material idols are made of, and that they are perfectly without life or sense (compare Isa. xlv. 9, 11, 18—20). The former part of the verse may be thus rendered, "Every man is brutish for want of knowledge," thus the particle min is taken, xlviii. 45, Ps. cix. 24, Lam. iv. 9, where our old translation rightly renders the words, "My strength is dried up for want of fatness."

There is no breath in them,] They pretend to life and understanding, when they have none (see ver. 8).

Ver. 15. They are vanity (see Isa. xli. 24, 29) and the work of errors,] The making of them is owing to men's wrong notions concerning the nature of God (see ver. 8).

In the time of their visitation they shall perish,] The time will come when God shall execute his vengeance upon them, and destroy them utterly (see ver. 11).

Ver. 16. There is no comparison between senseless idols and the great creator of all things, who has chosen the posterity of Jacob for his peculiar people [compare Deut. xxxii. 9, Ps. lxxiv. 2]; and has promised to be their God [see xi. 4]; and that they should always have an interest in his favour, if they continued steadfast in their obedience to him (see Ps. xvi. 5, lxxiii. 26, cxix. 57, Lam. iii. 24). "The rod of his inheritance," is an expression taken from the first division of the land of Canaan, when the inheritance of each tribe and family was meted out with a line or a rod.

Ver. 17.] The prophet here returns to his former 18 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once, and will distress them, that they may find it so.

19 ¶ Woe is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it.

20 My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken: my children are gone forth of me, and they are not: there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, and to set up my curtains.

21 For the pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the LORD: therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered.

denunciations against Jerusalem, and warns her to move her effects, and prepare for her going into captivity (compare Ezek. xii. 3); for though she thought herself secure, as dwelling in a place of great strength, and well fortified, yet her enemies should prevail and take it.

Ver. 18. I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once.] I will at one stroke remove the whole body of this people out of their native country (compare 1 Sam. xxv. 29).

That they may find it so.] Or, that they may find my threatenings to be true.

Ver. 19. Woe is me for my hurt!] The prophet sympathizes with the calamities of his people; as iv. 19, viii. 24, ix. 1.

I must bear it.] But then I endeavoured to compose myself, and patiently submit to God's afflicting hand.

Ver. 20. My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken.] The prophet personates his country, as bewailing herself in the following words. My cities and houses are rifled and destroyed, as if they were so many shepherds' tents (see the note on iv. 20).

My children are gone forth of me, &c.] My inhabitants are gone into captivity, and will never return hither any more; so that they are the same to 22 Behold, the noise of the bruit is come, and a great commotion out of the north country, to make the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons.

23 ¶ O LORD, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.

24 O LORD, correct me, but with judgment: not in thine anger, lest thou bring me to nothing.

25 Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name: for they have eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate.

me as if they were dead: nor will they ever be able to contribute to the restoration of my former state.

Ver. 21.] The prophet pursues the foregoing metaphor, and saith, that the reason why the tents are destroyed is, because the shepherds, meaning the governors, both civil and ecclesiastical [see the note on ii. 8], have, like so many brute beasts, forgotten God, and their duty to him [compare Ps. xciv. 8]; and thereby engaged the people committed to their charge in idolatry, and all manner of wickedness, which hath ended in ruin to themselves and their flocks.

Ver. 22.] See vi. 22, ix. 11.

Ver. 23.] Success does not depend upon human endeavours, but upon God's good pleasure [compare Ps. xxxvii. 23, Prov. xx. 24]: and therefore thou canst easily disappoint all the designs of our enemies.

Ver. 24.] If thou art determined to punish us, let it be with moderation (see xxx. 11): not with such a degree of severity, as utterly to destroy and consume us (see Ps. vi. 1, xxxviii. 1).

Ver. 25.] Let thy justice be made known, by bringing an exemplary punishment upon the Chaldeans and their allies (see i. 15), who do not acknowledge thy providence, but ascribe all their successes to their idols.

They have eaten up Jacob.] See vi. 3.

CHAPTER XI.

1 THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Hear ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem;

3 And say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD

God of Israel; Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant,

4 Which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I com-

CHAP. XI.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet proclaims the tenor of God's covenant with the Jews, and then denounceth a curse against those who break it; at the end of the chapter, he threatens evil to his neighbours at Anathoth, who had conspired his destruction.

Ver. 2.] That is, Hear, ye men of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, the words of the covenant I made with your fathers: and do thou, Jeremiah, lay the tenor of it before them (compare ver. 6). Dr. Lightfoot, in his Harmony of the Old Testament, is of opinion, that the prophet puts the people in mind of the renewal of this covenant lately made in the time of Josiah (2 Kings xxiii. 3).

Ver. 3. Cursed be the man] It is a way of speaking usual in scripture, to denounce God's judgments in the form of imprecation; so the apostle pronounces an excommunication, by saying, "Let him be accursed," or anathema (Gal. i. 8, 1 Cor. xvi. 22). To the same sense, St. Paul saith of Alexander the coppersmith, "The Lord reward him according to his works" (2 Tim. iv. 14). Thus the imprecations we meet with in several psalms, are to be understood as so many predictions, or denunciations, of God's judgments. Accordingly, St. Peter, speaking of the hundred and ninth psalm, saith, that in it the Holy Ghost "spake before [or prophesied] by the mouth of David concerning Judas" (Acts i. 16).

Ver. 4. From the iron furnace.] The use of an iron furnace is to melt and purify metals, and is a proper representation of any sore affliction, wherein mand you: so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God:—

5 That I may perform the oath which I have sworn unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as it is this day. Then answered I, and said, So be it, O LORD.

6 Then the LORD said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them.

7 For I earnestly protested unto your fathers in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice.

8 Yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the imagination of their evil heart: therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, which I commanded them to do; but they did them not.

9 And the LORD said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

10 They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape; and though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them.

12 Then shall the cities of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem go, and cry unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall not save them at all in the time of their trouble.

13 For according to the number of thy cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal.

14 Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble.

15 What hath my beloved to do in mine house, seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many, and the holy flesh is passed from thee? when thou doest evil, then thou rejoicest.

16 The LORD called thy name, A green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit: with the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken.

17 For the LORD of hosts, that planted thee, hath pronounced evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves to provoke me to anger in offering incense unto Baal.

18 ¶ And the LORD hath given me knowledge

God tries his servants, in order to purge them of their dross (see Gen. xv. 17, Ps. lxvi. 10, Isa. xlviii. 10, and ix. 7 of this prophecy).

Saying, Obey my voice,] See vii. 23.

Ver. 5.] The prophet confirms the words of this curse, according to the form prescribed, Deut. xxvii. 25, &c. and thereby approves the justice of it.

Ver. 9, 10.] They made some steps towards a reformation in the time of Josiah, but now they have agreed or conspired together to return back to their former idolatries (compare Ezek. xxii. 25, Hos. vi. 9).

Ver. 11.] Their destruction was irreversible, upon supposition of their continuance in their evil ways, which God foresaw they would do (see the notes upon iv. 28, vii. 16).

Ver. 12.] When great calamities threaten men, their fears suggest all possible ways of seeking for succour: and when they find themselves forsaken of God, they betake themselves to idols: but will find all applications vain, and to no purpose (see 2 Chron. xxviii. 23).

Ver. 13.] See ii. 28. Bosheth, shame, was a nickname for Baal (see Hos. ix. 10). So Jerubbaal is called Jerubbesheth, 2 Sam. xi. 21 (see the note on Isa. xix. 18).

Ver. 14.] See vii. 16, xiv. 11, 12.

Ver. 15. What hath my beloved to do in mine house,] Why doth this my chosen and peculiar people, as they love to call themselves, make their appearance before me in my house, since they have gone a whoring after several idols of the nations round about them, and thereby have disowned me, and broken the marriage contract, or covenant, that was between us (see the note on ii. 2, and compare xlii. 27)? God calls the Jews his beloved people, because they called themselves so, and because they were still “beloved for their fathers’ sakes” (Rom. xi. 28), and he would not cast them off utterly, for the sake of the covenant he had made with their progenitors (see xii. 7, Hos. iii. 1).

The holy flesh is passed from thee?] The flesh of thy sacrifices which thou offerest up to me, as an atonement for thy sins, doth not at all profit thee, being polluted and rendered unacceptable to me, through those many and great sins, in which thou continuest without remorse, and even takest a pride in committing them (see above, vi. 20, and compare Hag. ii. 12—14).

The LXX. and Vulgar Latin give a more easy sense of this verse, “Why hath my beloved committed lewdness in my house? can vows or the holy flesh take away thine iniquities from thee?” It is probable that the Hebrew copy they made use of, instead of harabbim [with many] read hanedubim, or hannedarim; freewill-offerings, or vows.

Ver. 16. A green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit:] St. Paul plainly alludes to this verse, Rom. xi. 17, where, speaking of the gentiles being made members of the church in the room of the Jews, who were rejected, he saith, “If some of the branches are broken off, and thou [gentile], being a wild olive-tree, are grafted in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fitness of the olive-tree.” The Jewish nation, in its flourishing state, is sometimes compared to a vine, sometimes to an olive tree, chiefly because of the fruits of good works which God might justly expect from them, after all the care and pains he had bestowed upon them, to make them thrive and fructify (see Ps. lli. 8).

He hath kindled fire upon it,] In pursuance of the same metaphor, the words express the desolation which the Chaldeans should bring upon Judea by fire and sword (Ezek. xix. 14, Isa. xvi. 8).

Ver. 17.] See the note on ii. 21.

Ver. 18.] This relates to the ill designs the men of Anathoth had contrived against the prophet, which of it, and I know it: then thou shewedst me their doings.

19 But I was like a lamb or an ox that is brought to the slaughter; and I knew not that they had devised devices against me, saying, Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof, and let us cut him off from the land of the living, that his name may be no more remembered.

20 But, O LORD of hosts, that judgest righteously, that triest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I revealed my cause.

he saith God had revealed to him (see the following verses).

Ver. 19. I was like a lamb or an ox that is brought to the slaughter;] A proverbial speech, expressing a false security or insensibility of danger (see Prov. vii. 22). So Agamemnon's ghost in Homer describes his own death treacherously contrived by Egistheus at a feast.

—“Ὁς τίς τι κατίνασι θούν ἐπὶ φάτῃς”

“He died as an ox at the stall.”—Odys. λ. ver. 410.

That phrase, “He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter,” Isa. liii. 7, is of a different importance (see the note there). Bochart supposes the word alluph to be an adjective, and renders the former part of the sentence thus, “I was brought as a tame sheep to the slaughter.” But we may very well admit of the common translation; the disjunctive particle being elsewhere understood, as Ps. lxi. 31, “Better than an ox [or] bullock;” Isa. xxxviii. 14, “Like a crane or swallow.”

Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof;] The letter of the Hebrew runs thus, “Let us destroy the tree (or the stalk) with the bread thereof” (bread is sometimes used for the corn, of which it is made, v. 17): i. e. Let us destroy the prophet and his doctrine (see ver. 21). Lud. de Dieu renders it, “Let us destroy the wood in his flesh;” i. e. Let us scourge him with rods, till they are broke, and the ends of them stick in his flesh. I take this to be a forced interpretation: for the Hebrew lehem, bread, is never put for flesh, but when it is spoken of the sacrifices offered up to God. The Septuagint render the words, “Let us put wood into his bread;” i. e. Let us give him wood instead of bread; which the fathers generally apply to the crucifixion of Christ, whose sufferings were typified in the afflictions of all the saints and prophets of former times.

21 Therefore thus saith the LORD of the men of Anathoth, that seek thy life, saying, Prophesy not in the name of the LORD, that thou die not by our hand:

22 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will punish them: the young men shall die by the sword; their sons and their daughters shall die by famine:

23 And there shall be no remnant of them: for I will bring evil upon the men of Anathoth, even the year of their visitation.

Ver. 20.] I have laid my cause before thee, and recommended myself to thy protection, who knowest the sincerity and intentions of my thoughts (see xii. 2, 3). When men continue implacable in their malice, we may lawfully expect and desire that God will plead our cause, and judge us according to our righteousness. For the bringing wicked men to condign punishment, tends both to the manifestation of God's glory, and the good government of the world. To pray against our enemies in this sense, viz. not for the satisfying our private resentments, but the setting forth of God's justice, is not disagreeable to the spirit of Christianity. So St. Paul prays against Alexander, “The Lord reward him according to his works” (2 Tim. iv. 14).

Ver. 21.] This was the usage the prophets commonly met with from those who “became their enemies because they told them those truths” they had no mind to hear (see xx. 1, xxxviii. 4, 6, Amos vii. 10). And this treatment they found at the hands of their neighbours, their friends, and relations (see xii. 6, xx. 10): as our Saviour Christ did afterward (see Matt. xiii. 57, John vii. 15).

Ver. 22.] I will make good Jeremiah's prophecies, and bring those evils upon them which he hath foretold.

Ver. 23. The year of their visitation.] When I will visit their sins upon them (see xxiii. 12, xlvi. 21, xlviii. 44, l. 27). The words year and day often signify a set or determined time (see Isa. lxi. 2).

CHAPTER XII.

1 RIGHTEOUS art thou, O LORD, when I plead with thee: yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherously?

CHAP. XII.

ARGUMENT.—The first six verses relate to the subject spoken of in the latter part of the eleventh chapter, and should not have been divided from it. In the remaining part of this chapter God declares, that although he had forsaken his people for a season, and given them up into the hands of their enemies, yet he would in due time remember them, and execute vengeance upon their oppressors.

Ver. 1.] Though I doubt not of thy justice and holiness, yet suffer me to argue with thee concerning the prosperity of the wicked, and the afflictions

2 Thou hast planted them, yea, they have taken root: they grow, yea, they bring forth fruit: thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.

3 But thou, O LORD, knowest me: thou hast of the righteous: a dispensation which hath in all ages been made an objection against providence, and upon that account been a stumbling-block even to good men (see Job xii. 6, xxi. 7, &c. Ps. xxxvii. lxxiii.).

Ver. 2. Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.] The true character of hypocrites, who according to the prophet Isaiah's description of them, “honour God with their mouth, but their heart is far from him” (Isa. xxix. 13, Mark vii. 6). The reins in scripture signify the thoughts and inward dispositions (see Prov. xxiii. 16, Ps. xvi. 7, lxxiii. 21). In which sense God is said to “try the reins and the heart,” xi. 20 of this prophecy.

Ver. 3. Pull them out like sheep for the slaughter,] seen me, and tried mine heart toward thee: pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter.

4 How long shall the land mourn, and the herbs of every field wither, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? the beasts are consumed, and the birds; because they said, He shall not see our last end.

5 ¶ If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? and if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustedst, they wearied thee, then how wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?

6 For even thy brethren, and the house of thy father, even they have dealt treacherously with thee; yea, they have called a multitude after thee: believe them not, though they speak fair words unto thee.

As sheep are taken out of the flock, in order to be slain (see the note on xi. 20). The Vulgar Latin reads, "Gather them as sheep;" it is probable that the verb natak might be used in this sense, though the lexicons take no notice of it; for atik, a noun derived from thence, signifies a chamber (Ezek. xli. 15); and netek a spot of leprosy (Lev. xiii. 30), from the gathering of her humours.

Prepare them for the day of slaughter.] The Hebrew reads, "Sanctify them;" i. e. set them apart for destruction (see xxii. 7).

Ver. 4. The herbs of every field wither.] The famine hath already consumed the fruits of the earth, together with the birds and beasts of the field: for the infidelity, and atheism of these wretches, who thus prosper in their wickedness (compare xiv. 2, xxiii. 10, ix. 10).

He shall not see our last end.] The words of those who made a mock of Jeremiah and his prophecies, as if he should never see those evils come to pass which he had threatened against them. (xi. 23). Some understand the words to this sense, God will never bring that destruction upon us, with which Jeremiah threatens us.

Ver. 5. If thou hast run with footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses?] Here God answers the complaints of the prophet, and applies a proverbial expression to his case; the import of which is, that if men find themselves unable to contend with a less power, it is in vain for them to strive with a greater. This sentence being applied to the prophet's case, implies, that if he could not bear with the ill usage of his acquaintance and neighbours at Anathoth, how would he be able to undergo the hardships he must expect to meet with from the great men at Jerusalem, who would unanimously set themselves against him (see xxvi. 8, &c. xxxvi. 26, xxxviii. 4, 6).

How wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?] The same sense differently expressed; q. d. If thou enduredst such hardships in thy own country, and among thy own kindred and acquaintance, what must thou expect when those in power shall combine against thee? whose rage shall be like that of the lions who are driven out of their coverts, when Jordan overflows the neighbouring fields, and set upon every one that travels the public road (see the note on xlix. 19).

Ver. 6. They have called a multitude after thee:] Or, "against thee," as Noldius observes the participle aharee sometimes signifies (see xlix. 37, Isa. xxxvii. 22). They have not been content to vent their own malice against thee, but have also raised the multi-

7 ¶ I have forsaken mine house, I have left mine heritage; I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies.

8 Mine heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest: it crieth out against me: therefore have I hated it.

9 Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, the birds round about are against her; come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field, come to devour.

10 Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden my portion under foot, they have made my pleasant portion a desolate wilderness.

11 They have made it desolate, and being desolate it mourneth unto me; the whole land is made desolate, because no man layeth it to heart.

12 The spoilers are come upon all high places

tude upon thee, and endeavoured to bring thee under a popular odium: the words may perhaps be more properly translated, "They pursue thee with a great [cry]," as a common malefactor.

Ver. 7. I have forsaken mine house.] The place of my especial residence, where I have placed my name (see 2 Kings xxiii. 27). The words are spoken of the desolation of the temple by the Chaldeans, as if it were already brought to pass; a way of speaking usual in the prophets (see the note upon Isa. xxi. 9).

The hand of her enemies.] See xi. 15.

Ver. 8.] My people have used me and my prophets with despite and contempt. They have blasphemed me and my laws, just like a wild beast, that opens his mouth against every one that withstands it. These are just causes of my hatred to them.

Ver. 9.] My people are become wild and savage (see ver. 8), and not to be taught better manners, and like a speckled or taloned bird, are only fit for prey and deeds of violence. And as all the rest of the birds flock about such a one, and are ready to pull it to pieces, so I have stirred up all the enemies of my people, to annoy them on every side; compared here to so many beasts of prey (see ii. 15, Isa. lvi. 9, Hab. ii. 17). The word tsabuang, rendered here speckled, is of an uncertain signification, being found but in this one place of the bible, unless perhaps 1 Sam. xiii. 13, where some look upon it as a proper name. The Septuagint understand it of the hyena, which sense is followed by Bochart. But if we take it in either signification, the sense is much the same.

Ver. 10.] By "many pastors" are meant the generals of the Chaldean army; so the Chaldean paraphrase rightly explains it (see ver. 12, and compare vi. 3). God calls Judea his "vineyard," and "pleasant portion," because of the care he took to cultivate and improve it, and the fruit he might justly have expected from it (see the note on xi. 16).

Ver. 11. Being desolate, it mourneth unto me;] It lies in a neglected and doleful condition (see ver. 4, and xxiii. 10), and makes a sort of a silent complaint, and begs to be restored to its former prosperity.

No man layeth it to heart.] No man acknowledgeth God's hand in the calamities he feels, or humbles himself under it (see viii. 6, Isa. xlii. 25).

Ver. 12. The spoilers are come upon all high places through [or in] the wilderness:] The Chaldean army, described by the metaphor of a "full wind of the high places in the wilderness," iv. 11 (see the note there).

The sword of the Lord shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other] When God delivers through the wilderness: for the sword of the LORD shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land: no flesh shall have peace.

13 They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns: they have put themselves to pain, but shall not profit; and they shall be ashamed of your revenues because of the fierce anger of the LORD.

14 ¶ Thus saith the LORD against all mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; Behold, I will pluck them out of their land, and up a people to be slain by their enemies, he is said to give commission to a sword to pass through a land (see xlvii. 6, 7, Ezek. xiv. 17).

Ver. 13. They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns.] A proverbial expression, signifying men's loss of time and labour. It is here applied to the Jew's fruitless endeavours to save themselves from the evils that threatened them, by courting the assistance and alliance of idolaters.

They shall be ashamed of your revenues.] Or, "be ye ashamed of your increase," &c. God's displeasure shall make all your designs abortive; they shall not bring forth their expected fruit, and you shall be seized with shame and confusion to see yourselves disappointed (compare ii. 36, 37). The word revenues, or increase, alludes to the reaping of thorns, mentioned in the foregoing part of the verse.

Ver. 14. Thus saith the Lord, against all mine evil neighbours.] This prophecy threatens chiefly the Idumeans, Moabites, Ammonites, and Philistines, against whom Jeremiah prophesies, ch. xlvii.—xlix. and Ezekiel, ch. xxv. These the text calls evil neighbours, because of the spite and ill-will which they showed towards the Jews upon all occasions, at this time especially, when most of them joined with the Chaldeans and Syrians in oppressing them (see 2 Kings xxiv. 2). This sin is particularly laid to their charge by the prophets, and they are threatened with captivity chiefly upon that account (see xlix. 1, 2, Ezek. xxv. 3, 6, 8, 12, 15, Amos i. 11, Obad. ver. 10, Zeph. ii. 8).

Pluck out the house of Judah from among them.] Several Jews were carried captive, or turned voluntary exiles, into these neighbouring countries, before the general captivity by the Chaldeans (see xv. 4, xl. 11). Of these Jews some were translated together with the natives of those countries by the Chaldeans afterward: others went down into Egypt (see ch. xliii. xlv.). Here is foretold the restoration of the Jews from their several dispersions (compare xxxii.

pluck out the house of Judah from among them.

15 And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land.

16 And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The LORD liveth; as they taught my people to swear by Baal; then shall they be built in the midst of my people.

17 But if they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the LORD.

37, Ezek. xxviii. 25, 26). This promise was partly made good in the times succeeding the Babylonish captivity (see Ps. cxlvii. 2); but will more fully be accomplished at the final restoration of that nation, concerning which see xxx. 3, &c. when the fulness of the gentiles will likewise be brought into the church, which the words of the next verse point at.

Ver. 15. And have compassion on them, &c.] Or, "I will again have compassion on them;" the verb shub being often taken adverbially (see the note on Isa. vi. 13). The captivity threatened to the Jews and their neighbours seems to be confined to the space of seventy years (see xxv. 11, xxvii. 7, Isa. xxiii. 15). We may observe likewise, that after Jeremiah hath threatened severe judgments upon several countries, he concludes with a general promise of returning from their captivity in the latter days (see xlviii. 47, xlix. 6, 39): which promise probably relates to their conversion under the gospel, called in scripture, "the latter days."

Ver. 16. If they will diligently learn the ways of my people.] If they will learn of my people, who lived among them, to be worshippers of the true God.

To swear by my name,] See the note on iv. 2.

As they taught my people to swear by Baal;] See Zeph. i. 5. As all vice is contagious, it is no wonder to find the Jews particularly fond of the idolatrous practices of their neighbours. For which cause they are often cautioned not to follow their customs; and it is probable, several of the ceremonial laws were made in opposition to the usages received among those nations.

Then shall they be built in the midst of my people.] They shall be joined to them as one church, which is called God's house or building (see Numb. xii. 7, 1 Cor. iii. 9, 1 Tim. iii. 15, 1 Pet. ii. 5).

Ver. 17.] Those that will not have God and Christ to reign over them shall in the end be punished with everlasting destruction (see Is. lx. 12, Luke xix. 27, compared with Rev. xix. 21).

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Thus saith the LORD unto me, Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water.

2 So I got a girdle according to the word of the LORD, and put it on my loins.

CHAP. XIII.

ARGUMENT.—Under the figures of a linen girdle, and bottles filled with wine, is set forth God's rejection of the Jews, and the severe judgments he would execute upon them for their manifold sins.

3 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying,

4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.

Ver. 1. Get thee a linen girdle.] See this figure explained, ver. 11.

Put it not in water.] To represent the Jews in their corrupt state of nature, when they had nothing to recommend them to God's grace and favour (compare Ezek. xvi. 4).

5 So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the LORD commanded me.

6 And it came to pass after many days, that the LORD said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence, which I commanded thee to hide there.

7 Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it: and, behold, the girdle was marred, it was profitable for nothing.

8 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Thus saith the LORD, After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem.

10 This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing.

11 For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I cause to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel and the whole house of Judah, saith the LORD; that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: but they would not hear.

12 ¶ Therefore thou shalt speak unto them this word; Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine: and they shall say unto thee, Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine?

13 Then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants of this land, even the kings that sit upon David's throne, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, with drunkenness.

14 And I will dash them one against another, even the fathers and the sons together, saith the LORD: I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them.

15 ¶ Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud: for the LORD hath spoken.

16 Give glory to the LORD your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and, while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness.

17 But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride; and mine eye shall weep sore, and run down with tears, because the LORD's flock is carried away captive.

18 Say unto the king and to the queen, Humble yourselves, sit down: for your principalities shall come down, even the crown of your glory.

19 The cities of the south shall be shut up, and none shall open them: Judah shall be carried

Ver. 4. Go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.] God commanded the prophet to hide the girdle by the bank of Euphrates, to signify the Jews being carried captive over that river, called the "water of Babylon;" Ps. cxxxvii. 1. Most commentators are of opinion, that this was performed by the prophet only in a vision: it not being probable that God should send him two such long journeys as are mentioned here and ver. 6, merely upon this errand (see a like instance, xxv. 17). Several things are related in scripture as actually done, which yet were only transacted in a vision: a remarkable instance of which we read, Gen. xv. 5, where the text saith, that God brought "Abraham forth abroad," and bid him "tell the stars;" and yet it appears by ver. 12, that the sun was not gone down. See this question at large discussed by the learned Dr. Pocock, in his commentary upon the beginning of Hosea.

Ver. 9. After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah.] I will bring down their pride and stubbornness (see ver. 15, 17), by making them slaves and vassals to strangers (see Lam. v. 5, 8, 13).

Ver. 11. So have I caused to cleave unto me] The covenant between God and his people is elsewhere represented by a marriage contract (see the note on ii. 2); whereby the man is said to "cleave to his wife" (Gen. ii. 24).

That they might be unto me for—a name, and for a praise.] That they might have the honour of being called by my name, and I might be glorified by their showing forth my truth and praises to the world (see xxxiii. 9).

Ver. 12. Every bottle shall be filled with wine.] God's judgments are often represented under the figure of a cup full of intoxicating liquor (see this metaphor at large pursued, xxv. 15, &c.). To the same purpose God tells them here, that as they have all sinned, so shall every one have his share in the punishment.

They shall say unto thee, &c.] God, that knew the profaneness of their hearts, foretells the reply they will make to this threatening, that, taking it in a literal sense they will make a jest of it, as if the words were intended to encourage intemperance; either they did not, or would not understand the drift of them (see vi. 10).

Ver. 13.] See the note on xxv. 15, 16.

Ver. 14. I will dash them one against another.] I will confound and destroy them all, as earthen vessels are broken to pieces, when they are dashed one against another. The words allude to the earthen bottles which were to be filled with wine, ver. 12 (compare xix. 10, 11, xlviii. 12).

I will not pity, nor spare.] See iv. 28.

Ver. 15.] See ver. 9, 17. Humble yourselves before God, and give glory to him; as it follows:

Ver. 16. Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness.] Confess your faults (compare Josh. vii. 19), and humble yourselves under his mighty hand, before he bring upon you the night of affliction; light is the emblem of joy, and happy times are expressed by bright and pleasant days; as, on the contrary, troubles and calamities are represented by the night and darkness, when everything looks melancholy and dismal (see iv. 23, xv. 9, Isa. v. 30, viii. 22, Joel ii. 10, Amos viii. 9, 10).

Before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains.] Before the time come, when ye shall be forced to fly by night unto the mountains, for fear of your enemies (see xvi. 16, Ps. xi. 1, Ezek. vii. 16, Matt. xxiv. 16).

Ver. 17. If ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places.] If ye resolve to harden yourselves against those messages I deliver to you from the mouth of God, I will then lay aside my public character, and have nothing to do, but secretly to bewail your obstinacy and contempt of God's word and threatenings (see ver. 10, 15).

The Lord's flock is carried away.] See ver. 20.

Ver. 18.] By the king and queen may probably be meant Jehoiachin and his mother, who was carried captive with him (see xxii. 26, 2 Kings xxiv. 12). The prophet tells them they must both come down away captive all of it, it shall be wholly carried away captive.

20 Lift up your eyes, and behold them that come from the north: where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock?

21 What wilt thou say when he shall punish thee? for thou hast taught them to be captains, and as chief over thee: shall not sorrows take thee, as a woman in travail?

22 ¶ And if thou say in thine heart, Wherefore come these things upon me? For the greatness of thine iniquity are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels made bare.

23 Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the from their high estate and sit down upon the ground, or in the dust: i. e. in a posture of mourning and lamentation (see Lam. ii. 20, Isa. iii. 26, xlvii. 1).

Ver. 19.] Shutting up signifies a state of bondage, and opening a state of liberty (see Ps. xxxi. 8, Job xii. 14). The verb sagar, here rendered shut up, is sometimes taken for delivering or giving up into the power of another; and is rendered in the Septuagint, by παρδίδου (see Deut. xxiii. 15, xxxii. 30, 1 Sam. xxiii. 12, Job xvi. 11, Ps. lxxviii. 48). Taking the words in either sense, they denote that the cities of Judah shall be given up into the enemies' hand, and none shall be able to rescue them. Judah is called the south, in opposition to Chaldea, expressed by the north in the next verse (see i. 14).

Ver. 20.] The verbs and pronouns in the Hebrew here, and in the following verse, are of the feminine gender; which supposes the words to be directed to the Jewish state or government, represented under the figure of a woman (see iv. 31, vi. 2). The prophet demands, in a sarcastical manner, into what a miserable condition she hath brought the people committed to her charge; called the Lord's flock, ver. 17, which were formerly in a prosperous and flourishing condition (compare x. 21).

Ver. 21. What wilt thou say when he shall punish thee? What wilt thou plead for thyself, either for the excusing or mitigating thy punishment?

For thou hast taught them to be captains, When Ahaz called in the assistance of Tiglath-pileser against Rezin king of Syria, and made himself tributary to the king of Assyria, he taught the Assyrians how they might become masters and conquerors over his own country whenever they pleased (see 2 Kings xvi. 7, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20).

Ver. 22. Wherefore come these things? See v. 19.

For the greatness of thine iniquity are thy skirts discovered, Thyne enormous crimes deserve no less a punishment than that of captivity: when thou shalt be carried away into a strange country, stripped and bare, without any covering to thy nakedness; for such was the barbarous cruelty of conquerors towards their captives (see Isa. iii. 17, xx. 4, xlvii. 3, Lam. i. 8, iv. 21, Nahum iii. 3). The words likewise allude to the punishment that used to be inflicted upon common harlots and adulteresses, which was to strip them naked and expose them to the eyes of the world: and thus God threateneth he will deal with Jerusalem, upon account of her spiritual fornication (see Ezek. xvi. 37—39, Hos. ii. 10).

Ver. 23. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, The Hebrew word Cush, which our translators render by leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil.

24 Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness.

25 This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood.

26 Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear.

27 I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?

Ethiopia, does often signify Arabia in scripture: Ethiopia being by the ancient writers distinguished into the eastern, the same with Arabia, and western Ethiopia (see Ludolphus's Comment. in lib. i. Histor. Æthiop. n. 19). Bochart, indeed, maintains, that the word is never used for Ethiopia, properly so called (see his Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 2, n. 238). But this text is a good proof to the contrary, which may most probably be understood of the Africans, or black-moors, as they are commonly called. The word Cush is likewise joined with the Lubims or Lybians, in other places, as 2 Chron. xii. 3, xvi. 8, Dan. xi. 43, and with Phut, another people of Africa (see Jer. xlv. 9, Ezek. xxx. 5, xxxviii. 5, Nahum iii. 9). In the same sense Cush must be understood, Esther i. 1, where Ahasuerus is said to "reign from India to Cush," or Ethiopia; because the words relate to the conquest of Egypt and Ethiopia by Cambyzes: by whose victories, and the successful arms of Darius Hystaspes, the Persian empire was enlarged from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and twenty-seven provinces (compare that text with Dan. vi. 1).

Then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil. The words import, how extremely difficult it is to overcome ill habits, custom being a second nature. For we are not to explain the words in a strict literal sense (because then it would have been to no purpose for the prophet to have exhorted the people to amendment), but only extend their meaning so far as to denote that a moral change in habitual sinners is almost as impossible as a natural one. Thus our Saviour compares the difficulty of a rich man's entering into the kingdom of God, to a natural impossibility, viz. "to a camel's passing through the eye of a needle" (Matt. xix. 24): but yet qualifies the comparison, by adding "What is impossible with men, is possible with God," i. e. God's grace can surmount such difficulties as are impossible for nature to overcome: and thus we are to understand the text before us.

Ver. 25. The portion of thy measures Or "of thine inheritance," as the Chaldee paraphrase explains it; the expression is taken from the division of the land of Canaan, by line or measure.

Trusted in falsehood. In false gods, who cannot help men in their troubles (see x. 14).

Ver. 26. Will I discover thy skirts See ver. 22

Ver. 27. I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, Compare v. 8. He resembles their violent inclination to idolatry to the rage of lust (compare ii. 20, 23, 24, iii. 2, 6).

CHAPTER XIV.

1 THE word of the LORD that came to Jeremiah concerning the dearth.

2 Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground; and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.

3 And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with their vessels empty; they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads.

4 Because the ground is chapt, for there was no rain in the earth, the plowmen were ashamed, they covered their heads.

5 Yea, the hind also calved in the field, and forsook it, because there was no grass.

6 And the wild asses did stand in the high places, they snuffed up the wind like dragons; their eyes did fail, because there was no grass.

7 ¶ O LORD, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake: for our backslidings are many; we have sinned against thee.

8 O the hope of Israel, the saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night?

9 Why shouldst thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O LORD, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name; leave us not.

10 ¶ Thus saith the LORD unto this people, Thus have they loved to wander, they have not refrained their feet, therefore the LORD doth not accept them; he will now remember their iniquity, and visit their sins.

11 Then said the LORD unto me, Pray not for this people for their good.

12 When they fast, I will not hear their cry;

CHAP. XIV.

ARGUMENT.—Besides the invasion threatened, God visited the land of Judea with a terrible famine, which Jeremiah earnestly prays God to avert: and withal shows how the false prophets have deceived the people, who foretold nothing but peace and prosperity.

Ver. 1. The dearth.] Or, the drought; so the LXX. render the word here, as also the Chaldee and Syriac versions: and thus our translators understand the word, xvii. 8. The Hebrew batsaroth, signifies restraint, i. e. “when the heaven is shut up that there is no rain,” as the scriptures express it, Deut. xi. 17, 1 Kings viii. 35. This dearth was the effect of a great drought, like the famine in the time of Elijah (see the third, fourth, and following verses).

Ver. 2. Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish;] By the gates of Judah are meant the cities thereof (see xv. 7, Deut. xxviii. 52): together with their inhabitants, who have left their cities desolate, to seek out for sustenance. The people look black and ghastly, and cast themselves down upon the ground, out of grief and despair (compare viii. 21, xiii. 18).

The cry of Jerusalem is gone up.] Is gone up to heaven (see 1 Sam. v. 12).

Ver. 3. They came to the pits.] Or, “to the cisterns:” Jerusalem was supplied with water by two lakes or pools, called the upper pool, and the lower pool (see Isa. vii. 3, xxii. 9); from whence the water was conveyed in cisterns for the use of the city.

And were ashamed and confounded.] At the disappointment. So we are to understand the same expression in Ps. xl. 14, lxx. 3, “Let them be ashamed and confounded;” i. e. Let them meet with that confusion which follows a disappointment (compare xx. 11, xlvi. 13 of this prophecy).

And covered their heads.] An expression of great affliction and mourning (see 2 Sam. xv. 30, xix. 4).

Ver. 5. The hind also calved in the field, and forsook it.] To seek for sustenance somewhere else.

Ver. 6. They snuffed up the wind like dragons;] They gaped after the cool air upon the tops of the mountains, and drew it in greedily with their mouths, as naturalists observe of dragons and great serpents in hot and dry seasons. But the word tannim likewise signifies any great fish (see the note on Isa. xxvii. 1): and particularly a crocodile, as it is plainly taken Ezek. xxix. 3, xxxii. 2, in which sense Ludolphus understands the word here, and tells us, that the crocodiles put their heads above water, to refresh themselves by breathing in the cool air (see his commentary in Histor. Æth. lib. i. n. 87).

Ver. 7. Though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake.] Our sins bear witness against us, and condemn us to the severest judgments thy wrath can inflict: but we beseech thee to consider, that we are thy people, and have that regard for thine own honour, as not to cast us off utterly (see ver. 9).

For our backslidings are many;] Or, “although our backslidings are many” (see Noldius's Concordance, p. 399).

Ver. 8. O the hope of Israel.] Thou who hast given us so many gracious promises, to encourage us to put our trust in thee (see Ps. xxii. 4).

Why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land.] Thou hast promised to dwell among us (see ver. 9, Lev. xxvi. 12), why then shouldst thou behave thyself towards us, as if thou wert a mere stranger to us? and as one no more concerned for our welfare than a traveller is for the place where he lodges but one night, and never expects to see it again?

Ver. 9.] Thou canst not want power to save us; but by thy disregard of us, seemest like a mighty man, that through fear or surprise, is not able to make use of his strength.

Ver. 10. Thus have they loved to wander.] God returns an answer to the complaints and expostulations of the prophet, and tells the people, that their miseries are owing to themselves, who took pleasure in going astray from the true God, and following the idolatries and corrupt customs of the heathens about them (see ii. 23—26): which sins he now visits so severely upon them.

The Lord doth not accept them;] He will not accept their own prayers or humiliations, nor thine intercessions in their behalf, but will punish them according to their deserts (see ver. 11, 12).

Ver. 11. Pray not for this people.] See vii. 16.

and when they offer burnt-offering and an oblation, I will not accept them: but I will consume them by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence.

13 ¶ Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall not see the sword, neither shall ye have famine; but I will give you assured peace in this place.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, The prophets prophesy lies in my name: I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, and I sent them not, yet they say, Sword and famine shall not be in this land; By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed.

16 And the people to whom they prophesy shall be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem because of the famine and the sword; and they shall have none to bury them, them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters: for I will pour their wickedness upon them.

17 ¶ Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them; Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease: for the virgin daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow.

18. If I go forth into the field, then behold the slain with the sword! and if I enter into the city, then behold them that are sick with famine! yea, both the prophet and the priest go about into a land that they know not.

19 Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? hath thy soul loathed Zion? why hast thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us? we looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble!

20 We acknowledge, O LORD, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers: for we have sinned against thee.

21 Do not abhor us, for thy name's sake, do not disgrace the throne of thy glory: remember, break not thy covenant with us.

Ver. 12. When they fast, I will not hear their cry;] It is likely there was a public fast appointed upon occasion of this dearth, as there was in a like case, in the prophet Joel's time (see Joel ii. 15). And at such times they used to make their prayers with great noise and vehemence (Isa. lviii. 4, Joel i. 14).

When they offer burnt-offering and an oblation.] See vii. 20. The word mincha, rendered oblation, was the offering of fine flour, mentioned Lev. ii. 1, &c. which always accompanied their sacrifices; and is not so properly translated meat-offering by our interpreters; whereas it should rather be rendered a bread-offering; for it answers to the εὐχέλτης, and the mola or fartum of the Greeks and Romans.

I will consume them] See ver. 18, and xv. 2.

Ver. 13.] See note on iv. 10.

Ver. 14.] See xxii. 21.

Ver. 16.] The people contributed to their own delusions, and readily hearkened to such false prophets as confirmed them in their evil ways: so God justly threatens to punish them, because they had not a love for the truth (See 2 Thess. ii. 10—12, and iv. 10 of this prophecy).

Ver. 17.] Let mine eyes run down with tears.] However insensible you are of your own condition, yet God commands me to bewail those calamities which I foresee are coming upon you.

The virgin daughter] Those cities are called virgins which never came into a conqueror's hands, as hath been observed upon Isa. xxiii. 12. In the same sense the prophet here calls Jerusalem a virgin, because she had been hitherto under God's immediate protection, and preserved by him from all the attempts of her enemies (compare Amos v. 2; see another sense of this phrase in the notes upon xviii. 13, xxxi. 4).

The dissolution of a government or body politic is called a breach, by way of allusion to the breaking or disjoining the limbs of a human body (see viii. 21, Lam. ii. 13).

Ver. 18. Both the prophet and the priest go about [or wander] The priests and prophets confirmed the people in their corruptions and impotence, thereby seeking to advance their own interest and authority (see ii. 8, v. 31). To which sense the marginal reading renders the former part of the sentence thus,

"The prophet and the priest make merchandise against the land." And now they receive the due reward of their prevarications, by going into captivity with those whom they have misled (see ver. 15).

Ver. 19. Hath thy soul loathed Zion?] Which was formerly thy delight, and the place thou didst choose for thine especial residence (see Ps. lxxvii. 68, lxxxvii. 2, cxxxii. 14).

Ver. 20. The iniquity of our fathers:] Which thou mayest justly visit upon us, as thou hast threatened (Exod. xx. 5), especially since we have not only imitated, but also exceeded them in wickedness (see vii. 26, xvi. 12).

Ver. 21. Throne of thy glory:] Jerusalem is called the "city of God," Ps. lxxvii. 1, lxxxvii. 3, as he was in a peculiar manner king of the Jews, and this was his royal city, or chief seat of his kingdom (see iii. 17). But the words are chiefly to be understood of the temple, and the prophet beseeches God not to give that up to be profaned by infidels, the place which he had chosen for his peculiar residence, where he sat between the cherubims as upon a throne (see the notes upon Isa. lxvi. 1).

Remember [and] break not thy covenant with us.] Thou hast promised "to be our God," and that "we should be thy people" (xi. 4); i. e. that thou wouldest take us under thy protection. We have indeed forfeited all our title to thy promises by our sins; yet we beseech thee still to remember the relation we bear to thee (compare Ps. lxxiv. 20).

Ver. 22. Vanities of the Gentiles] Idols are often styled vanities (see x. 15, xvi. 19, Deut. xxxii. 21, Acts xiv. 15). The giving rain in its season, is an argument for God's providence, often insisted upon in the scriptures (see the note on v. 24).

Can the heavens give showers?] Are they purely owing to natural causes? on the contrary, God directs them where and when they should fall (see the note on x. 13).

Art not thou he, O Lord our God [that giveth them?] For rain, and the supply of all other our wants. The Hebrew word hu, he, is often equivalent to the true or eternal God: see Deut. xxxii. 39, Isa. xliii. 10, 13, xlviii. 12, and especially Ps. cii. 27, where the expression is the same with that of the text, atta hu, thou art he: our English reads thou art the same. The 22 Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain? or can the heavens give showers? art not thou he, O LORD our God?

words express the eternal and unchangeable nature of God. There is another text where the word is plainly taken in this sense, 2 Kings ii. 14, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah," aph hu, "even he?"

for so the words should be translated. Those translations which join that expression of the following sentence, as our English does, put a manifest force upon the syntax.

CHAPTER XV.

1 THEN said the LORD unto me, Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be towards this people: cast them out of my sight, and let them go forth.

2 And it shall come to pass, if they say unto thee, Whither shall we go forth? then thou shalt tell them, Thus saith the LORD; Such as are for death, to death; and such as are for the sword, to the sword; and such as are for the famine, to the famine; and such as are for the captivity to the captivity.

3 And I will appoint over them four kinds, saith the LORD: the sword to slay, and the dogs to tear, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the earth, to devour and destroy.

4 And I will cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth, because of Manasseh the son of Hezekiah king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem.

5 For who shall have pity upon thee, O Jerusalem? or who shall bemoan thee? or who shall go aside to ask how thou doest?

6 Thou hast forsaken me, saith the LORD, thou art gone backward: therefore will I stretch out my hand against thee, and destroy thee; I am weary with repenting.

7 And I will fan them with a fan in the gates of the land; I will bereave them of children, I will destroy my people, since they return not from their ways.

CHAP. XV.

ARGUMENT.—God declares his irrevocable purpose of bringing desolations and captivity upon the Jewish nation; and comforts Jeremiah under those discouragements, which he met with in the discharge of his prophetic office.

Ver. 1.] As God had forbid Jeremiah before to intercede for them, because it would be to no purpose (see the note on xvii. 16), so here he declares, that he would not admit the prayers of any others, though eminent favourites of God, in their behalf. Moses obtained pardon for the people after their sin in making the golden calf (Exod. xxxii. 34), and again, after their despising the promised land (Numb. xiv. 20). Samuel's intercession prevailed for their deliverance out of the hands of the Philistines (1 Sam. vii. 9). And these two persons are mentioned together, as remarkably prevalent by their prayers, Ps. xcix. 8, "Thou answerest them, O Lord our God: thou wast a God that forgavest them, even when thou wast just taking vengeance upon their inventions;" for so the words should be translated. But here God saith, that if these very persons were alive, and in that near attendance to him which they formerly enjoyed (for that is the import of the phrase, "to stand before him:" see ver. 19, xviii. 20, Deut. x. 8, 1 Kings xvii. 1), yet even their prayers should not avert his judgments from this people (compare Ezek. xiv. 14).

Ver. 2.] Death here signifies the pestilence, which, together with the sword and the famine, should consume the greatest part of the people (compare xiv. 12, Ezek. v. 12, xiv. 21).

Ver. 3.] These four judgments shall be the executioners of my vengeance upon this people (compare Lev. xxvi. 16). Those whom the sword destroys shall not enjoy the common rites of burial, but their carcases shall be left a prey to the dogs, the birds, and the beasts. This is mentioned as an aggravation of the divine judgments (compare viii. 2).

Ver. 4. I will cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth.] Several Jews were carried captive into other countries, besides Chaldea (see the note on xii. 14), others turned voluntary exiles, to avoid the miseries they saw coming upon their country (see xl. 11). The words here are taken out of Deut. xviii. 25, where Moses threatens them with a general dispersion over the world, which received the utmost completion after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.

Because of Manasseh, &c.] His idolatry and other abominations exceeded the wickedness of all the kings that went before him (see 2 Kings xxi. 7, 9, 11). In his time the public worship of God was wholly suppressed, and idolatry introduced into the very temple; the law of God was likewise quite laid aside, and in a manner forgotten, as appears by the surprise Hilkiah was in, when he found the original of the law in the house of the Lord (2 Kings xxii. 8). So it was Manasseh's sins that filled up the measure of the Jews' iniquities (see 2 Kings xxiii. 26, xxiv. 3, 4).

Ver. 5. For who shall [or rather, who will] have pity upon thee.] Thy sins render thee unworthy of pity, and every body that sees the calamities brought upon thee will own them to be just (see xii. 8, 9).

Who shall go aside to ask how thou doest?] Who will be so much concerned for thee, as to step a little out of his way to inquire after thee, a common instance of respect between persons never so little acquainted. Rather they that pass by will insult over thy calamities (see Lam. ii. 15).

Ver. 6. Thou art gone backward:] See vii. 24. I am weary with repenting.] When God suspends the execution of his judgments, he is said to repent of the evil he had threatened (see xviii. 8). This he had done so often, that he is represented like a man whose patience is at last quite tired out, it being to no purpose to withhold his hand any longer from striking (compare Isa. xliii. 24, Hos. xiii. 14, Mal. ii. 17).

Ver. 7. I will fan them with a fan in the gates of the land;] "I will scatter them to all the winds," as Ezekiel expresses it, Ezek. v. 12 (see likewise li. 2 of his prophecy, Isa. xli. 16). By the "gates of the land" are meant the cities (see xiv. 2).

8 Their widows are increased to me above the sand of the seas: I have brought upon them against the mother of the young men a spoiler at noon-day: I have caused him to fall upon it suddenly, and terrors upon the city.

9 She that hath borne seven languisheth: she hath given up the ghost; her sun is gone down while it was yet day: she hath been ashamed and confounded: and the residue of them will I deliver to the sword before their enemies, saith the LORD.

10 ¶ Woe is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me a man of strife and a man of contention to the whole earth! I have neither lent on usury, nor men have lent to me on usury; yet every one of them doth curse me.

11 'The LORD said, Verily it shall be well with thy remnant; verily I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well in the time of evil and in the time of affliction.

12 Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel?

13 Thy substance and thy treasures will I give to the spoil without price, and that for all thy sins, even in all thy borders.

14 And I will make thee to pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not: for a fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon you.

15 ¶ O LORD, thou knowest; remember me, and visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors; take me not away in thy long-suffering: know that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke.

16 Thy words were found, and I did eat

Ver. 8. The mother of the young men.] Compare vi. 4. By the "mother of young men," is meant Jerusalem (see Isa. l. 1, Hos. ii. 2.)

Terrors upon the city.] The Hebrew word nir is of a double signification: the Septuagint render the words, "tumult and terrors." This translation of the word nir, Abr. à Schultens defends from the sense it still retains in the Arabic, (see his Animadver. in Job, p. 53). Some suppose that word to signify a watchman here, from the Chaldee sense of it, and translate the latter part of the verse thus, "I have caused (or will cause) a watchman and terrors to fall upon it suddenly."

Ver. 9. She that hath borne seven languisheth.] The prophet pursueth the metaphor of the former verse, and describeth the mother-city under the figure of a fruitful woman (compare 1 Sam. ii. 5), but fainting away, and ready to die with grief for the loss of her children.

Her sun has gone down while it was yet day.] She is as a young man that dies in the midst of his strength: of a sudden she is overwhelmed with misery, when she might have expected a long continuance of happiness (compare Amos viii. 9, and see the note upon iv. 23).

The residue of them.] i. e. Those that escape out of the city (see ver. 8, Ezek. v. 12).

Ver. 10. Thou hast borne me a man—of contention to the whole earth.] Or, land. I am an object of the common hatred, every body takes occasion to quarrel with me, because I speak such truths as they do not care to hear (see xi. 19, &c. xx. 7, 8).

I have neither lent on usury, nor men have lent to me.] The Jews were forbid to take usury of their brethren (Deut. xxiii. 19), especially of the poor (Exod. xxii. 25). which was thought so great an oppression, that it made the man who was guilty of it hated and cursed by every one. The prophet saith, this was just his own case, every body was his enemy for delivering those messages he had received from God.

Ver. 11.] If we follow this translation, the sense is, that the prophet himself, his family, and relations, should escape the evils coming upon the Jewish nation, when the remnant or residue of them should be delivered to the sword (ver. 9). But others translate the sentence thus, "I will give thee a happy deliverance" [from these evils]: or, "thy habitation shall be happy," or secure; and thine enemies shall use thee well, when they exercise all manner of cruelty towards the rest of the Jews (see xxxix. 11, 12, xl. 4).

Ver. 12.] The northern iron was the hardest in its kind of any, viz. such as the people called Cha- lybes, living near the Euxine sea, prepared. The words, if they are applied to Jeremy, import thus much, that as common iron cannot contend for hardness with the northern iron, or with steel: so the opposition which the Jews make against thee, shall easily be vanquished and disappointed, "because I am with thee to save thee" (ver 20). If the words relate to the Jews, as the following verses plainly do; the sense is, that the Chaldeans coming from the north (i. 15), will be as much too hard for the Jews to engage with, as the northern iron is superior in strength to the common metal of that kind.

Ver. 13.] Compare xvii. 3. God threatens the Jews, that he will give up all their wealth and substance for a prey unto their enemies without receiving any valuable consideration for it, without any regard to his own honour, which will be so far from being increased by it, that it will be thought to suffer in the eyes of the world, by delivering up his own people into the hands of idolaters; he will deal with them as men do with the refuse of their stock or goods, which they are glad to be rid of upon any terms (compare Ps. xlv. 13).

Ver. 14.] Compare xiv. 18. The words may be rendered thus, "I will bring thine enemies [who live] in a land which thou knowest not." The Septuagint and some other interpreters, instead of the present Hebrew reading, heberti, read hebadhti, to this sense, "I will cause thee to serve thine enemies," &c. as the sentence is repeated, xvii. 4.

A fire is kindled in mine anger.] See vii. 20.

Ver. 15. Thou knowest.] Mine innocency (see xii. 3).

Visit me.] See xi. 20, and the note there.

Take me not away in thy long-suffering.] Suffer not mine enemies to take away my life, while thou forbearst to vindicate and defend me. Verbs active in the Hebrew language, do often signify only permission (see iv. 10, and the note upon Isa. lxi. 17).

Know [or consider] that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke.] See ver. 10, xi. 21, xx. 8. Herein the prophet was a type of Christ, and his sufferings (see Ps. lxi. 7, and the note upon xi. 19).

Ver. 16.] As soon as I received or understood thy word, and the messages thou didst deliver to me, I treasured them up in my memory; I meditated upon them, and did inwardly digest them. It was a pleasure to me to think I should be an instrument of conveying thy commands to my brethren, and that I should have the honour of being called thy prophet, or messenger. The receiving God's word, by which the soul is nourished is elsewhere compared to corporal food (see Isathem; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart: for I am called by thy name, O LORD God of hosts.

17 I sat not in the assembly of the mockers, nor rejoiced; I sat alone because of thy hand: for thou hast filled me with indignation.

18 Why is my pain perpetual, and my wound incurable, which refuseth to be healed? wilt thou be altogether unto me as a liar, and as waters that fail?

19 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD, If thou return, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before me: and if thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth: let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them.

20 And I will make thee unto this people a fenced brasen wall: and they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee: for I am with thee to save thee and to deliver thee, saith the LORD.

21 And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible.

lv. 1, 2, Ezek. iii. 1, 3, Amos viii. 11, John vi. 27, Rev. x. 9).

Ver. 17. I sat not in the assembly of the mockers.] The word meshahakim, here translated mockers, is elsewhere rendered, "those that make merry" (see xxx. 19, xxxi. 4), which signification the Chaldee paraphrase follows, and, as I conceive, better suits this place; the sense of which is, that Jeremy quickly found the joy which he had conceived from the honour of being a prophet, was turned into heaviness; all his prophecies containing nothing but terrible denunciations of God's indignation against a sinful people. This makes me, saith he, sit alone, renounce all cheerful conversation, and give myself to solitariness and pensive thoughts (compare Lam. iii. 28). God's judgments, as they were represented to the prophets, often raised such dreadful ideas in their minds, as to effect them in an extraordinary manner, especially if their threatenings concerned their own country, or the church of God (see xxiii. 9, Ezek. iii. 4, Dan. vii. 23, Hab. iii. 2, 16).

Because of thy hand:] God's hand may either be understood of his judgments, which, being denounced by the prophet, might be resembled to a hand stretched out, and just ready to strike; or else of the prophetic impulse, which was strong upon Jeremiah, and in a manner forced him to be the messenger of evil tidings (compare 2 Kings iii. 15, Isa. viii. 11, Ezek. i. 4, iii. 14).

Ver. 18. Wilt thou be altogether unto me as a liar.] Thou hast promised to be my defence and safe-guard against mine enemies (see i. 18, 19), and wilt thou altogether disappoint and deceive me? like little brooks which are dried up in summer, when they are most wanted, and so disappoint the thirsty traveller (compare Job vi. 15). The prophet here sets down the perplexities he laboured under, by reason of the opposition he continually met with from ungodly men, in the execution of his office: just as the psalmist relates the misgivings of his mind, when he was under great troubles and temptations (see Ps. xxxi. 22, lxxiii. 13, 14, lxxvii. 7, 10). But then presently he checks such thoughts, calls to mind God's gracious promises, and encourages himself to rely upon him. And the like encouragements are recorded in the following verses of this chapter.

Ver. 19. Will I bring thee again [or restore thee], and thou shalt stand before me:] To these complaints of the prophet, God returns an answer, the import of which is as followeth: These misgivings of mind are a sort of renouncing the prophetic office: if thou wilt therefore return to thy duty, saith God, I will restore thee to that station thou hast in a manner deserted, and thou shalt still attend upon me, as my servant and messenger (see the note upon ver. 1).

If you take forth the precious from the vile,] If thou encourage the good, and reprove the wicked, thou wilt answer the character of a true prophet, whose office it is to utter the words that God puts into his mouth, without adding thereto, or diminishing from them (see Exod. iv. 16). Whereas the false prophets made the wicked more presumptuous, and discouraged the righteous (see Ezek. xiii. 22, xxii. 26). The expression alludes to that charge given to the priests, to distinguish carefully "between holy and unholy," and "between clean and unclean" (Lev. x. 10.).

Return not thou unto them.] Do not thou comply with their humour, or study to soothe them up in their wickedness: but rather endeavour, by wholesome reproofs, to turn them from the error of their ways.

Ver. 20, 21.] If thou wilt faithfully discharge thy duty according to these directions, I will certainly fulfil the promise I made to thee, when I first called thee to the prophetic office (i. 18, 19).

CHAPTER XVI.

1 THE word of the LORD came also unto me, saying.

2 Thou shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place.

3 For thus saith the LORD concerning the sons and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land;

4 They shall die of grievous deaths; they them of such a restoration, as shall be more wonderful than their deliverance out of Egypt.

CHAP. XVI.

ARGUMENT.—God forbids the prophet the use of such rejoicings as were customary at marriage-festivals, and likewise the solemnities practised at funerals: intimating, that in times of the utmost distraction, such as were coming upon the Jews, all the solemn rites both of joy and mourning should cease. Yet, withal, he adds a promise to

Ver. 2.] Fruitfulness was promised as a blessing under the law (Deut. xxviii. 4), but ceased to be so in such difficult times as were coming upon the Jewish nation: for parents could not promise to themselves any comfort in their children, who must be exposed to the many miseries that attend a hostile invasion, and a conquering army.

shall not be lamented: neither shall they be buried; but they shall be as dung upon the face of the earth: and they shall be consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their carcases shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

5 For thus saith the LORD, Enter not into the house of mourning, neither go to lament nor bemoan them: for I have taken away my peace from this people, saith the LORD, even loving-kindness and mercies.

6 Both the great and the small shall die in this land: they shall not be buried, neither shall men lament for them, nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them:

7 Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father or for their mother.

8 Thou shalt not also go into the house of feasting, to sit with them to eat and to drink.

9 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will cause to cease out of this place in your eyes, and in your days, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride.

10 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt shew this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, Wherefore hath the LORD pronounced all this great evil against us? or what is our iniquity? or what is our sin that we have committed against the LORD our God?

11 Then shalt thou say unto them, Because your fathers have forsaken me, saith the LORD, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, and have forsaken me, and have not kept my law;

12 And ye have done worse than your fathers; for, behold, ye walk every one after the imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me:

13 Therefore will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night; where I will not show you favour.

14 ¶ Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that it shall be no more said, The LORD liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

15 But, The LORD liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.

16 ¶ Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the LORD, and they shall fish them; and

Ver. 4. They shall die of grievous deaths;] By sword and by famine, as it follows (compare viii. 2, xx. 2, 3).

Ver. 5. Enter not into the house of mourning;] Or, "of a mourning-feast," as the margin reads; such as were the παιδιματα among the Greeks, and parentalia among the Romans (see ver. 7).

I have taken away my peace from this people;] As they are not the object of my compassions; so neither ought they to be of the pity of others. They are to be esteemed as so many criminals or malefactors, at whose funerals men do not use to pay the common respects which are due to the deceased.

Ver. 6. Neither shall men lament for them;] Men's thoughts shall be wholly taken up with bewailing themselves: their own calamities shall be so great, it shall make them not concerned for the misfortunes of others.

Nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald] See the note upon xli. 5. The law did expressly forbid making any "cuttings in the flesh" at funeral obsequies (see Lev. xix. 28, Deut. xiv. 1). Notwithstanding which prohibition, this practice seems to have been taken up by the Jews, among other heathenish customs. Shaving of the head was a usual expression of mourning (see vii. 29).

Ver. 7.] According to this translation, the phrase alludes to another expression of immoderate grief, which consisted in tearing the flesh with their nails:

"Unguibus ora soror fœdans," as Virgil describes it. But, according to the marginal reading, the sense is, "neither shall men break [bread] for them; alluding to the mourning-feast mentioned ver. 5 (see likewise Ezek. xxiv. 17, Hos. ix. 4, Tobit iv. 17).

Ver. 9.] In the time of a general desolation all the solemn seasons of mirth and gladness shall cease, as well public as private. The solemn feasts, which were always observed with great expressions of joy (see Deut. xvi. 11, 14, Isa. xxx. 29), as well as nuptial solemnities, and other private occasions of rejoicing (compare vii. 34, xxv. 10, Hos. ii. 11).

Ver. 10.] See v. 19.

Ver. 12.] See the note on vii. 26.

Ver. 13.] There shall ye serve other gods day and night;] The opportunities of frequenting the public worship of the true God shall be taken from you, as a just judgment upon you for your neglect of his service in your own country; and you shall be exposed to the peril of committing idolatry; and being seduced by the Chaldeans to the worship of their idols (compare Deut. iv. 28, xxviii. 36, 1 Sam. xxvi. 19).

Mr. Mede expounds the words of their "serving other gods," in a political sense; i. e. serving those nations who worshipped other gods (see his Apostasy of the Latter Times, par. i. h. iii. ch. 16). The Chaldee paraphrase explains the phrase to the same purpose, "Ye shall serve those people that worship idols day and night."

Ver. 14. Therefore;] The particle taken, translated therefore, sometimes signifies nevertheless, or yet surely; see the note on Isa. xxx. 18, and so it is translated v. 2 of this prophecy; which sense agrees best with the scope of this place, and connects this verse with the words foregoing. So it should be rendered likewise, xxx. 16, xxxii. 36.

Concerning the import of the promise made here and in the following verse, see the notes upon xxxii. 7, 8.

Ver. 16. I will send for many fishers,—many hunters;] Enemies and oppressors are elsewhere represented under the metaphors of fishers and hunters (see Gen. x. 9, Amos iv. 2, Hab. i. 14, 15); because they use all the methods of open force and secret wiles (frequently compared to nets) in order to make men their prey (see Ezek. xii. 13, Hos. v. 1). These two similitudes imply, that the Chaldeans shall after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks.

17 For mine eyes are upon all their ways: they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes.

18 And first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double; because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcases of their detestable and abominable things.

19 O LORD, my strength, and my fortress, make an entire conquest and booty of the whole land, of its inhabitants and their riches; and what shall escape one party, shall fall into the hands of another.

From every mountain,] They shall find them out in all the places whither they flee for refuge, be they never so secret or inaccessible (see xiii. 16).

Ver. 18. I will recompense their iniquity and their sins double;] i. e. Double in proportion to God's usual severity in punishing men's sins (compare xvii. 18, Isa. xl. 2, with the note upon that place).

Because they have defiled my land,] See ii. 7.

With their carcases] With their idols, which are elsewhere called carcases, not only because they are without life, but also because of their filthiness and hatefulness in the sight of God (see Lev. xxvi. 30, Ezek. xliii. 7, 9). Some explain the words of the human sacrifices which were offered to idols (see xix. 5).

Ver. 19,] The more emphatically to demonstrate the absurdity of forsaking the true God, and apostatizing to idolatry; the prophet foretells, that the time will come when the gentiles shall be ashamed of the and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.

20 Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods?

21 Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know, I will cause them to know mine hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is The LORD.

idolatry they and their forefathers have been so long guilty of; shall humbly confess this their sin, and address themselves to the true God in all their wants, as their only refuge and protection.

Ver. 20,] The absurdity of supposing that the work of men's hands can resemble or represent the infinite majesty of God, is often insisted upon by the holy writers (see x. 3, &c., Isa. xlv. 10, 11, &c.).

Ver. 21,] The phrase which our English renders "this once," may be translated, "at this time," as it is 2 Sam. xvii. 7. If we understand the verse of the gentiles, mentioned in the foregoing verse, the sense is, that God will at the time foretold (ver. 19) exert his power in an extraordinary manner for their conversion (compare Isa. lii. 10). If we apply the words to the Jews, they import, that he will manifest his power in bringing upon them all the evils already threatened against them, and they should know that he is the Lord, a fulfiller of his threatenings, as well as a performer of his promises (compare Ezek. vi. 7, xii. 20, xxiv. 24, 27). This sense the Chaldee paraphrase expresses.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 THE sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, and upon the horns of your altars;

2 Whilst their children remember their altars and their groves by the green trees upon the high hills.

3 O my mountain in the field, I will give thy substance and all thy treasures to the spoil, and thy high places for sin, throughout all thy borders.

4 And thou, even thyself, shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not: for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever.

CHAP. XVII.

ARGUMENT—After having renewed his threatenings against the Jews for their sins, the prophet encourages himself, and other well-disposed persons, to put their trust in God alone. The latter part of the chapter contains a charge to the king and people for the strict observance of the sabbath.

Ver. 1,] It is written in indelible characters, as when things are engraved in tables of stone, to preserve the memory of them to posterity (compare Job xix. 24). In like manner the Jewish altars and other monuments of their idolatry, are undeniable tokens of the corrupt inclinations of their hearts, which are altogether estranged from God and his true worship.

Ver. 2,] They train up their children in the same idolatrous practices (compare vii. 18, ii. 20).

Ver. 3. O my mountain in the field,] A periphrasis of the temple, called elsewhere the "mountain of the Lord's house," and the "holy mountain" (see Isa. ii. 2). This being the principal part of Jerusalem, is put by way of synecdoche for the whole city (compare xxi. 13).

I will give thy substance, &c.] See xv. 13.

Ver. 4. Shalt discontinue from thine heritage] The Hebrew verb shamattah, discontinue, alludes to the seventh year of release enjoined by Moses (Deut. xv. 1), which law the Jews had a long time neglected out of covetousness, and refused to observe, even after a solemn engagement to the contrary (see below, xxxiv. 8, &c.). So here the words imply, that since they would not release their land, nor their servants in the sabbatical years, as God had enjoined them, he would release them from the possessions he had given them; and then "the land should enjoy her sabbath," according to the prescription of the law (see Lev. xxvi. 34).

Which shall burn for ever,] i. e. Till you be consumed (compare vii. 20, xv. 14, xxi. 2).

Ver. 5. Cursed be the man that trusteth in man,] The prophet denounces this curse chiefly with respect to the Jews placing their trust in the assistance the Egyptians, or other their allies, would afford them.

5 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the LORD.

6 For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited.

7 Blessed is the man that trusteth in the LORD, and whose hope the LORD is.

8 For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit.

9 ¶ The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?

10 I the LORD search the heart, I try the reins, against the arms of the Babylonians, which he tells them will deceive their expectation, and make them forfeit the divine protection (see the notes on iv. 30, xxii. 20, 22).

And maketh flesh his arm.] By flesh is meant a frail mortal man (see Isa. xxxi. 3).

Ver. 6. He shall be like the heath in the desert.] Whereas the righteous, and he that trusteth in God, shall be like a fair flourishing tree (see ver. 8).

In a salt land and not inhabited.] Saltiness in Hebrew expresses barren ground (see Deut. xxix. 23, Ps. cvii. 34, Zeph. ii. 9).

Ver. 8. And shall not see when heat cometh.] Or, "shall not fear when heat cometh:" so the Septuagint render the words, following the reading of the Hebrew text, which is to be preferred before that of the margin.

And shall not be careful in the year of drought.] Shall not be solicitous for fear it should lack moisture (see xiv. 1).

Ver. 9.] An entire confidence in God is one of the chief trials of men's sincerity; and they that pretend to depend wholly upon him, yet in cases of apparent danger, are too apt to mistrust his promises, and have recourse to human succours. Or else the prophet here assigns a reason why we ought to put our trust in God, and not in man, whose heart we cannot look into, and who very often, under great pretences of sincerity, cover over mischievous designs.

Ver. 10.] Since there are so many corrupt inclinations that lurk in the heart, it is very hard for men, without examining themselves very narrowly, to know the sincerity of their own hearts; it being the property of God alone, perfectly to discover the whole bent and frame of men's dispositions (see Ps. cxxxix. 23, 24).

Ver. 11. As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not:] It is very uncertain what kind of bird the Hebrew word kore denotes. Bochart thinks the description given of it in the Arabic writers, doth by no means agree to a partridge: so that it is needless to inquire whether the quality here mentioned belong to that bird. The sentence may best be rendered thus, "As the bird kore hatcheth eggs which she did not lay; so he that getteth riches," &c. As when eggs are hatched by a bird of a different species, when once the young ones are fledged, they never stay with the dam that hatched and nourished them; so he that increases an estate which he did not come honestly by at first, shall never prosper long with it. Critics observe, that the Hebrew verb y'alad, translated here hatcheth, properly signifies even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.

11 As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool.

12 ¶ A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary.

13 O LORD, the hope of Israel, all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me shall be written in the earth, because they have forsaken the LORD, the fountain of living waters.

14 Heal me, O LORD, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved: for thou art my praise.

15 ¶ Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the LORD? let it come now.

laying eggs; the hatching them being expressed by the verbs bakang and dagar, the word used in the text, which our translators render "sitteth on eggs," but doth properly signify hatching them.

And at his end shall be a fool.] So God calls the rich man, Luke xii. 20, who was cut off in the midst of his life, when he promised himself the enjoyment of many years.

Ver. 12.] God's kingdom is from everlasting: his throne is in heaven, the place of his peculiar residence, of which his temple at Jerusalem is but an imperfect resemblance; heaven is sometimes called God's temple, or sanctuary (see Ps. xi. 4, xviii. 6, cii. 19, Isa. lvii. 15, Jonah ii. 7). The words instruct the Jews to look up to God in the heavens, and not fancy the temple the only place from whence they may address themselves to him, which made them think he would never forsake that seat of his residence, nor the city where he had placed his name (see vii. 4).

Ver. 13. All that forsake thee shall be ashamed.] Thou hast given many gracious promises to thy people to encourage them to trust in thee; and they that forsake their interest in thy goodness will find all other expectations fail and disappoint them.

Shall be written in the earth.] They that forsake my laws, saith God, and their reliance upon me, shall not be registered among my people, nor shall their names be written in heaven, or in the book of life (compare Ezek. xiii. 9, Ps. lxi. 28, Luke x. 20, Phil. iv. 3). The expression alludes to the registers that are kept of the members of every city or corporation, the privileges of which society none can pretend to, but they that have their names entered in such registers (see Ezra ii. 59).

Fountain of living waters.] See ii. 13.

Ver. 14.] It is from thee only that I expect comfort and relief in all my troubles and afflictions (see ver. 15—17). And as I acknowledge that all the blessings I enjoy come from thee, so it is to thee I return all thanks and praise (compare Ps. cix. 1, cxlviii. 14, Deut. x. 21). The expression, "Save me, and I shall be saved," is much the same with that we read, xxxi. 18, "Turn thou me, and I shall be turned:" and both of them import, that it is the divine assistance and blessing only that can crown human endeavours with success (see the note there).

Ver. 15.] This is an objection common in the mouths of infidels and libertines, that God doth not speedily fulfil his promises or threatenings, so as to give them ocular demonstration of their certainty (see Isa. v. 19, Amos v. 18, 2 Pet. iii. 4). This was 16 As for me, I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee: neither have I desired the woeful day; thou knowest: that which came out of my lips was right before thee.

17 Be not a terror unto me: thou art my hope in the day of evil.

18 Let them be confounded that persecute me, but let not me be confounded: let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed: bring upon them the day of evil, and destroy them with double destruction.

19 ¶ Thus said the Lord unto me; Go and stand in the gate of the children of the people, whereby the kings of Judah come in, and by the which they go out, and in all the gates of Jerusalem;

20 And say unto them, Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that enter in by these gates:

21 Thus saith the Lord; Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the sabbath-day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem;

22 Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the sabbath-day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the sabbath-day, as I commanded your fathers.

23 But they obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction.

24 And it shall come to pass, if ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath-day, but hallow the sabbath-day, to do no work therein;

25 Then shall there enter into the gates of this city, kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, they, and their princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem: and this city shall remain for ever.

26 And they shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the places about Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south, bringing burnt-offerings, and sacrifices, and meat-offerings, and incense, and bringing sacrifices of praise, unto the house of the Lord.

27 But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath-day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath-day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched.

objected against the truth of Jeremy's prophecies by the loose persons of that age.

Ver. 16.] The Geneva translation renders the sense better thus, "I have not thrust in myself for a pastor after thee." The prophet solemnly appeals to God, that he did not intrude himself into this office; nor was he desirous of an employment that foreboded so much evil to others, and brought a great deal of trouble upon himself. The words in the original run literally as our translation expresses them, but the construction is the same with that expression we read, xl. 9, where the words in the Hebrew run, "Fear not from serving the Chaldeans;" but our translation rightly expresses the sense, "Fear not to serve the Chaldeans" (see Noldius's Concordance, p. 567).

Ver. 17.] Amidst all the terrors with which mine adversaries threaten me (see xi. 19, xv. 10), let me still find comfort in thee; and let not any apprehension of being forsaken by thee add a new terror to the rest of my fears.

Ver. 18. Let them be confounded] See xi. 20.

Double destruction.] See xvi. 18.

Ver. 19.] In the most public gates of the city, and the common passages for king and people.

Ver. 20.] Compare xix. 3. The words are directed both to the king himself, and likewise to the princes, or those of the royal blood (see ver. 25.) The word king in the Hebrew language signifies any person in authority (see xxv. 20, &c., l. 41, li. 28, and the notes upon those texts).

Ver. 21.] See Neh. xiii. 19. Servile work was forbidden upon their solemn festivals (see Lev. xxiii. 8, 35); much more upon the sabbath-day.

Ver. 22.] The sabbath was instituted as a sign or token of God's covenant with his people (see Exod. xxxi. 13, Ezek. xx. 12); the observance of it was the distinguishing character of a Jew, whereby he declared himself a worshipper of the true God, who made heaven and earth, and ordained the sabbath-day as a memorial of the creation. So that the Jews profaning the sabbath, was in effect a renouncing their share in God's covenant (see Ezek. xx. 13, 21).

Ver. 23. Made their neck stiff.] A metaphor taken from oxen that draw back, and refuse to put their neck under the yoke (see vii. 26, xix. 15).

Ver. 25.] Compare xxii. 4. From hence it appears, that the judgments denounced against Jerusalem, at least as far as they threatened the city with utter destruction, were not irreversible. And from Jeremy's advice to Zedekiah (xxxviii. 17), it may be concluded that if the king had hearkened to that counsel, the city would not have been destroyed, and he himself might have continued a tributary king under Nebuchadnezzar. It is true, that in several other chapters of this prophecy, God, upon foresight of the Jews' impenitence, pronounces a peremptory sentence upon them (see iv. 28).

Ver. 26. Land of Benjamin.] See i. 1, vi. 1.

The plain.] The country of Judea, properly so called, i. e. the country allotted to the tribe of Judah, was divided into the hill country (see Josh. xxi. 21, Luke i. 39), and the plain or champaign country; the same word is rendered valley, xxxii. 44. This lower part reached down to the lake Asphaltites, called the "sea of the plain," or "the Salt sea," Deut. iii. 17.

The south.] That part of Judah which is called the "wilderness of Judea," Matt. iii. 1, Josh. xv. 61. By reason of this situation of the wilderness, the word itself sometimes is put for the south (see Ps. lxxv. 6).

Meat-offerings, and incense.] See the notes upon vii. 21, xiv. 12. Incense was always laid upon the meat-offerings, (see Lev. ii. 1, 2).

Bringing sacrifices of praise.] The peace-offerings were of three sorts; either vows, voluntary or free-will-offerings, and offerings of praise or thanksgiving (see Lev. vii. 15, 16). These were offered as grateful acknowledgments for deliverances in time of danger, or for other mercies received (see Ps. cvii. 22, cxvi. 17).

Ver. 27.] Compare Lam. iv. 11.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 THE word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Arise, and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words.

3 Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels.

4 And the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter: so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it.

5 Then the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

6 O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the LORD. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel.

7 At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it;

8 If that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them.

9 And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it;

10 If it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good, wherewith I said I would benefit them.

11 Now therefore go to, speak to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you: return ye now every one from his evil way, and make your ways and your doings good.

12 And they said, There is no hope: but we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart.

13 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Ask ye now among the heathen, who hath heard such things: the virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing.

14 Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon which cometh from the rock of the field? or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?

15 Because my people hath forgotten me, they

CHAP. XVIII

ARGUMENT.—Under the figure of a potter, the prophet shows God's absolute power in disposing of kingdoms, and thereupon exhorts the Jews to repentance: he then bewails their obstinacy, and threateneth destruction to those that devised evil against him.

Ver. 6.] God's absolute power over his creatures, both by virtue of his creating them, and having dominion over them, is justly represented by this metaphor (see Isa. xlv. 8, Rom. ix. 20).

Ver. 8. I will repent of the evil] If we take repentance in a strict and proper sense, for a change of the inward purposes and resolutions, it cannot be applied to God, according to that saying of Balaam's, "God is not a man that he should repent" (Numb. xxiii. 19). Therefore, whenever repentance is ascribed to God, it must be meant only of a change with respect to the outward administrations of his providence, and his dealing with men otherwise than he did before: and this doth not imply a change in God, but only in ourselves: he still acts by the same rules, but we, according to our different behaviour, become the objects either of his favour, or his displeasure.

Ver. 10. I will repent of the good, wherewith I said I would benefit them.] From this and the foregoing verse we may infer, that God's promises in scripture, however uttered in general terms, are yet, for the most part, to be understood conditionally, according as men behave themselves, especially when applied to particular persons (see Numb. xiv. 34). And as God did justly reject those Jews, who refused to embrace the gospel, notwithstanding the general promises he had made to that people; so neither can particular Christians nor churches lay any claim to God's general promise of preserving his church, any farther than they keep close to that rule of faith and manners, which he hath prescribed to them in the New Testament.

Ver. 11.] See the note on xvii. 25. This and the parallel texts show, that God's threatenings are not to be understood as absolute predictions, but such as may be reversed upon men's repentance, as appears in the famous instance of Nineveh, Jonah iii. 4, 10 (see the note iv. 28).

Ver. 12. There is no hope, &c.] See ii. 25.

Ver. 13. Who hath heard such things:] Such an apostasy as the Jews are guilty of (see ver. 15), is not to be paralleled among the heathen (compare ii. 10).

The virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing.] Israel being the name that God gave Jacob, as a peculiar mark of his favour, when he blessed him and told him, that as "a prince he had power with God," Gen. xxxii. 28 (compare 1 Kings xviii. 31), denotes here God's peculiar people, which at that time was confined to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, God having utterly cast off the ten tribes, to whom the name of Israel was commonly given, after the division of the kingdom. In this sense we find the word Israel used, xlviii. 27, Mal. i. 1, ii. 11. "The virgin of Israel" implies that people which was dedicated to God as "a chaste virgin" (see 2 Cor. xi. 2), but hath since corrupted herself and gone a whoring after idols (compare xxxi. 4, Lam. i. 15, ii. 13; see another sense of that phrase in the notes on xiv. 17).

Ver. 14. Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon, which cometh from the rock of the field?] Lebanon derives its name from the whiteness of the snow that covers the top of it, even in summer-time, as travellers assure us (see Maundrell's Travels, p. 138), "Præcipuum montium Lebanon erigit—tantos inter ardores opacum fidumque nivibus" (Tac. Hist. lib. v.). If we follow the translation in the text, the sense is, it is as strange and incredible for men to forsake the true God for idols, as it would be for a thirsty traveller to forego the cold refreshing streams that come in his way (see Prov. xxv. 25). But the word mitsor, which our English renders "from the rock," may, probably, signify dew, or moisture, from whence Matsor or Misraim, the name of Egypt, is have burned incense to vanity, and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from the ancient paths, to walk in paths, in a way not cast up;

16 To make their land desolate, and a perpetual hissing: every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head.

17 I will scatter them as with an east wind before the enemy; I will shew them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity.

18 ¶ Then said they. Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet. Come, and let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words.

19 Give heed to me, O LORD, and hearken to the voice of them that contend with me.

20 Shall evil be recompensed for good? for they have digged a pit for my soul. Remember that I stood before thee to speak good for them, and to turn away thy wrath from them.

21 Therefore deliver up their children to the famine, and pour out their blood by the force of the sword: and let their wives be bereaved of their children, and be widows; and let their men be put to death; let their young men be slain by the sword in battle.

22 Let a cry be heard from their houses, when thou shalt bring a troop suddenly upon them: for they have digged a pit to take me, and hid snares for my feet.

derived, because of its being watered by the river Nile. And then the words may be translated thus, as a learned friend hath suggested to me: "Shall one leave the moisture of the field [for] the snow-water of Lebanon, or shall the running waters be forsaken for the muddy waters?" (see the following note).

Or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?] Following the translation set down in the former note; the words majim zarim, signify muddy waters, such as are brought down by a flood, deriving zarim from zerim, an inundation, in which sense Schindler supposes the word to be used, Isa. i. 7. Translating the verse thus, it is exactly parallel with ii. 13, 18, "Thou hast forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, to drink the muddy turbid waters of Sihor." The sense is much the same, if we understand majim zarim, in its usual signification, for "strange waters," or "waters that come from another place;" that is, waters conveyed in pipes or conduits for common use.

Ver. 15. Burned incense to vanity.] Idols are often called vanity (see x. 15, xiv. 22, xvi. 19), as being the product of men's vain imaginations, and serving to no good end and purpose.

From the ancient paths.] The worship of idols hath perverted them from following the old beaten track, plainly set forth in the law of Moses, and in the examples and practice of former ages (see vi. 16); and hath engaged them in such new and untried ways of worship, as will end in their utter ruin (ver. 16).

Ver. 16.] A gesture by which the enemies of the Jews and their religion insulted over them, and expressed the satisfaction they took in their calamities (see Lam. ii. 15, 16, I Kings ix. 8).

Ver. 17. I will scatter them as with an east wind.] The calamities of war, and such-like wasting judgments, are elsewhere compared to an east wind, which is dry and blasting (see Isa. xxvii. 8, Ezek. xvii. 10, xix. 12, Hos. xiii. 15).

I will shew them the back, and not the face.] I will show the same aversion to them that they have expressed towards me (see ii. 27).

Ver. 18. Let us devise devices against Jeremiah, &c.] Let us accuse him for a false prophet: for his threatenings plainly contradict God's promises to his people, whereby we are assured that there shall always be a succession of priests to explain the law; of scribes or learned men to unfold the difficulties that may arise concerning the more obscure parts of it; and of prophets to instruct the people in the knowledge of what is to come (compare viii. 8, Matt. xxiii. 34).

They probably grounded their confidence of a succession of priests, to explain the law, and guide men's consciences, upon that passage of Moses, Deut. xvii. 9, where they are commanded to "consult the priests upon any emergent difficulty," and follow their determinations (compare vii. 4). Basnage, in his History of the Jews, book iii. ch. 29, by wise men, understands those who were appointed judges of controversies in their synagogues, whose business it was to give counsel or determination in such cases as were brought before them; in which sense he understands the wise man mentioned by St. Paul, 1 Cor. vi. 5.

Come, and let us smite him with the tongue (or for the tongue, that is, for his bold speeches against the government).] Let us accuse him of crimes against the state, and by that means take away his life, and then all his prophecies will die with him. This expression is parallel to that of Joseph's brethren (Gen. xxxvii. 20), "Come now, and let us slay him—and we shall see what will become of his dreams."

Ver. 20. They have digged a pit for my soul.] They have laid a design against my life, ver. 18, (compare Ps. xxxv. 7, lvii. 6).

I stood before thee to speak good for them.] In the execution of my prophetic office, I always interposed with my prayers in their behalf, to avert those judgments which by thy command I denounced against them (see the note on xv. 1).

Ver. 21.] Since they are thus incorrigible, I shall not any more intercede for them, but let those calamities of famine and sword, with which thou hast threatened them, overtake them (see xvi. 4, and the note upon xi. 20).

Ver. 22.] When they are unexpectedly assaulted by a troop of their enemies, that come to plunder and destroy them (see xx. 6).

Ver. 23. Yet, Lord, thou knowest, &c.] Or rather, "For, Lord, thou knowest," &c.

Forgive not their iniquity.] Compare xi. 20, xv. 15, Ps. lix. 5. It redounds to the glory of God's justice, that incorrigible sinners should meet with exemplary punishment.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 THUS saith the LORD, Go and get a potter's earthen bottle, and take of the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the priests;

2 And go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the east gate, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee,

3 And say, Hear ye the word of the LORD, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle.

4 Because they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and have burned incense in it unto other gods, whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah, and have filled this place with the blood of innocents;

5 They have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt-offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind:

6 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the son of Hinnom, but The valley of slaughter.

7 And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives: and their carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

8 And I will make this city desolate, and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss because of all the plagues thereof.

9 And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend in the siege and straitness, wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them.

10 Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee,

11 And shalt say unto them, Thus saith the

CHAP. XIX.

ARGUMENT.—Under the type of breaking a potter's vessel, is foretold the desolation of the Jews for their sins.

Ver. 1. Get thee a potter's earthen bottle,] An earthen pitcher with a narrow neck, made to drink out of; in the Hebrew bakbuk, called so from the noise that the draught of liquor made; so the Greek word βαββυκος, and the old Latin verb bilbire, are derived from the like sound (see Casaubon's Comment on Athenæus's sixth book, ch. 8). By this emblem the prophet signified, that the city and people might as easily be destroyed, if God so pleased, as an earthen vessel could be broken (see xviii. 5).

Ancients of the people,] Some of the members of the great Sanhedrin (compare xxvi. 17, Ezek. viii. 11).

Ancients of the priests,] The heads of the four-and-twenty courses (see I Chron. xxiv. 4).

Ver. 2. Valley of the son of Hinnom,] See vii. 31.

Which is by the entry of the east gate,] By which men entered into the temple, from whence they have a prospect of the valley of Hinnom, which lay south-east of the temple (see Josh. xv. 8, and Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple). The Hebrew reads, "the gate Harsith," which some interpret the dung gate, mentioned Neh. ii. 13. Others the potter's gate; the potter's field being near the temple (see Zech. xi. 13, Matt. xxvii. 10).

Ver. 3. O kings of Judah,] See xvii. 20.

The which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle,] The very report of it shall astonish the hearers (see I Sam. iii. 11, 2 Kings xxi. 12).

Ver. 4. Have estranged this place,] Jerusalem was the "city of God" (Ps. xlvi. 1, 2), and the place of his peculiar residence; therefore called the "holy city," Matt. xxvii. 53, but the Jews in a sacrilegious manner have defiled it, by the practice of the worst and most inhuman idolatry.

Nor the kings of Judah,] The good kings of former times, such as David, Asa, Jehosaphat, Hezekiah, and Josiah.

Blood of innocents,] Of the children sacrificed there to Moloch (compare ii. 34).

Ver. 5. They have built also the high places of Baal, &c.] The words were better translated, "they have even built the high places," &c. for the same sin is here expressed which was mentioned in the latter part of the foregoing verse, and the copulative particle and is sometimes used by way of explication (see the note on Isa. li. 19).

To burn their sons with fire for burnt-offerings unto Baal,] The idol to whom these inhuman sacrifices were offered, is elsewhere called Moloch (see Lev. xviii. 21, 2 Kings xxiii. 10). Baal and Moloch were two names promiscuously given to one and the same idol, as appears from xxxii. 35 of this prophecy: "They have built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Moloch."

Baal and Moloch are equivalent words, both signifying lord, or king; and seem to have been promiscuously given by each idolatrous nation, to that idol they chiefly worshipped. And as the worship of Baal, or Belus, prevailed in several countries, so Moloch was esteemed a principal idol in other nations, as appears by the names of Malcom, Melicerta, Adrammelech, Anammelech, and the like, all derived from the word Moloch (see Dr. Spencer, De Legibus Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 10, n. 1, 2).

Which I commanded not,] See the note on vii. 31.

Ver. 6.] See vii. 32, and the following verse.

Ver. 7.] They shed innocent blood in this place (ver. 4), and God will discomfit them here, and will cause their blood to be shed by the hand of the Chaldeans, who shall lay siege to the city.

Ver. 8.] See xviii. 16.

Ver. 9.] A terrible judgment threatened by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 53, to which place the text plainly alludes; and actually fulfilled in the siege of Jerusalem (see Lam. iv. 10).

LORD of hosts; Even so will I break this people and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again: and they shall bury them in Tophet, till there be no place to bury.

12 Thus will I do unto this place, saith the LORD, and to the inhabitants thereof, and even make this city as Tophet:

13 And the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses of the kings of Judah, shall be defiled as the place of Tophet, because of all the houses upon whose roofs they have burned incense unto all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink-offerings unto other gods.

14 Then came Jeremiah from Tophet, whither the LORD had sent him to prophesy; and he stood in the court of the LORD's house; and said to all the people, 15 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring upon this city and upon all her towns, all the evil that I have pronounced against it, because they have hardened their necks, that they might not hear my words.

Ver. 10. Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men] To give them a sensible representation of the ruin threatened against them (see li. 63, 64).

Ver. 11.] The breaking of an earthen vessel is a proper emblem of utter ruin; for such a one, when it is broken, can never be mended or put to any farther use (see Isa. xxx. 14.)

They shall bury them in Tophet.] See vii. 32.

Ver. 12. Tophet:] A place of slaughter (see ver. 6, and the following verse).

Ver. 13. The houses of Jerusalem—shall be defiled as—Tophet.] Polluted with dead bodies (see the note on vii. 32).

The houses upon whose roofs they have burned incense] The Jews built their houses with flat roofs (see Deut. xxii. 8); and there they dedicated altars to the host of heaven, where they could have the fullest view of them (see 2 Kings xxiii. 12, Zeph. iii. 5).

Ver. 14. He stood in the court of the Lord's house:] The great court, which is called the outer court, Ezek. xlvi. 21, supposed to be the same with the new court, mentioned 2 Chron. ix. 5, as having been built since Solomon's time (see xxvi. 2, and Dr. Lightfoot, of the Temple, ch. 18).

Ver. 15.] See the note on xviii. 23.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Now Pashur the son of Immer the priest, who was also chief governor in the house of the LORD, heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things.

2 Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the LORD.

3. And it came to pass on the morrow, that Pashur brought forth Jeremiah out of the stocks. Then said Jeremiah unto him, The LORD hath not called thy name Pashur, but Magor-missabib.

4 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends: and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it: and I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword.

5 Moreover I will deliver all the strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon.

CHAP. XX.

ARGUMENT.—Upon Pashur's ill-treatment of Jeremy, he falls into a grievous complaint of the hardships that attended the discharge of his prophetic office, which made him weary of his life.

Ver. 1.] The family of Immer was the sixteenth in order of the four-and-twenty courses of the priests (see 1 Chron. xxiv. 14). And this Pashur, by being head of his family, had a principal authority in ordering matters relating to the temple, and keeping good orders there: and therefore is called "chief governor," or "a chief governor in the house of the Lord" (see there, ver. 5). So Hilkiah, Zechariah, and Jehiel, are called "chief rulers of the house of God." 2 Chron. xxxv. 8, because the first of them was chief priest, and the two other probably heads of their courses. To the same sense we may understand the "priests of the second order," mentioned 2 Kings xxiii. 4. If we suppose Pashur to have been, in a strict sense, chief or supreme "governor in the house of God," he seems to be the same officer that is called "captain of the temple," Acts iv. 1, he that was set over the several watches or guards of the priests and Levites: for they kept watch and ward in the temple, both day and night (see Ps. cxxxiv. 2, and Lightfoot upon Luke xxii. 4).

Ver. 2.] The Septuagint understand the word translated "the stocks," of a dungeon, or house of correction, which was in one of the outer courts of the temple. This, the text says, was placed in the "high gate of Benjamin," which Dr. Lightfoot explains of the upper gate in the tribe of Benjamin, that led to the temple; the mountain upon which the temple stood, being partly in the tribe of Benjamin, and partly in that of Judah (see his Description of the Temple, ch. 27).

Ver. 3. The Lord hath not called thy name Pashur, but Magor-missabib.] The name which I give thee signifies fear, or terror round about; and thou thyself shalt be a dreadful example of those calamities which are coming upon thy friends, and all the inhabitants of this city (compare vi. 25, xlvii. 5, xlix. 29, Lam. ii. 22).

Ver. 5.] All its wealth, and all that the inhabitants have gotten by their industry, shall be a prey to their enemies (compare iii. 24, Ezek. xxiii. 29). The word which we render strength, is elsewhere translated treasures (see Prov. xv. 6, Ezek. xxii. 25).

6 And thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thine house, shall go into captivity: and thou shalt come to Babylon, and there thou shalt die, and shalt be buried there, thou, and all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied lies.

7 ¶ O LORD, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived: thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed: I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me.

8 For since I spake, I cried out, I cried violence and spoil; because the word of the LORD was made a reproach unto me, and a derision, daily.

9 Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay.

10 ¶ For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him, and we shall take our revenge on him.

11 But the LORD is with me as a mighty terrible one: therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not prevail: they shall be greatly ashamed; for they shall not prosper: their everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten.

12 But, O LORD of hosts, that triest the righteous, and seest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I opened my cause.

13 Sing unto the LORD, praise ye the LORD: for he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of evil-doers.

14 ¶ Cursed be the day wherein I was born: let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.

15 Cursed be the man who brought tidings to my father, saying, A man child is born unto thee; making him very glad.

16 And let that man be as the cities which

Ver. 6. To whom thou hast prophesied lies.] False prophecies of peace and deliverance (see xiv. 14, xxviii. 15, xxix. 21).

Ver. 7.] The following verses are Jeremy's doleful reflections upon the ill success of his prophecies, which had little good effect upon others, and brought a great deal of harm to himself. The sense is, Thou hast promised to be my safeguard against mine enemies; but yet I find myself disappointed, and left exposed to their malice (compare xv. 18). Some render the words, "Thou hast persuaded me, and I was persuaded;" that is, I was over-persuaded to undertake the office of a prophet. The following words favour this sense.

Thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed:] It was sore against my will, that I undertook the prophetic office, which I would gladly have declined (i. 6.); but thy commands and inspirations did, in a manner, constrain me to it. I could have no temptation to run upon this errand without being sent, since it procures me nothing but ill usage.

Ver. 8.] Or, "I cried out of violence, and complained aloud of spoil." Since I began to prophesy, I have reason to complain of the hardships I have undergone upon that account (see xi. 19, &c. xv. 15, xviii. 18). This verse may likewise be thus explained: Since I began to prophesy as God commanded me, I have freely expostulated with my countrymen, of the violence and oppression they have been guilty of (see vi. 7): and therefore (so the particle ki often signifies) all the requital I have had for the faithful discharge of my office, has been contempt and ill usage.

Ver. 9.] This made me resolve not to prophesy any more, but I found myself "pressed in spirit" (see Acts xviii. 5), and unable to resist the impulses of God's Spirit, urging me to execute his commands (compare Job xxii. 19, Ps. xxxix. 3).

Ver. 10. For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side.] Or, Magor-missabib. Many upbraided me with the ill usage I received from Pashur, and with my prophecy against him, by the name of Magor-missabib. If we follow the received translation, as the expression is the same with Ps. xxxi. 13, so the sense seems to be much the same in both places; viz. From the slanderous reports raised upon me, I had reason to apprehend some evil design against my life, as well from treacherous friends as from open enemies.

All my familiars watched for my halting.] My pretended friends encourage one another in spreading false reports of me; or desire to hear from my mouth more prophecies, in hopes to find some matter of accusation against me, whereby they might take away my life, and so fulfil their revenge on me.

Ver. 11.] After having given free vent to his melancholy reflections (see the note on xv. 18), he begins to recollect himself, and cheer up his spirits by the comfortable remembrance of God's promises to him, by which he was assured that his enemies should be disappointed in all their ill designs they had contrived against him (see xi. 22, 23, xv. 20, xviii. 18).

Ver. 12. That triest the righteous.] Who makest trial of his faith and patience by afflictions (see Ps. xi. 5).

Let me see thy vengeance on them;] See xi. 20.

Ver. 13.] In confidence of his deliverance, the prophet gives thanks beforehand, as we may observe many of the Psalms that beg deliverance end in thanksgiving, as if it were already obtained (see Ps. liv. 16, lviii. 1, 5, &c.).

Ver. 14. Cursed be the day wherein I was born:] This and the following verses, represent the melancholy thoughts which oppressed the mind of the prophet, while he was struggling with the reproach and malice of his enemies; and they are written in a poetical strain, as Job's lamentation is, ch. iii. like a lessus, or mournful ditty; such as the præfice, or mourning women, used to sing. See ix. 17, wherein he expresses his wishes that he had never been born (compare xv. 10).

Let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.] Let it not be celebrated with those good wishes and expressions of joy, which are wont to be used on birth-days. The heathens in like manner had their bona verba, good wishes, proper for their birth-days: so Tibullus (lib. ii. eleg. 2), Dicamus bona verba, venit natalis: and which they abstained from using, when they were under great calamities, as Ovid speaks, Trist. lib. iii. eleg. 13. In tantis subeunt nec bona verba malis.

Ver. 15.] I observed that this lamentation is written in poetical figures, like the ancient nænia, or funeral songs, wherein all the circumstances are brought the LORD overthrew, and repented not: and let him hear the cry in the morning, and the shouting at noontide;

17 Because he slew me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb to be always great with me.

18 Wherefore came I forth out of the womb to see labour and sorrow, that my days should be consumed with shame?

in, that are proper to raise the passions; and therefore are not to be looked upon as so many expressions of indignation or malice, but rather of mourning and sorrow. Just such are those figures we read in David's funeral song upon Saul and Jonathan, 2 Sam. i. 21, "Ye mountains of Gilboa, let there be no dew, neither let there be rain upon you," &c. And as in the forms of rejoicing upon a birth-day, they blessed every one concerned in the birth, and said, "Blessed be the womb that bare thee," and the like: and he that brought the joyful news was always rewarded: so, in the forms of sorrow for the miserable, they used the quite contrary expressions. I must acknowledge myself indebted to the right reverend and learned Dr. Chandler, now deservedly promoted to the see of Coventry and Litchfield, for the explaining this and the foregoing verse; as likewise for his other judicious remarks upon several difficult texts in this prophecy, and that of Isaiah.

Ver. 16. Let that man be as the cities which the Lord overthrew.] O that he had been looked upon with aversion, as a token of ill luck, or a sad spectacle, such as Sodom and Gomorrah are: and let him be esteemed as unfortunate, as he would have been thought, if he had brought tidings of my death instead of my birth.

Let him hear the cry in the morning.] Such a cry as is made when an enemy comes to plunder the house, or murder the family (compare xviii. 22, xlviii. 3, 4).

The shouting at noontide;] The alarm of war, as the word is rendered, iv. 19, or such a rejoicing as the enemies make over the vanquished. To "hear the cry in the morning, and shouting at noon-day," signifies being perpetually alarmed with the terrors of a hostile invasion (compare vi. 4). The same learned person understands this verse of the lamentations made at funerals, which were performed not only with mournful voices, but likewise with instruments of music, implied in the word terunah, shouting (see Matt. ix. 28). It was the custom of the Jews, upon a funeral day, to begin their lamentations early in the morning, and continue them till the afternoon, when the body was carried out to be buried (see Buxtorf Synagog. p. 49). So the sense of the verse will be, "Let this man have every day an occasion of lamentation."

Ver. 17.] Or, "because I was not slain from the womb." For the verb transitive is often taken impersonally (see the note on Isa. xlv. 18). I utter these wishes in the bitterness of my soul, when I consider how much better it had been that I had never been born, or given up the ghost immediately, than led a life of continual sorrow and misery (compare Job iii. 10, 11).

CHAPTER XXI.

1 THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, when king Zedekiah sent unto him Pashur the son of Melchiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, saying,

*2 Enquire, I pray thee, of the LORD for us; for Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us; if so be that the LORD will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us.

3 ¶ Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Zedekiah:

4 Thus saith the LORD God of Israel; Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city.

5 And I myself will fight against you with an

CHAP. XXI.

ARGUMENT.—The occasion of Zedekiah's message, mentioned at the beginning of this chapter, seems to be the Chaldeans raising the siege of Jerusalem, in order to meet the Egyptian army that was come to its relief (see xxxvii. 5): which gave Zedekiah hopes of deliverance from the Chaldeans, which were very much quashed by the return of that army, and renewing of the siege: hereupon Zedekiah inquires by messengers concerning the event of the war (compare ver. 9 of this chapter with xxxviii. 2). The latter part of this chapter, from ver. 11, belongs to the same subject with the twenty-second chapter, and relates to the time of Jehoiakim.

Ver. 1.] This Pashur was a different person from him mentioned xx. 1 (see xxxviii. 1). Zephaniah is called the second priest, lii. 24, and 2 Kings xxv. 18, that is, he was the high priest's sagan, or deputy (compare Jer. xxix. 25).

Ver. 2. Enquire—of the Lord for us;] compare xxxvii. 7.

If so be that the Lord will deal with us according to all his wondrous works.] If he will show his wonderful power, in giving us a total deliverance from the hands of our enemies the Chaldeans (see the argument of the chapter).

Ver. 4.] Compare xxxvii. 10. Instead of doing execution upon your enemies, they shall hurt yourselves, and be the occasion of your own destruction. God will as visibly appear against you, as if a miraculous wind were to drive back your own artillery, and turn it upon yourselves; as the story is told of the discomfiture of the tyrant Eugenius's army, that came against the forces of the emperor Theodosius (see Soerat. Hist. Eccles. lib. v. cap. 25).

Ver. 5. I myself will fight against you] By the executioners of my wrath, the sword, the famine, and the pestilence. I will plainly appear on your enemies' side by the success I will give to their arms.

Ver. 6. They shall die of a great pestilence.] A great part of those that continue in the city during the siege shall die of the pestilence; though the sword and the famine shall likewise consume many (see ver. 9).

Ver. 7. He shall smite them with the edge of the sword;] Zedekiah himself was not put to death, but carried to Babylon, where he died (see xxiv. 5). But outstretched hand and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath.

6 And I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and beast: they shall die of a great pestilence.

7 And afterward, saith the LORD, I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, and such as are left in this city from the pestilence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the land of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life: and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword; he shall not spare them, neither have pity, nor have mercy.

8 ¶ And unto this people thou shalt say, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.

9 He that abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live, and his life shall be unto him for a prey.

10 For I have set my face against this city for evil, and not for good, saith the LORD: it shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire.

11 ¶ And touching the house of the king of Judah, say, Hear ye the word of the LORD; 12 O house of David, thus saith the LORD; Execute judgment in the morning, and deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, lest my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

13 Behold, I am against thee, O inhabitants of the valley, and rock of the plain, saith the LORD; which say, Who shall come down against us? or who shall enter into our habitations?

14 But I will punish you according to the fruit of your doings, saith the LORD: and I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof, and it shall devour all things round about it.

his sons and his great men were slain by the command of Nebuchadnezzar (see 2 Kings xxv. 7, 8). It is common in all writers to express that indefinitely, which is true of the greater part of the persons concerned.

Ver. 9. He that goeth out and falleth to the Chaldeans—shall live.] God had declared his purpose of giving up the Jews and the neighbouring countries to the dominion of the Chaldeans (xxv. 9, xxvii. 6): so those who would comply with his declared will should have their lives, the rest should be destroyed as fighting against God.

His life shall be unto him for a prey.] He ought to think himself a considerable gainer by escaping with his life, in so general a destruction (see xxxviii. 2, xxxix. 18, xlv. 5). For in such a universal calamity, the best men shall save but their own souls by their righteousness, as Ezekiel speaks, xiv. 20.

Ver. 10.] Compare xlv. 11, Amos ix. 4. God's face is sometimes used for his anger, as it is in this and in the parallel texts.

Ver. 11.] This belongs to the same subject with the twenty-second chapter, and should not have been parted from it. Compare this and the following verse with the first, second, and third verses of that chapter.

Ver. 12. Execute judgment in the morning.] The king was supreme judge in all causes and controversies (see 2 Sam. viii. 15); what some rabbins affirm, as if the king were subject to the judgment of the Sanhedrin, and might be punished by them, is said without any precedent in holy scripture, and is confuted by Casaub. Exercit. xiii. in Baronium, Numb. 5, and Salmasius, in his Defensio Regia, cap. 2 (see likewise Selden, De Synedr. lib. iii. cap. 9). The courts of judicature usually sat in the morning. See Ps. ci. 8, where the Hebrew reads, "in the morning," or, "every morning, I will destroy all the wicked of the land" (compare Job xxxviii. 13, 14).

Lest my fury go out like fire, &c.] These words are an argument, that this prophecy was antecedent to that at the beginning of the chapter, and before that peremptory decree was published against the king's house, mentioned ver. 7 of this chapter (see the note on iv. 28).

Ver. 13. O inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain.] A description of Jerusalem: the former expression denoting the lower part of the city, which was surrounded with hills (see Ps. cxxv. 2): the latter describing mount Zion (compare xvii. 3).

Who shall come down against us?] They confided in the strength of their situation, as the Jebusites, the ancient inhabitants of the place, had formerly done (see 2 Sam. v. 6, 7).

Ver. 14. In the forest.] The word forest is often metaphorically taken for a city, in the prophetic writings; because its stately buildings, or its principal inhabitants, resemble tall cedars standing in their several ranks (see xxii. 7, Isa. xxvii. 24, Ezek. xx. 46, Zech. xi. 1).

Ver. 2. O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David.] The prophet directs his discourse to Jehoiakim (see ver. 18); and puts him in mind of the promises God had made to David's family, if they lived in obedience to his will (see 1 Kings viii. 25).

Thou, and thy servants, and thy people.] Thy courtiers and other officers who attend continually on thee (see ver. 4); comprehending likewise all the people of the city (see the note on ver. 4).

Ver. 2. O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David.] The prophet directs his discourse to Jehoiakim (see ver. 18); and puts him in mind of the promises God had made to David's family, if they lived in obedience to his will (see 1 Kings viii. 25).

Thou, and thy servants, and thy people.] Thy courtiers and other officers who attend continually on thee (see ver. 4); comprehending likewise all the people of the city (see the note on ver. 4).

Ver. 2. O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David.] The prophet directs his discourse to Jehoiakim (see ver. 18); and puts him in mind of the promises God had made to David's family, if they lived in obedience to his will (see 1 Kings viii. 25).

Thou, and thy servants, and thy people.] Thy courtiers and other officers who attend continually on thee (see ver. 4); comprehending likewise all the people of the city (see the note on ver. 4).

Ver. 2. O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David.] The prophet directs his discourse to Jehoiakim (see ver. 18); and puts him in mind of the promises God had made to David's family, if they lived in obedience to his will (see 1 Kings viii. 25).

Thou, and thy servants, and thy people.] Thy courtiers and other officers who attend continually on thee (see ver. 4); comprehending likewise all the people of the city (see the note on ver. 4).

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Thus saith the LORD, Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word,

2 And say, Hear the word of the LORD, O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates:

CHAP. XXII.

ARGUMENT.—This discourse, or section, which begins from the eleventh verse of the twenty-first chapter, is a collection of prophecies, wherein Jeremiah foretold the fate of several kings of Judah. The words to the twentieth verse are directed to the king Jehoiakim, and from thence to the end of the chapter to Jeconiah.

Ver. 2. O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David.] The prophet directs his discourse to Jehoiakim (see ver. 18); and puts him in mind of the promises God had made to David's family, if they lived in obedience to his will (see 1 Kings viii. 25).

Thou, and thy servants, and thy people.] Thy courtiers and other officers who attend continually on thee (see ver. 4); comprehending likewise all the people of the city (see the note on ver. 4).

3 Thus saith the LORD; Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place.

4 For if ye do this thing indeed, then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people.

5 But if ye will not hear these words, I swear by myself, saith the LORD, that this house shall become a desolation.

6 For thus saith the LORD unto the king's house of Judah; Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon: yet surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited.

7 And I will prepare destroyers against thee, every one with his weapons: and they shall cut down thy choice cedars, and cast them into the fire.

8 And many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, Wherefore hath the LORD done thus unto this great city?

9 Then they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them.

10 ¶ Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him: but weep sore for him that goeth away: for he shall return no more, nor see his native country.

11 For thus saith the LORD touching Shallum the son of Josiah king of Judah, which reigned instead of Josiah his father, which went forth out of this place; He shall not return thither any more:

12 But he shall die in the place whither they have led him captive, and shall see this land no more.

13 ¶ Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work;

14 That saith, I will build me a wide house and large chambers, and cutteth him out win-

Ver. 3.] Compare ver. 17, where we find Jehoia-kim taxed with those sins.

Ver. 4.] See the note on xvii. 25. Instead of the "gates of this house," the text reads there, "the gates of this city:" and the context here shows, that the prophecy is directed not only to the king's court in particular, but likewise to the whole city of Jerusalem, one part of which was called the city of David; and the whole looked upon as a royal city, and the place of their king's residence (compare ver. 2, 8).

Ver. 5.] God's confirming his threatenings by an oath, is a sign that the sentence was immutable, and that nothing could reverse it but the people's sincere repentance; which condition is expressed in the foregoing part of the verse (see Heb. vi. 17).

Ver. 6.] Though thou wert never so precious in my sight, wert as valuable for riches and plenty as the fat pastures of Gilead, and thy buildings as beautiful for their stateliness as the tall cedars of Lebanon (see the notes on xxi. 14); yet, unless thy princes and people reform, thou shalt become nothing but ruin and desolation.

Ver. 7. I will prepare destroyers against thee.] The Hebrew reads, "I will sanctify destroyers:" so xii. 3, where our translation reads, "Prepare them for the day of slaughter:" it is in the Hebrew, "Sanctify them" (see the note on Isa. xiii. 3).

They shall cut down thy choice cedars.] The prophet compared the king's palace, or the city of Jerusalem, to Lebanon, ver. 6, and here, pursuing the metaphor, he threatens to destroy both houses and inhabitants by the Chaldean army (see the note on xxi. 14).

Ver. 8.] They that had heard that this city had been called the city of God, and the place of his especial residence, would be astonished to find it a scene of his judgments and vengeance. Thus was fulfilled that threatening of Moses (Deut. xxviii. 37), that God would make the Jews an astonishment to other nations (see likewise 1 Kings ix. 8).

Ver. 10.] Weep not for Josiah, for he is buried in peace, and "taken away from the evils to come" (see 2 Kings xxii. 20); but rather lament Jehoahaz his successor, whom Pharaoh-nechoh hath carried captive into Egypt, from thence never to return (see 2 Kings xxiii. 34).

Ver. 11.] It is a great dispute among commentators and chronologers who this Shallum was, there being no person of that name mentioned in the succession of the Jewish kings in sacred history; and the Shallum mentioned as Josiah's son, 1 Chron. iii. 15, is expressly called his fourth son, who could not probably succeed his father immediately, as it is said expressly of Shallum here in the text. Without entering far into this dispute, I shall lay this down as most probable, that the Shallum mentioned in the text, is the same with Jehoahaz; for the characters here set down can agree to none else. It was he that "reigned instead of his father Josiah;" he likewise went out of Jerusalem, or was carried away captive, and never returned any more (see ver. 11). The same may be proved from the order of the prophecies set down in this chapter: the eleventh and twelfth verses are concerning Jehoahaz: from the thirteenth to the twentieth relate to Jehoia-kim, and the remaining part of the chapter regards the reign of Jeconiah. Why he is called Shallum, is not easy at this distance to conjecture; some suppose that name given him by way of reproach, because of the shortness of his reign, in which he resembled that king Shallum mentioned 2 Kings xv. 13. So Jeconiah is called Coniah, by way of contempt, ver. 24. It is farther certain, that this Shallum cannot be the same with him mentioned 1 Chron. iii. 15 (as Archbishop Usher supposed; see his Annal. V. T. ad An. M. 3371), because that person is spoken of as younger than Zedekiah, whereas this Shallum being the same with Jehoahaz, was without question older (compare 2 Kings xxiii. 13, with xxiv. 18).

Ver. 13.] The prophet proceeds to denounce God's judgments against Jehoia-kim (see ver. 18); who it seems built himself a stately palace in those calamitous times, and took no care to defray the wages of his workmen; but maintained his own luxury by the oppression of those who were to live by their labour: a crying sin, and too common among the great men of the world, severely prohibited both in the Old and New Testament (see Deut. xxiv. 14, 15, James v. 4).

Ver. 14. Cutteth him out windows.] The word hallonai signifies literally my windows; and so our margin reads, but the affix is elsewhere redundant (see Zech. xiv. 5). Mr. Gregory, in his Observations upon the Scripture (chap. 13,) allows the marginal reading downs; and it is ceiled with cedar, and painted with vermilion.

15 Shalt thou reign, because thou closest thyself in cedar? did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then it was well with him?

16 He judged the cause of the poor and needy: then it was well with him: was not this to know me? saith the LORD.

17 But thine eyes and thine heart are not but for thy covetousness, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, and for violence, to do it.

18 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah; They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother!

and understands the word of a private oratory, or chapel, which Jehoiakim ordered to be made in his palace; and that God reproves him for a vain ostentation of piety, when at the same time he had no regard to common justice, in making an offering to God out of other men's labours.

Ver. 15. Shalt thou reign, because thou closest thyself in cedar? Will a house, finely adorned and furnished, be a fortress and defence to thee against thy enemies, that come to deprive thee of thy kingdom! This is the sense of the words, if we follow the English translation; but the verb ticharch, properly signifies to vie, or contend with; and so it is translated, Jer. xii. 5, and then the sense will be, is this a proper method to secure thy kingdom, only to vie with other princes, who shall have the most stately palace?

Did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then [or therefore, see Noldius's Concordance, p. 7] it was well with him? Thy father Josiah lived in sufficient plenty, and in a state suitable to his character, and yet was a strict observer of justice both in his public and private capacity, and did not betake himself to such sordid methods of injustice, and oppression for the support of his grandeur: the reason was, because the blessing of God was upon him, as a reward of his justice and integrity.

Ver. 16. Was not this to know me? Such a strict regard to justice was the genuine effect of his piety and true knowledge of God.

Ver. 17.] For this cause Jehoiakim is compared to a lion by the prophet Ezekiel, xix. 6.

Ver. 18. Ah my brother! or, Ah sister! &c. The prophet repeats part of the lessus, or funeral ditty, which the public mourners used to sing at funerals (see the note on ix. 17, xx. 14, and compare 1 Kings xiii. 30); signifying that Jehoiakim should not be buried with those solemn lamentations, with which the memory of his predecessors, particularly that of his father, had been honoured (see 2 Chron. xxxv. 25).

Ah Lord! or, Ah his glory! That is, how is his glory departed and vanished! Another burden, or chorus, of the funeral song.

Ver. 19.] Compare xxxvi. 30. Jehoiakim was advanced to the kingdom by Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt (2 Kings xxxiii. 34). He followed the fortune of the king that set him up, and upon the conquest of Egypt by the Chaldeans (see Jer. xlv. 2), after three years' reign, he was taken prisoner by Nebuchadnezzar, and put into irons (see Dan. i. 2, 2 Kings xxiv. 1, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6); but afterward he released him, and made him a tributary king. After three years' obedience, Jehoiakim rebelled in confidence of assistance from Egypt: in the tenth year of his reign, Nebuchadnezzar's army overran Judea (see 2 or, Ah sister! they shall not lament for him, saying, Ah lord! or, Ah his glory!

19 He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.

20 ¶ Go up to Lebanon, and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, and cry from the passages: for all thy lovers are destroyed.

21 I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear. This hath been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyedst not my voice.

22 The wind shall eat up all thy pastors, and thy lovers shall go into captivity: surely then shalt thou be ashamed and confounded for all thy wickedness.

Kings xxiv. 2); and in the following year they besieged Jerusalem, and probably took Jehoiakim prisoner in some sally that he made upon them; whereupon they killed him, and then cast out his dead body into the highway, like the carcass of an ass, denying him the common rites of burial (see Joseph. Antiq. lib. x. cap. 7, 8). Accordingly, he is said to have "slept with his fathers" (2 Kings xxiv. 6), but not to have been buried with his fathers.

[Ver. 19. Drawn and cast forth] The expression is taken from the custom of dogs to draw about a carcass before they tear and devour it. Compare xv. 3, where it is in the Hebrew, "the dogs to draw;" our English reads, to tear; but the Hebrew word is the same in both places. See likewise xlix. 20.]

Ver. 20. Go up to Lebanon and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, An ironical expression, directed either to the land of Judea, or the city of Jerusalem; as if he had said, you may go up to the tops of the highest mountains, and make what outcries or signals you can to implore foreign aid and assistance, but all to no purpose.

And cry from the passages: From the borders, or rivers, which are the bounds of your country: some interpreters suppose the word abarim to be a proper name, and understand it of mount Abarim (see Numb. xxvii. 12).

All thy lovers are destroyed. All thy foreign allies, whose friendship and assistance thou didst seek, and whom thou didst court by complying with their idolatries (compare iv. 30, Lam. i. 19, Ezek. xvi. 33, 37, Hos. viii. 9). The prophet means more particularly the Egyptians, upon whose assistance they chiefly depended, but whose power was very much weakened by the king of Babylon (see xxxvii. 5—7, 2 Kings xxiv. 7, Lam. iv. 17).

Ver. 21. I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear. The common infirmity of mankind, who, being puffed up with prosperity, think themselves too wise to stand in need of good advice, and therefore put off the hearkening to it till they are in extremities, when it will do them little or no benefit.

This hath been thy manner from thy youth, &c. See ii. 7, iii. 25, vii. 23, &c. xxii. 30.

Ver. 22. The wind shall eat up all thy pastors, God's judgments, like a blasting wind (see iv. 11), shall destroy all thy governors, both ecclesiastical and civil (see the note on ii. 8): their honour and authority shall cease, and the whole frame of government shall be dissolved.

Thy lovers shall go into captivity: Thy allies (see ver. 20) shall themselves be made captives by the Chaldeans, and shall not be able to preserve them-

23 O inhabitant of Lebanon, that makest thy nest in the cedars, how gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain as of a woman in travail!

24 As I live, saith the LORD, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence;

25 And I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 And I will cast thee out, and thy mother selves, much less to give any assistance to thee (see xxv. 9).

Ver. 23. That makest thy nest in the cedars.] A metaphorical description of Jerusalem, whose state-buildings are elsewhere compared to the tall cedars of a forest (see the note on xxi. 14).

How gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, &c.] Or rather, "How humble," or "suppliant, wilt thou be" in those pangs of affliction that shall suddenly come upon thee (see vi. 24, xxx. 6); whereas before thou wast too proud to hearken to any advice that was offered (see ver. 21).

The verb havan doth commonly signify to implore mercy or favour, and the noun tahanunim is used in the same sense, iii. 21, xxxi. 9. Some render the words, "What grace or favour wilt thou find, when pangs," &c.

Ver. 24.] Though he were never so near and dear to me, such a one as was always under my eye and care (compare Cant. viii. 6, Hag. ii. 23), yet his wickedness should make him forfeit all my favour towards him (see 2 Kings xxiv. 9). Jehoiachin, or Jeconiah, as his name is writ, 1 Chron. iii. 16, is called Coniah here and ver. 28, by way of contempt.

Ver. 26.] See 2 Kings xxiv. 15. This implies that he had no children when he was carried away captive (see ver. 28).

Ver. 27. But to the land, &c.] See xlv. 14.

Ver. 28. Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol?] An interrogation by way of admiration: q. d. Would any one have thought that this man, that was invested with royal dignity, should come to be no better than a broken image of royalty, divested of all power and authority, and an object of scorn and reproach? Nothing can be more contemptible than a broken idol, which can be put to no farther use, and is no longer an object of worship, but of derision.

Wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, &c.] The children which he probably had after he was carried to Babylon, where he lived many years a that bare thee, into another country, where ye were not born; and there shall ye die.

27 But to the land whereunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return.

28 Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not?

29 O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the LORD.

30 Thus saith the LORD, Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah.

captive (see 2 Kings xxv. 27), though none of them lived to succeed in the royal authority (see the note on ver. 30).

Ver. 29.] The prophets often bespeak men's attention, by appealing to heaven and earth; that is, to all creatures, and particularly to the inhabitants of this world, to hearken to God's words (see Deut. xxxiii. 1, Isa. i. 2, xxxiv. 1, Mic. i. 2, vi. 1, 2). The word eret may be rendered land, as it often is, and applied to Judea.

Ver. 30. Write ye this man childless.] Or, "let this man be written childless:" the personal being used for the impersonal (see xx. 17). When God commands a thing to be written, it signifies that such a truth is of great importance, and deserves to be recorded (see the note on xxx. 2, and on Isa. xxx. 9). Quæ scribuntur, certa sunt; "The committing things to writing denotes their certainty;" as Castalio observes upon the place. So God would have it taken notice of as a remarkable judgment upon Jeconiah, that in him the direct line of the Jewish kings, derived from Solomon downward, should fail; and the next heir to the crown should be of a collateral branch; viz. Salathiel, who was the son of Neri, and derived his pedigree from Nathan the son of David (Luke iii. 27, 31). Salathiel is indeed called the son of Jeconiah, 1 Chron. iii. 17, and Matt. i. 12, but in both these places he is called so, not with respect to his natural extraction, but to his political succession, as being next heir to the crown: just as, at the sixteenth verse of the same chapter of the Chronicles, Zedekiah is called the "son of Jeconiah," though he was really his uncle, because he succeeded him in the kingdom. And it is plain that St. Matthew did not intend to set down an exact genealogy from father to son, but only to prove, in general, that Christ was the son, both of David and Abraham, as he tells us, ver. 1. In order to which end, he divides the whole series of time, from Abraham to David, into three parts, and then subdivides each portion of time into fourteen generations; to comply with which method, he omits three kings, Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah (ver. 8).

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the LORD.

CHAP. XXIII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet having foretold in the former chapter the utter destruction of the Jewish kingdom and government; in this he foretells the restoration of both under the Messias, and then proceeds to reprove at large the evil arts of the false prophets, and other pretenders to inspiration.

2 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people;

Ver. 1.] Pastors comprehended both civil and ecclesiastical governors (see the note on ii. 8). This acceptance of the word agrees with the prophet's

Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them: behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the LORD.

3 And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase.

4 And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them: and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the LORD.

5 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth.

6 In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

7 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that they shall no more say, The LORD liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

8 But, The LORD liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land.

9 Mine heart within me is broken because of the prophets; all my bones shake; I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome, because of the LORD, and because of the words of his holiness.

10 For the land is full of adulterers; for because of swearing the land mourneth; the plea-complaint elsewhere; that their rulers, as well as their priests and prophets, were rather corrupters than reformers of the people's manners (see ii. 26, xxxii. 32). And the Messiah himself, whose coming is foretold, ver. 5, for the rectifying these disorders, was both a king and a priest.

Ver. 2.] That feed my people; That undertake the care of my people, though they do not faithfully execute their trust.

Ye have scattered my flock, Instead of looking after them, you have suffered them to be dispersed: through your ill example they have gone astray to idolatry; and that with your other sins hath brought captivity, and a general dispersion upon them.

I will visit upon you the evil See xxii. 22.

Ver. 3. I will gather the remnant See ver. 8.

Ver. 4. They shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, They shall live secure from enemies (see ver. 6), nor shall they be consumed by those dreadful judgments of sword, famine, and pestilence, which have of late destroyed so many of them (see xvi. 4, xxxii. 37, and the note there).

Ver. 5. I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, The Messiah is often called the branch, to denote his descent from the stock of David (see Isa. iv. 2, Zech. iii. 8, vi. 12; compare likewise Isa. xi. 1).

And shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. This character is elsewhere given of the kingdom of Christ (see Ps. lxxii. 2, Isa. xi. 5, xxxii. 1). His laws being the most perfect rule of righteousness, and he himself the most impartial rewarder of every man according to his works (Rev. xxii. 12).

Ver. 6. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; This prophecy is in part fulfilled in all true believers, the mystical Israel, but will receive its utmost completion when the Jewish nation shall be restored; a blessing foretold by most of the ancient prophets (see the note on Isa. xi. 11), who generally join Judah and Israel together, as equally sharers in the blessing, and no more two, but one kingdom (see the note on iii. 18).

Israel shall dwell safely; This denotes outward peace and freedom from the annoyance of enemies, in opposition to the militant state of the church, when it is always under apprehensions from the designs of its adversaries (compare xxxii. 37, xlv. 28, Ezek. xxxiv. 28, Mic. iv. 4, Zeph. iii. 13).

[The words may be properly explained to a spiritual sense; importing, that the Messiah shall subdue all our spiritual enemies, and remove those impediments which hindered men from going on in a steady course of obedience. And to this sense of the words Zecharias seems to allude in his hymn (Luke i. 74, 75), "That we being safely, or securely, delivered from the hands of our enemies (for so the sense of the original runs), might serve him in holiness and righteousness."]

He shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. He shall really be what the title imports (see the note on Isa. vii. 14), he shall be JEHOVAH, or the true God, and our righteousness, or the means of our justification (compare Isa. xlv. 24, 25, 1 Cor. i. 30). The title of Jehorah is elsewhere given to the Messiah by the prophets (see Isa. xl. 10, xlviii. 17, Hos. i. 7, Zech. ii. 10, 11, Mal. iii. 1).

Ver. 7, 8.] This wonderful work of God's in restoring the Jewish nation after their dispersions all the world over (together with the bringing in the fulness of the gentiles, which will be likewise brought to pass by this means, see the note on Isa. lxvi. 12), will so far exceed the miracles which he wrought in their deliverance out of Egypt, that this latter will not deserve to be compared or mentioned with the former. St. Paul calls this restoration of the Jews, "life from the dead" (Rom. xi. 15), that is, as surprising a wonder, as if a dead body were restored to life again.

Ver. 9.] The prophet describes the terror and concern which was upon him, when he considered the horrible sin of the false prophets, in counterfeiting a divine mission, and the dreadful consequences of such a practice, which increases the sins of the people, and aggravates their punishments. The prophets were sometimes struck with a terrible apprehension of those judgments which they denounced against others (see the note on xv. 18, Isa. xv. 5, Hab. iii. 16). The Vulgar Latin interprets the first word of this verse, lanchyim, "ad prophetas," to the prophets; as if it were the title of the following prophecy.

Ver. 10. Because of swearing the land mourneth; By swearing is chiefly here meant perjury (compare this verse with Hos. iv. 2). The Hebrew word signifies indifferently swearing or cursing; the Jewish forms of adjuration used in their courts of justice for the discovery of the truth, had usually an imprecation joined to them. So the words import, that men ventured to forswear themselves, and incur the imprecation implied in an oath, rather than discover the truth in the case of theft, and such-like crimes, wherein they were called upon to be witnesses (compare Prov. xxix. 24). This the prophet saith is one of those crying sins for which God hath visited the nation with severe judgments. And the sins here mensant places of the wilderness are dried up, and their course is evil, and their force is not right.

11 For both prophet and priest are profane; yea, in my house have I found their wickedness, saith the LORD.

12 Wherefore their way shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness: they shall be driven on and fall therein: for I will bring evil upon them, even the year of their visitation, saith the LORD.

13 And I have seen folly in the prophets of Samaria; they prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to err.

14 I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem an horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies: they strengthen also the hands of evil-doers, that none doth return from his wickedness: they are all of them unto me as Sodom, and the inhabitants thereof as Gomorrah.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts concerning the prophets: Behold, I will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall: for from the prophets of Jerusalem is profaneness gone forth into all the land.

tioned, which did abound so much among the people, were in a great measure owing to the ill example of the priests and prophets (see ver. 11, 14, 15).

The pleasant places] See note on xii. 4.

And their course is evil.] Or, "And their violence is evil," as the margin reads, and so the word is translated xxii. 17. Men abuse their power, to the wronging and oppressing their brethren, and add violence to the power they are possessed of, for the compassing their wicked designs. If this be understood of the prophets and priests, to whom this discourse is chiefly directed (see ver. 9, 11), it implies, that they make use of ill arts to establish the authority they have gained over the people, which they do not employ for the bettering, but rather for the corrupting their manners (compare v. 13).

Ver. 11.] See the note on vii. 30.

Ver. 12. Their ways shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness.] They shall fail and miscarry in all their designs, like men that stumble and fall in the dark and slippery ways (see Ps. xxxv. 6).

I will bring evil upon them.] See xi. 23.

Ver. 13, 14.] He compares the sins of the prophets of Samaria and Jerusalem together, and pronounces those of the latter to be more enormous: because they pronounced their false prophecies in the name of the true God, and entitled him to all their impostures; the wickedness of their lives also reflected a dishonour upon his name and religion (compare iii. 11).

They commit adultery.] See xxix. 23.

And walk in lies.] Utter their own imaginations, and call them divine visions (see ver. 16).

They strengthen also the hands of evil-doers.] They confirm men in their evil doings, both by their own ill example, and by promising them peace and security (see ver. 17, Ezek. xiii. 22).

They are all of them unto me as Sodom.] See Deut. xxxii. 32, Isa. i. 10, Ezek. xvi. 46, 48.

Ver. 15. I will feed them with wormwood.] See the notes on viii. 14, ix. 15.

Is profaneness gone forth] The word hanupah is properly rendered profaneness; for the word haneph signifies a wicked or profane person, Job viii. 13, xiii. 16, xv. 24, Isa. ix. 17. Though our English translates the word a hypocrite in all those texts.

16 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Harken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you: they make you vain: they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the LORD.

17 They say still unto them that despise me, The LORD hath said, Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you.

18 For who hath stood in the counsel of the LORD, and hath perceived and heard his word? who hath marked his word, and heard it?

19 Behold, a whirlwind of the LORD is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind: it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked.

20 The anger of the LORD shall not return, until he have executed, and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly.

21 I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied.

22 But if they had stood in my counsel, and

Ver. 16. They make you vain.] Or rather, "They deceive you;" so Ps. lxiii. 10. Our translation renders the word, "Become not vain in robbery or oppression;" but the sense is, "Deceive not yourselves in robbery," or oppression, as if that would be any real advantage to you.

They speak a vision] See ver. 21.

Ver. 17.] See the note on vi. 14.

Ver. 18. Who hath stood in the counsel of the Lord.] The word sod signifies both a secret, and the assembly to which the secret is committed, or where it is debated: the expression here alludes to the privy-counsellors of princes, as if the prophet had said, Who among these false prophets can pretend to have the secret counsels of the Almighty communicated to him! So when the apostle, alluding to Isa. xl. 13, saith "Who hath known the mind of the Lord?" (1 Cor. ii. 16) the context shows, that he designs by that question to exclude only the carnal or natural man from being enlightened from above, or being a competent judge of divine truths.

Ver. 19, 20.] If these prophets had really known God's purposes and intentions, they would not have said, "Peace, peace" to the wicked (ver. 17), but have prophesied a grievous destruction just coming upon them; for that is what will certainly come to pass, and the event will convince you of the truth of what I say. The sudden strokes of God's vengeance are often compared to a whirlwind (see xxv. 32, Ps. lviii. 9, Isa. xxi. 1, Amos i. 4, Zech. vii. 14, ix. 14).

Ver. 20. The anger of the Lord shall not return.] "It shall not return to me void," as we read, Isa. lv.

11. The expression is taken from a messenger that comes back without doing his business.

In the latter days ye shall consider [or understand] it perfectly.] When this judgment hath overtaken you, and ye have felt the evils threatened come upon you in your several captivities, then ye shall more fully understand the meaning of this prophecy. These two verses are repeated, xxx. 23, 24 (see the note upon that place).

Ver. 21.] See xiv. 14, xxvii. 15, xxix. 9.

Ver. 22. Stood in my counsel.] See ver. 18.

Then they should have turned them from their evil way.] This was the design of all God's messages by had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings.

23 Am I a God at hand, saith the LORD, and not a God afar off?

24 Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the LORD. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the LORD.

25 I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed.

26 How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart;

27 Which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams which they tell every man to his neighbour, as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal.

28 The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the LORD.

29 Is not my word like as a fire? saith the LORD; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?

30 Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that steal my words every one from his neighbour.

31 Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that use their tongues, and say, He saith.

his prophets (see xxv. 5); and therefore all true prophets would make this their principal aim. And the giving encouragement to men's carnal security, is often mentioned as a mark of a false prophet (see vi. 14, Ezekel. xiii. 10, 18, 22).

Ver. 23, 24.] Can these false prophets think to impose upon me, or vent their own dreams in my name, and I not discover them? as if either distance or secrecy could place anything out of the reach of my power and knowledge.

Ver. 25, 26.] I know very well the falsehood of their pretences, though they think I take no notice of it, and so continue to act the same counterfeit part over again.

Ver. 27.] Their giving heed to these false prophets is as effectual a method of making my people forget me and my laws, as the setting up an idolatrous way of worship, which hath been too successfully practised by their fathers.

Ver. 28.] Let not these false pretences to dreams or visions discourage the true prophets from the faithful discharge of their office; for the difference between true prophecies and counterfeits, is as evident as that between the chaff and the wheat.

Ver. 29.] These are the properties of my word, by which it may be distinguished from all counterfeits, that it is "quick and powerful," resembled by fiery tongues, Acts ii. 3 (compare Isa. vi. 6). Like fire, it makes its way through all opposition, and the threatenings it denounces will as certainly take hold of the ungodly, as fire does of stubble or dry wood (compare v. 14). And as a hammer breaks to pieces the hardest rock, so is my word, when skilfully applied, able to beat down the confidence of the most hardened sinner.

Ver. 30. That steal my words] That imitate, or rather mimic, the true prophets, speaking in my 32 Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams, saith the LORD, and do tell them and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the LORD.

33 ¶ And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, What is the burden of the LORD? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? I will even forsake you, saith the LORD.

34 And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the LORD, I will even punish that man and his house.

35 Thus shall ye say, every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the LORD answered? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

36 And the burden of the LORD shall ye mention no more: for every man's word shall be his burden; for ye have perverted the words of the living God, of the LORD of hosts our God.

37 Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the LORD answered thee? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

38 But since ye say, The burden of the LORD; therefore thus saith the LORD; Because ye say this word, The burden of the LORD, and I have sent unto you, saying, Ye shall not say, The burden of the LORD;

name as they do, and saying, "Thus sayeth the Lord" (ver. 31), and using their words, but applying them to their own purpose, or it may be, adding their own inventions to them.

Ver. 31. That use their tongues,] Like those that said, "Our lips are our own," Ps. xii. 4, and we may use them as we please. Some suppose the Hebrew lokechim to signify the same as cholekim, the letters being only transposed; and then the phrase denotes speaking "smooth things" (see Isa. xxx. 10).

Ver. 32. By their lightness;] By their folly, their rashness, and inconsistency, with themselves (compare Zeph. iii. 4, Judg. ix. 4). Schultens explains the word pahazuth to signify vain boasting, that is, a pretence to divine inspiration, which they had not (see his Anim. in Job, p. 144).

Ver. 33. What is the burden of the Lord?] The word massa, or burden, signifies a burdensome prophecy, big with ruin and destruction) see Isa. xiii. 1, xvi. 3, and elsewhere). The false prophets said, "Peace, peace" (see ver. 17), deriding the true ones whose predictions were full of threatenings, as if God's messages were a burden they were weary of bearing; and made a jest of these words, "the burden of the Lord," with which they prefaced their prophecies. Upon this account God forbade the use of that expression; see the following verses.

Ver. 36. Every man's word shall be his burden:] You shall be severely accountable for your loose and profane speeches, wherewith you deride and pervert the words and messages of God himself.

Ver. 39. I will utterly forget you,] Tollam vos portans, as St. Jerome renders it; and the Septuagint to the same purpose, "I will carry you away," or "remove you" [as a burden]. Taking the verb nashah in the sense of the verb nasa, as words of a like sound 39 Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence:

are often of a promiscuous signification. This makes the sense more acute, and pertinent to the foregoing verses.

I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, &c.] The Hebrew reads thus. "I 40 And I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten.

will cast you and the city which I gave you and your fathers out of my presence." For the verb na-tash writ with a lath, is equivalent to the verb na-tash with a tau; according to the observation made just now, concerning words of a like sound.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 THE LORD shewed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the LORD, after that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

2 One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe: and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad.

3 Then said the LORD unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good; and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

4 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

5 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good.

6 For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up.

7 And I will give them an heart to know me, that I am the LORD: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart.

8 ¶ And as the evil figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the LORD, So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain in this land, and them that dwell in the land of Egypt:

9 And I will deliver them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them.

10 And I will send the sword, the famine, and the pestilence among them, till they be consumed from off the land that I gave unto them and to their fathers.

CHAP. XXIV.

ARGUMENT.—Under the emblem of two baskets of figs, the prophet shows the different fates of those Jews who were carried captive with Jeconiah, and those that remained still in their own country with Zedekiah.

Ver. 1.] The vision represented two such baskets of figs, as used to be offered up for first-fruits at the temple (see Deut. xxvi. 2). See an account of Jeconiah's captivity, 2 Kings xxiv. 12—14. This captivity was in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign (ibid. ver. 12).

Ver. 2.] Such as were offered for the first-fruits; these were most valued for their goodness and rarity (see Hos. ix. 10).

Ver. 5.] The Jews who were left in their own country thought themselves better beloved of God, than their brethren who were carried away captive: to check this vain confidence, God promises to show the latter particular signs of his favour in a strange land, and to show distinguishing marks of his displeasure upon the former.

Ver. 6. To this land:] See xxix. 2, 10.

I will build them, and not pull them down;] This may be understood both of the prosperous estate God would give them in the land of their captivity, where they should both build houses and propagate their families (see xxix. 5, 6), and likewise contains a promise of restoring them and their posterity to their own country (ibid. ver. 10).

VOL. III.—55

Ver. 7.] Compare xxix. 12, 13. To these first captives chiefly those blessings belong, which are promised to the Jews upon their return from captivity; such as were the knowledge and fear of God, and grace to live in obedience to his commandments (compare xxx. 22, xxxi. 33, xxxii. 38, 39). These were in some degree accomplished in the times after the captivity, when the Jews adhered constantly to their religion, and were very careful of falling into idolatry: but I conceive the eminent completion of this prophecy will be at the time of the general restoration of that nation, so often mentioned in the prophets (see xxx. 3).

Ver. 8.] See chap. xliii., xlv.

Ver. 9.] All those judgments denounced against the obstinate and incorrigible shall be fulfilled in them (see Deut. xxviii. 25, 37, 1 Kings ix. 7).

A reproach:] See Dan. ix. 6.

And a curse] Men shall use this phrase as a form of execration, "God made thee like Zedekiah" (compare xxix. 22). On the contrary, to make a man a blessing implies, that his name should be mentioned as a signal instance of God's favour (see Gen. xlviii. 20, Zech. viii. 13).

Ver. 10. Till they be consumed from off the land] My judgments shall follow them so close, both here and when they are carried into captivity, that neither they nor any of their posterity shall ever enjoy any share of their own country (compare Ezek. v. 12).

CHAPTER XXV.

1 THE word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the people of Judah in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that was the first year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon;

2 The which Jeremiah the prophet spake unto all the people of Judah, and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying,

3 From the thirteenth year of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, even unto this day, that is the three and twentieth year, the word of the LORD hath come unto me, and I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye have not hearkened.

4 And the LORD hath sent unto you all his servants the prophets, rising early and sending them; but ye have not hearkened, nor inclined your ear to hear.

5 They said, Turn ye again now every one from his evil way, and from the evil of your doings, and dwell in the land that the LORD hath given unto you and to your fathers for ever and ever:

6 And go not after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, and provoke me not to anger with the works of your hands; and I will do you no hurt.

7 Yet ye have not hearkened unto me, saith the LORD; that ye might provoke me to anger with the works of your hands to your own hurt.

8 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts; Because ye have not heard my words, 9 Behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the LORD, and Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations.

CHAP. XXV.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains a summary of Jeremiah's commission to prophesy the destruction of Judea, and all the neighbouring countries, which should be reduced under the power of the kings of Babylon for seventy years: and then an end should be put to that monarchy by Cyrus, who set up the Persian monarchy. This age is called by Sir John Marsham the age of the destruction of cities, by reason of the devastations made by the Babylonian conquests (see his Chron. Canon. Sæculum. 18).

Ver. 1.] The first year of Nebuchadrezzar's reign, according to the scripture account, is coincident with the end of the third, and the beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim (compare Dan. i. 1). This reckoning anticipates the computation of Ptolemy's canon by two years, which two years Nebuchadrezzar reigned with his father. According to this account, the scripture reckons his reign to continue five-and-forty years (see the notes on lii. 21): which, according to the common computation, lasted but forty-three. But Daniel, ii. 1, writing in Chaldea, follows the computation in use among the Chaldeans.

Ver. 3.] For Jeremiah prophesied nineteen years under Josiah, who reigned thirty-one years, and this was the beginning of Jehoiakim's fourth year.

Ver. 4. The Lord hath sent unto you—the prophets.] There were several prophets contemporary with Jeremiah, two of which are mentioned in scripture; the prophet Zephaniah, and Urijah the son of Shemaiah, concerning whom see xxvi. 20. From the time of Samuel, when God's answers by Urim began to cease, there were appointed schools or seminaries for training men up, and fitting them for the prophetic office (see I Sam. x. 5, xix. 20, compared with Acts iii. 24). And God usually made choice of such persons of this education, to exercise this function, as appears by the words of Amos (vii. 14), "I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son," and consequently not qualified for that office by my education: but I was a herdsman, and the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel. From the time of the schools of the prophets being thus settled, there was a succession of prophets continued till the captivity; and then the office began by degrees to fail, which is the reason of that complaint, "that the prophets see no visions;" which we find mentioned Lam. ii. 9, Ezek. vii. 26, Ps. lxxiv. 9.

Rising early] See the note on vii. 13.

Ver. 6. Go not after other gods] Though the Jews were guilty of many other sins, yet their crying sin was idolatry, as being a plain renouncing God's authority, who had by so many miracles of mercy set them apart to himself and his own service.

Ver. 9. Families of the north.] See i. 15.

Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant.] Kings and princes are the great instruments of providence with respect to human affairs. Some of them God raises up to be executioners of his judgments upon sinful people; such was he of whom God saith (Hos. xiii. 11), "I gave thee a king in mine anger." Such was Nebuchadrezzar here spoken of, whom God calls his servant, because he wrought for him, as God speaks concerning him, Ezek. xix. 20, that is, he executed God's judgments upon Tyre; God making use of his ambition and desire of conquest, and prospering his arms, in order to the punishment of the neighbouring countries for their sins: see a like instance in the king of Assyria, whom God calls the rod of his anger, Isa. x. 5, &c. And in later times, Attila the Hun called himself Flagellum Dei, the scourge of God, ordained by him to punish that corruption of manners which had overrun the Christians in the western part of the Roman empire.

Against all these nations round about.] See ver. 19, &c. Some of these, particularly Egypt, were the Jews' confederates; upon whose assistance they relied; and the subduing them made way for the easier conquest of Judea (see xxxvii. 5, 8).

Perpetual desolations.] It is a common observation, that the Hebrew word olam doth not always signify eternity, or perpetuity in a strict sense, but is sometimes taken for such a duration as had a remarkable period to conclude it: so it is said of a servant, that he shall serve his master for ever, Exod. xxi. 6, which the Jews expound till the next jubilee. So here the sense of the word is to be restrained to the period of seventy years, mentioned ver. 11 (see the note on xxxii. 40).

10 Moreover I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle.

11 And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations.

13 And I will bring upon that land all my words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations.

14 For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also : and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands.

15 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me : Take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee, to drink it.

16 And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them.

17 Then took I the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the Lord had sent me :

18 To wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, an hissing, and a curse ; as it is this day ;

19 Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people ;

20 And all the mingled people, and all the

Ver. 10. Voice of mirth, &c.] See vii. 34, xvi. 9.

The sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle.] There shall be no marks of trade for the carrying on the common necessities of life ; such as is the grinding of bread-corn : there will be no use of candle where the inhabitants are dispersed and destroyed, nor will there be occasion for such illuminations as are usual upon festival solemnities, in the time of general desolation (ver. 11). Compare Rev. xviii. 22, 23, where we may observe, that St. John exactly follows the Hebrew text, whereas the LXX. in this place, instead of "the sound of the millstones," read ἰσχυρὸν μύρου, "the smell of ointment." From which, and several other places of the New Testament, it appears that the apostles and evangelists did not implicitly follow the Greek translation, but only when they thought it agreeable to the original text (see St. Jerome's preface to the 15th book of his Commentaries upon Isaiah, and his commentary upon Jer. xxxi. 31, and Zech. xii. 10.)

Ver. 11. The king of Babylon.] That is Nebuchadnezzar and his successors. The word king is elsewhere used collectively, for a succession of kings in the same family or kingdom (see the note on Isa. xxiii. 13).

Seventy years.] This computation of seventy years' captivity, is to be reckoned from the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, which is coincident with the third ending, and the fourth beginning of Jehoiakim (see ver. 1) ; when the king of Babylon made his first attempt upon Judea (see Dan. i. 1, 3). From which time to the first year of Cyrus's reign over the Assyrian monarchy is just seventy years. Whereas the prophet Zechary, who reckons the seventy years' captivity completed in the second year of Darius (see Zech. i. 12), commences his computation from the besieging the city ; and when he prolongs his computation to the fourth year of Darius (vii. 1, 5), he dates it from the destruction of the city and temple.

Ver. 12. I will punish the king of Babylon.] God often punishes the persons whom he makes instruments of his vengeance upon others, for those very things which they did by his appointment ; because their intent was purely to carry on their own ambitions and cruel purposes, and not at all to fulfil God's will, or advance his glory. So that the evil they did was altogether their own, and the good that was produced out of it was to be ascribed to God. See a remarkable passage to this purpose, relating to Sennacherib, Isa. x. 5, 16.

Perpetual desolations.] See the note on l. 40.

Ver. 13. All that is written in this book,] Particularly in the fiftieth and fifty-first chapters. The book here mentioned, is that collection of prophecies against the countries round about Judea, which in the Greek copies follows immediately after this verse ; but in the Hebrew copies are placed by themselves at the latter end of the book, from the forty-sixth chapter to the end of the fifty-first. This verse seems to justify the order in which the Septuagint have placed these prophecies.

Ver. 14.] He means those kings and nations who were Cyrus's confederates (see l. 9, 41, li. 27).

Ver. 15.] God's judgments are metaphorically represented by a cup of intoxicating liquors ; because they fill men with astonishment, and bereave them of their common judgment and discretion. See the note on Isa. li. 17, and compare Ps. lxxv. 8, Jer. xlviii. 26, xlix. 12, li. 31, Hab. ii. 16, Rev. xiv. 10, xvi. 19. In both which places, St. John plainly alludes to this place, and expresses the sense of the original more fully and exactly than the Septuagint do (see the note upon ver. 10).

Ver. 16.] That astonishment, and those unsettled counsels and resolutions, are here the effects of God's judgments, are elsewhere compared to drunkenness (see li. 57, Lam. iv. 21, Isa. xix. 14, Nahum iii. 11, Hab. ii. 16).

Ver. 17.] The words, in pursuance of the same metaphor, import the prophet's obeying God's command, and denouncing his judgments upon all the several nations hereafter mentioned (compare ver. 28). The prophets are said to do that which they declare it is God's purpose to do (see the note on i. 10). If we explain the words more strictly to the letter, we may suppose the cup of God's wrath represented to the prophet in a vision (as mystical Babylon was represented to St. John, with a golden cup in her hand, Rev. xvii. 4), which he was commanded to hand round to the nations here specified.

Ver. 18. To wit, Jerusalem, &c.] The Jews are mentioned first, because Jeremiah, as well as the rest of the prophets, was in the first place sent to them (see ver. 3, 4) ; and they were to have the greatest share in the judgments denounced (see Dan. ix. 12, Amos iii. 2).

As it is this day ;] This relates to the desolation of Judea and Jerusalem, when all that Jeremy had foretold against them was fulfilled ; and therefore must have been added, either by Baruch's amanuensis, or else by Ezra ; or whoever it was that collected Jeremy's prophecies into one volume, who, it is likely, added the fifty-second chapter.

kings of the land of Uz, and all the kings of the land of the Philistines, and Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod,

21 Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon,

22 And all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea,

23 Dedan, and Tema, and Buz, and all that are in the utmost corners, 24 And all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert,

25 And all the kings of Zimri, and all the kings of Elam, and all the kings of the Medes, 26 And all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth: and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them.

27 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel;

Ver. 19. Pharaoh king of Egypt.] See ch. xlv.

Ver. 20. All the mingled people.] The word is Ereb in the Hebrew, which occurs again in the twenty-fourth verse. Some understand it of the Arabians, the name of that people being written Ereb, as well as Arab (see 1 Kings x. 15), but Arabia being mentioned (ver. 24) as distinct from these people, that sense of the word doth not seem probable. So I rather take the word in the sense our translators understood it, for a mixture of several nations, who dwelt either upon the coasts of the Mediterranean, or of the Red sea.

All the kings of—Uz.] There are three persons called by the name of Uz in scripture, who gave this appellation to three several countries, as Bochart observes in his Phaleg. lib. ii. cap. 8. First, the son of Aram (Gen. x. 23) whom he supposes to have settled in Syria, near Damascus. Second, the son of Nahor (Gen. xxi. 21) who settled in Arabia Deserta; from whom Job descended. Third, the son of Esau (Gen. xxxvi. 28) from whom Idumea was so called, which is here meant; and mentioned again by our prophet, and its destruction foretold, Lam. iv. 21.

The kings mentioned here and in the following verses, were petty princes of several clans or colonies. The title of king is given in scripture to any ruler or governor (see l. 41, li. 28, Deut. xxxiii. 5, Judg. xvii. 6, Dan. vii. 17).

The kings of the land of the Philistines.] The Philistines had five lords over their several divisions (see Josh. xiii. 3, 1 Sam. vi. 6, and the foregoing note): each division having their particular prince or governor (see Numb. xxxi. 8); a custom still observed in the more rude and barbarous parts of the world.

Azzah.] A noted city of the Philistines, commonly rendered Gaza, according to the Greek pronunciation, which usually expresses the Hebrew letter ain by a gamma.

The remnant of Ashdod.] Ashdod, or Azotus, was first besieged and taken by Tartan, according to the prophecy of Isaiah, xx. 1, afterward by Psammitichus, according to Herodotus (lib. ii. cap. 157) who so far ruined it, and impaired its ancient greatness, that it is here called the remnant, or poor remains, of Ashdod (compare xlvii. 4).

Ver. 21, 22. Edom, and Moab.] See ch. xlvii–xlix.

Ver. 22. Which are beyond the sea.] Or, rather, “the region by the sea-side,” as the words are translated in the margin of our bibles. For so the word beneber signifies, as hath been observed in the notes upon Isa. ix. 1. The phrase denotes the people living upon the coast of the Mediterranean sea. The word island in the Hebrew signifies any region or country (see the note on Isa. xx. 6).

Ver. 23. Dedan, and Tema, and Buz.] These were Arabians, who descended from Abraham and his brother Nahor (see Gen. xxii. 21, xxv. 3, 15), whose destruction is foretold, Jer. xlix. 8, 28.

All that are in the utmost corners.] See ix. 26.

Ver. 24. The mingled people that dwell in the desert.]

A mixture of people in that part of Arabia, properly called the Desert, consisting of the Nabatheans, Amalekites, Midianites, and other nations, called in scripture by the general name of the “children of the east” (see Judg. vi. 3, viii. 12, vii. 10). So Diodor. Sic. lib. de Arabia Nabatea, αὐτὴ κείται μεταξύ Συρίας τῆς Αἰγύπτου πολλοὶ δὲ καὶ πανταχόθεν ἔθνη διέσπεται. “That part of Arabia is divided among several nations.” The learned Dr. Pocock is of opinion, that the word Arabia is derived from the Hebrew Arab, signifying mixture: because the country was inhabited by a medley of several nations (see his notes upon Specim. Histor. Arab. p. 33).

Ver. 25. Zimri.] A people of Arabia, descended from Zimram, Abraham’s son by Keturah (Gen. xxv. 2).

Elam, and—Medes.] See the note on xlix. 34. The Medes and Persians were commonly confederates, and partakers of the same good or ill fortune.

Ver. 26. The kings of the north.] The kings of Syria, and the neighbouring parts (see xlix. 27).

[All the kingdoms of the world.] This may only denote the kingdoms within the extent of the Babylonish empire; which called itself empress of the world. So Οικουμένη, in the New Testament, is put for the Roman empires. See Luke ii. 1.]

The king of Sheshach shall drink after them.] By Sheshach is meant Babylon, as appears by comparing li. 41. Some think Sac was the name of an idol worshipped there, from whence the Hebrew name Misael was changed by the Chaldeans into Meshak. This idol gave the name of Sacchæa to a public festival celebrated at Babylon, and mentioned by Athenæus, lib. xiv. cap. 10. St. Jerome mentions upon the place a sort of cypher commonly used, which consisted in putting the last letter of the alphabet first, and so writing on; by which inverted order of the Hebrew letters Sheshack is equivalent to Babel. The prophets sometimes express the places they prophesy against by dark circumlocutions: so Babylon is called “the desert of the sea,” Isa. xxi. 1; Jerusalem, “the valley of vision,” Isa. xxi. 1; the Roman empire is expressed by “that which withholdeth,” 2 Thess. ii. 6. And some commentators suppose the names mentioned Micah i. 10, &c. to be names of noted places in Judea, disguised and altered from their true sound. Mr. Basnage, in his History of the Jews, b. iii. ch. 25, thinks that Sheshack, the victorious king of Egypt (the same who is called Sesostris by Herodotus), was afterward worshipped as a God over all the eastern countries which he subdued; and that Babylon is here represented by the name of this idol that was worshipped there. But it is not at all probable, that the Chaldeans should call their city or country by the name of a foreign conqueror, whose yoke they had long ago shook off.

Ver. 27.] See ver. 16. The imperative is here put for the future (see the like figure, Isa. ii. 9, vi. 9, xliii. 16).

Ver. 28.] If they either do not believe thy threat-

Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you.

28 And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Ye shall certainly drink.

29 For, lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the LORD of hosts.

30 Therefore prophesy thou against them all these words, and say unto them, The LORD shall roar from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation; he shall mightily roar upon his habitation; he shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes, against all the inhabitants of the earth.

31 A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the LORD hath a controversy with the nations, he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the LORD.

32 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

33 And the slain of the LORD shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth: they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground.

34 ¶ Howl, ye shepherds, and cry; and wallow yourselves in the ashes, ye principal of the flock: for the days of your slaughter and of your dispersions are accomplished; and ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel.

35 And the shepherds shall have no way to flee, nor the principal of the flock to escape.

36 A voice of the cry of the shepherds, and an howling of the principal of the flock, shall be heard: for the LORD hath spoiled their pasture.

enings, or else disregard them, as thinking themselves sufficiently provided against any hostile invasion, you shall let them know, that the judgments denounced against them are God's irreversible decree.

Ver. 29. I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name.] Judgment often "begins at the house of God," for the correction of God's people, and to be a warning to others; but the heaviest strokes of it are reserved for the ungodly (compare xlix. 12, 1 Pet. iv. 17, 18, Luke xxiii. 31).

Utterly unpunished!] Concerning the import of the Hebrew phrase in this place, see the note on xxx. 11.

Ver. 30. The Lord shall roar from on high.] God speaks by his judgments; and those, when they are very terrible, may be fitly compared to the roaring of a lion, which strikes a consternation into those that hear it (compare Amos i. 2, iii. 8, Joel ii. 11, iii. 16).

He shall mightily roar upon his habitation;] He shall pronounce and execute a terrible judgment upon his temple, the place on earth which he hath chosen for his residence (see 1 Kings viii. 29). Upon which account, the same expressions are indifferently applied to heaven and the temple, as in this verse; and heaven itself is called God's temple or sanctuary (see xvii. 12, Ps. xi. 4, cl. 1). Some translate the latter part of this sentence to the same sense with the former: "from his habitation," the preposition na being sometimes the same with menal, from (see Ps. lxxxi. 5, Dan. ii. 1, vi. 18).

He shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes.] "He shall utter his voice before his army," as Joel expresses it, ii. 11, that is, like a leader or general, he shall encourage them to give the onset upon their enemies, which is usually performed with a shout, as great as that which the treaders of grapes use at the time of the vintage (see xlviii. 33, Isa. xvi. 9).

Ver. 31. A noise [of God's voice or judgment] shall come even to the ends of the earth.] God enters into judgment with men for their impieties, as being so many injuries to his honour, and for which he demands satisfaction by his judgments (compare Hos. iv. 1, Mic. vi. 2).

He will plead with all flesh;] He will plead with them "with fire and sword," as Isaiah expresses it, lxvi. 16.

Ver. 32. A great whirlwind] God's vengeance is often compared to a whirlwind (see the note on xxiii. 19). This the text says shall come from a far distant country, as Chaldea was esteemed (see v. 15).

Ver. 33. From one end of the earth even unto the other] See the note on ver. 26. Or the words may be rendered, "from one end of the land to the other end of the land," meaning Judea, the following words chiefly regarding that country.

They shall not be lamented.] See note on xvi. 6.

Neither gathered, nor buried;] See note on viii. 2.

Ver. 34. Howl, ye shepherds, and cry;] The imperative is put for the future (see ver. 27). Shepherds are here the same with princes or generals (see the note on ii. 8, vi. 3). In pursuance of the same metaphor, by the "principal of the flock," are meant the great and rich men of each nation, which is here prophesied against. Of them it is foretold, that they "shall wallow themselves in the ashes," as a token of their great mourning and lamenting over their misfortunes (see vi. 26).

The days of your slaughter and of your dispersions are accomplished;] The time is come when you shall be either slaughtered or dispersed, and carried captive into foreign countries.

Ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel.] Ye shall be utterly destroyed as a crystal glass, when it is dashed against the ground.

Ver. 36.] See notes on vi. 2, 3.

Ver. 37. The peaceable habitations are cut down] Or destroyed: in the Hebrew it is, neoth shalem, alluding to Salem, the same with Jerusalem.

Ver. 38. He hath forsaken his covert, as the lion;] As a lion forsakes his covert to go in quest of his prey, so God hath forsaken Jerusalem his habitation, from whence he used formerly to utter his voice like a lion, and exert his power for the defence of his people (see Isa. xxxi. 4); but now he hath made both city and country the object of his anger and judgments.

[Because of the fierceness of the oppressor.] The word jonah, rendered oppressor, signifies likewise a dove: so some understand the word as denoting the Assyrians or Chaldeans, who succeeded in that monarchy, who had that bird for a symbol of their nation given to them by Semiramis (compare xlv. 16; see Selden, De Diis Syris, lib. ii. cap. 3). Though it must be granted, the word is used where 37 And the peaceable habitations are cut down because of the fierce anger of the LORD.

38 He hath forsaken his covert, as the lion: it cannot be understood of the Chaldeans. See 1.

for their land is desolate because of the fierceness of the oppressor, and because of his fierce anger.

16, Zeph. iii. 1.]

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, came this word from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD; Stand in the court of the LORD's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the LORD's house, all the words that I command thee to speak unto them; diminish not a word:

3 If so be they will hearken, and turn every man from his evil way, that I may repent me of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings.

4 And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD; If ye will not hearken to me, to walk in my law, which I have set before you,

5 To hearken to the words of my servants the prophets, whom I sent unto you, both rising up early, and sending them, but ye have not hearkened;

6 Then will I make this house like Shiloh, and will make this city a curse to all the nations of the earth.

7 So the priests and the prophets and all the people heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of the LORD.

8 ¶ Now it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the LORD had commanded him to speak unto all the people, that the priests and the prophets and all the people took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die.

9 Why hast thou prophesied in the name of the LORD, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be desolate without an inhabitant? And all the people were gathered against Jeremiah in the house of the LORD.

10 ¶ When the princes of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king's house unto the house of the LORD, and sat down in the entry of the new gate of the LORD's house.

CHAP. XXVI.

ARGUMENT.—Jeremiah, denouncing destruction to the city and temple, unless the people repented, is apprehended and arraigned before the great council, or Sanhedrin: upon which he makes his apology, and, after the debating the case by the judges of that court, he is acquitted.

Ver. 1.] See note on ver. 3.

Ver. 2. The court of the Lord's house.] See note on xix. 4. The great court was the place where both men and women did ordinarily worship, when they brought no sacrifice, saith Dr. Lightfoot, in his Description of the Temple, ch. 18, for when they offered a sacrifice, they were to bring it into the inner court, otherwise called the "court of Israel," or of the priests, as the same learned author hath observed in his treatise concerning the Temple Service, ch. 8, sect. 1.

Which come to worship in the Lord's house.] Archbishop Usher, in his Annals ad A. M. 3395, conjectures, that this was at the feast of tabernacles, when all the males were obliged to appear before the Lord (Deut. xvi. 16).

Diminish not a word.] Either out of fear, favour, or flattery.

Ver. 3.] See note on xxxvi. 3.

Ver. 5. To hearken to—my servants] See xxv. 4. Ibid. and ver. 6. Rising up early.] See vii. 12, 13. Ver. 6.] See note on xxiv. 9.

Ver. 7. Prophets] The Septuagint rightly understand the word of the false prophets, such as was Hananiah, mentioned ch. xxvii. (compare xxix. 1, xxxvii. 19). So the word prophet is taken, Hos. ix. 8.

In the house of the Lord.] That is, in the court before the house of the Lord, ver. 2 (compare vii. 10). The outer courts being holy ground, and dedicated to God's worship, are called by the name of the temple. So the treasury, where Christ preached, is called the temple, John viii. 20, though it stood in the outer court of it. St. Paul is said to have entered "into the temple," that is, into the court before the temple, and the Jews to have laid hold on him there, Acts xxi. 26, 27.

Ver. 8. Thou shalt surely die.] As a disturber of the government, and a discourager of the people, from defending their country against the enemy (compare xxxviii. 4, and see the note on ver. 14 of this chapter).

Ver. 10. The princes of Judah] These are the same who are called the "princes of the land," ver. 17. The king's counsellors, or chief officers of state, who were likewise members of the great Sanhedrin. It is uncertain when the great council, called the Sanhedrin, was instituted. Selden, and most other writers from the Jewish authors, date the rise of it from Moses's appointing the seventy elders, Numb. xi. 16 (see Selden, lib. ii. De Synedriis, cap. 4. 16, Grotius in Matt. v. 22). After several intermissions of this authority, which was sometimes laid aside by the calamities or corruptions of the times, or else superseded by that sovereign power which was invested in the judges and kings, Jehosaphat, when he set about a general reformation, restored this ancient tribunal (see 2 Chron. xix. 8). This being the supreme court of the nation, the persons that sat in it are called here the "princes of Judah" (compare xxix. 2, xxxiv. 19): and the "elders of the land," ver. 17 of this chapter; and the "elders of the people," xix. 1, and in the evangelists (see Matt. xxvii. 1, Luke xxii. 66); and the "senate of the children of Israel," Acts v. 21 (compare 1 Macc. xii. 6, Judith xi. 14). The same are probably meant by the "seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel," mentioned Ezek. viii. 11. The word Sanhedrin is, without doubt, of Greek original, derived from συνεδριον, which often signifies this great council in the New Testament; and from thence is adopted into the Jewish language by the rabbinical writers, as many other Greek words are; but the council may still have been of much more ancient date, and expressed in the 11 Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes and to all the people, saying, This man is worthy to die; for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your ears.

12 ¶ Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes and to all the people, saying, The Lord sent me to prophesy against this house and against this city all the words that ye have heard.

13 Therefore now amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God; and the Lord will repent him of the evil that he hath pronounced against you.

14 As for me, behold, I am in your hand: do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you.

15 But know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof: for of a truth the Lord hath sent me unto you to speak all these words in your ears.

16 ¶ Then said the princes and all the people unto the priests and to the prophets; This man is not worthy to die: for he hath spoken to us in the name of the Lord our God.

17 Then rose up certain of the elders of the land, and spake to all the assembly of the people, saying,

18 Micah the Morasthite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Zion shall be plowed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of a forest.

19 Did Hezekiah king of Judah and all Judah put him at all to death? did he not fear the Lord, and besought the Lord, and the Lord repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them? Thus might we procure great evil against our souls.

20 And there was also a man that prophesied in the name of the Lord, Urijah the son of She-maiah of Kirjath-jearim, who prophesied against this city and against this land according to all the words of Jeremiah:

21 And when Jehoiakim the king, with all his mighty men, and all the princes, heard his words, the king sought to put him to death: but when Urijah heard it, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt;

22 And Jehoiakim the king sent men into Egypt, namely, Elnathan the son of Achbor, and certain men with him into Egypt.

23 And they fetched forth Urijah out of Egypt, and brought him unto Jehoiakim the king; who slew him with the sword, and cast his dead body into the graves of the common people.

Old Testament by rulers, princes, or elders, or senate of the people.

The new gate of the Lord's house.] The Chaldee calls it the "east gate of the sanctuary of the Lord." It was called the new gate, because it was repaired by Jotham (see 2 Kings xv. 35).

Ver. 14.] Compare xxxviii. 5. It was the proper business of the Sanhedrin to pass sentence upon prophets. And if they found them guilty of making false pretences to prophecy, to put them to death, the punishment which the law had provided in that case (Deut. xviii. 20). To this sense those words of Christ are to be understood, Luke xiii. 33, "It cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem," where the Sanhedrin sat, whose office it was first to try, and to condemn him.

Ver. 16. The princes] The Sanhedrin (see ver. 17); or at least some considerable men among them (compare ver. 21, xxxvi. 12, xxxvii. 15, xxxviii. 4).

And all the people] They who before were forward to condemn him (ver. 8), now, upon hearing his apology, were as ready to acquit him.

Ver. 17.] See ver. 10, 16. From ver. 17, to the end of the chapter, are rehearsed the debates that passed in the Sanhedrin upon this subject, and the arguments offered on both sides; as St. Luke gives an account of a like conference with relation to the apostles, Acts v. 33, 34.

Ver. 18. Micah the Morasthite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah, &c.] They allege this precedent, taken from the practice of a good king, in favour of Jeremiah.

Zion shall be plowed like a field.] The Jews suppose this prophecy to be fulfilled in the utter destruction of the second temple by Titus: when Tarentius, or, as some of the modern Jews call him, Turnus Rufus, razed the very foundations of the city and temple, and so fulfilled the prediction of our Saviour, "that there should not be left one stone upon another" (see Joseph. Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 7). When conquerors would signify their purpose, that a city should never be rebuilt, they used to break up the ground where it stood (see Judg. ix. 45). Horace alludes to this custom,

—"Imprimeretque muris

Hostile aratrum exercitus insolens."—Lib. i. Od. 16.

The mountain of the house] The temple stood upon mount Moriah (see 2 Chron. iv. 1, and xvii. 3, of this prophecy).

Ver. 19. Did Hezekiah—and all Judah put him at all to death?] Did the people come together in a body to accuse Micah, and demand sentence against him, as they had now done in the case of Jeremiah?

Did he not fear the Lord.] See 2 Chron. xxxii. 25.

Ver. 20.] This seems to be an instance alleged by others of the Sanhedrin, in favour of the priests and prophets, who were for condemning Jeremiah.

Ver. 22. Jehoiakim—sent men into Egypt.] There was a strict alliance between him and Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt (see 2 Kings xxiii. 24).

Ver. 23. Cast his dead body into the graves of the common people.] Thereby to put a mark of infamy upon him after his death, by burying him among the common people; for persons of quality and character had sepulchres belonging to their own families (see 2 Sam. xvii. 23, 1 Kings ii. 24).

Ver. 24. The hand of Ahikam—was with Jeremiah.] Both he and his father Shaphan were chief ministers under Josiah (2 Kings xxii. 12, 14). And the brothers of Ahikam, Gemariah, Elasah, and Jaazaniah, were considerable men in those days with Ahikam, and members of the great council (see Jer. xxix. 3, Ezek. viii. 11): so Ahikam made use of his interest with them, to deliver Jeremiah from the danger that threatened him.

That they should not give him into the hand of the people] The common people are inconstant in their opinions: they joined at first with Jeremiah's accusers (ver. 10); after hearing his apology, they took his part (ver. 16); but afterward, upon hearing the instance of Urijah alleged on the other side, they were incensed against him, and were zealous for putting him to death.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah came this word unto Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord to me; Make thee bonds and yokes, and put them upon thy neck,

3 And send them to the king of Edom, and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the Ammonites, and to the king of Tyrus, and to the king of Zidon, by the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah king of Judah;

4 And command them to say unto their masters, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say unto your masters;

5 I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power and by my outstretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me.

6 And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant; and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him.

7 And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land

CHAP. XXVII.

ARGUMENT.—This prophecy seems to have been uttered at the beginning of Zedekiah's reign (see the following note), and foreshows the conquest of Judea, and the neighbouring countries, by the king of Babylon, as was more largely set forth in the twenty-fifth chapter.

Ver. 1.] There is a difficulty in the date of this prophecy, because it plainly relates to the times of Zedekiah (see ver. 3, 12, 16). Some suppose that Jeremiah might have it in charge to declare this decree of God's in the reign of king Jehoiakim, which yet he was not to execute, till the time of Zedekiah. Others think that the prophet did presently execute some part of his orders, viz. that of putting on bonds and yokes upon his neck, which he wore, during the reigns of Jehoiakim and Jeconiah, till the fourth year of Zedekiah. There are other ways of solving this difficulty, which are less probable: but the answer which seems to me the least forced, is to say, that Jehoiakim is crept into the text, by the negligence of the scribes (who might have their eyes upon the beginning of the last chapter or section), instead of Zedekiah. This emendation is confirmed, by comparing this verse with the third, twelfth, and twentieth verses of this chapter, and with the beginning of the next. Such little verbal mistakes must be allowed by all impartial readers, to have sometimes happened in transcribing the holy scriptures, as well as in other books, and may easily be corrected, by comparing the suspected reading with other parts of the sacred text, which admit of no difficulty or uncertainty.

Ver. 2.] The prophets foreshowed things by actions as well as words. So Isaiah went "naked and barefoot" (Isa. xx. 3). Ezekiel prophesied in like manner by signs (Ezek. iv. 1, &c., xii. 3, xxiv. 17, 19).

Ver. 3. Send them to the king of Edom, &c.] These were some of those countries which God had given into the hand of the king of Babylon (see xxv. 21, 22, and ch. xlviii. xlix.).

By the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah] Their business was either to congratulate Zedekiah upon his accession to the throne; or else to engage him in a league against the king of Babylon.

Ver. 6. Now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar] God is the sole lord and proprietor of the world, and, by virtue of his absolute sovereignty and dominion, has a right to give the kingdoms of the earth to whomsoever he pleases (Dan. iv. 17), and he exercises this authority, by "changing times and seasons," by "removing kings, and setting up kings" (ibid. ii. 21). It is the business of human laws, to establish every government in that method wherein it is already settled: but as this is no bar to providence, which still has a right to alter governments, and, for great and wise reasons, often changes the scene of worldly affairs: so neither ought it to be an objection against submitting to any persons, whom God's providence hath placed over us, and put into their hands the full power of exercising all those acts of government in which sovereignty consists. But although the people are bound in such cases to obey, yet this does not lessen the guilt of usurpers themselves (see the note on xxv. 12).

King of Babylon, my servant;] See xxv. 9.

The beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him.] Compare Dan. ii. 38. An instance of that absolute sovereignty which God hath given to the king of Babylon, whereby men, and all their goods and fortunes, which chiefly consisted in cattle in those days, were entirely at his disposal.

Ver. 7. All nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son,] Belshazzar, the last king of the Babylonian monarchy (Dan. v. 30, 31), was grandchild to Nebuchadnezzar, who is called his father, Dan. v. 2, that is, his grandfather, by a usual Hebraism (see 1 Kings xv. 3, compared with ver. 10, and 2 Kings viii. 26, compared with ver. 18). For the two kings mentioned in Ptolemy's Canon, between Evil-merodach and Belshazzar (called there Nabonedus; viz. Neriglissarus and Laborosarchodus, had no right by lineal descent: for Neriglissarus was only husband to Evil-merodach's daughter, and Laborosarchodus was son to Neriglissarus. Compare Isa. xiv. 22, where God saith, "I will cut off from Babylon the name and remnant, son and nephew," or rather, "son and grandson;" that is, all that should lineally succeed king Nebuchadnezzar (compare Job xviii. 19).

Until the very time of his land come:] The Vulgar Latin translates the words thus, "Until the time of his land, and of himself come;" i. e. the time of their punishment or visitation, as it is elsewhere ex-come: and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him.

8 And it shall come to pass, that the nation and kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation will I punish, saith the LORD, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand.

9 Therefore hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your dreamers, nor to your enchanters, nor to your sorcerers, which speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon:

10 For they prophesy a lie unto you, to remove you far from your land; and that I should drive you out, and ye should perish.

11 But the nations that bring their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him, those will I let remain still in their own land, saith the LORD; and they shall till it, and dwell therein.

12 ¶ I spake also to Zedekiah king of Judah according to all these words, saying, Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, and live.

13 Why will ye die, thou and thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, as the LORD had spoken against the nation that will not serve the king of Babylon?

14 Therefore hearken not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

15 For I have not sent them, saith the LORD, yet they prophesy a lie in my name; that I might drive you out, and that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you.

16 Also I spake to the priests and to all this people, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Hearken not to the words of your prophets that prophesy unto you, saying, Behold, the vessels of the LORD's house shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

17 Hearken not unto them; serve the king of Babylon, and live: wherefore should this city be laid waste?

18 But if they be prophets, and if the word of the LORD be with them, let them now make intercession to the LORD of hosts, that the vessels which are left in the house of the LORD, and in the house of the king of Judah, and at Jerusalem, go not to Babylon.

19 ¶ For thus saith the LORD of hosts concerning the pillars, and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and concerning the residue of the vessels that remain in this city,

20 Which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took not, when he carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles of Judah and Jerusalem;

21 Yea, thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, concerning the vessels that remain in the house of the LORD, and in the house of the king of Judah and of Jerusalem;

22 They shall be carried to Babylon, and there shall they be until the day that I visit them, saith the LORD; then will I bring them up, and restore them to this place.

pressed; that is, at the end of seventy years (see xxv. 12). The word time is used in the same sense, Ezek. vii. 7, xxx. 3.

Kings shall serve themselves of him.] See xxvi. 14.

Ver. 8. That will not put their neck under the yoke] Will not submit to that servitude represented by the yokes mentioned ver. 2, 3.

That nation will I punish.] Those punishments are elsewhere denounced against Zedekiah, and all the Jews who joined with him in resisting the king of Babylon's forces (see xxiv. 9, xxxviii. 8, Ezek. xii. 13, 14, xvii. 20, 21).

Ver. 9.] The Jews, together with the idolatrous rites of their neighbours, learned their arts of divination, and foretelling future events, the use of which was expressly forbidden, Deut. xviii. 11, &c. and for which practices they are severely reprov'd, Isa. ii. 6. The word nomen, which is here translated enchanter, is rendered there soothsayer, and is supposed to be the same with a stargazer, or astrologer.

Ver. 10.] See xiv. 14, xxiii. 21, xxix. 8.

Ver. 11.] They that make no opposition against the king of Babylon's forces, but willingly submit themselves to him, shall continue in their own country and possessions, being only tributaries to the king of Babylon (see xxxviii. 17, xlii. 10, 11).

Ver. 12.] See the note on ver. 1. What the prophet saith here to Zedekiah, hath a particular weight in it, because he was made king of Judea by Nebuchadnezzar, and took an oath of being faithful to him, and never resisting his authority (see xxxviii. 1, 2 Kings xxiv. 17, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13, Ezek. xvii. 15, 18).

Ver. 16.] Several of the vessels belonging to the temple were carried away by the Chaldeans, in the reigns of Jehoiakim and Jeconiah (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 7, 10, Dan. 1, 2).

Ver. 19.] See lii. 17, 20, 21.

Ver. 20. When he carried away captive Jeconiah] See 2 Kings xxiv. 13, 14.

Ver. 22. They shall be carried to Babylon.] See 2 Kings xxv. 13, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 18.

There shall they be until the day that I visit them.] Till the prefixed time of seventy years be expired, when I shall visit the iniquity of the Chaldeans upon them, and restore the Jews from their captivity (see xxv. 11, 12, Ezra i. 7).

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 AND it came to pass the same year, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, and in the fifth month, that Hananiah the son of Azur the prophet, which was of Gideon, spake unto me in the house of the LORD, in the presence of the priests and of all the people, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.

3 Within two full years will I bring again into this place all the vessels of the LORD's house, that Neduchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon:

4 And I will bring again to this place Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with all the captives of Judah, that went into Babylon, saith the LORD: for I will break the yoke of the king of Babylon.

5 ¶ Then the prophet Jeremiah said unto the prophet Hananiah in the presence of the priests, and in the presence of all the people that stood in the house of the LORD,

6 Even the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen: the LORD do so: the LORD perform thy words which thou hast prophesied, to bring again the vessels of the LORD's house, and all that is carried away captive, from Babylon into this place,

7 Nevertheless hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people;

8 The prophets that have been before me and before thee of old prophesied both against many countries, and against great kingdoms, of war, and of evil, and of pestilence.

9 The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known, that the LORD hath truly sent him.

10 ¶ Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it.

11 And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all na-

CHAP. XXVIII.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains an account of Hananiah's false prophecy, and the judgment Jeremiah denounced against him upon it; which accordingly came to pass.

Ver. 1. In the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah] This plainly refers to the time specified at the beginning of the last chapter, and confirms the conjecture there made, that Jehoiakim is put there by a mistake of the copies for Zedekiah.

In the fourth year.] There is a difficulty in the expression, how the prophet should call that the beginning of Zedekiah's reign, which was really the fourth year of it. Therefore Scaliger understands it of the fourth year in course, reckoning from the last sabbatical year, which we know was to be every seventh year, from Lev. xxv. 3, 4 (see his Canones Isagog. p. 294, 295), and Kinchi speaks of it as a tradition received among the rabbins, that the temple was destroyed in a sabbatical year; which falling in with the eleventh year of Zedekiah, the first year of his reign must be the fourth in course from the last sabbatical (see the notes on xxxiv. 1, 17).

It is probable, that the observation of these sabbatical years had been intermitted for a great while before the captivity; but the king and people, warned by the prophet Jeremiah of the great neglect in this matter, had entered into a solemn covenant for the observing this part of the law (see xxxiv. 8, &c). But after all, there is no ground for this solution of Scaliger's; for it is plain, that if they had any regard for this computation of time, the ninth year of Zedekiah was the sabbatical year (see the forementioned place).

To avoid this difficulty, Noldius translates the words to this sense, "When it had been so [that is, when I had continued prophesying with a yoke about my neck from that year] in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, until the fourth year" (see his Concordance, p. 143, 164).

The LXX. read this part of the verse thus, "In the fourth year of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fifth month."

Ver. 2. I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.] That tyrannical power which Nebuchadnezzar exercises, of which the bonds and yokes which Jeremiah wore are the figures (see xxxvi. 1, 12).

Ver. 3. Within two full years] See note on ver. 16. Will I bring again into this place] See xxvii. 16, 20.

Ver. 4.] This was grateful news to the people, who looked upon Zedekiah only as Nebuchadnezzar's deputy, or viceroy (see the note on xxvi. 12).

Ver. 6. Even the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen:] Thereby expressing his hearty concern for the good of his nation, and wishing that God would repent him of the evil wherewith he had threatened them by his ministry.

Ver. 8, 9.] Jeremiah offers two several reasons in defence of his own prophecies, and against the truth of Hananiah's. First, that many other prophets agreed with himself in prophesying evil against the Jews, and other neighbouring countries, such as Hosea, Joel, Amos, Isaiah, Micah, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, &c. Whereas Hananiah, being single in his prophecy, nothing but the punctual answering the event could give him the authority of a true prophet. Secondly, that considering the general corruption of the people's manners, it was so much the more likely God should inflict severe punishments upon them, their iniquities being now ripe for judgment. To this the Jews add a third explication of the words, viz. that when a true prophet foretells peace, his prophecy must certainly be fulfilled, and the event would prove him to be a true prophet: whereas when a prophet foretold evil, which was Jeremiah's case, the event might be suspended by the repentance of the persons concerned (see Bishop Kidder's Dem. of the Messias, par. i. p. 377).

tions within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way.

12 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the prophet, after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah, saying, 13 Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Thou hast broken the yokes of wood; but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron.

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him: and I have given him the beasts of the field also.

15 ¶ Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah; The LORD hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie.

16 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the LORD.

17 So Hananiah the prophet died the same year in the seventh month.

Ver. 10. Hananiah took the yoke] See xxvii. 2.

Ver. 11. The neck of all nations] See ibid. ver. 7.

Ver. 13. Thou shalt make for them yokes of iron.] Such as no human strength can break: to signify that no human force shall be able to cope with the king of Babylon.

Ver. 14.] He renews in stronger terms the prophecy that he delivered before, xxvii. 6, 7.

Ver. 16. This year thou shalt die.] As Hananiah limited the accomplishment of his prophecy to the space of two years (ver. 3), to gain credit with the people, by such a punctual prediction; so Jeremiah confines the trial of his veracity to a much shorter time: and the event exactly answering, evidently showed the falsehood of the other's pretences.

Thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord.] Thou hast taught the people to disbelieve his word, and to act contrary to his decrees.

Ver. 17. In the seventh month.] Two months after he had uttered his false prophecy (see ver. 1).

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 Now these are the words of the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem unto the residue of the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon;

2 (After that Jeconiah the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs, the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the carpenters, and the smiths, were departed from Jerusalem;)

3 By the hand of Elasah the son of Shaphan, and Gemariah the son of Hilkiah, (whom Zedekiah king of Judah sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon) saying,

Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon;

5 Build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them;

6 Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished.

CHAP. XXIX.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains a message sent by Jeremiah, at the beginning of Zedekiah's reign, to the captives in Babylon, who were carried away with Jeconiah, exhorting them to live quietly there, and not hearken to the prophets among them, who deluded them with a vain hope of a speedy return home: against two of which prophecies he denounces God's judgments; as he did afterward against Shemaiah, who sent a threatening letter against Jeremiah, at the return of those very messengers who carried this letter to Babylon.

Ver. 1. Residue of the elders which were carried away captives.] These were those probably that survived of the Sanhedrin, that were carried away captive in the third year of Jehoiakim's reign (Dan. i. 3), or else who remained of Jeconiah's captivity (see 2 Kings xxvi. 14); many of whom might die by the hardships they suffered in their transportation. These being persons of authority, were more likely to influence the rest of the people, and induce them to hearken to the prophet's advice.

To the prophets.] We do not read of any true prophet that was carried away captive with Jeconiah, beside Ezekiel. So the Septuagint rightly understand the word here of false prophets, who flattered the people with hopes of a speedy restoration (see xxvi. 7, xxxviii. 19). So Hananiah is often called the prophet in the foregoing chapter; and compare ver. 8, of this chapter.

Ver. 2. After that Jeconiah—and the queen.] By the queen is meant Jeconiah's mother (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12, 14, 15, where an account is given of this captivity; and compare xxii. 26, xxvii. 10, xxviii. 4 of this prophecy).

And the eunuchs.] See xxxiv. 19.

The princes of Judah and Jerusalem.] If these be persons of a distinct rank, we may understand the princes of Judah to be the same with the elders, or Sanhedrin, ver. 1 (compare xxvi. 10, 16, 17, xxxiv. 19). By the "princes of Jerusalem" are meant the rulers of that city, called the lesser Sanhedrin, consisting of twenty-three.

Ver. 3. By the hand of Elasah] See xxvi. 24

Gemariah the son of Hilkiah.] A distinct person from Gemariah, mentioned xxxvi. 10.

Whom Zedekiah—sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar] To renew his promises of fidelity to him (see the note on xxvii. 3, 12).

Ver. 5, 6.] The prophet gives them this advice to check their hopes of a speedy return from Babylon,

7 And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the LORD for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace.

8 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed.

9 For they prophesy falsely unto you in my name: I have not sent them, saith the LORD.

10 ¶ For thus saith the LORD, That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place.

11 For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the LORD, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end.

12 Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you.

13 And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart.

14 And I will be found of you, saith the LORD: and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the LORD; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

15 ¶ Because ye have said, The LORD hath raised us up prophets in Babylon;

16 Know that thus saith the LORD of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwelleth in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity;

17 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Behold, I will send upon them the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

18 And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, and will deliver them to be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth, to be a curse, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them:

19 Because they have not hearkened to my words, saith the LORD, which I sent unto them by my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them; but ye would not hear, saith the LORD.

20 ¶ Hear ye therefore the word of the LORD, all ye of the captivity, whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon:

21 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, of Ahab the son of Kolaiah, and of Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, which prophesy a lie unto you in my name; Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall slay them before your eyes;

22 And of them shall be taken up a curse by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, the LORD make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire; with which the false prophets flattered them (see ver. 8, 28).

Ver. 7.] It is the duty of all private persons to submit to the government that protects them, and to pray for the prosperity of it (see Ezra vi. 10, 1. Tim. ii. 1, 2). And if they are persecutors or enemies to the truth, they are to leave it to God to execute upon them the judgments he has denounced against tyrants and oppressors: which threatenings the Jews expected God would execute upon Babylon in due time (see Ps. cxxxvii. 8, 9).

Ver. 8. Neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed,] Which you encourage your false prophets to pretend to.

Ver. 10. After seventy years be accomplished] These seventy years of the captivity are to be computed from the fourth year of Jehoiakim, which, in the scripture account, is the first year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign (see the notes on xxv. 1. 11).

I will visit you,] There were but few in comparison of those captives, that returned in person into their own country (see Ezra iii. 12). So this promise was chiefly fulfilled in their posterity; and it is common in scripture to speak of blessings bestowed upon the children, as if they had been actually made good to their progenitors (see xxxii. 5, and compare Exod. vi. 4, Mic. vii. 20).

Ver. 12.] A sure token of God's favour (see xxxiii. 3), as his rejecting men, and casting them off, is expressed by "his hiding his face from them," and refusing to hear their prayers (see xiv. 12, Lam. iii. 8, 44).

Ver. 13.] According to the promises made, Lev. xxvi. 39, 40, Deut. xxx. 1, Ps. xxxii. 6.

Ver. 14.] These words are directly spoken to those that were carried captives with Jeconiah, and were fulfilled in their restoration under Cyrus: yet the expressions being so large and general, may be supposed to relate to that general restoration of the whole nation which is often foretold in the prophecies of the Old Testament (see xxiii. 3, 8, xxxii. 37, and the notes there).

Ver. 15. This is meant of the false prophets, who foretold nothing but peace and prosperity (see ver. 8, 21).

Ver. 16—18.] See xxiv. 8, 10.

Ver. 19.] When at the same time they readily gave ear to the false prophets, that flattered them with promises of peace and safety (see xiv. 14, xxvii. 15, xxviii. 2).

Ver. 21. He shall slay them before your eyes;] As persons that disturbed the minds of the Jews, his subjects, and made them unwilling to submit to his government, by giving them hopes of a speedy deliverance from under it (see ver. 7, 8).

Ver. 22. Taken up a curse] See note on xxiv. 9. Whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire;] Casting into the fire was a punishment used in that country, as appears from the history of the three children, Dan. iii. There was likewise a way of roasting by a gentle fire, to make men die by a more lingering death, such as Antiochus practised upon the seven brethren (2 Macc. vii. 5); and was often used in the Dioclesian persecution, as Lactantius describes it, De Mortib. Persecutorum, cap. 21. The word here properly denotes this sort of punishment.

Ver. 23. And have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives,] Compare xxiii. 14. The Jewish 23 Because they have committed villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, and have spoken lying words in my name, which I have not commanded them; even I know, and am a witness, saith the LORD.

24 ¶ Thus shalt thou also speak to Shemaiah the Nehelamite, saying,

25 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, and to all the priests, saying,

26 The LORD hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada the priest, that ye should be officers in the house of the LORD, for every man that is mad, and maketh himself a prophet, that thou shouldest put him in prison, and in the stocks.

27 Now therefore why hast thou not reproved Jeremiah of Anathoth, which maketh himself a prophet to you?

28 For therefore he sent unto us in Babylon, saying, This captivity is long: build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

29 And Zephaniah the priest read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet.

30 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

31 Send to all them of the captivity, saying, Thus saith the LORD concerning Shemaiah the Nehelamite; Because that Shemaiah hath prophesied unto you, and I sent him not, and he caused you to trust in a lie:

32 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will punish Shemaiah the Nehelamite, and his seed: he shall not have a man to dwell among this people; neither shall he behold the good that I will do for my people, saith the LORD; because he hath taught rebellion against the LORD.

writers will needs have these to have been the two elders that attempted Susannah's chastity. For they have a traditional account of that story; though they do not look upon the history of it, that is still extant in the Greek, to be authentic.

Ver. 24. Shemaiah the Nehelamite.] Or, "the dreamer," as the word is rendered in the margin (see ver. 8). This was done after the messengers who delivered the former message to the captives at Babylon were returned home, who brought along with them the letter of Shemaiah mentioned in the following verse (see ver. 27).

Ver. 25. To Zephaniah.] See note on xxi. 1.

Ver. 26. The LORD hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada.] Shemaiah directs the words of his letter to Zephaniah, in the first place, as being next in order to the high-priest, and therefore called the second priest, lii. 24, and tells him, that God has appointed him to supply the place of the high-priest, being probably absent at that time, who was either Azariah, or Seraiah his son; but might be called by the name of Jehoiada, a person so remarkable for his zeal and courage, 2 Chron. xxxiii. xxxiv.

It is certain, some of the high-priests had several names, as is taken for granted frequently by Selden, Lightfoot, and other learned men, who have endeavoured to give us an account of their succession, out of the histories of the Kings and Chronicles (see Selden, De Success. in Pontificat. lib. i. cap. 5, Lightfoot's Temple Service, ch. 4).

For every man that is mad.] See xx. 1, 2, and the note there. The prophets and inspired persons, were often accused of madness, or being possessed with an evil spirit, by their enemies (see 2 Kings ix. 11, Hos. ix. 7, John x. 20, Acts xxvi. 24).

Ver. 28. For therefore [or, because, see Noldius, p. 725] he sent unto us in Babylon.] See ver. 5.

Ver. 32. He shall not have a man to dwell among this people.] None of his posterity shall remain to see my people restored to their own land again (compare ver. 11).

Because he hath taught rebellion.] See xxviii. 16.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD God of Israel, saying, Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book.

3 For, lo, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the LORD: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it.

CHAP. XXX.

ARGUMENT.—This and the following chapter contain general promises of God's mercy to the Jews, and assurances that he will never forget the covenant that he made with their fathers: those were partly fulfilled in their restoration under Cyrus, but more fully to be accomplished in the times of the Messias; and by the gracious terms of that new covenant, which he will establish with the spiritual Israel. At, or before, whose second appearing, we may expect a general conversion and restoration of God's ancient people: a blessing implied in those prophecies of the Old Testament, where the joint restoration of Israel and Judah is foretold; as has been observed upon Isa. xi. 11, 13.

Ver. 2. Write thee all the words.] The words that follow contain a promise of the Jews' restoration from their captivity (compare ver. 4). These God commands should be committed to writing for the use of posterity, to be a support to the Jews, and an encouragement for them to trust in God, and a proof of God's prescience and overruling providence, when the event shall be brought to pass (see the note on xxii. 30).

Ver. 3.] Israel and Judah having been carried away by two distinct captivities, into different parts of the world, several prophecies of the Old Testament not only foretell the restoration of each of them, but likewise their reunion after their restoration (see above, iii. 18, Ezek. xxxvii. 6, 21, 22, Hos. i. 11). Now, though it be granted that some of every tribe

4 ¶ And these are the words that the LORD spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah.

5 For thus saith the LORD; We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace.

6 Ask ye now, and see whether a man doth travail with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness?

7 Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it.

8 For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him:

9 But they shall serve the LORD their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them.

did return to their own country under Cyrus and Artaxerxes, and are therefore called by the name of all Israel (Ezra ii. 73, vi. 17, vii. 13, x. 5, Neh. xii. 47), yet the far greatest part of these were of Judah and Benjamin, together with the Levites (see Ezra i. 5). So that it is a great question what is become of the main body of the ten tribes, which Shalmaneser carried away into Assyria, and the neighbouring countries: from all which we may infer, that this and the like prophecies of the Old Testament refer to a farther restoration of the Jews that is yet to come.

Ver. 5. A voice of trembling.] Such a one as discovers great fear, and apprehensions of impending evils.

Ver. 6.] All men seem to carry that concern in their looks, and discover such an uneasiness in their behaviour, under their apprehension of approaching evils, as women do when the time of their travail draws near (compare vi. 24, Nah. ii. 10).

Ver. 7. Alas! for that day is great.] The word day often comprehends a succession of time, in which a whole series of events is transacted: so it here contains the whole time of the siege and taking of Jerusalem, the destruction of the city and temple, and the carrying away the people captive. This is described as a time of great tribulation, in which it was an earnest of the day of judgment, called the "great and terrible day of the Lord," Joel ii. 31.

Ver. 8. In that day—I will break his yoke] In the day when Jacob shall be saved out of all his troubles (ver. 7). The phrase that day, often denotes an extraordinary or remarkable time, for some signal events of providence (see the note on Isa. iv. 2).

Strangers shall no more serve themselves of him:] This promise has not yet received its accomplishment: since, after the return of the Jews under Cyrus, they were reduced into servitude by the Greeks and Romans; and at present there is no place in the world where they can be said to be their own masters.

Ver. 9. They shall serve the Lord] They shall steadily adhere to the true religion and service of God, expressed elsewhere thus, "I will be their God and they shall be my people" (see ver. 22).

David their king.] That is, the Messiah, who is often called by the name of David in the prophets, as the person in whom all the promises made to David were to be fulfilled (see Isa. lv. 3, 4, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, xxxvii. 24, Hos. iii. 5).

Whom I will raise up unto them.] An expression elsewhere used by the holy writers, when they speak of the coming of Christ (see Luke i. 69, Acts ii. 30, xiii. 23).

Ver. 10. Fear thou not, O my servant Jacob.] As

10 ¶ Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the LORD; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid.

11 For I am with thee, saith the LORD, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet I will not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.

12 For thus saith the Lord, Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous.

13 There is none to plead thy cause, that thou mayest be bound up: thou hast no healing medicines.

14 All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they

if God had utterly forsaken thee, or cast thee off (compare Isa. xli. 15, xlv. 2).

I will save—thy seed from the land of their captivity:] I will deliver thee from thy captivity, though thou shouldest be dispersed into the most distant countries: and this, though it be not accomplished in the Jews of the present age, shall be made good to their posterity, who "are beloved for their fathers' sake," as St. Paul speaks, Rom. xi. 28. National blessings are promised in common to parents and children, who, as they are called promiscuously by the same name, as Jacob here denotes his posterity: so they are looked upon in such cases as one aggregate body, or race of people (see the note on xxix. 10).

Jacob—shall be in rest, and be quiet.] These expressions denote external peace and freedom from the annoyance of enemies, as hath been observed upon xxiii. 6.

Ver. 11. Though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee.] Such as the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Egyptians, &c. yet I will not make a full end of thee (see the note on xxxi. 36).

But I will correct thee in measure [see x. 24], and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.] This latter part of the verse some render, "and not utterly destroy thee:" which sense, as it suits very well with this place, so it agrees much better with the scope of those two texts in the pentateuch, where we first meet with it, Exod. xxxiv. 7, and Numb. xiv. 18, than the common translation, which renders the words there, "and will by no means acquit" the guilty.

The sense which our translation gives here of this phrase, "I will not leave thee altogether unpunished," agrees very well with the context of some other places, where this phrase is used, as particularly xxv. 29, xlix. 12, of this prophecy, as also Nah. i. 3.

Ver. 12.] In all human appearance, and therefore it is none but God can heal thee, and recover thee out of this desperate condition.

Ver. 13.] There is none that, by the reformation of their lives, or their intercessions with God, endeavour to avert his displeasure (see Ezek. xxii. 30). Or else the words may be rendered, "There is none to judge thy cause" (see vi. 28, xxii. 6). None knows the true nature of thy malady, or what medicines are fit to be applied to thy case. Their calamitous state is compared to a distempered body (see ver. 17, viii. 22, Isa. i. 5, 6); and the false prophets, instead of applying proper remedies, "have healed the wounds of my people slightly;" as we read, vi. 14.

Ver. 14. All thy lovers have forgotten thee:] See xxii. 20, 22.

seek thee not; for I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased.

15 Why criest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable for the multitude of thine iniquity: because thy sins were increased, I have done these things unto thee.

16 Therefore all they that devour thee shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey.

17 For I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord; because they called thee an Outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after.

18 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be builded upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof.

19 And out of them shall proceed thanksgiv-

I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy,] Thy iniquities have provoked me to punish thee with that severity, as looks like cruelty, and as if I had declared myself an utter enemy to thee.

Ver. 15.] Yet why shouldest thou expostulate with me, as if I had dealt unjustly with thee? Whereas, if thy condition seems desperate, it is owing to thine own iniquities, which have still been increased with new aggravations of guilt.

Ver. 16. Therefore [or yet surely, see the note on xvi. 14] all they that devour thee shall be devoured;] See ver. 11, Isa. xxxiii. 1.

Ver. 17. I will restore health] See ver. 12, 13.

Ver. 18.] I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents,] The expression alludes to the ancient custom of dwelling in tents or tabernacles (compare Isa. xxxiii. 20, liv. 2). This was in some degree fulfilled under Zerubbabel.

The city shall be builded upon her own heap,] Or hill, as it is in the margin, as that part of Jerusalem particularly was, which was called mount Zion. And generally there was a castle or citadel, in the middle of the ancient cities, upon a rising ground, for the greater strength and security of the place (see Josh. xi. 13).

The palace shall remain [or be placed] after the manner thereof,] By the palace may be understood either the temple or the king's house; which the prophet foretells shall be built upon its former foundation and dimensions.

Ver. 19.] See xxxi. 4, 13, 18, xxxiii. 11, Zech. x. 8.

Ver. 20.] Their church and commonwealth shall be restored to their former state (compare xxxiii. 7, 11, Isa. i. 27).

Ver. 21. Their nobles shall be of themselves,] The Hebrew word addiro, is in the singular number, and literally signifies their mighty one, a title given to God himself, Ps. xciii. 4, and to a mighty angel, Isa. x. 34, probably the אֲדִיר, or Son of God. The sense is, they shall no more be governed by strangers, but shall have a ruler of their own nation; such as was Zerubbabel, a figure of Christ.

I will cause him to draw near,] He shall have a near attendance upon me: for I will make him a priest to me as well as a king, according to that prophecy concerning the Messiah, Ps. cx. 4, "Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec."

ing and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small.

20 Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them.

21 And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them; and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the Lord.

22 And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

23 Behold, the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a continuing whirlwind: it shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked.

24 The fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have done it, and until he have performed the intents of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it.

This phrase of coming, or drawing near, to God is particularly applied to the office of the priests and Levites, Numb. xvi. 5.

Who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me?] For who is there but the Messiah, that is so entirely devoted to my service (see Ps. xl. 8, John iv. 34, xiv. 31). The words mihu ze, "who is this," have an emphasis in the original, that cannot be expressed in another language, and are spoken by way of admiration: the very same phrase is used Ps. xxiv. 16, where the altering the phrase from that which was used in the eighth verse is designed to denote some extraordinary person, and is generally expounded of the Messiah.

Ver. 22.] You shall continually adhere to my religion and worship, and I will take you into my favour and protection (see Ezek. xi. 24, xxxvi. 26, xxxvii. 27, Hos. ii. 23, Zech. xiii. 9, Rev. xxi. 3).

Ver. 23, 24.] We find the same judgment denounced xxiii. 19, 20. And with respect to the context here, and the latter days, to which it does particularly relate, it may best be explained with regard to the general conversion of the Jews, when God will make a remarkable discrimination among them; will bring back those that repent and believe into their own country, and punish the refractory with utter destruction, as he did the rebels in the wilderness (see Ezek. xi. 17, 21, xx. 34, 38, and the notes upon Isa. iv. 11, lxx. 12).

Ver. 24. Fierce anger of the Lord] See xxiii. 20.

In the latter days ye shall consider [or understand] it,] The latter days, or last days, as the phrase is sometimes translated, may signify, in general, the time to come; and so perhaps it is to be understood, Gen. xlix. 1, Deut. iv. 30, xxxi. 29, but it commonly signifies the times under the gospel, as being the last dispensation, and such as should continue to the end of the world (see the note on Isa. ii. 2). And taking the phrase in this sense, the words import that when all these evils are come upon you, which God has threatened against your disobedience, and particularly for that heinous sin of yours in rejecting the Messiah: and you have found the denunciations of the prophets verified in the several captivities you have undergone; then you will understand the import of this and several other prophecies, and the event will perfectly instruct you in their meaning (see xxiii. 20).

4 ¶ And these are the words that the Lord spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah.

5 For thus saith the Lord; We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace.

6 Ask ye now, and see whether a man doth travail with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness?

So that it is a great question what is become of the main body of the ten tribes, which Shalmaneser carried away into Assyria, and the neighbouring countries: from all which we may infer, that this and the like prophecies of the Old Testament refer to a farther restoration of the Jews that is yet to come.

Whom I will raise up unto them.] An expression elsewhere used by the holy writers, when they speak of the coming of Christ (see Luke i. 69, Acts ii. 30, xiii. 23).

Ver. 10. Fear thou not, O my servant Jacob,] As

10 ¶ Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid.

11 For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet I will not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.

12 For thus saith the Lord, Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous.

13 There is none to plead thy cause, that thou mayest be bound up: thou hast no healing medicines.

14 All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they

if God had utterly forsaken thee, or cast thee off (compare Isa. xli. 15, xlv. 2).

I will save—thy seed from the land of their captivity.] I will deliver thee from thy captivity, though thou shouldest be dispersed into the most distant countries: and this, though it be not accomplished in the Jews of the present age, shall be made good to their posterity, who "are beloved for their fathers' sake," as St. Paul speaks, Rom. xi. 28. National blessings are promised in common to parents and children, who, as they are called promiscuously by the same name, as Jacob here denotes his posterity: so they are looked upon in such cases as one aggregate body, or race of people (see the note on xxix. 10).

Jacob—shall be in rest, and be quiet.] These expressions denote external peace and freedom from the annoyance of enemies, as hath been observed upon xxiii. 6.

Ver. 11. Though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee.] Such as the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Egyptians, &c. yet I will not make a full end of thee (see the note on xxxi. 36).

But I will correct thee in measure [see x. 24], and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.] This latter part of the verse some render, "and not utterly destroy thee:" which sense, as it suits very well with this place, so it agrees much better with the scope of those two texts in the pentateuch, where we first meet with it, Exod. xxxiv. 7, and Numb. xiv. 18, than the common translation, which renders the words there, "and will by no means acquit" the guilty.

The sense which our translation gives here of this phrase, "I will not leave thee altogether unpunished," agrees very well with the context of some other places, where this phrase is used, as particularly xxv. 29, xlix. 12, of this prophecy, as also Nah. i. 3.

Ver. 12.] In all human appearance, and therefore it is none but God can heal thee, and recover thee out of this desperate condition.

Ver. 13.] There is none that, by the reformation of their lives, or their intercessions with God, endeavour to avert his displeasure (see Ezek. xxii. 30). Or else the words may be rendered, "There is none to judge thy cause" (see vi. 25, xxii. 6). None knows the true nature of thy malady, or what medicines are fit to be applied to thy case. Their calamitous state is compared to a distempered body (see ver. 17, viii. 22, Isa. i. 5, 6); and the false prophets, instead of applying proper remedies, "have healed the wounds of my people slightly;" as we read, vi. 14.

Ver. 14. All thy lovers have forgotten thee.] See xxii. 20, 22.

seek thee not; for I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased.

15 Why criest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable for the multitude of thine iniquity: because thy sins were increased, I have done these things unto thee.

16 Therefore all they that devour thee shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey.

17 For I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord; because they called thee an Outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after.

18 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be builded upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof.

19 And out of them shall proceed thankgiving

I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy.] Thy iniquities have provoked me to punish thee with that severity, as looks like cruelty, and as if I had declared myself an utter enemy to thee.

Ver. 15.] Yet why shouldest thou expostulate with me, as if I had dealt unjustly with thee? Whereas, if thy condition seems desperate, it is owing to thine own iniquities, which have still been increased with new aggravations of guilt.

Ver. 16. Therefore [or yet surely], see the note on xvi. 14] all they that devour thee shall be devoured;] See ver. 11, Isa. xxxiii. 1.

Ver. 17. I will restore health] See ver. 12, 13.

Ver. 18.] I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents,] The expression alludes to the ancient custom of dwelling in tents or tabernacles (compare Isa. xxxiii. 20, liv. 2). This was in some degree fulfilled under Zerubbabel.

The city shall be builded upon her own heap,] Or hill, as it is in the margin, as that part of Jerusalem particularly was, which was called mount Zion. And generally there was a castle or citadel, in the middle of the ancient cities, upon a rising ground, for the greater strength and security of the place (see Josh. xi. 13).

The palace shall remain [or be placed] after the manner thereof.] By the palace may be understood either the temple or the king's house; which the prophet foretells shall be built upon its former foundation and dimensions.

Ver. 19.] See xxxi. 4, 13, 18, xxxiii. 11, Zech. x. 8.

Ver. 20.] Their church and commonwealth shall be restored to their former state (compare xxxiii. 7, 11, Isa. i. 27).

Ver. 21. Their nobles shall be of themselves,] The Hebrew word addiro, is in the singular number, and literally signifies their mighty one, a title given to God himself, Ps. xciii. 4, and to a mighty angel, Isa. x. 34, probably the Angel, or Son of God. The sense is, they shall no more be governed by strangers, but shall have a ruler of their own nation; such as was Zerubbabel, a figure of Christ.

I will cause him to draw near,] He shall have a near attendance upon me: for I will make him a priest to me as well as a king, according to that prophecy concerning the Messiah, Ps. cx. 4, "Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec."

ing and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small.

20 Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them.

21 And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them; and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the Lord.

22 And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

23 Behold, the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a continuing whirlwind: it shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked.

24 The fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have done it, and until he have performed the intents of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it.

This phrase of coming, or drawing near, to God is particularly applied to the office of the priests and Levites, Numb. xvi. 5.

Who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me?] For who is there but the Messiah, that is so entirely devoted to my service (see Ps. xl. 8, John iv. 34, xiv. 31). The words mihu ze, "who is this," have an emphasis in the original, that cannot be expressed in another language, and are spoken by way of admiration: the very same phrase is used Ps. xxiv. 10, where the altering the phrase from that which was used in the eighth verse is designed to denote some extraordinary person, and is generally expounded of the Messias.

Ver. 22.] You shall continually adhere to my religion and worship, and I will take you into my favour and protection (see Ezek. xi. 24, xxxvi. 26, xxxvii. 27, Hos. ii. 23, Zech. xiii. 9, Rev. xxi. 3).

Ver. 23, 24.] We find the same judgment denounced xxiii. 19, 20. And with respect to the context here, and the latter days, to which it does particularly relate, it may best be explained with regard to the general conversion of the Jews, when God will make a remarkable discrimination among them; will bring back those that repent and believe into their own country, and punish the refractory with utter destruction, as he did the rebels in the wilderness (see Ezek. xi. 17, 21, xx. 34, 38, and the notes upon Isa. iv. 11, lxx. 12).

Ver. 24. Fierce anger of the Lord] See xxxiii. 20.

In the latter days ye shall consider [or understand] it.] The latter days, or last days, as the phrase is sometimes translated, may signify, in general, the time to come; and so perhaps it is to be understood, Gen. xlix. 1, Deut. iv. 30, xxxi. 29, but it commonly signifies the times under the gospel, as being the last dispensation, and such as should continue to the end of the world (see the note on Isa. ii. 2). And taking the phrase in this sense, the words import that when all these evils are come upon you, which God has threatened against your disobedience, and particularly for that heinous sin of yours in rejecting the Messias: and you have found the denunciations of the prophets verified in the several captivities you have undergone; then you will understand the import of this and several other prophecies, and the event will perfectly instruct you in their meaning (see xxxiii. 20).

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 AT the same time, saith the LORD, I will be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people.

2 Thus saith the LORD, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest.

3 The LORD hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.

CHAP. XXXI.

ARGUMENT.—See the argument of the foregoing chapter, the same subject being continued in this: together with a more explicit declaration of the nature and terms of that new covenant which God will reveal by Christ.

Ver. 1. At the same time,] In the “latter days,” mentioned xxx. 24.

Will I be the God of all the families] See xxx. 22.

Ver. 2.] I saved the Israelites from that terrible destruction designed against them by their persecutors, Pharaoh, the Amalekites, and Amorites: I led them in the wilderness, and took care for them that they wanted for nothing, in a place destitute of all conveniences of life: I went before them in a pillar of cloud, to mark out a place for them where they should pitch their tents (compare Numb. x. 33, Deut. i. 33): I conducted them to the land that I had provided for them (see Deut. xii. 9, Ps. xcv. 11): and after such evidences of my kindness to them, how can they doubt of the continuance of my favours?

Ver. 3. The Lord hath appeared of old unto me,] These words are spoken in the person of the Jewish nation, the people spoken of in the foregoing verse.

I have loved thee with an everlasting love:] The mercies I promised you when I made the covenant with your fathers shall never fail; “for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance” (Rom. xi. 29).

With loving-kindness have I drawn thee.] I have taken all opportunities of bringing thee to myself by preventing acts of grace and mercy. The word draw is used in scripture of God’s preventing grace (see Cant. i. 4, Hos. xi. 4, John vi. 44).

Ver. 4. I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel:] Thy inhabitants shall be again restored to thee, who shall rebuild their cities and habitations, that lay desolate during the time of their captivity (see xxxiii. 7). The Jews have the title of “virgin of Israel” bestowed upon them, to imply that, by their repentance and reformation, they have washed away the stains of their former idolatries, so often compared to whoredom in the scriptures (see the note on xviii. 13).

The “virgin of Israel” is of the same extent with “all the families of Israel” (ver. 1). For the blessings here promised shall receive their utmost completion, when Israel and Judah shall again be united into one people (see ver. 31, and the notes upon xxx. 3).

Thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets.] All the signs both of religious and civil joy shall be restored to thee (see Exod. xv. 20, Ps. cxlix. 3, Judg. xi. 34).

4 Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel: thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

5 Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shall eat them as common things.

6 For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the LORD our God.

7 For thus saith the LORD; Sing with glad-

Ver. 5. Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria:] Building and planting are commonly joined together (see Isa. lxxv. 21, Amos ix. 14). Samaria, being the metropolis of the ten tribes, seems to be put for the kingdom of Israel, as it was distinct from that of Judah, expressed often by Samaria in the books of Kings. According to which interpretation, the “mountains of Samaria” are equivalent to the “mountains of Israel” (Ezek. xxxvi. 8, xxxvii. 22). Taking Samaria in this sense, it implies, that the deliverance here spoken of shall extend to Israel as well as Judah (see ver. 6, and the argument on ch. xxx.).

The planters shall plant, and shall eat them as common things.] After they have planted them, they shall eat the fruits thereof, according to the promise contained in the parallel texts, Isa. lxxv. 21, Amos ix. 14. Whereas God had threatened them as a curse, that when they had “planted their vines, another should eat the fruit,” Deut. xxviii. 30. The verb hillelu, translated “eat them as common things,” alludes to that law that forbade the fruit of any young trees to be eaten, till the fifth year of their bearing, when the fruit was lawful, or common, for every one to eat (see the margin of our bibles upon Deut. xx. 6, xxviii. 30).

Ver. 6.] They that were to publish any proclamation used to get to the top of some high hill, from whence their voice might be heard a great way off (see Judg. ix. 7, 2 Chron. xiii. 4, Isa. xl. 9). Watchmen gave the same kind of warning if they saw an enemy approach, which is now done more commonly by beacons. The Jews took much the same method in proclaiming their festivals (see Dr. Lightfoot’s Temple Service, ch. 11): in allusion to which customs the prophet here saith, that the time shall come when there shall be a general summons throughout all the ten tribes (Ephraim being often put for the whole kingdom of Israel; see the note on Isa. vii. 2) to repair to the temple at Jerusalem, and join themselves to the true church, from which they had made so long a separation.

When the prophets foretell the general conversion of the Jews, they often speak of Judah and Israel as no longer in a state of separation, but united together under one king, the Messias (see above, iii. 18, xxx. 3, Isa. xi. 13, Ezek. xxxvi. 6, 22, Hos. ii. 11). The expressions arise ye, &c. allude to the Jews going in companies to Jerusalem, at the three solemn feasts of the year (see Isa. ii. 3, and the notes there). The prophets being styled watchmen (see vi. 17), the word may be applied to those evangelical preachers, who should be instruments in converting the Jews, and bringing them into the church. And the word notzerim may allude, as Grotius observes, to the title of Nazarene, given to Christ and his disciples at the first preaching of Christianity (see Matt. ii. 23, ness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O LORD, save thy people, the remnant of Israel.

8 Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither.

9 They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born.

10 ¶ Hear the word of the LORD, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.

11 For the LORD hath redeemed Jacob, and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he.

12 Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the LORD, for wheat, and for wine, Acts xxiv. 5). We find that names often carry some mystical allusion in them, by several instances of scripture, and particularly Jacob's blessings to his sons do, for the most part, allude to their proper names (Gen. xlix).

Ver. 7. Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations:] When you see some dawning of these blessed times, express your joy for the restoration of Jacob's posterity in the most public manner that can be, in the sight of the chiefest of those potent nations from whence you are to be delivered (see ver. 11). The phrase which we translate "among the chief of the nations," may otherwise be rendered, "in the sight of the nations."

Publish ye, praise ye.] Publish those good tidings with the highest expressions of praise and glory to God: and likewise pray that God, who hath begun so glorious a work, would go on to complete and perfect it (compare Ps. cxviii. 25).

Ver. 8. I will bring them from the north country.] This promise relates to the ten tribes, as well as to the other two who were carried captive to Babylon: for Assyria and Media, whither they were removed, lay north of Judea, as well as Babylon (compare iii. 12, 18). And the following words speak of a general restoration of the Jews from their several dispersions (see xxiii. 8).

With them the blind and the lame, &c.] God will conduct them with all imaginable care and tenderness, and furnish the most feeble and indigent with suitable accommodations. The words allude to God's conducting his people of all ages and conditions through the wilderness, compared to the care with which a parent or a nurse carries a tender child, Deut. i. 31 (compare Isa. xl. 11, xli. 18, xlix. 10).

Ver. 9. They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them:] The Septuagint render the words thus, "They went forth with weeping, but with comfort will I bring them back:" which sense exactly agrees with the words of the hundred and twenty-sixth Psalm, which was composed upon the return from captivity (ver. 5, 6), "He that sows in tears, shall reap in joy; he that goeth forth weeping, shall come again with rejoicing." But I conceive the sense which our translators gave of the words more agreeable to the original; and it is withal confirmed, by comparing this verse with iii. 21, where we read, "A voice was heard, weeping and supplications of the children of Israel:" the prophet speaking upon the same subject, and in the same words which are here made use of. Compare likewise l. 4, where it is said, that "the children of Israel and Judah shall come together, going and weeping—and seek the Lord their God:" implying that the Jews, at the time of their general restoration, shall have their joy tempered with tears of repentance for their former miscarriages. The same thing is more fully expressed Zech. xiii. 10, where God promises to "pour upon them the spirit of grace and supplications:" the Hebrew word is tahanunim, the same which is used in the text.

I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters] So that they shall not be afflicted with thirst, or want of any accommodation in their journey. The words allude to God's miraculously supplying the Israelites with water in the wilderness (compare Isa. xxxv. 6, 7, xli. 17, 18, xlix. 10).

In a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble:] This phrase is an allusion to God's leading the Israelites through the Red sea, and afterward in the wilderness (compare Isa. xxxv. 8, xlii. 16, xlix. 11, lxiii. 13).

For I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born.] Ephraim is often equivalent to Israel; especially when Israel denotes the ten tribes, as distinct from Judah (see ver. 6). God calls himself Israel's father here (see iii. 4, 19, Deut. xxxii. 6, 1 Chron. xxix. 10, Isa. lxiii. 16), and Ephraim the first-born among the tribes of Israel: because the birth-right which Reuben had forfeited, was conferred upon the two sons of Joseph, of whom Ephraim had the precedence (see Gen. xlviii. 20, 1 Chron. v. 1). This implies that God will restore the nation of the Jews to their primitive state, as it stood before their separation into two kingdoms (see the note upon ver. 6).

Ver. 10. Declare it in the isles afar off.] The Jews call all countries islands, which they go to by sea: so the isles are the same with the gentiles, or heathen nations (see Isa. xli. 1, xlv. 5, 10, 12, xlix. 1, li. 5, lx. 9, lxvi. 19).

He that scattered Israel will gather him.] He that hath dispersed the Jewish nation over all parts of the earth, will again gather them into one body or people (Isa. xi. 12, xxvii. 12, liv. 7).

Keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.] As God's care over his people is often resembled to that of the shepherd (see Ps. xxiii. 1, lxxx. 1), so the office of the Messias is described under the same character (Isa. xl. 11), and particularly with respect to the Jews after their conversion and restoration (see Ezek. xxxiv. 23, xxxvii. 24).

Ver. 11. Ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he.] From those who had by force and power conquered him, and detained him captive (see Isa. xlix. 24, 25). An emblem of that redemption which Christ will obtain for us by vanquishing the devil, called the strong one in scripture (see Matt. xii. 29, Luke xi. 21, 22).

Ver. 12. They shall come and sing in the height of Zion.] Or, "They shall come singing to the height of Zion" (see the note on ver. 6). By the "height of Zion," is meant the temple built upon a hill, adjoining to mount Zion (compare Ezek. xvii. 23, xx. 40); and it is here taken metaphorically, as it is frequently in the prophetic writings, for the church, which is compared by Christ to a "city set on a hill" (Matt. v. 14), as being remarkable for the excellency of its laws and institutions (see the note on Isa. ii. 2).

and for oil, and for the young of the flock and of the herd: and their soul shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all.

13 Then shall the virgin rejoice in the dance, both young men and old together: for I will turn their mourning into joy, and will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow.

14 And I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness, and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the LORD.

15 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not.

For wheat, and for wine,] Spiritual blessings are elsewhere described under the emblems of fruitfulness and plenty (see the note on Isa. iv. 2).

Their soul shall be as a watered garden;] God's grace and blessing are often compared to waters that refresh and enrich dry ground (see Isa. xlv. 3, lviii. 11).

They shall not sorrow any more] Compare Isa. xxxv. 11, lxxv. 19, Rev. xxi. 4. Taking this promise in its full extent, it implies a happiness too great to be expected, while the present state of things continues.

Ver. 13. There shall be signs of a universal joy which all ages shall unanimously join in (see ver. 4).

Ver. 14.] The former expression alludes to that plentiful provision that was made for the priests under the law, who were maintained by the sacrifices and offerings brought to the temple (see 1 Sam. ii. 28). And the whole verse implies, that both the priests and people shall rejoice in the abundance of God's blessings (compare Ps. cxxxii. 16).

Ver. 15. A voice was heard in Ramah,] The prophet describes the lamentations in and about Jerusalem, at the time of the several captivities mentioned lii. 15, 28—30, under the resemblance of a mother lamenting over her dead children. The mournful scene is laid in Ramah, in the land of Benjamin, not far from Jerusalem (see Judg. xix. 10, 13), part of that city itself being in the tribe of Benjamin (see vi. 1.) And Rachel, the mother of Benjamin, is introduced as chief mourner upon so sad an occasion.

This figurative representation was, in a great measure, literally true, when Herod slew the infants at Beth-lehem, not far from Ramah (see the forementioned place in Judges); and therefore St. Matthew tells us, that this prophecy was fulfilled in that event, ii. 17, 18. Several other instances may be alleged, where the mystical sense of the prophecies, or that which relates to the times of the gospel, is the interpretation that most exactly answers the natural and genuine import of the words. This particularly appears in those prophecies concerning Christ's sufferings contained in the twenty-second and sixty-ninth Psalms. If David's afflictions were the occasion of penning those Psalms, yet it is plain that the literal sense of several passages of those Psalms was never fulfilled in him.

Because they were not.] An expression denoting those who were dead, as being cut off from the land of the living, and excluded from any farther concern in the things of this world (see Gen. xlii. 13, Lam. v. 7.) This was literally true, according to St. Matthew's interpretation of the text, but only metaphor-

16 Thus saith the LORD; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the LORD; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy.

17 And there is hope in thine end, saith the LORD, that thy children shall come again to thine own border.

18 ¶ I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself thus; 'Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke: turn thou me, and I shall be turned; for thou art the LORD my God.

19 Surely after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth.

ically so in the sense that was first intended; being spoken of those who were removed into a foreign country, and for ever deprived of the conversation of their relations, as if they had been naturally dead.

Ver. 16. For thy work shall be rewarded,] God will have a regard for the tender affection which the mothers bear to their children. Their prayers and tears shall be heard and accepted by him.

Ver. 17. There is hope in thine end,] Or, "to thy posterity," as the word in the original may be rendered; though these of the present age do not see a return from captivity, yet their posterity shall enjoy that blessing. This was particularly fulfilled with respect to the tribe of Benjamin in their return under Cyrus (see Ezra i. 5).

Ver. 18. I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself thus;] Or, "When he was led into captivity, saying thus;" so the word mithnoded signifies, xlviii. 27, and in this sense the Vulgar Latin understands it here.

I was chastised as a bullock, unaccustomed to the yoke:] Or, I was instructed by thy discipline; whereas, before, I was as an untamed bullock, or heifer, that is not to be managed but by stripes and corrections.

Turn thou me, and I shall be turned;] Do thou turn my heart by thy preventing grace, and then I shall be effectually reformed (compare Lam. v. 21). Sometimes the scripture ascribes the whole work of man's conversion to God, because his grace is the first and principal cause of it. But yet to make it effectual, man's concurrence is necessary, as appears particularly from those words, l. 9, of this prophecy; where God saith, "We have healed Babylon, but she is not healed;" that is, God did what was requisite on his part for her conversion, but she refused to comply with his call. To the same purpose he speaks to Jerusalem, Ezek. xxiv. 13, "I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged."

Ver. 19. Surely after that I was turned, I repented,] As soon as God's grace touched my heart, and gave me a due sense of my duty, and the many deviations from it I had been guilty of, I straightway became a true penitent, and expressed my repentance, by all the outward and inward signs of an unfeigned sorrow.

Because I did bear the reproach of my youth.] The burden of my former sins lay heavy upon my mind, and I became sensible, that all the calamities and reproaches I have undergone, were the due deserts of my offences. The prophet, representing a whole nation as a single person, speaks of their former sins, as if they were the extravagances of their younger years.

20 Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still: therefore my bowels are troubled for him; I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the LORD.

21 Set thee up way-marks, make thee high heaps: set thine heart toward the highway, even the way which thou wentest: turn again, O virgin of Israel, turn again to these thy cities.

22 ¶ How long wilt thou go about, O thou backsliding daughter? for the LORD hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man.

Ver. 20. Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? The interrogative particle he, is in sense the same with kabo: and so it is plainly taken, 1 Sam. iii. 27, which place should be translated, "Did not I plainly appear to thy father's house," &c. and 2 Sam. xxiii. 17, where our English translators render it to the same sense, "Is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives?" Taking that particle in this sense, the text here should be rendered, "Is not Ephraim my dear son? is he not a pleasant child?" that is, Is he not one that I have set my affections upon, as a parent does upon a child in whom he delights?

For since I spake against him [or of him, see xlviii. 27], I do earnestly remember him still:] Ever since I have so severely reprov'd and chastised him, I have still retained a fatherly kindness and affection for him.

Therefore my bowels are troubled for him:] Or "yearen upon him;" I am moved with pity and compassion towards him, just as parents sympathize with the calamities of their children (compare Isa. lxiii. 15, Hos. xi. 8): and will in due time pardon and receive him into favour (compare Isa. lviii. 18).

Ver. 21. Set thee up way-marks, make thee high heaps: He bids them think of preparing for their return to their own country, and in order to that end, to set up way-marks to direct travellers in the right road (see Isa. lvii. 14, lxii. 10). The word tamrurim, high heaps, is used here in a different sense from that in which it is taken ver. 15, and signifies such pillars or obelisks as used to be set up on the road-side, for the direction of travellers: in which sense Schindler understands it, Hos. xii. 14, and renders that place thus, "Israel provoked him to anger by his heaps;" that is, his altars, which stood as "heaps in the field," as it is said there, ver. 11.

O virgin of Israel,] See note on ver. 14.

Ver. 22. How long wilt thou go about.] Or go out of the right way, or follow thine own imagination (compare ii. 18, 19, 26).

O thou backsliding daughter?] Compare vii. 24. Thou that wast formerly backward in obeying God's laws, and now seemest to linger and loiter when God calls thee to return homeward out of a strange country. This expression is often used of Israel, or the ten tribes (see iii. 6, 8, 11, 12); and of Judah and Israel together (ibid. ver. 14, 22), both being comprehended under the title of "The virgin of Israel," in the foregoing verse. In which sense it may most properly be understood here.

The Lord hath created [or doth create] a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man.] As it is a new thing, and unheard of, that a woman should court a man, so God will bring as strange a thing to pass, that the Jewish nation shall return to God their husband (see iii. 14). So most of the modern Jews, and some Christian expositors, understand the words;

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; As yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity; The LORD bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness.

24 And there shall dwell in Judah itself, and in all the cities thereof together, husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks.

25 For I have satiated the weary soul, and I have replenished every sorrowful soul.

26 Upon this I awaked, and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me.

but several ancient Jews expounded the text of the Messias (see bishop Pearson on the third article of the Creed, Dr. Pocock's miscellany notes on Maimon. p. 345, and Dr. Jackson's discourse upon the place); and most Christian interpreters understand it of the miraculous conception of the Virgin Mary, without the operation of man. The Hebrew sabab is used in a sense near akin to this, Deut. xxxii. 10, where it signifies carrying in the arms, and cherishing as a mother does a child: to the same sense it is said, "Thou shalt embrace a son," 2 Kings iv. 16, Habe-bis in utero, as the Vulgar Latin renders it; though the word in the original is not the same as it is here. Taking the words in this sense, they properly import a new creation, and such as is the immediate work of God. That such a prophecy concerning the conception of Christ may not be thought to come in here abruptly, it is to be observed, that as the coming of the Messias is the foundation of all promises both of the first and second covenant (see 2 Cor. i. 20); so it contains the most powerful arguments to persuade men to obedience. And that covenant of which Christ was to be the Mediator, is plainly foretold and described at the thirty-first and following verses of this chapter. A learned friend thinks the phrase, "a woman shall compass a man," to be a proverbial speech; as much as to say, A woman, i. e. the most feeble, despicable persons, compared elsewhere to women (see Isa. iii. 12, xix. 6, xxvii. 11, Jer. l. 37, Nahum iii. 11), even such a one shall turn back or discomfit a mighty warrior, as the word geber properly signifies. He supposes the expression to be equivalent to those promises, that "one should chase a thousand," and the like; which promises should again be fulfilled at the general restoration of the Jewish nation (see ver. 8 of this chapter, Joel iii. 10, Zech. xii. 8): he farther supposes, that the word woman alludes to the virgin of Israel, ver. 21, called also a "backsliding daughter," ver. 22, and compared to Rachel, ver. 15.

Ver. 23. O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness. The giving up of the city and temple into the hands of the heathen, was a profanation of the peculiar place of God's residence (see Lam. ii. 7). But when the captivity should be restored, and the temple rebuilt, Jerusalem shall enjoy its former privileges, and be called the seat of justice, because there the supreme courts of justice should be re-established (compare Ps. cxxii. 5); and the temple shall be styled the "holy mountain," or place dedicated to God's service (see the note on ver. 12, and compare Isa. i. 26, Zech. viii. 3).

Ver. 24.] The country shall be reinhabited as well as the city (see xxxiii. 12, Isa. lxv. 10).

Ver. 25.] I have satiated [or I will satiate] the weary soul,] I will comfort them after their sorrows and afflictions.

Ver. 26.] The words of the prophet, when he re-

27 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will sow the house of Israel, and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast.

28 And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the LORD.

29 In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

30 But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge.

31 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah:

32 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by flected upon the vision which he had seen, which was so agreeable to him, that it gave him as great comfort and satisfaction as men feel when they have been refreshed with a sweet sleep and undisturbed rest.

Ver. 27.] Under the captivity the land lay desolate "without man and beast" (xxxiii. 12), but now it shall be inhabited and replenished with both. Israel and Judah are here joined together, as in many places before (see the notes on xxx. 2).

Ver. 28.] I will show the same care and vigilance (see xlv. 27) in restoring them, as I have formerly done in destroying them: according to the promise that I made to them upon their repentance and reformation (see xviii. 7, 8, compare xxxii. 22).

Ver. 29.] God hath often declared, that he will "visit the sins of the fathers upon the children:" and particularly threatened to execute judgment upon the present generation, for the idolatries and other sins of their forefathers (see xv. 4). This gave occasion to the proverb mentioned in this verse, which they that were in captivity applied to their own case; as if the miseries they endured were chiefly owing to their fathers' sins (see Lam. v. 7, Ezek. xviii. 2). But when this judgment should be removed, then there would be no farther occasion to use this proverb, as Ezekiel speaks in the forementioned place.

Ver. 30.] These national judgments ceasing, every one should suffer only for his own faults. This promise will be remarkably verified, when God shall cease to visit upon the Jewish nation that imprecation which they laid upon themselves for the death of Christ: "His blood be upon us, and upon our children" (Matt. xxvii. 25).

Ver. 31.] This must be meant of the evangelical covenant, as the text is expounded by St. Paul (Heb. viii. 8, x. 16). The benefits of this covenant were first offered to the Jews, as being the completion of that covenant God made with their fathers (see Acts iii. 26, xiii. 46).

Ver. 32. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers] The old covenant, as it is opposed to the new, signifies that system of laws and ordinances, which were the condition of that covenant made with the Jews upon mount Sinai; and in this sense the word law is usually taken in the New Testament, when it is opposed to the gospel (see Acts xv. 5, Rom. iii. 19, Gal. iii. 17).

I took them by the hand to bring them out of—the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the LORD:

33 But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the LORD, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people.

34 And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the LORD: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the LORD: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

35 Thus saith the LORD, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; The LORD of hosts is his name:

36 If those ordinances depart from before me,

Egypt;] God's care over his people in bringing them out from thence, and conducting them through the wilderness, is compared to a parent's leading a tender child (see Deut. i. 31, Hos. xi. 3).

Although I was an husband unto them,] See the note on ii. 2. The LXX. render the latter part of the sentence, "And I regarded them not:" which interpretation St. Paul follows, Heb. viii. 9, and the learned Dr. Pocock, in his miscellany notes upon Porta Mosis, chap. 1, confirms this sense of the verb baalli, from the use of the word in Arabic.

Ver. 33.] This may be meant of God's renewing their minds by his grace, which is called "giving them a new heart, and a new spirit, that they may walk in his statutes" (see Ezek. xi. 19, xxvi. 26, 27). Or else the words denote the difference between this and the former covenant, viz. that it should require inward purity, instead of external obedience, and a reasonable service in the place of the ceremonial ordinances; which is one reason why the gospel is called, in the New Testament, "the law of the spirit" (Rom. viii. 2), in opposition to the "law of a carnal commandment" (Heb. vii. 16).

And will be their God,] See the note on xxx. 22.

Ver. 34. They shall teach no more every man his neighbour,] The laws of the new covenant shall be so plain and agreeable to the dictates of reason, that there shall be no need still to be putting men in mind of their duty, as was the case of the former covenant, where a great part of its ordinances were purely positive and ceremonial. And God will now give a greater measure of his grace both to instruct men in the knowledge of his will, and engage them to practice accordingly, as the following words import.

They shall all know me,] "They shall be all taught of God," as Isaiah speaks, lvi. 13. There shall be an extraordinary effusion of God's Spirit, both in the ordinary and extraordinary effects of it, at the time when the gospel is published (see the notes upon that place of Isaiah, and compare Joel ii. 28, with John vii. 39).

I will forgive their iniquity,] God will deal with them with that grace and favour, as if they had never offended him (see Rom. iii. 25); and will set forth Christ to be a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice and propitiation for the sins of all that truly repent and turn to him (compare xxxii. 18, and see Acts x. 43, xiii. 39, Rom. xi. 27).

Ver. 35.] See xxxiii. 20, Ps. lxxxix. 36, 37.

saith the LORD, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever.

37 Thus saith the LORD: If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the LORD.

38 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that the city shall be built to the LORD from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate in the corner.

Ver. 36.] God will preserve a remnant of them where they are led captive, and restore them to their own country and government, as is foretold in several verses of this chapter. He will likewise preserve another remnant at the beginning of the gospel, called the Σαζιμανοι, Luke xiii. 23, Acts ii. 47, who, by embracing the faith of Christ, should escape those terrible judgments that should be inflicted upon the main body of that nation: and providence doth still continue them in a distinct body from all other people in the world, in order to their conversion in God's due time. To this place St. Paul, speaking of the conversion of the Jews in the latter times, seems to refer, when he saith, "The gifts and calling of God [to the Jews] are without repentance" (Rom. xi. 29).

Ver. 37. I will also cast off all the seed of Israel] Though their sins have deserved that God should utterly reject them, yet, out of a regard to the promises made to their fathers, he will, in due time, receive them to mercy (see Rom. xi. 25, 28).

Ver. 38. The city shall be built to the Lord] The following prophecy might, in some sense, be fulfilled, in the rebuilding of the city after the captivity: but I conceive the mystical sense of the words relate to a more perfect state of the church, which is elsewhere called the city of God, and the New Jerusa-

39 And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath.

tem: and whose dimensions are figuratively described, Ezek. xlviii. 20, &c. Rev. xxi. 10, &c.

From the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner.] The ancient limits of the city, from the south-east part to the south-west (see Neh. iii. 1, Zech. xiv. 10, and Dr. Lightfoot's description of Judea, chap. 26).

Ver. 39. Go forth over against it] Or, "just before it;" viz. before the corner gate, going on to the west part of the city.

Upon the hill Gareb,] By which Dr. Lightfoot understands mount Calvary, situate on the west side of Jerusalem.

Ver. 40. The whole valley of the dead bodies, &c.] The valley of Tophet, which was made a common burying-place (see vii. 32), and the receptacle of the filth of the city, even this place shall be cleansed, and set apart as holy unto the Lord. This may be mystically understood of the holiness of the New Jerusalem, when the church shall be thoroughly purged from all corruption (compare Zech. xiv. 20, 21, Joel iii. 17, Isa. lii. 1, lx. 21, Rev. xxi. 27).

It shall not be plucked up [see ver. 28]. nor thrown down any more] This probably denotes such a settled and immovable state of the church, as is not to be expected in this world (compare Isa. xxxv. 8, li. 16, lii. 1, lx. 15, lxii. 8).

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar.

2 For then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem: and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah's house.

3 For Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up, saying, Wherefore dost thou prophesy, and say, Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it;

4 And Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes;

5 And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon,

16, xxxviii. 6): but now was not under so severe a restraint (compare ver. 26, 28 of that chapter).

Ver. 3, 4.] This refers to the prophecy set down xxxiv. 2, &c. The particulars there mentioned being in order of time, before the passages related in this chapter. Jeremiah's prophecies are put together without any regard to the order of time, as hath been observed at the beginning of this Commentary.

Ver. 5. There shall he be until I visit him,] In his posterity, whom I will restore to their own country. So God tells Jacob, "I will go down with thee into Egypt, and will also surely bring thee up again" (Gen. xli. 4), which promise was made good only to his posterity. So God is said to "deal mercifully with our fathers," for so the sense runs in the original Ποθεῖσαι ἡμᾶς μετὰ τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν (Luke i. 72), by per-

CHAP. XXXII.

ARGUMENT.—Jeremiah being put in prison, for foretelling the taking of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, doth there, by God's direction, purchase a field from his uncle's son, to foreshow that God will restore again the Jews to their country, where they shall enjoy their former possessions.

Ver. 1.] Compare lii. 12.

Ver. 2. The king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem:] The siege lasted from the tenth month of the ninth year of Zedekiah's reign to the fourth month of the eleventh year (see xxxix. 1, 2).

Jeremiah—was shut up in the court of the prison,] He was afterward put in the dungeon (see xxxvii.

and there shall he be until I visit him, saith the LORD: though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper.

6 ¶ And Jeremiah said, The word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

7 Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum thine uncle shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in Anathoth: for the right of redemption is thine to buy it.

8 So Hanameel mine uncle's son came to me in the court of the prison according to the word of the LORD, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the LORD.

9 And I bought the field of Hanameel my uncle's son, that was in Anathoth, and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver.

10 And I subscribed the evidence, and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances.

11 So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed according to the law and custom, and that which was open:

12 And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the sight of Hanameel mine uncle's son, and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the book of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the prison.

13 ¶ And I charged Baruch before them, saying,

14 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, both which is sealed, and this evidence which is open; and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days.

15 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land.

16 ¶ Now when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the LORD, saying,

17 Ah Lord God! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee:

18 Thou showest loving kindness unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: the Great, the Mighty God, the LORD of hosts, is his name,

19 Great in counsel, and mighty in work: for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the forming his promises to their children (see the note on xxix. 10 of this prophecy).

Ye shall not prosper.] See xxi. 4, 9, xxxvii. 7, 10.

Ver. 8. Buy my field—that is in Anathoth.] Near Jerusalem (see ver. 44); and consequently at this time actually in the possession of the Chaldean army.

For the right of inheritance is thine.] As being next of kin (see Lev. xxv. 25), the fields in the suburbs of the Levites being unalienable (see ver. 34 of that chapter); this seems to have been a field that came into the family either by purchase (see Deut. xviii. 8), or by their marrying a wife of another tribe: for their rabbins agree, that the ordinance mentioned Numb. xxxvi. 7, which forbids the possession of lands "being removed from one tribe to another," did only take place at their first settlement in the land of Canaan (see Selden, De Synedriis, lib. iii. cap. 4, n. 1, et De Successione in Bona, cap. 18).

[On the other side, several good reasons may be alleged to prove those ordinances perpetual. For this was the chief design of instituting the year of jubilee, viz. to restore the lands to their ancient owners. Out of regard to this law Naboth refused to alienate his field to Ahab, at the peril of his life (1 Kings xxi. 3): the same law is renewed Ezek. xlv. 17. See Dr. Alix's Reflect. upon the books of Moses, par. ii. ch. 19.]

Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord.] I knew that this offer was made to me by God's especial direction, thereby to give a sensible assurance that the nation should return from their captivity, and be restored to their ancient possessions (see ver. 15, 44).

Ver. 9. Seventeen shekels of silver.] Which in our money is not much above forty shillings: a small price for a field or piece of ground. The reason of the lowness of the price might be, because it was only buying the reversion of the ground, the purchaser or his heirs not coming into possession till the seventy years of captivity were expired. And the purchase itself, like other prophetic signs, was rather a declaration of what should come to pass, than the conveyance of a present benefit: but our margin reads, "Seven shekels, and ten pieces of silver:" and the ten pieces may stand for a larger sum than a shekel, as the seventy pieces mentioned Judg. ix. 4, certainly do. The Chaldee paraphrase renders it Seven minas, and ten shekels of silver: each mina, according to Ezekiel's computation (xlv. 12) amounting to sixty common shekels, which is nine pounds sterling, according to Dr. Prideaux's computation; by which reckoning the whole sum amounts to above sixty-four pounds of our money.

Ver. 10. Weighted him the money] In ancient times all money went by weight (see Gen. xxiii. 16, Zech. xi. 12); a custom still used in several countries.

Ver. 11.] The open or unsealed writing, was either a copy of the sealed deed, or else a certificate of the witnesses in whose presence the deed of purchase was signed and sealed.

Ver. 12. Mine uncle's son.] The word son is not in the Hebrew, but it is to be understood by a usual ellipsis (see Matth. x. 2, 3). But the Hebrew word dod, signifies any relation or near kinsman; see Amos vi. 10, where the Septuagint very properly render it, Oniscus.

Ver. 14. Put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days.] When hid under ground for greater security, to be produced when the land is reinhabited.

Ver. 17.] This prayer begins with an acknowledgment of God's infinite power, which is made manifest, both in the works of creation and providence, whereby he shows himself wonderful in his mercies, and terrible in his judgments.

There is nothing too hard for thee:] Or, "hidden from thee," as the Hebrew word literally imports; i. e. out of the reach of thy wisdom to compass, or bring to pass (see the same phrase, Gen. xviii. 14).

Ver. 19. Great in counsel, and mighty in work:] sons of men: to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings:

20 Which hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men; and hast made thee a name, as at this day;

21 And hast brought forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with great terror;

22 And hast given them this land, which thou didst swear to their fathers to give them, a land flowing with milk and honey;

23 And they came in, and possessed it; but they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy law; they have done nothing of all that thou commandest them to do: therefore thou hast caused all this evil to come upon them:

24 Behold the mounts, they are come unto the city to take it; and the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans, that fight against it, because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence: and what thou hast spoken is come to pass; and, behold, thou seest it.

25 And thou hast said unto me, O Lord God, Buy thee the field for money, and take witnesses; for the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 ¶ Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying,

27 Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh: is there any thing too hard for me?

28 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar, king of Babylon, and he shall take it:

29 And the Chaldeans, that fight against this city, shall come and set fire on this city, and burn it with the houses, upon whose roofs they have offered incense unto Baal, and poured out drink-offerings unto other gods, to provoke me to anger.

30 For the children of Israel and the children of Judah have only done evil before me from their youth: for the children of Israel have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands, saith the Lord.

31 For this city hath been to me as a provocation of mine anger and of my fury from the day that they built it even unto this day; that I should remove it from before my face,

32 Because of all the evil of the children of Israel and of the children of Judah, which they have done to provoke me to anger, they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and their prophets, and the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

33 And they have turned unto me the back, and not the face: though I taught them, rising up early and teaching them, yet they have not hearkened to receive instruction.

34 But they set their abominations in the house, which is called by my name, to defile it.

35 And they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass

Who art infinitely wise in ordering all events, and as powerful in putting thy decrees in execution.

Ver. 20. Even unto this day.] The remembrance of which is preserved unto this day.

Among other men.] The word other is in like manner understood, 2 Chron. xxxii. 22, Isa. xxvi. 13.

Hast made thee a name.] Compare 1 Chron. xvii., Dan. ix. 15, where the margin reads, "Hast made thee a name," as it is here in the text.

Ver. 23.] Compare xi. 4, 8.

Ver. 24. Behold the mounts.] The ramparts which are raised against the walls, for placing "engines of shot," as the margin interprets the word mesoloth, in order to the making a general assault, and taking the city (compare xxxiii. 4).

Because of the sword.] See ver. 36, xiv. 12.

Ver. 25. Thou hast said unto me—Buy thee the field] In this posture of affairs, when the city and the country round about it is in the hands of the enemy, thou commandest me to make this purchase, which I have no prospect of ever enjoying.

For the city is given] Or rather, "Although the city be given," &c. (see Noldius's Concordance, p. 292).

Ver. 27.] The difficulties which thou thinkest are not to be surmounted, are not so to me, who can do all things, and have the lives and actions of men wholly at my disposal. All flesh is the same with all men (see Ps. lxxv. 2, Isa. xl. 5).

Ver. 29.] See note on xix. 13.

Ver. 30. The children of Israel and—Judah] The title of Israel and Judah is sometimes given to the Jews, after the captivity of the ten tribes (see ver. 32, xxxvi. 2); because there were still some remains of those tribes left, who joined themselves to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin (see 2 Chron. xxix. 24, xxx. 1, 11, 15, xxxiv. 33, Ezra vi. 17).

Done evil before me] See ii. 7, 25, vii. 23, 28, xxii. 21).

Ver. 31. From the day that they built it] Or, "that it was built," the personal being often used for the impersonal (see the note upon Isa. xlv. 18). David was the builder of that part of Jerusalem that is called Zion, therefore styled the "city of David" (see 2 Sam. v. 9). He likewise enlarged the whole city of Jerusalem, making it the seat of the kingdom: for which reason Jerusalem is sometimes called the "city of David" (see Isa. xxix. 1). But we do not read that idolatry, the sin here spoken of, was committed there in David's time: so that the expression seems to be hyperbolical, like that of Isa. xlviii. 8, where God, speaking of the Jews' proneness to idolatry, saith, "Thou wast called a transgressor from the womb:" meaning from the very time of their living in Egypt (compare Ezek. xx. 8, xxiii. 3, 19, 27). If we take the words in a stricter sense, they must be understood of the times of Solomon, who beautified the city with the temple, and other stately buildings, but afterward defiled it by idolatry (see 1 Kings xi. 7, compared with 2 Kings xxiii. 13).

That I should remove it from before my face.] I should withdraw my protection from it (see 2 Kings xxiii. 27, xxiv. 3).

Ver. 32.] See ii. 8, 26.

Ver. 33. Turned unto me the back.] See ii. 27.

Rising up early, &c.] See vii. 13.

through the fire unto Moloch; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this abomination, to cause Judah to sin.

36 ¶ And now therefore thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning this city, whereof ye say, It shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence;

37 Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely:

38 And they shall be my people, and I will be their God:

39 And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them:

40 And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them,

To pass through the fire] The words "through the fire" are not in the Hebrew; but in other places which speak of the same thing, the words are expressed at full length (see Deut. xviii. 10, 2 Kings xxiii. 10). Elsewhere, the same thing is expressed by "burning their sons and their daughters in the fire," and "offering them for burnt-offerings:" see vii. 31, xix. 5 of this prophecy, Deut. xii. 38. The idolatrous Jews are often upbraided with the practice of this inhuman rite (see Ps. cvi. 37, Isa. lvii. 5). And the phrase of making children pass through the fire, is certainly taken in this sense, Ezek. xvi. 20, 21, xxiii. 37, where it is explained by slaying them, sacrificing them, and giving them to be devoured.

But some critics are of opinion, that the exposition is taken in a milder sense in other texts, particularly 2 Kings xvi. 3, and denotes only holding children over the fire, or making them pass through the flame, by way of lustration or dedication to some idol. To confirm this interpretation, they observe, that the verb henebir, used in the text, signifies to dedicate, or consecrate (see Exod. xiii. 12). See the reasons on which this interpretation is grounded, at large explained in Dr. Spencer, De Legib. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 10, sect. 2.

Which I commanded them not,] See vii. 31.

Ver. 36. And now therefore thus saith the Lord,] In this and the following verses, God gives an answer to the doubt proposed by the prophet, ver. 25. Or the words may be thus translated, "But now, notwithstanding [all this], thus saith the Lord." So the particle taken is often taken (see note on xvi. 14).

Ver. 37. I will gather them,] See xxiii. 3, 8, xxix. 14.

I will cause them to dwell safely:] Compare xxiii.

4. St. Jerome observes in his notes upon the place, that this promise, taken in its full extent, was not made good to those that returned from captivity, because they were frequently infested with wars, as well by the kings of Syria and Egypt, as by the rest of their neighbours, as appears from the history of the Maccabees, and were finally subdued and destroyed by the Romans.

Ver. 38. They shall be my people,] See xxx. 22.

Ver. 39.] This must be understood, at least as to its ultimate completion, of the reunion of Judah and Israel after the general restoration (see the note on iii. 18, xxx. 3). When the ten tribes set up a distinct kingdom from that of Judah, they stood divided, not only in their civil interests, but also with respect to their religious worship. These distinctions, God to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me.

41 Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul.

42 For thus saith the LORD; Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them.

43 And fields shall be bought in this land, whereof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

44 Men shall buy fields for money, and subscribe evidences, and seal them, and take witnesses in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the LORD.

saith, he will entirely abolish at the time of their conversion (compare xxiv. 7, Ezek. xi. 19). The same blessing is more fully expressed in these words (Ezek. xxxvii. 22), "I will make them one nation, and one king shall be king over them." At the same time we may expect the fulness of the gentiles to come in, and then "all nations shall serve the Lord with one consent" (Zeph. iii. 9), and "there shall be one Lord, and his name one" (Zech. xiv. 9).

Ver. 40. I will make an everlasting covenant with them,] The Jewish covenant, with respect to the ceremonial ordinances contained in it, is sometimes called an everlasting covenant (see Gen. xvii. 13, Lev. xxiv. 8, Isa. xxiv. 5). Berith olam in the Hebrew; because those ordinances were to continue for a long succession of time, called olam in that language (see the note upon xxv. 9), and to last till the new olam, or "age of the Messias," called אילן מללון, "the age," or "world to come," Heb. ii. 5, vi. 5. But when this expression is applied to the gospel-covenant there is a peculiar emphasis contained in it, implying that it should never be abolished, or give way to any other dispensation (see Jer. l. 5, Isa. lv. 3, compared with Ps. lxxxix. 34, 35).

I will put my fear in their hearts,] "They shall all know me," xxxi. 34, and "shall be all taught of the Lord," Isa. liv. 13 (see the notes upon those places).

Ver. 41. I will rejoice over them to do them good,] I will take pleasure in doing them good, according to my promise, Deut. xxx. 9, whereas before, the "Lord rejoiced over them to destroy them," Deut. xxviii. 63, which God is never said to do, but when men have filled up the measure of their iniquities (see the note upon Isa. i. 24).

With my whole heart and with my whole soul,] With a true and lasting affection (compare xxiv. 6, xxxi. 28, Amos ix. 15).

Ver. 42.] Compare xxxi. 28.

Ver. 43. And fields shall be bought in this land,] So that it was not without good reason that I sent Hananeel unto thee, ver. 8.

It is desolate without man or beast;] Words spoken by the Jews, by way of despair, as if they had no hopes that their land should ever be inhabited again.

Ver. 44. In the land of Benjamin,] See xxiv. 26.

I will cause their captivity to return,] The return of their captivity under Cyrus shall be an earnest of those greater blessings I will bestow upon them at their general restoration (compare ver. 37, 41, xxxiii. 7, 26).

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 MOREOVER the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the second time, while he was yet shut up in the court of the prison, saying.

2 Thus saith the LORD the maker thereof, the LORD that formed it, to establish it; the LORD is his name;

3 Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not.

4 For thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning the houses of this city, and concerning the houses of the kings of Judah, which are thrown down by the mounts, and by the sword;

5 They come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men, whom I have slain in mine anger and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness I have hid my face from this city.

6 Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth.

7 And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first.

8 And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me.

9 ¶ And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it.

10 Thus saith the LORD; Again there shall be

CHAP. XXXIII.

ARGUMENT.—God renews his promises of restoring the Jewish nation, and repeats the same gracious assurances thereof which he gives them in the two foregoing chapters; the completion of which is to be expected under the kingdom of the Messias; whose coming is plainly foretold at the fifteenth and sixteenth verses of this chapter.

Ver. 1.] See xxxii. 2.

Ver. 2. The maker thereof,] i. e. Of the city Jerusalem, a figure of that church, spoken of before (see xxxii. 36, 44, compared with the fourth, sixth, and ninth verses of this chapter).

Ver. 3. Call unto me, and I will answer thee,] An expression betokening God's favour and loving-kindness: that he is ready to comply with the first intimations of his servant's desires (compare xxix. 12, Ps. xci. 15, Isa. lvi. 24). As, on the contrary, God's rejecting men is expressed by his refusing to answer when they call (Prov. i. 24). God's thus directing his discourse to Jeremiah, doth not only denote his kindness towards the prophet, but likewise implies the affection he still bore to his people, for whom the prophet did so earnestly intercede, and whose welfare he had so much at heart.

And shew thee great—things, which thou knowest not.] Not only what relates to the return of thy people from the Babylonish captivity, but likewise the blessings to be conferred upon them in the times of the Messias.

Ver. 4. Thrown down by the mounts,] By the battering engines placed upon the mounts, that are raised against the walls of the city (see xxii. 24).

By the sword;] By the violence of war. But the Hebrew word is sometimes taken for such instruments as are used in demolishing any building. Accordingly, it is rendered a mattock by our translators, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 6. See likewise Ezek. xxvi. 9, where it is translated aces.

Ver. 5. But it is to fill them, &c.] To fill them, i. e. the houses mentioned ver. 4. This verse comes in by way of parenthesis, between the fourth and sixth, to show, that at present God will not prosper any efforts which are made for the defence of the city, though he will restore it hereafter to its former splendour. Lud. De Dieu renders the words thus, "The Chaldeans come to fight, and to fill," &c., and he proves, by several instances, that the Hebrew particle eth sometimes goes before a nominative case: a plain instance of which syntax is to be seen, xxxvi. 22 (see likewise Noldius's Concordance, p. 121).

Ver. 6. I will bring it health and cure,] I will restore this place to its former prosperity, and deliver it out of that calamitous state into which the sins of the inhabitants have brought it (compare xxx. 12, 13, 17).

Ver. 7. I will cause the captivity of Judah and—Israel to return] See the note on xxx. 3.

And will build] Comp. xxiv. 6, xxxi. 4, 28, xliii. 10.

Ver. 8.] I will not impute their sins any longer to them, but remit the punishments I have inflicted upon them for their iniquities. The word cleanse may be here taken in a legal sense for acquitting or "pronouncing clean," as the word is translated, Lev. xiii. 28. In the same sense, the Greek verbs ἀγαθίζω and καθαρίζω (which answer to the Hebrew tahar in the text) are used by St. Paul and St. John, for taking away the guilt of sin (see Heb. ix. 13, 14, x. 14, 29, xiii. 12. 1 John i. 7, 9). The whole verse implies that general promise of pardon of sins which is elsewhere spoken of, as the peculiar blessing of the gospel (compare xxxi. 34, Ezek. xxxvi. 25).

Ver. 9. It shall be—a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth,] God's especial providence over the Jews, in restoring their city and temple, shall be taken notice of by the heathen world, and make them give glory to that God whom they worship (See Ezra i. 2, vi. 12). To the same sense God is said to make "Jerusalem a praise in the earth" (Isa. lxii. 7), i. e. the subject of men's praise and admiration, the glory of which redounds to God, who is her protector. This promise is more signally fulfilled in the Christian church, which the heathens resorted to, as the seat and temple of truth (see Isa. ii. 3, Zech. viii. 21, 23).

They shall fear and tremble for all the goodness—that I procure unto it.] These surprising effects of my goodness shall produce an astonishment like that which arises from fear (compare Ps. cxxxix. 14, Isa. lx. 5).

Ver. 10. Which ye say shall be desolate, &c.] See note on xxxii. 43.

heard in this place, which ye say shall be desolate without man and without beast, even in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, that are desolate, without man, and without inhabitant, and without beast, 11 The voice of joy, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the voice of them that shall say, Praise the LORD of hosts: for the LORD is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: and of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise into the house of the LORD. For I will cause to return the captivity of the land, as at the first, saith the LORD.

12 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Again in this place, which is desolate without man and without beast, and in all the cities thereof, shall be an habitation of shepherds causing their flocks to lie down.

13 In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, saith the LORD,

14 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that

I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah.

15 ¶ In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land.

16 In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The LORD our righteousness.

17 ¶ For thus saith the LORD; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel:

18 Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt-offerings, and to kindle meat-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually.

19 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, saying,

20 Thus saith the LORD; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season;

21 Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son

Ver. 11. The voice of joy, and—gladness, &c.] The contrary to which is threatened in the times of captivity and desolation, (see xvi. 9).

Praise the Lord, &c.] We read that those who returned from captivity used this very hymn, Ezra iii. 11.

Of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise] Such as was offered upon any great deliverance (see Lev. vii. 12, Ps. cvii. 22, cxvi. 17). The word here used signifies praise and thanksgiving in general, and is used for those choirs or companies who made a solemn thanksgiving procession upon the dedication of the new wall at Jerusalem (Neh. xii. 31, 38, 40). This is called by St. Paul the “sacrifice of praise, even the fruit of our lips,” Heb. xiii. 15, to distinguish it from the oblations commanded by the law, which consisted of the fruits of the ground or of the flock and herd. [Kimchi observes upon the place, that none but eucharistical sacrifices shall be in use in the times of the Messias.]

I will cause to return the captivity] See xxx. 20, 21.

Ver. 12.] Compare l. 19, Isa. lxx. 10.

Ver. 13. The cities of the mountains,] See xvii. 26. Shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them,] That is, of their shepherds, who number their cattle by striking every one with their rod, as it comes out of the fold (see Lev. xxvii. 32).

Ver. 14. I will perform that good thing] Or, “good word,” as it is in the original (compare xxix. 10, Zech. i. 13); i. e. those gracious promises which relate to the gospel-state, and are called “the good word of God,” Heb. vi. 5.

Ver. 15.] See notes upon xxiii. 5, 6.

Ver. 16. This is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness.] The name which properly belongs to the Messias (see xxiii. 6) shall be given to Jerusalem, that is, to the church; to betoken that it is in a peculiar manner dedicated to him, he having chosen it for the place of his residence (compare Ezek. xlvi. 35); and that all the righteousness of the faithful, both their justification and sanctification, is derived from him. This seems to be the genuine sense of the words, as may appear to any that will compare the original phrase here, Yikkare lah, with Isa. lxii. 4, 12, where it is said of Zion, the person only being changed, “Thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah,” and “Sought out.” Nor is there any greater impropriety in giving the name of Jehovah to a city, than in calling an altar Jehovah-nissi (Exod. xvii. 15), and Jehovah-shalom (Judg. vi. 24), in token that the Lord was author of those mercies, of which the said altars were designed to be monuments. So the servants of God are described in the Revelation, as having his name written upon their forehead (Rev. iii. 12, xiv. 1). But several interpreters, particularly Huetius (Demonstr. Evang. prop. vii. cap. 16), and our learned Bishop Pearson, in the notes upon his Exposition of the Creed, p. 165, render the words thus, “He that shall call her [to be his peculiar people] is the Lord our righteousness.”

Ver. 17.] The promise of perpetuity made to David’s kingdom shall be fulfilled in Christ, “whose kingdom shall have no end” (see 2 Sam. vii. 16, Ps. lxxxix. 29, 36, Luke i. 32, 33).

Ver. 18.] This, as it may be applied to the Christian church, imports that there shall never want a succession of men set apart to God’s service, to perform the public offices of religion. As the prophets often describe the Christian worship, by representations taken from the temple-service, and speak of the one as succeeding the other (see the notes on Isa. xix. 19, lvi. 7, lxvi. 23), so the apostles prove the rights and privileges belonging to the ministers of the gospel, from the prerogatives given to the Jewish priesthood (see Rom. xv. 16, 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14). The phrase “to stand before me,” is explained in the note upon xv. 1.

Ver. 20. My covenant of the day,] Called the ordinances of the day and night, xxxi. 35, 36.

Ver. 21.] The words contain a promise, that the kingdom and priesthood shall always continue in the church. For as Christ’s “kingdom shall have no end,” so the saints that shall reign with Christ in to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers.

22 As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured: so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me.

23 Moreover the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah, saying,

24 Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the LORD hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? thus glory shall be priests unto God (compare Isa. lxi. 22, Rev. xx. 6).

Ver. 22.] This relates to the promise made to Abraham, of "multiplying his seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore" (Gen. xxii. 17): which promise was fulfilled in his posterity (Deut. x. 22, 1 Kings iv. 20). And the text here affirms, that the same promise shall again be made good in aftertimes, and especially in the true Israelites, the spiritual seed of Abraham (see Rom. iv. 16, 17).

If we consider the literal sense of this promise, as it was fulfilled, when the Jews first peopled the land of Canaan; it is matter of wonder to reflect upon the vast numbers of inhabitants who dwelt in Judea, a country not above a hundred and sixty miles in length, and about a hundred and twenty in breadth, if we take in all the country on the other side of Jordan, to the borders of Arabia; and yet, in David's time, there were reckoned above fifteen hundred thousand fighting men (1 Chron. xxi. 3).

they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them.

25 Thus saith the LORD; If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth;

26 Then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them.

And afterward in Jehoshaphat's time, it appears from the muster-roll, that the soldiers in the kingdom of Judah only amounted to eleven hundred thousand (see 2 Chron. xvii. 14, &c.).

Ver. 24.] By the two families are meant the tribes or families of Judah and Levi, mentioned ver. 22 (compare Zech. xii. 12, 13). The words are spoken by those who thought the Jews would never be restored to their former condition, or again enjoy their ancient government in church and state. [The expression may more probably denote the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah (see ver. 26, and compare Ezek. xxxvii. 16, &c). The word family is equivalent to kingdom (see the note upon i. 15): so it is used, Micah ii. 3.]

Ver. 25, 26. The ordinances of heaven and earth, &c.] i. e. The vicissitude of day and night, and of summer and winter, upon which the seasons of the year, and fruitfulness of the earth depend (see xxxi. 36).

Ver. 26. Their captivity to return,] See xxxii. 44.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, when Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and all his army, and all the kingdoms of the earth of his dominion, and all the people, fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities thereof, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; Go and speak to Zedekiah king of Judah, and tell him, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire:

3 And thou shalt not escape out of his hand, but shalt surely be taken, and delivered into his hand; and thine eyes shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon, and he shall speak with thee mouth to mouth, and thou shalt go to Babylon.

4 Yet hear the word of the LORD, O Zede-

CHAP. XXXIV.

ARGUMENT.—The king of Babylon and his army threatening to besiege Jerusalem (which gave occasion to the prophecy related at the beginning of the chapter), the Jews, being terrified under these apprehensions, entered into a solemn covenant of serving God, and obeying his laws: particularly that which enjoined them to let their servants go free after six years' service (Exod. xxi. 2, Deut. xv. 12). But the king of Egypt coming with an army to the relief of Zedekiah, and thereupon Nebuchadnezzar raising the siege of Jerusalem to march against him (see ver. 21, and xxxvii. 5): their present fears being over, the people repented of their reformation, and made their servants, whom they had set at liberty, return into bondage again, contrary to the law of God, and the covenant they themselves had lately agreed to. For which inhuman and unjust act, Jeremiah proclaims liberty to the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, to execute God's vengeance upon them.

Ver. 1. When Nebuchadnezzar] See i. 15.

Fought against Jerusalem.] The siege was begun in the ninth year of Zedekiah, and the tenth month, and tenth day of the month, which answers to the latter end of December (see lii. 4). A learned friend supposes, that what is here recorded, did not happen till sometime after the siege was begun, and concludes from xxviii. 1, and the seventeenth verse of this chapter, that the sabbatical year was coincident with the last year of the siege, which was the eleventh year of Zedekiah (see the notes upon these two places).

Against all the cities thereof,] See ver. 7. The lesser cities of Judea, which were subject to Jerusalem as their metropolis, called elsewhere the "daughters of Judah," by way of distinction from the mother-city (compare xlix. 2, li. 43).

Ver. 2, 3.] This prophecy, which threatened the king in particular, as well as the city and nation in general, so much displeased Zedekiah, that he shut up Jeremiah in prison (see xxxii. 2, 3).

kiah king of Judah; Thus saith the LORD of thee, Thou shalt not die by the sword:

5 But thou shalt die in peace: and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so they shall burn odours for thee; and they will lament thee, saying, Ah lord! for I have pronounced the word, saith the LORD.

6 Then Jeremiah the prophet spake all these words unto Zedekiah king of Judah in Jerusalem, 7 When the king of Babylon's army fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that were left, against Lachish, and against Azekah: for these defended cities remained of the cities of Judah.

8 ¶ This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem, to proclaim liberty unto them;

9 That every man should let his man-servant, and every man his maid-servant, being an Hebrew or an Hebrewess, go free; that none should serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his brother.

10 Now when all the princes, and all the people, which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his man-servant, and every one his maid-servant, go free, that none should serve themselves of them any more, then they obeyed, and let them go.

11 But afterward they turned, and caused the servants and the handmaids, whom they had let go free, to return, and brought them into subjection for servants and for handmaids.

12 ¶ Therefore the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying,

14 At the end of seven years let ye go every man his brother an Hebrew, which hath been sold unto thee; and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: but your fathers hearkened not unto me, neither inclined their ear.

15 And ye were now turned, and had done right in my sight, in proclaiming liberty every man to his neighbour; and ye had made a covenant before me in the house which is called by my name:

16 But ye turned and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their

Ver. 5. Thou shalt die in peace:] By a natural death.

So shall they burn odours for thee;] It was customary among the Jews at the funeral of their kings, especially of those whose memory they honoured, to prepare a bed of spices, as it is called, 2 Chron. xvi. 14, which they made a perfume of by burning them, and therein to deposit the body of the deceased prince (compare the forementioned place with 2 Chron. xxi. 19).

They will lament over thee;] In these and the foregoing words, God promises Zedekiah an honourable interment, and suitable to his quality: a favour he did not vouchsafe to Jehoiakim (see xxii. 18).

Ver. 7. Lachish, and—Azekah:] Compare 2 Kings xviii. 13, xix. 8. Those two cities were not far from Jerusalem, and had been fortified by Rehoboam for the defence of his kingdom (see 1 Chron. xi. 9.)

Ver. 8. Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people;] See the argument of the chapter. Archbishop Usher supposes, that this covenant was entered into at the beginning of the year, which he computes to be a sabbatical year, upon the first news of the king of Babylon's intended invasion: whereas the Chaldean army did not actually besiege Jerusalem, till the latter end of the year, as hath been observed upon ver. 1 (see Annales V. T. ad. A. M. 3414).

To proclaim liberty unto them;] That they should grant liberty to all their servants, who had served them six years. The seventh is called "the year of release," Deut. xv. 9, the same was also the sabbatical year, Lev. xxv. 4. This week or circle of years, the Jews called shemittah, and seven times seven years, i. e. forty-nine years, make the jubilee, when a general liberty was proclaimed throughout the land (Lev. xxv. 8, 10).

Ver. 9. Let his man-servant—go free;] See ver. 14.

Ver. 10.] The verse may be thus translated, "And all the princes—consented that every one should let his man-servant—go free; they consented, I say, and let them go." Concerning the princes, see the notes on xxvi. 10, xxxvi. 12, xxxviii. 4.

Ver. 11.] Upon the king of Egypt's advancing with an army, and raising the siege of Jerusalem (see ver. 21, and xxxvii. 5).

Ver. 14. At the end of every seven years] The seventh year was the year of release (Deut. xv. 9), consequently servants were to continue in service but six years, and at the beginning of the seventh were to be let go free (see ibid. ver. 12). For this reason some critics render the phrase here, "Within the term of seven years." And the words mean no more, as appears by a like form of speech, Deut. xiv. 28, where it is said, "At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thy increase that year:" which is to be explained by what is said, xxvi. 12, where every third year is called "the year of tithing." So Christ is said to rise again "after three days," Mark viii. 31, which is elsewhere explained by his rising the third day.

Your fathers hearkened not unto me;] It appears from hence, and other passages of scripture, that the sabbatical years were wholly neglected for several ages before the captivity. The author of the second book of Chronicles assigns this reason of the captivity, "that the land might enjoy her sabbaths" (xxxvi. 21), i. e. those years of rest of which it had been wrongfully deprived, by the neglect of the law of God in this particular. And if we reckon the whole seventy years' captivity as a punishment of this neglect, it will prove that the observation of those sabbatical years had been disused for four hundred and ninety years before. Wherefore, after the return from captivity, this was one branch of God's law, which Ezra and Nehemiah engaged the people to observe by a solemn vow and covenant (Neh. x. 31).

Ver. 15. Ye had made a covenant before me] This was probably such a covenant as Josiah and all the people had made formerly (see 2 Kings xxiii. 2, 3): whereby they obliged themselves to serve God, and pleasure, to return, and brought them into subjection, to be unto you for servants and for hand-maids.

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty, every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbour: behold, I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the LORD, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.

18 And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof,

19 The princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all obey his laws in general, and this concerning giving freedom to their servants in particular.

Ver. 17. Proclaiming liberty,] Though you made proclamation of such a liberty, yet you have not performed it.

I proclaim a liberty for you,—to the sword,] I will now make public proclamation, or declare that I give free commission and liberty for the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, to invade and make havoc among you (see xxxii. 24, 26). These judgments shall lay the land desolate, whereby it "shall enjoy its sabbaths," which you would not suffer it to do, as long as you dwelt upon it (see Lev. xxvi. 34, 35). The expressions here used do farther import, that these calamities come upon men, by direction and commission from God, as the executioners of his justice (compare Ezck. xiv. 17).

I will make you to be removed] See xxiv. 9.

Ver. 18—20. When they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof,] Implying by that ceremony, that they wished themselves might be cut in sunder, in like manner, if they broke their solemn vow and promise. The same rite was used in ancient times, and appears from Gen. xv. 10, and conveyed down to after-ages, as may be seen in the people of the land, which passed between the parts of the calf;

20 I will even give them into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life: and their dead bodies shall be for meat unto the fowls of the heaven, and to the beasts of the earth.

21 And Zedekiah king of Judah and his princes will I give into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life, and into the hand of the king of Babylon's army which are gone up from you.

22 Behold, I will command, saith the LORD, and cause them to return to this city; and they shall fight against it, and take it, and burn it with fire: and I will make the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant.

those forms recorded by Livy: "Tu Jupiter populum Rom. sic ferito, ut ego hunc agnum," lib. i. cap. 24, and lib. xxi. cap. 35, "Si falleret, Jovem cæterosque precatus Deos, ita se mactarent, quemadmodum ipse agnum mactasset." So the Greeks in Homer, when they had entered into a solemn league or agreement with the Trojans, to put an end to the war, by the single combat of Paris and Menelaus, at the pouring out the wine upon their sacrifice, make the like imprecation upon those who did not observe their part of the treaty in that remarkable passage, Iliad. i. ver. 298.

Ζεῦ κούρῃσσι, κίχῃσσι, καὶ ἑδνέκτοισι θεοῖς ἄλλοις, Ὅσπότεροι πρότερον ὑπὲρ θεῶν πημήνυσαν, ὡς δὲ σὺ ἐγκέφαλος χαμαδιῶ ἴσται, ὡς δὲ εἶνος.

The sense of which a late English translation thus expresses,

Almighty Jove, and all ye other powers,
Whoever first shall dare to break this treaty,
May their warm blood be poured upon the earth,
As is this wine.—

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,

2 Go unto the house of the Rechabites, and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of the LORD, into one of the chambers; and give them wine to drink.

3 Then I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah,

CHAP. XXXV

ARGUMENT.—By the obedience of the Rechabites to their fathers' commands, the Jews' disobedience to God's commands is condemned.

Ver. 1.] This may most probably be referred to the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign, when Nebuchadnezzar, having beaten the king of Egypt's army at Euphrates (see xlvi. 2), marched towards Syria and Palestine, to recover those provinces again which the king of Egypt had conquered (see 2 Kings xxiii. 33, 34, compared with xxiv. 7): in which expedition he laid siege to Jerusalem (see Dan. i. 1, and ver. 11, of this chapter).

Ver. 2. Rechabites,] The Rechabites were descended from the Kenites (1 Chron. ii. 55): they never were incorporated with the Jewish nation (see below, ver. 7); but yet were looked upon as their friends and allies (see 1 Sam. xv. 6): and a respect was paid to them for the sake of Hobab, Moses's father-in-law, who was of that nation (Judg. iv. 11). They were worshippers of the true God, though they were not circumcised (see the following verse, and 2 Kings x. 15, 16).

Bring them into the house of the Lord,] Into one of the chambers which join the temple (see ver. 4). By this it appears that the Rechabites were not idolaters, for it was not lawful for such persons to come within the precincts of the temple.

Ver. 4. Into the chamber of—Hanan,] There were several chambers adjoining to the temple, for the use of the priests and Levites, during the time of their ministration; and as repositories for laying up the the son of Habaziniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites ;

4 And I brought them into the house of the LORD, into the chamber of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdaliah, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah the son of Shallum, the keeper of the door :

5 And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups, and I said unto them, Drink ye wine.

6 But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons for ever :

7 Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any: but all your days ye shall dwell in tents ; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.

8 Thus have we obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab our father in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters ;

9 Nor to build houses for us to dwell in : neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed :

10 But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us.

11 But it came to pass, when Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians ; so we dwell at Jerusalem.

holy vestments and vessels, and whatever stores were necessary for the daily sacrifices, and the other parts of the temple-service (compare xxxvi. 10, 1 Kings vi. 5, 1 Chron. ix. 27, 30).

Which was by the chamber of the princes.] Where the Sanhedrin, or great council, used to assemble (see xxvi. 10). The Sanhedrin always sat in some great room adjoining to the temple (see Dr. Lightfoot's description of the temple, chap. 9, 22).

Above the chamber of Maaseiah--keeper of the door:] i. e. One of the keepers: for there were several Levites appointed for that office, both to open and shut the gates of the temple in due time, and likewise to attend at them all day, for preventing anything that might happen to the prejudice of the purity or safety of that holy place (see 1 Chron. ix. 18, 19, xxvi. 12, 13, &c., 2 Chron. viii. 14, 2 Kings xii. 9, xxv. 18). Some of these officers had likewise the custody of the holy vessels (see iii. 24, 1 Chron. ix. 26).

Ver. 6.] Jonadab was a considerable man of this family (see 2 Kings x. 15): and his design was to reduce his family to the primitive manner of life, which was that of shepherds, living in tents, having no certain habitation, and taking care only for a supply of what was barely necessary to support nature. These rules he might probably give them, to put them in mind that they were strangers in Judea, and had no original right of inheritance there (see the following verse). Such voluntary austerities, in aftertimes, came into great repute among several sects of the Jews, particularly the Pharisees and Essenes (see Joseph. de Bell. Jnd. lib. ii. cap. 7).

Ver. 8.] We have conformed ourselves to his in-

12 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Go and tell the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words? saith the LORD.

14 The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye hearkened not unto me.

15 I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them, saying, Return ye now every man from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers: but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me.

16 Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab have performed the commandment of their father, which he commanded them; but this people hath not hearkened unto me :

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring upon Judah and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem all the evil that I have pronounced against them: because I have spoken unto them, but they have not heard; and I have called unto them, but they have not answered.

18 ¶ And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the junctions, and governed our lives by them, during the space of near three hundred years.

Ver. 11. When Nebuchadrezzar—came up into the land.] If the words be understood of his coming with an army in person, then they must refer to his invading Judea, in the fourth year of his reign (see the notes on ver. 1).

For fear of the army of the Syrians:] Berosus mentions Nebuchadrezzar's conquest over Syria and Phœnice, as he is quoted by Josephus (lib. i. contra Appion. p. 1045. B). Out of these conquests he probably recruited his army.

So we dwell at Jerusalem.] Upon the Chaldean invasion we retired to Jerusalem, where, during the siege of the place, we are forced to continue. In such a case, they did not think themselves obliged to a strict observance of the injunctions of Jonadab; because all human laws admit of an equitable construction, and may be superseded in cases of necessity; or when the observance of them is attended with such great inconveniences, as the law-maker himself, if he could have foreseen, would probably have excepted.

Ver. 14. Rising early and speaking;] See vii. 13.

Ver. 15. I have sent—prophets.] See xxv. 4.

Ver. 19. Jonadab—shall not want a man to stand before me] When the main body of the Jewish nation are dispersed in their several captivities, some of that family shall remain to attend upon my service, and enjoy the privileges of worshipping in my temple at Jerusalem (compare vii. 10). Some branches of this family returned from the captivity, as appears from 1 Chron. ii. 55. Benjamin Tudelensis, who lived in

God of Israel; Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you:

the twelfth century, pretends, in his Itinerary, that he found a city inhabited by the Rechabites: but he is too fabulous a writer to be relied upon.

Ver. 19. For ever.] This expression is not always 19 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Jonadab the son of Rechab, shall not want a man to stand before me for ever.

to be taken in a strict sense, but often means only a long continuance, and is used comparatively with respect to a shorter duration (see the notes on xxv. 9, xxxii. 40).

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 AND it came to pass in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that this word came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Take thee a roll of a book, and write therein all the words that I have spoken unto thee against Israel, and against Judah, and against all the nations, from the day I spake unto thee, from the days of Josiah, even unto this day.

3 It may be that the house of Judah will hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way; that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin.

4 Then Jeremiah called Baruch the son of Neriah: and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the LORD, which he had spoken unto him, upon the roll of a book.

5 And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying,

I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the LORD:

6 Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the LORD in the ears of the people in the LORD's house upon the fasting-day: and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities.

7 It may be they will present their supplication before the LORD, and will return every one from his evil way: for great is the anger and the fury that the LORD hath pronounced against this people.

8 And Baruch the son of Neriah did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the LORD in the LORD's house.

9 And it came to pass in the fifth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the CHAP. XXXVI.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet, by God's command, orders his amanuensis, Baruch, to write all the prophecies which he denounced against Israel and Judah, in one volume: which Baruch first read to the people on two solemn fast-days, and afterward to the chief ministers of the state. They inform the king of the matter, who orders Jehudi to read it before him; but before he had read far, out of indignation commands it to be cut in pieces, and burnt. Whereupon, God directs Jeremiah to indite it over again.

Ver. 1. Fourth year of Jehoiakim] See xxv. 1.

Ver. 2. Take thee a roll of a book.] Compare Isa. viii. 1, Ezek. ii. 9, Zech. v. 1. The ancient manner of writing was upon long scrolls of parchment, which they afterward rolled upon sticks.

Against Israel, and—Judah.] Jeremiah prophesied against Israel, as well as against Judah (see ii. 4, iii. 12, 14, &c., ix. 26, xiii. 13, xxxii. 30, 32). The kingdom of Israel was indeed destroyed by Shalmaneser before the time of Jeremiah; but yet the prophet was ordered to reprove their sins, both to make the justice of God appear in punishing them so severely, and withal to warn the rest of the Jews by their example. Besides, there were some remains of these tribes still left, who joined themselves to the tribe of Judah (see the note on xxxii. 30).

Against all the nations.] See xxv. 15, 16, &c.

From the days of Josiah.] From the thirteenth year of his reign (see i. 2, xxv. 3).

Ver. 3. It may be that the house of Judah will hear] See the like expression, ver. 7, xxvi. 3, Ezek. xii. 3, Amos. v. 15, Zeph. ii. 3. In which places God is introduced, as speaking after the manner of men, and using such methods, as in human probability may be most likely to prevail (compare viii. 6). These and such-like expressions do likewise import, that God's foreknowledge of future events doth not put any force upon men's will, nor take away the liberty of human actions, as Origen hath acutely observed, in his Philocalia, cap. 23.

Ver. 5. I am shut up;] He was under confinement, probably for having given offence to the king, or the great men, by his prophecies. A calamity which often befell him (see xx. 2, xxxii. 2, xxxvii. 15, xxxviii. 6).

Ver. 6. Go thou and read—in the ears of the people.] The prophets usually published their sermons in the audience of the people (see vii. 2, xi. 6, xvii. 20): which were afterward delivered in writing for common use: as the law itself was written for that purpose, as God tells the Israelites by his prophet Hosea, viii. 12.

Upon the fasting-day.] The great day of expiation, which was kept upon the tenth day of the seventh month (Lev. xxiii. 27, 29), called by way of eminence the fast, Acts xxvii. 9.

In the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities.] Who came to the feast of tabernacles, which followed five days afterward (Lev. xxiii. 34).

Ver. 7. Present their supplication] See ver. 3.

Ver. 9. They proclaimed a fast] It was customary among the Jews to proclaim anniversary fasts upon certain days, in memory of some great calamities which had befallen them at that time. Of this kind were the fasts of the fourth, fifth, seventh, and tenth months, mentioned Zech. vii. 5, viii. 19. The first instituted in remembrance of the city's being taken by Nebuchadnezzar: the second in memory of the temple's being burnt in that month: the third for the murder of Gedaliah: the fourth in memory of the ninth month, that they proclaimed a fast before the LORD to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem.

10 Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the LORD, in the chamber of Gemariah the son of Shaphan the scribe, in the higher court, at the entry of the new gate of the LORD's house, in the ears of all the people.

11 ¶ When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the LORD, 12 Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's chamber: and, lo, all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemaiah, and Elnathan the son of Achbor, and Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of Hananiah, and all the princes.

13 Then Michaiah declared unto them all the words that he had heard, when Baruch read the book in the ears of the people.

14 Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi the son of Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, Take in thine hand the roll wherein thou hast read in the ears of the people, and come. So Baruch the son of Neriah took the roll in his hand, and came unto them.

15 And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our ears. So Baruch read it in their ears.

16 Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, they were afraid both one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words.

siege then begun. The fast mentioned in the text, was occasioned by the taking of the city by Nebuchadnezzar at that time, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, as Archbishop Usher conjectures, ad A. M. 3398, 3399 (see the note on xxxv. 1).

Ver. 10. Then read Baruch in the book] This was the second time of Baruch's reading this book, almost a year after the first reading of it (ver. 6).

In the chamber of Gemariah—the scribe,] Compare xxxv. 4. That chamber opened into the higher court, so that Baruch might read there in the audience of all the people (ver. 13). The scribe is the same with the secretary of state (see 2 Kings xviii. 37). Some understand the scribe to be the same that is called the "principal scribe of the host," lii. 25, or in the modern language, the "secretary of war."

In the higher court,] There were two courts before the temple (see 2 Kings xxi. 5); the higher court was that of the priests; between which and the court of the Israelites there was only a partition: but this whole platform was parted from the court of the women, by a wall, and an ascent of fifteen steps. From whence some derive the title of a "Song of Degrees," which is given to the hundred and twentieth Psalm, and those that follow to the hundred and thirty-second (see Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple, ch. 20).

At the entry of the new gate] See xxvi. 10.

Ver. 11.] Shaphan's family were all great men at court (see the note on xxvi. 24).

Ver. 12. All the princes sat there,] The chief officers of state, who were probably members also of the great Sanhedrin (see xxvi. 10, xxxviii. 4).

17 And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, How didst thou write all these words at his mouth?

18 Then Baruch answered them, He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book.

19 Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah; and let no man know where ye be.

20 And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king.

21 So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll: and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber. And Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king.

22 Now the king sat in the winter-house in the ninth month: and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.

23 And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with the penknife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

24 Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words.

25 Nevertheless Elnathan and Delaiah and Gemariah had made intercession to the king that he would not burn the roll: but he would not hear them.

26 But the king commanded Jerahmeel the son of Hammelech, and Seraiah the son of Az-

Ver. 16. When they had heard all the words, they were afraid] The judgments denounced were so terrible, as to make the "ears of them that heard them to tingle" (see xix. 3).

Ver. 19.] They thought it their duty to acquaint the king with the matter (ver. 16), but yet were unwilling that Jeremiah and Baruch should feel the effects of his displeasure. [Jeremiah was a prisoner when he commanded Baruch to read this roll to the people (ver. 5); but what is here said relates to the year following. Compare ver. 1, with ver. 9.]

Ver. 22. The king sat in the winter-house] The great men had distinct houses or apartments, fitted for the several seasons of the year (see Amos iii. 15).

In the ninth month:] Which answers partly to our November, partly to December.

Ver. 23. Three or four leaves,] Their books were made in form of a roll (see ver. 2), and therefore were not divided into leaves or pages, as ours are: so that by leaves we are to understand the columns, or several partitions, into which the breadth of the parchment was divided. This sense the Septuagint have expressed by the word αἰδε, which is used for the columns in Origen's edition of the Hexapla, by Epiphanius, lib. De Ponderib. et Mensuris, cap. 19.

Ver. 24. Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments,] A custom observed among the Jews at the hearing any dreadful news (see 2 Sam. i. 11, 2 Kings xxii. 11). The fear they were seized with at their first hearing these threatenings (ver. 16), quickly wore off, or else they durst not discover it in the king's presence, who did not show any concern himself.

riel and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, to take Baruch the scribe and Jeremiah the prophet: but the LORD hid them.

27 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah, after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah, saying, 28 Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burned.

29 And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim the king of Judah, Thus saith the LORD; Thou has burned this roll, saying, Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast?

Ver. 26. The Lord hid them.] By the direction of providence, they were concealed in such a place where they were not discovered.

Ver. 29. Thou shalt say to Jehoiakim] Or, of Jehoiakim, so the same expression is translated, ver. 30. For this command seems to have been given to Jeremiah during the time of his concealment.

Why hast thou written therein.] This probably was part of the message which was to have been delivered to Jeremiah by the king's command, if he could have been found.

Ver. 30. He shall have none to sit upon the throne] "None of his seed shall prosper, sitting on the throne of David," as God threatens his son Jehoia-

30 Therefore thus saith the LORD of Jehoiakim king of Judah; He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David: and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.

31 And I will punish him and his seed and his servants for their iniquity; and I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them; but they hearkened not.

32 ¶ Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many like words.

chin (xxii 39), who reigned but three months, and left none to succeed him in a direct line (see the note upon that place).

His dead body shall be cast out] See xxii. 19.

Ver. 32. There were added besides unto them many like words.] From hence we may infer, that God's Spirit did not always indite the very form of words which the holy writers have set down, but directing them in general to express his sense in proper words, left the manner of expression to themselves. From whence proceeds that variety of style which we may observe in the scriptures, suitable to the different genius and education of the writers.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 AND king Zedekiah the son of Josiah reigned instead of Coniah the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon made king in the land of Judah.

2 But neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the LORD, which he spake by the prophet Jeremiah.

3 And Zedekiah the king sent Jehucal the son of Shelemiah and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest to the prophet Jeremiah, saying, Pray now unto the LORD our God for us.

4 Now Jeremiah came in and went out among the people: for they had not put him into prison.

5 Then Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt: and when the Chaldeans that besieged Jerusalem heard tidings of them, they departed from Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto the prophet Jeremiah, saying,

7 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, that sent you unto me to enquire of me; Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land, 8 And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire.

9 Thus saith the LORD; Deceive not your-

ARGUMENT.—The king of Egypt coming with an army to the relief of Zedekiah, obliged Nebuchadrezzar to raise the siege of Jerusalem. Upon which Zedekiah and his people conceived hopes of a deliverance from the Chaldeans. But the prophet foretelling that they would certainly return, and take the city, he is accused of siding with the enemy, and put in prison: but afterward released by Zedekiah.

Ver. 1. Zedekiah—whom Nebuchadrezzar—made king in the land of Judah.] Made him a tributary king, he having taken an oath of homage to the king of Babylon (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13, Ezek. xvii. 13).

Ver. 3. The king sent—Zephaniah] See xxi. 1.

Ver. 4. They had not put him into prison.] As they did afterward (see ver. 15, and xxxii. 2).

Ver. 5.] Zedekiah, contrary to the oath that he had given to Nebuchadrezzar, made an alliance with the king of Egypt, and contracted with him for assistance against the king of Babylon: whereupon the king of Egypt sent an army to his relief (see Ezek. xvii. 15); which obliged the Chaldeans to raise the siege of Jerusalem, that they might go and fight this army.

Ver. 7. Pharaoh's army—shall return to Egypt] They shall be discomfited by the Chaldeans, and forced to retreat without giving any assistance to Zedekiah (see 2 Kings xxiv. 7, Ezek. xvii. 17).

Ver. 8.] See xxxiv. 22.

10 For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, that when the army of the Chaldeans was broken up from Jerusalem for fear of Pharaoh's army;

12 Then Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem to go into the land of Benjamin, to separate himself thence in the midst of the people.

13 And when he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he took Jeremiah the prophet, saying, Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans.

14 Then said Jeremiah, It is false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him: so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes.

15 Wherefore the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe: for they had made that the prison.

16 ¶ When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, and Jeremiah had remained there many days;

17 Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took him out: and the king asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the Lord? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon.

18 Moreover Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, that ye have put me in prison?

19 Where are now your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land?

20 Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: let my supplication, I pray thee, be accepted before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there.

21 Then Zedekiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah into the court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street, until all the bread in the city were spent. Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

that there will be no need of any opposition from your enemies (compare xxi. 4, 5).

Ver. 12. Land of Benjamin.] To Anathoth (see i. 1).

To separate himself thence in the midst of the people.] Or rather, "from the midst of his people," or "from among his people:" for the preposition min is to be taken as belonging in common to the latter part of the sentence. And so the French translation, published for the use of the reformed churches, understands it to this sense, that Jeremiah purposed to leave the city, and retire into his own country.

Ver. 13. When he was in the gate of Benjamin.] The gate that leads towards the country of Benjamin.

Irijah—the son of Hananiah;] Probably of that Hananiah whose death Jeremiah foretold, xxvii. 17. So this nephew of his thought to revenge his grandfather's quarrel.

Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans.] Compare xxviii. 4. The ground of this accusation was, because the prophet had foretold that they should take the city, and had exhorted the Jews to submit to them (see ver. 10 of this chapter, xxvii. 6, &c. xxviii. 14, xxxiv. 2, 3).

Ver. 14. It is false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans.] His foretelling the calamity that should come upon the nation, by the means of the Chaldeans, did not prove him to take their part, because at the same time he gave advice both to king and people, how they, in some measure, might escape the judgments he had denounced against them (xxii. 2, 3, xxxviii. 17, xviii. 11, xxxvi. 3, and the note upon iv. 28).

Brought him to the princes.] To the chief officers of state (see xxxvi. 12).

Ver. 16. When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon,] See xxxviii. 6).

Had remained there many days;] Till the Chaldean army had renewed the siege (see ver. 19).

Ver. 19. Where are now your prophets? i. e. Your false prophets (compare xxvi. 7. xxix. 1). The event hath now convinced you how much they have deceived you: for you see the siege renewed, and the city in imminent danger of being taken.

Ver. 21. Into the court of the prison,] A more favourable restraint (see xxxii. 2).

Until all the bread in the city were spent.] Till the famine forced the city to surrender (see lii. 6). This was the king's first order, but afterward it was reversed, by the importunity of the princes and great men (xxxviii. 6), when Jeremiah was again thrown into the dungeon: though after that he was released from that place, and returned to his former confinement (ibid. ver. 28).

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1 THEN Shephatiah the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shelemiah, and Pashur the son of Malchiah,

CHAP. XXXVIII.

ARGUMENT.—Upon the princes' informing the king against Jeremiah, he is again thrown into the dungeon: but afterward released, upon Ebed-melech's heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, He that remaineth in supplication to the king, whom he advises to submit to the Chaldeans.

Ver. 1.] Some of those who were sent by Zedekiah to Jeremiah, to inquire of the Lord concerning the

this city shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live; for he shall have his life for a prey, and shall live.

3 Thus saith the Lord, This city shall surely be given into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which shall take it.

4 Therefore the princes said unto the king, We beseech thee, let this man be put to death: for thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people, in speaking such words unto them: for this man seeketh not the welfare of this people, but the hurt.

5 Then Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you.

6 Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchiah the son of Hammelech, that was in the court of the prison: and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon there was no water, but mire: so Jeremiah sunk in the mire.

7 ¶ Now when Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, one of the eunuchs which was in the king's house, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the dungeon; the king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin;

8 Ebed-melech went forth out of the king's house, and spake to the king, saying,

9 My lord the king, these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is: for there is no more bread in the city.

10 Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Take from hence thirty men with thee, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon, before he die.

11 So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.

12 And Ebed-melech the Ethiopian said unto Jeremiah, Put now these old cast clouts and rotten rags under thine arm-holes under the cords. And Jeremiah did so.

13 So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

14 ¶ Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the third entry that is in the house of the Lord: and the king said unto Jeremiah, I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me.

15 Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me?

16 So Zedekiah the king sware secretly unto event of the siege (see xxxvii. 3, xxi. 1, 9). The answer which Jeremiah returned by them to the king, he afterward published to all the people, which was the occasion of the new troubles he fell into, recorded in this chapter.

Ver. 4. The princes said] See xxxvi. 12, 21.

For thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war] By making them despair of success.

Ver. 5.] The king speaks as one who in such difficult times durst not contradict the great men about him: or else his answer implies, that it was properly the business of the Sanhedrin to take cognizance of the prophets (see Luke xiii. 33, and Selden, De Synedris, lib. iii. cap. 9, n. 1).

Ver. 6. Into the dungeon of Malchiah] Near the place where he was before, under a more gentle restraint (see xxxii. 2, xxxvii. 21).

So Jeremiah sunk in the mire.] Some think that when he was in this dismal place, he made those mournful meditations which are set down in the third chapter of the Lamentations (see the fifty-third and fifty-fifth verses of that chapter).

Ver. 7. Now when Ebed-melech the Ethiopian] Huetius, in his Treatise De Navigatione Solomonis, cap. 7, n. 7, observes out of Josephus, that Solomon, in his voyage to Tarshish, mentioned 1 Kings x. 22, amongst other merchandise, brought slaves from Ethiopia; which was likewise the practice of the Greeks and Romans in aftertimes, as he there proves by several testimonies: such a slave he supposes this Ebed-melech to have been, called here a eunuch, or officer of the king's house (compare xxix. 2, xxxiv. 19). In the Hebrew he is called the Chuite, which may likewise signify the Arabian (see the note on xiii. 23).

The king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin]; Princes and magistrates usually heard causes in the gates of the city (see Deut. xxi. 19, xxii. 15, Ruth iv. 1, 11, Ps. lxxix. 12, Amos. v. 10, 12, 15). Concerning the gate of Benjamin, see xxxvii. 13.

Ver. 9. These men have done evil] This person, though only a proselyte, had a greater regard for God's word, and the messenger that published it, than any of the great men of his own nation (see xxxix. 16).

[Whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is like to die for hunger] They needed not to have put him into the dungeon, he would have died of hunger, without adding the cruelty of that punishment).

There is no more bread] See xxxvii. 21, lii. 6.

Ver. 14. Then Zedekiah—took Jeremiah—into the third entry that is in [or by] the house of the Lord:] Dr. Lightfoot explains this of the third passage or gate which lay between the king's palace, where the prison was, and the temple, whither the king now retreated for fear of the Chaldean army (see his description of the temple, ch. 23).

Ver. 15. If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death?] The prophet had so much experience of the unsteadiness of the king's temper, of his backwardness in following good counsel, and want of courage to stand by those that durst advise him well, that he might with good reason resolve not to venture his life to serve a man that was in a manner incapable of being directed. And although God had shown him what would be the effect of his advice, if it were followed (ver. 17), yet it doth not appear that he had commanded him to make this known to Zedekiah.

Wilt thou not hearken unto me?] The latter part of the sentence may be translated without an interrogation, "thou wilt not hearken unto me." So the prophet might well conclude from his former behaviour (see xxxvii. 2). If we follow our English

Jeremiah, saying. As the LORD liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of these men that seek thy life.

17 Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt live, and thine house:

18 But if thou wilt not go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand.

19 And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me.

20 But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the LORD, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live.

21 But if thou refuse to go forth, this is the word that the LORD hath shewed me:

22 And, behold, all the women that are left in the king of Judah's house shall be brought forth to the king of Babylon's princes, and those women shall say, Thy friends have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee: thy feet are sunk in the mire, and they are turned away back.

23 So they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans: and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but shalt be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon: and thou shalt cause this city to be burned with fire.

24 ¶ Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die.

25 But if the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death; also what the king said unto thee:

26 Then thou shalt say unto them, I presented my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathian's house to die there.

27 Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him: and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded. So they left off speaking with him; for the matter was not perceived.

28 So Jeremiah abode in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

translation, the sense is the same as if the words were rendered, "Wilt thou hearken unto me?" Noldius observes in his Concordance, p. 256, that the negative interrogation hato, is sometimes equivalent to an affirmative; of which he gives this example (1 Kings i. 11), "Nathan spake unto Bathsheba, saying—Hast thou not heard that Adonijah doth reign?" Where the sense is the same as if he had said, "Hast thou heard?" See a like instance, Zech. iv. 13. This observation will help to explain that difficult place in Job (iv. 6), "Is not this thy fear, thy confidence, thy hope, and the uprightness of thy ways?" So interpreters generally render the words: but the sense would be much plainer, if we translate them, "Is this thy fear?" &c. i. e. Are thy great pretences to piety, and thy assurance of God's favour, of so little force, that they cannot afford thee any support in thy troubles? To this sense the Vulgar Latin translates the verse, Ubi est timor tuus, fortitudo tua, &c.

Ver. 16. As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul,] i. e. The author of our life and being, and may he preserve it or take it away as I speak truth or falsehood. For such-like oaths had always some good or ill wish understood to go along with them; like that form of asseveration, 2 Kings ii. 2, "As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth;" or "As I wish thy soul may live:" for so the expression may be translated.

Ver. 17. The king of Babylon's princes.] Those mentioned, xxxix. 3, and submit thyself to them.

[Thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire;] It has been before observed, that the judgments denounced against Jerusalem were not irreversible. See note upon iv. 28, xvii. 25.]

Ver. 18. Thou shalt not escape] See xxxix. 5.

Ver. 19. They mock me.] When I am in the power of the Chaldeans, I fear that they will treat me with scorn and contempt, without any regard to my royal character. This he said as conscious to himself, that he had broken that oath of homage and fidelity he had before given to the king of Babylon, so that he might justly be treated as a man of no faith or honour (see note on xxxvii. 5).

Ver. 20.] God foresees all possible events, and what will be the different success of the several counsels men propose to themselves.

Ver. 21. This is the word] Namely, that both the king and city shall be delivered into the hand of the Chaldeans (see ver. 18).

Ver. 22. All the women that are left in the king of Judah's house, &c.] The king's wives, his daughters, and the other women that belong to the king's court and family, shall become a prey to the chief officers of the king of Babylon's army (see xli. 10, xliii. 6).

Those women shall say, Thy friends have set thee on,] These very women shall then reproach thee for having suffered thyself to be ensnared by the ill advice of thy friends, and brought under insuperable difficulties.

They are turned away back.] Even thy friends, who advised thee not to submit to the Chaldeans, will forsake thee in thy distress, and take the first opportunity of going over to them.

Ver. 24.] Keep what hath passed between us secret, and I will keep my promise to thee of preserving thy life (see ver. 16).

Ver. 26.] Jeremiah had been formerly kept prisoner there (xxxvii. 15). But the last time he was imprisoned, was in the dungeon of Hammelech (ver. 6 of this chapter); a place which at this time might, perhaps, be put to some other use.

Ver. 27. He told them according to all these words] He told them part of the truth, but not all, concealing from them the advice he had given the king, with relation to the questions he had proposed to him.

Ver. 28. Court of the prison] See xxxix. 21.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 In the ninth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the tenth month, came Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon and all his army against Jerusalem, and they besieged it.

2 And in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the fourth month, the ninth day of the month, the city was broken up.

3 And all the princes of the king of Babylon came in, and sat in the middle gate, even Nergal-sharezer, Samgar-nebo, Sarsechim, Rab-saris, Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, with all the residue of the princes of the king of Babylon.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, that when Zedekiah the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, by the gate betwixt the two walls: and he went out the way of the plain.

5 But the Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and when they had taken him, they brought him up to Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon to Riblah in the land of Hamath, where he gave judgment upon him.

6 Then the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon slew all the nobles of Judah.

7 Moreover he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him with chains, to carry him to Babylon,

8 ¶ And the Chaldeans burned the king's house, and the houses of the people, with fire, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem.

9 Then Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive into Babylon the remnant of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained.

10 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields at the same time.

11 ¶ Now Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon gave charge concerning Jeremiah to Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard, saying, 12 Take him, and look well to him, and do him no harm; but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee.

13 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard sent, and Nebushasban, Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, and all the king of Babylon's princes;

14 Even they sent, and took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison, and committed him unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan,

CHAP. XXXIX.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains an account of the taking and burning Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, who also took Zedekiah, and carried him to Babylon: but had particular orders from their king to use Jeremiah well, who a little before had, by God's direction, made a promise to Ebed-melech of the divine favour and protection, as a reward of the kindness he had shown to the prophet.

Ver. 1.] See lii. 4, 2 Kings xxv. 1, 2.

Ver. 2. The city was broken up.] Such breaches were made in the walls, that the army of the Chaldeans, with their commanders, entered, and took possession of the city (see the following verse).

Ver. 3. Sat in the middle gate.] The gate between the wall that encompassed the city, and that which enclosed the temple.

Even Nergal-sharezer, Samgar-nebo.] It was customary among the Chaldeans to give the names of their idols, as an additional title, or mark of honour, to persons of distinction (see the note on Isa. xxxix. 1). Nergal was the name of an idol among the Cushites (2 Kings xvii. 30). Nebo was a considerable deity among the Chaldeans (Isa. xlvi. 1).

[Ver. 4. When Zedekiah—saw them, and all the men of war.] When the king, and the armed men that were with him, saw that the Chaldeans were entered into the city, and had made themselves masters of it; instead of submitting himself to them, as Jeremiah advised him (xxxviii. 17, 18), he endeavoured to make his escape.]

Betwixt the two walls:] Betwixt the wall and the outworks: or betwixt the old wall of the city, and that new one which Hezekiah built (see 2 Chron. xxxii. 5).

Ver. 5. Plains of Jericho.] Compare Josh. v. 10.

This is called the “way of the plain,” or wilderness, Josh. viii. 15, and the “plain of the wilderness,” 2 Sam. xv. 28, xvii. 16, and elsewhere the “wilderness of Judea” (see Matt. iii. 1).

To Riblah.] See the note on xlix. 23. Most interpreters suppose this city to be the same which was called Antioch, in after times, when it was re-edified by Seleucus. In this sense the Jerusalem Targum, upon Numb. xxxiv. 11, understands the word.

Where he gave judgment upon him.] Pronounced sentence upon him, as one who had broken his oath of fidelity to the king of Babylon, which he took when he made him king of Judea (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10, 13, 2 Kings xxiv. 20, Ezek. xvii. 15, 18).

Ver. 7.] See lii. 11, where the text adds, that he “put him in prison till the day of his death.” And thus were fulfilled two prophecies that seemed at first hearing to contradict one another; the first that of Jeremiah, that “Zedekiah's eyes should behold the eyes of the king of Babylon,” Jer. xxxii. 4, and the other that of Ezekiel, that “he should not see Babylon, though he should die there,” Ezek. xii. 14.

Ver. 9.] Compare 2 Kings xxv. 11. He carried away the fugitives, or deserters, that fell away to the Chaldeans during the siege, as well as those whom he took that were shut up in the city.

Ver. 11, 12. Nebuchadrezzar—gave charge concerning Jeremiah.] He was informed that the prophet had exhorted both king and people to submit themselves to his authority (see xxviii. 11, xxxviii. 17, 18); whose advice if it had been hearkened to, would have prevented the charge and labour of so long a siege, and the bloodshed which attended it.

Ver. 14. Took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison.] Where he was when the city was taken (xxxviii. 28).

Committed him unto Gedaliah.] After he had first that he should carry him home: so he dwelt among the people.

15 ¶ Now the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, while he was shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

16 Go and speak to Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and been carried out of Jerusalem, with the rest of the captives, as far as Ramah (see xl. 1, 5).

Ver. 15. While he was shut up] Before the taking of the city (see the foregoing verse).

they shall be accomplished in that day before thee.

17 But I will deliver thee in that day, saith the LORD: and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men of whom thou art afraid.

18 For I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee: because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORD.

Ver. 18. Thy life shall be for a prey] See xxi. 9.

Because thou hast put thy trust in me,] See note on xxxviii. 9.

CHAPTER XL.

1 THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, after that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had let him go from Ramah, when he had taken him, being bound in chains among all that were carried away captive of Jerusalem and Judah, which were carried away captive unto Babylon.

2 And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah, and said unto him, The LORD thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place.

3 Now the LORD hath brought it, and done according as he hath said: because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed his voice, therefore this thing is come upon you.

4 And now, behold, I loose thee this day from the chains which were upon thine hand. If it seem good unto thee to come with me into Babylon, come; and I will look well unto thee: but if it seem ill unto thee to come with me into Babylon, forbear: behold, all the land is before thee: whither it seemeth good and convenient for thee to go, thither go.

5 Now while he was not yet gone back, he said, Go back also to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people: or go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go. So the captain of the guard gave him victuals and a reward, and let him go.

6 Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.

7 ¶ Now when all the captains of the forces which were in the fields, even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of the poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon;

8 Then they came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai the

CHAP. XL.

ARGUMENT.—Jeremiah is directed by Nebuzar-adan to repair to Gedaliah, whom the king of Babylon had made governor of the land, and to whom the dispersed Jews from all parts repair. Johanan informs the governor of Ishmael's conspiracy, but is not believed.

Ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah] This relates to the prophecy set down xlii. 7, which was occasioned by the story that here follows, concerning Ishmael's conspiracy against Gedaliah.

After that Nebuzar-adan—had let him go from Ramah,] He was taken out of the court of the prison (see xxxix. 14), and carried with the other captives as far as Ramah, a town not far from Jerusalem (see Judg. xix. 10, 13).

Ver. 5. While he was not yet gone back,] The words in the Hebrew are very perplexed, and by the different translations of the ancient interpreters, one might guess that some Hebrew copies had a different reading from the present. The Vulgar Latin reads, "And come not along with me;" as if he read, in the Hebrew, inance for odenu. Some of the ancient Greek copies read, "Before I go away, go back thou to Gedaliah." The Chaldee seems to interpret it to the plainest sense, "If thou wilt not abide [here], go back to Gedaliah:" understanding the verb yashub, as if it were derived from yashab to abide. Words of a like sound having often a promiscuous signification, see note on xxiii. 39.]

Go back also to Gedaliah] This Gedaliah was a person of a considerable family, for interest and authority (see note on xxvi. 24).

So the captain of the guard gave him victuals and a reward,] This kind usage was shown to the prophet, by the particular order of Nebuchadnezzar (see xxxix. 11, 12).

Ver. 6. Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah—to Mizpah;] A town in the confines of Judah and Benjamin (see Josh. xv. 28, xviii. 26), where Gedaliah kept his residence, being a place of note in the times of the Judges (see Judg. xx. 1, 1 Sam. vii. 5, 6), and afterward rebuilt by king Asa (1 Kings xv. 22).

Ver. 7.] By the taking of Jerusalem, the Chaldeans made a complete conquest of Judea: whereupon the Jewish army with its commanders fled (see xxxix. 4), and dispersed themselves into several parts of the country: but upon the news of Gedaliah's being appointed governor of the land, they repaired all to him.

Ver. 8. The Netophathite,] Of Netophah, a town mentioned Ezra ii. 22.

Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

9 And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan sware unto them and to their men, saying, Fear not to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.

10 As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve the Chaldeans, which will come unto us: but ye, gather ye wine, and summer fruits, and oil, and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities that ye have taken.

11 Likewise when all the Jews that were in Moab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan;

12 Even all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land

Jezaniah the son of a Maachathite,] Descended from Maachah, Caleb's concubine, (1 Chron. ii. 48.) The same person is called Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah, (xlii. 1).

Ver. 9. Fear not to serve the Chaldeans:] The same advice Jeremiah had formerly given the Jews (see xxvii. 11, xxix. 7).

Ver. 10. I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve the Chaldeans, which will come unto us:] I keep my residence here to be ready to obey any orders that the king of Babylon sends me by his servants (see xli. 3).

of Judah, to Gedaliah, unto Mizpah, and gathered wine and summer fruits very much.

13 ¶ Moreover Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, 14 And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know that Baalis the king of the Ammonites hath sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah to slay thee? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not.

15 Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it: wherefore should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant in Judah perish?

16 But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, Thou shalt not do this thing: for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

Gather ye wine, and summer fruits, and oil,] Wine and oil are put by a metonymy for grapes and olives. It was now about the month of August (compare xli. 1), the proper season for gathering in the summer fruits in that country (see Deut. xvi. 13).

Ver. 11.] See notes upon xii. 14, xv. 4.

Ver. 14.] The king of the Ammonites had concerted this matter with Ishmael, with a design to make the Jews, who still remained in their own country, his vassals (see xli. 10).

CHAPTER XLI.

1 Now it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, and the princes of the king, even ten men with him, came unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and there they did eat bread together in Mizpah.

2 Then arose Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and the ten men that were with him, and smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land.

3 Ishmael also slew all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah, at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war.

4 And it came to pass the second day after he had slain Gedaliah, and no man knew it,

5 That there came certain from Shechem, from

CHAP. XLI.

ARGUMENT.—Ishmael treacherously killeth Gedaliah and his companions, with an intent to carry away the Jews that were with him captives into the country of the Ammonites. But Johanan recovers the captives, and purposeth to fly into Egypt.

Ver. 1. Seventh month,] Answering partly to our September, and partly to October. The murder of Gedaliah gave occasion for the fast of the seventh month, which the Jews observed after their return from captivity (see Zech. vii. 5, viii. 19).

Ishmael of the seed royal,] He valued himself upon his extraction, and bare a grudge against Gedaliah, because he was set above him.

The princes of the king.] Some of the chief officers of state belonging to Zedekiah (see xxxvi. 12, 21, xxxviii. 4); these brought a great number of others with them as their retinue, or else they could not have made such destruction as they did (ver. 3).

Ver. 3. That is, all those that joined in opposing Ishmael, and assisting Gedaliah: for several of the commanders, as well as the greatest part of the people, were still left alive, as appears by the sequel of the story (see ver. 10, 11).

Ver. 5. Having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, &c.] These were tokens of great mourning, by which these persons expressed their grief for the destruction of the city and temple. Such expressions of sorrow were forbidden to be used at funeral obsequies (see Lev. xix. 27, 28), but might be lawfully used upon other mournful occasions; as hath been observed upon Isa. xv. 2.

With offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the Lord.] Some understand this as if devout persons brought their oblations to the place where the altar formerly stood, which they looked upon as consecrated ground: and this custom they think countenanced by the words of Baruch, i. 10, where the exiles at Babylon are supposed to “send money to buy offerings for the altar of the Lord,” after that Jerusalem “was taken and burnt” (compare ver. 2): others understand the “house of the Lord,” of an altar, or place of worship, erected by Gedaliah at Mizpah, in imitation of that which was formerly set up there by Samuel (1 Sam. vii. 7, from Shiloh, and from Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves, with offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the LORD.

6 And Ishmael the son of Nethaniah went forth from Mizpah to meet them, weeping all along as he went: and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.

7 And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him.

8 But ten men were found among them that said unto Ishmael, Slay us not: for we have treasures in the field, of wheat, and of barley, and of oil, and of honey. So he forbore, and slew them not among their brethren.

9 Now the pit wherein Ishmael had cast all the dead bodies of the men, whom he had slain because of Gedaliah, was it which Asa the king had made for fear of Baasha king of Israel: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with them that were slain.

10 Then Ishmael carried away captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizpah, even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpah, whom Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed to go over to the Ammonites.

11 ¶ But when Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had done, 12 Then they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and found him by the great waters that are in Gibeon.

13 Now it came to pass, that when all the people which were with Ishmael saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, then they were glad.

14 So all the people that Ishmael had carried away captive from Mizpah cast about and returned, and went unto Johanan the son of Kareah.

15 But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites.

16 Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, all the remnant of the people whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpah, after that he had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, even mighty men of war, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, whom he had brought again from Gibeon:

17 And they departed, and dwelt in the habitation of Chimham, which is by Beth-lehem, to go to enter into Egypt.

18 Because of the Chaldeans: for they were afraid of them, because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

9), which place continued to be a proseucha, or place of worship, in aftertimes, as appears from 1 Macc. iii. 46. There were many such sanctuaries or places of worship, both in Judea and elsewhere, among the Jewish dispersions, as Dr. Prideaux hath shown at large, in his Connect. of Scripture History, p. 387, &c.

Ver. 6. Weeping all along as he went:] As if he had sympathized with them.

Ver. 7. Ishmael—slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit:] The Hebrew reads, “slew them into the midst of a pit.” We find the very same expression, 1 Macc. vii. 19, a book translated out of Hebrew, as St. Jerome tells us, in Prologo Galeato. Of the same kind are the following expressions (Ps. lxxiv. 7), “They have defiled the dwelling-place of thy name unto the ground;” as our old translation reads out of the Hebrew. So Ps. lxxxix. 39, “Thou hast profaned his crown by casting it to the ground,” as the new translation supplies the sense.

Ver. 8. We have treasures in the field,] Or, “in the country,” as the word is elsewhere used, by way of distinction, from a town or city (see xl. 7, 13). They promised to make him master of what they were worth, if he would spare their lives.

Ver. 9.] This pit was the ditch which Asa cast up against the walls of Mizpah, when he rebuilt and fortified it against the attempts of Baasha (see 1 Kings xv. 22).

Ver. 10. Go over to the Ammonites.] See xl. 14.

Ver. 12. By the great waters that are in Gibeon.] Called the “pool of Gibeon,” 2 Sam. ii. 13.

Ver. 16. The eunuchs.] See xxxiv. 19, xxxviii. 7.

Ver. 17. Dwelt in the habitation of Chimham.] A parcel of ground which David had settled upon Chimham the son of Barzillai (see 2 Sam. xix. 38, 40).

Ver. 18.] They were afraid, lest they should impute this insurrection to the whole body of the Jews that were left in the land, as if they were desirous of restoring the government to the royal family.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 THEN all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah, and all the people from the least even unto the greatest, came near,

CHAP. XLII.

ARGUMENT.—Johanan and the other captains desire Jeremiah to inquire of God what they should do, promising obedience to his will. The prophet assures them of safety in Judea, and destruction in Egypt, and reproves their hypocrisy in promising what they meant not to perform.

2 And said unto Jeremiah the prophet, Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee, and pray for us unto the LORD thy God, even for all this remnant; (for we are left but a few of many, as thine eyes do behold us:)

3 That the LORD thy God may shew us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do.

4 Then Jeremiah the prophet said unto them, I have heard you; behold, I will pray unto the LORD your God according to your words; and it shall come to pass, that whatsoever thing the LORD shall answer you, I will declare it unto you; I will keep nothing back from you.

5 Then they said to Jeremiah, The LORD be a true and faithful witness between us, if we do not even according to all things for the which the LORD thy God shall send thee to us.

6 Whether it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the LORD our God, to whom we send thee; that it may be well with us, when we obey the voice of the LORD our God.

7 ¶ And it came to pass after ten days, that the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah.

8 Then called he Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces which were with him, and all the people from the least even to the greatest,

9 And said unto them, Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, unto whom you sent me to present your supplication before him;

10 If ye will still abide in this land, then will I build you, and not pull you down, and I will plant you, and not pluck you up: for I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you.

11 Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid; be not afraid of him, saith the LORD: for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand.

12 And I will shew mercies unto you, that he may have mercy upon you, and cause you to return to your own land.

13 ¶ But if ye say, we will not dwell in this land, neither obey the voice of the LORD your God,

14 Saying, No; but we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor have hunger of bread; and there will we dwell:

15 And now therefore hear the word of the LORD, ye remnant of Judah; Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt, and go to sojourn there;

16 Then it shall come to pass, that the sword, which ye feared, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt, and the famine whereof ye were afraid, shall follow close after you there in Egypt; and there ye shall die.

17 So shall it be with all the men that set their faces to go into Egypt to sojourn there; they shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: and none of them shall remain or escape from the evil that I will bring upon them.

18 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; As mine anger and my fury hath been poured forth upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem; so shall my fury be poured forth upon you, when ye shall enter into Egypt: and ye shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach; and ye shall see this place no more.

19 ¶ The LORD hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah; Go ye not into Egypt: know certainly that I have admonished you this day.

20 For ye dissembled in your hearts, when ye sent me unto the LORD your God, saying, Pray for us unto the LORD our God; and according unto all that the LORD our God shall say, so declare unto us, and we will do it.

21 And now I have this day declared it to you; but ye have not obeyed the voice of the LORD your God, nor any thing for the which he hath sent me unto you.

Ver. 1. Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah,] See xl. 8.

Ver. 2, 3. Pray for us—that the Lord thy God may shew us the way wherein we may walk,] It is the constant method of hypocrites to pretend a profound submission to the will of God till that comes to cross their inclinations or interest.

Ver. 10. Then will I build you up, and not pull you down,] See xxiv. 6, xxxi. 28, xxxiii. 7.

For I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you] God is said in scripture to repent, when he alters the outward methods of his providence, as hath been observed upon xviii. 11. So the expression here implies a declaration from God, that the punishments the Jews have already undergone have made satisfaction to his justice, as far as concerns this world, and that he will not continue the same severity towards them unless they give him a new provocation.

Ver. 12.] I will incline the heart of the king of Babylon to take pity on you (see Ps. cvi. 46): and so settle you in your own country, from whence you were driven during the late wars and distractions (see xl. 11).

VOL. III.—60

Ver. 15. If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt,] If you are fully resolved to go thither (compare Luke ix. 51).

Ver. 16.] See xlv. 14, 18.

Ver. 18.] See note on xxiv. 9.

Ver. 19.] God commanded the Jews, by Moses, not to have any commerce with Egypt (see Deut. xvii. 16): that they may not practise the idolatrous customs of that country (see Lev. xviii. 3); with whose idolatries they had been defiled during their sojourning there (see Jesh. xxiv. 14, Ezek. xx. 8): afterward he often reproved them by his prophets, for making alliances with Egypt (see Isa. xxx. 2, &c. Ezek. xvii. 15). There were particular reasons at this time for so severe a prohibition, as the words here and in the context import, viz. because the Jews either learned several of their idolatrous practices from the Egyptians, or at least were confirmed in those evil customs by their example (see xlv. 8, 15, Ezek. xxix. 16). Besides, it was the rival kingdom that contended for empire with the Babylonians (see xxxvii. 5, xlv. 2). So the Jews going into Egypt for protection, was in tilence, in the place whither ye desire to go and to sojourn.

effect refusing to submit themselves to the king of Babylon, to whom God had decreed the government of Judea, and all the neighbouring countries (xxvii. 6).

CHAPTER XLIII.

1 AND it came to pass, that when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking unto all the people all the words of the LORD their God, for which the LORD their God had sent him to them, even all these words,

2 Then spake Azariah the son of Hoshaiah, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the proud men, saying unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsely: the LORD our God hath not sent thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there:

3 But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they might put us to death, and carry us away captives into Babylon.

4 So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, obeyed not the voice of the LORD, to dwell in the land of Judah.

5 But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations, whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah;

6 Even men, and women, and children, and the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.

7 So they came into the land of Egypt: for they obeyed not the voice of the LORD: thus came they even to Tahpanhes.

8 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying,

9 Take great stones in thine hand, and hide them in clay in the brick-kiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes, in the sight of the men of Judah;

10 And say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will send and take Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will set his throne upon these stones that I have hid; and he shall spread his royal pavilion over them.

11 And when he cometh, he shall smite the land of Egypt, and deliver such as are for death

CHAP. XLIII.

ARGUMENT.—The leading men, discrediting Jeremiah's prophecy, carry the people into Egypt, contrary to his advice: whereupon he foretells the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 2. Azariah the son of Hoshaiah.] Called Je-zaniah, xlii. 1. We may observe many like instances in the books of Kings and Chronicles, of the same persons being called by two different names.

All the proud men.] Who refused to obey Almighty God, when his commands crossed their own inclinations.

The Lord—hath not sent thee] The constant method of hypocrites and infidels, who pretend they are not satisfied of the truth of divine revelation, when the true cause of their unbelief is, that God's commands contradict their own lusts and appetites.

Ver. 3. But Baruch—settleth thee on against us.] They would not directly accuse Jeremiah of partiality towards, or confederacy with, the Chaldeans, as his enemies had done formerly (xxxvii. 13), but they lay the blame upon Baruch, whom they knew to be an intimate companion of Jeremiah's, and to have been kindly used by the Chaldeans upon Jeremiah's account.

Ver. 5, 6.] Chap. xl. 11, xli. 10.

Ver. 7. Thus came they even to Tahpanhes.] See ii. 16, one of the principal cities of Egypt, and a place of residence for their kings (see ver. 9). The word is contracted to hanes, Isa. xxx. 4, and joined with Zoan, the chief city of the kingdom. Tahpanhes gave a name to a queen of Egypt (1 Kings xi. 19), and is supposed by many to be the same city which was afterward called Daplinæ Pelusiace.

St. Jerome tells us from an ancient tradition, that in this place the prophet Jeremiah was stoned to death by the Jews.

This tradition may receive some confirmation from that passage in the gospels (Matt. xvi. 14, Luke ix. 19), where, among other opinions concerning Christ, it is said some thought him to be the prophet Jeremiah, "risen from the dead." Dr. Lightfoot observes that the Jews thought the kingdom of the Messias should begin with the resurrection of the dead: and particularly, that some of the ancient prophets should rise again, and appear as harbingers to the Messias (see his Horæ Hebr. on Matt. xvi. 13, xxvii. 52, and on Luke ix. 8). And then, who could better pretend to that privilege than the prophet Jeremiah? who beside his remarkable zeal and piety, sealed the truth with his blood. And the Jews were persuaded that the martyrs had a title to the resurrection above all others, as appears from 2 Macc. vii. 9, 18. An opinion countenanced by St. John, Rev. xx. 4, 5, and afterward universally received in the Christian church.

Ver. 9. Hide them in clay in the brick-kiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house.] Bricks were the chief materials which the Babylonians used in most stately buildings (see Gen. xi. 3. and Priccaux's Script. Hist. ad. an. A. C. 570). So there was constant occasion for such a brick-kiln near Pharaoh's palace, yet this might be a great way from the palace itself: the courts of great kings being almost equal to a city for extent in ancient times: particularly the palace in Babylon was four miles in compass, according to Diodorus Siculus, lib. ii.

Ver. 10.] See note on i. 15, xxv. 10.

Ver. 11. He shall smite—Egypt.] See xli. 13.

phet foretells will overspread the country of Egypt, by reason of the famine, occasioned by sieges and other desolations of war.

Ver. 12. I will kindle a fire in the houses of the gods of Egypt;] When God punisheth a heathen nation; as idolatry is one of the principal sins for which he visits, so he in a remarkable manner executes his vengeance upon their idols, who can neither save themselves, nor their worshippers (see xlv. 25, xlvi. 7, 1. 2, li. 44, Exod. xii. 12, Isa. xix. 1, xxi. 9, xlv. 1).

He shall array himself with the land of Egypt, as a shepherd putteth on his garment;] He shall invest the land of Egypt, and take entire possession of it, just as a shepherd's garment covers his body all over. So calamities, when they surround men on every side, are compared to a garment, Ps. cix. 19. And this destruction shall come upon Egypt suddenly, and as it were in a moment; in which sense the verb nut or natah is taken, 1 Sam. xiv. 32, xv. 19.

A learned friend gives the text another turn: he supposes Nebuchadnezzar's army to have endured hard service before they invaded Egypt: this conjecture he grounds upon the words of Ezekiel, xxix. 18—20. So the prophet here promises, that Egypt should furnish them with all manner of necessities, and defend them from the hardships they had been exposed to, just as a shepherd is secured from the injuries of the weather by a thick garment.

Ver. 13. Bethshemesh,] The same place that is called by Isaiah (xix. 18), Nir heres, which our margin rightly translates, "The city of the sun" (see the note upon that place).

The houses of the gods—shall he burn] See Ezek. xxx. 13.

CHAPTER XLIV.

1 THE word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews which dwell in the land of Egypt, which dwell at Migdol, and at Tahpanhes, and at Noph, and in the country of Pathros, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein,

3 Because of their wickedness which they have committed to provoke me to anger, in that they went to burn incense, and to serve other gods, whom they knew not, neither they, ye, nor your fathers.

4 Howbeit I sent unto you all my servants the prophets, rising early and sending them, saying, Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate.

5 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to turn from their wickedness, to burn no incense unto other gods.

6 Wherefore my fury and mine anger was poured forth, and was kindled in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem; and they are wasted and desolate, as at this day.

7 Therefore now thus saith the Lord, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; Wherefore commit ye this great evil against your souls, to cut off from you man and woman, child and suckling, out of Judah, to leave you none to remain;

8 In that ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands, burning incense unto other gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye be gone to dwell, that ye might cut yourselves off, and that ye might be a curse and a reproach among all the nations of the earth?

9 Have ye forgotten the wickedness of your fathers, and the wickedness of the kings of Judah, and the wickedness of their wives, and your own wickedness, and the wickedness of your wives, which they have committed in the land of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem?

10 They are not humbled even unto this day, neither have they feared, nor walked in my law, of Thebais, as Bochart proves by several arguments (Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. 27).

Ver. 3. To serve other gods whom they knew not,] Compare Deut. xiii. 6, xxxii. 17. These idols are opposed to the true God, called elsewhere "the God of their fathers;" i. e. He that had made himself known to them by so many miracles of mercy, and had promised to show the same favour to their posterity, if they continued steadfast in their obedience.

Ver. 4.] See vii. 13, xxv. 4.

Ver. 5.] See ver. 17, 21, xix. 13.

Ver. 7. To cut off—man and woman, child and suckling,] God designed that this remnant should have kept possession in Judea, when the rest of their brethren were carried away captive (see xlii. 10). But by their going into Egypt, and defiling them-

CHAP. XLIV.

ARGUMENT.—Jeremiah reproves the Jews in Egypt, for their continuance in idolatry, notwithstanding the exemplary judgments of God upon their own country and nation for that sin. Upon their obstinate refusal to reform their evil practices, he denounces utter destruction to them, and the king of Egypt, to whose protection they had betaken themselves.

Ver. 1. Jews—which dwell at Migdol,] A place near the Red sea (see Exod. xiv. 2).

At Noph,] Commonly called Memphis, a royal seat formerly: near this place stands one of the pyramids, which is yet remaining.

In the country of Pathros,] That is, the country nor in my statutes, that I set before you and before your fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will set my face against you for evil, and to cut off all Judah.

12 And I will take the remnant of Judah, that have set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, and they shall all be consumed, and fall in the land of Egypt; they shall even be consumed by the sword and by the famine: they shall die, from the least even unto the greatest, by the sword and by the famine: and they shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach.

13 For I will punish them that dwell in the land of Egypt, as I have punished Jerusalem, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence:

14 So that none of the remnant of Judah, which are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape or remain, that they should return into the land of Judah, to the which they have a desire to return to dwell there: for none shall return but such as shall escape.

15 ¶ Then all the men which knew that their wives had burned incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros, answered Jeremiah, saying,

16 As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the LORD, we will not hearken unto thee.

17 But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, as we have done, we and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for then had we plenty of victuals, and were well, and saw no evil.

selves with the idolatries of that nation, they have provoked God to make an utter destruction of them (see ver. 11, 12, 14, 27).

Ver. 11.] See xxi. 10, Lev. xvii. 10, xx. 5, Ps. xxxiv. 16.

Ver. 12, 13.] See xlii. 15—18.

[Ver. 14. None of the remnant—shall escape—that they should return into the land of Judah.] Scaliger observes out of Eusebius, that Artaxerxes Ochus, making an expedition into Egypt, removed a considerable colony of Jews out of that country, and carried them away as far as the Caspian sea, and there settled them. These he thinks were the remainder of those Jews that went down into Egypt at this time. They were called by the other Jews, the Median captivity. See his notes on Euseb. numb. 1658.]

For none shall return but such as shall escape.] See the note on iv. 27. None shall return but the remnant mentioned ver. 28, to whom I will grant that peculiar favour of being saved, or escaping out of the common destruction (compare i. 20). This is the import of the word peliti, commonly rendered by the Septuagint, σῶζονται and ὑποσώσονται (see li. 50, Isa. x. 20, xxxvii. 32, xlv. 20, lxvi. 20): from whence the word σῶζονται is applied in the New Testament to signify those who embrace the gospel, and thereby are rescued from that destruction 18 But since we left off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine.

19 And when we burned incense to the queen of heaven, and poured out drink-offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and pour out drink-offerings unto her, without our men?

20 ¶ Then Jeremiah said unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, and to all the people which had given him that answer, saying,

21 The incense that ye burned in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land, did not the LORD remember them, and came it not into his mind?

22 So that the LORD could no longer bear, because of the evil of your doings, and because of the abominations which ye have committed; therefore is your land a desolation, and an astonishment, and a curse, without an inhabitant, as at this day.

23 Because ye have burned incense, and because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed the voice of the LORD, nor walked in his law, nor in his statutes, nor in his testimonies; therefore this evil is happened unto you, as at this day.

24 Moreover Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, Hear the word of the LORD, all Judah that are in the land of Egypt:

25 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying; Ye and your wives have both spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand, saying, We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings which is threatened to unbelievers (see Acts ii. 47, 1 Cor. i. 18, 2 Cor. ii. 15).

Ver. 17. We will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth.] That which we have solemnly vowed to perform (see ver. 25). So the phrase is used, Numb. xxx. 12, Deut. xxiii. 23, Judg. xi. 36.

To burn incense unto the queen of heaven.] To the moon and the rest of the host of heaven (see notes on vii. 18, xix. 13).

For then had we plenty of victuals, and were well.] They compare their former condition before the invasion of Judea, and the siege of Jerusalem, with their present state: and argue, from the fallacious topic of worldly prosperity, that then they must needs have been in the right.

Ver. 19. When we burned incense] These are the words of the women, who were the most zealous promoters of this idolatry (see ver. 15).

Did we make her cakes] See the note on vii. 18.

Ver. 22. So that the Lord could no longer bear.] God's patience is elsewhere said to be wearied out by men's continued provocations (see Isa. vii. 13, xliii. 24, Mal. ii. 17).

Ver. 25. We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed.] They insist upon their unlawful vow as an obligation in conscience, which could not be unto her: ye will surely accomplish your vows, and surely perform your vows.

26 Therefore hear ye the word of the LORD, all Judah that dwell in the land of Egypt: Behold, I have sworn by my great name, saith the LORD, that my name shall no more be named in the mouth of any man of Judah in all the land of Egypt, saying, The Lord God liveth.

27 Behold, I will watch over them for evil, and not for good: and all the men of Judah that are in the land of Egypt shall be consumed by the sword and by the famine, until there be an end of them.

28 Yet a small number that escape the sword dispensed with; just as Herod did upon his unlawful oath, Matt. xiv. 9.

Ver. 26. I have sworn by my great name.] I also have made a solemn vow, in opposition to that wicked one of yours, ver. 25.

That my name shall no more be named in the mouth of any man of Judah in—Egypt.] These Jews seem to have joined the worship of the true God with that of idols, as the Samaritans did before them (2 Kings xvii. 33), thereupon God declares he will not receive any such polluted worship at their hands (compare Ezek. xx. 39), nor suffer his name to be any longer profaned by such hypocrites, but will consume them by a sudden and general destruction; or will deliver them up to impenitence and utter apostasy.

Ver. 27. I will watch over them for evil.] See xxxi. 28.

shall return out of the land of Egypt into the land of Judah, and all the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose words shall stand, mine, or theirs.

29 And this shall be a sign unto you, saith the LORD, that I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words shall surely stand against you for evil:

30 Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will give Pharaoh-hopra king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies, and into the hand of them that seek his life; as I gave Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, his enemy, and that sought his life.

Ver. 28. A small number—shall return] See ver. 14.

The remnant of Judah—shall know whose words shall stand, mine, or theirs.] Since they are so peremptory in abiding by their own vows and resolutions (see ver. 16, 17, 25), they shall see whose words shall stand good, or take effect, mine or theirs.

Ver. 30. Pharaoh-hopra] Pharaoh was a common name to all the kings of Egypt. As the predecessor of this king was called Pharaoh-nechoh by way of distinction (2 Kings xxiii. 29), so this king was called Pharaoh-hopra, or Apries, as Herodotus calls him: he engaged in a battle with Amasis, by whom he was overcome and strangled (see Archbishop Usher's Annals, ad A. M. 3435).

CHAPTER XLV.

1 THE word that Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Baruch the son of Neriah, when he had written these words in a book at the mouth of Jeremiah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, unto thee, O Baruch:

3 Thou didst say, Woe is me now! for the LORD hath added grief to my sorrow; I fainted in my sighing, and I find no rest.

CHAP. XLV.

ARGUMENT.—This prophecy was occasioned by the danger Baruch had incurred, by copying out a collection of all Jeremiah's prophecies, by his direction (see xxxvi. 4, 26). The design of it is to comfort Baruch against the apprehensions his fears suggested to him, by letting him know, that in these general calamities which should involve his own nation together with the neighbouring countries, God would take him into his especial protection. The Septuagint, according to the Vatican copy, place this prophecy at the conclusion of the book, immediately before the fifty-second chapter.

Ver. 1.] See xxxvi. 1, 4, 32.

4 ¶ Thus shalt thou say unto him, The LORD saith thus: Behold, that which I have built will I break down, and that which I have planted I will pluck up, even this whole land.

5 And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not: for, behold, I will bring evil upon all flesh, saith the LORD: but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey in all places whither thou goest.

Ver. 3. The Lord hath added grief to my sorrow;) The sorrow which I felt for the threatenings denounced against my country and religion, are increased by my own troubles, being sought after by the king's commands, in order to be put to death (see xxxvi. 26).

Ver. 4.] The land and people which have so long flourished under the peculiar care of my providence, I resolve now to give up to utter destruction (compare xxxi. 28).

Ver. 5. Seekest thou great things for thyself?] Dost thou aspire to honour and dignity in a time of common calamity (compare 2 Kings v. 26).

I will bring evil upon all flesh.] See xxv. 26.

Thy life will I give unto thee for a prey] See xxi. 9.

CHAPTER XLVI.

1 THE word of the LORD which came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Gentiles;

2 Against Egypt, against the army of Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, which was by the river Euphrates in Carchemish, which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon smote in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah.

3 Order ye the buckler and shield, and draw near to battle.

4 Harness the horses; and get up, ye horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets; furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines.

5 Wherefore have I seen them dismayed and turned away back? and their mighty ones are beaten down, and are fled apace, and look not back: for fear was round about, saith the LORD.

6 Let not the swift flee away, nor the mighty man escape; they shall stumble, and fall toward the north by the river Euphrates.

7 Who is this that cometh up as a flood, whose waters are moved as the rivers?

8 Egypt riseth up like a flood, and his waters are moved like the rivers; and he saith, I will go up, and will cover the earth; I will destroy the city and the inhabitants thereof.

9 Come up, ye horses; and rage, ye chariots; and let the mighty men come forth; the Ethiopians and the Libyans, that handle the shield; and the Lydians that handle and bend the bow.

10 For this is the day of the Lord God of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries: and the sword shall devour, and it shall be satiate and made drunk with their blood: for the Lord God of hosts hath a sacrifice in the north country by the river Euphrates.

11 Go up into Gilead, and take balm, O virgin, the daughter of Egypt: in vain shalt thou

CHAP. XLVI.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains two prophecies against Egypt; the first fulfilled immediately after the publication; the other foretelling the entire conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, which was fulfilled six-and-thirty years afterward.

Ver. 1.] This title belongs to this and the five following chapters: and refers to that general denunciation of God's judgments upon the countries round about Judea, contained in the twenty-fifth chapter of this prophecy, from the thirteenth verse to the end of the chapter. For which reason, in the Vatican and Alexandrian copies of the Septuagint, these six chapters follow immediately after xxv. 13, where express mention is made of the book which Jeremiah had prophesied against the nations: which book is contained in this and the following chapters of this prophecy.

Ver. 2. Against the army of Pharaoh-necho] This was the second battle which the king of Babylon (called the king of Assyria, 2 Kings xxiii. 29), fought with Pharaoh-necho, near this city. In the former of those expeditions was Josiah killed (see 2 Chron. xxxv. 20).

Which Nebuchadnezzar—smote in the fourth year of Jehoiakim] This is coincident with the first year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, according to the scripture account, which begins his reign two years before his father's death (see the note on xxv. 1). For Nebuchadnezzar went upon this expedition by his father's command; and upon this victory, Jehoiakim, who had been made a king of Judea by Pharaoh-necho (2 Kings xxiii. 34), became tributary to Nebuchadnezzar (see 2 Kings xxiv. 1, 7, and the notes upon Jer. xxii. 19).

Ver. 2, 3.] The prophet ironically encourages the Egyptians to make ready all warlike preparations, which yet he foresees will in the end signify nothing (see the following verse, and ver. 14, and compare li. 12, Nahum ii. 1, iii. 14).

Ver. 5. For fear was round about.] A panic fear seized the whole army (compare xlix. 29, l. 37, li. 30, Isa. xix. 16).

Ver. 6. Let not the swift flee away.] The words imply, that it was God's command that none of the Egyptian army should escape. Or else the imperative may be taken for the future, by a usual enallage (see note on xxv. 27).

Fall toward the north, by the river Euphrates.] The river Euphrates was northward from Judea. So Babylon is described as lying northward, being situate upon that river (see i. 14, iv. 6, vi. 1).

Ver. 7, 8.] In order to raise an expectation of some mighty enterprise, the prophet describes, by way of vision, the march of the Egyptian army, coming on like a flood, and carrying all before it: which expressions allude to the overflowing of the river Nile (compare likewise xlvii. 2, Isa. viii. 7, 8, Dan. xi. 26, xi. 22, Amos viii. 8).

Ver. 9. The Ethiopians and the Libyans—and the Lydians, that handle and bend the bow.] These names in Hebrew are Cush, and Phut, and Lud, who were the Egyptians' allies, and are mentioned together as such, Ezek. xxx. 5, which makes it probable that they are all Africans. Cush, though it often signifies Arabia, yet sometimes denotes Ethiopia, as hath been shown upon xiii. 23. Phut is rendered Lybia, by our interpreters here, and Ezek. xxx. 5. But Phut and Lubim are spoken of as a distinct people, Nahum iii. 9. Phut may probably signify Mauritania, and Lud, or Lubim, the people of Meroe. These were famous for the use of the bow, as it is expressed both here and Isa. lxvi. 19.

Ver. 10. The day of the Lord] The "day of the Lord" often signifies the day of his vengeance (see Isa. xiii. 6, Joel i. 15, ii. 1, Amos v. 18, Zeph. i. 14, 15). From thence it comes to signify the day of judgment in the New Testament, of which all other days of vengeance are the earnest and forerunners.

That he may avenge him of his adversaries.] Of the idols of Egypt, and their worshippers (see ver. 25, xliii. 12, 13).

The sword shall devour.] See Isa. xxxiv. 6.

The Lord God hath a sacrifice] The slaughter of men is called a sacrifice, because it makes some kind of satisfaction and atonement to God's justice (Isa. xxxiv. 6, Ezek. xxxix. 17, Zeph. i. 7).

Ver. 11. Go up into Gilead, and take balm.] Gilead was famous for producing balm, and such-like healing gums (see the note on viii. 22). The prophet alluding to the custom of men's going thither for relief in dangerous infirmities, ironically advises the Egypt-use many medicines; for thou shalt not be cured.

12 The nations have heard of thy shame, and thy cry hath filled the land: for the mighty man hath stumbled against the mighty, and they are fallen both together.

13 ¶ The word that the Lord spake to Jeremiah the prophet, how Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon should come and smite the land of Egypt.

14 Declare ye in Egypt, and publish in Migdol, and publish in Noph and in Tahpanhes: say ye, Stand fast, and prepare thee; for the sword shall devour round about thee.

15 Why are thy valiant men swept away? they stood not, because the Lord did drive them.

16 He made many to fall, yea, one fell upon another: and they said, Arise, and let us go again to our own people, and to the land of our nativity, from the oppressing sword.

tians to try all the methods they can think of, to prevent that destruction that threatens them: but all their endeavours will be in vain (compare li. 8).

O virgin, the daughter of Egypt:] Those cities or countries are called virgins which never were conquered (see the note on xiv. 17, and compare Isa. xlvii. 1). Egypt was grown great by its conquests, particularly by the former battle at Carchemish (see ver. 2), and did not apprehend itself in any danger of being conquered. "The daughter of Egypt," is the same with Egypt (see ver. 19, and the notes on iv. 11).

Ver. 12. Have heard of thy shame,] Of thine armies being shamefully beaten, and running away.

The mighty man hath stumbled against the mighty,] When an army is once broken and disordered, multitudes are a hindrance one to another, and one part helps to destroy another (see ver. 16, 21).

Ver. 13.] Compare xliii. 10. This is a distinct prophecy from the former, as was observed in the argument to that chapter. The same destruction of Egypt is at large foretold and described by Ezekiel ch. xxix.—xxxii.

Ver. 14. Publish in Migdol,] See xlv. 1.

Stand fast, and prepare thee;] Prepare for war, and resolve to keep your ground, and not yield to the enemy (compare ver. 2, 3).

Ver. 15.] The Hebrew word abbir, rendered valiant, is sometimes spoken of God, as Gen. xlix. 24, sometimes is a title given to angels, Ps. lxxviii. 25, and here the Septuagint understand it of Apis, the idol of Egypt (compare ver. 20, 25), who may properly be said to be conquered, when the nation that put themselves under his protection was subdued (see xliii. 12).

Ver. 16. Let us go again to our own people,] The words of the Egyptian allies (see ver. 9, 21).

Ver. 17.] He brags what great things he will do, but he does not bring his forces together till the season of the year for action is over (compare viii. 20).

Ver. 18.] Some think the expression compares Nebuchadrezzar, a lofty and aspiring conqueror, to Tabor and Carmel, two of the highest mountains in Judea. Others understand it thus: He will as surely come, as that part of Judea which is joined to Tabor is enclosed with mountains, and as Carmel is encompassed with the sea (see 1 Kings xviii. 42, 43). Or lastly, the verse may be expounded thus, 17 They did cry there, Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise; he hath passed the time appointed.

18 As I live, saith the king, whose name is the Lord of hosts, Surely as Tabor is among the mountains, and as Carmel by the sea, so shall he come.

19 O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt, furnish thyself to go into captivity: for Noph shall be waste and desolate without an inhabitant.

20 Egypt is like a very fair heifer, but destruction cometh; it cometh out of the north.

21 Also her hired men are in the midst of her like fatted bullocks; for they also are turned back, and are fled away together: they did not stand, because the day of their calamity was come upon them, and the time of their visitation.

22 The voice thereof shall go like a serpent; for they shall march with an army, and come against her with axes, as hewers of wood.

23 They shall cut down her forest, saith the Lord, though it cannot be searched; because Though Egypt were as inaccessible as the top of mount Tabor, and begirt with the sea like Carmel, yet the enemy should come upon her, and make an entire conquest of her.

Ver. 19. O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt,] Compare xlviii. 18. Countries and cities are usually compared to women (such representations being very common, particularly on medals), and sometimes to young women, when their wealth makes them soft and effeminate (see Isa. xlvii. 1).

Furnish thyself to go into captivity:] The expression is ironical, implying, that instead of the rich and goodly furniture wherein she did pride herself, she should be carried away captive, naked and bare, and wanting all manner of conveniences (see Isa. xx. 4, xlvii. 2, 3).

Ver. 20. Egypt is like a very fair heifer,] In the foregoing verse, the prophet compared Egypt to a delicate young woman, here he resembles her to a fat and well-favoured heifer (compare l. 11). In which comparison, as Grotius not improperly conjectures, there is an allusion to their god Apis, who was a bull remarkable for his beauty, and the fine spots or marks he had about him.

It cometh out of the north,] See ver. 6, 10.

Ver. 21. Her hired men are in the midst of her like fatted bullocks;] The auxiliary troops which the king of Egypt had hired (see ver. 9, 16), are like bullocks fatted up, and fit for the slaughter (see l. 27, Isa. xxxiv. 7, Ezek. xxxix. 18).

They did not stand, [in the fight, see ver. 15,] because the day of their calamity was come upon them,] Their "day was come, even the time of their visitation," as it is expressed, l. 27.

Ver. 22. The voice thereof shall go like a serpent;] They shall not shout like conquerors, but make a feeble noise, like the hissing of a serpent when it is pursued: and shall speak in a very submissive and humble tone (see Isa. xxix. 4, Micah vii. 16, 17).

Come against her with axes, as hewers of wood,] The destruction of Egypt is described by the metaphor of cutting down the trees of a forest (compare Isa. x. 33, 34, xiv. 8, xxxvii. 24).

Ver. 23.] Cities, and their stately buildings, are elsewhere compared to the trees of a forest (see the note on xxi. 14), so here the text imports, that though the cities of Egypt were never so numerous and large yet the Chaldean army should plunder and destroy them, because their number is proportionable to such weeping shall go up; for in the going down of Horonaim the enemies have heard a cry of destruction.

6 Flee, save your lives, and be like the heath in the wilderness.

7 ¶ For because thou hast trusted in thy works and in thy treasures, thou shalt also be taken: and Chemosh shall go forth into captivity with his priests and his princes together.

8 And the spoiler shall come upon every city, and no city shall escape; the valley also shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed, as the LORD hath spoken.

9 Give wings unto Moab, that it may flee and get away: for the cities thereof shall be desolate, without any to dwell therein.

10 Cursed be he that doeth the work of the LORD deceitfully, and cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood.

11 ¶ Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity: therefore his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed.

12 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will send unto him wanderers, that shall cause him to wander, and shall empty his vessels, and break their bottles.

13 And Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh, as the house of Israel was ashamed of Beth-el their confidence.

14 ¶ How say ye, We are mighty and strong men for the war?

15 Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities, and his chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter, saith the king, whose name is the LORD of hosts.

16 The calamity of Moab is near to come, and his affliction hasteth fast.

17 All ye that are about him, bemoan him; and all ye that know his name, say, How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod!

18 Thou daughter that dost inhabit Dibon, come down from thy glory, and sit in thirst; for the spoiler of Moab shall come upon thee, and he shall destroy thy strong holds.

19 O inhabitant of Aroer, stand by the way, and espy; ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, What is done?

20 Moab is confounded; for it is broken down:

nothing grows but barren shrubs (see xvii. 6): and where no enemy can find you out.

Ver. 7. In thy works] Or, "In thy possession:" for so the word is translated, 1 Sam. xxv. 2.

Chemosh] The idol of the Moabites, Numb. xxi. 29 (see the note on xliii. 12).

Ver. 8. The valley also shall perish,] Those that live in the country, with their flocks and pastures, shall be involved in the same calamity with the inhabitants of the cities.

Ver. 9. Give wings unto Moab, that it may flee] It is not a common speed that can deliver him from that imminent danger which threatens him (see ver. 28, and compare Ps. lv. 6).

Ver. 10.] God executes his judgments upon sinners, by the ministry of men, and those oftentimes as great sinners, as those that suffer by them. He had declared by Jeremiah his purpose of making the Chaldeans his instruments in punishing the Jews, and the neighbouring countries (see xxv. 9). Their success answered the prediction, and Nebuchadnezzar seems to have looked upon Jeremiah as a prophet, and had a particular regard to his character (see xxxix. 11). Being thus assured that he had a commission from God, he might confidently proceed in his conquests, and it would have been a fault to have shown mercy to those whom he had good reason to believe, that God had marked out for destruction. Such an unseasonable act of mercy is highly blamed in Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 11, and in Ahab, 1 Kings xx. 42. God's judgments are often denounced in form of imprecation (see Dent. xxvii. 15, &c., Judg. v. 23, Gal. i. 8, 1 Cor. xvi. 22, 2 Tim. iv. 16).

Ver. 11. Moab hath been at ease from his youth,] He hath never felt any calamity, since that judgment foretold by Isaiah, and inflicted by Sennacherib. So that there were forty years between that captivity and this here spoken of (see Archbishop Usher's Annals ad An. M. 3280, and 3419).

He hath settled on his lees,] He hath flourished in peace and grown rich, as wine that feeds on its lees (compare Zech. i. 12); when the Jews during that time have suffered several captivities.

His taste remained in him,] As generous wines retain their strength as long as they continue in the lees; so he retained his wonted pride and luxury, and doth not depart from any of those vices which a long prosperity has occasioned (see Isa. xvi. 6).

Ver. 12.] The Chaldean soldiers that came out of a foreign country: these shall make a prey of him, and shall carry off as much of his wealth as they can, and spoil the rest (compare xiii. 14).

Ver. 13.] They shall be disappointed in their expectations of succours from their tutelary idol (see Judg. xi. 24, 1 Kings xi. 7); as the ten tribes have been in the trust they reposed in the calf they worshipped at Beth-el (see Hos. viii. 5, x. 6).

Ver. 15. Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities,] Or, [the spoiler] "is gone up against her cities" (compare ver. 18).

Gone down to the slaughter,] Compare l. 27. The same thing is otherwise expressed, by bringing down to the grave, or the pit.

Ver. 17. All ye that are about him, bemoan him;] His calamities are so great, as must needs make all that see him, or have heard of his former fame and glory, bewail his misfortunes.

How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod!] Compare Isa. xiv. 5. A staff or rod is an emblem of authority, and thence comes to signify a kingdom, or government, especially such a one as oppresses its subjects, or neighbours (see Isa. ix. 4, x. 5).

Ver. 18. Thou daughter that dost inhabit Dibon,] Thou that art softened with luxury and effeminacy (see xlv. 18). Dibon was one of the chief cities of Moab (see Numb. xxi. 30, Isa. xv. 2).

Come down from thy glory and sit in thirst;] Submit to a mean condition, wherein thou shalt feel the want of all conveniences of life. The Hebrew language expresses a barren land, which yields no food or sustenance, by a thirsty ground (see Ps. lxxiii. 2, Isa. xxxv. 7, Ezek. xix. 13).

Ver. 19. O inhabitant of Aroer [a town in the borders of Moab; see Deut. ii. 36], stand by the way, and espy;] The prophet describes the great concern and fear that was upon them, which made them hearken to every little report that was stirring.

howl and cry : tell ye it in Arnon, that Moab is spouled,

21 And judgment is come upon the plain country ; upon Holon, and upon Jahazah, and upon Mephaath,

22 And upon Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-diblathaim,

23 And upon Kiriathaim, and upon Beth-gamul, and upon Beth-meon,

24 And upon Kerioth, and upon Bozrah, and upon all the cities of the land of Moab, far or near.

25 The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the Lord.

26 ¶ Make ye him drunken : for he magnified himself against the Lord : Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, and he also shall be in derision.

27 For was not Israel a derision unto thee ? was he found among thieves ? for since thou spakest of him, thou skippest for joy.

28 O ye that dwell in Moab, leave the cities, and dwell in the rock, and be like the dove that maketh her nest in the sides of the hole's mouth.

29 We have heard the pride of Moab, (he is exceeding proud) his loftiness, and his arrogance, and his pride, and the haughtiness of his heart.

30 I know his wrath, saith the Lord ; but it shall not be so ; his lies shall not so effect it.

31 Therefore will I howl for Moab, and I will cry out for all Moab ; mine heart shall mourn for the men of Kir-heres.

32 O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer : thy plants are gone over the sea, they reach even to the sea of Jazer : the spoiler is fallen upon thy summer fruits and upon thy vintage.

33 And joy and gladness is taken from the plentiful field, and from the land of Moab ; and I have caused wine to fail from the wine-presses : none shall tread with shouting ; their shouting shall be no shouting.

34 From the cry of Heshbon even unto Elealeh, and even unto Jahaz, have they uttered their

Ver. 20. Howl and cry ;] There will be just occasion for a general lamentation.

Tell ye it in Arnon,] A country which took its name from the river Arnon, which was upon the border of Moab (see Numb. xx. 28).

Ver. 21. Plain country ;] See ver. 8.

Ver. 24. Upon Kerioth,] See ver. 41, Amos ii. 2. Bozrah,] The same town that is called Bezer, Deut. iv. 43, Josh. xxi. 36. A different place from Bozrah, which belonged to the land of Edom (xlix. 13).

Ver. 25.] Strength is often expressed by the horn, wherein the strength of bulls, and such-like creatures, consists ; and by the arm, wherein human strength doth chiefly discover itself.

Ver. 26. Make ye him drunken :] God's judgments are represented under the metaphor of a cup of intoxicating liquors (see the note on xxv. 15).

Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, and—be in derision.] The judgments which God sends upon him shall expose him to the scorn of his enemies : just as a drunken man is the object of men's laughter and derision (compare Hab. ii. 16).

Ver. 27. For was not Israel a derision unto thee ?] Didst not thou insult over the calamities of the Jews, when they were carried away captive ? (see the note on xli. 14, and compare Ezek. xxv. 8, Zeph. ii. 8). Israel is here put for Judah (see note on xviii. 13).

Was he found among thieves ! &c.] Though the sins of Israel were great in the sight of God, yet he had done no injury to the Moabites ; so there was no reason they should use him with the same despite and contempt as if he had been a common thief taken in the very fact, whom every one thinks they have a right to abuse (compare ii. 26). The latter part of the verse may be thus rendered, "For the words thou hast spoken against him, thou shalt be carried captive." This interpretation of the words the Vulgar Latin follows, and the verb thithnoded may very well be rendered to this sense (see the note on xxxi. 18).

Ver. 28. Leave the cities, and dwell in the rock,] Flee away, and hide yourselves, if you can, from these calamities which are coming upon you (see ver. 9. and compare Ps. lv. 6, 7).

Ver. 29.] Whereby he hath "magnified himself against the Lord" (ver. 26), and "against the people of the Lord" (Zech. ii. 10).

Ver. 30. His lies shall not so effect it.] Or, "his strength shall not avail" answerably to his wrath ; his power shall not be answerable to his malice (see the note on Isa. xvi. 6). The latter part of the sentence may be thus rendered, "But it is not right, his liars do not that which is right." The word baddim, sometimes signifies those that pretend to the arts of divination, or foretelling what is to come (see l. 36). If we take the word in this sense, the meaning of the sentence is, That although the soothsayers and magicians, upon whose skill Moab relies, promise him good success, and thereby encourage his pride and arrogance ; yet, in the event, it will appear that there was nothing of truth in what they said.

Ver. 31. Will I howl ?] See Isa. xv. 5.

For all Moab ;] The whole country of Moab : the phrase is the same with that of whole Palestina, Isa. xiv. 31.

For the men of Kir-heres.] See Isa. xvi. 7, 11.

Ver. 32. O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer :] The expressions denote the destruction of the fruitful vineyards of Sibmah. The loss of which the neighbouring places of Jazer would have reason to lament (compare Isa. xvi. 9).

They reach even to the sea of Jazer :] The words, pursuing the metaphor of a vineyard, imply that the principal inhabitants (compare Nahum ii. 2) are carried away, or forced to fly their country, and pass over the sea, that is, the river of Jazer—a stream that runs into the river Arnon, the border of Moab (Numb. xxi. 13). All lakes and rivers are called seas in the Hebrew language.

Ver. 33.] The gathering in the harvest, and other fruits of the earth, is usually accompanied with great expressions of joy (see Isa. ix. 3, Joel i. 12) ; for which there will be no occasion, when the enemy has spoiled or carried away their crop and vintage (compare Isa. xvi. 10).

Ver. 34. From the cry of Heshbon even unto Elealeh, and—Jahaz, have they uttered their voice,] When Heshbon was taken by the enemy (see ver. 2, 15), the cry of the inhabitants reached as far as Elealeh and Jahaz : the same was likewise heard from Zoar to Horonaim (see Isa. xv. 4, 5).

voice, from Zoar even unto Horonaim, as an heifer of three years old: for the waters also of Nimrim shall be desolate.

35 Moreover I will cause to cease in Moab, saith the LORD, him that offereth in the high places, and him that burneth incense to his gods.

36 Therefore mine heart shall sound for Moab like pipes, and mine heart shall sound like pipes for the men of Kir-heres: because the riches that he hath gotten are perished.

37 For every head shall be bald, and every beard clipped: upon all the hands shall be cuttings, and upon the loins sackcloth.

38 There shall be lamentation generally upon all the housetops of Moab, and in the streets thereof: for I have broken Moab like a vessel wherein is no pleasure, saith the LORD.

39 They shall howl, saying, How is it broken down! how hath Moab turned the back with shame! so shall Moab be a derision and a dismaying to all them about him.

40 For thus saith the LORD; Behold, he shall fly as an eagle, and shall spread his wings over Moab.

41 Kerioth is taken, and the strong holds are surprised, and the mighty men's hearts in Moab at that day shall be as the heart of a woman in her pangs.

42 And Moab shall be destroyed from being a people, because he hath magnified himself against the LORD.

43 Fear, and the pit, and the snare, shall be upon thee, O inhabitant of Moab, saith the LORD.

44 He that flieth from the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that getteth up out of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for I will bring upon it, even upon Moab, the year of their visitation, saith the LORD.

45 They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon because of the force: but a fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from the midst of Sihon, and shall devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the tumultuous ones.

As an heifer of three years old:] See the note on Isa. xv. 5. Dr. Lightfoot, in his Chorographical Inquiries before his Hora Hebraica upon St. John, ch. 3, n. 8, proposes another rendering of these words, Eglah shelishia, and interprets the sentence thus, "From Zoar unto Horonaim, even to the third Eglah." He supposes several places might be called by the name of Eglah, particularly there is one of them mentioned, Ezek. xlvii. 10, and this in the text might be called the third Eglah, by way of distinction.

For the waters also of Nimrim] See Isa. xv. 9.

Ver. 35.] See ver. 7, and Isa. xvi. 12.

Ver. 36. Mine heart shall sound for Moab like pipes:] My bowels are moved within me, I groan inwardly for trouble and anguish (compare iv. 19, Job xxx. 27, see Isa. xvi. 11, Lam. i. 20, and the notes upon xv. 15). The music of pipes was used at funerals (see Sir Norton Knatchbull's notes on Matt. ix. 23).

Ver. 37.] See note upon xli. 5, and compare xlvii. 5, Isa. xv. 2.

Ver. 38. Housetops of Moab,] See Isa. xv. 3.

For I have broken Moab like a vessel wherein is no pleasure,] As earthen vessels, if they are not fit for the use to which they were designed, are broken to pieces, without any concern or regret (compare xix. 11), so as never to be repaired: thus God will deal with Moab.

Ver. 39. How is it broken down!] Or "broken to pieces," as the word is rendered, l. 2. The prophet persists in the allusion to the breaking of an earthen vessel.

Ver. 40.] Conquerors are often compared to eagles, and other birds of prey (see xlix. 22, Deut. xxviii. 49, Dan. vii. 4); and the encamping their armies is represented by spreading their wings (see Isa. viii. 8, and the note there).

Ver. 41.] They shall be dismayed at the apprehension of the evils that are coming upon them, and shall lose their wonted courage and resolution (compare vi. 24, xxx. 6, xlix. 22, 24, l. 37, 43, li. 30, Isa. xliii. 8, Lam. i. 6, Nahum iii. 33).

Ver. 43, 44. Fear, and the pit, &c.] The words are taken out of Isa. xxiv. 17, 18 (see the notes there).

The year of their visitation,] See xi. 23.

Ver. 45.] They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon because of the force:] They that fled for fear of the enemy's forces, thought to find shelter and safeguard in Heshbon, a strong fenced city (see ver. 2). But the Hebrew micoah, "because of the force," may be rendered "for want of force or strength" (compare x. 14). And so the preposition min is translated by our interpreters, Ps. cx. 24, Lam. iv. 9, according to the old translation; and Micah iii. 6, where we read in the Hebrew, "Therefore night shall be unto you from a vision," or "because of a vision:" which our translators rightly render, "That ye shall not have a vision."

A fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from—Sihon,] That is, of the city of Sihon, meaning Heshbon (see Numb. xxi. 28). When the enemies once possessed themselves of Heshbon, the principal city of Moab, they quickly spread like fire over the rest of the country. So that the prophet fitly applies to the present case the words of an ancient poem, or epinikion, made upon Sihon's conquests over Moab, and recited by Moses, Numb. xxi. 27, 28, &c.

And shall devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the tumultuous ones.] By the corner may be meant the borders, or extreme parts of the country. So the Hebrew word signifies, Numb. xxxiv. 3, Neh. xi. 22, or it may mean the nobility, who are the stay and support of the government, expressed likewise by the "crown of the head," in the following sentence: or else both expressions may allude to the custom practised in those countries, of polling and cutting round the corners or forepart of their hair, concerning which see the note on xxv. 26. By the tumultuous are meant those that through pride indulge themselves in their state and plenty, and insult over their inferiors.

Ver. 46. Woe be unto thee, O Moab!] This verse is likewise taken out of Numb. xxi. 19.

The people of Chemosh perisheth:] People are sometimes denominated from the god they worship. So the Jews are called the people of the Lord, or Jehovah.

Ver. 47.] The Moabites were afterward restored to their country, as appears from Josephus, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 17, versus finem. But these and such-like promises of mercy after judgment, are chiefly to be understood of the conversion of the gentiles under 46 Woe be unto thee, O Moab! the people of Chemosh perisheth: for thy sons are taken captives, and thy daughters captives.

47 ¶ Yet will I bring again the captivity of Moab in the latter days, saith the LORD. Thus far is the judgment of Moab.

the gospel, called the latter days in the prophets (compare xii. 15—17, xlix. 6, 39, Isa. xviii. 7, xix. 18, &c. xxiii. 18). The conversion of idolaters is expressed by “returning from their captivity,” Ezek. xvi. 53.

CHAPTER XLIX.

1 CONCERNING the Ammonites, thus saith the LORD; Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth their king inherit Gad, and his people dwell in his cities?

2 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in Rabbah of the Ammonites; and it shall be a desolate heap, and her daughters shall be burned with fire: then shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs, saith the LORD.

3 Howl, O Heshbon, for Ai is spoiled: cry, ye daughters of Rabbah, gird you with sackcloth; lament, and run to and fro by the hedges; for their king shall go into captivity, and his priests and his princes together.

4 Wherefore gloriest thou in the valleys, thy flowing valley, O backsliding daughter? that trusted in her treasures, saying, Who shall come unto me?

5 Behold, I will bring a fear upon thee, saith the Lord God of hosts, from all those that be about thee; and ye shall be driven out every man right forth; and none shall gather up him that wandereth.

6 And afterward I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith the LORD.

CHAP. XLIX.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter is a collection of prophecies against several of those nations, against which Jeremiah had a general commission to declare God's judgments, xxv. 3. Concerning the time when they were fulfilled, see the argument of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 1.] The Septuagint read Gilead, which agrees with the words of Amos in his prophecy against the Ammonites (Amos i. 13). But the sense is all one; for in Amos we are to understand that part of Gilead which belonged to the tribe of Gad. God sorely afflicted those parts of the kingdom of Israel that lay eastward of Jordan, first by Hazael, (2 Kings x. 33), afterward by Tiglath-pileser (xv. 29), and then delivered up the whole kingdom to be carried captive by Shalmaneser (ch. xvii.): after which time, it is probable, the Ammonites took occasion to possess themselves of Gilead, that lay near their territories; but God's dispossessing the Israelites gave them no right to invade their inheritance (see Zeph. ii. 8); especially when they had been so tender of the Ammonites' right, as not to invade their possession in their march towards the land of Canaan (see Deut. iv. 19, 2 Chron. xx. 10).

Ver. 2. Rabbah of the Ammonites:] The principal city of that country (see Amos i. 14, Ezek. xxv. 5.)

Her daughters shall be burned with fire:] That is, the lesser cities, which are reckoned as so many daughters to the mother-city. To the same sense the “daughters of Judah” are joined with Zion, as the metropolis, Ps. xlviii. 11, xlvii. 8, and see the following verse.

Then shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs.] The Jews made themselves masters of the Ammonites, and the neighbouring countries under the Maccabees (see Macc. v. 6, 7, and compare Ezek. xxv. 14). The words heir and inheritance, in the Hebrew, signify any real and lasting possession (see Ps. lxxxii. 8): the expression being taken from the usual manner of conveying land among them, which was by inheritance.

Ver. 3. Howl, O Heshbon, for Ai is spoiled:] When Ai (not the place mentioned Josh. viii. but) a city of the Ammonites is destroyed: then it is time for Heshbon, the chief city of Moab, to lament her danger, for her turn comes next (see xlviii. 2).

Cry, ye daughters of Rabbah, gird you with sackcloth:] Ye tender women, inhabitants of Rabbah, that are not used to hardships, bemoan yourselves with the deepest expressions of mourning and sorrow (compare Isa. xxxiii. 11, Jer. iv. 8, vi. 26).

Lament, and run to and fro by the hedges:] Try to hide yourselves in the thickets, and remove from one place to another, for fear of being discovered: or the words may be expounded thus: Lament, ye inhabitants of the lesser towns, and run to and fro in your villages, as uncertain reports shall prompt you to flee from the enemy. So Schindler expounds the word gederath, Ps. lxxxix. 40 (see iv. 29).

For their king shall go into captivity:] Or, “Milcom shall go into captivity:” so the word may likewise be rendered in the first verse. Milcom was the idol of the Ammonites (see 2 Kings xxiii. 13). The idols always shared in the prosperity or calamities that befell their worshippers (compare xlviii. 7, and see the note on xlii. 12).

Ver. 4. Wherefore gloriest thou in thy—flowing valley:] That is, in the riches of thy fat and plentiful valleys, which overflow with abundance of all things (compare Isa. xxviii. 1, 4).

O backsliding daughter:] See note on vii. 24.

That trusted in her treasures:] Though she had money enough to furnish herself with all things necessary for her defence. Such a confidence and carnal security as this, is elsewhere severely threatened (see xxi. 13, Isa. xlvii. 7, 8).

Ver. 5. Behold, I will bring a fear upon thee:] When God gives up a people to destruction, he commonly takes from them their usual courage, so that a “thousand shall flee at the rebuke of one” (compare ver. 29, xlviii. 43). This the heathens expressed by a panic terror. Or the word fear may denote a hostile army, the cause of fear and terror (compare xv. 8).

Ye shall be driven out every man right forth:] So as not to dare look back, but fly for their lives that way which lies next (see xlv. 5, Amos iv. 3).

None shall gather up him that wandereth:] None shall bring him that flies from the enemy to his house, 7 ¶ Concerning Edom, thus saith the LORD of hosts; Is wisdom no more in Teman? is counsel perished from the prudent? is their wisdom vanished?

8 Flee ye, turn back, dwell deep, O inhabitants of Dedan; for I will bring the calamity of Esau upon him, the time that I will visit him.

9 If grape-gatherers come to thee, would they not leave some gleaning grapes? if thieves by night, they will destroy till they have enough.

10 But I have made Esau bare, I have uncovered his secret places, and he shall not be able to hide himself: his seed is spoiled, and his brethren, and his neighbours, and he is not.

11 Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in me.

12 For thus saith the LORD; Behold, they whose judgment was not to drink of the cup have assuredly drunken; and art thou he that shall altogether go unpunished? thou shalt not go unpunished, but thou shalt surely drink of it.

13 For I have sworn by myself, saith the LORD, that Bozrah shall become a desolation, a reproach, a waste, and a curse; and all the cities thereof shall be perpetual wastes.

14 I have heard a rumour from the LORD, and an ambassador is sent unto the heathen, saying. Gather ye together, and come against her, and rise up to the battle.

15 For, lo, I will make thee small among the heathen, and despised among men.

16 Thy terribleness hath deceived thee, and the pride of thine heart, O thou that dwellest in or afford him any shelter or accommodation (compare Isa. xvi. 3).

Ver. 6.] See 1 Macc. v. 5, and note upon xlviii. 47.

Ver. 7. Is wisdom no more in Teman?] The eastern part of the world (by which is chiefly meant Arabia, and the adjacent countries, see the note on Isa. xi. 14) was famous for the study of wisdom, or philosophy, as it was called in later times (see 1 Kings iv. 30). The Edomites put in their claim to this prerogative, as appears from the text, and the parallel place of Obediah (ver. 8), as also from the book of Job, where Eliphaz, one of the disputants, is called the Temanite, as being descended from Teman, Esau's grandson, who gave name to the city or country of Teman elsewhere mentioned (see Amos i. 12, Obad. ver. 9, Hab. iii. 3). Unless we suppose it the same Tema mentioned xxv. 23, Isa. xxi. 14, which took its name from Tema, Ishmael's son, Gen. xxv. 15.

Is counsel perished from the prudent?] When God designs a people for destruction, he deprives them of that common prudence and foresight which is requisite for the due management of their affairs (see Isa. xix. 11, &c.).

Ver. 8.] The Dedanites were Arabians of the posterity of Dedan, the grandson of Abraham (Gen. xxv. 3). They seem by this place to have been in latter times subdued by the Idumeans, and incorporated with them: the prophet exhorts them to flee, and turn their backs from an enemy they are not able to encounter; and hide themselves in the deepest caves and dens they could find (compare ver. 10, and Judg. vi. 2).

Ver. 9.] The vintage can hardly be gathered in so clean, but that there will be a gleaning left (compare Isa. xvii. 6). Nay, the house-breakers commonly leave something behind them. But the desolation that is coming upon thee will be so entire, that scarce a remnant shall be preserved (compare Obad. ver. 5).

Ver. 10. I have uncovered his secret places,] Or treasures, as the word signifies, Isa. xlv. 3. I have taken from him every thing that might be a refuge or defence to him in the time of a general calamity.

His seed is spoiled, and his brethren, and his neighbours.] The divine judgments extend not only to his children, but even to his brethren and neighbours: such as the Ammonites, Moabites, and all about him, from whom he might expect some succour and assistance.

And he is not.] He is utterly ruined and destroyed (compare Isa. xvii. 14). Some join this word ennui to the following verse, and render it, "And there is none left [that may say] leave [to me] thy father's children," &c. that is, there is none left to take care of the fatherless and widow.

Ver. 11.] The Chaldee paraphrase understands this of the Jews, to whom the following words do certainly belong, as if it contained God's promise to take care of their families, under that distressed and forlorn state, to which the captivity had reduced them. If we understand the words of the Edomites, the sentence seems to be ironical (see a like instance, Isa. xvi. 4); as if the prophet had said, Thou needest not to be concerned for thy helpless children, and thy widows thou must leave to the mercy of the enemy, for none of them shall survive or escape. This sense agrees very well with that expression of ver. 10, "His seed is spoiled," and with ver. 13, 17.

Ver. 12. They whose judgment was not to drink of the cup have assuredly drunken;] The Jews, who in all human appearance might have expected mercy at God's hands in regard to the gracious promises made to them, and to their fathers (see xxv. 29). Concerning the phrase of "drinking God's cup," see note on xxv. 15.

Altogether go unpunished?] Concerning the Hebrew phrase used in this place, see note on xxx. 11.

Ver. 13.] See the note on xxiii. 9. Bozrah was one of the chief cities of Idumea (see Isa. xxxiv. 6, lxiii. 1). It is usual in the prophets to describe the destruction of a whole nation, by the ruin of some one or more of its principal cities (see ver. 23, Amos i. 8, 12, 14, ii. 3, 5).

Ver. 14.] The prophets often represent God as summoning armies, and setting them in array of battle against those people whom he has decreed to destroy (see l. 9, 21, li. 11, Isa. xiii. 2, 3, xviii. 3). God's stirring up men's spirits to invade such countries, is described here, as if he had sent an ambassador to the Chaldeans and their confederates, to engage them in a war against the Idumeans: according to the methods which earthly princes use to engage their allies (compare li. 27, 28).

Ver. 16. Thy terribleness hath deceived thee,] Thou hast been formerly terrible to all about thee: the confidence thou hast in this thy strength hath made thee careless and secure, and thereby given thine enemies an advantage against thee.

O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock,] Compare Obad. ver. 4, Numb. xxxiv. 3, 4. St. Jerome, who lived in the neighbourhood, tells us, in his Commentary upon Obadiah, that Idumea was a rocky mountainous country, and that the inhabitants dwelt in caves dug out of the rocks and hills.

Though thou shouldst make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down] The greatest height or the clefts of the rock, that holdest the height of the hill: though thou shouldst make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the Lord.

17 Also Edom shall be a desolation: every one that goeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss at all the plagues thereof.

18 As in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighbouring cities thereof, saith the Lord, no man shall abide there, neither shall a son of man dwell in it.

19. Behold, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan against the habitation of the strong: but I will suddenly make him run away from her: and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and who will appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd that will stand before me?

20 Therefore hear the counsel of the Lord, that he hath taken against Edom; and his purposes, that he hath purposed against the inhabitants of Teman: Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out: surely he shall make their habitations desolate with them.

21 The earth is moved at the noise of their fall, at the cry the noise thereof was heard in the Red sea.

22 Behold, he shall come up and fly as the eagle, and spread his wings over Bozrah: and at that day shall the heart of the mighty men of Edom be as the heart of a woman in her pangs.

23 ¶ Concerning Damascus. Hamath is confounded, and Arpad: for they have heard evil tidings: they are faint-hearted; there is sorrow on the sea; it cannot be quiet.

24 Damascus is waxed feeble, and turneth herself to flee, and fear hath seized on her: anguish and sorrows have taken her, as a woman in travail.

25 How is the city of praise not left, the city of my joy!

26 Therefore her young men shall fall in her strength cannot place thee out of the reach of the divine vengeance (compare li. 53, Amos ix. 2). The eagle is remarkable for its flying high (see Job xxxix. 27).

Ver. 17.] See note on xviii. 16.

Ver. 18. As in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah] A proverbial expression, denoting an utter desolation (see l. 40, Isa. xiii. 19).

Ver. 19. He shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan] A description of Nebuchadnezzar marching with his army against Idumea, whom the prophet compares to a lion coming out of his den, near the river Jordan. When that swells in the time of harvest (see Josh. iii. 15, 1 Chron. xii. 15), the lions that lie in the thickets on the river-side, are raised out of their coverts, and infest the country (see Maundrell's Travels, p. 81, and compare Zech. xi. 3).

I will suddenly make him run away from her:] I have observed in my notes on Isa. li. 4, that the words should be rendered "I will rouse him up, and make him run," or seize upon her. The preposition menal, here translated from, doth likewise signify upon, and is so rendered by our interpreters, 1 Kings ix. 5 (see Noldius's Concordance, p. 635).

Who is a chosen man [or warrior] that I may appoint over her?] That is, I will single out a man remarkable for his prowess, viz. Nebuchadnezzar, and place him at the head of the army, that shall execute my vengeance upon Edom.

Who will appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd?] Who will challenge me to meet him in the field, as if we were upon equal terms? or what leader or general can enter into the lists with me? The word shepherd often signifies a prince or commander (see vi. 3, xxv. 34). But here it is used in opposition to the lion mentioned before; as if he had said, a shepherd may as well encounter a lion, as the best appointed warrior contend with God Almighty, or those whom he makes the instruments of his vengeance.

Ver. 20. Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out:] The prophet having given the name of shepherd to the generals of the army, in pursuance of that metaphor, he expresses the common soldiers by "the least of the flock," as the commanders are called "the principal of the flock," xxv. 34. These he saith shall have strength and courage enough to draw out or devour the Idumean forces. The verb sahab, "to draw out," alludes to the custom of dogs, who draw about a carcass before they devour it. So it is used xv. 3, where our interpreters read, "and the dogs to tear."

Ver. 21. The earth is moved at the noises of their fall,] The neighbouring countries are astonished at it. The prophet compares the destruction of a nation to the fall of a great building, the noise of which frights those that are near it (see Ezek. xxvi. 15, xxxi. 16). Horace uses the same metaphor, Ode i. lib. ii.

—"auditumque Medis

Hesperiae sonitum ruinæ." —

At the cry the noise thereof was heard in the Red sea.] Or, "the noise of their cry was heard in the Red sea:" which was a considerable distance from the land of Edom.

Ver. 22. Come up—as the eagle,] See xlviii. 40, 41.

Ver. 23. Concerning Damascus.] The judgment denounced against Damascus, the principal city of Syria, is to be supposed to extend to the whole country (see the note on ver. 13). Nebuchadnezzar had subdued Syria at the beginning of his reign (see the notes on xxxv. 1), but he might upon some new provocations overrun that country afterward, during the siege of Tyre, which lasted thirteen years (see the argument to the chapter, and the notes upon xxv. 26).

Hamath is confounded, and Arpad:] Hamath and Arpad are elsewhere joined together (see 2 Kings xviii. 34). Hamath is supposed to be the same with Riblah "in the land of Hamath," xxxix. 5, called "Hamath the great," Amos vi. 2. It is a frontier town, lying upon the borders of Judea towards Syria, thence called the "entrance of Hamath," 1 Kings viii. 65, Isa. x. 9, Amos vi. 14. Arpad is otherwise called Arvad, the habitation of the Arvadites, Gen. x. 18, called the Aradites by the Septuagint, that is, the inhabitants of the isle of Aradus.

There is sorrow on the sea:] Or, "as on the sea," as the margin reads: the particle as is frequently understood (see xlviii. 34, and the note on Isa. xxi. 5). "They are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest," as the prophet Isaiah speaks, lvii. 20. If we follow the reading of the text, we may interpret the words of the Aradians, who lay upon the sea-coast (compare xxv. 22).

Ver. 24. Sorrows have taken her,] See xlviii. 41.

Ver. 25.] A city of praise, is a city of fame and renown (compare xxxiii. 9, li. 41, Isa. lxii. 7). This streets, and all the men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the LORD of hosts.

27 And I will kindle a fire in the wall of Damascus, and it shall consume the palaces of Ben-hadad.

28 ¶ Concerning Kedar, and concerning the kingdoms of Hazor, which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon shall smite, thus saith the LORD; Arise ye, go up to Kedar, and spoil the men of the east.

29 Their tents and their flocks shall they take away: they shall take to themselves their curtains, and all their vessels, and their camels; and they shall cry unto them, Fear is on every side.

30 ¶ Flee, get you far off, dwell deep, O ye inhabitants of Hazor, saith the LORD; for Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you.

31 Arise, get you up unto the wealthy nation, that dwelleth without care, saith the LORD, which have neither gates nor bars, which dwell alone.

32 And their camels shall be a booty, and the multitude of their cattle a spoil: and I will scatter into all winds them that are in the utmost corners; and I will bring their calamity from all sides thereof, saith the LORD.

33 And Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever: there shall no man abide there, nor any son of man dwell in it.

34 ¶ The word of the LORD that came to Jeremiah the prophet against Elam in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, saying, 35 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Behold, I will break the bow of Elam, the chief of their might.

36 And upon Elam will I bring the four winds from the four quarters of heaven, and will scatter them toward all those winds; and there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come.

37 For I will cause Elam to be dismayed before their enemies, and before them that seek their life: and I will bring evil upon them, even my fierce anger, saith the LORD; and I will send the sword after them, till I have consumed them:

38 And I will set my throne in Elam, and will destroy from thence the king and the princes, saith the LORD.

39 ¶ But it shall come to pass in the latter day, that I will bring again the captivity of Elam, saith the LORD.

is spoken in the person of the king, or some other inhabitant of Damascus, bewailing the lot of so famous and pleasant a city, that it should not be spared or left untouched by the enemy.

Ver. 26. Therefore] Or, "Surely her young men," &c. See the particle lahen is rendered, v. 2.

Ver. 27. Ben-hadad] The name of several kings of Syria (see 1 Kings xv. 28, 2 Kings xiii. 3).

Ver. 28. Concerning Kedar, and concerning the kingdoms of Hazor,] The kingdoms whose metropolis is Hazor or Petra; so called, because it is κέντρον πόλεως περιουμένης, Strabo, lib. xvi. So Vitranga explains it upon Isa. xxi. 13. Kedar was that part of Arabia, which was inhabited by the posterity of Kedar, Ishmael's son (Gen. xxv. 13); called likewise the kingdoms or provinces of Hazor: each division having anciently a petty prince or king over it (see the note on xxv. 20).

Spoil the men of the east.] The Arabians are called in the scripture dialect, the men, or, children of the east (see the note on Isa. xi. 14).

Ver. 29. Their tents and their flocks shall they take away.] Their substance consisted in their cattle and their tents, from whence the country itself is called the "tents of Kedar," Ps. cxx. 5. With these they removed from place to place for the convenience of pasture (see Isa. xlii. 20).

Fear is on every side.] The very noise of the enemies shall fright them, and bring a panic fear upon them (see xlii. 5).

Ver. 30. Flee, get you far off, &c.] See ver. 8.

Ver. 31. Get you up unto the wealthy nation.] The prophet gives the Chaldeans a commission from God to undertake this expedition, and seize upon the wealth of the inhabitants of Kedar.

Which have neither gates nor bars,] A description of those that live securely, without walls or ramparts for their defence (see Ezek. xxxviii. 11).

Which dwell alone.] That do not combine into cities or communities for their mutual defence: but live scattered about the country, where they have room enough for their flocks, without any apprehension of danger (compare Numb. xliii. 9, Deut. xxxiii. 28, Mic. vii. 14).

Ver. 32. Their camels shall be a booty.] See ver. 29. I will scatter—them] See note upon ix. 26.

Ver. 33.] See note upon ix. 11.

Ver. 34. Against Elam] The promise of Elymais, which, together with Susiana, Nebuchadnezzar subdued, and took from Astyages king of Media, as Archbishop Usher gathers, by comparing Jer. xxv. 25 with Dan. viii. 1, 2, where, in the reign of Belshazzar, Daniel speaks of himself, as residing in "Shushan the palace, in the province of Elam:" which therefore at that time must be a province belonging to the king of Babylon (see his Annals, ad A. M. 3405, and 3451). Xenophon gives this account of the matter, how Elam came afterward under the power of Cyrus: "That Abradates being viceroy of Susa, under the king of Babylon, his wife Panthea, a very beautiful woman, was taken prisoner in the first war against the Babylonians: Cyrus having used her kindly, and kept her chastely for her husband: the sense of this generosity drew this prince over to Cyrus's party: whereupon Elam was joined to the empire of the Medes and Persians" (Vid. Cyri. Pæd. lib. v). Accordingly, we find the Elamites come with them to the siege of Babylon (see Isa. xxi. 2).

Ver. 35. The Elamites were famous archers (see Isa. xxii. 6).

Ver. 36. The four winds] I will bring enemies upon them from every quarter: wars and commotions are metaphorically denoted by winds (see iv. 11, 12, li. 1, Dan. vii. 2).

Ver. 37. I will send the sword after them.] Even after they are driven out of their own country, my vengeance shall pursue them (compare x. 16).

Ver. 38.] Nebuchadnezzar shall place his throne, or his royal pavilion, in Elam. in token of his entire conquest over that country (see i. 15. xliii. 10). This is called God's throne, as Nebuchadnezzar is called his servant: one that had an especial commission from God, to conquer this and the neighbouring countries (see xxvii. 6, 7).

Ver. 39.] The Elamites joined with Cyrus to subdue the Babylonians (see the note upon ver. 34): upon which Shushan, the chief city of Elymais, was made the metropolis of the Persian empire.

CHAPTER L.

1 THE word that the LORD spake against Babylon and against the land of the Chaldeans by Jeremiah the prophet.

2 Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and set up a standard; publish, and conceal not: say, Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces: her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces.

3 For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein: they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

4 ¶ In those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go, and seek the LORD their God.

CHAP. L.

ARGUMENT.—This and the following chapter contain a large description of the downfall of Babylon, and of that empire of which that city was the seat: it follows the rest of the prophecies of Jeremiah against the neighbouring countries, according to the method of God's judgments laid down before, xxv. 12, 13, where the prophet declares, that after Nebuchadnezzar and his successors had fulfilled God's purposes, in being executioners of his vengeance upon other countries, they themselves should drink of the same cup.

This prophecy has a farther aspect upon the mystical Babylon, mentioned in the Revelation, and many expressions of it are applied by St. John to the downfall of antichrist, as shall be more particularly observed under the several verses there referred to.

Ver. 2. Declare ye among the nations and publish.] The downfall of Babylon was an event in which many nations were concerned, that empire having been a common oppressor.

Set up a standard;] To call people together, and impart to them these good tidings. The destruction of Babylon would be likewise a sort of signal to the Jews, to assemble together in order to their return home: the time of their captivity being then to expire.

Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces.] When God punisheth an idolatrous nation, he asserts his own authority, to the confusion of all idols and their worshippers (see the note on xliii. 12). Bel is the same with Baal, a name common to the idols of the eastern countries, and at first probably given to some of the heavenly bodies. Afterward, when the worship of the deified men came into practice, Bel, or Belus, the idol of the Assyrians, is supposed to be the same with Nimrod: and when Daniel saith that Nebuchadnezzar carried the vessels of the temple of Jerusalem "into the house of his god" (Dan. i. 2), he is generally supposed to mean the idol Bel; who was worshipped as the tutelar deity of that country. Merodach might be the name of one of their kings, that was afterward deified by his subjects (see Isa. xxxix. 1).

Ver. 3. Out of the north there cometh up a nation] The Medes, who lay north of Babylon (see ver. 9, 41).

Which shall make her land desolate,] See ver. 40.

VOL. III.—62

5 They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the LORD in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten.

6 My people hath been lost sheep: their shepherds have caused them to go astray, they have turned them away on the mountains: they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their resting-place.

7 All that found them have devoured them: and their adversaries said, We offend not, because they have sinned against the LORD, the habitation of justice, even the LORD, the hope of their fathers.

8 Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Chaldeans, and be as the he goats before the flocks.

Ver. 4.] This may, in some sense, be meant of the Jews' return from the captivity, upon the destruction of the Babylonish monarchy. But I conceive this verse, among many others, is a proof that this prophecy has a farther aspect upon that general restoration of the Jews, which should be the consequent of the downfall of antichrist. For, first, here Israel and Judah are spoken of as partakers of the same restoration of the Jews, and reunited in the worship of the true God: a blessing not yet brought to pass, but reserved for aftertimes (compare ver. 10; see the argument upon ch. xxx., and the note upon iii. 18): and, in the second place, they are described as weeping, and troubled with a true compunction for their former sins: another circumstance to be hereafter fulfilled (see the note on xxxi. 9).

Ver. 5. They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward.] The words allude to the custom of the Jews going in companies up to Jerusalem at the solemn festivals (compare ch. xxxi., Isa. ii. 3).

Let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant.] The gospel is styled an "everlasting covenant," xxxii. 40. The Hebrew phrase is the same in both places. The words may allude to that solemn covenant Josiah and the people entered into after the general corruption of religion and morality, which had overspread the nation under the reign of Manasseh (see 2 Kings xxiii. 3).

Ver. 6. Their shepherds have caused them to go astray.] The rulers of my people, both civil and ecclesiastical, have been the occasion of their idolatry, and other sins, by which they have gone astray from God's commandments (see notes on ii. 8, and compare Ezek. xxxiv. 4—6).

They have turned them away on the mountains.] They have turned them aside from the right worship of God performed at Jerusalem, to sacrifice to idols upon the mountains and high places (see ii. 20, iii. 23).

Ver. 7. We offend not, because they have sinned against the Lord.] The heathen took advantage against the Jews from those remarkable judgments God had brought upon his people; and concluded from thence, that he cast them off utterly for their sins, and, being out of his protection, they might use them as they pleased (compare Isa. xlvii. 6, Zech. i. 15).

The habitation of justice.] A refuge and protection for those that are good and just: and, consequently,

9 ¶ For, lo, I will raise and cause to come up against Babylon an assembly of great nations from the north country: and they shall set themselves in array against her; from thence she shall be taken: their arrows shall be as of a mighty expert man; none shall return in vain.

10 And Chaldea shall be a spoil: all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the Lord.

11 Because ye were glad, because ye rejoiced, O ye destroyers of mine heritage, because ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bulls;

12 Your mother shall be sore confounded; she that bare you shall be ashamed: behold, the hindermost of the nations shall be a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert.

13 Because of the wrath of the Lord it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate:

one that would not have cast off the Jews, if they had not first forsaken him (compare Ps. xci. 1).

Ver. 8. Remove out of the midst of Babylon.] An exhortation often used by the prophets upon this subject (see li. 6, 45, xlviii. 20, see the notes there, lii. 11); and renewed by St. John, Rev. xviii. 4.

This exhortation Dr. Prideaux supposes to relate to the siege of Babylon, carried on by Darius Hystaspes, in the fifth and sixth years of his reign. Before which time God had warned the Jews, by their prophet Zechariah (ii. 6, 7), to "flee out of Babylon," and to deliver themselves from the miseries that should befall that city during the siege (see his Connex. of Script. Hist. p. 188).

Be as the he goats before the flocks.] Let every one strive to lead the way to others, and give them an example of speedily obeying God's call, without showing any fondness to the place, or the idolatries there practised.

Ver. 9. An assembly of great nations from the north country.] See ver. 41, li. 27.

Their arrows.] See ver. 14, 29, Isa. xiii. 18.

Ver. 10.] They shall revenge themselves upon her, and shall have as much spoil and plunder as they can desire.

Ver. 11. Because ye were glad,—O ye destroyers of mine heritage.] Ye insulted over the miseries of my people, after you had destroyed them. Though the Chaldeans were the executors of God's judgments upon the Jews; yet he punished them for what they did by his appointment, because they were carried on purely by their own ambition and covetousness, though providence directed their cruelties and oppressions to the fulfilling its own ends and purposes. In like manner, God threatens to punish the king of Assyria, after he had been the executioner of his judgments upon Jerusalem, Isa. x. 12 (compare Isa. xlvii. 6).

Because ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass.] The insolence and rudeness of oppressors is often compared to the wantonness of full-fed cattle (see Ps. xxii. 12, lxxviii. 31, Amos. iv. 1). For dasha, which our translation renders, "at grass" some read dosha, and understand it of a heifer that treads out the corn, and by being fed all that time, grows fat and wanton (see Hos. x. 11).

Ver. 12. Your mother shall be sore confounded.] Babylon, the metropolis, or mother-city of the empire (compare xlix. 2).

Behold, the hindermost of the nations shall be a wilderness.] The Vulgar Latin renders the words to this sense, "Behold, she shall be the hindermost of the nations, a wilderness," &c. (see ver. 40).

Ver. 13.] See note on xviii. 16.

every one that goeth by Babylon shall be astonished, and hiss at all her plagues.

14 Put yourselves in array against Babylon round about: all ye that bend the bow, shoot at her, spare no arrows: for she hath sinned against the Lord.

15 Shout against her round about: she hath given her hand: her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down: for it is the vengeance of the Lord: take vengeance upon her; as she hath done, do unto her.

16 Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the sickle in the time of harvest: for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people, and they shall flee every one to his own land.

17 ¶ Israel is a scattered sheep; the lions

Ver. 14. All ye that bend the bow, shoot at her.] The Elamites were famous for their skill in archery: which people were part of Cyrus's army (see note on xlix. 34, 35; see ver. 9, 29, 42).

For she hath sinned against the Lord.] She hath been in a remarkable manner an enemy to God's truth and people. This may be especially applied to mystical Babylon (see ver. 29, 31).

Ver. 15. Shout against her round about.] As conquerors do when a city is taken.

She hath given her hand.] She has submitted herself, and promised obedience to the conqueror. Giving the hand is a token of consenting to any conditions offered (see 2 Kings x. 15, 1 Chron. xxix. 24, 2 Chron. xxx. 8, Ezra x. 10); and was sometimes a ceremony used in taking an oath, to fulfil what is required by a superior (compare Gen. xxiv. 2, Lam. v. 6, Ezek. xvii. 18).

As she hath done, do unto her.] See ver. 29.

Her foundations are fallen.] See li. 58.

Ver. 16. Cut off the sower from Babylon.] Babylon was more like a country walled in than a city: her walls being sixty miles in compass, as Herodotus testifies: forty-eight miles according to Strabo (lib. xvi. p. 738). Within this large circuit, a great deal of ground was taken up in corn-fields. So that they had corn sufficient growing within the walls to maintain a siege, as Q. Curtius affirms (lib. v. cap. 1). Whereupon the husbandmen suffered as well as others, in a general destruction of the inhabitants: which our learned Dr. Prideaux refers to the taking of Babylon by Darius Hystaspes, after a siege of twenty months (see his Connex. of Script. Hist. p. 157, &c.). Where he applies several parts of this prophecy, relating to the utter overthrow of Babylon, to this reduction of it: for there is no necessity of supposing the destruction of Babylon here foretold should come to pass all together. The prophet only foretelling what should be the conclusion of God's judgments upon that place.

The same learned writer observes, that the punishment of Babylon kept pace with the restoration of the Jews. And as there are two ways of computing the seventy years of the Jewish captivity, one used by Jeremiah, the other by Zechariah (see the note on xxv. 11): so, if we reckon these seventy years ended in the fourth year of Darius, as Zechariah does, the desolation of Babylon was in a great measure completed about the same time.

They shall turn every one to his people.] This is spoken of the Babylonish allies (compare xli. 15, Isa. xlii. 14).

Ver. 17. Israel is a scattered sheep; the lions have driven him away.] Compare ver. 6. As a lion coming among a flock of sheep scatters them one from an-have driven him away: first the king of Assyria hath devoured him; and last this Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones.

18 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Behold, I will punish the king of Assyria and his land, as I have punished the king of Assyria.

19 And I will bring Israel again to his habitation, and he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and his soul shall be satisfied upon mount Ephraim and Gilead.

20 In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for I will pardon them whom I reserve.

21 ¶ Go up against the land of Merathaim, even against it, and against the inhabitants of Pekod: waste and utterly destroy after them, saith the Lord, and do according to all that I have commanded thee.

other; so have these foreign invaders, elsewhere compared to lions (see ii. 15, v. 6), served my people: first Shalmaneser carried away the ten tribes, and then the king of Babylon made a final destruction of the whole nation.

Ver. 18. I have punished the king of Assyria.] This may most probably be understood of the destruction of Nineveh, the chief seat of the Assyrian empire, by Nebuchadnezzar and Ahasuerus, or Astyages, as it is related in Tobit, xiv. 5. At the taking of this great city, foretold by Jonah, Nahum, and Zephaniah, Chynaladanus, the last king of the Assyrian race, was killed: and the seat and title of the empire removed to Babylon, which was no longer called the Assyrian, but the Babylonian monarchy (see Dr. Prideaux, p. 47, 48).

Ver. 19.] I will take care of them as a shepherd does of his flock, and restore them to their ancient habitations, and their former peace and plenty. As several parts of this prophecy relate to that mystical Babylon, whose destruction is foretold, Rev. xviii. so these promises of grace and favour to the Jewish nation, are chiefly to be understood of the general restoration of the Jewish nation, which we may expect after the downfall of the antichristian empire (compare xxxiii. 12, Isa. lxx. 13, Ezek. xxxiv. 13, 14).

Ver. 20. The iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none;] I will be perfectly reconciled to them, as if they had never offended. The Hebrew language expresses the utter ceasing of anything, by "seeking and not finding" (see Ps. x. 15, xxxviii. 36, Isa. xli. 12). Israel and Judah are here joined together, as ver. 4 (see the note there).

I will pardon them whom I reserve.] In all the judgments God brings upon his people, he still promises to reserve a remnant (see the note on xlv. 14, and on Isa. i. 9). St. Paul calls it a "remnant according to the election of grace," Rom. xi. 5. This place is chiefly to be understood of that remnant of the Jews, which should be converted in the latter times of the world, when the unbelievers and incorrigible shall be destroyed (compare li. 50, Isa. xlv. 20, Amos ix. 9, 10, see the notes on Isa. iv. 2).

Ver. 21. Go up against the land of Merathaim,] Or, of rebels, as the margin expounds the word. Others understand by it that part of the Babylonian dominions called Mardi by the heathen writers. This command is directed to Cyrus and his confederates.

22 A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction.

23 How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken! how is Babylon become a desolation among the nations!

24 I have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found, and also caught, because thou hast striven against the Lord.

25 The Lord hath opened his armoury, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for this is the work of the Lord God of hosts in the land of the Chaldeans.

26 Come against her from the utmost border, open her store-houses: cast her up as heaps, and destroy her utterly: let nothing of her be left.

27 Slay all her bullocks; let them go down to the slaughter: woe unto them! for their day is come, the time of their visitation.

28 The voice of them that flee and escape out of the land of Babylon, to declare in Zion the

Against the inhabitants of Pekod.] This was a country belonging to the Babylonian empire (see Ezek. xxiii. 23): it is mentioned here, because the word signifies visitation. This being the time when God will visit Babylon (see ver. 27, 31, and the note upon xlviii. 2).

Waste and utterly destroy after them.] Or, "destroy their posterity." Cut off from Babylon "the name and remnant," as God threatens in the parallel prophecy, Isa. xiv. 22. The word ahar signifies the same with aharith, which commonly denotes posterity (see Dan. xi. 4).

Do according to all that I have commanded thee.] Those persons whom God raises up to fulfil the decrees of his providence are said to perform his commands (see xxxiv. 22, Isa. x. 6); and therefore are called his servants (see xxv. 9, xxvii. 6). Such a commission was, in a particular manner, given to Cyrus by the prophet Isaiah, xlv. 28, xlv. 11, xlviii. 14.

Ver. 23.] That oppressive empire which "smote the nations with a continual stroke," as it is described Isa. xiv. 6.

Ver. 24.] Cyrus took the city by surprise, and unexpectedly, by draining the river Euphrates (see ver. 38, compare li. 8).

Ver. 25.] He hath raised up enemies to subdue the Chaldeans, Cyrus and his confederates: and hath furnished them with all necessary provisions for such an undertaking.

Ver. 26. Come against her from the utmost border.] From distant parts, "from the ends of the earth," as it is expressed ver. 40. Some render it "from all parts," or from every quarter, as the word miktse is rendered, Gen. xix. 4.

Cast her up as heaps.] The word naremin properly signifies "heaps of corn;" taking it in this sense, the marginal reading is to be preferred, "tread her as heaps;" that is, as the corn is trodden down when it is thrashed. The phrase alludes to the way of thrashing used in the eastern parts of the world, which was to beat the wheat out of the husk, by drawing heavy drays or planks over it (see the note upon Isa. xxviii. 28).

Destroy her utterly, &c.] See ver. 40.

Ver. 27.] Some of those that were more than ordinarily zealous for the welfare of God's church and people, were ready upon the first news of the taking of Babylon to bring the glad tidings thereof into Judea, how God had avenged the cause of his vengeance of the LORD our God, the vengeance of his temple.

29 Call together the archers against Babylon: all ye that bend the bow, camp against it round about; let none thereof escape: recompense her according to her work; according to all that she hath done, do unto her: for she hath been proud against the LORD, against the Holy One of Israel.

30 Therefore shall her young men fall in the streets, and all her men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the LORD.

31 Behold, I am against thee, O thou most proud, saith the LORD God of hosts: for thy day is come, the time that I will visit thee.

32 And the most proud shall stumble and fall, and none shall raise him up: and I will kindle a fire in his cities, and it shall devour all round about him.

33 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts; The children of Israel and the children of Judah were oppressed together: and all that took them captives held them fast; they refused to let them go.

34 Their Redeemer is strong; the LORD of hosts is his name: he shall thoroughly plead their cause, that he may give rest to the land, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon.

35 ¶ A sword is upon the Chaldeans, saith the LORD, and upon the inhabitants of Babylon, and upon her princes, and upon her wise men.

36 A sword is upon the liars; and they shall dote: a sword is upon her mighty men: and they shall be dismayed.

37 A sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots, and upon all the mingled people that are in the midst of her; and they shall become as women: a sword is upon her treasures; and they shall be robbed.

38 A drought is upon her waters; and they shall be dried up: for it is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols.

39 Therefore the wild beasts of the desert, with the wild beasts of the islands shall dwell people and executed his judgments on those who destroyed his temple, and profaned the holy vessels of it that were dedicated to his service (Dan. v. 1—3, 5, 30, and compare li. 51).

Ver. 29. Call together the archers against Babylon:] This is chiefly meant of the Elamites, who were famous archers, and were part of Cyrus's army which he brought against Babylon. See xlix. 3, 4, 35, and the note there, compared with Isa. xxi. 2.]

Recompense her according to her work;] Which will be "a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God," as St Paul speaks, 2 Thess. i. 5, at which all good men ought to rejoice, to express their approbation of it, and give glory to God when they see it done (compare Rev. xviii. 6, Ps. xxviii. 4, lviii. 9, 10).

For she hath been proud:] See ver. 14, 31.

[Ver. 30. Xenophon relates (lib. vii.), that Gatas and Gobryas, with their soldiers, when they were got into the town, marched directly towards the palace, and killing all they met, became masters of the place, and slew the king himself.]

Ver. 31.] Who hast been "proud against the Lord" (ver. 29), and exalted thyself against God, saying, "I am; and there is none besides me" (see Isa. xlvii. 7, 8, and the notes upon that place).

[Ver. 32. I will kindle a fire in his cities,] This may be meant of the destructions made in the Babylonian territories in the several expeditions Cyrus undertook against that monarchy, during the space of twenty years before the taking of Babylon. See Dr. Prideaux, from the year before Christ 559, to the year 539.]

Ver. 33.] It was the same government that oppressed them both, though under different denominations: sometimes called the kingdom of Assyria, and afterward the kingdom of Babylon: the latter succeeded the former in its oppression, as well as in its empire.

Ver. 34.] God will thoroughly plead the cause of his injured truth and people (see the note on ver. 11). This will be more remarkably fulfilled in the destruction of mystical Babylon (compare Isa. xlvii. 4, Rev. xviii. 8).

Ver. 35. A sword is—upon her princes,] Who were slain, together with their king Belshazzar, at a feast (see li. 39, Dan. v. 2, 30).

Upon her wise men.] The Chaldeans were famous for their skill in astrology and other arts of divination: and yet the learned in these sciences were not able to foresee or prevent the dangers coming upon themselves in the common calamity (see Isa. xlvii. 13, 14).

Ver. 36. A sword is upon the liars; and they shall dote:] The false pretenders to the knowledge of what is to come. Compare xlviii. 30, Isa. xlv. 25, where the prophet, speaking of the Chaldeans, saith, "He frustrateth the tokens of the liars [bad-dim in the Hebrew is the same word that is used here], and maketh diviners mad."

Ibid. and ver. 37.] See notes on li. 30.

Ver. 37. The mingled people that are in the midst of her;] Her auxiliaries, made up of several nations (see Ezek. xxx. 5).

Become as women:] See note xlviii. 41.

They shall be robbed.] They shall be a prey to such as come with sword in hand to rifle them: as Solon said to Cræsus, who by way of ostentation showed him his treasures, "Sir, if any one come that has better iron than you, he will be master of all your gold" (compare Isa. xlv. 3, and see the note there).

Ver. 38. A drought is upon her waters;] God opened a way for Cyrus to take Babylon, by suggesting to him a method of draining the river Euphrates, and making it passable for his army (compare li. 36, Isa. xlv. 27).

For it is the land of graven images,] This vengeance comes upon them, because they have been the great encouragers and supporters of idolatry (see ver. 2, li. 44, 47, 52). And the executioners of the divine judgments were the Persians, who, in opposition to the Sabeans, whose notions the Chaldeans embraced, followed the ancient discipline of the magi, or wise men among them, and had neither altars nor images: as Strabo testifies, lib. xv. The same thing is affirmed by Herodotus also, whose words are quoted in Origen's 7th book against Celsus, p. 373 (see likewise Dr. Prideaux's Connex. of Script. His. p. 177, &c.).

They are mad upon their idols.] It looks as if men had lost the use of their reason, that they should place the whole of their religion in image-worship, and put an extraordinary value upon one image more than another. So as to deck them with the most costly ornaments, and make long pilgrimages and processions to them. For which reason idolatry is called in scripture by the name of sorcery and witchcraft.

Ver. 39.] The desolation of Babylon is expressed there, and the owls shall dwell therein: and it shall be no more inhabited for ever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation.

40 As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighbor cities thereof, saith the Lord; so shall no man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell therein.

41 Behold, a people shall come from the north, and a great nation, and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

42 They shall hold the bow and the lance: they are cruel, and will not show mercy: their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride upon horses, every one put in array, like a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon.

43 The king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble: anguish in much the same words, Isa. xiii. 21, compare xxxiv. 11, 15, of the same prophecy, and Rev. xviii. 2.

St. Jerome assures us, in his commentary upon the parallel text of Isaiah, that, in his time, the place where Babylon stood was turned into a park, where the king of Persia used to hunt.

Ver. 40.] See Isa. xiii. 19, xlvii. 5, and notes there. Upon the Persians removing the seat of empire from Babylon, the glory of it was much diminished. And when Alexander proposed to restore it to its ancient greatness, he was prevented by death, before he could make any progress in that work. Under his successors it still decayed more and more, first by the neighbourhood of Seleucia, built upon the Tigris, by Seleucus Nicator: afterward by the building of Ctesiphon, on the other side of that river: so that at last it was reduced to utter solitude, and continued so in Strabo (lib. xvi.) and Pliny's time (see his Nat. Hist. lib. vi. cap. 26).

Ver. 41. A people—from the north,] See ver. 9. Coasts of the earth.] See ver. 26, i. 15, li. 27.

took hold of him, and pangs as of a woman in travail.

44 Behold, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan unto the habitation of the strong: but I will make them suddenly run away from her: and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and who will appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd that will stand before me?

45 Therefore hear ye the counsel of the Lord, that he hath taken against Babylon; and his purposes, that he hath purposed against the land of the Chaldeans: Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out: surely he shall make their habitation desolate with them.

46 At the noise of the taking of Babylon the earth is moved, and the cry is heard among the nations.

Ver. 42. They shall hold the bow and the lance:] See vi. 23 (compare ver. 9, 14 of this chapter).

They are cruel,] See Isa. xiii. 17, 18.

It is a common observation, that in those extraordinary commendations Xenophon gives of Cyrus's clemency and other virtues, he rather wrote an exact character of a perfect prince, than a narrative of matter of fact. However, in the taking of cities, several outrages are usually committed contrary to the will and intent of the chief commanders.

Their voice shall roar like the sea.] The noise of an army is fitly compared to the roaring of the sea, when it rages and is tempestuous (see Isa. v. 30).

Ver. 43.] Belshazzar was of himself a weak and dissolute prince, and dismayed upon the first apprehension of danger (see Dan. v. 6), when he understood that Cyrus's army laid siege to the city.

Ver. 44—46. Come up like a lion.] See xlix. 19—21. The cry is heard among the nations.] Who shall be astonished at the unexpected downfall of so great a city and potent an empire (compare Rev. xviii. 9).

CHAPTER LI.

1 THUS saith the Lord; Behold, I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the midst of them that rise up against me, a destroying wind;

2 And will send unto Babylon fanners, that shall fan her, and shall empty her land: for in the day of trouble they shall be against her round about.

3. Against him that bendeth let the archer bend his bow, and against him that lifteth himself up in his brigandine: and spare ye not her young men; destroy ye utterly all her host.

4 Thus the slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans, and they that are thrust through in her streets.

5 For Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the Lord of hosts; though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel.

6 Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver make a perfect riddance of everything that is valuable (compare xv. 7).

Ver. 3. Let the archer bend his bow,] See l. 14.

Ver. 5. For Israel hath not been [or shall not be] forsaken.] Though God was justly displeased with his people, yet he will not cast them off utterly, or deprive them of his protection.

Ver. 6.] God's people are exhorted to flee out of Babylon with all haste, as Lot did out of Sodom, lest they be consumed in the iniquity of that place (see l. 8).

Ver. 7.] She has recommended her idolatries to the world by several specious pretences, as well as

CHAP. LI.

See the Argument of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 1. Against them that dwell in the midst of them that rise up against me,] Or, "them that dwell in the midst of mine enemies;" that is, them that dwell in the metropolis or chief city of the Chaldeans.

A destroying wind;] See iv. 11.

Ver. 2.] He persists in the metaphor of the foregoing verse: as the wind drives and scatters chaff in a thrashing floor, so shall the Persian armies every man his soul: be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompence.

7 Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken: the nations have drunken of her wine; therefore the nations are mad.

8 Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed: howl for her; take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed.

9 We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed: forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country: for her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies.

10 The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness: come, and let us declare in Zion the work of the Lord our God.

11 Make bright the arrows; gather the shields: the Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes; for his device is against Babylon, to destroy it; because it is the vengeance of the Lord, the vengeance of his temple.

12 Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, make the watch strong, set up the watchmen, prepare the ambushes: for the Lord hath both devised and done that which he spake against the inhabitants of Babylon.

13 O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness.

14 The Lord of hosts hath sworn by himself, saying, Surely I will fill thee with men, as with caterpillars; and they shall lift up a shout against thee.

15 He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heaven by his understanding.

16 When he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens; and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth:

by her authority and example. So that they have been like poison set off by a golden cup, which hath enticed men to drink without being aware of the danger; and all this by God's permission, in order to the accomplishing some great ends of his providence. The expressions allude to the practice of harlots, in giving love-potions to their gallants, which were made up of such ingredients as disturbed their brains, and made them run mad. The sense of this verse is plainly applied by St. John to spiritual Babylon, which has used the most plausible methods to disguise her idolatrous practices (see Rev. xiv. 8. xvii. 4).

Ver. 8. Babylon is suddenly fallen.] It is one aggravation of the punishment of Babylon, that her destruction should come upon her suddenly and unexpectedly (compare l. 24) in one day, as the prophet Isaiah expresses it, xlvii. 9 (see the note upon that place, and compare Rev. xviii. 8, 10, 17, 19).

Howl for her;] Compare xlviii. 20. So the kings, the merchants, and other factors, are described as lamenting the destruction of Babylon, Rev. xviii. 9, 11, 17.

If so be she may be healed.] This is spoken ironically, implying that her ruin is irrecoverable (see the note on xlvii. 11).

Ver. 9.] This is spoken in the name of God's prophets, and the other witnesses of his truth, importing that they had sufficiently testified against her errors and idolatries, but she was irreclaimable: and therefore it was time for all the lovers of truth to depart out of her, lest they be involved in her punishments (see ver. 6).

[Her judgment reacheth unto heaven.] As sin is sometimes used for the punishment due to sin, by a metonymy of the cause for the effect: so here judgment is taken for sin which brings down God's judgments, by a metonymy of the effect for the cause.]

Ver. 10.] He hath declared our cause to be just (compare Ps. xxxvii. 6), by bringing such remarkable judgments upon our enemies: and therefore we ought to give glory to him in the assemblies of his church, and in the most public manner imaginable.

Ver. 11. Make bright the arrows;] Prepare the instruments of war (see xvi. 6).

The Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes:] [Neriglissor king of Babylon having formed an alliance against the Medes, Cambyses sent his son Cyrus with an army of thirty thousand Persians to join the Medes commanded by Cyaxares. See Xenophon Cyropæd. lib. i.] This Cyaxares king of Media, called Darius the Mede in scripture, was Cyrus's uncle; and it was properly his army that made the expedition against the Babylonians, he employing Cyrus as his general. Persia was then a small part of the empire of Media, and was of little account till Cyrus made a figure in the world: and even then it was called the kingdom of the Medes and Persians, the Medes having still the preference. And, in aftertimes, the Greek historians style those wars in which their country encountered with Xerxes, by the name of the Median wars, Τα Μηδικά, because the Medes were the founders of that empire.

It is the vengeance of the Lord.] See l. 28.

Ver. 12. Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, &c.] Give a signal to the inhabitants of Babylon to come together speedily for the defence of their walls and ramparts. To this sense some understood those words of Isaiah (xiii. 2), "Lift ye up a banner upon the high mountains," meaning Babylon, called so in the twenty-fifth verse of this chapter (see the note there). In these and the following words the prophet ironically encourages the Babylonians to use their best skill and courage for the defence of their city: which yet he foresees will be to no purpose (see the like figure, ver. 8, and xlvii. 4).

For the Lord hath both devised and done that which he spake, &c.] Or, "For as the Lord hath devised, so hath he done:" and thus the particle gam, being repeated, is translated ver. 29 of this chapter.

Ver. 13. Dwellest upon many waters.] Upon the river Euphrates, which encompassed Babylon, and ran through it, and by means of which it thought itself secure and impregnable. "Many waters" do likewise mystically signify the many people over which this was the reigning city (see Rev. xvii. 15).

The measure of thy covetousness.] God has put a bound to thy covetousness, which it shall not go beyond.

Ver. 14. As with caterpillars;] Or, locusts, as Bochart saith the word properly signifies. Armies are often compared to caterpillars, locusts, and such-like devouring insects (see Nahum iii. 15, 16, Joel ii. 2, 3, &c.).

he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

17 Every man is brutish by his knowledge: every founder is confounded by the graven image: for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

18 They are vanity, the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

19 The portion of Jacob is not like them; for he is the former of all things: and Israel is the rod of his inheritance: the LORD of hosts is his name.

20 Thou art my battle-ax and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms;

21 And with thee will I break in pieces the horse and his rider; and with thee will I break in pieces the chariot and his rider;

22 With thee also will I break in pieces man and woman; and with thee will I break in pieces old and young; and with thee will I break in pieces the young man and the maid;

Ver. 17—19.] An elegant and lofty description of God Almighty's power and wisdom, in opposition to the weakness and unprofitableness of idols: the same which he had before, x. 12, where see the notes. This is a powerful argument to encourage our trust in God, and to assure us, that he will in due time assert his own authority against all the encroachments of idol-worship and false religions.

Ver. 20.] God speaks here to Cyrus, and tells him, that he will make use of him as an instrument of providence, for the destroying of the whole power of the Babylonian empire, and of all orders and degrees of men in it; as he had formerly made that empire the executioner of his judgments upon other countries (see l. 23): or else the words may be understood of the church, and imply, that God will destroy all those earthly powers and kingdoms, which are adversaries to God's truth and people, in order to establish and advance his church. This will be fulfilled at the fall of mystical Babylon, when God's kingdom shall "break in pieces all the kingdoms of the earth," in the destruction of that remnant of the fourth monarchy, according to Daniel's prophecy, ii. 44 (compare Obad. ver. 18, Mic. v. 10, &c., Hag. ii. 21—23, Zech. xii. 3, 6, and see below the note on ver. 24).

Ver. 24. I will render unto Babylon—all their evil] See ver. 11, and l. 28.

In your sight,] This expression confirms the latter interpretation given of ver. 20, the same persons being spoken of here in the plural number, which are there mentioned in the singular, that is, God's church or faithful servants. The enallage or change of numbers is frequent in scripture (see Ps. xii. 7), and indeed in all writers when they speak of collective bodies.

Ver. 25. O destroying mountain—which destroyest all the earth:] Or, as the words may be more fitly rendered, "O corrupting mountain, that corruptest the whole earth." Babylon was situate in a plain (see ver. 13, and Gen. xi. 2), but is called a mountain here, by reason of its lofty edifices, walls, and towers (compare Isa. xiii. 2, Zech. iv. 7). It is called here the "mountain of corruption," a name given by way of reproach to the mount of Olives, after it was defiled by idolatry (2 Kings xxxiii. 13), by a slight changing of the Hebrew name, Har Mischah, into Har Maschith. The same appellation is here given to Babylon, because it was the seat of idolatry;

23 I will also break in pieces with thee the shepherd and his flock; and with thee will I break in pieces the husbandman and his yoke of oxen; and with thee will I break in pieces captains and rulers.

24 And I will render unto Babylon and to all the inhabitants of Chaldea all their evil that they have done in Zion in your sight, saith the LORD.

25 Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the LORD, which destroyest all the earth: and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain.

26 And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be desolate for ever, saith the LORD.

27 Set ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz; appoint a captain against her; cause the horses to come up as the rough caterpillars.

from whence it was derived into other countries under its government and jurisdiction. Which is remarkably true of mystical Babylon (see Rev. xvii. 5).

I will—roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain.] I will dismantle all thy walls and forts, and then destroy thee with fire (compare ver. 58, 59); that thou shalt appear like a great mountain covered with fire and smoke (compare Rev. viii. 8). We do not find that Babylon itself was ever destroyed by fire, but that mystical Babylon shall be so destroyed is plain from Rev. xvii. 16, xviii. 8, 9.

Ver. 26.] There shall not be left an entire stone fit to use (see l. 40).

Ver. 27. Set ye up a standard—blow the trumpet] These were common signals for assembling armies together (see Isa. xiii. 2, xviii. 3).

Call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni and Ashchenaz;] These were countries under the dominion of the Medes. The two former are probably the same with the greater and lesser Armenia. Cyrus's first expedition in this war, was for reducing the Armenians, who had revolted from the government of the Medes, who upon this conquest were obliged to send their usual quota of auxiliaries to the carrying on the war against the Babylonians (see Xenophon, Cyropæd. lib. iii.). Ararat is a place noted for the resting of the ark after the deluge, which is commonly supposed to be the same with the Gordiæan mountains: Minni is the country called Mynias, by Nic. Damascenus, in Josephus (lib. i. cap. 4), and Mylias by Strabo and Pliny: and is described by Damascenus as situate under the mountain Baris: that word signifies a ship in the Persian language, and was a name given to mount Ararat, from the ark's resting there (see Huetius's Demonstr. Evan. prop. iv. cap. 2, n. 40). By Ashchenaz, Bochart understands Phrygia and Troas, where there were footsteps of the name remaining in aftertimes: part of that country being called Ascania by Homer, and a lake and haven of the same name is mentioned by Strabo and Pliny. And since Cyrus had conquered Cæsus, and subdued several nations, from the Ægean sea to Euphrates, before he marched against Babylon, as both Herodotus (lib. i.) and Xenophon (Cyropæd. lib. vii.) testify, it is very probable that a great part of his army might consist of such troops as followed him out of Asia. [Xenophon informs us 28 Prepare against her the nations with the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion.

29 And the land shall tremble and sorrow: for every purpose of the LORD shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant.

30 The mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, they have remained in their holds: their might hath failed; they became as women: they have burned her dwelling-places; her bars are broken.

31 One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to shew the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end,

32 And that the passages are stopped, and the

that there were both Phrygians and Cappadocians in Cyrus's army. Cyropæd. lib. 7, p. 188, 189, edit. Leunclav.]

Appoint a captain against her;] Compare l. 44. The word tiphsar, captain, is supposed by Grotius to be derived from the Persian word satrapas; the letters being transposed.

Cause the horses to come up as the rough caterpillars.] Or, "the rough locust," as Bochart renders it, who observes that there are some insects of that kind rough and hairy (Hierozoicon, p. 456). Locusts represent horses, not only in their swiftness, but likewise in the shape of their heads: the figure of which may be seen in Ludolphus's note on his Ethiopic History, p. 177 (compare Rev. ix. 7, 8). [The war-horse may be compared to caterpillars, because their backs were bristled with sheaves of arrows.]

Ver. 28.] The several princes or viceroys of the provinces belonging to the Median empire with their people (compare l. 41). All princes and governors are called kings in the Hebrew language (see Isa. x. 8, and note on xxv. 10).

Ver. 29. The land shall tremble and sorrow:] An expression commonly used to denote the confusion of the inhabitants under some great calamity (see viii. 16, x. 10, Joel ii. 10, Amos. viii. 8).

Babylon a desolation] See notes on l. 16, 39, 40.

Ver. 30. The mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, they have remained in their holds:] The year before the siege of Babylon, Cyrus overthrew Belshazzar in battle, whereupon his army retreated within the walls, where they were shut up by him and besieged. Afterward, when Cyrus entered the city, he ordered public proclamation to be made, that all persons should keep within their houses, and whoever was found abroad should be put to death: and threatened to set their houses on fire, if any offered to hurt the soldiers from the tops of their houses (see Xenophon Cyropæd. lib. vii. p. 171, 192).

They became as women:] See note on xlviii. 41.

They have burned her dwelling-places;] See ver. 25.

Her bars are broken.] All her fortresses, and what she confided in as her chief defence against the enemy (compare Lam. ii. 9, Amos i. 5, Nah. iii. 13).

Ver. 31. One post shall run to meet another, &c.] Babylon was taken by surprise, by unexpectedly draining the river Euphrates, and entering through the channel into the city, as Herodotus (lib. i.) and Xenophon (lib. vii. Cyropæd.) relate.

For the carrying on this stratagem, Cyrus took the opportunity of a public festival, when the whole reeds they have burned with fire, and the men of war are affrighted.

33 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing-floor, it is time to thresh her: yet a little while, and the time of her harvest shall come.

34 Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon hath devoured me, he hath crushed me, he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath sawallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicates, he hath cast me out.

35 The violence done to me and to my flesh be upon Babylon, shall the inhabitant of Zion say; and my blood upon the inhabitants of Chaldea, shall Jerusalem say.

36 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, I night was usually spent in revellings, and all manner of disorders (see ver. 39). In this time of riot, the gates leading down to the river, that used to be shut every night, were left open, and gave a passage to Cyrus and his army into the city: which he became master of, while they thought themselves in the utmost security, both from the height and strength of their walls, and depth of the river: Cyrus having as yet made little progress in the siege, though he had invested the city with his army two years before. This surprise caused so many messengers to run one after the other, to acquaint the king with this unexpected news. The vast compass of this city has been observed in the notes on l. 16.

Herodotus takes notice, that the extreme parts of the city were taken before they who dwell in the middle of it were sensible of the danger (lib. i. n. 191).

Aristotle mentions it as a common report, that one part of the city had been taken three days before the other end knew it (Politic. lib. iii. cap. 3), which may probably be understood of this surprise by Cyrus.

Ver. 32. The passages are stopped,] Or rather surprised (see ver. 41 of this chapter). Cyrus's forces made themselves masters of the gates and passages that led from the river to the city.

The reeds they have burned with fire,] The word agammin, translated reeds, properly signifies marshes or lakes: and the phrase here imports, that the enemies have burnt up all the outworks belonging to the marshy grounds about the river Euphrates.

Ver. 33. The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing-floor,] God's people have been sorely bruised by the Babylonians, and trodden under foot by them as corn in a floor (see the notes on Isa. xxi. 9).

It is time to thresh her:] It is time for her to feel the same miseries she has made others suffer (see l. 15, 29). The word thresh often signifies to subdue by force and power (see Isa. xli. 15, Hos. i. 3, Mic. iv. 13, Hab. iii. 12).

The time of her harvest shall come.] There shall be a clear riddance made of her inhabitants and their treasures, as the harvest clears the fields, and leaves them empty and bare (see Isa. xvii. 5, Hos. vi. 11).

Ver. 34.] A pathetic description of the calamities brought upon the Jews by Nebuchadnezzar and his forces, who, after they had devoured the wealth, and laid waste the beauty of their country, then turned them out of it, and led them captives into a strange land.

Ver. 35.] Let God return upon herself the violence she has done to me and to my children (see will plead thy cause, and take vengeance for thee; and I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry.

37 And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment, and an hissing, without an inhabitant.

38 They shall roar together like lions: they shall yell as lions' whelps.

39 In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the LORD.

40 I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter, like rams with he goats.

41 How is Sheshach taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations!

42 The sea is come up upon Babylon: she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof.

43 Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness, a land wherein no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby.

44 And I will punish Bel in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up: and the nations shall not flow together any more unto him: yea, the wall of Babylon shall fall.

45 My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the LORD.

46 And lest your heart faint, and ye fear for the note on l. 29). Our nearest relations are called our flesh in scripture (see Judg. ix. 5, 2 Sam. v. 1, Neh. v. 5). To this sense the Hebrew word shear, which signifies remainder, or posterity, is used, Lev. xviii. 12, 17, xxi. 2, xxv. 49.

Ver. 36. I will plead thy cause.] See note on l. 11, 34.

I will dry up her sea.] I will exhaust her multitudes and their wealth (see ver. 13, compare Isa. xix. 5). This was likewise literally fulfilled in Cyrus's draining the river, and thereby gaining an entrance into the city. All great waters are called seas in the Hebrew language.

Ver. 37.] See i. 39, 40.

Ver. 38.] Either for grief and anguish of mind (compare Isa. lix. 11, Zech. xi. 3): or else the prophet describes the revels and riotous noise that they made upon the night of that public festival, on which the city was taken (see the following verse).

Ver. 39. In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken.] While they are feasting themselves, I will provide them another cup to drink; viz. that of my fury and indignation (see the note on xxv. 15). Babylon was taken upon a night of a public festival, as hath been observed upon ver. 31.

That they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep.] That in the midst of their jollity and security they may sleep the sleep of death: not such a sleep as proceeds from wine, which refresheth and enliveneth.

Ver. 40.] I will cut off both great and small (see note on l. 27, and compare Isa. xxxiv. 6).

Ver. 41. How is Sheshach taken!] Some commentators suppose Babylon called here by the name of Sheshach, because the city was taken at the time of the festival called Sacchaa (see the note xxv. 26).

How is the praise of the whole earth surprised!] Compare xlix. 25, Isa. xlii. 19, Dan. iv. 30. Babylon was esteemed the wonder of the world, for the height, breadth, and compass of her walls, and the palace and hanging gardens belonging to it, for the temple of Belus, for the banks and facing of the river, and the artificial lakes and canals made for the draining of it.

Ver. 42.] Multitudes are resembled to waters (see ver. 13 of this chapter), especially an army is fitly represented by an inundation which carries all before it (see Ps. xviii. 16, exliv. 7, Isa. viii. 7, Dan. ix. 26). There is likewise an opposition elegantly implied in the words between the inundation of Cyrus's army, and the draining the river Euphrates, which was one of the chief defences of the city.

The words may be taken in a more literal sense (see the note on ver. 64).

Ver. 43.] When the seat of the empire was removed from Babylon to Shushan, the consequence of that translation was the decay of Babylon itself, and all the lesser cities within its territories (see likewise the notes upon l. 39, 40): or else the words may be understood of the cities belonging to the Babylonish empire, which Cyrus took in his expedition from Asia to Babylon.

Ver. 44. I will punish Bel in Babylon.] See ver. 47, and note on l. 2.

I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up.] The heathens ascribed the honour of all their successes to their idols, and upon any great victory offered the best part of the spoils to their gods, and deposited them in their temples, as a grateful acknowledgment that the success was owing to their assistance. So Nebuchadnezzar, upon every victory over the Jews, carried away part of the furniture of the sanctuary, and put it in the temple of his idol (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 7, Dan. i. 3, 2 Kings xxv. 13, &c.). The restoring of the holy vessels to their right owner, and their former use, is what is here particularly foretold; which was done by Cyrus upon his proclamation for rebuilding the temple, Ezra i. 7 (compare ver. 11, 31 of this chapter, and l. 28).

The farther accomplishment of this prophecy, Dr. Prideaux places in Xerxes's demolishing the temple of Belus, and plundering it of its vast wealth; which, from Diodorus Siculus's account of it, he computes to amount to twenty-one millions of our money (see his Connect. of Script. Hist. p. 100, 101).

[The words may be explained from the apocryphal history of Bel and the Dragon, where the idol is supposed to have been daily fed with the choicest provisions, which his priests pretended were devoured by him: ver. 6, 11, &c. Here the prophet saith, there shall be no more such provisions made for him, and the idol itself shall be broken in pieces, to make him restore, if it were possible, what he has consumed.]

And the nations shall not flow together any more unto him.] There shall be no more costly presents brought by foreign nations unto the temple of Bel, as a compliment to that monarchy: just as, under the Roman empire, people that were conquered by them, sent golden crowns to Jupiter Capitolinus.

The wall of Babylon shall fall.] See ver. 58

Ver. 45. Go ye out, &c.] See note on l. 8.

Ver. 46. And ye fear for the rumour that may be heard] Lest the rumours of new forces ready to join themselves to the Babylonians, dishearten you the rumour that shall be heard in the land; a rumour shall both come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumour, and violence in the land, ruler against ruler.

47 Therefore, behold, the days come, that I will do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon: and her whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall in the midst of her.

48 Then the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, shall sing for Babylon: for the spoilers shall come unto her from the north, saith the LORD.

49 As Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth.

50 Ye that have escaped the sword, go away, stand not still: remember the LORD afar off, and let Jerusalem come into your mind.

51 We are confounded, because we have heard reproach: shame hath covered our faces: for strangers are come into the sanctuaries of the LORD's house.

52 Wherefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will do judgment upon her gra-and make you despair of seeing so great an empire subdued by any human power.

A rumour shall both come one year, and—another year] The prophet gives these tokens, whereby they may know the time of the dissolution of that empire drawing near: viz. that the first rumour of war denounced against the head of that empire shall be the year before the siege, when Cyrus and Nabonidus (or Belshazzar) shall engage in a battle; and the latter shall be overcome, upon which defeat the conqueror should in the following year lay siege to the city itself (see Archbishop Usher, ad. An. M. 3464).

Violence in the land, ruler against ruler.] This should be a time of hostile depredations and invasions: Cyrus and the king of Babylon should now appear at the head of two contending armies.

Ver. 47. I will do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon.] See l. 2. Dr. Prideaux supposes this prophecy fulfilled, when Xerxes pillaged and destroyed the Babylonish temples (see his Connect. of Script. Hist. p. 242). Taking this prophecy in its full extent, it comprises the fall of mystical Babylon, which is represented here, and in the parallel places of Isaiah and the Revelation, as a decisive stroke, which should thoroughly vindicate the cause of oppressed truth and innocence, and put a final period to idolatry, and to all the oppressions of God's people.

All her slain shall fall] See l. 35, 36.

Ver. 48. Then the heaven and the earth—shall sing] God's mercy to his church, and his judgments upon idolaters, shall be matter of joy and thankfulness to all God's faithful servants (compare ver. 10. and l. 28, 29, Isa. xlv. 23, xlviii. 20, Rev. xviii. 20).

For the spoilers shall come unto her] See l. 3, 40.

Ver. 49.] God will reward her according to her works (see l. 29).

Ver. 50.] The verse may, in the first place, relate to those Jews who had undergone all the hardships and dangers that attended a long captivity in an enemy's country: but I conceive it is to be understood of those who are elsewhere called the remnant (see the note on l. 20). These are exhorted to flee as fast as they can to Babylon, and join ven images: and through all her land the wounded shall groan.

53 Though Babylon should mount up to heaven, and though she should fortify the height of her strength, yet from me shall spoilers come unto her, saith the LORD.

54 A sound of a cry cometh from Babylon, and great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans:

55 Because the LORD hath spoiled Babylon, and destroyed out of her the great voice; when her waves do roar like great waters, a noise of their voice is uttered:

56 Because the spoiler is come upon her, even upon Babylon, and her mighty men are taken, every one of their bows is broken: for the LORD God of recompenses shall surely requite.

57 And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the king, whose name is the LORD of hosts.

58 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and themselves in heart and mind with God's church and people.

Ver. 51. We are confounded, because we have heard reproach.] The prophet represents the words of these pious exiles, when they reflected upon the desolation of God's people and sanctuary, whereby they were not only exposed themselves to the scorn and reproach of their enemies, but God's name and truth were blasphemed by strangers and heathens, who profaned his sanctuary, as if he were not able to protect his temple and worshippers (compare Ps. xlv. 15, 16, lxxix. 4, Lam. ii. 15, 16).

Into the sanctuaries] The word sanctuaries, in the plural, is likewise used Ps. lxxiii. 17, though our English reads there sanctuary; and the word is either an allusion to the several courts of the temple, or else it may comprehend those private oratories, which religious persons built for performing their devotions, who lived at a distance from the temple (see Ps. lxxiv. 8, and the notes upon xli. 5).

Ver. 52. Behold, the days come.] See ver. 47.

Ver. 53.] Though she prides herself in the glory of her empire, placed above the common height of human greatness (compare Isa. xlvii. 7, 8); though she thinks herself never so secure in her high gates (ver. 58), and strength of her walls, which were three hundred and fifty feet high, according to Herodotus (lib. i. cap. 178); yet this shall not place her out of the reach of my vengeance (compare xlix. 16).

Ver. 55.] As multitudes are compared to waters (see ver. 13), so the noise and stir that are heard in populous cities are resembled to the waves of the sea (compare Isa. xxii. 2), and when they are depopulated, they are reduced to silence (see Isa. xv. 1, lvii. 5). The same is expressed, xxv. 10, by "taking away the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness," &c. A judgment threatened to mystical Babylon, Rev. xviii. 23. Some render the latter part of the verse thus, When their waves roar, &c. and explain it of the Medes and Persians coming up like a flood against Babylon (see ver. 42).

Ver. 56. Her mighty men are taken.] See ver. 30. For the Lord God—shall surely requite.] See l. 29.

Ver. 57.] See ver. 39, and l. 35.

Ver. 58. The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly her high gates shall be burned with fire; and the people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.

59 ¶ The word which Jeremiah the prophet commanded Seraiah the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, when he went with Zedekiah the king of Judah into Babylon in the fourth year of his reign. And this Seraiah was a quiet prince.

60 So Jeremiah wrote in a book all the evil that should come upon Babylon, even all these words that are written against Babylon.

61 And Jeremiah said to Seraiah, When thou broken.] The walls were eighty-seven feet in breadth, according to Herodotus (lib. i. cap. 178). Ctesias saith, they were so wide, that six chariots might meet upon them (apud Diodor. Sicul. lib. ii.); their height was three hundred and fifty feet, as was observed before: on each square of the walls were twenty-five gates of brass, mentioned Isa. xlv. 2. These were taken away by Darius, when he took the city (see the notes upon 1. 16), who likewise brought down their walls to the height of fifty cubits only. Berosus affirms, that Cyrus ordered the outward walls of the city to be pulled down (see his words in Josephus, lib. i. contra App. p. 1045): though Herodotus and Xenophon take no notice of this circumstance.

The people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.] If the Chaldeans take never so much pains to quench the fire, it shall be to no purpose (compare ver. 64). And all their efforts to preserve their empire and city shall be as insignificant, as if men wrought in the fire, which immediately destroys all the fruits of their labours. The words may be better translated, "And the people shall labour for a thing of nought, and the folks shall weary themselves for that which shall be fuel for the fire:" that is, the works which have been erected with such incredible labour and expense shall at last fall to ruin, and be a prey to the flames (compare ver. 25, Hab. ii. 13, and see Noldius's Concordance, p. 185).

Ver. 59. When he went with Zedekiah] Or rather, "from Zedekiah," or, "on the behalf of Zedekiah," as our margin reads (see Noldius's Concordance, p. 114).

comest to Babylon, and shalt see, and shalt read all these words;

62 Then shalt thou say, O LORD, thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off, that none shall remain in it, neither man nor beast, but that it shall be desolate for ever.

63 And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates:

64 And thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her; and they shall be weary. Thus far are the words of Jeremiah.

Seraiah was a quiet prince.] "The chief chamberlain," as the margin reads, with a better sense: the chief of those that waited upon the king in his bed-chamber.

Ver. 60.] Compare xxx. 2. He might perhaps make use of Baruch as his amanuensis (see xxxvi. 2, 4).

Ver. 61. And shalt read all these words;] He was enjoined to read this prophecy to the Jews that were carried away to Babylon in Jehoiakim's captivity (see xxix. 1, 2): to comfort them under their exile.

Ver. 63.] The prophets sometimes gave sensible representations of the judgments they foretold (see xix. 10). This was a significant emblem of Babylon's sinking irrecoverably under the judgments here denounced against her (compare Rev. xviii. 21). This threatening was in a literal sense fulfilled, by Cyrus's breaking down the head or dam of the great lake, that was on the west side of the city, in order to turn the course of the river that way: for no care being afterward taken to repair that breach, the whole country about it was overflowed and drowned: and that prophecy of Isaiah (xiv. 23), of making the country of Babylon a possession for the bittern and pools of water, was literally fulfilled (see Dr. Prideaux, p. 104, 123, 124).

Ver. 64. They shall be weary.] They shall be like men that strive against an enemy that is too hard for them, where all their labour is but in vain (see ver. 58).

Thus far are the words of Jeremiah.] This is added, to show, that the next chapter was added by Ezra or Baruch, or whoever collected this prophecy into one volume.

CHAPTER LII.

1 ZEDEKIAH was one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

CHAP. LII.

ARGUMENT.—Grotius judiciously observes, that this chapter could not be added by Jeremiah, because a great part of it is a repetition of what he himself had related in the thirty-ninth and fortieth chapters of his prophecy. Therefore it is much more probable, that this chapter was added by Ezra, who is commonly supposed to have collected the holy writings into one body after the captivity; who designed this brief history of the desolations of the Jewish nation, as an introduction to the book of Lamentations that follows, and was anciently joined to the prophecy of Jeremiah,

2 And he did that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD, according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

3 For through the anger of the LORD it came as appears from St. Jerome's epistle to Paulinus. This chapter is briefly taken out of the latter part of the second book of Kings, with some few additions, which Ezra might supply out of the public records, from whence the books of Kings were compiled: which books were written either in or after the captivity, as may be collected from the Chaldee names, which are given to the months in those books, which were never used by the Jews till after the captivity.

Ver. 1—3.] This is word for word the same with 2 Kings xxiv. 18—20.

Ver. 4—11. It came to pass] See xxxix. 1, &c.

to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, till he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

4 ¶ And it came to pass in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came, he and all his army, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it, and built forts against it round about.

5 So the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

6 And in the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, the famine was sore in the city, so that there was no bread for the people of the land.

7 Then the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled, and went forth out of the city by night by the way of the gate between the two walls, which was by the king's garden; (now the Chaldeans were by the city round about:) and they went by the way of the plain.

8 ¶ But the army of the Chaldeans pursued after the king, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and all his army was scattered from him.

9 Then they took the king, and carried him up unto the king of Babylon to Riblah in the land of Hamath; where he gave judgment upon him.

10 And the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes: he slew also all the princes of Judah in Riblah.

11 Then he put out the eyes of Zedekiah: and the king of Babylon bound him in chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in prison till the day of his death.

12 ¶ Now in the fifth month, in the tenth day of the month, which was the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard, which served the king of Babylon, into Jerusalem,

13 And burned the house of the Lord, and the king's house; and all the houses of Jerusalem, and all the houses of the great men, burned he with fire:

14 And all the army of the Chaldeans, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down all the walls of Jerusalem round about.

15 Then Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive certain of the poor of the people, and the residue of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to the king of Babylon, and the rest of the multitude.

16 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left certain of the poor of the land for vine-dressers and for husbandmen.

17 Also the pillars of brass that were in the house of the Lord, and the bases, and the brasen sea that was in the house of the Lord, the Chaldeans brake, and carried all the brass of them to Babylon.

18 The caldrons also, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the bowls, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

19 And the basons, and the fire-pans, and the bowls, and the caldrons, and the candlesticks, and the spoons, and the cups; that which was of gold in gold, and that which was of silver in silver, took the captain of the guard away.

20 The two pillars, one sea, and twelve brasen bulls that were under the bases, which king Solomon had made in the house of the Lord: the brass of all these vessels was without weight.

21 And concerning the pillars, the height of one pillar was eighteen cubits; and a fillet of twelve cubits did compass it; and the thickness thereof was four fingers: it was hollow.

22 And a chapter of brass was upon it; and the height of one chapter was five cubits, with network and pomegranates upon the chapters round about, all of brass. The second pillar also and the pomegranates were like unto these.

Ver. 11. And put him in prison till the day of his death.] See note on xxxix. 7.

Ver. 12. In the fifth month.] This gave occasion to that solemn fast of the fifth month, observed in the times of the captivity (see Zech. vii. 3, 5, viii. 19).

In the tenth day of the month.] It is said, 2 Kings xxv. 7, that Nebuzar-adan came to Jerusalem on the seventh day of the month, but did not set the city and temple on fire till the tenth. Josephus, De Bello Jud. lib. viii. cap. 27, relates this remarkable circumstance that attended the burning of the temple, both under Nebuchadnezzar and Vespasian, that it happened both times on the same day of the year.

Ver. 13. And burned the house of the Lord.] After it had stood, saith Josephus, four hundred and seventy years (Antiq. lib. x. cap. 11). Archbishop Usher reckons it four hundred and twenty-four years from the laying the first foundation, by Solomon.

Ver. 15.] See the note on xxxix. 9.

Ver. 17, 18. Also the pillars of brass, &c.] See 2 Kings xxv. 14, &c. The temple was rifled of its riches and furniture at several times: the first was when Nebuchadnezzar came up against Jehoiakim, Dan. i. 2, the second time was at the captivity of Jeconiah (see xxvii. 19, and 2 Kings xxiv. 13); and now at the final destruction of the city and temple, they made a clear riddance of all its ornaments.

Ver. 20. Twelve brasen bulls that were under the bases.] Or rather, "which were instead of bases," to support the brazen sea (see 1 Kings vii. 25). So the Septuagint understand it. The Hebrew word tachath, elsewhere signifies instead, or in the place of another (see Lev. xvi. 32, Esth. ii. 17, 2 Chron. vi. 10).

Ver. 21. The height of the one pillar was eighteen cubits.] The same account is given of the height of these pillars, 1 Kings vii. 15; but in 2 Chron. iii. 15, it is said, that both the pillars made thirty-five cubits; which two texts may easily be reconciled, by allowing one cubit for the basis.

A fillet of twelve cubits did compass it.] So that the diameter was almost four cubits.

The thickness thereof was four fingers.] The pillar being hollow, the thickness of the work that encompassed the hollow space was four fingers over.

Ver. 22. The height of one chapter was five cubits.] With this account agrees the text in 1 Kings vii. 16, and 2 Chron. iii. 15; but in 2 Kings xxv. 17, it is said, "the height of the chapter was three cubits;" which 23 And there were ninety and six pomegranates on a side; and all the pomegranates upon the network were an hundred round about.

24 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door:

25 He took also out of the city an eunuch, which had the charge of the men of war; and seven men of them that were near the king's person, which were found in the city; and the principal scribe of the host, who mustered the people of the land; and threescore men of the people of the land, that were found in the midst of the city.

26 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard took them, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah.

27 And the king of Babylon smote them, and put them to death in Riblah in the land of Hamath. Thus Judah was carried away captive out of his own land.

28 This is the people whom Nebuchadnezzar carried away captive: in the seventh year three thousand Jews and three and twenty:

29 In the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar he carried away captive from Jerusalem eight hundred thirty and two persons:

30 In the three and twentieth year of Nebuchadnezzar Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive of the Jews seven hundred forty and five persons: all the persons were four thousand and six hundred.

31 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, in the five and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach difference commentators reconcile, by saying, that the chapter with the net-work and pomegranates here mentioned, was five cubits high, but without them it was but three.

Ver. 23. There were ninety and six pomegranates on a side; and all the pomegranates—were an hundred round about. That is, there were four-and-twenty on each side, or quarter, and one in each angle (compare 2 Chron. iii. 16). We read, 1 Kings vii. 20, that there were two hundred pomegranates in each chapter, and the text in 2 Chron. iv. 13, agrees with that account: which texts are reconciled, by supposing that there were two rows of pomegranates one above another, and each row consisted of a hundred, and the words in 1 Kings vii. 20 intimate as much. Dr. Lightfoot understands the words in Jeremiah in this sense: When the pillars were set to the wall, only ninety-six pomegranates could be seen; the other four being hid behind the pillar, as it stood up close to the wall: so he translates the former part of the verse thus, “And there were ninety-six pomegranates on the open sides,” or “towards the open air:” which sense he conceives the word ruchah to import (see his Description of the Temple, ch. 13, sect. 2).

Ver. 24. Seraiah the chief priest. See 1 Chron. vi. 14. He was the father of Ezra (see Ezra vii. 1).

And Zephaniah the second priest. The high-priest's substitute, in his absence, to oversee the affairs of the temple (see xxix. 25). This person is called the sagan by the Chaldee paraphrast here, and in the parallel place, 2 Kings xxv. The latter Jews tell us, it was an especial part of his office to supply the place of the high-priest, on the great day of expiation, if any accident should render him unqualified for officiating himself: of which Josephus gives an instance, Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 8.

The three keepers of the door. There were a great many porters belonging to the temple, as has been observed upon xxxv. 4, but these probably had the custody of the holy vessels, or of the treasury (see 1 Chron. ix. 26, and Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple, ch. 5, sect. 3).

Ver. 25. An eunuch. The word is better rendered an officer, 2 Kings xxv. 19 (see Jer. xxxiv. 19).

Seven men—near the king's person. “Who saw the king's face;” as it is in the Hebrew: the same character which is given to the seven princes of Persia, Esth. i. 14. In 2 Kings xxvi. 19, there is mention made but of five.

The principal scribe of the host. The muster-master-general, as we style him; or the secretary of war.

Threescore men—that were found in the midst of the city. These were eminent persons who had concealed themselves, but were afterward discovered.

Ver. 28. This is the people whom Nebuchadnezzar carried away captive. Archbishop Usher, in his Chronolog. S. p. 36, supposes, that this and the two following verses give an account of the lesser captivities which the Jews suffered under Nebuchadnezzar: whereas, there were three others, in which many more persons were carried away, viz. in the first year of his reign (Dan. i. 3), in the eighth year mentioned 2 Kings xxiv. 12, and in the nineteenth, when the city was destroyed, an entire riddance was made of the inhabitants which were left after the former captivities.

In the seventh year three thousand Jews and three and twenty. Upon Jehoiachin's rebelling against Nebuchadnezzar, he ordered the governors of the neighbouring provinces to make war upon him, who invaded his kingdom from every quarter. The Ammonites, Moabites, and other subjects to the Babylonish empire, infesting Judea with frequent incursions (see 2 Kings xxiv. 2, 3): and in the last year of Jehoiachin's reign, which is coincident with the seventh year of Nebuchadnezzar (see Jer. xxv. 1), the captivity here mentioned happened.

Ver. 29.] This was when Nebuchadnezzar raised the siege of Jerusalem, to march against the king of Egypt, who came with a great army to the relief of the place (see xxxvii. 5). At which time he sent all the captive Jews which were in his camp to Babylon (see Archbishop Usher's Chronolog. S. p. 38).

Ver. 30.] When Nebuchadnezzar had laid siege to Tyre, which was in the borders of Judea, Nebuzar-adan made this expedition into the country, and carried with him the captives here mentioned; who seem to be no others than the poor people, that he himself had left to manure the ground (ver. 1). And this he probably did by way of revenge for the murder of Gedaliah.

Ver. 31. In the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, &c. This note of time confirms the observation already made upon xxv. 1, viz. that the scripture computation of the beginning of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, anticipates that of Ptolemy's canon by two years, which two years he reigned with his father. For if we add the thirty-seven years of his reign here mentioned, to the eight years of it which preceded Jehoiachin's captivity (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12), that sum will amount to five and forty years: whereas, according to the common account, he reigned but three and forty.

king of Babylon in the first year of his reign lifted up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah, and brought him forth out of prison,

In the five and twentieth day of the month,] It is the twenty-seventh day, in 2 Kings xxv. 27. This advancement might be resolved upon the twenty-fifth day, but not brought to pass till the twenty-seventh.

Evil-merodach] His name was Merodach, a name common among the kings of Babylon (see Isa. xxxix. 1). But he had this mark of distinction given him by way of reproach, for the word implies as much as foolish Merodach, because he was a profligate and vicious prince.

In the first year of his reign] The words are better rendered in 2 Kings xxv. 28, "In the year when he began to reign."

Lifted up the head of Jehoiachin—and brought him forth out of prison,] St. Jerome, in his commentaries upon Isa. xiv. reports, from an ancient tradition of the Jews, that Evil-merodach having had the government of the Babylonish empire during his father's distraction, used his power so ill, that as soon as the old king came to himself, he put him in prison for it, where he contracted a particular acquaintance with Jehoiachin, who was his fellow-prisoner, and that this was the cause of the great kindness he expressed towards him.

Ver. 32 Above the throne of the kings] Who had the title of kings reserved to them after their captivity, as Porus had after he was vanquished by Alexander.

THE LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH.

CHAPTER I.

1 How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary!

2 She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears

CHAP. I.

ARGUMENT.—I observed in the argument to the fifty-second of Jeremiah, that that chapter was added, at the end of his prophecy, as a prologue or introduction to his book of Lamentations: which was originally joined to the former, but is now divided from it in the modern Jews' copies, which place this book, among other smaller tracts, such as the Canticles, Ruth, &c. at the end of the Pentateuch. This is a plain proof, that the order of the books of the Old Testament, in which the Jewish copies at present place them, is but of later date, and differs from that order in which Ezra placed the holy writings, when he collected them into one body. In which collection, Daniel had a place among the prophets: though the Jews, since the time of Christ, have thrust him down among the Hagiographa, contrary to the character their forefathers gave of him, as appears from Josephus, who calls him a prophet, nay, one of the greatest of the prophets (Antiq. lib. x. cap. 12), in agreement with which opinion our Saviour gives him the same title, Matt. xxiv. 25.

Instead of that ancient preface to the Lamentations, the Greek and Latin copies have a short introduction, briefly setting forth the subject of the book, which may be thus translated: "It came to pass, that after Israel was carried captive, and Jerusalem desolate, the prophet Jeremiah sat weeping, and bewailed Jerusalem with this Lamentation, and bitterly weeping and mourning, said, as follows." This argument was occasioned, as Huetius probably conjectures (Demonstrat. Evang. prop. iv. cap. 14), by removing the fifty-second chapter from the place where it first stood, and placing it as a conclusion to the prophecy of Jeremiah.

Archbishop Usher, in his annals, ad A. M. 3394, and some other learned men, following the opinion of Josephus, and St. Jerome, have supposed the Lamentations to have been written on occasion of Josiah's death (see Lam. iv. 20): which was an introduction to the fatal catastrophe of their church and nation. But whoever carefully reads this pathetic description of the miseries of Judah and Jerusalem, may be easily convinced, that this is not so much a prediction of evils to come, as a lively representation of a present calamity.

In which kind of writing the prophet Jeremiah was a great master, according to the character Grotius are on her cheeks: among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her, they are become her enemies.

3 Judah is gone into captivity because of affliction, and because of great servitude: she dwelleth among the heathen, she findeth no rest: all her persecutors overtook her between the straits.

4 The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts: all her gates are desolate: her priests sigh, her virgins are afflicted, and she is in bitterness.

5 Her adversaries are the chief, her enemies prosper; for the LORD hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions: her children are gone into captivity before the enemy.

6 And from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed: her princes are become like harts that find no pasture, and they are gone without strength before the pursuer.

7 Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction and of her miseries all her pleasant things that she had in the days of old, when her people fell into the hand of the enemy, and none did help her: the adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths.

8 Jerusalem hath grievously sinned; therefore she is removed: all that honoured her despise her, because they have seen her nakedness: yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward.

9 Her filthiness is in her skirts; she remembereth not her last end; therefore she came down wonderfully: she had no comforter. O LORD, behold my affliction: for the enemy hath magnified himself.

10 The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her pleasant things: for she hath seen that the heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that they should not enter into thy congregation.

11 All her people sigh, they seek bread; they have given their pleasant things for meat to relieve the soul: see, O LORD, and consider; for I am become vile.

gives of him, Mirus in affectibus concitandis Jeremias; "that he had a wonderful talent in exciting the passions."

Ver. 1. How is she become a widow!] Cities are commonly described as the mothers of their inhabitants, and their kings and princes as their husbands. So, when they are bereaved of these, they are said to be widows and childless (compare Isa. ii. 26, xlvii. 8). Jerusalem, under these circumstances, is described as sitting alone (the multitude of her inhabitants being dispersed and destroyed), and in a pensive condition (compare iii. 28).

She that was great among the nations, and princes among the provinces,] The kings of Judah, in their flourishing state, made conquests over the Philistines, Edomites, and other neighbouring countries: and by thus enlarging their dominions, advanced the power of the metropolis of their kingdom (see 2 Sam. viii., 2 Chron. xxvi. 6—8, 2 Kings xviii. 8).

Ver. 2. She weepeth sore in the night,] The darkness or solitude of the night doth naturally promote melancholy reflections (see Ps. vi. 6, xvi. 7, lxxvii. 6).

Among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: All her allies, whose friendship she courted by sinful compliances (see Jer. iv. 30, xxii. 20, 22), have forsaken her in her affliction, and join with her enemies in insulting over her.

Ver. 3. Judah is gone into captivity because of affliction, &c.] Her miseries have received their finishing stroke, in a total captivity and bondage to a foreign power of infidels and idolaters.

All her persecutors overtook her between the straits,] A metaphor from those that hunt a prey, which they commonly drive into some strait and narrow passage, from whence there is no making an escape.

Ver. 4. The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts:] The highways that lead to Jerusalem are unfrequented, because there are none that come up thither at the solemn feasts of the year, the temple and altar being destroyed.

Her virgins are afflicted,] Her calamities afflict the young as well as the old, and spoil all their mirth and gaiety (see ver. 18, ii. 21, v. 14).

Ver. 5. Her adversaries are the chief,] They have got the advantage over her, and she is become their vassal: and thus the judgment that Moses threatened the Jews upon their disobedience is fulfilled (Deut. xxviii. 43, 44), "That their enemies should be the head, and they should be the tail."

Her children are gone into captivity before the enemy,] Her inhabitants (see the note upon ver. 1) are forced into captivity by the enemies, as cattle are driven in herds by them that sell them.

Ver. 6. From the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed:] All the glory of God's sanctuary, and comely order of his worship, called "the beauty of holiness," Exod. xxviii. 2, Ps. vi. 9, ex. 3.

Her princes are become like harts that find no pasture,] They are become dispirited, they have lost their courage, and tamely submitted to the conqueror (see note on Jer. xiv. 5).

Ver. 7. Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction and of her miseries all her pleasant things,] The benefits she enjoyed from God's favour and protection, the honour of his peculiar presence in the temple, and the manifestation he gave of his will by the prophets (compare ver. 10). The Hebrew word merudim, translated misery, signifies banishment and captivity: to which sense the LXX. translate it.

The adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths,] The heathen writers commonly ridicule the Jewish sabbaths, as a mark of their sloth and idleness; without considering the excellent uses that day was designed for, viz. to give men leisure to attend upon the service of God, and learn the duties of religion.

Ver. 8. They have seen her nakedness:] She is stripped of all her ornaments, and carried naked and bare into captivity. As she has defiled herself with idolatry (called spiritual adultery in scripture), so God has ordered her to be exposed to shame, like a common harlot (see the note upon Jer. xiii. 22).

Ver. 9. Her filthiness is in her skirts;] She carries the marks of her sins in the greatness of her punishments. The phrase alludes to a woman in the state of her separation (compare ver. 17).

She remembereth not her last end;] Or rather, "She hath not remembered her latter end;" that is, what would be the effect and consequence of her sins (compare Isa. xlvii. 7).

Ver. 10.] See ver. 7.

12 ¶ Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the LORD hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger.

13 From above hath he sent fire into my bones, and it prevaileth against them: he hath spread a net for my feet, he hath turned me back: he hath made me desolate and faint all the day.

14 The yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand: they are wreathed, and come up upon my neck: he hath made my strength to fall, the LORD hath delivered me into their hands, from whom I am not able to rise up.

15 The LORD hath trodden under foot all my mighty men in the midst of me: he hath called an assembly against me to crush my young men: the LORD hath trodden the virgin, the daughter of Judah, as in a wine-press.

16 For these things I weep; mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me: my children are desolate, because the enemy prevailed.

17. Zion spreadeth forth her hands, and there

Ver. 11.] See ii. 12, iv. 4, 10, Jer. lii. 6.

Ver. 12. Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? The words may be rendered, "O all ye that pass by," or, "Oh, I appeal to all ye that pass by." The word lo or lu, is sometimes used for entreating or conjuring: as if the prophet had said, let any indifferent person judge, whether any calamity is like to mine.

Ver. 13.] He hath consumed my habitations by fire, as if he struck me with a blast of lightning, which immediately pierces into the vitals; and he has prevented my making any escape from my enemies, as if he had spread a net under my feet to hinder my flight.

Ver. 14.] He has laid upon me the burden of my iniquities, and inflicted such heavy punishments on me, that I must sink under them. The Septuagint and the Vulgar Latin, with very little variation, read, "He watcheth over my transgressions." To the same sense Daniel saith, "the Lord hath watched over the evil," Dan. ix. 14, and Job xiv. 16, "Thou watchest over my sin:" that is, thou diligently markest every sin I commit, that thou mayest in due time requite it with a proper punishment.

Ver. 15. The Lord hath trodden under foot The destruction that is made by war is elsewhere expressed by treading under foot (see the note on Jer. i. 26).

He hath called an assembly against me The army of the Chaldeans.

The Lord hath trodden the virgin,—as in a wine-press. That people that was formerly betrothed to him as a chaste spouse, and secured from all violent attempts by his immediate protection (see the notes on Jer. xiv. 13, xviii. 17), God has now given up to the fury of their enemies, who have made such an effusion of their blood, as may be fitly represented by the squeezing out of the red juice of grapes by a wine-press: to which God's vengeance is often compared in the prophetic writings (see Isa. lxiii. 3, Rev. xiv. 19, 20, xix. 15).

Ver. 16. Because the comforter See ver. 2, 9.

Ver. 17. Spreadeth forth her hands. A gesture of entreating and importunity (see Jer. iv. 31).

is none to comfort her: the LORD hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him: Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman among them.

18 ¶ The LORD is righteous; for I have rebelled against his commandment: hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow: my virgins and my young men are gone into captivity.

19 I called for my lovers, but they deceived me: my priests and mine elders gave up the ghost in the city, while they sought their meat to relieve their souls.

20 Behold, O LORD; for I am in distress: my bowels are troubled; mine heart is turned within me; for I have grievously rebelled: abroad the sword bereaveth, at home there is as death.

21 They have heard that I sigh: there is none to comfort me: all mine enemies have heard of my trouble; they are glad that thou hast done it: thou wilt bring the day that thou hast called, and they shall be like unto me.

22 Let all their wickedness come before thee; and do unto them as thou hast done unto me for all my transgressions: for my sighs are many, and my heart is faint.

The Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob,] It is the divine decree and pleasure.

Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman] Whom every body loathes or disdains: she is looked upon as abominable in the sight of God, and therefore men think they have a right to use her with despise and scorn (see Jer. i. 7).

Ver. 18. Behold my sorrow:] See ver. 12.

Ver. 19. I called for my lovers,] See ver. 2.

My priests and mine elders gave up the ghost] The famine hath consumed the most honourable, as well as the meaner part, of the people (see ver. 11).

Ver. 20. My bowels are troubled;] Compare Jer. iv. 19, xlviii. 36, Job. xxx. 27.

At home there is as death.] Compare Deut. xxxii. 25. The latter part of the sentence may better be rendered, "At home there is certain death;" for the particle of similitude doth sometimes strongly affirm, as commentators have observed upon those words of St. John, i. 14, "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father;" such a glory as could belong to none but the Son of God.

Ver. 21. They have heard that I sigh:] That is, mine enemies, as it follows.

They are glad that thou hast done it:] They please themselves with the thought, that our God, of whose favour and protection we used to boast, should forsake us, and give us up as a prey to our enemies (see ii. 15, 16).

Thou wilt bring the day that thou hast called, &c.] The day when thou wilt execute thy judgments upon the Babylonians, will certainly come at the time thou hast determined for that purpose.

Ver. 22. Let all their wickedness come before thee;] Let it appear, that "though thou chastenest us, thou punishest our enemies a thousand times more:" as the author of the book of Wisdom speaks, Wisd. xii. 22 (compare Jer. x. 25).

Do unto them as thou hast done unto me] Some render the words, "Glean them as thou hast gleaned me;" that is, make an entire riddance or destruction of them (compare Jer. vi. 9).

CHAPTER II.

1 How hath the LORD covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger!

2 The LORD hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pitied: he hath thrown down in his wrath the strong holds of the daughter of Judah; he hath brought them down to the ground: he hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof.

3 He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel: he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about.

4 He hath bent his bow like an enemy: he stood with his right hand as an adversary, and slew all that were pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion: he poured out his fury like fire.

5 The LORD was an enemy: he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces: he hath destroyed his strong holds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation.

6 And he hath violently taken away his tabernacle, as if it were of a garden: he hath destroyed his places of the assembly: the LORD hath caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion, and hath despised in the indignation of his anger the king and the priest.

7 The LORD hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the LORD, as in the day of a solemn feast.

8 The LORD hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion: he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from destroying: therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together.

9 Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars: her king and her princes are among the Gentiles: the law is no more; her prophets also find no vision from the LORD.

10 The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and keep silence: they have cast up

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. The beauty of Israel,] The temple, and all its glory (see i. 6).

And remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger!] And even spared not the ark itself, the footstool to the Shechinah, or divine glory, which sat between or upon the cherubims, as in a throne (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 2, Ps. xcix. 5, cxxiii. 7).

Ver. 2. And hath not pitied:] Without showing any pity or concern for them (see ver. 17, and iii. 43).

He hath polluted the kingdom] He hath shown no regard to the kingdom, which himself hath settled upon the family of David, but involved the royal family in one common destruction with the rest of the people. The expression is much the same with that of Ps. lxxxix. 39, "Thou hast profaned his crown by casting it to the ground."

Ver. 3. The horn of Israel:] By the horn of Israel, is meant his strength and glory, Job. xvi. 15, Ps. lxxv. 5, especially his kingly dignity (see Ps. lxxxix. 24, xcii. 10, cxxxii. 18).

He hath drawn back his right hand] He hath withdrawn his wonted assistance, and given us up into the hands of our enemies (compare Ps. lxxiv. 11).

Ver. 4. Pleasant to the eye] The chiefest in worth and dignity: those who were in the flower of their age, the joy and delight of their parents (see i. 15, Ezek. xxiv. 25).

Ver. 5. He hath swallowed up Israel,] As a lion devoureth his prey. The verb rendered to swallow up, signifies in a general sense, to destroy (see Isa. iii. 12).

Ver. 6. He hath violently taken away his tabernacle, as if it were of a garden:] He hath destroyed the temple, the place of his residence, and of our religious assemblies, as if it had been no better than a tabernacle or cottage, set up in a garden or vineyard, just while the fruit is gathering, and then to be taken down again (compare Isa. i. 8). The margin reads, "He hath taken away his hedge, as of a garden;" that is, he hath withdrawn his protection, and left us exposed to the fury of our enemies (compare Isa. v. 5).

Solemn feasts—to be forgotten] See i. 1.

And hath despised—the king and the priest.] And shown no regard for either of those honourable offices, but hath suffered the kingdom to be destroyed, and the temple laid waste.

Ver. 7.] Instead of the joyful sound of praises and thanksgivings to God, such as used to be solemnly performed in the temple at the public festivals; there was nothing to be heard but the noise of soldiers, and rudeness of infidels, profaning that sacred place, and insulting over the God that was worshipped there (compare Ps. lxxiv. 4).

[Ver. 8. To destroy the wall] Dr. Lightfoot explains this of the wall which encompassed the temple and its outward courts. See his description of the temple, chap. 17.]

He hath stretched out a line,] The instruments designed for building, are in some places applied to destroying, because sometimes men mark out those buildings they intend to pull down. So 2 Kings xxi. 13, God saith, "I will stretch over Jerusalem the line of Samaria;" and "the line of confusion," is mentioned Isa. xxxiv. 11 (see likewise Amos vii. 7, 8).

[Ver. 9. Her king and her princes are among the Gentiles:] The king of Babylon's officers carried away captive all the royal family, and likewise all the men of note for valour or quality, and left none behind but the poorest people of the land. See 2 Kings xxiv. 14—16, xxv. 7, 11, 12.]

[The law is no more;] The priests and Levites, whose office it is to instruct the people in the law, are dispersed among the heathen: and that part of the law which regards the public worship of God, is rendered impracticable by the temple's being destroyed.]

Her prophets also find no vision from the Lord.] The prophets are either dead, or those that are alive in captivity, as Ezekiel, Daniel, and Jeremiah himself; these are not favoured with divine revelations as they were wont to be, and so cannot resolve the doubts of those that come to them for advice (compare Ezek. vii. 26).

dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth: the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground.

11 Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the sucklings swoon in the streets of the city.

12 They say to their mothers, Where is corn and wine? when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers' bosom.

13 What thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? for thy breach is great like the sea: who can heal thee?

14 Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee: and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee false burdens and causes of banishment.

Ver. 10.] Expressions of the deepest mourning and sorrow (see iii. 23, Job ii. 12, 13, Isa. iii. 26, xlvii. 15).

Ver. 11. Mine eyes do fail with tears,] I have lost my sight with weeping (compare v. 17, Ps. vi. 7, xxxi. 2).

My liver is poured upon the earth,] My vitals seem to be dissolved, and have lost all their strength (compare Job xvi. 13, Ps. xxi. 14).

The children and the sucklings swoon] For want of sustenance (see ver. 19, and iv. 4).

Ver. 12. When they swooned as the wounded] Who are not presently dispatched, but die of a lingering death (see iv. 9).

Ver. 13. What thing shall I take to witness for thee?] What instance can I bring of any calamity like thine, that such an example may be some mitigation of thy complaints?

For thy breach is great like the sea:] It is like the breaking in of the sea, that overflows a whole country, where no stop can be put to the inundation.

Ver. 14. Thy prophets—have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity:] They have not given the people a just sense of their iniquities, in order to avert God's judgments: but rather flatter them in their sins, and in hopes of impunity (see Jer. v. 31, xiv. 14).

[False burdens] The Hebrew word massa is usually translated burden, and generally signifies a burdensome prophecy (see the note on Jer. xxiii. 33). But it likewise imports prophecy, in general (see Prov. xxx. 1, xxxi. 1), and so it is used here; for Jeremy complains of those impostors who prophesied peace, and soothed men up in their sins, to their final destruction.]

Ver. 15. Clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head] Gestures of derision, whereby the enemies of the Jews expressed a satisfaction in their calamities (see Jer. xviii. 6, 1 Kings ix. 8, Ezek. xxv. 6).

Is this the city that men call—The joy of the whole earth?] Or, the whole land! (see Ps. xlviii. 2). Jerusalem was the metropolis of the Jewish nation, and highly valued by them for the magnificence of their temple, and the presence of the true God there: whither the whole nation resorted to celebrate their solemn festivals, which were observed with all the 15 All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth?

16 All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth: they say, We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it.

17 The LORD hath done that which he had devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied: and he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee, he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.

18 Their heart cried unto the LORD, O wall of the daughter of Zion, let tears run down like a river day and night: give thyself no rest; let not the apple of thine eye cease.

19 Arise, cry out in the night: in the beginning of the watches pour out thine heart like water before the face of the LORD: lift up thy magnificence of a religious joy. Their being deprived of those ornaments, gave occasion to their enemies to insult over them (see Ps. lxxix. 4).

Ver. 16. Thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee:] As if they were ready to swallow thee up (compare iii. 46, Job. xvi. 9, 10, Ps. xxii. 13).

Ver. 17. He hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old:] He hath fulfilled those threatenings which he denounced against our disobedience to the law of Moses (see Lev. xxvi. 31, &c., Deut. xxvii. 25, 26, 49, &c.). The word command is sometimes used for any part of the covenant, which God had engaged himself to perform (see Ps. cv. 8, cxi. 9).

He hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.] Advanced their power and glory (see ver. 3).

Ver. 18.] As the wall and rampart are said to lament (ver. 8), because their ruins are objects of lamentation: so here devout persons, upon the destruction of the city, direct their prayers to God, as if the ruins themselves did entreat him to take compassion on the miseries of that place which he had chosen for his peculiar residence (see the like prosopœia, Hab. ii. 11). To this purpose the Vulgar Latin expresses the sense, Clamavit cor meum super muris filiæ Zion; "My heart cried unto the Lord concerning the walls of the daughter of Zion."

Ver. 19. Cry out in the night: in the beginning of the watches] Devout persons showed their earnestness in prayer, by attending upon it late at night, and early in the morning, when others give themselves up to sloth and drowsiness (see Ps. lxxii. 6, cxix. 55, 147, 148, Isa. xxvi. 9, 1 Pet. iv. 7). The Jews divided the night into three watches (see Judg. vii. 19); and in aftertimes into four (see Matt. xiv. 25, Mark xiii. 35, Luke xii. 38). The first watch was reckoned from the time of going to bed.

Pour out thine heart like water] Offer up thy earnest prayers with tears to the throne of grace: and send up thy very soul, and thy devotest affections, along with them (compare 1 Sam. vii. 6, Ps. lxii. 8).

For the life of thy young children.] See ver. 11.

In the top of every street.] See the same phrase, iv. 1, Isa. li. 20, Nahum iii. 10. Noldius thinks the expression means the same, as in every street (see his Concordance, p. 214).

hands toward him for the life of thy young children, that faint for hunger in the top of every street.

20 Behold, O LORD, and consider to whom thou hast done this. Shall the women eat their fruit, and children of a span long? shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the LORD?

21 The young and the old lie on the ground

Ver. 20. Consider to whom thou hast done this.] To thy people, for whom thou hast formerly expressed so much tenderness and affection.

Shall the women eat their fruit, and children of a span long?] The margin reads, "swaddled with their hands:" in which sense the word is used, ver. 22. We find, by comparing this verse with iv. 10, that God brought upon them that terrible judgment which he had denounced against them, if they continued to provoke him; viz. That they should "eat the flesh of their own sons and daughters" (Lev. xxvi. 29, Deut. xxviii. 53, Jer. xix. 13).

Ver. 21. The young and the old lie on the ground] in the streets: my virgins and my young men are fallen by the sword; thou hast slain them in the day of thine anger; thou hast killed, and not pitied.

22 Thou hast called as in a solemn day my terrors round about, so that in the day of the LORD's anger none escaped nor remained: those that I have swaddled and brought up hath mine enemy consumed.

Either they lie slain without any regard to age or condition: or else they lie prostrate there, in a desponding manner, and just ready to give up the ghost (see ver. 10).

Ver. 22. Thou hast called as in a solemn day my terrors round about,] Terrors come upon me on every side by thy appointment; just as multitudes use to flock to Jerusalem at the times of the solemn feasts. The phrase magor missabib, "fear or terror on every side," is elsewhere used, by Jeremiah, to express great desolation and misery (see Jer. vi. 25, xx. 3, xlv. 5, xlix. 19).

CHAPTER III.

1 I am the man that hath seen affliction by the rod of his wrath.

2 He hath led me, and brought me into darkness, but not into light.

3 Surely against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day.

4 My flesh and my skin hath he made old: he hath broken my bones.

5 He hath builded against me, and compassed me with gall and travel.

6 He hath set me in dark places, as they that be dead of old.

7 He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out: he hath made my chain heavy.

8 Also when I cry and shout, he shutteth out my prayer.

9 He hath inclosed my ways with hewn stone, he hath made my paths crooked.

10 He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, and as a lion in secret places.

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter is written in different metres from the two former, and that which follows, as St. Jerome hath observed in his preface to the Lamentations: and whereas in those the first letter of every verse follows the order of the alphabet, here the same initial letter is continued for three verses together.

The subject of the chapter is penitential meditations upon the prophet's own calamities, as well as those of the public: together with pious reflections upon the end which God proposes in sending afflictions, and the good use men ought to make of such chastisements.

Ver. 1.] The prophet speaks with a particular regard to the ill treatment he met with in the discharge of his prophetic office (compare Jer. xv. 10, 17, 18, xx. 8, &c. xxvi. 8, &c., xxxvi. 26, xxxvii. 15, xxxviii. 6).

Ver. 2.] Light is often used in scripture for happiness or comfort, and darkness for affliction and misery (see Isa. lix. 9, Jer. xiii. 16, Amos v. 20). The words probably allude to the prophet's being cast into the dungeon (see ver. 53, 55).

Ver. 3.] God, that was formerly kind and gracious, now exercises continual acts of severity. "He turneth his hand against me," is a phrase equivalent to that we read, Isa. i. 25, "I will turn my hand upon thee" (see the note there).

Ver. 4. My flesh and my skin hath he made old;] Compare Job xvi. 8, Ps. xxxi. 10, xxxii. 3.

He hath broken my bones.] The anguish I feel in my mind is as painful to me as if all my bones were broken (compare Ps. li. 8, Isa. xxxviii. 13).

Ver. 5. He hath builded against me,] He hath enclosed me on every side, that there is no escaping the miseries that surround me (compare ver. 7, 9).

And compassed me with gall] See ver. 19.

Ver. 6.] He hath confined me to a dungeon, where no light enters; and I am sequestered from human society, as if I were out of the world (compare ver. 53, 54, Ps. lxxxviii. 5, 6).

Ver. 7. He hath hedged me about,] See ver. 5, and compare Job iii. 23, xix. 8. The word may allude to the siege of Jerusalem.

He hath made my chain heavy.] He hath made my bondage, or my imprisonment, grievous.

Ver. 8. When I cry and shout [or call aloud], he shutteth out my prayer.] Refuseth to hearken to it, or give me any ease or relief. God's answering men's requests, is commonly expressed by hearkening to their prayers (compare Job xxx. 20).

Ver. 9. He hath inclosed my ways] See ver. 5, 7.

He hath made my paths crooked.] So that I know not which way to turn myself (see ver. 11).

Ver. 10.] He falls upon me with the fierceness of his anger, as a bear or lion seizes upon his prey (compare Job x. 16, Hos. v. 14, xiii. 7, 8).

Ver. 11.] He disappoints all my undertakings, he 11 He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces : he hath made me desolate.

12 He hath bent his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow.

13 He hath caused the arrows of his quiver to enter into my reins.

14 I was a derision to all my people ; and their song all the day.

15 He hath filled me with bitterness, he hath made me drunken with wormwood.

16 He hath also broken my teeth with gravel stones, he hath covered me with ashes.

17 And thou hast removed my soul far off from peace : I forgot prosperity.

18 And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the LORD :

19 Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall.

20 My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is humbled in me.

21 This I recall to my mind, therefore have I hope.

22 ¶ It is of the LORD's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not.

23 They are new every morning : great is thy faithfulness.

24 The LORD is my portion, saith my soul ; therefore will I hope in him.

25 The LORD is good unto them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him.

26 It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the LORD.

27 It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth.

28 He sitteth alone and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it upon him.

29 He putteth his mouth in the dust ; if so be there may be hope.

30 He giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him : he is filled full with reproach.

31 For the LORD will not cast off for ever :

32 But though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies.

33 For he doth not afflict willingly nor grieve the children of men.

34 To crush under his feet all the prisoners of the earth, layeth my country desolate, and makes it to cease from being a nation, or body politic.

Ver. 12, 13.] He hath made me the mark and object of his indignation (compare Job xvi. 12, 13, Ps. xxxviii. 2).

Ver. 13. The arrows of his quiver] Called here in the Hebrew, the "sons of his quiver," by an elegant metaphor, as they are called "the sons of the bow," Job xli. 28. By the same metaphor, sparks are called "the sons of coal," Job v. 7.

Ver. 14. I was a derision to all my people ;] This may be understood of Jeremiah himself (see Jer. xx. 7) ; but some critics suppose the word ammi, rendered my people, to stand for ammin, the people, as the word is used in some places (see 2 Sam. xxii. 44, Mic. vi. 26, compared with Ps. xviii. 44) ; and then this sentence is to be understood of the Jewish nation, and imports, that their miseries exposed them to the scorn and reproach of all the neighbouring countries (see ii. 15).

Their song] See ver. 63, Job xxx. 9, Ps. lxix. 2.

Ver. 15. Drunken with wormwood.] See ver. 19.

Ver. 16.] In this and the foregoing verse, the prophet aggravates the calamities of his people by such expressions as imply, that instead of any support or comfort, they find nothing but miseries and afflictions (see the note on Jer. ix. 15). The Septuagint render the latter part of the verse, "He hath fed me with ashes:" i. e. We fare as hard as those who feed upon bread baked in ashes, whose teeth are in danger of being broke with grits and stones (compare Job vi. 7, Ps. cii. 9). This translation Noldius defends in his Concordance, p. 168.

Ver. 17. I forgot prosperity.] I have been a stranger to prosperity long enough to wear the remembrance of it out of my mind: so Joseph, speaking of the seven years of famine, saith, That "plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt" (Gen. xli. 30). By the same figure, the prophet Isaiah, describing happy times, saith, The former troubles are forgotten (lxv. 16).

Ver. 18.] I began to despair of God's mercy (see Ps. xxxi. 22).

Ver. 19. Mine affliction and my misery [or banishment, see i. 7], the wormwood and the gall.] Wormwood and gall are put for the most severe and rigorous treatment (see the notes on Jer. ix. 15).

Ver. 20.] I have still new occasions to remember them.

Ver. 21.] The reflections set down in the following verses, are a sufficient ground for our trust in God under the severest trials.

Ver. 22.] The Septuagint and Chaldee paraphrase render the sentence, "Because the Lord's mercies are not at an end."

Ver. 23.] Thy mercies are renewed to us every day ; and thy faithfulness in performing them is as great as thy goodness in promising them. God's mercy and truth, or fidelity, are usually joined together (see Gen. xxxii. 10, Ps. lvii. 10, c. 4).

Ver. 24.] An interest in the favour and promises of God is the best inheritance (see Jer. x. 16).

Ver. 25.] To them that patiently wait his time, when he thinks it a proper season to afford them comfort and deliverance : and in the meanwhile apply themselves to him by prayers and humiliation (see the following verse).

Ver. 27.] It is good to be inured betimes, to bear those useful restraints which arise from a sense of the duty we owe to God, and the obedience we ought to pay to his laws.

Ver. 28.] The discipline of afflictions makes a man serious and thoughtful, it disposes him to reflect upon himself and his ways, and instructs him to acquiesce in the disposals of providence.

Ver. 29.] He prostrates himself even to the ground before almighty God, in token of the deep-seated humiliation of his soul (see Ps. cxix. 25), if by that means he may recover the divine favour.

Ver. 30.] He not only humbles himself in the sight of God ; but likewise patiently bears the ill treatment of men (compare Isa. i. 6).

Ver. 33.] God doth not take pleasure in the misery of men, or in exercising his authority over them, but designs all his chastisements for our good (see Heb. xii. 9, 10).

Ver. 34—36.] As God takes no pleasure in oppressing the poor and helpless, so neither will he suffer any men to escape unpunished that are guilty of such acts of injustice and cruelty, who never consider 35 To turn aside the right of a man before the face of the most High.

36 To subvert a man in his cause, the LORD approveth not.

37 ¶ Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the LORD commandeth it not?

38 Out of the mouth of the most High proceedeth not evil and good?

39 Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?

40 Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the LORD.

41 Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.

42 We have transgressed and have rebelled: thou hast not pardoned.

43 Thou hast covered with anger, and persecuted us: thou hast slain, thou hast not pitied.

44 Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through.

45 Thou hast made us as the offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people.

46 All our enemies have opened their mouths against us.

47 Fear and a snare is come upon us, desolation and destruction.

48 Mine eye runneth down with rivers of water for the destruction of the daughter of my people.

49 Mine eye tricketh down, and ceaseth not, without any intermission, 50 Till the LORD look down, and behold from heaven.

51 Mine eye affected mine heart because of all the daughters of my city.

52 Mine enemies chased me sore, like a bird, without cause.

53 They have cut off my life in the dungeon, and cast a stone upon me.

54 Waters flowed over mine head; then I said, I am cut off.

55 ¶ I called upon thy name, O LORD, out of the low dungeon.

56 Thou hast heard my voice: hide not thine ear at my breathing, at my cry.

57 Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee; thou saidst, Fear not.

58 O LORD, thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul; thou hast redeemed my life.

59 O LORD, thou hast seen my wrong: judge thou my cause.

60 Thou hast seen all their vengeance and all their imaginations against me.

61 Thou hast heard their reproach, O LORD, and all their imaginations against me;

62 The lips of those that rose up against me, and their device against me all the day.

63 Behold their sitting down, and their rising up; I am their musick.

64 ¶ Render unto them a recompense, O LORD, according to the work of their hands.

that all the wrongs they do are committed in the sight of the supreme Judge of the world; and although at present he thinks fit to prosper such oppressors, the Chaldeans in particular, yet in due time, he will call them to a severe account for their wickedness.

Ver. 37.] The king of Babylon, and such haughty tyrants, may boast of their power, as if it were equal to omnipotence itself: but still it is God's prerogative to bring to pass whatever he pleases, without any let or impediment, only by speaking or declaring his purpose, that the thing should be done, as he did at the beginning of the creation (see Ps. xxxiii. 7): and ever since nothing is brought to pass, but according to his "determinate counsel and foreknowledge;" who, as he makes men the instrument of his vengeance, so he can restrain their cruelty whenever he thinks fit.

Ver. 38.] Do not calamities come from God's will and disposal, as well as prosperity (see Isa. xlv. 7, Amos iii. 6).

Ver. 39.] If we consider God's afflictions as a just reward of our evil deeds, this will prevent all murmuring and repining against providence: especially as long as men are on this side of the grave, they ought to be thankful for having an opportunity given them of repentance.

Ver. 43.] See ii. 1. Or the words may be rendered "Thou hast covered thy face in anger," &c. (see the next verse).

Ver. 44.] The same sense is elsewhere expressed by God's "hiding his face."

Ver. 45.] That is, of the heathen nations, whither thou hast driven us (see ver. 14, ii. 15); St. Paul plainly alludes to this text, 1 Cor. iv. 13, and translates the Hebrew word maus, "refuse," by the Greek πυρίπυμα. I have observed in the notes upon Jer. xxv. 10, that the apostles, in quoting the scriptures, do not always follow the Septuagint, but now and then make a new translation of the words out of the Hebrew.

Ver. 46.] See the note on ii. 16. Or else the words may be understood of the reproaches they utter against us, and the God whom we worship (compare Rev. xiii. 6).

Ver. 47. Fear and a snare] See Jer. xlviii. 43. Desolation and destruction.] The expression is much the same in the original with that we meet with Isa. li. 19 (see the note there).

Ver. 51. Mine eye affecteth mine heart] Or, preys upon my heart; my grief wears out my health and strength. Abraham a Schultens, in his animadversions, on Job, p. 47, observes, that natal signifies, in Arabic, to weaken, grieve, or make sick.

Ver. 52.] The prophet in this and the following verses describes his own sufferings, when his enemies seized him and put him into the dungeon (Jer. xxxvii. 16, xxxviii. 6). He compares them to a fowler that is in pursuit of a bird; so, saith he, they sought all opportunities to take an advantage against me, and to deprive me of life or liberty: and this they did without any provocation given on his part. So the word hinmam, "without cause," signifies (compare Ps. xxxv. 7, 19, lxix. 4, cix. 3).

Ver. 53.] I was not only sequestered from all human society, like a dead man (see ver. 6), but in apparent danger of losing my life in the dungeon (see Jer. xxxvii. 24, xxxviii. 9, 10). And their laying a stone upon the entrance of that dark cavern, resembled the burying me alive (Compare Dan. vi. 17, Matt. xxvii. 60).

Ver. 54.] When I sunk down into the mire in the dungeon, I despaired of my life, just as if I had been sinking over head and ears in a river (compare Ps. lxix. 2). And I said, I am cut off from the land of the living (see Ps. xxxi. 2, Isa. xxxviii. 10, 11).

Ver. 56. Hide not thine ear at my breathing,] Or, sighing: God's answering our prayers is commonly expressed by "opening his ears:" hiding them denotes the contrary.

Ver. 60. All their vengeance] See Jer. xi. 19.

66 Persecute and destroy them in anger from under the heavens of the Lord.

Ver. 63.] In every part of their life (compare Ps. cxxxix. 2), I am the object of their scorn and derision (see ver. 14).

Ver. 64.] See note upon Jer. xi. 20.

Ver. 66.] Let them be destroyed from off the face of the earth (compare Jer. x. 11).

CHAPTER IV.

1 How is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed! the stones of the sanctuary are poured out in the top of every street.

2 The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter!

3 Even the sea-monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to the young ones: the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness.

4 The tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirst: the young children ask bread, and no man breaketh it unto them.

5 They that did feed delicately are desolate in the streets: they that were brought up in scarlet embrace dunghills.

CHAP. IV.

AROUMENT.—The prophet returns to the same metre he used in the first two chapters, and treats of the same subject.

Ver. 1. How is the gold become dim!] How is the glory of the temple obscured! The sanctuary which was overlaid with gold (see 2 Chron. iii. 8), now lies in ruins: and the stones of it are not distinguished from common rubbish! In like manner, the priests and Levites, who attended upon God's service, and the elders of the people, the members of the great Sanhedrin, who kept their court within the precincts of the temple (see the note on Jer. xxxv. 4); these persons that might be resembled to the pillars or corner-stones of that sacred building, are now involved in the same common destruction with the meanest of people (see ver. 16, ii. 20).

In the top of every street.] See note on ii. 19.

Ver. 2.] Those that in honour and worth exceed the meanest, as much as gold doth earthenware, now lie undistinguished in their death. The words are an explication of what is said in more general terms in the verse before.

Ver. 3. Even the sea-monsters draw out the breast.] [Dr. Pocock translates the word tannin, "jackals," sea-monsters having no breasts. See the notes upon Mic. i. 8.] The word tannin signifies any great fish, as a whale or a crocodile (see the note on Isa. xxvii. 1): and is here very fitly rendered sea-monsters. These the prophet saith are not so unnatural, as to neglect the care of their young ones: whereas the women of Jerusalem have been reduced to that miserable necessity, as not only to disregard their children, not having wherewithal to provide for themselves, but likewise to feed upon them (ver. 4, 10).

Like the ostriches] See Job xxxix. 14, 16.

6 For the punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrow as in a moment, and no hands stayed on her.

7 Her Nazarites were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphire:

8 Their visage is blacker than a coal; they are not known in the streets: their skin cleaveth to their bones; it is withered, it is become like a stick.

9 They that be slain with the sword are better than they that be slain with hunger: for these pine away, stricken through for want of the fruits of the field.

10 The hands of the pitiful women have sod-

Ver. 5. Embrace dunghills.] Are content to lie down upon a dunghill, or to seek for food there (compare Job xxiv. 8).

Ver. 6. That was overthrown as in a moment,] Sodom was not given up into the hands of an enemy that laid siege to it, nor condemned to the lingering destruction of famine (see ver. 9).

[Ver. 7. Her Nazarites] A Nazarite signifies a person dedicated to God. Their vow did often include an attendance upon the worship of God in the temple (see the note upon Amos ii. 11). It is of such Nazarites the word seems here to be meant.]

They were more ruddy in body than rubies.] Or, "Their skin was clearer than rubies," or pearls, as Bochart translates the words (Hierozoic. lib. ii. cap. 6). The word adam signifies clear, or transparent, and is so to be understood, Cant. v. 10, where our translation renders it ruddy, as it does here. Thus the Latin word purpureus is used by Virgil, when he saith, "Lumenque juvenæ purpureum." Ludolphus renders the words, "They were more beautiful than pearls;" from the sense which the word adam still retains in the Ethiopic language, where it signifies beautiful; from which signification he supposes the first man had the name of Adam (see his Commentary in Histor. Æthiop. lib. i. n. 107).

Ver. 8. Their visage is blacker than a coal;] The famine and other hardships they have endured have spoiled their complexion, and made them look dry and withered (compare v. 10).

Ver. 9. Stricken through for want of the fruits of the field.] Their vitals are pierced through as if they had been pierced with a sword, but with this difference, that it is by famine, the most cruel, because the most lingering death. The preposition min is rightly translated "for want of;" so it is taken, Jer. xlviii. 45 (see the note there).

Ver. 10.] The affection of a mother towards her child is the strongest of all natural affections (comden their own children: they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people.

11 The LORD hath accomplished his fury; he hath poured out his fierce anger, and hath kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath devoured the foundations thereof.

12 The kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the adversary and the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem.

13 ¶ For the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, that have shed the blood of the just in the midst of her.

14 They have wandered as blind men in the streets, they have polluted themselves with blood, so that men could not touch their garments.

15 They cried unto them, Depart ye; it is unclean; depart, depart, touch not: when they fled away and wandered, they said among the heathen, They shall no more sojourn there.

16 The anger of the LORD hath divided them; he will no more regard them: they respected not the persons of the priests, they favoured not the elders.

17 As for us, our eyes as yet failed for our vain help: in our watching we have watched for a nation that could not save us.

18 They hunt our steps, that we cannot go in our streets: our end is near, our days are fulfilled; for our end is come.

19 Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles of the heaven: they pursued us upon the mountains, they laid wait for us in the wilderness.

20 The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the LORD, was taken in their pits, of whom we said, Under his shadow we shall live among the heathen.

pare Isa. xlix. 15), and yet the famine hath forced that tender sex to divest themselves of it (see ii. 20).

Ver. 11. It hath devoured the foundations thereof.] It hath made an entire destruction, so as not to leave "one stone upon another" (see Jer. vii. 20).

Ver. 12.] The city was so well fortified, and had been so often miraculously preserved by God from the attempts of its enemies, that it seemed incredible that it should at last fall into their hands.

Ver. 13.] See Jer. v. 31, vi. 13, xxiii. 11, Ezek. xxii. 26, 28, Zeph. iii. 4.

Ver. 14. They have wandered as blind men—polluted themselves with blood.] When they fled for their lives they were like blind men, not knowing which way to go, because of the many carcasses which lay in their way; whereby they became stained with blood, and so legally polluted (see Numb. xix. 16). Thus they carried the marks of their sin in their punishment.

So that men could not touch their garments.] The syntax, in the original, is very obscure, which causes different interpretations of the sentence. Some render it "They touched [the blood] with their garments," which they might not lawfully do; in which sense the verb yacal is used, Deut. xii. 17. Others translate the words, "So that they could not but touch it with their garments;" which made others cry, Depart, &c. as it follows in the next verse.

Ver. 15. Depart ye; it is unclean; [or, ye polluted] depart.] When they fled to save their lives, they could find no safe retreat, but every body shunned and avoided them; and used the same words to express their abhorrence of this defilement of such persons, whose office it was to cleanse and purify others, as the lepers were by the law obliged to pronounce upon themselves, and cry, "Unclean, unclean" (see Lev. xiii. 45). The filthy garments of the priest were an emblem of their filthy minds (see Zeeh. iii. 4, 5): and called to remembrance the innocent blood which had been shed by their means (see ver. 13); when people saw their sins thus retaliated upon them.

They said among the heathen, They shall no more sojourn there.] When those priests were driven out into heathen countries, every one looked upon their banishment as a just judgment upon their wickedness, and accounted them unworthy to attend any longer upon God's worship in his temple.

Ver. 16.] God, in his just displeasure, hath scattered and dispersed them into foreign courts, where no respect will be given to their characters.

Ver. 17. We have watched for a nation that could not save us.] We have long waited for, and have at last been disappointed in, the succours we expected from the Egyptians (see Jer. xxxvii. 7, and the note upon xxii. 20).

Ver. 18. They hunt our steps, that we cannot go in our streets:] Our enemies pursue us as wild beasts hunt their prey, and lay wait for us in every turning and corner of the streets (see 2 Kings xxv. 3, 4).

Our end is come.] Compare Ezek. vii. 6, Amos viii. 2.

Ver. 19. Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles] God has brought upon us that judgment which he threatened by Moses, of "bringing a nation against us as swift as the eagle flyeth" (Deut. xxviii. 49). Such were the horsemen of the Chaldean army (see Jer. iv. 13, lii. 8).

They pursued us upon the mountains, they laid wait for us in the wilderness.] We could nowhere escape them, neither by flying to the mountains, nor by hiding ourselves in the valleys. The wilderness is elsewhere taken for the lower or pasture grounds (see Isa. lxiii. 13, 14, Joel i. 19).

Ver. 20.] This verse some expositors understand of king Josiah, and thereupon ground their opinion that the Lamentations were written upon occasion of his death (see the argument to ch. i.). But I rather conceive that Zedekiah is here meant, of whom the prophet saith, that he was taken in those toils his enemies had laid to catch him (see Jer. lii. 8, Ezek. xii. 13). As long as he was safe, we had hopes of preserving some face of government, although we were carried away into a foreign country.

[Under his shadow we shall live among the heathen.] The protection a king affords his subjects, is compared to the shelter of a great tree, which is a covert against storms and tempests (see Ezek. xvii. 23, xxxi. 6, Dan. iv. 12). And we might then have hoped to preserve some face of religion and government.]

Ver. 21. Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom.] An ironical expression, like that of Solomon, Eccles. xi. 9, "Rejoice, O young man," &c. As if the prophet had said, Rejoice, while thou mayest, O Edom, over the calamities of the Jews (see Ps. cxxxvii. 7, Obad. ver. 10). But thy joy will not last long, for in a little time, it shall come to thy turn to feel God's afflicting hand (see Jer. xlix. 7, &c.).

That dwellest in—Uz;] See the note on Jer. xxv. 20.

The cup also shall pass through unto thee:] See note on Jer. xxv. 15, 16.

And shall make thyself naked.] God's astonishing judgments, often compared to drunkenness, shall 21 ¶ Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz; the cup also shall pass through unto thee: Thou shalt be drunken, and shalt make thyself naked.

22 ¶ The punishment of thine iniquity is ac-have the usual effect of drunkenness upon thee; viz. that thy nakedness shall thereby be discovered (see the note on Jer. xiii. 22). The word may be translated, "Thou shalt be made naked;" for the conjugation hith-pael, is sometimes taken in a passive sense: as Glassius hath observed, in his Philologia Sacra, p. 840. Some render the word, "And shall empty thyself [by vomiting]." To this effect of drunkenness God's judgments are compared, Isa. xix. 14, Hab. ii. 16, especially, as that resembles men's disgorging their wealth and treasures when an enemy overpowers them, and leaves them empty and exhausted.

Ver. 22. The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished.] It is usual for the prophets, when they have denounced God's judgments against any heathen nation, at the same time to give gracious promises to Israel: thereby importing, that God will never cast off his people utterly, as he doth strangers, but will, in due time, extend his mercy towards them (compare Jer. xli. 27, 28, l. 18—20, Ezek. xxviii. 24—26, Obad. ver. 17, &c.).

He will no more carry thee away into captivity.] Several such-like promises we find in the prophets (see Jer. xxxi. 40); such as these of Isaiah, lii. 1, "There shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised, and the unclean:" and, liv. 9, "I have sworn I would not be wroth with thee" (compare li. 22). These and such-like expressions, if they be understood in a strict literal sense, must relate to the final restoration of the Jews (see the notes on Isa. li. 22, liv. 9, and compare Ezek. xxix. 28).

He will discover thy sins.] He will discover how great thine iniquities are, by the remarkable judgments wherewith he punisheth thee (compare Job xx. 27). The margin reads, "He will carry thee captive for thy sins:" in which sense the verb galah is used in the same verse.

CHAPTER V.

1 REMEMBER, O LORD, what is come upon us: consider, and behold our reproach.

2 Our inheritance is turned to strangers, our houses to aliens.

3 We are orphans and fatherless, our mothers are as widows.

4 We have drunken our water for money; our wood is sold unto us.

5 Our necks are under persecution; we labour, and have no rest.

6 We have given the hand to the Egyptians, and to the Assyrians, to be satisfied with bread.

7 Our fathers have sinned, and are not; and we have borne their iniquities.

8 Servants have ruled over us: there is none that doth deliver us out of their hand.

9 We gat our bread with the peril of our lives because of the sword of the wilderness.

10 Our skin was black like an oven because of the terrible famine.

11 They ravished the women in Zion, and the maids in the cities of Judah.

12 Princes are hanged up by their hand: the faces of elders were not honoured.

13 They took the young men to grind, and the children fell under the wood.

14 The elders have ceased from the gate, the young men from their musick.

CHAP. V.

ARGUMENT.—The title of this chapter in the Vulgar Latin is, Oratio Jeremie, "The Prayer of Jeremiah;" it is not written in metre, as the foregoing chapters, but contains, like them, a pathetic complaint to God of the miserable condition of the Jews, with respect both to their spiritual and temporal state.

Ver. 1. Consider, and behold our reproach.] Which we suffer from the heathen (compare ii. 15, iii. 61, Ps. lxxxix. 50, 51).

Ver. 4.] When our country was in our own possession, we had free use of water and wood, which now we are forced to buy.

Ver. 5. Our necks are under persecution.] We are become slaves to our enemies, who "put an iron yoke upon our necks," according to the threatening denounced by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 48.

Ver. 6.] We have made ourselves slaves or tributaries to those people; which was done by the ceremony of "giving the hand," a form used when an oath or covenant was entered into (see Ezek. xvii. 18, Gen. xxiv. 2). The Jews are often upbraided for the alliances they made with Egypt and Assyria, for which they are threatened with being forced to live there as exiles (see Hos. vii. 11, ix. 3, xii. 1). These two countries being the places whither many Jews fled for refuge from the calamities which threatened them at home; the prophecies that mention their return from their several dispersions, speak of Assyria and Egypt, as the principal places from whence they should return: as hath been observed in the notes upon Isa. xi. 16.

Ver. 7.] See the note on Jer. xxxi. 29. The expression is not, or are not, is used of those who are departed out of this world (see Gen. xlii. 13).

Ver. 8. Servants have ruled over us.] Servants to the great men among the Chaldeans, and other strangers, are become our masters (see Neh. v. 15).

Ver. 9.] If we fly to the most solitary places, in hopes to get a livelihood there, yet thither the enemy pursues us.

Ver. 10. Our skin was black.] See iv. 8.

Ver. 11.] See Isa. xlii. 6, Zech. xiv. 2.

Ver. 12. Princes are hanged up by their hand.] By the hand of their enemies.

The faces of elders were not honoured.] See iv. 16.

Ver. 13. They took the young men to grind.] To 15 The joy of our heart is ceased: our dance is turned into mourning.

16 The crown is fallen from our head: woe unto us, that we have sinned!

17 For this our heart is faint; for these things our eyes are dim.

18 Because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the foxes walk upon it.

grind at the mill, was the common employment of slaves (see Exod. xi. 5). Such was the pistrinum among the Romans.

The children fell under the wood.] They made children turn the handle of the mill, till they fell down for weariness: so some explain it, with relation to the former part of the verse. But it may be understood of making them carry such heavy burdens of wood, that they fainted under the load.

Ver. 16.] All our glory is at an end, together with the advantages of being thy people, and enjoying thy presence amongst us, by which we were distinguished from the rest of the world (compare Job xix. 9). The word crown may signify both the kingdom and the priesthood: the mitre being sometimes called the crown (see Zech. vi. 11).

19 Thou, O LORD, remainest for ever; thy throne from generation to generation.

20 Wherefore dost thou forget us for ever, and forsake us so long time?

21 Turn thou us unto thee, O LORD, and we shall be turned; renew our days as of old.

22 But thou hast utterly rejected us; thou art very wroth against us.

Ver. 17. For these things] See ii. 11.

Ver. 19.] Our only hope is in the eternity and unchangeableness of thy nature; and that thou still governest the world, and orderest all the events of it; whereby thou art always able to help us, and art never forgetful of the promises which thou hast made to thy people (compare Ps. cii. 28, Hab. i. 12).

Ver. 21.] Do thou give us the grace of conversion and amendment, and then thou wilt remove thy heavy judgments, and restore us to that happiness and prosperity which we formerly enjoyed.

Ver. 22. Thou hast utterly rejected us;] Thou art resolved to cast off the Jews of this generation, and wilt not show us any favour, till the seventy years of our captivity are expired.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET EZEKIEL.

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD,

WILLIAM,

BY DIVINE PROVIDENCE,

LORD ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY;

PRIMATE OF ALL ENGLAND, AND METROPOLITAN;

AND ONE OF HIS MAJESTY'S MOST HONOURABLE PRIVY-COUNCIL.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

IN pursuance of my design to explain the prophetic writings, I humbly offer to your Grace the following Commentary upon the Prophet Ezekiel; the depth of whose thoughts and expressions might justly deter me from undertaking a work of so much difficulty: but, begging your Grace's and my reader's pardon if I have been guilty of lesser mistakes, I hope, at least, that I have avoided committing any dangerous errors, by carefully following those directions, which the text itself, and the labours of several judicious commentators upon it, have suggested to me; having had likewise the assistance of some very learned friends, who have been pleased to communicate their thoughts to me upon the most difficult passages of it.

The most remarkable difficulties of this prophecy relate to the description of the temple, represented to the prophet in a heavenly vision. By the general consent of interpreters, this vision, in its mystical sense, sets forth a model or pattern of the catholic church of Christ, viewed in its state of perfection; of its largeness and extent, its strength and compactness, its beauty and order, and all those other qualifications, which are proper to edify and adorn this spiritual "house of the living God, the pillar and basis of truth."

Our church, in conformity with that of the first and purest ages, hath always been careful to maintain those principles of catholic unity and charity, which, if they were generally embraced and received, would render the Christian church like that Jerusalem which was a figure of it, a city at unity in itself. And since it hath pleased the divine providence to appoint your Grace as a wise master-builder to preside over it, we may hope, that under his Majesty's most gracious protection, and your Grace's auspicious conduct, it may receive new accessions of strength and edification; and, according to the obliging words of the late royal promise, be not only in a safe, but likewise in a flourishing condition.

That becoming zeal which your Grace expressed against those dangerous opinions which every where spread and abound, in your excellent speech at the opening of the convocation, as it gave great satisfaction to all those who had the honour to hear it; so it may justly be looked upon as a certain indication of your continual care and concern for the advancement of true piety and religion among us.

That God, who hath advanced your Grace to this high station, may long continue you in it, and may prosper all your pious designs for the promoting his glory, and the good of his church, as it is the united prayer of that great body of the clergy placed under your Grace's jurisdiction, so it is of none more earnestly than of him who begs leave to subscribe himself, My Lord,

Your Grace's most dutiful and obedient servant,
WILLIAM LOWTH.

PREFACE.

EZEKIEL was a prophet of the priestly order, carried away into Babylon with several other Jews in Jehoiachin's captivity, and therefore dates his prophecies by the years of that captivity. Clemens Alexandrinus tells us, some thought him contemporary with Pythagoras, and that they had conversed together in Babylon (Strom. lib. i. n. 15). This opinion he rejects as inconsistent with the age of Pythagoras, whom he supposes to have flourished about the sixty-second Olympiad (ibid. n. 21), which was near sixty years after Ezekiel was carried into Babylon. The late learned Bishop of Worcester, in his chronological account of Pythagoras's life, supposes him born about nine years after Ezekiel's coming to Babylon, and that Pythagoras himself came to Babylon at eighteen years of age; but there is no proof that ever he conversed with Ezekiel. Though it appears by the testimony of Hermippus, in Josephus (lib. i. cont. Appion. n. 22), that he had conversation with some Jews; and learned men have observed, that there is great resemblance between several of his symbols, and some of the precepts of the Jewish law.

But whatever became of Pythagoras, the accounts of whose life are very uncertain; it is certain that Ezekiel, being at Babylon, directed many of his prophecies to his fellow-exiles there, who, as St. Jerome observes in his preface to Ezekiel, repined at their ill fortune, and thought their countrymen who remained in Judea in a much better condition than themselves. The prophet, with regard to those circumstances, sets before their eyes that terrible scene of calamities which God would bring upon Judea and Jerusalem, which should end in the utter destruction of the city and temple. He recounts the heinous provocations of the Jews, which brought down these heavy judgments upon them, in strong and lively colours; his style exactly answering the character the Greek rhetoricians give of that part of oratory they call Δειώσεις, which Quintilian defines to be "oratio quæ rebus asperis, indignis et invidiosis vim addit" (lib. vi. cap. 3), its property being to aggravate things in themselves monstrous and odious, and represent them with great force and efficacy of expression. For the same reason Rapin, in his treatise of Eloquence, calls Ezekiel's style le terrible, as having something in it that strikes the reader with a holy dread and astonishment.

Josephus (lib. x. Antiq. cap. 6), divides this prophecy into two books; but it is generally supposed, that he took that part of the prophecy which contains a description of the temple, beginning at the fortieth chapter, for a distinct book from the rest, as treating altogether of a different subject.

St. Jerome hath more than once observed (Præfat. in Ezek. et in Prolog. Galeato), that the beginning and latter part of this prophecy is more than ordinarily difficult and obscure, and may justly be reckoned among the Δυσωρτά, or things in scripture which are hard to be understood. To contribute what I could to the clearing of these difficulties, I have taken the liberty of transferring into the following commentary whatever I thought useful for that purpose in the elaborate work of Villalpandus, a book which is in very few hands; and in the latter observations of Bernardus L'Amey, in his learned book De Tabernaculo Fœderis.

But I must not conceal the kind assistance I have received upon this and former occasions, from that great master of divine and human learning, the Right Reverend Father in God, Edward, Lord Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield; and I gladly embrace the opportunity of making my grateful acknowledgements to his Lordship in this public manner, for his many and constant favours.

CHAPTER I.

1 Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God.

CHAP. I.

ARGUMENT.—The first chapter contains a description of God's appearing in a glorious manner to Ezekiel, in order to the giving him a commission to execute the prophetic office.

Ver. I. Now it came to pass] The Hebrew text reads, "And it came to pass;" but it is usual in that language to begin a discourse or book with the particle vau, or and (see Jonah i. 1, and the beginning of most of the historical books of the Old Testament); which particle is very properly translated in those places, "Now it came to pass:" so that there is no ground for the fancy of Spinosa, who would conclude from hence, that this book of Ezekiel is but a fragment of a larger book, and contained several prophecies now lost, which were in order of time before those set down in these and the following chapters.

In the thirtieth year,] It is a great question, from 2 In the fifth day of the month, which was the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity,

3 The word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans by the river Chebar; and the hand of the Lord was there upon him.

4 ¶ And I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and whence this computation of time commences. The most probable answers are, first, that of Scaliger, who supposes this thirtieth year to be meant of the years of Nabopolassar's reign; who, as he tells us from Berosus, quoted by Josephus (lib. i. contr. App.), reigned twenty-nine years complete: so the thirtieth year here mentioned, was the last year of his reign and life; and is likewise the thirtieth year current of his son Nebuchadnezzar's reign, who reigned so many years together with his father (see Scaliger's Canon Isagog. p. 281, 294, his Prolegom. ad lib. De Emend. Temporum, and his notes on the Greek Fragments, at the end of those books).

But there is one considerable objection against this opinion of Scaliger, that, according to Berosus's account, as his words are quoted in another place of Josephus (Antiq. lib. x. cap. 2), Nabopolassar reigned only twenty-one years: the Greek text reading, by a little variation, εἰκοσι ἔτη for εἰκοσι ἐνιαυτοί. Which is the same number of years assigned to Nabopolassar in the era Nabonassari, and agrees better with Berosus's own story; viz. that when he had committed the command of the army to his son, and sent him on an expedition to Syria and Phœnicia, he died in a short time after.

Villalpandus, in like manner, makes this computation to commence from the beginning of Nabopolassar's reign (see his Commentary upon Ezek. xi. 1). He allows nineteen years for his reign, distinct from that of his son, and supposes Nebuchadnezzar to reign two years with his father; which, indeed, agrees with the scripture computation (see the note on Jer. xxv. 1). But, according to that very account, the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity will be coincident with the thirteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign: for the nineteenth year of the same reign is assigned for the destruction of Jerusalem, Jer. lii. 12, which was about six years afterward. So this computation will make Jehoiachin's captivity to have happened not in the thirtieth, but in the thirty-second year, reckoning from the beginning of Nabopolassar's reign.

A more probable answer to this difficulty, is that which the Chaldee paraphrast, Archbishop Usher, A. M. 3409, Dr. Prideaux, ad an. A. C. 594, and other learned men, follow; viz. that these thirty years are to be reckoned from the time when Josiah and all the people of Judah entered into that solemn covenant, mentioned 2 Kings xxii. 3, which was in the eighteenth year of Josiah (ibid.); from which time the same learned writers compute the forty years of Judah's transgression, mentioned iv. 6.

As I was among the captives by the river of Chebar,] Those which were carried away with Jehoiachin king of Judah (see the next verse). These were placed in towns or villages that lay upon the river Chebar in Mesopotamia, called by Ptolemy and Strabo, Chaboras, or Aboras; and by Pliny (lib. i. cap. 26), Cobaris.

Ver. 2. Which was the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity,] This was coincident with the thirteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign: for Jehoiachin was carried captive in the eighth year of his out of the midst thereof as the colour of amber, out of the midst of the fire.

5 Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man.

6 And every one had four faces, and every one had four wings.

7 And their feet were straight feet; the sole reign (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12). The Hebrew writers use several computations of the beginning of the Babylonish captivity (see the note upon Jer. xxv. 11). That under Jehoiachin, wherein Ezekiel was made a captive, is the computation he always follows in the succeeding parts of his prophecy (see viii. 1, xx. 1, xxix. 1, 17, xxxi. 1, xxxiii. 1, xl. 1).

Ver. 3. The word of the Lord] The "word of the Lord" signifies any sort of revelation, whether by vision, such as is related in the following verses, or by a voice, as ii. 3.

The hand of the Lord was there upon him.] He felt sensible impressions of God's power and Spirit (compare iii. 14, 22, viii. 1, xxviii. 1, xl. 1, 1 Kings xviii. 46, 2 Kings iii. 15).

Ver. 4. I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north,] God's anger and judgments are often compared to a whirlwind (see Isa. xxi. 1, Jer. xxiii. 19, xxv. 32, Ps. lviii. 9). It is described here as coming out of the north, because of the northerly situation of Babylon with respect to Judah (compare Jer. i. 13, iv. 6, vi. 1, and xliii. 3 of this prophecy).

A great cloud, and a fire infolding itself,] The divine presence is usually described in scripture as a bright light, or flaming fire, breaking out of a thick cloud (see Ps. xviii. 2, 1, 3, xcviii. 2, 3). God also is described as a consuming fire, when he comes to execute his judgment upon sinners, Deut. iv. 24 (compare ver. 13 of this chapter). "Fire infolding itself" is the same as appearing in folds, like one wreath within another.

Out of the midst thereof as the colour of amber,] Compare viii. 2. Fire resembles the colour of amber, especially the lower parts of it: so in that vision of Christ, described Rev. i. 13, &c. it is said, ver. 15, that his feet, or lower parts, "were like unto fine brass," or rather unto amber, as Dr. Hammond rightly explains the word χαλκοειδανος.

Ver. 5. Came the likeness of four living creatures.] Compare Rev. iv. 6, where our English translation improperly renders the word ζῶα, beasts; whereas it should be rendered living creatures, the better to distinguish them from the antichristian beast, always expressed in that book by θηρίον. These living creatures were four cherubims, that carried or supported God's throne in the following vision: it may be in allusion to the triumphal chariots of the eastern kings, which were drawn by several sorts of beasts; the cherubims, as they were placed in the temple, being called God's chariot, 1 Chron. xxviii. 18.

They had the likeness of a man.] Their shape was erect, like the form of a man.

Ver. 6. Every one had four faces,] Of a man, of a lion, of an ox, and of an eagle (ver. 10); each of them resembled the cherubims, which overshadowed the mercy-seat in the temple (see x. 20). The Jewish tabernacle was a "pattern of heavenly things" (Heb. viii. 5, Wisd. ix. 8), and the encampment of the twelve tribes about the tabernacle in the wilderness, was a representation of the angelical ministry about the throne of God in heaven. So there is an analogy between the cherubims, as they attended the divine presence in the holiest of all, of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot: and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brass.

8 And they had the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides; and they four had their faces and their wings.

9 Their wings were joined one to another; they turned not when they went; they went every one straight forward.

10 As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle.

11 Thus were their faces: and their wings were stretched upward; two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies.

12 And they went every one straight forward: whither the spirit was to go, they went; and they turned not when they went.

13 As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and

and as here described, in a figure of their heavenly ministry, and the body of the Jewish nation placed round about the tabernacle, and divided into four standards, and a several ensign allotted to each standard, as you may read Numb. ii. 2, 3, 10, 18, 25. What those ensigns were, that text does not express; but the Jewish writers unanimously maintain that they were a lion for the tribe of Judah, an ox for the tribe of Ephraim, a man for the tribe of Reuben, and an eagle for the tribe of Dan; under which variety each of these four cherubims is here represented (compare Rev. iv. 6). And in that text the four living creatures denote some part of the Christian church, as appears by comparing that place with Rev. v. 8, 9. Here likewise may be an allusion to the four cherubims in Solomon's temple; for he placed two others of larger dimensions, one on each side of the ark; and of the two cherubims, which Moses had placed in the tabernacle (compare 1 Kings vi. 24 with Exod. xxv. 17, 20).

Every one had four wings.] See ver. 11.

Ver. 7. Their feet were straight feet;] Like a man's, without such a middle joint as beasts have, the use of which is to secure them against weariness, to denote their steadiness and resolution in executing all God's commands.

The sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot:] A creature remarkable for its treading firm and sure. These living creatures are a sort of hieroglyphics, made up of several shapes, but yet they resembled most that of an ox or a calf; and therefore were called cherubims, that word signifying an ox; in which sense it is taken, x. 14 of this prophecy, where the "face of a cherub" is equivalent to the "face of an ox," at ver. 10 of this chapter.

They sparkled like the colour of burnished brass.] Compare Dan. x. 6, Rev. i. 15. The appearance of their feet was bright and flaming (see ver. 13, and Ps. civ. 4). The seraphims have that name from their bright and flaming colour.

Ver. 8. They had the hands of a man under their wings] Compare x. 8, Isa. vi. 6. This denotes the prudence and dexterity of their management: the hand being peculiar to mankind among all living creatures, and the chief instrument of all artificial operations.

They four had their faces and their wings.] They had all the same appearances and proportions; or had wings equal to their faces.

Ver. 9. Their wings were joined] See ver. 11.

They turned not when they went;] They needed not to turn their bodies that their faces might stand the way they were to go; for go which way they would they had a face that looked that way. This signifies that nothing ever diverted them from fulfilling God's commands: see the note on x. 11, where these living creatures are represented as coming near to a square figure, which is equal on all sides, the emblem of firmness and constancy.

Ver. 10. They four had the face of a man, and—of a lion, on the right side, &c.] See the note on ver. 6. Grotius and Villalpandus by the word face understand the shape or appearance, and explain the words to this sense: That these living creatures were like a man with respect to their visage, or their upper parts; they resembled a lion with respect to their back parts; their wings were like the wings of an eagle, and their feet like those of an ox. But this exposition does not well agree with what is said here, that the face of the lion was on the right side, and that of the ox on the left; or, as Castalio translates it, and I think to a better and clearer sense, "That the face of the man and the lion were on the right side, and the face of the ox and eagle on the left." And by comparing the several parts of this description, their figure may be rather concluded to be quadruple; and as the wheels were made to turn every way, so the living creatures could move towards any point without turning about: to signify, as I observed before, the steadfastness of their motions and purposes (compare ver. 15, 19, 20, of this chap. with x. 11, &c.).

Ver. 11. Their wings were stretched upward;] In a posture of flying, to show their readiness to execute God's commands (compare ver. 24, with x. 16); or they were stretched to cover their faces, as the seraphims are represented, Isa. vi. 2 (compare ver. 23, of this chapter). Some translate the former part of the verse thus: "their faces and their wings were stretched upwards," to denote a position of attention, and as if "they were hearkening to the voice of God's word," as the angels are represented, Ps. ciii. 20.

Two wings of every one were joined one to another.] Being thus stretched out, they touched one another, or the wings of one living creature touched those of another, as the wings of the cherubims did over the mercy-seat (see 1 Kings vi. 27).

Two covered their bodies.] See Isa. vi. 2. Grotius, upon ver. 6 of this chapter, assigns a reason why, in that text of Isaiah, and Rev. iv. 6, each seraphim hath six wings assigned him, whereas the living creatures here have but four; viz. the seraphims in these texts make use of two of their wings to cover their faces, out of reverence to the divine presence, before which they stand; whereas here the living creatures are supposed to stand under the throne, as supporting it (compare x. 19).

Ver. 12. They went—straight forward;] See ver. 9. Whither the spirit was to go, they went;] That is, that spiritual or angelical power, which was the principle of all their motions (see ver. 20).

They turned not when they went.] See ver. 17.

Ver. 13.] The angels are always described of a bright and flaming colour (see ver. 4, 7). But here the coals of fire and the lightning, breaking forth out of the fire, denote God's vengeance coming in flaming fire to destroy the city and temple of Jerusalem (compare x. 2, Ps. lviii., Rev. iv. 5, 12).

Ver. 14.] The swiftness of their motions every way down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning.

14 And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

15 ¶ Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces.

16 The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl: and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel.

17 When they went, they went upon their four sides: and they turned not when they went.

18 As for their rings, they were so high that they were dreadful; and their rings were full of eyes round about them four.

19 And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them: and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up.

20 Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.

21 When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.

22 And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the terrible crystal, stretched forth over their heads above.

23 And under the firmament were their wings straight, the one toward the other: every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies.

resembled the flashes of lightning (compare Matt. xxiv. 27, Zeeh. iv. 10).

Ver. 15. Behold one wheel [or the same sort of wheel] upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces.] Or, "on his four sides;" that is, on the four sides or faces of the square body as it stood: so that a wheel was before every one of the living creatures on the outside of the square. So Dr. Lightfoot expounds the words, in his Description of the Temple (ch. 38). The sentence may be translated thus: "Behold, one wheel upon earth by the living creatures to each of the creatures with the four faces;" so the word learbang is used, ver. 10. The word wheel is certainly used collectively for each wheel; as the cherub stands for cherubims, ix. 3, x. 4, and living creature signifies the four living creatures, ibid. ver. 15, 19. That there were four wheels, according to the number of the living creatures, is plain, by comparing this verse with the sixteenth and nineteenth, and with x. 9. The wheels are represented here as standing "upon the earth," or near the earth: at other times they appeared as being lifted up above it (see ver. 20, 21, and x. 17).

Ver. 16. Colour of a beryl:] Azure, the colour of the sky, mixed with a bright green (compare Dan. x. 6).

As it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel.] As it were one wheel put across within another, like two circles in a sphere, cutting one another at right angles, to signify the stability and uniformity of their motions, and the subserviency of one part of providence to another (see the following verse, and the note upon ver. 9).

Ver. 17. When they went, they went upon their four sides:] Each wheel consisted of four semicircles, crossing one another, as appears by the foregoing verse; and each of them had its proper motion.

They turned not when they went.] They never went backward (see x. 11); to signify, that providence doth nothing in vain, but always accomplishes its end. So God speaks of his word and decree, Isa. lv. 11, "It shall not return unto me void; but shall accomplish that which I please." "To return by the way that he went," is a proverbial speech, signifying a man's missing his aim, or not accomplishing his designs (see 1 Kings xiii. 9, 2 Kings xix. 33).

Ver. 18. As for their rings [or streaks], they were so high that they were dreadful:] Their circumference was so vast, as to cause a terror in the prophet that beheld them: to signify the vast compass of providence, which "reacheth from one end to another mightily" (Wisd. viii. 1); or, as St. Paul expresses it, "the height and depth both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" (Rom. xi. 33). Dr. Lightfoot translates it, And they were reverend; that is, they were observant of that presence and glory upon which they waited, and watchful to obey its commands.

Their rings were full of eyes round about them four.] And so were also the living creatures themselves (comp. x. 12); to signify, that all the motions of providence are directed by a consummate wisdom and foresight. To the same sense the angels, who are the instruments of providence, are called "the eyes of the Lord," Zeeh. iv. 10, Rev. v. 6.

Ver. 19—21.] Both the living creatures and the wheels were animated by the same principle of understanding and motion, to signify with what readiness and alacrity all the instruments of providence concur in carrying on its great designs and purposes (compare x. 16, 17).

Ver. 20. The wheels were lifted up over against them:] That is, the wheels, which were placed just by them (see ver. 15, 19): the word leumatham is rendered besides them, x. 19, xi. 22.

For the spirit of the living creature] That is, the spirit of each living creature, as the word is used in ver. 22.

Ver. 22.] over the heads of all the living creatures, or of this whole vision of living creatures (compare x. 15, 20), was the likeness of a clear sky or firmament, where the divine glory appeared as upon a throne (see ver. 26, x. 1, and compare Rev. iv. 2, 3). By the "terrible crystal" is meant such as dazzles the eyes with its lustre.

Ver. 23. Under the firmament were their wings straight.] The sense is the same with that of ver. 11, denoting that two of the wings of each living creature were stretched upward, out of reverence to the divine presence, or to express their readiness to obey his commands (see ver. 11, 24), and with the two other they covered their bodies.

Ver. 24. Like the noise of great waters.] To denote the terrible noise of the judgments which they were to execute upon Jerusalem and the whole Jewish nation (compare xliii. 2, Dan. x. 6, Rev. i. 15).

As the voice of the Almighty,] It resembled great 24 And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host: when they stood, they let down their wings.

25 And there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads, when they stood, and had let down their wings.

26 ¶ And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone: and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it.

and dreadful thunder (compare Job xxxvii. 4, 5, Ps. xxix. 3, lxxviii. 33). St. Jerome, in his note upon the place, tells us, that the LXX. translate these words φωνὴ τοῦ λόγου, The voice of the λόγος, or second person in the blessed trinity: which words are now in the Alexandrian copy. The Vatican copy is defective, but the Alexandrian copy runs thus: ὡς φωνὴ ἰαχού, ἐν τῷ παρεῖνθαι αὐτὰ φωνὴ τοῦ λόγου, ὡς φωνὴ τῆς παρμβολῆς. As the voice of the Almighty. "When they went [there was] the voice of speech, like the voice of a host." This reading shows that the LXX. designed to translate the following words by φωνὴ τοῦ λόγου, where we read, "The voice of speech;" and then the word λόγος may probably be taken in its ordinary signification: though we may certainly conclude that this was the appearance of the second person of the blessed trinity, both because he appears under the resemblance of a man (ver. 26), and from what hath been said upon this subject in the note upon Isa. vi. 1.

The voice of speech, as the noise of an host:] Like the confused murmur of an army; either to denote the army of the Babylonians that should besiege the city, or to signify the angels, who are called God's host.

When they stood, they let down their wings.] They put themselves in a posture of hearkening to God's voice; and as it were quietly waiting to receive his commands (see the next verse).

Ver. 25.] The Vulgar Latin renders it, "When there was a voice they stood," in an attentive posture (compare Ps. ciii. 20).

Ver. 26. Above the firmament—was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone:] God is described in scripture as "dwelling in light," and "clothing himself with it" (compare Exod. xxiv. 10, Ps. civ. 2, 1 Tim. vi. 16, Rev. iv. 2, 3). So the throne of God here described was made up of light, resembling the colours and brightness of a sapphire.

And upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it.] When Moses and the elders "saw the God of Israel" (Exod. xxiv. 8), or "the glory of God," as the Targum

27 And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about.

28 As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake.

explains it, they saw no determinate figure, but an inconceivably resplendent brightness, that they might not think God could be represented by any image (Deut. iv. 16). But in this vision the form and shape of a man is directly represented to Ezekiel, as a prelude, or figure of the incarnation (see the note on Jer. i. 4).

Ver. 27.] The upper part of this appearance was of an amber colour outwardly, but appeared more flaming inwardly; the lower part of a deeper red, encompassed with a bright flame, to represent God's coming to take vengeance of the Jews (see the notes on ver. 4).

In most of our English bibles the stops are placed wrong in this verse; whereas the whole verse should be pointed thus: "And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upwards, and from the appearance of his loins even downwards, I saw as it were the appearance of fire," &c. The words should be thus pointed, as appears by comparing them with viii. 2.

Ver. 28. As the appearance of—the cloud, &c.] The light reflected from this vision had the appearance of a rainbow, a token of God's covenant of mercy (Gen. ix. 11, &c.), to denote that God, in the midst of judgment, would remember mercy, and not utterly destroy his people (compare Rev. iv. 3). Especially this vision being an evident representation of the word that was to be made flesh, whose incarnation is the foundation of God's covenant of mercy with mankind: a rainbow, the symbol and token of mercy, was a very fit attendant upon that glorious vision (compare Rev. x. 1).

This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord.] This is a description of that glorious vision wherein God appeared, and whereby he made manifest his attributes and perfections.

When I saw it, I fell upon my face.] As struck down with fear and astonishment (compare iii. 23, xi. 2, Dan. viii. 17, Rev. i. 17). Prostration was also a posture of adoration used upon any token of the divine presence (see Gen. xvii. 3, Numb. xiv. 5, xvi. 4).

CHAPTER II.

1 AND he said unto me, Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee.

CHAP. II.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains Ezekiel's commission for executing his prophetic office, and instructions given him for the discharge of it.

Ver. 1. Son of man.] This expression is commonly understood to signify the same with a common and ordinary man, as it is usually expounded in that text, Ps. viii. 4, "What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him?" So thee to the children of Israel, to a rebellious nation that hath rebelled against me: they and their fathers hath transgressed against me, even unto this very day.

4 For they are impudent children and stiff-hearted. I do send thee unto them; and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God.

5 And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.

6 ¶ And thou, son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briars and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

7 And thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear: for they are most rebellious.

8 But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee; Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee.

9 ¶ And when I looked, behold, an hand was sent unto me; and, lo, a roll of a book was therein;

10 And he spread it before me: and it was written within and without: and there was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and woe.

here most commentators understand it as applied to the prophet, to put him in mind of his frailty and mortality, and of the infinite distance between God and man. In which sense it is supposed to be taken when spoken of Christ in the New Testament, implying his great humility in assuming our nature, and appearing no otherwise than an ordinary man: and so the Hebrew phrase Ben Adam is plainly used, when it is opposed to Ben Isch; and is rightly translated "men of low degrees," or "mean men," Ps. lxi. 2, Isa. ii. 9.

But some critics have observed, that the phrase son of man, is likewise taken for a man of dignity or character, as in Ps. lxxx. 17, "The man of thy right hand, and the son of man, whom thou madest so strong for thyself." And Ps. cxlvi. 3, "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help." And there is no incongruity in supposing that Christ himself may be called the Son of man, καὶ υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου, by way of eminence, as a title denoting him to be that great person whom God promised to raise up to be a "Prince and a Saviour" of his people. And so the title of "son of man," may be given to the prophet in the text, as one set apart for the prophetic office; in like manner as Daniel is called "son of man," viii. 17, who in the next chapters hath the title of a "man greatly beloved" (ix. 23, x. 11).

Stand upon thy feet,] Put thyself into a posture of attending to what I say (see ver. 2, and compare Dan. x. 11).

Ver. 2.] God's Spirit revived me and gave me new life and vigour, that I could attend to what was said unto me (see the note on iii. 24, and compare ver. 12, 14 of that chapter).

Ver. 3. To a rebellious nation] The Hebrew word is goyim, nations, the word which is commonly used to denote the heathens, intimating that the Jews had outdone the wickedness of the heathens (see v. 6, 7).

Ver. 4. They are impudent children and stiff-hearted.] The original might be more significantly rendered, "They are children impudent in their countenance, and hardened in their hearts." They are so far hardened in wickedness as to have cast off all shame, and even the very outward show of modesty.

Ver. 5.] Whether they will regard what is said by thee or not (see iii. 27), yet the event answering thy predictions shall render thy authority unquestionable, and them inexcusable for not hearkening to the warnings thou hast given them (see xxxiii. 33).

Ver. 6. Be not afraid of them,] The prophets and messengers of God are often exhorted to take courage, and are promised a proportionable assistance in the discharge of their office, without fearing any man's person, or standing in awe of any man's greatness (see iii. 8, 9, Jer. i. 8, 18, Matt. x. 28). Such a presence of mind is expressed by τὴν ψυχὴν, boldness, in the New Testament; and is spoken of as a peculiar gift bestowed upon the first preachers of the gospel (see Acts iv. 13, 29, Eph. vi. 19, Phil. i. 20), called the spirit of might, or courage, Col. i. 11, 2 Tim. i. 7. And they had need of great presence of mind, who are to reprove men hardened in sin, who are always impatient of reproof, and become the enemies of those who tell them such truths as they have no mind to hear.

Though briars and thorns be with thee,] Such as study to vex and torment thee (compare Mic. vii. 4). The prophets often denote the wicked by briars and thorns (see the note on Isa. ix. 18).

Thou dost dwell among scorpions;] Who would sting thee to death, and are as venomous as the worst of serpents (compare Matt. iii. 7, xxiii. 33).

Be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks,] Be not afraid of their threats wherewith they would affright thee; neither be afraid of their looks wherewith they would browbeat thee.

Ver. 8. Open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee.] The knowledge of divine truths is often expressed by the metaphors of bodily food and nourishment (see Isa. lv. 1, 2, Josh. vi. 27). So to eat the words of this prophecy, signifies to commit them to memory, to meditate upon them and digest them (compare Rev. x. 10).

Ver. 9. An hand was sent unto me;] I saw a hand stretched out towards me, as from that divine person which appeared to me in the shape of a man, i. 26 (compare viii. 3, Jer. i. 9, Dan. x. 10).

A roll of a book was therein;] Wherein was contained the contents of the following prophecy (compare Rev. v. 1). The ancient way of writing was upon long scrolls of parchment rolled upon sticks (see Isa. viii. 1, Jer. xxxvi. 1).

Ver. 10. He spread it before me;] That I might understand the contents of it.

It was written within and without;] It was written on both sides, both that which was innermost when it was rolled up, and on the outside also: to denote a large collection of prophecies (compare Rev. v. 1).

Lamentations, and mourning, and woe.] All the prophecies contained therein consisted of God's judgments and mournful events, without any mixture of mercy, at least with respect to the Jews of the present age.

CHAPTER III.

1 MOREOVER he said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel.

2 So I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. Then did I eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.

4 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them.

5 For thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech and of an hard language, but to the house of Israel;

6 Not to many people of a strange speech and of an hard language, whose words thou canst not understand. Surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened unto thee.

7 But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto me: for all the house of Israel are impudent and hard-hearted.

8 Behold, I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads.

9 As an adamant harder than flint have I made thy forehead: fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

10 Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears.

11 And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto the children of thy people, and speak unto them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord God; whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.

12 Then the spirit took me up, and I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing, saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place.

13 I heard also the noise of the wings of the living creatures that touched one another, and the noise of the wheels over against them, and a noise of a great rushing.

14 So the spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit; but the hand of the Lord was strong upon me.

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet hath more particular instructions given him for the discharge of his office; and is encouraged to undertake it by a promise of God's especial assistance.

Ver. 1. Eat this roll.] See ii. 8, 9.

Ver. 2. So I opened my mouth.] I readily complied with God's command, which this vision figuratively expressed (compare Jer. xxv. 17).

Ver. 3. Cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll.] The belly often signifies in scripture the mind, or secret thoughts (see Job xxxii. 18, Prov. xviii. 8, xx. 27, John vii. 35). So here the expressions denote the laying up this prophecy in his memory (see ver. 10, and the note on ii. 8).

It was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.] I took delight in having God's secret counsels communicated to me, and in delivering his commands to my brethren: and was pleased with the hopes of being an instrument of their conversion, and the amendment of some of them: but yet this pleasure was afterward very much allayed by the heavy tidings I was to be the messenger of, and the ill treatment I was to expect (see ver. 14, compare Jer. xv. 16, 17, Rev. x. 10).

Ver. 5. Thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech.] It would be a great addition to the burden of thy office, if thou wert sent as a prophet to a foreign nation, and to a people whose language thou couldst not understand, nor they thine, as Jonah was.

Ver. 6. Surely, they would have hearkened unto thee.] And yet in all appearance those strangers would have hearkened to thy preaching sooner than the house of Israel will, as the Ninevites did to Jonah's (compare Matt. xii. 41, xi. 21). The particles in lo are very well rendered surely: they are the form of an oath, the words, As I live, being understood (compare v. 11, xvii. 19, Numb. xiv. 28).

Ver. 7. They will not hearken unto me.] They have so long resisted the means of grace that I have offered them by the former prophets (see Jer. xxv. 4), that there is less hopes of their conversion, than if they were infidels (compare Matt. v. 13).

Ver. 8. I have made thy face strong against their faces.] I have given thee courage and assurance proportionable to the hardness and impudence of those thou hast to deal with (see ii. 6, Isa. i. 7).

Ver. 10.] See note on ii. 8.

Ver. 12. Then the spirit took me up.] Carried me from the place where I was before, when I saw the vision mentioned i. 3, 4 (see the note on viii. 3).

I heard behind me the voice as of a great rushing.] I heard a voice so loud, that it shook the earth like thunder (see John xii. 27, 28).

Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place.] Whatever place God honours with his especial presence, is equivalent to his temple, and there the angels always attend upon the divine majesty, to give him the honour due unto his name (compare Gen. xxviii. 13, 16, 19). The words imply, that though God should forsake his temple (see note on ix. 3), and destroy the place that is called by his name, yet his presence will make a temple of every place, and multitudes of the heavenly host will always be ready to do him service.

Ver. 13. Living creatures.] See note on i. 20.

Over against them.] That is, besides them, as the Hebrew phrase is elsewhere rendered (see note on i. 20).

Ver. 14. So the spirit lifted me up.] See ver. 12, and the note on viii. 3, xxxvii. 1.

I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit.] The joy that I first conceived in receiving the divine message, was quickly turned into grief and anguish of mind (see ver. 15).

The hand of the Lord was strong upon me.] I was unable to resist the impulses of God's Spirit (see i. 4, viii. 1, Jer. xx. 9).

15 ¶ Then I came to them of the captivity at Tel-abib, that dwelt by the river of Chebar, and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days.

16 And it came to pass at the end of seven days, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 17 Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me.

18 When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

19 Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

20 Again, When a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumbling-block before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

21 Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul.

22 ¶ And the hand of the LORD was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise, go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee.

23 Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, the glory of the LORD stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar: and I fell on my face.

24 Then the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said unto me, Go, shut thyself within thine house.

25 But thou, O son of man, behold, they shall put bands upon thee, and shall bind thee with them, and thou shalt not go out among them:

26 And I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb, and shalt not be to them a reprover: for they are a rebellious house.

Ver. 15. I came to them of the captivity at Tel-abib, that dwelt by—Chebar.] These seem to be a distinct colony of captives from those that are mentioned i. 3 (see ver. 23 of this chapter). The king of Babylon carried away the Jews by several captivities: some in the first year of his reign (Dan. i. 1); some in the seventh (Jer. lii. 25); then followed Jeconiah's captivity in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings xxiv. 12), when Ezekiel himself was carried captive.

Remained there astonished among them seven days.] Having my spirit wholly cast down and amazed under the apprehension of these terrible judgments which were to come upon my nation, and of which I was to be the messenger (compare Jer. xxiii. 9, Hab. iii. 16). Seven days was the space of time appointed for mourning (see Gen. l. 10, 1 Sam. xxxi. 13, Job ii. 3, Eccles. xxii. 12).

Ver. 17. A watchman] Prophets have the title of watchmen given to them (see Isa. lvi. 10, Jer. vi. 17): like watchmen placed on the tower (see Hab. ii. 1), they by their prophetic spirit foresee the evils coming upon the ungodly, and are bound to give people timely notice to avoid them by a sincere repentance (see the following verse).

Ver. 18. Thou shalt surely die;] This is, unless he repent, a condition generally to be understood in such like threatenings (see xviii. 27).

Thou givest him not warning, &c.] We are to distinguish a prophet's immediate commission to go to any particular person in God's name, from such a general charge to inform others of their duty, which is incumbent upon all pastors and teachers. These latter can only give men general warnings, unless where they have received such informations as are a sufficient ground for a particular reproof.

The same—shall die in his iniquity;] He shall die in a state of sin, and be condemned to those punishments to which death translates sinners (see John viii. 24, and the note upon xviii. 4).

His blood will I require at thine hand.] Thou shalt be accountable for the loss of his soul, just as a man's blood is laid to the charge of him that is any way accessory to his death (compare Gen. ix. 5).

Ver. 19. Thou hast delivered thy soul.] Thou art clear from the guilt of his sin (compare Acts xx. 26).

Ver. 20. I lay a stumbling-block before him,] I caused his iniquity to become his ruin, as the word mesol is translated, xviii. 30.

Ver. 22. Was there upon me;] See ver. 14, i. 3. Go—into the plain,] As a place more retired and fitter for contemplation.

Ver. 23. The glory of the Lord stood there,] See i. 28.

As the glory which I saw by—Chebar:] This part of that river seems distant from that place where the former vision was shown him (compare ver. 15 with i. 3). "Then the Spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me." The words are literally to be translated thus: "Then the Spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet; and he spake unto me:" for the last verb is in the masculine gender, and the two former in the feminine. In like manner the fifth verse of the eleventh chapter should be read, "And the Spirit of the Lord fell upon me, and he said unto me." The spirit or power of God which the prophet felt within him (called likewise "the hand of the Lord," ver. 14, 22 of this chapter, and viii. 1), being distinguished here from the divine glory or Shechinah, which the prophet saw, as it is very plainly, ii. 2, "And the Spirit entered into me, when he spake unto me."

Go, shut thyself within thine house.] Hereby to represent the siege of Jerusalem (see iv. 1, &c.).

Ver. 25. They shall put bands upon thee,] Thou shalt be confined to lie so many days upon thy right side, and so many upon the left, as if thou wert bound and not able to stir (see iv. 8). The LXX. and the Vulgar Latin read, "Bands shall be put upon thee:" and it is very common in the Hebrew language to take the verb transitive in an impersonal sense (see the notes on Isa. xlv. 18).

Ver. 26. Thou shalt be dumb, and shalt not be to them a reprover:] Ezekiel's dumbness might proceed from two causes: excess of grief, as we read ver. 15 of this chapter, that he "remained astonished seven days:" wherein he was a type or figure of the condition of the Jews, when they were to be

27 But when I speak with thee, I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; He that heareth, let him hear; and he that forbeareth, let him forbear; for they are a rebellious house.

astonished one with another (iv. 17). Another cause of his silence might be by way of reproof to them for disbelieving what he had before delivered by the commands of God (see the note on xxxii. 22, xxiv. 17). And because they regarded not the words which God commanded him to speak to them, he was directed to instruct them only by signs, such as are those emblems of the siege contained in the next chapter.

Ver. 27. When I speak with thee [or, to thee], I will open thy mouth.] But when I bid thee declare my commands by word of mouth, thou shalt have free liberty to speak (see xi. 25).

He that heareth let him hear.] The sum of what thou shalt say unto them is this: to let them know that this is the last warning God will give them; and therefore let them take it as such, and either give heed to what is said to them, or neglect it at their utmost peril (compare 1 Cor. xiv. 38, Rev. xxii. 11).

CHAPTER IV.

1 Thou also, son of man, take thee a tile, and lay it before thee, and pourtray upon it the city, even Jerusalem:

2 And lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it; set the camp also against it, and set battering rams against it round about.

3 Moreover take thou unto thee an iron pan, and set it for a wall of iron between thee and the city: and set thy face against it, and it shall be besieged, and thou shalt lay siege against it. This shall be a sign to the house of Israel.

4 Lie thou also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity.

CHAP. IV.

ARGUMENT.—Under the emblem of a siege, and of the straitness of provision during the siege, is shown the miseries the Jews shall suffer when the city is besieged: and by the prophet's lying upon his right and left side a certain number of days, is declared of how long continuance those sins were which God did visit upon that people.

Ver. 1. Take thee a tile, and lay it before thee.] The prophets often foreshow impending judgments by significative emblems, being of greater force and efficacy than words. So Jeremy was commanded to go down to the potter's house, and see how frequently vessels were marred in his hands (ch. xviii.), and to take one of those earthen vessels and break it in the sight of the elders of the Jews (ch. xix.), that they might thereby be sensibly taught the greatness of God's power, and their own frailty. So here God commands the prophet to take a tile, or such a slate as the mathematicians draw lines or figures upon, and there make a portraiture of Jerusalem, thereby to represent it as under a siege. We may observe that God often suits prophetic types and figures to the genius and education of the prophets themselves. So the figures which Amos makes use of are generally taken from such observations as are proper to the employment of a shepherd or a husbandman. Ezekiel had a peculiar talent for architecture; so several of his representations are suitable to that profession. And they that suppose the emblem here made use of to be below the dignity of the prophetic office, may as well accuse Archimedes of folly for making lines in the dust.

Ver. 2. Lay siege against it.] Make a portraiture of a siege, and of such warlike preparations as are necessary to it.

Ver. 3. Take—an iron pan.] A plate or slice, as the margin reads. This may either represent the walls of Jerusalem, which were to be broken down, in order to the taking of it, as the following words may be thought to imply; or else some of those works which the besiegers cast up for their own defence: so this is another representation of the siege mentioned ver. 1.

This shall be a sign] Ezekiel often expressed God's purposes by signs (see xii. 2, 12, xxiv. 24, 27, and the notes upon ver. 17 of this chapter).

Ver. 4. Lie thou also upon thy left side.] Lie on that side without stirring or moving thyself (see ver. 8).

Thou shalt bear their iniquity.] By lying on one side thou shalt signify God's forbearing their punishment for so many years: so the words are commonly explained; but in my opinion not agreeably to the genuine sense of the phrase, "To bear one's iniquity." [The word nasa, to bear, when it is joined with sin, or iniquity, doth sometimes signify to forgive, or forbear the punishment due to sin, particularly Ps. xxv. 18, and is sometimes rendered ἀξιμῶ in the LXX, but it usually denotes bearing or suffering punishment (see Lev. xvi. 22); especially when it is joined with "laying on iniquity," as it is here (see ver. 4, 5). And we find the circumstances under which Ezekiel was here placed, were all of them penal.] As also that other expression of laying iniquity upon any, imports the imputing the guilt of it, or inflicting the punishment due unto it. So here the prophet does in vision bear the punishment due to the idolatry of Israel and Judah, which had continued, the one for three hundred and ninety, the other for forty years.

The circumstances of this vision prove, that the prophet did really perform what is here related; or else it could not have been a "sign unto the house of Israel" (ver. 3), unless they themselves had been eye-witnesses of it (compare xii. 7, 11). The chief objection against this opinion is, that there is not the distance of four hundred and thirty days between this vision and that which is next related (viii. 1); but that may be answered by supposing this to be an intercalary year, which may be supposed to have happened often in the Jewish computation of time, whose years consisted at most but of three hundred and sixty days, or, as some think, were lunar years, reduced by intercalations to the solar form (see Dr. Prideaux, Script. Hist. par. i. p. 281). [Concerning 5 For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days: so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel.

6 And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year.

7 Therefore thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, and thine arm shall be uncovered, and thou shalt prophecy against it.

8 And, behold, I will lay bands upon thee, and thou shalt not turn thee from one side to another, till thou hast ended the days of thy siege.

9 ¶ Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches, and put them in one vessel, and make thee bread thereof, according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy side, three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof.

10 And thy meat which thou shalt eat shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day: from time to time shalt thou eat it.

the form of the Jewish year, see many useful observations on Mr. Marshal's Treatise upon the Seventy Weeks, par. ii. ch. 4.]

Ver. 5. Three hundred and ninety days:] The most probable computation of this time is, to date its beginning from Jeroboam's first setting up the idolatrous worship of the golden calves, to the last captivity of the Jews, in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign (see Jer. lii. 30). This seems to have made an entire riddance of the natives of the land, and consequently to be the finishing stroke of the Jewish captivity. Both Judah and Israel being now entirely carried away, whereas before that time many of the ten tribes lived in their own habitations (see 2 Chron. xxix. 14, xxxi. 11, 18, xxxii. 33, Ezra vi. 17).

Ver. 6. Thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days:] This series of time may probably be computed from the eighteenth year of Josiah, at which time the king and people entered into a solemn covenant to serve and worship God, so that the idolatry they were afterward guilty of received a new aggravation, as being a breach of this solemn covenant, the greater part of the people being still idolatrous in their hearts (see the notes on Jer. iii. 6, 10). The thirtieth year, mentioned in the beginning of this prophecy, is supposed to take its date from the eighteenth year of Josiah, which makes it probable that the prophet refers to the same era in this place.

Scaliger and some others begin these forty years from Jeremiah's mission as a prophet, which was in the thirteenth year of Josiah, from which time till the last year of Zedekiah, when the city and temple were destroyed, is just forty years. [The learned bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, in his Defence of Christianity, ch. 3. sect. 1, explains the forty days of Judah's transgression, of the years wherein Judah had exceeded Israel in idolatry under the reign of Manasses. The sins committed at that time filled up the measure of Judah's transgressions. See 2 Kings xxi. 11—13, xxiii. 26, xxiv. 3, Jer. xv. 4.]

I have appointed thee each day for a year.] Days frequently stand for years in the prophetic accounts of time. See Numb. xiv. 34, "After the number of forty days (each day for a year), shall you bear your iniquities, even forty years," Dan. ix. 24. The days of the seventy weeks must necessarily be understood in the same sense, so as to make up the sum of four hundred and ninety years. And the one thousand two hundred and sixty days mentioned Rev. xi. 3, are, according to the genius of the prophetic style, to be understood of so many years.

Ver. 7. Thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem.] When thou liest in one posture, as is commanded thee, ver. 4, 6, thou shalt still have the portraiture of the siege of Jerusalem before thy face (ver. 1); or "setting thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem," may signify looking earnestly, or with a threatening visage towards it; as the prophet is said to set his face against a place, when he prophesies against it (see vi. 2).

Thine arm shall be uncovered,] Or, stretched out. Their habits were anciently contrived, so that the right arm was disengaged from the upper garments, that they might be the more ready for action. So ancient statues and coins represent heroes with their right arm bare, and out of the sleeve of their garments. Thus God is said to "make bare his arm," Isa. lii. 10, where he is represented as subduing his adversaries, and bringing salvation to his people.

Thou shalt prophecy against it.] By signs and not by words (see note on iii. 26).

Ver. 8. I will lay bands upon thee,] See iii. 25.

Till thou hast ended the days of thy siege,] The three hundred and ninety days, mentioned ver. 5, 9, were designed not only to signify the years of Israel's sin, but the continuance of the siege of Jerusalem. That siege lasted, from the beginning to the ending of it, seventeen months, as appears from 2 Kings xxv. 1—4. But the king of Egypt coming to relieve the city, was the occasion of raising the siege for some time, as appears from Jer. xxxvii. 3. So that it may reasonably be gathered from the authority of the text joined to the circumstances of the story, that the siege lasted about thirteen months, or three hundred and ninety days (see Archbishop Usher's Annals, ad An. Mundi 3415).

Ver. 9. Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, &c.] In time of scarcity it is usual to mix a great deal of the coarse kinds of grain with a little of the better sort, to make their provisions last the longer. Thus Ezekiel was commanded to do, to signify the scarcity and coarse fare the inhabitants should endure in the siege of the city.

Three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof.] During which time the siege lasted (see ver. 8). The forty days, mentioned ver. 6, seem not to be reckoned into this account. These denoted Judah's sin of forty years' continuance, from the eighteenth year of Josiah (ver. 6). And as they were superadded to the three hundred and ninety days of the siege, they may signify the days spent in plundering the city, and burning the temple, and carrying away the remnant of the people: Jerusalem was taken on the "ninth day of the fourth month" (Jer. lii. 6), and on the "tenth day of the fifth month" the temple was burnt (ver. 12); and so we reasonably conjecture, by the eighteenth of that month, which was the fortieth from the taking of the place, the whole city was burnt, and the few Jews which were left were carried into captivity.

Ver. 10. Thy meat—shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day:] In sieges it is common to stint every one to a certain allowance, by which means they can guess how long their provisions will last: twenty shekels is but ten ounces, a short allowance for a day's sustenance (see ver. 16, Jer. xxxvii. 21).

11 Thou shalt drink also water by measure, the sixth part of an hin : from time to time shalt thou drink.

12 And thou shalt eat it as barley cakes, and thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight.

13 And the LORD said, Even thus shall the children of Israel eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them.

14 Then said I, Ah Lord God ! behold, my soul hath not been polluted : for from my youth up even till now have I not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces ;

From time to time shalt thou eat it.] This shall be thy daily allowance during the whole three hundred and ninety days.

Ver. 11. The sixth part of an hin:] Which is something above a pint and a half of our measure (see Bishop Cumberland's account of Jewish Weights and Measures, placed at the end of many English bibles).

Ver. 12. Thou shalt eat it as barley cakes,] Such as people make in haste, when they have not time for preparing a set meal (see Exod. xii. 39). This represents the hurry and disorder of a siege.

Bake it with dung, &c.] To signify the scarcity of all sorts of fuel (see ver. 15).

Ver. 13.] Their circumstances in their captivity shall not permit them to observe the rules of their law relating to unclean meats, and they will be constrained to partake of meats, part of which hath been offered unto idols (compare Dan. i. 8, Hos. ix. 1). Bread is often used in the Hebrew for all sorts of food (see Gen. xliii. 31).

Ver. 14. My soul hath not been polluted:] I have always carefully observed the distinction between neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth.

15 Then he said unto me, Lo, I have given thee cow's dung for man's dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread therewith.

16 Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem : and they shall eat bread by weight, and with care ; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment :

17 That they may want bread and water, and be astonished one with another, and consume away for their iniquity.

meats clean and unclean : I beseech thee, command me not now to eat anything so contrary to my former practice.

Neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth.]

The Hebrew word piggul, abominable, is properly used of such meats as are forbidden by the law (see Lev. vii. 18, xix. 7, Isa. lxxv. 4). Such as are those here mentioned (see the texts quoted in the margin of our bibles).

Ver. 16. I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem:] The siege shall produce a scarcity of bread in Jerusalem (2 Kings xxv. 3), and deprive you of the chief support of man's life (compare Lev. xiv. 13, xxvi. 26, Isa. iii. 1).

They shall eat bread by weight, and with care:] See ver. 10, 11. When they have consumed their last allowance, they shall be in great care where to get more for the next meal ; and some of you be forced to eat the flesh of their nearest relation (see v. 10).

Ver. 17.] Look one upon another as persons under astonishment for the greatness of your calamities, and pining away or dying a lingering death through famine and other hardships (see xxiv. 23).

CHAPTER V.

1 AND thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head and upon thy beard : then take thee balances to weigh, and divide the hair.

2 Thou shalt burn with fire a third part in the midst of the city, when the days of the siege are fulfilled : and thou shalt take a third part, and smite about it with a knife : and a third part thou shalt scatter in the wind ; and I will draw out a sword after them.

3 Thou shalt also take thereof a few in number, and bind them in thy skirts.

CHAP. V.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet is commanded to shave his hair, and then consume it, to signify thereby God's judgment upon Jerusalem for her repeated provocations, by famine, sword, and dispersion.

Ver. 1. Take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor,] The latter expression explains the former : hair being an ornament, and baldness a token of sorrow, thereupon shaving denotes a great calamity or desolation (compare Isa. vii. 20). Maimonides (More Nechoh. lib. ii. cap. 46) observes upon this place, that the priests were forbidden to shave their heads (see xlv. 20), and not allowed to do it in the time of mourning (Lev. xxi. 5) ; from whence that author concludes, that what the prophet has here commanded, was performed only in vision. But there is no need of such an evasion to answer that difficulty. For the immediate command of God to any prophet, is a sufficient discharge from any obligations of the ceremonial law. So Elijah offered sacrifice upon mount Carmel (1 Kings xviii. 20), contrary to the rule of the law, Deut. xii. 5.

Then take thee balances, &c.] To signify the exactness of the divine justice.

Ver. 2. Thou shalt burn—a third part in the midst of the city,] Of that portraiture of the city which the prophet was commanded to make, vi. 1, this signifies the destruction of the inhabitants within the city by famine and pestilence (see ver. 12, vii. 12).

Take a third part, and smite about it with a knife:] To show that a third part of the inhabitants shall be slain with the sword, just after they have escaped out of the city (see ver. 12). This was remarkably fulfilled in the slaughter of Zedekiah's sons, and the rest of his retinue, Jer. lii. 10.

A third part thou shalt scatter in the wind ; and I will draw out a sword after them.] The rest shall be dispersed to all the four winds (see vi. 8). And even my vengeance shall pursue many of them in their dispersions (see ver. 12, and compare Lev. xxvi. 33, Jer. xxiv. 10, xlv. 12, Amos ix. 4).

Ver. 3. Bind them in thy skirts.] The Hebrew

4 Then take of them again, and cast them into the midst of the fire, and burn them in the fire; for thereof shall a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.

5 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her.

6 And she hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her: for they have refused my judgments and my statutes, they have not walked in them.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye multiplied more than the nations that are round about you, and have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you;

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I, even I, am against thee, and will execute reads, "in thy wings: to signify that they should be placed under the divine protection (see Ps. xci. 4). This denotes those that should be left in the land under Gedaliah, Jer. xl. 5, 6.

Ver. 4. Cast them into the midst of the fire.] This denotes the conspiracy which Ishmael formed against Gedaliah, and the calamities that followed thereupon.

For thereof shall a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.] This was the occasion of the utter ruin of that poor remainder of the Jews which were left in their native country. Thereupon some of them went down into Egypt, where they were all consumed, according to Jeremiah's prophecy against them (see xlv. 11, &c.); and the rest that remained in the land were entirely carried away captive by Nebuzar-adan (see Jer. lii. 30).

Ver. 5.] This Jerusalem thou dost now prophecy against, was placed in the midst of the heathen nations; it made a figure among them for the sake of my temple, and the visible tokens of my presence there (see xvi. 14, 1 Kings viii. 41, 42). It was a "city set on a hill," on purpose that it might be a pattern of religion and virtue to them (compare Matt. v. 14).

Ver. 6. She hath changed my judgments into wickedness] Or, "She hath rebelled against my judgments, for the sake of wickedness;" that is, to fulfil her wicked desires: for so the verb marah is rightly translated, xx. 8.

More than the nations,] She hath sinned against a clearer light and greater convictions (compare xvi. 48, Matt. xii. 41, 42).

For they have refused my judgments] The reason why the heathen have rejected my laws, is because they have kept constant to the religion of their forefathers: whereas the Jews have forsaken that religion which their forefathers received from me (see the next verse).

Ver. 7. Because ye multiplied more than the nations] The French translation reads, "Because thou hast multiplied thy wickedness:" some such word ought to be added to supply the sense.

Neither have done according to the judgments of the nations—round about you;] Or rather, "according to the manner of the nations round about you:" as the very same phrase is translated, xi. 12. You have not been so constant and zealous for the true religion as they are in a false one (compare xvi. 47, Jer. ii. 10, 11, Mic. iv. 5).

Ver. 9. I will do in thee that which I have not judgments in the midst of thee in the sight of the nations.

9 And I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, because of all thine abominations.

10 Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds.

11 Wherefore, as I live, saith the Lord God; Surely, because thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and with all thine abominations, therefore will I also diminish thee; neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity.

12 ¶ A third part of thee shall die with pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee: and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; and I will scat-done,] As your sins have particular aggravations above those other nations, so your punishment shall be proportionably greater (see Dan. ix. 12, Lam. iv. 6, Amos iii. 2).

I will not do any more the like.] The punishments you shall suffer shall be more remarkable for their greatness than those I shall at any time inflict upon other nations. The punishment due to the sins of Israel and Judah, which the prophet was to bear for four hundred and thirty days by way of type or vision, may probably signify a judgment to continue for such a length of time as is not yet expired; according to God's threatenings, that for their obstinacy and irreclaimableness, as he would go on to punish them seven times more for their sins (Lev. xxvi. 18, 28); multiplying the length of their calamities by a seven-fold proportion. And taking the words in this large extent, so as to comprehend all the marks of God's indignation which have already lain upon that people for above sixteen hundred years, and how much longer they may continue we know not, it may truly be said, that none of God's judgments have been like it.

Ver. 10. The fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee.] A terrible judgment threatened by Moses, Lev. xxvi. 29, Deut. xxviii. 53, and afterward by Jeremy, xix. 9, and actually fulfilled in the famine that attended the siege of Jerusalem (see Lam. ii. 20, iv. 10).

The whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds.] This is another judgment threatened against them by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 56, and remarkably fulfilled in this their last dispersion, when every known part of the world hath some share of them, and yet they live everywhere like strangers, only upon sufferance.

Ver. 11. Thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and—thine abominations.] Thou hast profaned my temple, by placing idols in it (see vii. 20, viii. 5, xxiii. 38, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14). Detestable things and abominations are words of the same signification, denoting idols (see xi. 21).

Therefore will I diminish thee; neither shall mine eye spare,] Or, "I will destroy thee (for so this word is used Numb. xxvii. 4), without showing any pity or compassion" (see vii. 4, 9, viii. 18, ix. 10, xxiv. 14).

Ver. 12. A third part of thee shall die with pestilence (see xiv. 22), and with famine, &c.] See ver. 2, vi. 12, Jer. xv. 2, xxi. 9.

ter a third into all the winds, and I will draw out a sword after them.

13 Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them, and I will be comforted: and they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them.

14 Moreover I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by.

15 So it shall be a reproach and a taunt, an instruction and an astonishment unto the nations that are round about thee, when I shall execute

I will draw out a sword after them.] And thereby fulfil that threatening denounced against them, Lev. xxvi. 33. Compare likewise Dent. xxviii. 65, Amos ix. 4. All which places import, that God's anger should still pursue them even into the countries whither they were banished and carried captive. This was particularly fulfilled in those that went into Egypt (see Jer. xlv. 7); and it was remarkably verified in the several persecutions and massacres they have undergone at different times, in most of the countries of Europe, in latter ages; of which see an account in Basnage's continuation of Josephus.

Ver. 13. I will cause my fury to rest upon them.] See the note on viii. 18. The words may be rendered thus, "I will cause my fury towards them to rest," as the phrase is translated, xvi. 42, that is, my anger shall be appeased towards them, after I have executed due punishment upon their sins.

I will be comforted.] This and the former expression is borrowed from men's passions, who find some ease and rest in their minds upon their venting them, and bringing offenders to condign punishment. So God is here described as feeling ease and satisfaction in executing his justice upon obstinate and incorrigible sinners (compare xvi. 42, xxi. 17, Isa. i. 24).

Have spoken it in my zeal.] Out of a just concern for mine own honour and authority, which they have slighted and despised (see xxxvi. 5, 6, xxxviii. 17). The word may likewise be taken here for that passion of jealousy that is proper to a husband when judgments in thee in anger and in fury and in furious rebukes. I the Lord have spoken it.

16 When I shall send upon them the evil arrows of famine, which shall be for their destruction, and which I will send to destroy you: and I will increase the famine upon you, and will break your staff of bread:

17 So will I send upon you famine and evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee; and pestilence and blood shall pass through thee; and I will bring the sword upon thee. I the Lord have spoken it.

his wife proves false to him, and is applied to God, when his people forsake his worship and serve idols (see xvi. 35, 42, xxxiii. 25).

The covenant between God and his people is often represented under the notion of a marriage contract (see xvi. 8), whereupon idolatry is called "going a whoring after other gods," and "committing adultery with sticks and stones" (Jer. iii. 9).

Ver. 14.] See Deut. xxviii. 37, 1 Kings ix. 7, Ps. lxxix. 4, Jer. xxiv. 9, Lam. ii. 15.

Ver. 15. An instruction—unto the nations] They shall learn from such an example of vengeance, to hear me and be afraid of my judgments.

In furious rebukes.] See xxv. 17.

Ver. 16. The evil arrows of famine, &c.] God's judgments are elsewhere expressed by arrows (see Deut. xxxii. 23, Ps. vii. 13, lxiv. 7, xci. 5).

And I will break your staff of bread: See iv. 16.

Ver. 17. So will I send upon you famine and evil beasts.] Wild beasts multiply in a land when it is become uninhabited (Exod. xxiii. 29). This is likewise a punishment threatened against the Jews, among other desolations (see Lev. xxvi. 22, Deut. xxxii. 24, and compare xiv. 21, xxxiii. 27, xxxiv. 25, of this prophecy).

Pestilence and blood.] Blood signifies any unusual sort of death, and denotes here such a pestilence as will destroy multitudes (compare xiv. 19). Or it may be equivalent to the sword which is joined with the pestilence, ver. 12 (see xxxviii. 22).

CHAPTER VI.

1 AND the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face toward the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them.

3 And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys; Behold, I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places.

CHAP. VI.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet continues to denounce God's severe judgments upon the Jews for their idolatry: but tells them that a remnant shall be saved, and by their afflictions shall be brought to a sense of their evil doings.

Ver. 2. Set thy face] Direct thy face and thy speech towards the mountains in the land of Judea (compare iv. 7, xiii. 17, xx. 46, xxi. 2, xxv. 2, xxxviii. 2).

Toward the mountains of Israel.] Judea was a hilly country (see Josh. xi. 21, xx. 7). So the whole land of Judea is expressed here and elsewhere by the mountains of Israel (see xix. 9, xxxiii. 18, xxxiv. 14, xxxv. 12, xxxvi. 1, xxxvii. 22, Isa. lxxv. 9, Mic.

vi. 1). The prophets sometimes direct their discourse to the inanimate parts of the creation, thereby to upbraid the stupidity of men (see Isa. i. 2).

Prophesy against them.] As the most conspicuous parts of the land: but the judgments denounced extend to all the other parts of the country, as appears in the following verse.

Ver. 3. The mountains, and to the hills, &c.] Every part of the country had been defiled with idolatry: the altars built for idol-worship were commonly placed upon mountains and hills (see xvi. 16, 24, Jer. ii. 20, iii. 6). The shady valleys and riversides were likewise made use of for the same purpose (ibid. ver. 23); particularly for the sacrificing of children offered to Moloch (see Isa. lvii. 5, Jer. vii. 31). So the prophet denounces a general judgment against the whole country.

4 And your altars shall be desolate, and your images shall be broken: and I will cast down your slain men before your idols.

5 And I will lay the dead carcasses of the children of Israel before their idols; and I will scatter your bones round about your altars.

6 In all your dwelling places the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate: that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and your works may be abolished.

7 And the slain shall fall in the midst of you, and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

8 ¶ Yet will I leave a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries.

9 And they that escape of you shall remember me among the nations whither they shall be carried captives, because I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols: and they shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations.

Ver. 4. Your images shall be broken:] The verse is plainly taken from Lev. xxvi. 30, where Moses denounces the same judgments against the Jews upon their provocations. The word hamannim, images, is generally supposed to signify such as were erected to the honour of the sun, and is accordingly translated sun-images in the margin (compare 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4, Isa. xvii. 8).

I will cast down your slain men before your idols.] So that their sin may be read in the manner of their punishment (see Lev. xxvi. 30).

Ver. 7. Ye shall know that I am the Lord.] An epiphonema, or conclusion of a severe denunciation often repeated by this prophet; importing, that the judgments God intended to bring upon the Jews, would make the most hardened and stupid sinners sensible that this was God's hand.

Ver. 8. Yet will I leave a remnant, &c.] A gracious exception that often occurs in the prophets, when they denounce general judgments against the Jews: implying, that God will still reserve a remnant of that people to whom he will fulfil the promises made to their fathers (see xiv. 22, and the notes upon Isa. iv. 2, Jer. xlv. 14).

Ver. 9. They that escape of you shall remember me] Their afflictions shall bring them to the sense of themselves, and their duty to me (see Hos. v. 15).

Because I am broken with their whorish heart.] My patience is tired out with this people's idolatries, called in scripture "spiritual whoredom" (see the note on v. 13).

God is here introduced as speaking after the manner of men, whose patience is tired out by the repeated provocations of others, especially when they see no hopes of amendment (compare Isa. xliii. 24).

10 And they shall know that I am the Lord, and that I have not said in vain that I would do this evil unto them.

11 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel! for they shall fall by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence.

12 He that is far off shall die of the pestilence, and he that is near shall fall by the sword; and he that remaineth and is besieged shall die by the famine: thus will I accomplish my fury upon them.

13 Then shall ye know that I am the Lord, when their slain men shall be among their idols round about their altars, upon every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer sweet savour to all their idols.

14 So will I stretch out my hand upon them, and make the land desolate, yea, more desolate than the wilderness toward Diblath, in all their habitations: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

And with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols:] The eyes are the seat of lascivious inclinations (see 2 Pet. ii. 14). So in pursuance of the same metaphor, they are said to be enticed to idolatry: being often tempted to idolatrous worship, by the costliness of the images, and the fine show which they make (see Jer. x. 4, 9, Dan. xi. 38).

They shall loathe themselves] They shall "abhor themselves," as Job speaks, xlii. 6, when they reflect upon their manifold provocations (see vii. 16, xii. 16, xx. 43, xxxvi. 32).

Ver. 10. Not said in vain] Or, "without cause," as the word hinam is more significantly translated, xiv. 22.

Ver. 11. Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot,] Join to thy words the gestures which are proper to express grief and concern at the wickedness of thy people, and for their calamities that will ensue (compare xxi. 12, 14, Numb. xxiv. 10).

For they shall fall by the sword,] See v. 12.

Ver. 12. He that is far off] He that is out of the reach of the siege.

Ver. 13. When their slain men] See ver. 4, 5.

Upon every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains,] These were the noted places for idolatrous worship (see Jer. ii. 20, Hos. iv. 13, and the notes upon ver. 3 of this chapter).

Under every green tree, and under every thick oak,] The offering sacrifice in groves and shady places was another ancient rite of idolatry (see the note on Isa. i. 29); upon which account groves and images are often joined together by the sacred writers.

Ver. 14. Diblath,] Diblath was part of the desert in the borders of Moab (see Numb xxxiii. 46, Jer. xlviii. 22).

CHAPTER VII.

1 MOREOVER the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Also, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God unto the land of Israel; An end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land.

3 Now is the end come upon thee, and I will send mine anger upon thee, and will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense upon thee all thine abominations.

4 And mine eye shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity: but I will recompense thy ways upon thee, and thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

5 Thus saith the Lord God; An evil, an only evil, behold, is come.

6 An end is come, the end is come: it watcheth for thee; behold, it is come.

7 The morning is come unto thee, O thou that dwellest in the land: the time is come, the day of trouble is near, and not the sounding again of the mountains.

8 Now will I shortly pour out my fury upon thee, and accomplish mine anger upon thee: and I will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense thee for all thine abominations.

9 And mine eye shall not spare, neither will I

10 Behold the day, behold, it is come: the morning is gone forth; the rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded.

11 Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness: none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor of any of their's: neither shall there be wailing for them.

12 The time is come, the day draweth near: let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn: for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

13 For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, although they were yet alive: for the vision is touching the whole multitude thereof, which shall not return; neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life.

14 They have blown the trumpet, even to make all ready; but none goeth to the battle: for my wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

15 The sword is without, and the pestilence and the famine within: He that is in the field shall die with the sword; and he that is in the city, famine and pestilence shall devour him.

CHAP. VII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet denounces the irreversible judgment of captivity, and final desolation upon the Jews, for their idolatry and other heinous sins.

Ver. 2. Unto the land of Israel;] This comprehends the whole country of Judea (compare xii. 22, xiii. 9, xviii. 2). Israel is often put for Judah after the captivity of the ten tribes (see Mic. i. 14, iii. 9, 10, Mal. i. 1, ii. 11): they that were left of the ten tribes, joining themselves to the tribe of Judah (see 2 Chron. xxx. 11, 18). Dr. Prideaux supposes, that Manasses and his successors in the kingdom of Judah had the dominion of the whole land of Canaan, formerly divided into the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel, as tributaries under the kings of Assyria (see his Connexion of Scripture History, par. i. p. 34).

The end is come upon the four corners of the land.] Upon the whole country (compare Numb. xxiv. 17).

Ver. 4. Mine eye shall not spare] See v. 17.

Ye shall know that I am the Lord.] See vi. 17.

Ver. 5. An only evil, behold, is come.] Such an evil as shall comprehend all other calamities in it.

Ver. 6. An end is come.] A destruction which shall be fatal to a great part of those that go into captivity, as well as to those who are consumed in their own country (see v. 12, vi. 8, Jer. xlv. 27).

Ver. 7. The morning is come unto thee,] God's judgments shall overtake thee speedily and unexpectedly (compare Ps. xlvii. 9). The expression alludes to the time when the magistrates use to give sentence against offenders, which was in the morning (see the notes upon Jer. xxi. 12).

The time is come.] The time of God's vengeance, called elsewhere "the day of the Lord" (compare ver. 12, xxi. 25, xxx. 3, Jer. xvii. 7).

And not the sounding again of the mountains.] The sound of war and tumults; not such a joyful sound as useth to echo from the mountains, by which the treaders of grapes express their satisfaction at the time of the vintage; which the Hebrew word hed or heidad, properly signifies (see Isa. xvi. 9, Jer. xxv. 30, xlviii. 33).

Ver. 10. The rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded.] Wickedness daily spreads and increases, till it becomes ripe for judgment.

Ver. 11. Neither shall there be wailing for them.] In an utter destruction there shall none escape to bewail the calamities of their brethren; or they shall use no expressions of sorrow, as persons that are astonished under the greatness of their afflictions (compare xiv. 16, 22, Deut. xxviii. 28, 34).

Ver. 12. Let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn.] The buyer will have no reason to rejoice, because he will not enjoy what he hath bought; nor the seller cause to mourn for the loss of his possessions, which the approaching captivity will for ever deprive him of.

Ver. 13. For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, although they were yet alive.] The year of jubilee shall be no advantage to the sellers, when once they are gone into captivity: for though they should live so long, yet they shall not enjoy the benefit of the law (Lev. xxv. 13, nor return any more to their possessions).

Neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life.] And though they harden themselves in sin, and shut their eyes against the judgments which hang over their heads, these will at last unavoidably overtake them.

Ver. 14. They have blown the trumpet (see Jer. vi. 1)—but none goeth to the battle.] Men's hearts fail them, as looking upon themselves as given up to destruction (see ver. 17).

cape, and shall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys, all of them mourning, every one for his iniquity.

17 All hands shall be feeble, and all knees shall be weak as water.

18 They shall also gird themselves with sackcloth, and horror shall cover them; and shame shall be upon all faces, and baldness upon all their heads.

19 They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be removed: their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the LORD: they shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels: because it is the stumbling-block of their iniquity.

20 ¶ As for the beauty of his ornament, he set it in majesty: but they made the images of their abominations, and of their detestable things therein: therefore have I set it far from them.

21 And I will give it into the hands of the strangers for a prey, and to the wicked of the earth for a spoil; and they shall pollute it.

22 My face will I turn also from them, and they shall pollute my secret place: for the robbers shall enter into it, and defile it.

23 ¶ Make a chain: for the land is full of bloody crimes, and the city is full of violence.

24 Wherefore I will bring the worst of the heathen, and they shall possess their houses: I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease; and their holy places shall be defiled.

25 Destruction cometh; and they shall seek peace, and there shall be none.

26 Mischief shall come upon mischief, and ru-

Ver. 15. The sword is without.] See v. 2, 12.

Ver. 16. They that escape of them shall escape.] Some few of them shall have the favour of escaping the common calamity, called elsewhere the escaped or the remnant, from whence is derived the phrase οι σωζομενοι in the New Testament, "such as are or should be saved" (see the note on Isa. i. 9, Jer. xlv. 14).

And shall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys.] When they flee from the enemy to the mountains (compare Ps. xi. 1, Matt. xxiv. 16), and are escaped out of the imminent danger that threatened them, they will then reflect upon their former provocations, and bemoan themselves, and their calamities the effects of them (see vi. 9, and compare Isa. xxxviii. 14, lix. 11).

All of them mourning.] St. Jerome renders it, "All of them trembling:" an epithet ascribed to doves, Hos. xi. 11, who are by nature exceeding timorous: this interpretation implies, that their guilt should make them very apprehensive of God's judgments, and fearful what should befall them.

Ver. 17.] Weakness and failing of spirits doth cause feebleness in the hands and knees (compare xxi. 7, Isa. xxxv. 3, Job iv. 3, 4).

Ver. 18. Horror shall cover them;] Or, "overwhelm them," as the phrase is translated Ps. lv. 6.

Shame shall be upon all faces.] The marks of confusion and misery, covering the face, or shaving the head, and making it bald, as it follows (see the note on Isa. xv. 2).

Ver. 19. Their gold shall be removed:] Or, "shall be accounted an unclean thing;" so the margin renders the word leniddah, in the following verse: it shall be valued no more than dung or filthiness, as being made a prey to the conquerors.

They shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels:] Their wealth will not procure them the necessities of life under the straits of famine, or miseries of bondage.

It is the stumbling-block of their iniquity.] They laid out their silver and gold in making ornaments for their idols (compare xiv. 2, xvi. 17, xlv. 12).

Ver. 20. As for the beauty of his ornament, he set it in majesty:] The expressions may most probably be understood of the glory and magnificence of the temple, called elsewhere the beauty of holiness (compare ver. 22). This very place they have defiled with idolatry (see v. 11); therefore I have given it into the hands of the gentiles to profane and pollute it. For to that sense the marginal reading rightly translates the following words. The preterperfect tense is often used by the prophets for the future; who, to denote the certainty of the event, speak of what is to come, as if it were already done (see the note upon Isa. xxi. 9). The same sense is expressed in the following, "I will give it into the hands of strangers," &c.

Ver. 21. To the wicked of the earth.] See ver. 24.

Ver. 22.] I will not hear them when they cry to me in their distress (see viii. 18); but will deliver up the holiest part of the temple, where none but the high-priest used to enter, into the hands of the Chaldeans, that shall profane and plunder it.

Ver. 23. Make a chain:] The prophets foretold things by actions as well as by words. So Jeremiah is commanded to make bonds and yokes (Jer. xxviii. 2); and Ezekiel here to make a chain, to foreshow the approaching captivity, when king and people should be carried in chains to Babylon (see 2 Kings xxv. 7, Jer. xl. 1).

For the land is full of bloody crimes,] The innocent blood that has been shed in it cries aloud for vengeance (see ix. 9, xxiii. 27, xxvi. 18).

Ver. 24. I will bring the worst of the heathen.] The Chaldeans, who were at that time the great oppressors of the world, and a terror to all the countries round about them (see xxviii. 7, xxx. 11).

I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease;] All the state and magnificence of the mighty men shall be brought to nothing (compare xxxviii. 23).

Their holy places shall be defiled.] The word holy places being in the plural number, denotes the temple and all its outward courts, where the people assembled for the worship of God, and thereupon were accounted holy (compare ix. 7, xxi. 2, Ps. lxxviii. 35, lxxiii. 17, Jer. li. 51).

Ver. 26. Then they shall seek a vision of the prophet;] Men are desirous to hear what the event shall be in times of perplexity (see xiv. 9, xx. 1, xxxviii. 17).

But the law shall perish from the priest.] Jeremiah, Daniel, and Ezekiel himself, shall go into captivity. So there shall either be no prophet left among you, or, if there be any left, they shall not be favoured with divine revelations (see Lam. ii. 8).

Counsel from the ancients.] Or the elders, as the word is elsewhere translated (viii. 1, xvi. 1, xx. 1), men of authority, and famous for wisdom, whose advice they asked in all cases of difficulty (see Ps. cxix. 100, Isa. iii. 2). In like manner the prophet, the priest, and the wise men, are joined together, Jer. xviii. 18.

Ver. 27.] There shall be a general consternation of all ranks and degrees of men. They that are in authority shall want presence of mind to give counsel.

mour shall be upon rumour; then shall they seek a vision of a prophet; but the law shall perish from the priest, and counsel from the ancients.

27 The king shall mourn, and the prince shall be clothed with desolation, and the hands of the people of the land shall be troubled: I will do unto them after their way, and according to their deserts will I judge them; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

and directions, and the inferiors shall have no heart to put them in execution. The word prince is synonymous with the king, as may appear by comparing xii. 10, 12, xxi. 25.

CHAPTER VIII.

I AND it came to pass in the sixth year, in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in mine house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, that the hand of the Lord God fell there upon me.

2 Then I beheld, and lo a likeness as the appearance of fire: from the appearance of his loins even downward, fire; and from his loins even upward, as the appearance of brightness, as the colour of amber.

3 And he put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north; where was the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy.

4 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel was there, according to the vision that I saw in the plain.

5 ¶ Then said he unto me, Son of man, lift up thine eyes now the way toward the north. So I lifted up mine eyes the way toward the north, and behold northward at the gate of the altar this image of jealousy in the entry.

6 He said furthermore unto me, Son of man,

CHAP. VIII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet is carried in vision to Jerusalem, and there shown the idolatries committed by the Jews, within the precincts of the temple.

Ver. 1. In the sixth year,] Of Jehoiachin's captivity (see i. 2).

The elders of Judah] Men of note for their age or authority: perhaps such as had been members of the greater or lesser consistories before their captivity. These elders came to me to inquire of the Lord concerning their present state of affairs (compare xiv. 1, 4, xxxiii. 31). It is probable that they, together with the priests of the captivity, often met together to consult about the public affairs, or to make orders and rules for the better government of the people. So when Sharezer and Regemmelech came to Jerusalem to ask counsel of the prophets and priests about observing the fasts relating to their former calamities (Zech. vii. 2, 3), it is highly probable that they were sent by the elders and priests that met in Babylon for this purpose (see Dr. Prideaux, Connex. of Script. Hist. par. i. p. 272).

Sat before me.] This was the posture of those that came to hear the instructions of any prophet or teacher (compare xiv. 1, xx. 1, xxxiii. 31, 2 Kings iv. 38). In aftertimes the teachers sat in a chair or eminent seat, and the hearers sat on lower forms at the feet of their masters (see Luke x. 39, Acts xxii. 3).

Fell there upon me.] See the note on i. 3.

Ver. 2. I beheld,] A divine of great learning and character thinks the Hebrew words should be understood of the time past, and translated "I had beheld;" and that we are not to suppose the prophet began to see this vision while the elders were before him, but related to them by God's direction what he had formerly seen in the fourth month, the season set apart for the worship of the idol Tamuz (see the note on ver. 14). This sense is confirmed by comparing the place with xi. 25. Then, or "Thus I spake to them of the captivity, all the things that the Lord had shewed me."

The appearance of fire;] See the note on i. 27.

Ver. 3. He put forth the form of an hand,] Just as the form of a hand appeared "writing upon the wall," Dan. v. 5.

Brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem,] This expression, in the vision of God (which is likewise used again at the end of the recital of this prophecy, xi. 24, and xl. 2), may import that all this representation was performed only in vision; that is, by a lively representation to the mind, as if the prophet had been personally present at Jerusalem. In the same manner, Elisha was present with Gehazi when he took Naaman's present, 2 Kings v. 26, and heard the words that were spoken in the king of Syria's bed-chamber, 2 Kings vi. 12. And St. Paul, though he was "absent in body," yet was "present in spirit" at the church of the Colossians, beholding their order, &c. (Col. ii. 5). But the words may also signify a local translation of the prophet from Chaldea to Jerusalem (compare iii. 14, xl. 1).

The latter interpretation is confirmed "by the spirit's lifting him up between heaven and earth, and bringing him to Jerusalem," and afterward "carrying him back into Chaldea" (xi. 24).

To the door of the inner gate] The entrance that goes into the inner court, called the court of the priests, where the altar of burnt-offerings stood (see ver. 5). The prophet stood at the outside of this door, and viewed the image here mentioned, placed in some outward verge of the temple; which yet was all accounted holy ground, and called in scripture "the mount of the Lord," or "the holy mountain" (see vii. 24).

Where was—the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy.] An image set up within the precincts of the temple, to provoke God to jealousy, by setting up a rival against him in the place dedicated to his own worship (see note on v. 11).

Ver. 4. The glory of the God of Israel was there,] To show that that was the place of his peculiar residence.

Ver. 5. Northward at the gate of the altar] Northward of the gate or entrance that was over against the altar.

seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations.

7 ¶ And he brought me to the door of the court; and when I looked, behold a hole in the wall.

8 Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door.

9 And he said unto me, Go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here.

10. So I went in and saw; and behold every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel, pourtrayed upon the wall round about.

11 And there stood before them seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel, and in the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan, with every man his censer in his hand: and a thick cloud of incense went up.

12 Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, The Lord seeth us not; the Lord hath forsaken the earth.

13 ¶ He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do.

14 Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the Lord's house which was toward the north; and, behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz.

15 ¶ Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these.

16 And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the

Ver. 6. That I should go far off from my sanctuary?] That I should forsake it, and deliver it up to be polluted by the heathen (vii. 21, 22), which is significantly represented by "the departing of the divine glory from the threshold of the temple," x. 18.

Thou shalt see greater abominations.] Because committed by persons of greater authority, and nearer the place of my immediate presence (see ver. 11, 14, 16).

Ver. 7. He brought me to the door of the court] This Dr. Lightfoot (Des. of the Temple, ch. 28) understands of the east gate of the inner court, called "the gate of Nicanor," over which was the council-chamber where the Sanhedrin used to meet, and in some of the rooms near it they secretly practised idolatry, as God discovered to the prophet (ver. 11).

Behold a hole in the wall.] Through which I could look in, and see what abominations were committed there.

Ver. 8. Dig now in the wall] This was done only by vision, to give the clearer proof and conviction of the idolatries there committed, by thus introducing him into the rooms where they were practised.

Behold a door.] Which had been made up, and another more secret entrance contrived, that they might go in and out unobserved.

Ver. 9.] To give me the fullest conviction, I did not only peep through the hole, mentioned ver. 8, but went into the very room where these idolatries were committed.

Ver. 10.] Pictures were as much prohibited by the law as carved images (see Numb. xxxiii. 53). The worshipping serpents and other brute creatures were idolatries practised in Egypt, and upon that account particularly forbidden by Moses, Deut. iv. 17, 18.

Ver. 11. Seventy men of the ancients] Those probably were the members of the Sanhedrin, or great council of the Jews (see the note on Jer. xxvi. 19). The place of this idolatry was near the council-chamber where they used to sit (see ver. 7).

Ver. 12. Do in the dark.] See ver. 7, 8.

The Lord hath forsaken the earth.] They either deny the being and providence of God (see ix. 9), or else they say in their hearts, God hath cast us off, and withdrawn his wonted protection from us. They seem to have been of the same mind with king Ahaz, who resolved to worship the gods of the Syrians, his conquerors (2 Chron. xxviii. 23). So these men worshipped the idols of their neighbours, whom they saw more prosperous than themselves.

Ver. 14. He brought me to the door of the gate— which was toward the north;] Which was over against the temple; Dr. Lightfoot (ubi supra) distinguishes this door from that mentioned ver. 5, that this was the upper north gate, and that the lower; this being just over against the temple itself, whereas that was opposite to the altar.

There sat women weeping for Tammuz.] St. Jerome, by Tamuz, understands Adonis, which learned men, suppose the same with Osiris (see Vossius, De Idolatria, lib. ii. cap. 4, 10). By Osiris is generally understood the sun. [We may rather understand by Osiris, the god of the Egyptians supposed to preside over the fruits of the earth, which were then cut and gathered in: this being called the death of Osiris, was celebrated with mourning and lamentations (see Dr. Spencer, De Leg. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 24. sect. 1). This gives a plain account why this solemnity was kept in the month of Tamuz, answering to part of our June and July, because the harvest was finished in those hot countries by or before that time.]

This idolatry was derived from the Egyptians, and afterward the Phœnicians and Greeks improved it by the addition of a new fable, viz. of Venus's mourning for the death of Adonis.

The fourth month of the Jews, which answered part of our June and July, was called Tamuz, from a feast dedicated to this idol in that month. The Egyptian year consisted but of three hundred and sixty-five days, without any Bissexile, which was afterward added in the Julian year. By this means they lost a day every four years, which in process of time made a great change in the beginning of their year, and a variation in their festivals, which must consequently remove from one season of the year to another. It is therefore probable that under the idolatrous kings of Judah, who brought in the worship of Tamuz, this festival fell in the month that answered the fourth month of the Jews, and gave that month this name; in which month Ezekiel probably saw this vision (see the note on ver. 2, and Selden, De Diis Syris, Sytagm. ii. cap. 11).

Ver. 16. Between the porch and the altar,] Near the entrance into the temple, where the brazen altar stood, in the middle of the court, before the house of the Lord (see 2 Chron. vii. 7, 2 Kings xvi. 14).

With their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east;] So they turned their backs to God Almighty, and their faces towards the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east; and they worshipped the sun toward the east.

17 ¶ Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations which they commit here? for they have fill-sun. Perhaps Hezekiah may allude to some such idolatrous practice, in that confession of his, 2 Chron. xxix. 6, "Our fathers have done evil in the sight of the Lord, and have forsaken him, and turned away their faces from the habitation of the Lord, and turned their backs." "They turned their back to God, and not their face:" as Jeremy expresses their contempt towards him, ii. 27, xxxii. 33 (compare xxiii. 35 of this prophecy). For this reason the people were commanded to come in at the north or southern gates of the outward court of the temple, when they came to worship, that they might not, at their return, turn their backs upon God (see xli. 9). God ordered the holy of holies in his temple to be placed towards the west, in opposition to this species of heathen idolatry, which consisted in worshipping the rising sun. And the Jews always turned their faces towards the temple, when they worshipped (see Dr. Spencer, De Legib. Hebr. lib. iii. cap. 2, sect. 4).

Ver. 17. And have returned to provoke me to anger:] Or, "again they provoke me to anger" (see the note on Isa. vi. 13). After their repeated acts of injustice and oppression (see xxii. 6, 7), they add new aggravations to their wickedness, by committing these heinous provocations of idolatry.

They put the branch to their nose.] Those that translate the words to this sense, suppose them to relate to some custom among the idolaters, of dedicating a branch of laurel, or some other tree, to the ed the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger: and, lo, they put the branch to their nose.

18 Therefore will I also deal in fury: mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them.

honour of the sun, and carrying it in their hands at the time of their worship. But this text is one of those which the rabbins reckon among the Tikkun Sophirim, or such as have been corrected by their scribes and learned men; and the original reading, say they, was appi, to my nose, or face, instead of the present reading appam. According to which reading the sense will be "and they put a stink to my nose;" that is, they put an open affront upon me, by turning their back parts to me in the place dedicated to my worship.

To this sense the LXX. render it, αὐτοὶ ὡς μινκτηρίζοντες, "They are those that mock me, or publicly affront me."

Dr. Lightfoot, upon John xv. 6, renders the place, "They put the branch to my wrath," or "to their wrath," that is, they add more fuel to my wrath, which will burst out like a flame to consume them; just as if one should lay a heap of dry sticks upon a fire (compare xv. 6).

[These religious rites were called among the Greeks, ἱεροσφῆρα βαλλοσφῆρα θυροσφῆρα. See Dr. Spencer, De Legib. Hebr. lib. iv. cap. 5.]

Ver. 81. Therefore will I also deal in fury:] God's unalterable decree of executing vengeance upon them for their heinous iniquities, is described like the fury of an enraged person, which cannot be appeased but by bringing the offender to condign punishment (see v. 13, xvi. 42, xxiv. 13).

CHAPTER IX.

1 HE cried also in mine ears with a loud voice, saying, Cause them that have charge over the city to draw near, even every man with his destroying weapon in his hand.

CHAP. IX.

ARGUMENT.—This part of the vision represents the destruction of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, beginning with those that were nearest the temple.

Ver. 1. He cried also in mine ears with a loud voice.] To denote the terribleness of God's judgments (see i. 24, Rev. xiv. 7, 9, 15).

Cause them that have charge over the city to draw near.] The angels who had the charge of executing God's judgment upon the city (compare 2 Kings x. 24).

Ver. 2. Of the higher gate, which lieth toward the north.] See the note on viii. 14. There is mention of the higher or upper gate of the Lord's house which Jotham built or repaired, called the "new gate," 2 Kings xv. 35, Jer. xxvi. 10. But that is generally thought to be at the east side of the temple, and the same with that which was afterward called the "gate of Nicanor;" whereas this is supposed to be on the north side of the temple and altar, because there the sacrifices were ordered to be slain (see Lev. i. 11, and the note upon the following

2 And, behold, six men came from the way of the higher gate, which lieth toward the north, and every man a slaughter weapon in his hand; and one among them was clothed with linen, words). Six slaughter-men came like so many Levites, expecting an order from the chief sacrificing priest which beast to slay and at what time.

One man among them was clothed with linen.] That is, an angel (see ver. 4, and compare xl. 3, xliii. 6), who was to supply the place of the chief sacrificing priest. Angels, as ministering spirits always attending upon God's service, are sometimes described in the habit of priests (see Rev. xv. 5, 6). As God's ministers for the same reason have the title of angels given them, Rev. i. 20.

With a writer's inkhorn by his side:] To set a mark on those that were to be saved from the common destruction. But the LXX. translate the words "With a girdle of sapphire," or embroidery, "upon his loins;" which agrees better with what goes before, as being part of the priest's habit (Exod. xxviii. 8, and the above-cited place in the Revelation.) And this interpretation of the phrase Dr. Castel follows, in his Lexicon, in the word keseth.

They went in, and stood before the brasen altar.] To denote that the men ordained to destruction were offered up as so many sacrifices, to make an atonement to God's justice. The destruction of the wicked is with a writer's inkhorn by his side: and they went in, and stood beside the brasen altar.

3 And the glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the cherub, whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house. And he called to the man clothed with linen, which had the writer's inkhorn by his side;

4 And the LORD said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof.

5 ¶ And to the others he said in mine hearing, Go ye after him through the city, and smite: let not your eye spare, neither have ye pity:

6 Slay utterly old and young, both maids, and little children, and women: but come not near any man upon whom is the mark; and begin at my sanctuary. Then they began at the ancient men which were before the house.

elsewhere expressed by the name of a sacrifice (see xxxix. 17, Isa. xxix. 2, xxxiv. 6).

Ver. 3. The glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the cherub,—to the threshold of the house. Ezekiel saw the glory of God depart out of the inner sanctuary to the threshold, or door of the temple; to show that God would shortly forsake this temple (compare x. 4, 18, 19, xi. 23). The word cherub stands for cherubims, as x. 2. We are to distinguish this apparition of the divine glory, which had its constant residence in the temple, from that which was shown particularly to Ezekiel, i. 26, iii. 23, viii. 24, x. 1.

He called to the man] The Logos, or second person of the blessed Trinity, gave his commands to the angel, mentioned ver. 3.

Ver. 4. Set a mark upon the foreheads] Compare Rev. vii. 31. The expression alludes to the custom of the eastern nations to mark their servants in the forehead (see Grotius upon that place of the Revelation). The Vulgar Latin renders the words, "Mark with the letter thau the foreheads;" and it is very probable the ancient reading in the LXX. was τὰν Σημεῖον, though the present copies read τὸ Σημεῖον (see Huetius, Demonstr. Evang. prop. 9).

It was the general opinion of the Fathers, that the ancient Samaritan letter thau was made in the form of a cross; and St. Jerome (a very competent judge in this matter) does attest the same in his commentary on this place.

This opinion Scaliger rejects in his notes upon Eusebius's Chronicon, p. 109, but Bishop Walton defends it at large in his third Prolegomenon, p. 26, and the Dissertation upon the ancient Hebrew Sicles, in his Apparatus to the Polygot Bible, p. 26. The Ethiopic letter tawi, or tau, still retains the form of a cross; and the learned Ludolphus supposes, that the Ethiopic letters were borrowed from the Samaritans. The Coptic letter of that sound is in the same form. The modern antiquaries do all agree, that the Samaritan thau was in the form of a Greek X. But whether their authority be sufficient to outweigh that of St. Jerome, must be left to the learned to judge. It is observable that the high-priest was anointed upon the forehead, in the form of an X, as Selden assures us, lib. ii. De Success. in Pontif. cap. 9.

[The words of the learned Montfaucon (Palæograph. Græc. lib. ii. cap. 3). decide this controversy in favour of the ancients: In nummis Samaritanis, 7 And he said unto them, Defile the house, and fill the courts with the slain: go ye forth. And they went forth, and slew in the city.

8 ¶ And it came to pass, while they were slaying them, and I was left, that I fell upon my face, and cried, and said, Ah Lord God! wilt thou destroy all the residue of Israel in thy pouring out of thy fury upon Jerusalem?

9 Then said he unto me, The iniquity of the house of Israel and Judah is exceeding great, and the land is full of blood, and the city full of perverseness: for they say, The LORD hath forsaken the earth, and the LORD seeth not.

10 And as for me also, mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity, but I will recompense their way upon their head.

11 And, behold, the man clothed with linen, which had the inkhorn by his side, reported the matter, saying, I have done as thou hast commanded me.

quæ in musæis occurrunt, thau forma crucis exaratum frequentissime visitur: in quos si incidisset Scaliger, Origenis et Hieronymi testimonio refragatus non esset. He tells us, "That in several Samaritan coins, to be found in the collections of medals, the letter thau is engraven in form of a cross, which if Scaliger had seen he would not have contradicted the testimony of Origen and Jerome upon this subject."

Of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done] The irreclaimable temper of sinners that hate to be reformed, is just matter of grief to good men (see Ps. cxix. 126, Isa. lviii. 18, Jer. xiii. 17, 2 Cor. xii. 21, 2 Pet. ii. 8). And when the number of such mourners is not sufficient to divert God's judgment from a nation, they shall at least deliver their own souls (see xiv. 14).

Ver. 5. Let not your eye spare.] See v. 11.

Ver. 6. Slay utterly old and young.] This denunciation was executed by the Chaldeans (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17).

Begin at my sanctuary.] Judgment often "begins at the house of God" (1 Pet. iv. 17), because such persons sin against greater light and clearer convictions (see Amos iii. 2, Luke xii. 47).

Then they began at the ancient men which were before the house.] Who committed idolatry in the several courts and apartments belonging to the temple (see viii. 11, 12, 16).

Ver. 7. Defile the house, and fill the courts with the slain:] God declares he will own the temple no longer for his place of residence (see ver. 3), as having been polluted with idolatry (viii. 10, &c.); and therefore delivers up both the inner and outer courts belonging to it (compare x. 3, 5), to be polluted by blood and slaughter.

Ver. 8. I was left.] The prophet thought himself preserved alone out of the common destruction, the slaughter was so great; although those who had a mark set upon them were certainly preserved, as well as he.

I fell upon my face.] In a posture of supplication, to deprecate God's anger (see Numb. xii. 5, xvi. 4, 22, 45), and to beseech him not to make an utter destruction of those small remains that were left of the nation: Jerusalem being almost the only place which was not in the enemies' power (see xi. 13).

Ver. 9. The land is full of blood.] See viii. 23. The Lord hath forsaken the earth.] See viii.

CHAPTER X.

1 THEN I looked, and, behold, in the firmament that was above the head of the cherubims there appeared over them as it were a sapphire stone, as the appearance of the likeness of a throne.

2 And he spake unto the man clothed with linen, and said, Go in between the wheels, even under the cherub, and fill thine hands with coals of fire from between the cherubims, and scatter them over the city. And he went in in my sight.

3 Now the cherubims stood on the right side of the house, when the man went in; and the cloud filled the inner court.

4 Then the glory of the LORD went up from the cherub, and stood over the threshold of the house; and the house was filled with the cloud, and the court was full of the brightness of the LORD's glory.

5 And the sound of the cherubims' wings was heard even to the outer court, as the voice of the Almighty God when he speaketh.

6 And it came to pass, that when he had commanded the man clothed with linen, saying, Take fire from between the wheels, from between the cherubims; then he went in, and stood beside the wheels.

7 And one cherub stretched forth his hand from between the cherubims unto the fire that was between the cherubims, and took thereof, and put it into the hands of him that was clothed with linen: who took it, and went out.

8 And there appeared in the cherubims the form of a man's hand under their wings.

9 And when I looked, behold the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub: and the appearance of the wheels was as the colour of a beryl stone.

10 And as for their appearances, they four had one likeness, as if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel.

11 When they went, they went upon their four sides; they turned not as they went, but to the place whither they had looked they followed it; they turned not as they went.

12 And their whole body, and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and the wheels, were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had.

13 As for the wheels, it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel.

14 And every one had four faces: the first face was the face of a cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle.

CHAP. X.

ARGUMENT.—The vision of the cherubims, which the prophet saw at the beginning of the prophecy, is here renewed; from whence coals were scattered over the city to denote its destruction by fire. At the end of the chapter the divine glory is described as still removing farther from the temple.

Ver. 1. Above—the cherubims] See note on i. 26. As the appearance of the likeness of a throne.] And God sitting upon it (ibid.).

Ver. 2. Under the cherub.] Or, “between the cherubims,” as Noldius translates the phrase, numb. 3, 98, according to the explication given of it, ver. 7.

Fill thine hand with coals of fire from between the cherubims, &c.] For the coals of fire sparkled and ran up and down between the living creatures (see i. 13). This part of the vision was to represent the burning of the city. “Coals of fire” do elsewhere denote the divine vengeance (see Ps. cxx. 4, cxl. 10, Rev. viii. 5).

Ver. 3. The cherubims stood on the right side of the house.] The cherubims which were part of the vision shown to Ezekiel (see ver. 1, and the note upon ix. 3): they stood now in the inner court, on the north side of the house (see ver. 18). The Chaldee paraphrase understands it of the south side of the house; but then it is spoken with respect to those that came out of the temple (see xlvii. 1).

The cloud filled the inner court.] This bright cloud seems to be an attendant upon that glory which was represented in this vision to Ezekiel (viii. 4, x. 18: or else the word may be understood of the cloud or Shechinah, removing from the inner sanctuary, and coming towards the door of the house (see the following verse).

Ver. 4. Then the glory of the Lord went up] The words may better be translated thus, “Now (or for) the glory of the Lord was gone up,” &c. For the prophet repeats here what he had related before, ix. 3.

The house was filled with the cloud.] A bright cloud was the sign of God's presence, which first filled the tabernacle (Exod. xl. 35), afterward the temple (I Kings viii. 10), where it fixed itself upon the mercy-seat (Lev. xvi. 2). From whence God is said so often to “dwell between the cherubims.” This glory now removed from that, its residence in the inner sanctuary, and came down towards the porch of the temple, and fixed itself partly in the temple, and partly in the inner court adjoining to it, to denote God's being just about to leave the temple, and disown any relation to it (see the note on viii. 3). The Shechinah, or divine glory, is represented as a bright flame breaking out of a thick cloud (see the note on Isa. vi. 1); so both together make up a description of it.

Ver. 5.] See i. 24. The cherubims in Ezekiel's vision seem to have moved to attend upon the Shechinah, which now had taken its residence at the “threshold of the house” (compare ver. 18, 19, xi. 22).

Ver. 7. Who took it, and went out.] To signify the putting the command in execution.

Ver. 8. The form of a man's hand] See i. 8.

Ver. 9—12.] The same, in substance, which was described i. 16—18.

Ver. 11. To the place whither the head looked they followed it.] Each wheel consisted of four semicircles (see the note on i. 16, 17), in correspondence to the four heads of each animal.

Ver. 13. O wheel.] Or, move round, as some render the word. They are put in mind of continually attending upon their duty, for the wheels and living creatures were animated with the same principle of understanding and motion (see i. 19—21).

Ver. 14. Every one had four faces.] See i. 6, 10

15 And the cherubims were lifted up. This is the living creature that I saw by the river of Chebar.

16 And when the cherubims went, the wheels went by them: and when the cherubims lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth, the same wheels also turned not from beside them.

17 When they stood, these stood; and when they were lifted up, these lifted up themselves also: for the spirit of the living creature was in them.

18 Then the glory of the LORD departed from off the threshold of the house, and stood over the cherubims.

19 And the cherubims lifted up their wings,

The first face was the face of a cherub,] That is, of an ox, as appears by comparing this verse with ch. i. 10. The word cherub does originally signify an ox (see Dr. Spence, De Legib. Hebr. lib. iii. cap. 3, sect. 1). The several faces are here represented in a different order from the description given of them i. 10, of which difference this reason may be assigned. In the first chapter the prophet saw this vision "coming out of the north," and advancing southward (ver. 4), where the face of a man, being placed on the south side, was first in view. The lion, being on the east part, was towards his right hand; the ox, being placed towards the west, was on his left; and the eagle was towards the north. The interpretation is justified from the situation of the standards of the several tribes, Numb. ii. 2, 10, 18, 25, where Judah, whose standard was a lion, was placed on the east side: Reuben, whose standard was a man, was placed on the south side: Ephraim, whose standard was an ox, was placed on the west side: and Dan, whose standard was an eagle, was placed on the north side (see the note upon i. 6). Here the prophet is supposed to stand by the porch of the temple (see viii. 16), westward of the Shechinah, as that was moving out of the and mounted up from the earth in my sight: when they went out, the wheels also were beside them, and every one stood at the door of the east gate of the LORD's house; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

20 This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar; and I knew that they were the cherubims.

21 Every one had four faces apiece, and every one four wings; and the likeness of the hands of a man was under their wings.

22 And the likeness of their faces was the same faces which I saw by the river of Chebar, their appearances and themselves; they went every one straight forward.

inner court eastward (see ver. 18, 19); so the ox was first in his view, as being nearest to him.

Ver. 15.] The cherubims were lifted up.] To attend upon the divine glory wherever it went, and particularly at its removal from the temple (see ver. 5, 19).

Ver. 16, 17.] See i. 19—21.

Ver. 18.] The divine presence here makes a farther remove from the temple (see ver. 4). It now quite leaves the house itself, and settles upon the cherubims which stood in the court adjoining it (ver. 3).

Ver. 19. Lifted up their wings,] See i. 19, 26.

Every one stood at the door of the east gate of the LORD's house;] This is still a farther remove of God's presence from the temple; for the east gate was just at the entrance into the inner court before the temple (see the note on viii. 7, and compare xliii. 4).

Ver. 20. This is the living creature, &c.] See i. 22, 23, 26.

I knew that they were the cherubims.] Having often seen that form, which was carved in several places upon the walls, and doors, and utensils, of the temple (1 Kings vi. 29, 35, viii. 29, 36).

Ver. 21, 22.] See i. 8, 10, 12.

CHAPTER XI.

1 MOREOVER the spirit lifted me up, and brought me unto the east gate of the LORD's house, which looketh eastward: and behold at the door of the gate five and twenty men; among whom I saw Jaazaniah the son of Azur, and Pelatiah the son of Benaiah, princes of the people.

2 Then said he unto me, Son of man, these are the men that devise mischief, and give wicked counsel in this city:

3 Which say, It is not near; let us build houses: this city is the caldron, and we be the flesh.

4 ¶ Therefore prophesy against them, prophesy, O son of man.

5 And the Spirit of the LORD fell upon me,

CHAP. XI.

ARGUMENT.—God denounces his judgments upon those wicked men who remained in the city, and made a mock of the judgment of the prophets: he promises to favour those who are gone into captivity, and truly turn to him: intimating, likewise, that there shall be a general restoration of the nation in aftertimes. Then the divine glory leaves the city, denoting God's putting it out of his protection.

Ver. 1. The spirit lifted me up,] See iii. 12, 14, viii. 3.

Brought me unto the east gate] Where the divine glory had then placed itself (x. 19).

Five and twenty men;] The same probably that came thither to worship the sun, viii. 16.

Princes of the people.] Members of the great Sanhedrin (compare viii. 11, and see note on Jer. xxvi. 10).

Ver. 3. It is not near; let us build houses:] They were such as put the "evil day far from them" (Amos vi. 3); were not willing to believe that the judgments threatened would soon overtake them (compare xii. 27), and so securely went on in building new houses, and making such-like improvements.

This city is the caldron, and we be the flesh.] Jeremiah had foretold the destruction of Jerusalem, under the figure of a "seething caldron," Jer. i. 13, and Ezekiel himself uses the same metaphor, xxiv. 3, 4, &c. So these infidels made use of the same expresand said unto me, Speak; Thus saith the LORD; Thus have ye said, O house of Israel: for I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them.

6 Ye have multiplied your slain in this city, and ye have filled the streets thereof with the slain.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Your slain whom ye have laid in the midst of it, they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron: but I will bring you forth out of the midst of it.

8 Ye have feared the sword; and I will bring a sword upon you, saith the Lord God.

9 And I will bring you out of the midst thereof, and deliver you into the hands of strangers, and will execute judgments among you.

10 Ye shall fall by the sword; I will judge you in the border of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

11 This city shall not be your caldron, neither shall ye be the flesh in the midst thereof; but I will judge you in the border of Israel:

12 And ye shall know that I am the LORD: for ye have not walked in my statutes, neither executed my judgments, but have done after the manners of the heathen that are round about you.

sion on purpose to deride the menaces of the prophets; as if they had said, If this city be a caldron, we had rather take our chance of being consumed in it, than leave our fine houses and other accommodations, and run the risk of war or captivity (compare ver. 7, 8, 11).

Ver. 5. The Spirit—fell upon me,] See note on iii. 24.

Ver. 6. Ye have multiplied your slain] See xxii. 3, 4.

Ver. 7. Your slain—they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron:] The comparing of the city to a caldron may fitly be applied to the slain, whom you have butchered in your streets, and cut in pieces in the midst of it, just as pieces of flesh prepared for the caldron (see xxiv. 6, and compare Mic. iii. 3).

I will bring you forth out of the midst] You shall not die there, but I will reserve you for another punishment (see ver. 9, 11).

Ver. 9, 10.] Ye shall be carried out of the city by the Chaldeans, and afterward be slain by them in the land of Hamath (see Jer. xxxix. 6, 2 Kings xxv. 19—21). Which is called the “entrance of Hamath,” 1 Kings viii. 65, 2 Kings xiv. 25, because it was just upon the borders of Judea.

Ver. 12. But have done after the manners of the heathen] Have defiled yourselves with their idolatries (see viii. 10, 14, 16).

Ver. 13.] The prophet thought this an earnest of the common destruction which was coming upon all the inhabitants of the city, and thereupon he earnestly deprecated so severe a judgment (see ix. 8).

Ver. 15. The men of thy kindred,] Those of thy kindred and acquaintance who are carried away captive with thee.

Unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the Lord:] The Jews who were left in their own country, thought themselves more in God's favour than those who were carried away captive: whom they looked upon as outcasts, and such as had no right either to the privileges of Jews, or the land of Judea (see note on Jer. xxiv. 5).

13 ¶ And it came to pass, when I prophesied, that Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died. Then fell I down upon my face, and cried with a loud voice, and said, Ah Lord God! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?

14 Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

15 Son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the LORD: unto us is this land given in possession.

16 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come.

17 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel.

18 And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof and all the abominations thereof from thence.

19 And I will give them one heart, and I will

Ver. 16. Yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary:] The Jews were under God's immediate protection, expressed in scripture by “dwelling under the shadow of his wings.” The phrase alluding to the wings of the cherubims covering the mercy-seat, and signifying God's presence among them, and protection over his people. Therefore, to comfort those who were under a state of exile and captivity, God tells them, that although they were deprived of the benefit of attending upon his sanctuary, and being placed under that protection, his presence there did import, yet he would supply that by being a constant refuge and defence to them in the countries where they were scattered (compare Ps. xxxi. 20, xci. 1, Isa. viii. 14).

Ver. 17. I will even gather you from the people,] This may be in some degree fulfilled in those that returned from captivity, but the utmost completion of this and the following verses must be expected at the general restoration of the Jewish nation (see the following notes, and compare xx. 4, xxviii. 25, xxxiv. 13, xxxvi. 24).

Ver. 18. They shall take away all the detestable things] They shall live pure from all the pollutions of idolatry, wherewith the land had been formerly defiled (see xxxvii. 23).

Ver. 19. I will give them one heart,] They shall serve me “with one consent” (Zeph. iii. 9), and not be distracted by the several idolatrous worship which were set up in opposition to God's true worship, when the ten tribes separated themselves from Judah (compare Ps. lxxxvi. 11, Jer. xxxii. 39, Hos. x. 2).

I will put a new spirit within you;] These promises chiefly relate to the general conversion of the Jews: when God shall pour out upon them the “spirit of grace,” in order to their conversion, Zech. xii. 10 (compare xxxvi. 26, 27, and see the notes upon Jer. xxiv. 7, xxxi. 33, 34, xxxii. 39). Conversion is commonly spoken of in scripture as if it were a new creation, because of the new dispositions and powers which accompany it (see Ps. li. 10, 2 Cor. v. 17, Gal. vi. 15, and the note upon xviii. 31).

put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh:

20 That they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

21 But as for them whose heart walketh after the heart of their detestable things and their abominations, I will recompense their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord God.

22 ¶ Then did the cherubims lift up their

I will take the stony heart out of their flesh,] Men's insensibility as to religious matters, is often ascribed to the hardness of their hearts, being such as will receive no impression. Here God promises to give them teachable dispositions, and to take away "the veil from their heart," as St. Paul expresses it, speaking of this subject, 2 Cor. iii. 16. The same temper being indifferently expressed, either by blindness, or hardness of heart.

Ver. 20. They shall be my people,] They shall never apostatize any more from me to serve idols, but shall constantly adhere to my worship; and I will own them as my people, those who are under my immediate protection (compare xiv. 11, xxxvi. 28, xxxviii. 27, Jer. xxx. 22).

Ver. 21. After the heart of their detestable things] The prophet speaketh of idols, called here their "detestable things," as ver. 18, the prophet mentions the "heart of their detestable things," as if their idols had an understanding and appetites, because their worshippers applied to them as such, and because evil spirits, who were worshipped in and by them, were pleased with the devotions in that manner paid to them.

wings, and the wheels beside them; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

23 And the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side of the city.

24 ¶ Afterwards the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea, to them of the captivity. So the vision that I had seen went up from me.

25 Then I spake unto them of the captivity all the things that the Lord had shewed me.

I will recompense their way upon their own heads,] See ver. 9, 10, and the notes upon xx. 38.

Ver. 22.] See i. 19, 26, x. 19.

Ver. 23. The glory of the Lord went up from—the city,] God's presence was before departed from the temple (x. 19), and now it quite left the city, to signify that he would acknowledge no longer his relation to either, but deliver them up to be profaned by heathens.

And stood upon the mountain] That is, the mount of Olives; from whence it is described returning, when God shall again make the city and temple the seat of his presence (see xliii. 2, Zech. xiv. 4).

Ver. 24. Afterwards the spirit took me up, &c.] See the notes on viii. 3.

And brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea,] Returned me back into Chaldea, in the same manner as it carried me away from thence, being still under the power of a divine ecstasy, and the immediate influences of God's Spirit.

Ver. 25.] See note on viii. 2.

CHAPTER XII.

1 THE word of the LORD also came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house, which have eyes to see, and see not; they have ears to hear, and hear not: for they are a rebellious house.

CHAP. XII.

ARGUMENT.—Ezekiel being commanded to remove his household-stuff, and to take his sustenance with quaking and trembling, is a type of the captivity both of king and people, and of the consternation which their calamities will bring upon them; he afterward reproves the infidelity of those who disbelieved his prophecies.

Ver. 2. Son of man,] See ii. 1.

Thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house,] Sec. ii. 3, 6, 7. The prophet applies himself to those of the captivity among whom he dwelt. They saw Jerusalem still inhabited, and under the government of its own king. And as they that were left at home insulted over the exiles (see xi. 15); so these repined at their own ill fortune, and thought those who dwelt at Jerusalem in a much better condition than themselves. Therefore the following parables are designed to show, that they who are left behind to endure the miseries of a siege, and the insults of a conqueror, will be in the worse condition of the two.

VOL. III.—68

3 Therefore, thou son of man, prepare thee stuff for removing, and remove by day in their sight; and thou shalt remove from thy place to another place in their sight: it may be they will consider, though they be a rebellious house.

4 Then shalt thou bring forth thy stuff by day

St. Jerome, in his preface to Ezekiel, observes, this was the temper of those captives to whom Ezekiel prophesied; "Iis, qui cum eo captivi fuerant, prophetavit, pœnitentibus quod ad Jeremiæ vaticinium se ultro adversariis tradidissent, et viderent adhuc urbem Hierosolymam stare, quam ille casuram esse prædixerat."

Which have eyes—and see not;] Who will not make use of that sense and understanding that God hath given them (see Isa. vi. 9, Jer. v. 21).

Ver. 3. Prepare thee stuff for removing,] Get all thy goods together, and pack them up as those do that move from one house to another. Do this openly and at noon-day, that they may all see and take notice of it. The prophets often prophesied by signs, as being of greater force and efficacy than words (see iv. 1).

Ver. 4. Thou shalt go forth at even] As men do that would go off by stealth: to signify also that Zedekiah and his retinue should escape out of the city by night (2 Kings xxv. 4).

Ver. 5.] To show that the king shall make his escape by the same means (see ver. 12).

in their sight, as stuff for removing: and thou shalt go forth at even in their sight, as they that go forth into captivity.

5 Dig thou through the wall in their sight, and carry out thereby.

6 In their sight shalt thou bear it upon thy shoulders, and carry it forth in the twilight: thou shalt cover thy face, that thou see not the ground: for I have set thee for a sign unto the house of Israel.

7 And I did so as I was commanded: I brought forth my stuff by day, as stuff for captivity, and in the even I digged through the wall with mine hand; I brought it forth in the twilight, and I bare it upon my shoulder in their sight.

8 ¶ And in the morning came the word of the LORD unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, hath not the house of Israel, the rebellious house, said unto thee, What doest thou?

10 Say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; This burden concerneth the prince in Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel that are among them.

11 Say, I am your sign: like as I have done, so shall it be done unto them: they shall remove and go into captivity.

12 And the prince that is among them shall bear upon his shoulder in the twilight, and shall go forth: they shall dig through the wall to carry out thereby: he shall cover his face, that he see not the ground with his eyes.

13 My net also will I spread upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare: and I will bring him to Babylon to the land of the Chaldeans; yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there.

14 And I will scatter toward every wind all that are about him to help him, and all his bands; and I will draw out the sword after them.

15 And they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall scatter them among the nations, and disperse them in the countries.

16 But I will leave a few men of them from the sword, from the famine, and from the pestilence; that they may declare all their abominations among the heathen whither they come; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

17 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

18 Son of man, eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and with carefulness;

19 And say unto the people of the land, Thus saith the Lord God of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and of the land of Israel: They shall eat their bread with carefulness, and drink their water with astonishment, that her land may be desolate from all that is therein, because of the violence of all them that dwell therein.

20 And the cities that are inhabited shall be laid waste, and the land shall be desolate; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

21 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

22 Son of man, What is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth?

23 Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord God; I will make this proverb to cease, and Ibid. and ver. 6.] This which the prophet was commanded to carry out in the twilight, was something different from the goods he removed in the day-time (see ver. 4, 7), and therefore must mean necessary provision for his present subsistence.

Thou shalt cover thy face,] As Zedekiah shall do; that he might not be discovered.

I have set thee for a sign] See ver. 12, and iv. 3.

Ver. 9.] They inquire, by way of derision and contempt, what these signs mean (compare ii. 5, xvii. 12, xx. 49, xxiv. 19).

Ver. 10. The prince] King Zedekiah (see vii. 27).

Ver. 12. The prince—shall bear upon his shoulder in the twilight.] He shall be glad to carry what he can with him in the dusk of the evening, and his retinue shall make a private way to get out of the city, that they may not be discovered (see Jer. xxxix. 4).

He shall cover his face,] That nobody may know or discover him, till he is got beyond his enemies' camp.

Ver. 13. My net also will I spread upon him,] Though he thinks to escape, yet I will bring his enemies upon him, who shall encompass him, and stop his flight, as when a wild beast is entangled in a net (2 Kings xxv. 5—7, and compare xvii. 20, xix. 8, xxxii. 3 of this prophecy).

Yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there.] Having his eyes put out before he came thither (ibid.). Josephus tells us (Antiq. lib. xi. cap. 10), that Zedekiah thought this prophecy inconsistent with that of Jeremiah (xxxiv. 3), "That Zedekiah's eyes should see the eyes of the king of Babylon;" and therefore believed neither. But they both actually came to pass, as the sacred story assures us: the king of Babylon passing sentence upon him at Riblah, as one that had broken the oath and covenant he had made with him, and then putting out his eyes, and carrying him to Babylon.

Ver. 14. I will scatter toward every wind all that are about him] See 2 Kings xxv. 4, 5.

I will draw out the sword] See note upon v. 12.

Ver. 16. That they may declare all their abominations among the heathen] And there justify my proceedings against them (see vi. 8—10).

Ver. 18.] Show all the signs of anxiety and consternation whenever thou takest thy common sustenance.

Ver. 19. Thus saith the Lord God of—Jerusalem,] This was designed to inform the captives that they were not in a worse condition than those that were left behind in Judea (see note on ver. 2).

They shall eat their bread, &c.] See iv. 16, 17.

Ver. 20. That I am the Lord.] See vi. 7.

Ver. 22. In the land of Israel,] See note on vii. 2.

The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth?] Words of the same import with those at ver. 27, and xi. 3. Both of them the words of infidels, who turn the grace of God into wantonness, and take encouragement from his patience and long-suffering to despise his threatenings, as if they would never be fulfilled (compare Isa. v. 19, Amos vi. 18, 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4).

Ver. 23. The days are at hand,] The same is elsewhere expressed, by "the day of the Lord is at hand" they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel; but say unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision.

24 For there shall be no more any vain vision nor flattering divination within the house of Israel.

25 For I am the Lord: I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass; it shall be no more prolonged: for in your days, O rebellious house, will I say the word, and will perform it, saith the Lord God.

(see Joel ii. 1, Zeph. i. 14): the time when God will "show his wrath, and make his power and justice known to the world" (see ver. 25).

Ver. 24. There shall be no more any vain vision] The false prophets, who foretold peace and safety, shall see their prophecies so confuted by the events quite contrary to what they foretold, that they will

26 ¶ Again the word of the Lord came to me, saying,

27 Son of man, behold, they of the house of Israel say, The vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off.

never pretend any more to publish new prophecies (compare xiii. 23).

Ver. 25. It shall be no more prolonged:] My threatenings shall come to pass in your own days, and ye shall have ocular demonstration of their truth.

Ver. 27, 28.] See ver. 22, 23, 25.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 AND the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy against the prophets of Israel that prophesy, and say thou unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts, Hear ye the word of the Lord;

3 Thus saith the Lord God; Woe unto the foolish prophets, that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing!

4 O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts.

5. Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel to stand in the battle in the day of the Lord.

6 They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The Lord saith: and the Lord hath not sent them; and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word.

7 Have ye not seen a vain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, whereas ye say, The Lord saith it; albeit I have not spoken?

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore, behold, I am against you, saith the Lord God.

CHAP. XIII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet denounces God's judgments against false prophets who made a gain of their profession, and encouraged men to go on in their sins, by giving them false visions of peace and security; and at the same time disheartened the truly pious, and discouraged them from continuing in the ways of holiness.

Ver. 2. Say thou unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts,] The true prophets often denounce God's judgments against the false ones: laying to their charge many misdemeanors in their private conversation, and upbraiding them for unfaithfulness in the office they undertook of guiding and directing men's consciences (see xxii. 25, 28, Jer. vi. 14, xxiii. 11, &c. xxviii. 14, xxix. 8, 22, 23, Mic. iii. 5).

Ver. 4. The foxes in the deserts.] "Deceitful workers," as the apostle styles such persons, 2 Cor. xi. 13, who craftily insinuate false doctrines into weak and unstable minds; and withal hungry and ravenous, and such as greedily catch at any appearance of advantage (compare xxii. 25).

Ver. 5. Ye have not gone up into the gaps,] Or, "stood in the gap," or breach, as it is expressed xxii. 30, Ps. cvi. 23. Which place alludes to the intercession which Moses made for the Israelites, whereby he withheld God's hand, as it were, when it was just stretched out to take vengeance upon the people for their heinous sin in making the golden calf (see Exod. xxxii. 10, 11).

The phrase is taken from those that put a stop to the enemy when he is just entering in at a breach. In like manner, it was the office and duty of those prophets, if they had truly been what they pretended by their prayers and intercessions, to put a stop to God's vengeance when it was just ready to be poured out upon a sinful people.

Neither made up the hedge] Or, "made up a wall," as the Vulgar Latin translates it. Another expression taken from those that are besieged, and if a breach be made in a wall, presently make it up, or build up a new one within it: to prevent the enemy from entering, and becoming masters of the city. The word geder, fence, signifies any other sort of fortification (see Ps. lxii. 3, lxxxix. 40).

To stand in the battle in the day of the Lord.] When God shall come like a leader, or general, at the head of his army, i. e. his judgments, to execute vengeance upon his enemies (compare Jer. xxv. 30, Joel ii. 11).

Ver. 6. They have seen vanity and lying divination,] Concerning peace and prosperity (see ver. 10, and xii. 23, 24).

They have made others to hope that they would confirm the word.] Or, "that the word should be confirmed;" the transitive verb being often taken in an impersonal sense (see the note on Isa. xlv. 18). Their speaking with so much assurance made others confidently expect that the event should answer their predictions; and sometimes even imposed upon the true prophets for a time; as Hananiah did upon Jeremiah (see Jer. xxviii. 6).

Ver. 9. They shall not be in the assembly of my people.] They shall not be members of the church here, 9 And mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity, and that divine lies: they shall not be in the assembly of my people, neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel; neither shall they enter into the land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

10 ¶ Because, even because they have seduced my people, saying, Peace; and there was no peace; and one built up a wall, and, lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar:

11 Say unto them that daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall: there shall be an overflowing shower; and ye, O great hailstones, shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it.

12 Lo, when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it?

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury; and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury to consume it.

14 So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar, and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall, and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

15 Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered mortar, and will say unto you, The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it;

16 To wit, the prophets of Israel which prophesy concerning Jerusalem, and which see visions of peace for her, and there is no peace, saith the Lord God.

17 ¶ Likewise, thou son of man, set thy face against the daughters of thy people, which prophesy out of their own heart; and prophesy thou against them.

18 And say, Thus saith the Lord God: Woe

nor partake of the communion of saints in heaven. The Hebrew word sod, signifies a secret assembly or privy-council; such as are acquainted with the most inward thoughts and secret intent of a prince; and from thence it is applied to God's chosen people, those that are acquainted with the whole counsel of God, and whom he instructs by the secret directions of his Holy Spirit (see Ps. xxv. 14, Jer. xxiii. 18). So the prophet tells these men that pretended to know so much of the secrets of the Almighty, that they should never be of the number of those favorites of heaven, to whom God will reveal himself and his counsels.

Neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel,] The sense is much the same with that of the foregoing sentence; the expression being an allusion to the registers that used to be kept of the members of any city or corporation, the privileges of which society none can pretend to, but they whose names are entered into such registers (compare Exod. xxxii. 32, Ps. xlix. 28, Ezra ii. 62, Luke v. 20, Phil. iv. 2, Heb. xii. 23). It may be, these false prophets foretold a speedy return to the exiles; whereupon God tells them that they shall never live to see it, nor shall their names be entered into the register of those that return home (see Neh. vii. 5).

Neither shall they enter into the land of Israel;] They shall never see their own country again, nor shall they have a share among the true Israelites (see the note on xx. 38).

Ver. 10 They have seduced my people, saying, Peace; and there was no peace;] They have deceived my people, by telling them that none of those judgments should overtake them, which Jeremy and the other true prophets threatened them with, and they have spoken peace to men's consciences upon false grounds and principles (see Jer. iv. 10, vi. 14, xxxiii. 14, 17).

And one built up a wall, and, lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar:] Instead of providing such a fence and bulwark, as might secure the people against the judgments that threaten them (see ver. 5), they have made a slight wall without any mortar, or cement, to bind and strengthen it; that is, they have applied slight and palliating remedies to public calamities, which will never give true peace to men's consciences, nor stand them in any stead, when God visits for their iniquities. Just as if an unskilful builder should undertake to set up a wall, and his fellow-workmen should daub it with untempered mortar (see ver. 11, 12, 16).

Ver. 11.] God's judgments are often compared to storms and tempests, the artillery of heaven (see xxxviii. 22, Job xxvii. 10, Ps. xi. 6, xviii. 13, 14). Especially when he executes his judgments by a victorious army (see Isa. xxix. 6, xxxviii. 2, Jer. iv. 13, compare Eccles. xlix. 9).

Ver. 13.] Under these metaphors is probably foretold the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldean army. Thus the Chaldee paraphrase expounds it: "I will bring a mighty king with the force of a whirlwind, and destroying people as it were an overflowing storm, and powerful princes like great hailstones."

Ver. 14. So will I break down the wall, &c.] The Chaldee explains this verse to the same sense: "I will destroy the city wherein ye have uttered these false prophecies;" which exposition is confirmed by the following words, "and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof; that is, you shall be destroyed in the same common calamity."

Ye shall know that I am the Lord.] See vi. 7.

Ver. 15. The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it;] The Chaldee expounds it, "The city is no more, nor the false prophets."

Ver. 16. See visions of peace] See Jer. vi. 10, viii. 11.

Ver. 17. Set thy face against the daughters of thy people, which prophesy] Direct thy discourse against those she-pretenders to prophesy (compare xx. 46, xxi. 2). God did sometimes bestow the gift of prophecy upon women (see Exod. xv. 20, Judg. iv. 4, 2 Kings xxii. 14). This encouraged others of that sex to pretend the same gift (compare Rev. ii. 20).

Ver. 18. Woe to the women that sew pillows to all armholes, &c.] The learned Gataker, in Cinnus, p. 200, thinks the words may more properly be rendered, "That put (or fasten) pillows to all armholes;" so he understands the same word, Job xvi. 15, "I have put sackcloth upon my skin." As the prophet compares the deceitful practices of the false prophets to the daubing of a wall, so he represents the artifices of these female seducers, by sewing pillows under their hearers' elbows, that they might rest securely in their evil ways; and by covering their faces with veils or kerchiefs, or ornaments proper to women, thereby to keep them in blindness and ignorance.

to the women that sew pillows to all armholes, and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature to hunt souls! Will ye hunt the souls of my people, and will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?

19 And will ye pollute me among my people for handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread, to slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live, by your lying to my people that hear your lies?

20 Wherefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against your pillows, wherewith ye there hunt the souls to make them fly, and I will tear them from your arms, and will let the souls

Upon the head of every stature] “Of every age,” both great and small: so the Greek word ἡλικία, used by the LXX. here, signifies age as well as stature (see Dr. Hammond upon Matt. vi. 27).

To hunt souls] That they may drive them into those nets and snares that they have laid for them, and make them their prey (compare xxv. 25, Mic. ii. 7, 2 Pet. ii. 14).

Will ye save the souls alive that come unto you? Or, “will ye promise life unto those that come to you?” (see ver. 19, 22) that is, will ye make a prey of men’s souls, by deluding them with fair hopes and promises?

Ver. 19. Will ye pollute me among my people] Will ye profane my name, by making use of it to give credit to your own dreams and lies (see ver. 7)?

For handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread,] For the meanest reward (see Prov. xxviii. 21). So greedy are they of making gain to themselves (compare xxii. 25, Mic. iii. 5).

To slay the souls that should not die,] Thus they threatened death to those that yielded themselves to the Chaldeans in Jeconiah’s captivity; and yet God preserved them alive (see Jer. xxix. 5, 6). And they have encouraged those that remain at Jerusalem with promises of peace and safety, who shall go, even the souls that ye hunt to make them fly.

21 Your kerchiefs also will I tear, and deliver my people out of your hand, and they shall be no more in your hand to be hunted; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

22 Because with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life:

23 Therefore ye shall see no more vanity, nor divine divinations: for I will deliver my people out of your hand: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

all be destroyed (see v. 12). Or the words may be meant in general of discouraging the godly, and confirming the wicked in their evil ways (see ver. 22, and compare Jer. xxiii. 14, 17).

To slay and to make alive, signify here to promise men life, or threaten them with death (see ver. 22). So the prophet saith he “came to destroy the city,” xliii. 3, that is, to pronounce the sentence of destruction upon it. And the priest is said to make the leper unclean, Lev. xiii. 3, that is, to “pronounce him unclean,” as our translation rightly expresses the sense.

Ver. 20. Wherewith ye there hunt the souls to make them fly,] To make them run into those nets and snares that you have laid for them (see ver. 18). The metaphor is continued from the manner of hunting and pursuing living creatures, by that means to drive them into the toils prepared for them.

I will tear them from your arms,] I will make your cheats and impostures appear so evidently, that nobody shall be in danger of being seduced by you any more (see ver. 23).

Ver. 22.] As you have deluded the wicked with vain hopes (see ver. 10), so you have disheartened the righteous with groundless fears (ver. 19, and compare xxii. 25).

CHAPTER XIV.

1 THEN came certain of the elders of Israel unto me, and sat before me.

2 And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, these men have set up their idols in their heart, and put the stumbling-block of their iniquity before their face: should I be enquired of at all by them?

4 Therefore speak unto them, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet; I the Lord will answer him that cometh according to the multitude of his idols;

5 That I may take the house of Israel in their own heart, because they are all estranged from me through their idols.

CHAP. XIV.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet denounces God’s judgments against those hypocrites who pretended to be his worshippers, and at the same time secretly practised idolatry. He afterward sets forth God’s mercy towards the Jews, in sparing a few of that sinful nation, and those no better than the rest that were destroyed, when he might in justice have involved all of them in one common destruction.

Ver. 1. Certain of the elders] See viii. 1.

Ver. 3. These men have set up their idols in their heart, and—before their face,] They are not only idolaters in their heart, but they have actually set up idols and worshipped them; and thereby have fallen into that great sin of deserting me and my worship (see vii. 19).

Should I be enquired of at all by them?] Though they have the impudence to come to ask counsel of God (see vii. 26), they shall not receive a favourable answer, but such a one as their hypocrisy deserves (see the following verse, and compare xxxvi. 37).

Ver. 5.] That I may deal with them according to their deserts, and thereby convince them that I am a searcher of hearts, and know the inward and secret wickedness of their thoughts.

6 ¶ Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; Repent, and turn yourselves from your idols; and turn away your faces from all your abominations.

7 For every one of the house of Israel, or of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel, which separateth himself from me, and setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to a prophet to enquire of him concerning me; I the Lord will answer him by myself:

8 And I will set my face against that man, and will make him a sign and a proverb, and I will cut him off from the midst of my people; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

9 And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel.

10 And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity: the punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him;

Ver. 6. From all your abominations.] Your idolatries (see viii. 10, xvi. 2).

Ver. 7. Of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel.] "The stranger within thy gates," as it is expressed in the fourth commandment. These, though they were not all of them circumcised, yet devoted themselves to the service of the one true God, for which reason they are styled "the worshippers of God," Acts xvi. 14, xviii. 7.

Which separateth himself from me,] Who turns apostate from me and my service; for men cannot serve God and idols; he having declared himself a jealous God, that will not admit any rival in his worship (see Josh. xxiv. 19).

I the Lord will answer him by myself:] I will punish him immediately by my own hands (see the following verse).

Ver. 8. I will set my face against that man,] I will make him a mark of mine indignation (see xv. 7, Jer. xlv. 11).

Will make him a sign and a proverb,] I will make him a signal and remarkable instance of my vengeance (compare Numb. xxvi. 10, Deut. xxviii. 38).

And will cut him off] By a sudden death, attended with extraordinary circumstances (see Lev. xx. 6, 17, 18).

Ver. 9. If the prophet be deceived] This is to be understood of the false prophets, whose practices are reproved throughout the whole foregoing chapter.

I have deceived that prophet,] I have suffered him to be deceived (see the note on Isa. lxiii. 17). I have given him up to "strong delusions," as a just judgment upon him for going after idols, and setting up false pretences to inspiration (see xiii. 2, 7, 23, 1 Kings xxii. 23, Jer. iv. 10, and compare 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12). Or the words may be explained to this sense; I will disappoint the hopes and expectations of those prophets, who seduce my people by speaking peace to them (xiii. 10), for I will bring upon them those evils, which they with great assurance have declared should never come to pass. To this purpose it follows, "I will stretch out my hand upon him," &c. i. e. I will send such a judgment upon him, as I inflicted upon Hananiah the false prophet, Jer. xxviii. 16, 17.

11 That the house of Israel may go no more astray from me, neither be polluted any more with all their transgressions; but that they may be my people, and I may be their God, saith the Lord God.

12 ¶ The word of the Lord came again to me, saying,

13 Son of man, when the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously, then will I stretch out mine hand upon it, and will break the staff of the bread thereof, and will send famine upon it, and will cut off man and beast from it:

14 Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ If I cause noisome beasts to pass through the land, and they spoil it, so that it be desolate, that no man pass through because of the beasts:

16 Though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters; they only shall be delivered, but the land shall be desolate.

17 ¶ Or if I bring a sword upon that land, and say, Sword, go through the land; so that I cut off man and beast from it:

Ver. 10.] Because both parties are equally guilty of going astray from me, and seeking after idols, and other unlawful means of divination (see ver. 11, and compare 2 Kings i. 3, 4).

Ver. 11. That—Israel may go no more astray] The judgments I inflict upon the false prophets, and those that consult them, shall be an instruction to my people to keep close to me and to my worship, and not hanker after the idolatrous practices of the neighbouring nations.

But that they may be my people,] See xi. 20.

Ver. 13. When the land, &c.] Or, "When a land." The design of this and the following verses is to show that when the inhabitants of a land have filled up the measure of their iniquities, and God ariseth to execute judgment upon them, the few righteous that are left among them shall not be able by their prayers and intercessions to deliver the nation from the judgments decreed against it. "They shall but deliver their own souls;" as we see in the case of Sodom, where there was no righteous but Lot and his family; those just persons saved themselves, but no intercession could avail to save the city (see the following verse).

Break the staff of the bread] See iv. 16.

Ver. 14. Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it,] All of them persons eminent for their piety: Noah and his family were saved out of the universal deluge, and obtained a promise from God that he would never destroy the world so again, Gen. viii. 21. Daniel interceded with God for the whole nation of the Jews, and obtained a promise of their restoration, Dan. ix. Job was appointed by God to make intercession for his three friends, Job xlii. 8. But when God's irreversible decree is gone out against a nation, even the prayers of such men will be ineffectual towards their deliverance (compare Jer. xv. 1).

We may observe how early the fame of Daniel's piety was spread over Chaldea, who was at this time not above thirty years of age; it being but thirteen years ago since he was carried captive to Babylon, when he was very young (see Dan. i. 1, 4, &c.)

Ver. 15. If I cause noisome beasts] See v. 17.

Ver. 17. If I bring a sword upon that land,] If I deliver it into the hands of a cruel and bloody ene-

18 Though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters, but they only shall be delivered themselves.

19 ¶ Or if I send a pestilence into that land, and pour out my fury upon it in blood, to cut off from it man and beast:

20 Though Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, as I live, saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter; they shall but deliver their own souls by their righteousness.

21 For thus saith the Lord God; How much more when I send my four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the noisome beast, and the pestilence, to cut off from it man and beast?

22 ¶ Yet, behold, therein shall be left a remnant that shall be brought forth, both sons and daughters: behold, they shall come forth unto you, and ye shall see their way and their doings: and ye shall be comforted concerning the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, even concerning all that I have brought upon it.

23 And they shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings: and ye shall know that I have not done without cause all that I have done in it, saith the Lord God.

my (see v. 12, vii. 15, xxi. 9, 16). The conqueror's sword is often called the "sword of the Lord," in the prophets: because they are the executioners of God's judgments (see Isa. x. 15, Jer. xxv. 9, xlvii. 6).

Sword, go through the land;] So God is said "to call for a sword upon Gog," xxxviii. 21.

So that I cut off man and beast] The men are destroyed by the sword, and the cattle are driven away by the enemy; or else consumed by pestilence arising from the air's being corrupted through the stench of dead bodies (compare xxv. 13, xxix. 8, xxxii. 13, Hos. iv. 3, Zeph. i. 3).

Ver. 19. Or if I send a pestilence] See v. 12.

And pour out my fury upon it in blood,] With great destruction of men's lives, as the Chaldee paraphrase explains it (compare xxxviii. 22).

Ver. 21. How much more [should there be an utter destruction] when I send my four sore judgments] See v. 12, vi. 12, xii. 16, Jer. xv. 2. The particles aph ki, are very properly translated here, "How much more:" in which sense they are plainly taken, 2 Sam. iv. 11, Prov. xi. 31, xxi. 15.

The noisome beast,] See v. 17, xxxiii. 27.

Ver. 22. Therein shall be left a remnant that shall be brought forth,] Notwithstanding these four sore judgments, some shall escape, and be brought into Chaldea, to be your companions in captivity (compare vi. 8, Jer. lii. 29, 30).

Both sons and daughters:] See ver. 16, 18, 20, of this chapter.

Ye shall see their way and their doings:] Their afflictions shall bring them to a due sense of their former iniquities, and they shall humbly confess their own sins, and the sins of those who were consumed in the destruction of the city, whereby it will appear that I have not punished them beyond what their sins have deserved (see vi. 9, xx. 43, xxxvi. 31).

Ye shall be comforted concerning the evil] This will compose your minds, and make you give glory to God, and acknowledge his judgments to be righteous, though they touch you very nearly in the destruction of your friends and country.

Ver. 23.] See note on vi. 10.

CHAPTER XV.

1 AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, What is the vine tree more than any tree, or than a branch which is among the trees of the forest?

3 Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon?

4 Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel; the fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the

CHAP. XV.

ARGUMENT.—Under the parable of a vine, which when it is barren, is unfit for any use, is shown the utter rejection of Jerusalem.

Ver. 2. Or than a branch which is among the trees of the forest] The latter part of the verse may be better translated thus, "If it be as a branch which is among the trees of the forest;" i. e. if it prove unfruitful (see Dr. Lightfoot upon John xv. 6). The Jewish church is often compared to a vine in the sacred writers (see Isa. v. 1, Ps. lxxx. 8, &c.).

Ver. 3. Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work?] The wood of a vine is of no use for building, or making any utensil. The works of that kind which Pliny takes notice of, Nat. Hist. lib. xiv. cap. 1, are rather to be looked upon as rarities, than as things of common use.

Ver. 4. It is cast into the fire for fuel] The only use that dead vine-branches can be put to (see John xv. 6).

The fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midst of it is burned.] A fit representation of the present state of Judea, when both its extremities were consumed by the ravages of a foreign enemy, and the midst of it, where the capital city stood, is ready to be destroyed: just as the fire still spreads towards the middle part of a stick, when once both ends are lighted.

Ver. 7. They shall go out from one fire, and an-

CHAPTER XVI.

1 AGAIN the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, cause Jerusalem to know her abominations,

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God unto Jerusalem; Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite.

4 And as for thy nativity, in the day thou wast born thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed in water to supple thee; thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all.

5 None eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee; but thou wast east out in the open field, to the loathing of thy person, in the day that thou wast born.

6 ¶ And when I passed by thee, and saw thee polluted in thine own blood, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live; yea, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live.

7 I have caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field, and thou hast increased and waxen great, and thou art come to excellent ornaments: thy breasts are fashioned, and thine hair is grown, whereas thou wast naked and bare.

8 Now when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was the time of love; and I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness: yea, I swore unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine.

9 Then washed I thee with water; yea, I thoroughly washed away thy blood from thee, and I anointed thee with oil.

10 I clothed thee also with brodered work, and shod thee with badgers' skin, and I girded

CHAP. XVI.

ARGUMENT.—God sets forth his free love towards the church and nation of the Jews, represented here by Jerusalem, under the emblem of a person that should take up an exposed infant, breed her up, and afterward marry her. He then upbraids their monstrous ingratitude in departing from his worship, and being polluted with heathenish idolatries; which the prophet illustrates by the resemblance of a lewd woman, that proves false to a kind and indulgent husband. For which God threatens to deal with her as abused husbands used to deal with wives convicted of idolatry. Notwithstanding all these provocations, he promises in the end to show them mercy. The metaphor of describing idolatry as spiritual adultery, often made use of in the prophets, is here, and in the twenty-third chapter, pursued with great force, and in a lively way of representation: both chapters being a remarkable instance of that vehemence of expression, which the rhetoricians call by the name of Διωότις.

Ver. 1. Cause Jerusalem to know her abominations.] This might probably be done by way of letter, as Jeremiah signified the will of God to the captives at Babylon (Jer. xxix. 1). God particularly upbraids Jerusalem for her iniquities, because it was the place he had chosen for his peculiar residence, and yet the inhabitants had defiled that very place, nay, and the temple itself, with idolatry; the sin particularly denoted by the word abomination (see viii. 10, xiv. 6).

Ver. 3. Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan.] As your fathers sojourned in the land of Canaan, before they came to have any right or property in it; so you, their posterity, have all along resembled the manners of Canaan, more than those of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, your ancestors.

Thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite.] Those are said to be our parents in the scripture dialect, whose manners we resemble (see ver. 45, of this chapter; Matt. iii. 7, John viii. 44). There is an expression of the same import in the History of Susannah, ver. 56, that seems to be copied from this text, "O thou seed of Canaan, and not of Judah, beauty hath deceived thee, and lust hath perverted thy heart."

Ver. 4, 5.] The prophet describes the forlorn condition of the Israelites in Egypt under the similitude of a new-born infant, exposed in its native filthiness, without any friend to pity his condition, or take the least care of it.

Ver. 6. I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, Live:] Whilst as yet nobody took so much care of thee as to wash thee from thy native filthiness (ver. 4), I took pity on thee; as a traveller that passes by, and sees an infant lie exposed; and I provided all things necessary for thy support.

Ver. 7.] The prophet describes the people's increasing in Egypt, under the metaphor of a child's growing to woman's estate (compare Exod. i. 7).

Ver. 8. Thy time was the time of love:] I thought it now a proper time to betroth thee to myself: the Jews' deliverance out of Egypt is elsewhere described as the time of God's espousing them to himself (see Jer. ii. 2, &c., Hos. ii. 15, 19). And his entering into a covenant with them, is commonly represented by a marriage contract (see Isa. liv. 5, Jer. iii. 1, 14, and Bishop Patrick's Preface to his Commentary on the Canticles).

I spread my skirt over thee.] I took thee under my protection, as a husband doth the wife (see Ruth iii. 9).

And covered thy nakedness:] Enriched thee with the goods and possessions of the Egyptians and Canaanites (see ver. 10, 11, &c.).

Ver. 9. Then washed I thee with water—and I anointed thee with oil.] I added everything that could contribute to thy beauty and ornament. The anointing with oil was reckoned a necessary ingredient in a festival dress (see Ruth iii. 3, Isa. lxi. 3, Matt. vi. 17).

thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk.

11 I decked thee also with ornaments, and I put bracelets upon thy hands, and a chain on thy neck.

12 And I put a jewel on thy forehead, and earrings in thine ears, and a beautiful crown upon thine head.

13 Thus wast thou decked with gold and silver; and thy raiment was of fine linen, and silk, and brodered work; thou didst eat fine flour, and honey, and oil: and thou wast exceeding beautiful, and thou didst prosper into a kingdom:

14 And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty: for it was perfect through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ But thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by; his it was.

16 And of thy garments thou didst take, and deckedst thy high places with divers colours, and

Ver. 10. And shod thee with badgers' skin, &c.] Or, "with sandals of a purple colour," as Bochart expounds the word tahash. This and the following verses allude to those parts of women's attire, which serve not only for use, but for ornament too; and import that God did not only provide the Jews with necessities, but likewise with superfluities.

I girded thee about with fine linen.] This manufacture Egypt was famous for (see xxvii. 7): it was one of the principal ornaments of women (see Isa. iii. 16), as well as of great men.

Ver. 11.] These were ornaments that none but persons of better quality used to wear (see Gen. xxiv. 47, Prov. i. 9).

Ver. 12. I put a jewel on thy forehead.] The same which is called a "nose-jewel," Isa. iii. 21, where the words might as well be translated, "a jewel for the face or forehead" (compare likewise Gen. xxiv. 47).

A beautiful crown upon thine head.] Crowns or garlands were used in times of public rejoicing; from whence is derived that expression of St. Paul, "A crown of rejoicing," 1 Thess. ii. 19 (compare Isa. xxxv. 10). Virgins were sometimes adorned with crowns (see Baruch vi. 9): and they were commonly put upon the heads of persons newly married (see Cant. iii. 11).

Ver. 13. Thou didst eat fine flour, honey, and oil.] Thy country afforded all manner of plenty and delicacies (compare Deut. xxxii. 13, 14).

Didst prosper into a kingdom.] Thou wast advanced to be the seat of a kingdom, and the "city of the great King of heaven and earth," Ps. xlviii. 2.

Ver. 14. Thy renown went forth—for thy beauty.] For the magnificence of the temple, called the "beauty of holiness," and honoured with God's especial presence (compare Lam. ii. 15, Ps. xlviii. 2).

Ver. 15. Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot.] Women that are proud of their beauty are easily tempted to lewdness, if they have not a strict guard upon themselves: so you abused those honours and advantages which I had bestowed upon you, and made them an occasion of forsaking me your benefactor, and serving idols. You presumed upon that very favour which I had shown to Jerusalem, in choosing it for the place of my residence; as if that would secure you from my venplayedst the harlot thereupon: the like things shall not come, neither shall it be so.

17 Thou hast also taken thy fair jewels of my gold and of my silver, which I had given thee, and madest to thyself images of men, and didst commit whoredom with them.

18 And tookest thy brodered garments, and coveredst them: and thou hast set mine oil and mine incense before them.

19 My meat also which I gave thee, fine flour, and oil, and honey, wherewith I fed thee, thou hast even set it before them for a sweet savour: and thus it was, saith the Lord God.

20 Moreover thou hast taken thy sons and thy daughters, whom thou hast borne unto me, and these hast thou sacrificed unto them to be devoured. Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter, 21 That thou hast slain my children, and delivered them to cause them to pass through the fire for them?

22 And in all thine abominations and thy geance, let your idolatries and other wickedness be never so great (see Jer. vii. 4, Mic. iii. 11).

Playedst the harlot.] Idolatry is commonly described by the metaphor of spiritual adultery, as hath been already observed (see the note on ver. 8, and compare xxiii. 3, 8, 11, Isa. lviii. 8, Jer. ii. 20, iii. 2, 6, 20).

Ver. 16. Of thy garments thou didst take, and deckedst thy high places.] This was a great aggravation of their ingratitude, that they applied those very blessings, which God had given them, to the worship of idols (compare Hos. ii. 8).

Deckedst thy high places with divers colours.] Or, "madest high places," or "images of divers colours;" as the LXX. explain the sense. Thou madest little shrines, chapels, or altars for idols, and deckedst them with hangings of divers colours, ver. 18 (see 2 Kings xxiii. 7). The word bamah is sometimes used for an altar, because altars were commonly set upon eminent places (see ver. 24, 25). In that sense the Chaldee paraphrase understands it, Jer. xlviii. 35, and so it may be best understood, xx. 29 of this prophecy.

The like things shall not come.] I will utterly destroy those idolatries, and those that commit them.

Ver. 17.] The wealth I had bestowed upon thee thou hast laid out in doing honour to idols (see vii. 19, Hos. ii. 8, 13): and particularly in setting up images to deified heroes (see xxiii. 14, 15).

Ver. 18, 19.] Thou offeredst these my creatures as a meat-offering unto idols. The meat-offering is called an offering "of a sweet savour," because of the frankincense that was put upon it (see Lev. ii. 2). The oblation here mentioned differs from those offered to God in one particular; viz. that honey was mixed with it, which God had expressly forbidden to be used in his service (Lev. ii. 11).

Ver. 20. Thy sons and thy daughters—thou hast sacrificed.] These inhuman sacrifices were offered to the idol Moloch, in the valley of Hinnom (see ver. 36, xx. 26, 31, xxiii. 37, Jer. vii. 31).

Whom thou hast borne unto me.] Being married to me by a spiritual contract, ver. 8 (compare xxiii. 4). The children whom I have blessed thee with are mine, being entered into the same covenant with their parent, and devoted to my service (see Deut. xxix. 11, 12).

Ver. 21. Thou hast slain my children.] See the note whoredoms thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, when thou wast naked and bare, and wast polluted in thy blood.

23 And it came to pass after all thy wickedness, (woe, woe unto thee ! saith the Lord God ;)

24 That thou hast also built unto thee an eminent place, and hast made thee an high place in every street.

25 Thou hast built thy high place at every head of the way, and hast made thy beauty to be abhorred, and hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms.

26 Thou hast also committed fornication with the Egyptians thy neighbours, great of flesh ; and hast increased thy whoredoms, to provoke me to anger.

27 Behold, therefore I have stretched out my hand over thee, and have diminished thine ordinary food, and delivered thee unto the will of on Jer. xxxii. 35. By children are meant here the first-born, who are set apart to be God's property in a peculiar manner, Exod. xiii. 2, and yet even these they sometimes sacrificed to their idols (see Mic. vi. 7).

To cause them to pass through the fire] The verb he-nebir, translated "to cause them to pass through the fire," signifies also to dedicate, and denotes the first-born unto God (Exod. xiii. 12). So the words imply, that the Jews, instead of dedicating their first-born to God, as the law required, offered them up a sacrifice to the devil, that was worshipped in their idols.

Ver. 22. Thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth.] That miserable condition from which I rescued thee when I first took notice of thee, and set thee apart for my own people (see ver. 3, &c. and compare ver. 43, 60).

Ver. 24.] Manasseh filled Jerusalem with idols (see 2 Chron. xxxiii. 4, 5, 15), many of which were worshipped upon high or eminent places (compare ver. 16, 31, and 2 Kings xxiii. 5, 12, 13). The LXX. render the Hebrew word gab, a "brothel-house;" and it is certain that the worship of some of the heathen idols consisted in committing all manner of uncleanness (see 2 Kings xxiii. 7, and the note upon ver. 26).

Ver. 25.] These and the following expressions allude to the practices of common harlots, who used to frequent the most public places, to allure passengers to them (see Gen. xxxviii. 21, Prov. ix. 14, 15): idolatry being in this chapter and elsewhere compared to the rage of lust (see Isa. lvii. 5, Jer. ii. 23, 24, iii. 2).

Ver. 26. Thou hast also committed fornication with the Egyptians] While the Israelites sojourned in Egypt, they learned to practise their idolatries (see xx. 7, 8, Lev. xx. 3, Deut. xxix. 16, 17, Josh. xxiv. 14). From Josiah's time the Jews were in a strict confederacy with the Egyptians, and, to ingratiate themselves with them, practised their idolatries (compare xxiii. 19—21, 40, 41). And the worship of Tamuz, the idolatry they are upbraided with, viii. 14, was derived from the same country.

Great of flesh ; and hast increased thy whoredoms.] Compare xxxiii. 20. The expressions may allude to the whoredoms which were committed in the worship of some of their idols (see xxii. 9, Numb. xxxi. 16, Hos. iv. 4, Baruch vi. 43).

Ver. 27. And have diminished thine ordinary food.] I have abridged thee of many necessities and conveniences, by giving thy country into the hand of thine enemies, as it follows.

them that hate thee, the daughters of the Philistines, which are ashamed of thy lewd way.

28 Thou hast played the whore also with the Assyrians, because thou wast unsatiable ; yea, thou hast played the harlot with them, and yet couldest not be satisfied.

29 Thou hast moreover multiplied thy fornication in the land of Canaan unto Chaldea ; and yet thou wast not satisfied herewith.

30 How weak is thine heart, saith the Lord God, seeing thou doest all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman ;

31 In that thou buildest thine eminent place in the head of every way, and makest thine high place in every street ; and hast not been as an harlot, in that thou scornest hire ;

32 But as a wife that committeth adultery, which taketh strangers instead of her husband !

33 They give gifts to all whores : but thou

Delivered thee unto—them that hate thee, the daughters of the Philistines.] As a punishment of the idolatries which king Ahaz introduced among you (see ver. 57, and 2 Chron. xxviii. 18, 19). The "daughters of the Philistines" are put here for the Philistines, as the daughters of Samaria, Sodom, and the Syrians, stand for the people of those places, ver. 46, 47, 57, to carry on the allegory and comparison between them and Jerusalem, being all of them described as so many lewd women prostituting themselves to idols (see ver. 41). By the same metaphor Samaria and Sodom are called sisters to Jerusalem, ver. 46.

Which are ashamed of thy lewd way.] Those have not forsaken the religion of their country, as you Jews have done, nor have been so fond of foreign idolatries (compare v. 7, and Jer. ii. 11). The Chaldee paraphrase explains the words to this sense : "If I had sent my prophets to them, they would have been ashamed ; but thou art not converted" (see ver. 47, 48).

Ver. 28.] The Jews courted the alliance of their two potent neighbours, the Egyptians and Assyrians, as it served their present turn ; and to ingratiate themselves with them, served their idols (see Jer. ii. 18, 36). This is particularly recorded of Ahaz (see 2 Kings xvi. 10, 2 Chron. xxviii. 23).

Ver. 29. Thou hast—multiplied thy fornication in the land of Canaan.] Or, "with the land of Canaan," as Noldius translates the particle el, in his Concordance, p. 59. The sense is, Thou hast defiled thyself with all the idolatries of the heathen, beginning with those which were practised by the former inhabitants of Canaan, and, by degrees, learning new species of idolatry derived from distant countries, such as Chaldea was reckoned (see Jer. v. 15, and compare this verse with xxiii. 16, 17, 2 Kings xvii. 16, 17, xxi. 3, &c. xxiii. 5, &c.).

Ver. 30. How weak is thine heart.] Not only unstable as to good resolutions, but even restless and unsettled in evil practices ; still hankering after some new kind of idolatry, and resolved to indulge a wandering appetite (see ver. 28, 29).

Ver. 31. Thine eminent place] See ver. 16, 24. In that thou scornest hire ;] Or, "to prostitute thyself for hire ;" as some translate the words.

Ver. 33. Thou givest thy gifts to all thy lovers.] The Jews are often upbraided for making leagues with idolaters, and courting their favours by presents, and by complying with their idolatries (see Isa. xxx. 6, lvii. 5, 9, Jer. ii. 18, 25, 36, and the notes upon these texts).

givest thy gifts to all thy lovers, and hirest them, that they may come unto thee on every side for thy whoredom.

34 And the contrary is in thee from other women in thy whoredoms, whereas none followeth thee to commit whoredoms: and in that thou givest a reward, and no reward is given unto thee, therefore thou art contrary.

35 ¶ Wherefore, O harlot, hear the word of the Lord:

36 Thus saith the Lord God; Because thy filthiness was poured out, and thy nakedness discovered, through thy whoredoms with thy lovers, and with all the idols of thy abominations, and by the blood of thy children, which thou didst give unto them;

37 Behold, therefore I will gather all thy lovers, with whom thou hast taken pleasure, and all them that thou hast loved, with all them that thou hast hated; I will even gather them round about against thee, and will discover thy nakedness unto them, that they may see all thy nakedness.

38 And I will judge thee, as women that break wedlock and shed blood are judged; and I will give thee blood in fury and jealousy.

39 And I will also give thee into their hand,

Ver. 36.] See ver. 20, Jer. ii. 34.

Ver. 37. I will gather all thy lovers.] Those allies whose friendship thou hast courted by complying with their idolatries (see xxiii. 9, 22, Jer. ii. 25, iv. 30, xxii. 20, Lam. i. 8, Hos. ii. 10).

With all them that thou hast hated.] Compare ver. 41. Such were Edom, Moab, and Ammon; who always bore a spite to the Jews, and insulted over their calamities (see xxv. 3, 8, 12).

And will discover thy nakedness unto them.] They shall see thee carried away captive, stripped and bare (see ver. 39), without any covering to thy nakedness, according to the barbarous custom of conquerors (see the notes on Isa. iii. 17, xx. 4). The words allude to the punishment that used to be inflicted upon common harlots and adulteresses, which was to strip them naked, and expose them to the world (compare xxiii. 29, Jer. xiii. 22, 26, Hos. ii. 3).

Ver. 38. And I will judge thee, as women that break wedlock] Whose punishment was death by the law, Lev. xx. 10, Deut. xxii. 22.

And shed blood] See ver. 20, 21. 26. This was likewise a capital crime (see Exod. xxi. 12). In these two parts of Jerusalem's character, she was a type of the antichristian whore, who was likewise drunk with the blood of the saints" (Rev. xvii. 5, 6).

I will give thee blood in fury and jealousy.] I will make an utter destruction of thine inhabitants (see xiv. 19): or I will "pour out the blood of thy slain like water" (Ps. lxxix. 3). Jealousy is the "rage of a man" (Prov. vi. 34). Such indignation will God show against the idolatry of his own people, who hath declared himself a jealous God, and very tender of his honour, which is highly injured by the worship of idols, set up as his rivals (see the note on v. 13).

Ver. 39. They shall throw down thine eminent place.] They shall destroy all the high walls and fortifications; the expression alludes to the high places dedicated to idolatrous worship (see ver. 24, 31).

They shall strip thee also of thy clothes.] They shall first plunder thee before they carry thee away captive (see ver. 37, and xxiii. 26).

and they shall throw down thine eminent place, and shall break down thy high places: they shall strip thee also of thy clothes, and shall take thy fair jewels, and leave thee naked and bare.

40 They shall also bring up a company against thee, and they shall stone thee with stones, and thrust thee through with their swords.

41 And they shall burn thine houses with fire, and execute judgments upon thee in the sight of many women: and I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot, and thou also shalt give no hire any more.

42 So will I make my fury toward thee to rest, and my jealousy shall depart from thee, and I will be quiet, and will be no more angry.

43 Because thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, but hast fretted me in all these things; behold, therefore I also will recompense thy way upon thine head, saith the Lord God: and thou shalt not commit this lewdness above all thine abominations.

44 ¶ Behold, every one that useth proverbs shall use this proverb against thee, saying, As is the mother, so is her daughter.

45 Thou art thy mother's daughter, that loatheth her husband and her children: and thou art the

Ver. 40. They shall also bring up a company against thee, and they shall stone thee with stones.] The Chaldean army shall beat down thy walls and houses with stones flung out of battering engines (see Jer. xxxiii. 4). The expression alludes to the punishment inflicted upon adulteresses, which was stoning (see John viii. 5). The particular sort of death which they were to suffer, is not expressed in the law; so the conjecture of Grotius upon that place of St. John is not improbable, that in the latter times, as wickedness increased, the Sanhedrin exchanged the milder punishment of strangling, used before, for the severer death of stoning.

Thrust thee through] See v. 12, xxiii. 10, 47, xxiv. 21.

Ver. 41. They shall burn thine houses with fire.] The punishment allotted to an idolatrous city, Deut. xiii. 16. The words may likewise allude to the punishment of burning, anciently inflicted upon harlots (see Gen. xxxviii. 24).

And execute judgments upon thee in the sight of many women:] The Syrians, Philistines, and other neighbouring nations (see ver. 37, and notes upon ver. 27). The judgment I will execute upon thee shall be for an instruction to other nations, how they follow thine ill practices (see xxiii. 48).

Cease from playing the harlot.] See xxiii. 27.

Ver. 42.] See ver. 38, and note upon v. 13.

Ver. 43. The days of thy youth.] See ver. 22.

Thou shalt not commit this lewdness above all thine abominations.] Thou shalt not add these manifold and shameless practices of idolatry to all thy other wickedness. But the words may be rendered, "Neither hast thou laid to heart all these thine abominations."

Ver. 44.] They that love to apply the memorable sayings of former ages to the present times, shall apply that common saying to thee, That the daughter follows her mother's steps, and Jerusalem is no better than the Amorites, whose land they inhabit, and whose manners they imitate (see ver. 3).

Ver. 45. Thou art thy mother's daughter, that loatheth her husband and her children:] Both these quali-sister of thy sisters, which loathed their husbands and their children: your mother was an Hittite, and your father an Amorite.

46 And thine elder sister is Samaria, she and her daughters that dwell at thy left hand; and thy younger sister, that dwelleth at thy right hand, is Sodom and her daughters.

47 Yet hast thou not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations: but, as if that were a very little thing, thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways.

48 As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom thy sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters.

49 Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

ties are the property of a harlot, and were verified in the Jews, who abhorred God their husband (ver. 8), and cast off all natural affection to their children, sacrificing them in the fire to the honour of their idols (ver. 20).

Thou art the sister of thy sisters,] Samaria and Sodom (ver. 46.) The worship of Moloch was generally practised by the ten tribes, whose metropolis was Samaria (see 2 Kings xvii. 17), as it was by the Ammonites, who derived their original from Lot, an inhabitant of Sodom (see 1 Kings xi. 7). Great and crying sins are compared to those of Sodom (see Isa. i. 9, iii. 9, Matt. xi. 23, Rev. xi. 8).

Your mother was an Hittite, &c.] See ver. 3.

Ver. 46.] Samaria is called the elder sister to Jerusalem, as being the capital city of the kingdom of Israel, a more large and potent kingdom than that of Judah, of which Jerusalem was the metropolis. She likewise led the way to that idolatry which afterward infected the whole nation, forsaking the worship which God had appointed in his temple, and setting up the idolatry of the golden calves. Samaria lay northward of Jerusalem, and Sodom southward; which two quarters of the world are expressed by the right and left, in the Hebrew language, being placed in such a position to those that set their faces eastward. So the phrase is to be understood, Gen. xiii. 9, "If thou wilt go to the left hand, I will go to the right;" where the Targum expounds the words, "If thou wilt go to the north, I will go to the south." The same way of speaking is still used in the ancient British or Welsh language, as Archbishop Usher observes in his Primord. Eccl. Britan. p. 306, edit. fol.

Samaria and Sodom are described as metropolises, or mother-cities: so their daughters may be expounded not only of the inhabitants of each city, but likewise of the lesser towns which were anciently under the jurisdiction of the greater (compare xxvi. 4, 6, Jer. xlix. 2).

Ver. 47. Not walked after their ways,] See v. 7.

Thou wast corrupted, &c.] See ver. 48, 51.

Ver. 48. Sodom thy sister hath not done—as thou hast done.] Their sins were not committed with such aggravations of ingratitude; nor did I use such powerful methods to convince them of their wickedness as I have done towards you (compare v. 6, Matt. x. 15, xi. 24).

51 Neither hath Samaria committed half of thy sins; but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they, and hast justified thy sisters in all thine abominations which thou hast done.

52 Thou also, which hast judged thy sisters, bear thine own shame for thy sins that thou hast committed more abominable than they: they are more righteous than thou: yea, be thou confounded also, and bear thy shame, in that thou hast justified thy sisters.

53 When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them:

54 That thou mayest bear thine own shame, and mayest be confounded in all that thou hast done, in that thou art a comfort unto them.

55 When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their

Ver. 49. This was the iniquity of—Sodom, pride, fulness of bread,] Sodom abused that plenty which God gave them to pride and idleness, which gave rise to those enormities which they afterward were guilty of. The scripture takes notice of the fruitfulness of the soil where Sodom stood (Gen. xiii. 10).

Neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy.] Pride and luxury make men expensive in their own way of living, and regardless of the wants and miseries of others (see Luke xvi. 20, 21).

Ver. 51. Neither hath Samaria committed half of thy sins;] The ingratitude of Jerusalem was greater than that of Samaria, because God had placed his name there, whose worship she forsook, and profaned the temple by placing idols in it; which was a degree of idolatry beyond anything the ten tribes had been guilty of (see v. 11, vii. 20, viii. 6, 15, xxiii. 38, 39, xliii. 8, 2 Kings xvi. 14, xxi. 7, 9).

And hast justified thy sisters in all thine abominations] Thou hast made them appear less guilty (see Jer. iii. 11). Another aggravation of thy sin consists in this, that thou wouldest not take warning by the judgments God brought upon them (see ibid. ver. 8).

Ver. 52. Thou also, which hast judged thy sisters, bear thine own shame] Because "wherein thou hast judged them," or declared them deservedly punished, "thou hast condemned thyself," having been guilty of the same sins, and those accompanied with greater aggravations.

Ver. 53. When the "fulness of the gentiles" shall come into the church, some of whom may be compared with Sodom for wickedness (see Isa. i. 9), then will I also remember you, who are my ancient people. St. Paul tells us, that the Jews will be provoked to emulation by the gentiles coming into the church, and thereby induced to acknowledge the truth (see Rom. xi. 11, 12, 15, 25, 31). The conversion of the gentiles is expressed in Jeremy, by returning the captivity of Moab, Ammon, and Elam (xlviii. 47, xlix. 6, 39), and by the Egyptians, Assyrians, Ethiopians, and Syrians, "bringing presents to God," and acknowledging themselves his servants, in the prophecy of Isaiah (xviii. 7, xix. 24, 25, xxiii. 18). And by the same analogy we are to understand the "returning of the captivity of Sodom" here, of the gentiles coming into the church.

Ver. 54.] In the mean time thou shalt bear the former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate.

56 For thy sister Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth in the day of thy pride, 57 Before thy wickedness was discovered, as at the time of thy reproach of the daughters of Syria, and all that are round about her, the daughters of the Philistines, which despise thee round about.

58 Thou hast borne thy lewdness and thine abominations, saith the Lord.

59 For thus saith the Lord God; I will even deal with thee as thou hast done, which hast despised the oath in breaking the covenant.

60 ¶ Nevertheless I will remember my cove-shame and punishment due to thy sins, and shalt be some sort of comfort to thy neighbours, in being a companion with them in punishment, as thou hast been in wickedness.

Ver. 55.] When the prophets foretell the general conversion and restoration of the Jewish nation, they always join Judah and Israel together, as equal sharers in that blessing (see xxxvii. 16, 22, and the notes there).

Ver. 56, 57. For thy sister Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth in the day of thy pride, before thy wickedness was discovered.] These words should be joined together in the same verse or sentence: God saith to Jerusalem, that in the height of her prosperity, before her wickedness so fully appeared to the eyes of the world, by the extraordinary judgments brought upon her, she did not reflect upon the terrible vengeance which befell Sodom, and was designed for an example or "warning to those that should afterward live ungodly" (2 Pet. ii. 6).

Ibid. and ver. 58. As at the time of thy reproach of the daughters of Syria, &c.] The words begin a new sentence, which may be translated more perspicuously thus, joining them to the following verse: "But when it was the time of thy becoming the reproach of the daughters of Syria," &c. The particle kemo sometimes signifies when (see Noldius, p. 431). The words, with regard to what goes before, import thus much: In thy prosperity thou didst despise those who are no worse than thyself; but since thou hast been insulted and invaded by thy neighbours, both Syrians and Philistines, whom God hath made use of as executioners of his judgments upon thee, thou hast been a remarkable instance of his vengeance, and God's hand hath been heavy upon thee for all thine idolatries and abominations. The words relate to the frequent inroads the Syrians and Philistines made into Judea in the time of king Ahaz (see 2 Kings xvi. 5, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18).

Ver. 59.] That solemn oath and covenant you entered into with me to be my people, and serve no other God besides: see Deut. xxix. 12, 14, which is likewise represented in this chapter, and many other places, under the solemnity of a marriage contract. Hereupon God threatens her, that since she had broken her oath and promise, he should not think himself obliged to make good any of the promises of favour and protection which he had made to her, but nant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant.

61 Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant.

62 And I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord:

63 That thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God.

would give her up to ruin and desolation (see Numb. xiv. 34).

Ver. 60. I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth.] I will have some regard for you, because you were formerly my people, by virtue of the covenant I made with you at your coming out of Egypt (compare ver. 4, 22, of this chapter, and Hos. ii. 15, xi. 1, Jer. ii. 2): at which time God chose them to be his peculiar people (see Exod. xix. 5, 6).

I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant.] Such a one as shall never be abolished, viz. that of the gospel (see Jer. xxxii. 40, and the note upon that place).

Ver. 61. Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed.] The Jews shall be touched with a deep sense and remorse for their former provocation, as a necessary preparation for their conversion (compare xx. 43, xxxvi. 21, Jer. xxxi. 9, l. 5, and see the notes upon those places).

When thou shalt receive thy sisters.] See ver. 53.

And I will give them unto thee for daughters.] Jerusalem thus restored shall be a type of that heavenly Jerusalem, which is the mother of us all (Gal. iv. 26). And even in the times of the apostles there was a particular deference paid to the church of Jerusalem, as the mother-church of the Christian world (see Rom. xv. 26, 27). Accordingly she is styled the mother of all churches, by the second general council, in their synodical epistle (see Theodoret. Hist. Eccles. lib. v. cap. 9): a title which the church of Rome now assumes, without any pretence from scripture or antiquity.

But not by thy covenant.] Not by virtue of that covenant mentioned ver. 60,—you have forfeited all your title to its privileges, ver. 59; but by virtue of that new covenant which I will make with you, through the Messiah (see Jer. xxxi. 31).

Ver. 62. Thou shalt know that I am the Lord.] I will be then as conspicuous in my mercies, as I was before in my judgments (see note on vi. 7).

Ver. 63. That thou mayest remember and be confounded.] Be confounded at the remembrance of thy former wickedness (see ver. 61).

And never open thy mouth any more.] The mercies of the gospel in "calling sinners to repentance," and accepting them, notwithstanding their many imperfections, do unanswerably confute all claim or pretence to merit (see Rom. iii. 19).

CHAPTER XVII.

1 AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, put forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel;

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God; A great eagle with great wings, long-winged, full of feathers, which had divers colours, came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar:

4 He cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffick: he set it in a city of merchants.

5 He took also of the seed of the land, and planted it in a fruitful field; he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree.

6 And it grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: so it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs.

7 There was also another great eagle with great wings and many feathers: and, behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, that he might water it by the furrows of her plantation.

8 It was planted in a good soil by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine.

9 Say thou, Thus saith the Lord God; Shall it prosper? shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her spring, even without great power or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof.

10 Yea, behold, being planted, shall it prosper? shall it not utterly wither, when the east wind toucheth it? it shall wither in the furrows where it grew.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

12 Say now to the rebellious house, Know ye not what these things mean? tell them, Behold,

CHAP. XVII.

ARGUMENT.—Under the parable of two eagles and two vine-branches, the prophet figuratively expresses the carrying away Jehoiachin into captivity by the king of Babylon, who made Zedekiah king in his stead. He afterward revolted from the king of Babylon, whose vassal he was, and entered into an alliance with the king of Egypt. For this breach of his oath and fidelity, God threatens to make him captive to that very king from whom he had revolted.

Ver. 2. Put forth a riddle,] i. e. A continued metaphor, or figurative speech, still pursuing the allegory of an eagle and vine in the several parts of the parable: this perhaps may make the hearers more attentive to what thou speakest.

Ver. 3. A great eagle with great wings,] That is, the king of Babylon (see ver. 12). Conquerors are elsewhere represented by eagles, who are birds of prey, and remarkable for their swiftness (see Deut. xxviii. 49, Jer. iv. 13, Hos. viii. 1).

Long-winged,] The LXX. and other interpreters translate the word from the Chaldee sense of it, of a great size; to avoid the repetition of the same sense over again.

Came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar:] i. e. Invaded Judea, or invested Jerusalem, and took king Jehoiachin captive (see ver. 12, and compare Jer. xxii. 23).

Ver. 4. Carried it into a land of traffick;] Babylon and the country about it, being the seat of a universal monarchy, must needs have been a place of great trading. Strabo takes notice, that the merchants who travelled by land to Babylon, went through the country of the Arabians called Scenitæ (lib. xvi. p. 747); and vessels of great burden came up to the walls of it, from the Persian Gulf up the Euphrates (see Pliny's Nat. Hist. lib. vi. cap. 26).

Ver. 5. He took also of the seed of the land,] Of the king's seed, as it is explained ver. 13, i. e. Zedekiah.

He placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree.] Judea was a fruitful country, and well watered (see Deut. viii. 7); where Zedekiah flourished as a willow tree, that thriveth best in a moist ground (see Isa. xlv. 4).

Ver. 6.] Though he flourished, yet he enjoyed but a tributary kingdom under the king of Babylon, and acknowledged him as his lord and sovereign (see ver. 14).

Ver. 7. There was also another great eagle] Pharaoh king of Egypt, with whom Zedekiah made an alliance; whereupon that king sent an army to raise the siege of Jerusalem (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13, Jer. xxxvii. 5, 7).

This vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, &c.] Zedekiah desired the king of Egypt's assistance and protection. Some render the words thus, "Shot forth her branches under him from the furrows where she was planted, that he might water it."

Ver. 8.] The words are to the same purpose with ver. 5, to show that Zedekiah's condition was so good under the king of Babylon, that he needed not to have broken his oath, out of a desire to better it; whereby he involved himself and his country in ruin (see 2 Kings xxiv. 20, and the note upon Jer. xvii. 25).

Ver. 9. Shall he not pull up the roots thereof,] Nebuchadnezzar, in return for this perfidiousness, shall destroy him and his family (see 2 Kings xxv. 7).

Even without great power] God will appear visibly on the Chaldeans' side, so there will be no need of great force to subdue their enemies (see Jer. xxi. 4, xxxvii. 10).

Ver. 10. Shall it not utterly wither, when the east wind toucheth it?] The prophet compares the Chaldean army to a parching wind, that blasts the fruits of the earth, withers the leaves of the trees, and makes every thing look naked and bare (see xix. 12, Isa. xxvii. 8, Jer. iv. 11, Hos. xiii. 15).

Ver. 12. The rebellious house,] See ii. 5, xii. 9. Know ye not what these things mean?] Will ye not apply your minds to understand what God speaks to you? And that, whether he directs his speech to the king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem, and hath taken the king thereof, and the princes thereof, and led them with him to Babylon;

13 And hath taken of the king's seed, and made a covenant with him, and hath taken an oath of him: he hath also taken the mighty of the land:

14 That the kingdom might be base, that it might not lift itself up, but that by keeping of his covenant it might stand.

15 But he rebelled against him in sending his ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people. Shall he prosper? shall he escape that doeth such things? or shall he break the covenant, and be delivered?

16 As I live, saith the Lord God, surely in the place where the king delleth that made him king, whose oath he despised, and whose covenant he brake, even with him in the midst of Babylon he shall die.

17 Neither shall Pharaoh with his mighty army and great company make for him in the war, by casting up mounds, and building forts, to cut off many persons:

18 Seeing he despised the oath by breaking you in plain words, or delivers his mind in riddles and parables (see xii. 2, 9, xx. 49)?

And hath taken the king thereof, and the princes] Jeconiah, and all his princes and officers (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12).

Ver. 13. And hath taken an oath of him:] Hath made Zedekiah swear an oath of fealty to him (see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13).

He hath also taken the mighty of the land:] As hostages for the performance of the covenants agreed between him and Zedekiah.

Ver. 14.] Zedekiah by this means became only a tributary king (compare xxix. 14), and consequently not in so honourable a condition as his predecessors had been; but yet this was the only means under the present circumstances to support himself and his government.

Ver. 15. That they might give him horses] See the note on ver. 7. Egypt was a country that abounded in horses, of which there was great scarcity in Judea (see 1 Kings ix. 28, Isa. xxxi. 1, xxxvi. 9).

Shall he prosper?] This was not only a violation of his oath and covenant, but likewise a breach of that part of the Jewish law (Deut. xvii. 16), which expressly forbade their king to "fetch horses out of Egypt," or strengthen himself with the alliance of that people.

Ver. 16. In—Babylon he shall die.] Whither he shall be carried prisoner (see xii. 13).

Ver. 17. Make for him] See Jer. xxxvii. 7.

By casting up mounds.] See Jer. xxxii. 7.

Ver. 18. When, lo, he had given his hand,] In token of entering into a mutual league and covenant (see Isa. xli. 13). Particularly it was a ceremony used when an inferior made profession of his subjection to his superior: see 1 Chron. xxix. 24, Jer. i. 15, Lam. v. 6, where we read that the "princes and mighty men submitted themselves to Solomon the king;" but in the original it is, "they gave the hand under Solomon."

Ver. 20. I will spread my net upon him,] See xii. 13.

Will plead with him there for his trespass] God is said to plead with men, when he places their sins before their eyes, and convinces them of their diso-the covenant, when, lo, he had given his hand, and hath done all these things, he shall not escape.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; As I live, surely mine oath that he hath despised, and my covenant that he hath broken, even it will I recompense upon his own head.

20 And I will spread my net upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare, and I will bring him to Babylon, and will plead with him there for his trespass that he hath trespassed against me.

21 And all his fugitives with all his bands shall fall by the sword, and they that remain shall be scattered toward all winds: and ye shall know that I the Lord have spoken it.

22 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon a high mountain and eminent:

23 In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it: and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell.

bedience by manifest tokens of his vengeance (see xx. 36, xxxviii. 22).

Ver. 21. His bands shall fall] See xii. 14.

Ver. 22. I will also take of the highest branch of the highest cedar, and will set it;] The prophet, pursuing the same metaphor, foretells the restoration of the royal family of David, in such terms as might in some degree be fulfilled at the return from the captivity, when Zerubbabel, of the lineage of David, had a shadow of kingly authority among the Jews, and by his means their church and constitution was again restored. But the words do more properly belong to Christ and his kingdom, which shall be extended over all the world.

I will crop off from the—young twigs a tender one.] This description may fitly be applied to our Saviour, in respect to the low estate to which the family of David was then reduced, with great humility acknowledged by his mother, Luke i. 48. The meanness of his outward condition and appearance is represented by the prophet Isaiah, under the same expressions (liii. 2).

Ver. 23. In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it:] The temple stood upon mount Moriah (2 Chron. iii. 1), thence styled God's holy mountain; which expression is often used in the prophets to denote the Christian church; which is described as a city set on a hill, and conspicuous to all the world (see xx. 40, and the note upon Isa. ii. 2).

It shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit.] The living members of the church are compared to fruitful trees, and flourishing branches (see Ps. i. 3, xcii. 2, John xv. 5, 8).

Under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing;] i. e. Of every kind. A powerful, especially if it be an easy government, is a shelter and security to all its subjects (compare xxxi. 6, Dan. iv. 12). Such shall be the kingdom of Christ to all that submit themselves to his laws.

Ver. 24. That I the Lord have brought down the high tree, &c.] Christ's kingdom shall by degrees exalt itself above all the kingdom's of the world; and shall at length put an end to them, and itself continue unto all eternity (see Dan. iv. 35, 44, vii. 27, Luke i. 33, 1 Cor. xv. 24).

24 And all the trees of the field shall know that I the LORD have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish: I the LORD have spoken and have done it.

[I the Lord have spoken and have done it.] The prophets often speak of future events as if they were already accomplished, to assure us that they shall certainly come to pass (see the note upon Isa. xxi. 9).

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 THE word of the LORD came unto me again, saying,

2 What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?

3 As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel.

4 Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die.

5 ¶ But if a man be just, and do that which is lawful and right,

6 And hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, neither hath defiled his neighbour's wife, neither hath come near to a menstruous woman,

7 And hath not oppressed any, but hath re-

CHAP. XVIII.

ARGUMENT.—The calamities which ushered in and attended the captivity of the Jews, were expressly threatened as punishments of the idolatries and other sins of their ancestors (see Jer. xv. 4). This made the Jews of the present age complain of God's dealing hardly with them, in punishing them for the sins of their forefathers. This chapter contains an answer to the objection, importing that even under their captivity they should find their condition better or worse, according as they behaved themselves, and withal laying before them God's eternal rules of justice, with regard to the rewards and punishments of the next life, when he will "judge every man according to his works, and every man shall bear his own burden."

Ver. 2. What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning—Israel.] With respect to the desolations made in it by sword, famine, and pestilence (see vi. 2, 3, &c. vii. 2).

The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?] i. e. the present generation is punished for the offences committed by their forefathers, particularly for the sins committed in the time of Manasseh, king of Judah (see 2 Kings xxiii. 26, Jer. xv. 4, xxxi. 29, Lam. v. 7). This proverb had likewise a profane sense implied in it, and insinuated that the present age was not remarkably worse than those that had gone before it, and so did not deserve to be made an extraordinary example of God's vengeance.

Ver. 3.] I will make such a visible discrimination between the righteous and the wicked, between those that tread in the steps of their forefathers, and those who take warning by their examples, that you shall not have any farther occasion to use this proverb among you. God expressly threatens to visit the sins of the fathers upon the children, both in the Old and New Testament (see Exod. xx. 5, Matt. xxiii. 35); but this is to be understood only with respect to the temporal punishments of this world (and these he doth not always inflict in an exact proportion to the demerits of those that suffer), not with respect to the eternal punishments of the next. See Bishop Sanderson's third Sermon upon 1 Kings xxi. 29: "The scripture takes notice of a certain measure of iniquity, which is filling up from one generation to another, till at last it makes a nation or family ripe for destruction. And although those persons on whom this vengeance falls, suffer no more than their own personal sins deserved; yet, because the sins of former generations, which they equal or outdo, make it time for God utterly to destroy them, the punishments due to the sins of many ages and generations are said to fall upon them (see Matt. xxiii. 35, 36; Dr. Sherlock, of Providence, chap. 8).

Ver. 4. Behold, all souls are mine;] As they are all equally my creatures, so my dealings with them shall be without prejudice or partiality.

The soul that sinneth, it shall die.] "Death is the wages of sin," and all men being sinners, the sentence of temporal death passes equally upon them all. But as life signifies in general all that happiness which attends God's favour, so death denotes all those punishments which are the effects of the divine displeasure (see 2 Sam. xii. 13); under which are comprehended the miseries of the next world; and these shall be allotted to men according to their deserts, without any regard to the faults of their ancestors, which shall not then be laid to their charge, or taken into account to aggravate their guilt. The words dying and death, are often used in the New Testament for the punishments of the next world (see particularly Rom. viii. 13): and they are expressed by the second death, Rev. xx. 14, an expression used among the Jews, and found in the Targum upon Deut. xxxiii. 6.

As the prophets instruct men in the practice of inward and evangelical righteousness, and in order to it speak slightly of the mere external duties of religion (see Isa. i. 11, &c. Jer. vii. 22, 23): so they raise men's minds to look beyond the temporal promises and threatenings of the law, to the eternal rewards and punishments of another life (see Isa. lxvi. 24, Dan. xii. 2). In both which respects they prepared men's minds for the reception of the gospel when it should be revealed.

Ver. 6. Hath not eaten upon the mountains.] Idolatrous worship was commonly performed upon mountains or high places (see vi. 13, xvi. 16, 44, xx. 28): and eating part of the sacrifice, was properly maintaining communion with the idol to whom it was offered (see Exod. xxxiv. 15, 1 Cor. x. 20, 21.)

Neither hath lifted up his eyes.] Lifting up the eyes, is a posture of religious worship or adoration (see Deut. iv. 19, Ps. cxxi. 1, cxxiii. 1).

Ver. 7. Hath restored to the debtor his pledge.] God commanded the Jews not to detain any pledge they took from a poor man all night; which was, in effect, stored to the debtor his pledge, hath spoiled none by violence, hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment;

8 He that hath not given forth upon usury, neither hath taken any increase, that hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity, hath executed true judgment between man and man,

9 Hath walked in my statutes, and hath kept my judgments, to deal truly; he is just, he shall surely live, saith the Lord God.

10 ¶ If he beget a son that is a robber, a shedder of blood, and that doeth the like to any one of these things,

11 And that doeth not any of those duties, but even hath eaten upon the mountains, and defiled his neighbour's wife,

12 Hath oppressed the poor and needy, hath spoiled by violence, hath not restored the pledge, and hath lifted up his eyes to the idols, hath committed abomination,

13 Hath given forth upon usury, and hath taken increase: shall he then live? he shall not live: he hath done all these abominations; he shall surely die; his blood shall be upon him.

14 ¶ Now, lo, if he beget a son, that seeth all his father's sins which he hath done, and considereth, and doeth not such like,

15 That hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, hath not defiled his neighbour's wife,

16 Neither hath oppressed any, hath not withdrawn the pledge, neither hath spoiled by violence, but hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment, to enjoin them to lend to the poor without either pawn or usury (see Exod. xxii. 25, 26, Deut. xxiv. 12, 13).

17 That hath taken off his hand from the poor, that hath not received usury nor increase, hath executed my judgments, hath walked in my statutes; he shall not die for the iniquity of his father, he shall surely live.

Ver. 8. Hath not given forth upon usury.] Usury, when it is exacted from the poor, hath been generally cried out upon as no better than oppression, and is particularly forbidden by the law (see Exod. xxii. 15, Lev. xxv. 35, 36, Neh. v. 1, 7, Jer. xv. 10). It is probable that this sort of usury is chiefly here meant, because it is joined with oppression, violence, and want of charity.

Ver. 9. He shall surely live.] See note on xx. 11.

Ver. 13. His blood shall be upon him.] His destruction is owing wholly to himself (see xxxiii. 4).

Ver. 19. Doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father?] The Jews still appealed to their own experience, as the ground of their complaint mentioned ver. 2.

When the son hath done that which is lawful and right,—he shall surely live.] In like manner, if ye had forsaken your fathers' sins, you might have escaped those judgments I denounced against your fathers (see the note upon Jer. xvii. 25). But since ye have continued in their abominations, the punishments due to them justly come upon you.

Ver. 20.] See notes upon ver. 3, 4.

VOL. III.—70

18 As for his father, because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, even he shall die in his iniquity.

19 ¶ Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father? When the son hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my statutes, and hath done them, he shall surely live.

20 The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him.

21 But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

22 All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him: in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live.

23 Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God: and not that he should return from his ways, and live?

24 ¶ But when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die.

25 ¶ Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal. Hear now, O house of Israel; Is not my way equal? are not your ways unequal?

26 When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die.

Ver. 22. They shall not be mentioned unto him.] Or, “remembered against him.” God is said in scripture to remember men's sins, when he punishes them (see Jer. xiv. 10, Hos. viii. 13); and to forget them when he pardons them (Jer. xxxi. 34, Amos viii. 7).

Ver. 23.] In conformity to this doctrine, the New Testament instructs us, that “God would have all men to be saved, and is not willing that any should perish” (1 Tim. ii. 4, 2 Pet. iii. 9).

Ver. 24. All his righteousness—shall not be mentioned.] For, “Better had it been for him not to have known the way of righteousness, than after he hath known it, to turn aside from the holy commandment” (2 Pet. ii. 21). Such a one sins against a clearer light and greater convictions, and withal is guilty of the greatest ingratitude, in doing despite unto the Spirit of grace.

Ver. 25.] The declarations I have so often repeated concerning the eternal rewards and punishments allotted to the righteous and the wicked, are sufficient to vindicate the justice of my proceedings against all your objections.

Ver. 26, 27.] It is an opinion that prevails among the Jews even till this day, that at the day of judgment a considerable number of good actions shall overbalance men's evil ones (see xxxiii. 13). So

3 A

27 Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive.

28 Because he considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

29 Yet saith the house of Israel, The way of the Lord is not equal. O house of Israel, are not my ways equal? are not your ways unequal?

30 Therefore I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways, saith the Lord God. Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin.

31 ¶ Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

32 For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye.

they thought it a hard case for a man, who had been righteous the far greatest part of his life, if he did at last commit iniquity, that his former righteousness should avail him nothing. In opposition to this doctrine, God here declares, that a righteous man sinning, and not repenting, should die in his sins: and that a wicked man, upon his repentance, should save his soul alive.

Ver. 30.] You complain of the injustice of my ways or proceedings; but if I judge you according to the desert of your ways, you will certainly be all found guilty, and nothing but repentance and true contrition can avert that ruin your sins threaten you with.

Ver. 31. Make you a new heart and a new spirit.] The prophets often exhort the Jews to an inward purity and holiness, thereby to take them off from relying upon an outward legal righteousness, and an exactness in the observance of the ritual parts of the law (see the note upon ver. 4). By thus instructing them in a more excellent way of serving God, than the ceremonial law did directly prescribe, they prepared their minds for receiving those truths which the gospel would more fully discover. God promises, xxxvi. 26, "to give them a new heart, and put within them a new spirit;" here he exhorts them to "make themselves a new heart, and a new spirit." Which difference of expression is thus to be reconciled, that although God "works in us to will and to do," and is the first mover in our regeneration, yet we must work together with his grace, at least willingly receive it, and not quench or resist its motions (see the note upon Jer. xxxi. 18.)

1 MOREOVER take thou up a lamentation for the princes of Israel,

2 And say, What is thy mother? A lioness: she lay down among lions, she nourished her whelps among young lions.

3 And she brought up one of her whelps: it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey; it devoured men.

4 The nations also heard of him; he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains unto the land of Egypt.

5 Now when she saw that she had waited, and her hope was lost, then she took another of her whelps, and made him a young lion.

6 And he went up and down among the lions, he became a young lion, and learned to catch the prey, and devoured men.

7 And he knew their desolate palaces, and he

CHAP. XIX.

ARGUMENT.—Under the parable of a lion's whelps, the prophet describes the sad catastrophe of the two kings of Judah, Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim; and, under the figure of a vine, he represents the desolation and captivity of the whole people.

Ver. 1. Take thou up a lamentation] The expression alludes to the mournful ditties used at funerals (compare xxvi. 17, xxvii. 2). Such a lamentation the prophet is directed to apply to the mournful estate of the royal family of Judah: particularly with respect to Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim.

Ver. 2. What is thy mother?] The prophet proposes a question that may be applied to each prince distinctly.

A lioness.] The land of Judea, thy native country (see ver. 10), is become cruel and bloody (compare Ps. xxxiv. 10, Nah. ii. 11, 12); and hath taught her princes and rulers to govern by cruelty and oppression (see vii. 23, xxii. 27, Jer. xxii. 17, Zeph. iii. 3).

Ver. 3. She brought up one of her whelps.] Compare ver. 6. This is meant of Jehoahaz, who followed not the good example of his father Josiah, but the evil practices of the wicked kings his predecessors (see 2 Kings xxiii. 32).

Ver. 4. The nations also heard of him.] Pharaoh-nechoh, king of Egypt, hearing his ill character, deposed him, and made him a prisoner (see 2 Kings xxiii. 33, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4).

He was taken in their pit,] The expression alludes to those pitfalls and snares which are made to take wild beasts.

Ver. 5. Then she took another of her whelps,] Jehoiakim was set up king in his brother's stead, by the king of Egypt, who, by this victory over Josiah, had made himself master of Judea (2 Kings xxiii. 33, 34): but yet Pharaoh seems to have done this by the joint consent of the people, who had before set up Jehoiakim's younger brother, without asking the king of Egypt's consent.

Ver. 6.] He learned and practised all the methods of tyranny and oppression (see Jer. xxii. 13, 17, xxxvii. 2).

Ver. 7. He knew their desolate palaces.] Or, "He knew their palaces," as the word armenoth is translated, Amos i. 7. And the word armenoth here used is equivalent to armenoth (see Isa. xiii. 22). Jehoiakim made himself master of the riches and pleasant seats of the great men of the land.

laid waste their cities; and the land was desolate, and the fulness thereof, by the noise of his roaring.

8 Then the nations set against him on every side from the provinces, and spread their net over him: he was taken in their pit.

9 And they put him in ward in chains, and brought him to the king of Babylon: they brought him into holds, that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.

10 ¶ Thy mother is like a vine in thy blood, planted by the waters: she was fruitful and full of branches by reason of many waters.

11 And she had strong rods for the sceptres of

Ver. 8, 9. The nations set against him on every side] The Chaldeans, and their neighbours and allies, invaded Judea, and afterward besieged Jerusalem, and took Jehoiakim prisoner (see 2 Kings xxiv. 2, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6).

Spread their net over him:] See ver. 4, and compare xii. 13.

Ver. 9. That his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.] The words allude to a lion's seeking his prey upon the mountains. Ezekiel often expresses the land of Israel by the "mountains of Israel" (see the note upon vi. 2).

Ver. 10.] The country of Judea from whence the royal family have their original, was like a fruitful vine in a flourishing condition (see xvii. 5, 6).

Ver. 11. She had strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule.] From her sprung sovereign princes who were themselves very powerful, and made their people appear considerable among their neighbours. A rod or sceptre is an emblem of authority (see Isa. ix. 4, x. 5, Jer. xlviii. 17).

Her stature was exalted] Compare xxxi. 3, Dan. iv. 11.

Ver. 12. She was plucked up in fury.] God in his them that bare rule, and her stature was exalted among the thick branches, and she appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches.

12 But she was plucked up in fury, she was cast down to the ground, and the east wind dried up her fruit: her strong rods were broken and withered; the fire consumed them.

13 And now she is planted in the wilderness, in a dry and thirsty ground.

14 And fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, which hath devoured her fruit, so that she hath no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule. This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation.

anger removed her out of the land (compare Ps. iii. 5, Jer. xii. 14).

The east wind dried up her fruit:] See xvii. 10.

Her strong rods were broken and withered:] Her kings and princes were subdued and made captives.

The fire consumed them.] God's anger destroyed them, as fire consumeth the branches of a tree when it is withered (see xv. 4). God's wrath is often compared to fire (see xxx. 8).

Ver. 13.] A great part of her people are carried captive, where their condition is as much different from what it was formerly, as the condition of a tree is when it is removed out a rich soil into dry and barren ground. The Jews suffered several captivities before that final one which ended in the destruction of their temple and government (see 2 Kings xxiv. 12, Jer. lii. 28, Dan. i. 3).

Ver. 14. Fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, &c.] Zedekiah's breaking his oath of fealty to the king of Babylon, hath been the occasion of the utter destruction of the royal family, and the entire ruin of the government (see xvii. 18, 19, 2 Kings xxiv. 20).

This is a lamentation, and shall be] This is matter of present lamentation, and shall be so to aftertimes.

CHAPTER XX.

1 AND it came to pass in the seventh year, in the fifth month, the tenth day of the month, that certain of the elders of Israel came to enquire of the LORD, and sat before me.

2 Then came the word of the LORD unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God;

CHAP. XX.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains a rehearsal of the rebellions and idolatries of the Jews, from their going out of Egypt to that very day. The prophet afterward foretells their conversion and restoration. The last five verses contain a prophecy against Jerusalem.

Ver. 1. In the seventh year.] Of Jehoiachin's captivity (compare i. 2, viii. 1). All the prophecies recorded from the eighth chapter to this, probably belong to the sixth year of that captivity.

Came to enquire] See note on viii. 1.

Ver. 3. I will not be enquired of by you.] You shall not receive such an answer as you expect, but such as your hypocrisy deserves (see ver. 31, xiv. 3, 4).

Ver. 4. Wilt thou judge them.] "Wilt thou plead

Are ye come to enquire of me? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be enquired of by you.

4 Wilt thou judge them, son of man, wilt thou judge them? cause them to know the abominations of their fathers:

5 ¶ And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; In the day when I chose Israel, and lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, for them?" as our margin reads, or defend their cause? But the words may perhaps be more significantly translated, "Wilt thou not judge them?" i. e. Wilt thou not reprove or condemn them? Noldius observes in his Concordance, p. 233, that he, the particle of interrogation, which answers the Latin article an, is often equivalent to the negative annon, and is to be translated, Is it not? (see ver. 30 of this chapter, and xxxviii. 17). In which sense it is understood by our translators, 2 Sam. xxiii. 17, and so it should be rendered, 1 Sam. ii. 27, "Did I not plainly appear to the house of thy father?" &c.

Son of man.] See ii. 1.

Ver. 5. Lifted up mine hand] When I entered in to a solemn covenant with them, pursuant to the oath which I had sworn to their fathers (see Exod. vi. 8). Lifting up the hand was a ceremony used in taking an oath (see Gen. xiv. 22), and thereupon and made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the LORD your God;

6 In the day that I lifted up mine hand unto them, to bring them forth of the land of Egypt into a land that I had espied for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands:

7 Then said I unto them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

8 But they rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me: they did not every man cast away the abominations of their eyes, neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt: then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt.

9 But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, among whom they were, in whose sight I made myself known unto them, in bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt.

10 ¶ Wherefore I caused them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness.

11 And I gave them my statutes, and shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them.

12 Moreover also I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the LORD that sanctify them.

13 But the house of Israel rebelled against me applied to God himself, Deut. xxxii. 40. The same expression is used ver. 6, 15, 23, 42, of this chapter. The same ceremony in taking an oath is mentioned by Homer, Εὐχεται χεῖρας ἀνασχέων.

Made myself known unto them] By appearing unto Moses, and showing myself present among them by the wonders I wrought for their deliverance.

I am the Lord your God] I am the God whom you ought to serve, and none else (see Exod. xx. 2, 3).

Ver. 6. Into a land that I had espied for them.] I performed the office of a spy, before those that were sent to search out the land, Numb. xiii. 16, and chose it out of all others to bestow it upon them. So God is said "to go before them to search out a place to pitch their tents in," Deut. i. 33, Numb. x. 33. The expressions in both places import, that every step the people took, till their settlement in the land of Canaan, was under the immediate care and conduct of providence.

Flowing with milk and honey.] Judea is often called a land "flowing with milk and honey," both upon account of its own fruitfulness, the seed sown frequently bringing forth a hundred-fold (see Gen. xxvi. 12, Matt. xiii. 8); and also from God's particular blessing upon it (see Deut. xi. 12). The great numbers of inhabitants which it nourished is an evident proof of its fertility (see note on Jer. xxxiii. 22). It might justly be called the "glory of all lands," because it was the place of God's especial residence (see Ps. xlvi. 2, Dan. xi. 16, 41, 45).

Ver. 7. Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes.] Lift not up your eyes to idols (see xviii. 6). One of the chief allurements to the worship of images is, that, by way of indulgence to men's imaginations, they exhibit a visible object of adoration. This was what the Israelites were so fond of, when they said to Aaron, "Make us gods to go before us," Exod. xxxii. 1.

Defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt.] The Israelites, while they dwelt in Egypt, learned the idolatries of that country (see xxiii. 3, 8, Lev. xvii. 7, xviii. 3, Deut. xxix. 16, Josh. xxiv. 14). Some learned men suppose that the golden calf was copied from the Egyptian idolatry (see Selden, De Diis Syris, Syntagm. lib. i. cap. 4).

Ver. 8. I will pour out my fury upon them.] Such a threatening as this is nowhere recorded in scripture, no more than that which follows, ver. 23 of this chapter. Without question God might have justly cut them off in Egypt, for the idolatries and other sins they had there committed, and never exerted his power for their deliverance.

Ver. 9.] This is elsewhere assigned as the reason why God did not punish the Israelites according to their deserts: viz. because it would turn to God's dishonour in the judgment of the heathen world, as if he were not able to make good those gracious promises he had given them (see xxxvi. 21, 22, Exod. xxxii. 12, Numb. xiv. 13, &c. Deut. ix. 28). This was a proper consideration to check the vain presumption of the Jews, who imagined that God's gracious dealings with them were owing to their own deserts (see ver. 44 of this chapter, and xxxvi. 22).

Ver. 11. I gave them my statutes.] A favour not afforded to other nations (see Deut. iv. 8, Ps. cxlvii. 20). Such a treasure as David prizes above thousands of gold and silver, Ps. cxix. 72.

Which if a man do, he shall even live in them.] By life is meant in the Old Testament, all that happiness which is contained in the literal sense of the promises belonging to that covenant (compare ver. 25, Deut. xxx. 15, &c. Ps. lxi. 32, Amos v. 4). Under these were mystically comprehended the promises of a better life, wherein God will bestow upon his servants the peculiar marks of his favour (see Ps. xvi. 11). These promises were made over to the Jews, upon condition of their punctual obedience to the whole law (Lev. xviii. 5, xxvi. 3, &c. Deut. xxvii. 26): and several persons, under that dispensation, are styled blameless, by reason of the sincerity of their obedience, though it was not perfect or unsinning (see Luke i. 6, Phil. iii. 6). But if we understand the forementioned condition in its rigorous sense, as implying an exact and unsinning obedience, and as the word life contains the promise of eternal life under it, which promise the Jews expected and hoped to obtain (see Matt. xix. 16, 17, Acts xxxvi. 6, 7): I say the condition of the old covenant thus expounded, as it was impossible to be performed, so no person could lay claim to eternal life by virtue of any promise therein contained. From whence St. Paul infers the necessity of seeking to Christ, and laying hold of the promises of his gospel, for the obtaining justification and eternal life (Gal. iii. 12, 21).

Ver. 12.] The setting apart the seventh day for God's worship, was a sign of his setting apart the Jews to be his peculiar people, and the worshippers of the true God, who "in six days made heaven and earth, and rested the seventh day" (see Exod. xxxi. 13, 17, Neh. ix. 14). The sabbath likewise was instituted as a memorial of their deliverance out of Egypt, and the rest they enjoyed afterward (see Deut. v. 15).

Ver. 13. Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness.] See Numb. xiv. 22, Ps. lxxviii. 40, xcv. 8—10. My sabbaths they greatly polluted.] Particularly in in the wilderness: they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; and my sabbaths they greatly polluted; then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them in the wilderness, to consume them.

14 But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, in whose sight I brought them out.

15 Yet also I lifted up my hand unto them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands;

16 Because they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my sabbaths: for their heart went after their idols.

17 Nevertheless mine eye spared them from destroying them, neither did I make an end of them in the wilderness.

18 But I said unto their children in the wilderness, Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols:

19 I am the LORD your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them;

20 And hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the LORD your God.

21 Notwithstanding the children rebelled against me: they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; they polluted my sabbaths: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness.

22 Nevertheless I withdrew mine hand, and wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, in whose sight I brought them forth.

23 I lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries;

24 Because they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my sabbaths, and their eyes were after their fathers' idols.

25 Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live;

26 And I polluted them in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire all that their going to gather manna on that day, against my express command, confirmed by an extraordinary descent of the manna on the day foregoing (Exod. xvi. 25, &c.).

Ver. 14. I wrought, &c.] See ver. 9.

Ver. 15.] I solemnly swore (see ver. 5). they should not enter into that rest which I had designed for them (see Numb. xiv. 28, Ps. xcv. 11, cvi. 26).

Ver. 16. Their heart went after their idols.] They still had a hankering after the idolatries they had learned in Egypt, to which they added new idols, which they had seen in the countries through which they travelled; viz. the idols of the Midianites, Amorites, &c. (see Numb. xv. 39, xxv. 2, Deut. xxix. 16, 17, Ainos v. 25, 26, compared with Acts vii. 42).

Ver. 17. Mine eye spared] See Ps. lxxviii. 38.

Ver. 18.] This refers to the many pathetic exhortations contained in the book of Deuteronomy, particularly those in the twenty-ninth, thirtieth, thirty-first, and thirty-second chapters, which were uttered after that rebellious generation were all consumed, according as God had threatened them (see Numb. xiv. 32, 33, xxvi. 64, 65): and were designed as warnings to succeeding generations (see Deut. xxxi. 16, 21).

Ver. 21. The children rebelled against me.] See Numb. xxi. 5, xxv. 2, Deut. ix. 24, xix. 18, 19, xxxi. 27, Ps. lxxviii. 32.

They polluted my sabbaths.] Profaning the sabbath and committing idolatry are often joined together (see ver. 16, 24, xxii. 8, 9, xxiii. 37, 38, 1 Macc. i. 45): one great end of instituting the sabbath being to preserve the Jews from falling into idolatry (see ver. 12).

I would pour out my fury upon them.] God did punish the posterity of that rebellious generation very severely for their sins, particularly for their idolatry and fornication in the matter of Peor, Numb. xxv. 5, 9.

Ver. 23.] St. Jerome observes upon the place, that we do not read of any particular threatening denounced against the children of that rebellious generation. But the words may relate to those general denunciations against their disobedience.

which we find recorded, Lev. xxvi., Deut. xxviii., xxix. 20, &c., xxxi. 17, xxxii. 22, &c.

Ver. 25.] This some understand of the ceremonial law, as if it were given purely to be a check and restraint to that perverse people, consisting of numerous rites and observances, many of which had no intrinsic goodness in them. But I conceive the statutes here spoken of to be of a different nature from those mentioned ver. 11, because they have a quite contrary character given them: therefore I take the words to import, that God, in a just judgment for their disobedience to his own laws, gave them up to a reprobate mind, and suffered them to walk after the idolatrous and impious customs of the heathens round about them. And whereas, by obeying the laws and ordinances which he had given them, they might have lived happily (ver. 11), they became slaves to the vile and cruel practices of the heathen idolatries, so as to offer up their very children in sacrifice to idols, to the utter destruction of themselves and their posterity (ver. 26). This will appear to be the sense of the text, if we compare it with ver. 39, and with Deut. iv. 28, xxviii. 36, Jer. xvi. 13, in which texts God threatens them as a punishment for their neglect of his worship, to disperse them into the heathen countries, and thereby deprive them of an opportunity of serving him in public, and expose them to the peril of being seduced to idols. Just as David complains to Saul of the hardship of his exile, that it did lay him open to the temptation of serving the heathen gods (1 Sam. xxvi. 19).

Ver. 26. I polluted them in their own gifts.] I suffered them to pollute themselves (so the form hiphil is elsewhere used in the sense of permission: see the note on Isa. lxiii. 17) in those very gifts which by the law they were to dedicate to my service (see ver. 31, and xvi. 20, 21).

They caused to pass through the fire all that openeth the womb.] In offering their first-born sons in sacrifice to Moloch; the expression of "passing through the fire" is explained in the note upon Jer. xxxii. 35.

openeth the womb, that I might make them desolate, to the end that they might know that I am the Lord.

27 ¶ Therefore, son of man, speak unto the house of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me, in that they have committed a trespass against me.

28 For when I had brought them into the land, for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to them, then they saw every high hill, and all the thick trees, and they offered there their sacrifices, and there they presented the provocation of their offering; there also they made their sweet savour, and poured out there their drink-offerings.

29 Then I said unto them, What is the high place whereunto ye go? And the name thereof is called Bamah unto this day.

30 Wherefore say unto the house of Israel,

That I might make them desolate,] Their sin brought its own punishment along with it, destroying the hopes of families, and bringing them to utter desolation.

That I am the Lord,] See note upon vi. 7.

Ver. 27, 28. Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me,] Or, "Moreover in this," &c. The prophet proceeds to speak of other instances of idolatry which their fathers were guilty of after their settlement in the land of Canaan; and in which their posterity imitated them.

Then they saw every high hill, and all the thick trees,] Offering sacrifice upon mountains or high places was a piece of service at first performed by the Jews to the true God, before the temple was built (see 1 Kings iii. 2): and afterward was permitted for that purpose by godly kings, who were zealous in putting down all sorts of idolatry (see 1 Kings xv. 14, xxii. 43, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 17). But by degrees those places became appropriated to idolatrous worship, and upon that score are severely condemned (see vi. 13, xviii. 6, 2 Kings xxiii. 5, Isa. lvii. 5).

There they presented the provocation of their offering:] This is to be understood of their meat-offerings, being distinguished from their sacrifices already mentioned. The word in the Hebrew is mincha, which might more properly be rendered bread-offering, as appears by the several kinds of it reckoned up Lev. ii. and answers to the mola or farctum of the Romans. The meat-offering was particularly styled an "offering of a sweet savour" (see xvi. 19); but being offered to idols, it became abominable, and was turned into a provocation.

Ver. 29. What is the high place whereunto ye go?] The word bamah signifies an altar as well as a high place (see the note on xvi. 16): so the sense seems to be, What name is this altar called by, which you frequent? meaning, it is likely, the very altar belonging to the temple; is it not called bamah at this very time? which word properly denotes a high place. An evident token that idolatry is so much practised among you, that it hath occasioned the changing the very names of the places and things dedicated to God's worship. So that instead of the word mizbeach, the name which God appropriated to his own altar, the place is usually called bamah, a name taken from an idolatrous custom. Or the words may be expounded of some noted high place, which the Jews frequented to perform their idolatrous worship: and then the sense will be to this purpose: What is Thus saith the Lord God; Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations?

31 For when ye offer your gifts, when ye make your sons to pass through the fire, ye pollute yourselves with all your idols, even unto this day: and shall I be enquired of by you, O house of Israel? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be enquired of by you.

32 And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, that ye say, We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone.

33 ¶ As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you:

34 And I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out.

this high place, or bamah, which you frequent? Who bid you call it so? I named my altar mizbeach; but this place had its name from the heathen idolatry, and it still retains it.

Ver. 30. Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers?] The reproof would be more vehement if the words were rendered thus, "Are ye not polluted after the manner of your fathers; and do ye not commit whoredom?" &c., i. e. Do ye not walk in your fathers' sins and idolatries? notwithstanding all the warnings I have given you, and the severe instances of my displeasure against their practices, which ought to have terrified you from following their ill example. The particle of interrogation often implies a negative in it, as hath been observed upon the fourth verse of this chapter; to which sense the Vulgar Latin renders this verse, Certe in viis patrum vestrorum polluimini, &c.

Ver. 31. When ye offer your gifts,] See ver. 26.

Shall I be enquired of by you,] See ver. 3.

Ver. 32.] We find by the scripture history that the Jews had all along a fond desire of worshipping the gods of their neighbours, and could not bear that imputation of singularity which their peculiar way of worship exposed them to. They thought likewise by this means to live more undisturbedly among the heathens, whither they were led captive. God tells them there, that he will prevent this purpose of theirs from taking effect. And we find, from the very time of their return from the Babylonish captivity, they have been very cautious of committing idolatry, and scrupulous of making the least approaches toward it.

Ver. 33.] I will no longer try to reclaim you by the gentle methods of patience and forbearance, but will govern you as masters do ill servants, by stripes and corrections, and by this means cure you of your hankering after the heathen customs and idolatries.

Ver. 34.] This some understand of God's bringing his people out of the countries of the Moabites, Ammonites, and other neighbouring nations, whither many of them were carried captive, or went as voluntary exiles before the general captivity, by the Chaldeans (see Jer. xii. 14, xl. 11). But I conceive it is rather to be understood of the general restoration of the Jewish nation from the several parts of the world where they are dispersed; an event often spoken of in the prophets (see ver. 38, 41, and compare this and the following verses with several passages in the thirty-fourth, thirty-sixth, and thirty-seventh chapters of this prophecy).

35 And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face.

36 Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God.

37 And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant :

38 And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me : I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel : and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

39 As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God ; Go ye, serve ye every one his idols, and hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me : but pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.

40 For, in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me : there will I accept them, and

Ver. 35. Into the wilderness of the people.] The "wilderness of the people" may be equivalent to "the country where they sojourn" (ver. 38) ; so as to signify either the several dispersions of the Jewish nation, or rather some particular place or country through which they are to pass, in order to their return into their own land. The dissolution of a government is expressed in scripture by a wilderness state (see xix. 13). The Jews going into captivity, are said to "go out of the city, and dwell in the field" (Mic. iv. 10) : and the church under persecution is represented as "flying into the wilderness" (Rev. xii. 14). The phrase does likewise allude to the wilderness through which the Jews passed to the land of Canaan, in order to the trial of the obedient, and the destruction of the rebellious (compare ver. 36, 38, xxxviii. 8, and Hos. ii. 14).

There will I plead with you] I will convict you of your crimes, so that you shall not be able to deny your guilt, but shall humbly acknowledge that you have deserved those punishments I have, or shall bring upon you (compare xvii. 20, xxxviii. 22, and see the note upon Jer. ii. 9).

Ver. 36.] This relates to that solemn sentence, confirmed by an oath, whereby God irreversibly doomed the rebellious Israelites to perish in the wilderness, and never to enter into the land of promise (Numb. xiv. 28, &c.).

Ver. 37. I will cause you to pass under the rod.] I will take an exact account of you, as a shepherd does of his flock, and will sever between the good and the bad, between the sheep and the goats (see xxxiv. 17). The expression alludes to the custom of the shepherds who number their cattle by striking every one of them with a rod (see Lev. xxvii. 32, Jer. xxxiii. 13).

I will bring you into the bond of the covenant.] I will make you sensible that I have not forgotten my promises to your fathers, though you have forgotten your obligations to me, and the engagements implied in your entering into covenant with me. The words may be rendered, "I will bring you into the discipline of the covenant ;" the Hebrew verbs yasar and asar being of promiscuous signification ; and then the sense will be, I will revenge upon you the "quarrel of my covenant" (Lev. xxvi. 25), and assert my authority over you, by bringing you under chastisement, in order to your correction (see Amos iii. 2).

Ver. 38. I will purge out from among you the rebels.] I will separate the righteous from the wicked (see ver. 37), in order to destroy the latter, as I did the rebellious Israelites in the wilderness (Numb. xiv. 29, 30). Compare Ezek. xi. 21, xxxiv. 17, 20, Dan. xii. 1, Amos ix. 9, 10, where it is expressly said, that only those "shall be delivered, who are written in the book" of the living.

I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn.] See the note on ver. 35. The word country in the singular number may be equivalent to countries in the plural, ver. 41. The sentence alludes, as the former does, to the judgment denounced upon the rebellious Israelites, that their carcasses should fall in the wilderness, and themselves never enter into the land of Canaan ; which shall be only a portion for the righteous among them. This text, among many others, favours the opinion maintained by several authors, both ancient and modern, that the Jews, upon their conversion, shall return into their own land (compare xi. 14, xxviii. 25, see the note there, xxxiv. 13, xxxvi. 24).

Ver. 39. As for you,] You of the present generation.

Go ye, serve ye every one his idols.] An ironical permission, full of indignation and rebuke, sharply upbraiding them for despising those many warnings God had given them : and implying, that he was now resolved to forsake them, and give them up to strong delusions, as a just judgment for their abuse of the means of grace so long offered to them, and still rejected by them (compare Amos iv. 4, Ps. lxxxi. 11, 12, Rom. i. 28, 2 Thess. ii. 11, and see the note upon ver. 25 of this chapter).

But pollute ye my name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.] Whilst you offer your gifts, and make a present of your children to idols (see ver. 26, 31), do not call yourselves any longer my servants, nor pretend to pay your devotions in my temple, and thereby bring a reproach upon my name and worship (see xxxiii. 37-39).

Ver. 40. For in mine holy mountain.] In the Christian church, called God's holy mountain, in allusion to the temple at Jerusalem, built upon mount Moriah (see the notes upon xvii. 23, Isa. ii. 2). The prophet speaks here of the Jews as converted and united to the Christian church ; though some learned men are willing to believe, that, upon their conversion and return to their own country, certain privileges shall belong to the earthly Jerusalem, as the metropolis of that nation (see Isa. lxxv. 18, 19, lxxvi. 20, Jer. iii. 17, Joel iii. 17, &c.).

There shall all the house of Israel—serve me.] There shall be no more any such separation among you, as was when the ten tribes forsook the worship of God at Jerusalem (see xxxvii. 22, 23).

There will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings.] Requiring signifies the same with accepting, by a metonymy of the cause for the effect : just as seeking is sometimes used for finding (see Isa. lxxv. 1). In the same sense God is said not to require such instances of worship, in which he takes no delight (Isa. i. 11). Offerings signify in general every thing devoted to God's service, so as to comprehend tithes under it (Numb. xviii. 21, 26). The first-fruits were offered out of the fruits of the earth which were first ripe : of this kind was a sheaf of the corn, which was first reaped (Lev. xxiii. 10), part of the dough which was first baked there will I require your offerings, and the first-fruits of your oblations, with all your holy things.

41 I will accept you with your sweet savour, when I bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye have been scattered; and I will be sanctified in you before the heathen.

42 And ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers.

43 And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have committed.

44 And ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor ac-

(Numb. xv. 20), and, in general, the first of all the ripe fruits, Numb. xviii. 12, 13 (compare xlv. 30 with this text). This was computed to amount to the sixtieth part of the whole produce (see Ezek. xlv. 13). The prophet here expresses the Christian worship by those religious oblations, which were proper to his own time; as the other prophets frequently describe the state of the Christian church by representations taken from the Jewish temple and service (see Isa. xix. 19, lvi. 7, lx. 7, lxvi. 23). And even the primitive Christians brought oblations out of the first-fruits of their increase for the support of God's ministers and service, out of which the elements of the eucharist, and the love-feast which followed it, were provided; as appears from several testimonies of the ancient fathers, particularly of Irenæus (lib. iv. cap. 32, 34), who generally interpret those words of Christ (Matt. v. 23), "If thou bring thy gift to the altar," &c. of the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

Ver. 41. I will accept you with your sweet savour.] This is mentioned in opposition to the sweet savour of their offerings to idols (ver. 28).

When I bring you out from the people,] Or, as it may better be translated, "When I have brought you out of the people," &c. (compare xi. 17, xxxiv. 13, xxxvi. 24, xxxviii. 8).

I will be sanctified in you] I will procure honour to my name by the wonderful works, whether of justice or mercy, which I will show towards you (compare xxviii. 22, 25, xxxvi. 23, xxxviii. 23, xxxix. 27).

Ver. 42. Ye shall know that I am the Lord,] An epiphonema often used in this prophet by way of conclusion of some severe denunciation (see vi. 7): but in this and the forty-fourth verse, and some other places, added after the promises of grace and favour by which God makes his power known unto the world, as well as by his judgments (see xxxvi. 23, xxxviii. 23).

When I shall bring you [or, shall have brought you] into the country] See ver. 5.

Ver. 43. There shall ye remember your ways,] The prophets suppose that the conversion and restoration of the Jews shall be accompanied with a general repentance, and a deep remorse for their former misdoings (see xvi. 61, and the note there).

Ye shall loathe] See vi. 7, xvi. 63, xxxvi. 31.

Ver. 44.] When I have exerted my power in your deliverance, moved thereto not by any deserts of yours, but purely out of regard to my own honour, and the promises made to your fathers (see xxxvi. 22).

Ver. 46. Set thy face toward the south,] Direct thy looks and thy speech (see iv. 7, vi. 2) towards the land of Israel, and particularly towards Jerusalem, which lay southward of Chaldea (see i. 4, xxi. 2).

Drop thy word toward the south,] The gift of prophecy is compared to rain, or the dew of heaven, which makes everything fruitful (see Deut. xxxii. 2).

Such is the benefit of sound doctrine wherever it is received (compare Job xxix. 22, 23, Mic. ii. 6).

The forest of the south field;] By the "forest of the south field" is meant Jerusalem; the word forest being taken metaphorically in the prophets for a city; because its stately buildings resemble tall cedars standing in their several ranks (compare Jer. xxi. 14, xxii. 7, Zech. xi. 1).

Ver. 47. I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green—and every dry tree;] Fire is often taken in a general sense for God's severe judgments (compare xix. 13, xxii. 21, 31, xxx. 8), but it may here particularly denote the destruction of Jerusalem by fire: which the text saith shall devour both the green trees and the dry; i. e. the righteous as well as the wicked (see xxi. 3).

The righteous are elsewhere compared to green and flourishing trees, and the wicked to dry and withered ones, such as are only fit for the fire (see Ps. i. 3, Luke xxiii. 31, John xv. 5, 6).

All faces from the south to the north shall be burned] The destruction shall reach from one end of the land to the other (see xxi. 2, 4).

Ver. 49. They make this an argument for disregarding what I say, that I use so many similitudes and metaphorical expressions, that they cannot discover my meaning (compare xii. 9). Whereupon God commands him in the next chapter to speak the same thing in plain terms.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, and drop thy word toward the holy places, and prophesy against the land of Israel,

3 And say to the land of Israel, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I am against thee, and will draw forth my sword out of his sheath, and will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.

4 Seeing then that I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked, therefore shall my sword go forth out of his sheath against all flesh from the south to the north :

5 That all flesh may know that I the LORD have drawn forth my sword out of his sheath : it shall not return any more.

6 Sigh therefore, thou son of man, with the breaking of thy loins; and with bitterness sigh before their eyes.

7 And it shall be, when they say unto thee, Wherefore sighest thou? that thou shalt answer, For the tidings; because it cometh: and every heart shall melt, and all hands shall be feeble, and every spirit shall faint, and all knees shall be weak as water: behold, it cometh, and shall be brought to pass, saith the Lord God.

8 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, prophesy, and say, Thus saith the LORD; Say, A sword, a sword is sharpened, and also furbished:

10 It is sharpened to make a sore slaughter; it is furbished that it may glitter: should we then make mirth? it contemneth the rod of my son, as every tree.

11 And he hath given it to be furbished, that it may be handled: this sword is sharpened, and it is furbished, to give it into the hand of the slayer.

12 Cry and howl, son of man: for it shall be upon my people, it shall be upon all the princes of Israel: terrors by reason of the sword shall be upon my people: smite therefore upon thy thigh.

13 Because it is a trial, and what if the sword contemn even the rod? it shall be no more, saith the Lord God.

14 Thou therefore, son of man, prophesy, and smite thine hands together, and let the sword be

CHAP. XXI.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet, under the emblem of a sharp sword, foretells the destruction of Judea, and particularly of Jerusalem, and the country of the Ammonites, by the armies of Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 2. Set thy face toward Jerusalem.] See xx. 46. Drop thy word toward the holy places.] i. e. Towards the sanctuary or temple, and the several courts belonging thereto (see note on vii. 24).

Ver. 3. And will draw forth my sword] The sword of the king of Babylon, the instrument of my vengeance (see ver. 19, and xiv. 17).

Cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.] The command given by God (ix. 6), is to “slay young and old, both maids, little children, and women;” i. e. those that have not been guilty of idolatry and the other national sins, as well as those that have. Only the few mourners mentioned ix. 4, have a promise to escape. God’s absolute dominion will justify any temporal calamity he thinks fit to bring upon men; and every man is so much a sinner, that no evil which befalls him in this world, can be thought unjust with respect to God that inflicts it. But yet, when God punisheth men immediately by himself, as he did in the destruction of the old world, and of Sodom, it may be expected he should put a difference between the righteous and the wicked; as Abraham argues with him upon this subject, Gen. xviii. 23, 25.

Ver. 4. Against all flesh] See xx. 47.

Ver. 5. It shall not return any more.] “Into its sheath,” as the sense is more fully expressed, ver. 30, till it has executed my commands.

Ver. 6. Sigh, therefore,—with the breaking of thy loins;] Show all the tokens of grief and concern (compare ver. 13, 17), and let the sense of these impending judgments so deeply affect thee, as to make thee stoop, like one that is perfectly bowed down under the weight of them (compare Ps. xxxv. 14, xxxviii. 5, Isa. xxi. 3). God’s judgments, as they were represented to the minds of the prophets, did very often affect them with dreadful apprehensions; especially when they concerned their own people (see Jer. xxiii. 9, Dan. viii. 28, Hab. iii. 16).

Before their eyes.] Before the eyes of the elders of Israel (mentioned xx. 1), or of the Jewish captives, who could not but be touched with a tender sense of the calamities ready to befall their brethren in Judea.

Ver. 7. Every heart shall melt,] Men’s hearts and strength shall fail them for fear (see vii. 17).

Ver. 10. Should we then make mirth?] Men that are hardened in sin are apt to laugh at God’s judgments, and at those who give warning of them. This may be applied to those who spake peace unto the people, “when there was no peace” (xiii. 10).

It contemneth the rod of my son, as every tree.] It makes no distinction between the sceptre and common wood; between the branches of the royal family, descended from David and Solomon, whom I honoured with the title of being my sons (2 Sam. vii. 14, Ps. lxxxix. 26) and the meanest of the people (see ver. 12, 25—27, xix. 11, 14).

Ver. 11. The hand of the slayer.] Of the king of Babylon, the executioner of God’s judgments upon Judea (ver. 19).

Ver. 12. It shall be upon my people,—upon all the princes of Israel:] Both princes and people shall be involved in one common destruction. Concerning the princes of Israel, see the note upon xxii. 6.

Smite therefore upon thy thigh.] Use all the outward expressions of grief and mourning (compare ver. 6, 14, 17, vi. 11. xxxi. 19).

Ver. 13. It is a trial.] As all great calamities are styled (Job ix. 23, 2 Cor. viii. 2, Heb. xi. 26).

What if the sword contemn even the rod?] The sceptre and royal family (see ver. 10).

It shall be no more, saith the Lord] See ver. 27.

Ver. 14. Smite thine hands together.] See Numb. xxiv. 10, and ver. 12 of this chapter.

Let the sword be doubled the third time.] The expression may import, first, the slaughter made at the siege; then those that were slain at the taking of the city; in which number may be reckoned the sons of doubled the third time, the sword of the slain: it is the sword of the great men that are slain, which entereth into their privy chambers.

15 I have set the point of the sword against all their gates, that their heart may faint, and their ruins be multiplied: ah! it is made bright, it is wrapped up for the slaughter.

16 Go thee one way or other, either on the right hand, or on the left, whithersoever thy face is set.

17 I will also smite mine hands together, and I will cause my fury to rest: I the Lord have said it.

18 ¶ The word of the Lord came unto me again, saying,

19 Also, thou son of man, appoint thee two

Zedekiah, as also the chief priests and principal officers of state, who were taken and put to death immediately afterward (see ver. 14, and 2 Kings xxv. 7, 18—21), to these may be added, in the third place, those who were slain with Gedaliah (Jer. xli. 2, 3). But perhaps the expression, "Let the sword be doubled a third time," may mean no more than if the prophet had said, "Let the stroke be repeated twice and thrice," i. e. oftentimes. So that phrase is used Job xxxiii. 29, "All these things worketh God twice and thrice with man," where our translation very fitly expresses the sense oftentimes. A form of speech much like those elsewhere used, "For three transgressions and for four," Amos i. 3. "Give a portion to seven, yea, also to eight," Eccles. xi. 2.

Into their privy chambers.] Whither they went to hide themselves (see 1 Kings xxii. 25).

Ver. 15. I have set the point of the sword] The word ibchath, translated the point, is to be found but in this one place of the bible, and so is variously rendered by interpreters. Dr. Castell understands it of the destruction made by the sword, from the use of the word in the Ethiopic language.

It is made bright.] The Hebrew reads here and ver. 10, "It is made like lightning;" the same metaphor which we read in Virgil, Æn. iv.

—"Vaginaque eripit ensem Fulmineum."

"He drew his sword, which did like lightning blaze."

It is wrapped up for the slaughter.] Or rather, "It is sharpened for the slaughter," as the Chaldee translates menuttah, which is derived from the noun net, signifying an iron pen or stiletto.

Ver. 16. Go thee one way or other.] The words are directed to the sword, implying that God hath given it a large commission to go through the land without any restraint (see xiv. 17).

On the right hand, or on the left.] Either to the south, or to the north (ver. 4). Those two quarters of the world being expressed in the Hebrew language by the right and left (see the note on xvi. 46).

Ver. 17. I will also smite mine hands together.] To express my just indignation at their provocations (see ver. 14, xxii. 13).

I will cause my fury to rest:] See note on v. 13.

Ver. 19. Appoint thee two ways, that the sword of the king of Babylon may come:] God foreshows his prophet that the king of Babylon, coming with his army into Syria, and finding that the Ammonites had entered into a confederacy with Egypt, as well as Zedekiah, he was in doubt against which of the two people he should first make war, and committed ways, that the sword of the king of Babylon may come: both twain shall come forth out of one land: and choose thou a place, choose it at the head of the way to the city.

20 Appoint a way, that the sword may come to Rabbath of the Ammonites, and to Judah in Jerusalem the defended.

21 For the king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to use divination: he made his arrows bright, he consulted with images, he looked in the liver.

22 At his right hand was the divination for Jerusalem, to appoint captains, to open the mouth in the slaughter, to lift up the voice with shouting, to appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort.

the decision of this matter to his arts of divination, described ver. 21.

Ver. 20. To Rabbath of the Ammonites.] Rabbath, otherwise called Rabbah (xxv. 5) was the chief city of the Ammonites (see 2 Sam. xii. 26, Jer. xlix. 2).

In Jerusalem the defended.] Which had been strongly fortified, first by David (2 Sam. v. 9), then by Solomon (1 Kings ix. 24), afterward by Hezekiah (2 Chron. xxxii. 5), and then by Manasseh (Ibid. xxxiii. 14).

Ver. 21. To use divination: he made his arrows bright.] This way of divining by arrows is thus described by St. Jerome in his commentary upon this place: "They wrote on several arrows the names of the cities they intended to assault; and then putting them all together promiscuously in a quiver, they drew them out thence as lots are drawn; and that city whose name was writ on the arrow first drawn, was the city they first made war upon." Perhaps from this custom the verb hatsah, or hatsats, from whence hets, an arrow, is derived, comes to signify the parting or dividing anything by lot, in which sense it is used Job xli. 6, Prov. xxx. 27.

He made his arrows bright.] Or rather, "he mingled his arrows," as the Vulgar Latin translates it; which sense of the verb kikal agrees better with the description of this kind of divination already given; and therefore is preferred by Dr. Pocock, who confirms this exposition from the Arabic use of the word. See his notes in Specim. Hist. Arab. p. 329, where he treats at large of this manner of divination.

He consulted with images.] The Hebrew reads seraphim, which word, as it signifies some image or visible representation of a deity, so consequently it must be taken in an ill sense for an idolatrous worship, in which sense it is certainly used, 1 Sam. xv. 23, 2 Kings xxiii. 24, Zech. x. 2. Dr. Spencer takes a great deal of pains to prove that the word is sometimes taken for a sort of divine oracle, and is equivalent to the urim, by which the high priest received an answer when he consulted God upon emergent occasions (see his third book De Legibus Hebr. Dissert. ult. de Urim et Thummim).

He looked in the liver.] This was another noted sort of divination, which was taken from lucky or unlucky tokens which appeared in the entrails of the sacrifices when they were slain, called aruspicina by the Romans.

Ver. 22. At his right hand was the divination for Jerusalem.] When the king of Babylon stood at the head of two ways (ver. 21), to consult which of the two he should take, the tokens that were shown him, persuaded him to march with his army to the right, i. e. towards Jerusalem.

23 And it shall be unto them as a false divination in their sight, to them that have sworn oaths: but he will call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken.

24 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have made your iniquity to be remembered, in that your transgressions are discovered, so that in all your doings your sins do appear; because, I say, that ye are come to remembrance, ye shall be taken with the hand.

25 ¶ And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, 26 Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high.

27 I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him.

28 ¶ And thou, son of man, prophesy and say,

To appoint captains,] Whose office it was to encourage the army to fall upon their enemies, and destroy them (see Jer. l. 15).

To cast a mount,] See Jer. xxxii. 24.

Ver. 23. It shall be unto them as a false divination in their sight,] The king of Judea and his courtiers will despise all these preparations of war, though directed against them, as if they were grounded upon the false arts of divination; whereas it is indeed God himself that directs the march of the Chaldean army to revenge the perjury which Zedekiah and his counsellors were guilty of, in breaking that solemn oath of fealty which he made to the king of Babylon (see xvii. 13, 15).

He will call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken,] Nebuchadnezzar will remember Zedekiah's breach of his oath, and revenge himself by taking the city, and making him and his subjects prisoners of war.

Ver. 24.] Because your sins cry to heaven for vengeance, ye shall fall into the hands and power of the king of Babylon.

Ver. 25. And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel,] The words are directed to Zedekiah, whom the prophet calls profane and wicked, chiefly with respect to his breaking that solemn oath uttered in the name of God, whereby he had engaged himself to be tributary to the king of Babylon (see xvii. 19). "With God is no respect of persons;" in like manner, when the prophets speak to kings in the name of God, they lay aside those titles and expressions of respect which are otherwise due to the regal dignity (see 1 Sam. xiii. 13, 1 Kings xviii. 18, 2 Kings iii. 13, 14).

Whose day is come, whose iniquity shall have an end,] The day of whose calamity is near at hand, when his and his people's iniquity shall receive their just doom (compare vii. 6, xxx. 3, xxxv. 5).

Ver. 26. Remove the diadem, and take off the crown,] The words crown and diadem, are equivalent, and put to signify the kingly ornaments of dignity (see Isa. lxii. 3). Indeed the crown is elsewhere taken for the emblem of sovereignty, and the diadem or mitre for the proper ornament of the priesthood, and so the Chaldee paraphrase expresses the sense of the verse in these words, "Remove the mitre from Seraiah the chief priest, and I will take away the crown from Zedekiah the king." But I conceive this sense does not so well agree with the

Thus saith the Lord God concerning the Ammonites, and concerning their reproach; even say thou, The sword, the sword is drawn: for the slaughter it is furnished, to consume, because of the glittering:

29 Whiles they see vanity unto thee, whiles they divine a lie unto thee, to bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain, of the wicked, whose day is come, when their iniquity shall have an end.

30 Shall I cause it to return into his sheath? I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity.

31 And I will pour out mine indignation upon thee, I will blow against thee in the fire of my wrath, and deliver thee into the hand of brutish men, and skillful to destroy.

32 Thou shalt be for fuel to the fire; thy blood shall be in the midst of the land; thou shalt be no more remembered: for I the LORD have spoken it.

design of the place, where the judgment threatened is spoken only of Zedekiah.

This shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high,] Things shall not continue in their present state: as Zedekiah shall be brought down from his kingly dignity, so another branch of that family (viz. Christ, see ver. 27), shall be advanced from an obscure, original and low condition, to the supreme degree of sovereignty (compare xvii. 24).

Ver. 27. I will overturn—it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is,] After that Zedekiah is deprived of his regal authority, there shall be no more kings of that family till Christ come, the king so often foretold and promised, who in due time shall "reign upon the throne of his father David," and "of whose kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke i. 32, 33). After the captivity, some of the priests of the Assamonean race did assume the style and title of kings: but they not being of the tribe of Judah, could have no just right to that honour.

Until he come whose right it is,] In this sense the LXX. understand the word Shiloh, Gen. xlix. 10, translating it there, ὅς ἀποστείλει, "To whom it is reserved;" as if that Hebrew word were equivalent to sheloh, "whose it is," as the learned P. Fagius hath observed in his notes upon the Targum of that text.

Ver. 28. Thus saith the Lord God concerning the Ammonites,] They insulted over the calamities of their brethren the Jews, for which they are often reproved very severely by the prophets, and threatened with the like judgments (see xxv. 2, 6, Zeph. ii. 8, 10).

Ver. 29. Whiles they divine a lie unto thee,] While the soothsayers and pretenders to divination foretell nothing but happy events (see xiii. 23, xxii. 28).

To bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain,] To add thee to the number of those who are slain in Judea (ver. 14, 15), and make thy condition like theirs.

Of the wicked, whose day is come,] See ver. 25.

Ver. 30. Shall I cause it to return? See ver. 4, 5.

I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created,] Thou shalt not be carried captive, but shalt be destroyed in thine own land (see ver. 32).

Ver. 31. I will blow] Compare xxii. 20—22.

Ver. 32. No more remembered:] See xxv. 10.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 MOREOVER the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Now, thou son of man, wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the bloody city? yea, thou shalt shew her all her abominations.

3 Then say thou, Thus saith the Lord God; The city sheddeth blood in the midst of it, that her time may come, and maketh idols against herself to defile herself.

4 Thou art become guilty in thy blood that thou hast shed; and hast defiled thyself in thine idols which thou hast made; and thou hast caused thy days to draw near, and art come even unto thy years: therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries.

5 Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art infamous and much vexed.

6 Behold, the princes of Israel, every one were in thee to their power to shed blood.

7 In thee have they set light by father and mother: in the midst of thee have they dealt by oppression with the stranger: in thee have they vexed the fatherless and the widow.

8 Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my sabbaths.

9 In thee are men that carry tales to shed blood: and in thee they eat upon the mountains: in the midst of thee they commit lewdness.

10 In thee have they discovered their fathers' nakedness: in thee have they humbled her that was set apart for pollution.

11 And one hath committed abomination with his neighbour's wife; and another hath lewdly defiled his daughter-in-law; and another in thee hath humbled his sister, his father's daughter.

12 In thee have they taken gifts to shed blood; thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortion, and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God.

13 ¶ Behold, therefore I have smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made, and at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee.

14 Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee? I the LORD have spoken it, and will do it.

15 And I will scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries, and will consume thy filthiness out of thee.

16 And thou shalt take thine inheritance in thyself in the sight of the heathen, and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

17 And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross: all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace; they are even the dross of silver.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Be-

Ver. 8.] Thou hast profaned the things dedicated to my service, and the times and places set apart for the same purpose (compare ver. 26, xxiii. 38, and Lev. xix. 30).

Ver. 9. Men that carry tales to shed blood.] That bear false witness against men in capital cases (see Lev. xix. 16).

Ver. 12. Taken gifts to shed blood.] The judges have taken bribes, not only to pervert justice, but even to take away the lives of the innocent.

Ver. 13. I have smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain.] I have expressed mine indignation at these unjust practices (see xxi. 14, 17).

Ver. 14. Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong.] On the contrary, "All hearts shall melt, and all hands shall be feeble" at the approach of God's judgments, xxi. 7.

I the Lord have spoken it.] See xxiv. 14.

Ver. 15. And will consume thy filthiness out of thee.] I will purge thee "in the furnace of afflictions," and take that method to consume thy dross, and put an end to thy idolatrous practices (compare ver. 18, 19, &c. xxiii. 27).

Ver. 16.] Instead of being mine inheritance, and under my peculiar care and protection, thou shalt be cast out among the heathen, and there eat the fruit of thine own ways, and receive the just reward of thy wickedness. The margin of our bibles reads, "Thou shalt be profaned in thyself," &c. Which I think expresses the sense much better; taking the verb nihal in the same sense, wherein it is used vii. 24, and xxv. 3, of this prophecy; i. e. Thou shalt no longer enjoy the privileges of a city called by my name, and set apart for my residence, but shalt be laid open as common ground, to be profaned by infidels (compare Isa. xlvii. 6).

Ver. 18—20.] Their filthiness may fitly be compared to the mixture of dross and baser metals with cause ye are all become dross, behold, therefore I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem.

20 As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it; so will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you.

21 Yea, I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof.

22 As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof; and ye shall know that I the Lord have poured out my fury upon you.

23 ¶ And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, say unto her, Thou art the land that is not cleansed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation.

25 There is a conspiracy of her prophets in the midst thereof, like a roaring lion ravening the prey; they have devoured souls; they have taken the treasure and precious things; they have made her many widows in the midst thereof.

26 Her priests have violated my law, and have the pure silver; and as that is purified by being melted in a furnace or crucible, so Jerusalem, when it is set on fire, shall be the furnace wherein I will cast them and their wickedness to be consumed (compare Jer. vi. 28, 30). God's severe judgments are expressed by the "furnace of affliction," Isa. xlviii. 10, and compared to "a refiner's fire," Isa. i. 25, Mal. iii. 2, because they are designed to purge men from that dross and corruption, which is too often the effect of ease and prosperity.

Ver. 21.] God's vengeance is often compared to fire (see xx. 47.). But here it was so in a literal sense, when both city and temple were consumed by fire (2 Kings xxv. 9).

Ver. 24.] God had, in the foregoing verses, compared his anger to fire: in pursuance of which metaphor he adds, that if the wholesome advice and admonition of the prophets (compared to the dew or rain coming from heaven, xx. 46), had been but duly received, they would have supplied the place of rain, and washed away the filth of the land: so that it needed not to have been purged or cleansed by fire. The Chaldee paraphrase expounds the sense thus, "Thou art the land in which there have been no good works done to protect it in the day of God's curse or indignation."

Ver. 25. There is a conspiracy of her prophets] i. e. Of the false prophets (see the note upon Jer. xxix. 1). These are often reproved for making a gain of their profession (see Jer. vi. 13, Mic. iii. 5, 11).

They have devoured souls, &c.] They make merchandise of men's souls; or else they take away their lives by false accusations, and then seize upon their substance (ver. 27, and Matt. xxiii. 14).

Ver. 26. Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things:] The gifts and sacrifices offered in my service: either by offering them in an undue manner, as the sons of Eli did (1 Sam. ii. 15), or without due purification of themselves; or else eating them as common meats, without regard to the rules prescribed in the law (Lev. xxi. xxii.).

They have put no difference between the holy and profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they showed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them.

27 Her princes in the midst thereof are like wolves ravening the prey, to shed blood, and to destroy souls, to get dishonest gain.

28 And her prophets have daubed them with untempered mortar, seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not spoken.

29 The people of the land have used oppression, and exercised robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy: yea, they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully.

30 And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it: but I found none.

31 Therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them; I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath: Their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, saith the Lord God.

profane.] They have not shown any regard to the rules the Levitical laws laid down, whereby to distinguish betwixt what is holy or unholy, clean or unclean, and that both with respect to persons and things. And they are guilty of this neglect, in contradiction to an express charge given them concerning this matter (Lev. x. 10).

And have hid their eyes from my sabbaths.] They have not attended upon my public worship on the sabbath-days (see 2 Chron. xxix. 7), and thereby have encouraged my people in the neglect and profanation of that day (see ver. 8).

Ver. 27.] The chief officers of state under the king (see Jer. xxxvi. 12, xxxviii. 4): not excluding the kings themselves, whose oppressions of their subjects the prophet elsewhere severely reproves (see xix. 3, 6, xlv. 9). All those, the text saith, stick at no method of injustice and oppression, whereby they may increase their substance, though it be by taking away the lives and estates of the innocent (compare Isa. i. 23, Mic. iii. 1, &c. Zech. iii. 3).

Ver. 28. Have daubed them with untempered mortar.] Have daubed over the evil practices of the great men by palliating devices (see xiii. 6. 10).

Ver. 29. The people of the land have used oppression.] See Jer. v. 26, vi. 13.

They have oppressed the stranger wrongfully.] Contrary to an express prohibition of God's law, frequently repeated and urged upon them from the consideration that they themselves were strangers in Egypt (see Exod. xxii. 21, xxiii. 9, Lev. xix. 33, 34).

Ver. 30. I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge—but I found none.] This general complaint may be expounded with some restriction (such as is commonly understood in unlimited expressions). For we read, ix. 4, that there was some that did "sigh and cry to God," by way of deprecating his wrath, "for the abominations done in Jerusalem" (see the like expression, Jer. v. 1, and the note upon that place).

That should make up the hedge, &c.] See xiii. 5.

Ver. 31.] See ix. 10, xi. 21, xvi. 43.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, there were two women, the daughters of one mother:

3 And they committed whoredoms in Egypt; they committed whoredoms in their youth: there were their breasts pressed, and there they bruised the teats of their virginity.

4 And the names of them were Aholah the elder, and Aholibah her sister: and they were mine, and they bare sons and daughters. Thus were there names; Samaria is Aholah, and Jerusalem Aholibah.

5 And Aholah played the harlot when she was mine; and she doted on her lovers, on the Assyrians her neighbours,

6 Which were clothed with blue, captains and rulers, all of them desirable young men, horsemen riding upon horses.

7 Thus she committed her whoredoms with them, with all them that were the chosen men of Assyria, and with all on whom she doted: with all their idols she defiled herself.

8 Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt; for in her youth they lay with her, and they bruised the breasts of her virginity, and poured their whoredom upon her.

9 Wherefore I have delivered her into the hand of her lovers, into the hand of the Assyrians, upon whom she doted.

10 These discovered her nakedness: they took her sons and her daughters, and slew her with the sword: and she became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her.

CHAP. XXIII.

ARGUMENT.—The idolatries of Samaria and Jerusalem are here represented under the metaphor of the lewd practices of two common harlots: for which crimes God denounces severe judgments against them both. The same metaphor is here made use of, which was pursued at large in the sixteenth chapter (see the argument there).

Ver. 2.] Countries are commonly represented as mothers of their people, and the inhabitants as their children: so the “daughters of Syria” signify the inhabitants of that country (xvi. 57). Thus Samaria and Jerusalem are described in this chapter as sisters, the offspring of the same land or country (compare xvi. 46, Jer. iii. 7, 8, 10).

Ver. 3.] They committed whoredoms in Egypt; They learned to commit idolatry there (see xx. 7, 8). It has already been observed, that idolatry is often represented as spiritual adultery (see xvi. 15, &c. and see the note upon xx. 8).

They committed whoredoms in their youth: The time when the Israelites were in Egypt, or were lately departed out of it, is called their youth in the prophets, because that was the time when God first owned them for his people (see ver. 8, 19, xvi. 8, 22, 60, Jer. ii. 2, Hos. ii. 15).

There were their breasts pressed. “There they served idols, and there they corrupted their ways,” as the Chaldee paraphrase expresses the sense. The scripture commonly calls idolatrous churches and nations by the name of harlots; and, in like manner, honours those who preserve their allegiance to God pure and undefiled, with the title of chaste wives, or virgins (see 2 Cor. xi. 2, Rev. xiv. 4, xix. 7, xxi. 2).

Ver. 4.] The word Aholah signifies, Her tent or tabernacle: Aholibah donotes, My tent or tabernacle is in her. These two different appellations imply, that Samaria had indeed a tabernacle or place for public worship, but of her own devising, viz. the cities of Dan and Beth-el, where the golden calves were set up; whereas God’s tabernacle first, and afterward his temple, was placed in Jerusalem. He placed his name there, or chose it for the place of his peculiar residence (1 Kings viii. 29). Why Aholah is called the elder sister, see the note on xvi. 46.

Ver. 5. Aholah played the harlot when she was mine; After she had lived in covenant with me, and attended upon my service and worship all the time of the judges, and of David and Solomon, she fell off from my service, and was the first that established idolatry by a law, and consented to Jeroboam’s wicked device of setting up the golden calves.

She doted on her lovers,] i. e. Her foreign allies, whose idolatries she was fond of, and hoped by that means to procure their friendship and assistance (see the note on xvi. 33, 37).

On the Assyrians her neighbours,] The king of Assyria was a very potent prince, and thereupon his alliance was courted both by the kings of Israel and Judah (see 2 Kings xv. 29, xvi. 7, and ver. 12 of this chapter).

Ver. 6. Which were clothed with blue, captains and rulers,] As women are apt to fall in love with comely young men well mounted and richly clothed; so the Israelites were enamoured with the state and bravery of the Assyrians, and thought themselves secure if they could but procure their alliance and friendship; and in order to it embraced their idolatries.

Horsemen riding upon horses.] Horses were scarce in Judea, which made the Jews apply themselves to the neighbouring countries for troops of horse in any hostile invasion (see Isa. xxx. 16, xxxi. 2, xxxvi. 8).

Ver. 7. Thus she committed her whoredoms] “She defiled herself with her idols,” as the sense is more plainly expressed at the end of the verse.

Ver. 8. Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt: She added new idolatries to those she had formerly committed (see ver. 3).

Ver. 9.] God made these very Assyrians the executioners of his judgments upon the ten tribes: many of them being carried away captive by Pul, king of Assyria (1 Chron. v. 25, 26), afterward by Tiglath-pileser (2 Kings xv. 29), and at length the whole country was subdued and depopulated by Shalmaneser (2 Kings xvii. 6). The kings of Babylon were likewise styled kings of Assyria (see 2 Kings xxii. 29, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11). Lovers mean the same with allies, those whose friendship and assistance the Jews courted, by complying with them in their idolatries (see xvi. 37).

Ver. 10. They took her sons and her daughters,] They carried her and her children away captive, stripped and bare (compare ver. 29, and xvi. 37, 39).

Slew her with the sword:] Compare ver. 47, and xvi. 40. Those that were not led captive were slain in the field of battle, or in the siege of Samaria, 2 Kings xvii. 5.

She became famous among women;] The Hebrew

11 And when her sister Aholibah saw this, she was more corrupt in her inordinate love than she, and in her whoredoms more than her sister in her whoredoms.

12 She doted upon the Assyrians her neighbours, captains and rulers clothed most gorgeously, horsemen riding upon horses, all of them desirable young men.

13 Then I saw that she was defiled, that they took both one way.

14 And that she increased her whoredoms: for when she saw men pourtrayed upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans pourtrayed with vermillion,

15 Girded with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads, all of them princes to look to, after the manner of the Babylonians of Chaldea, the land of their nativity:

16 And as soon as she saw them with her eyes, she doted upon them, and sent messengers unto them into Chaldea.

17 And the Babylonians came to her into the reads, "She became a name among women:" as she had been formerly "renowned among the heathen for her beauty" (xvi. 14); so now she was everywhere talked of as a remarkable instance of God's vengeance, and set forth for an example to other cities and nations, to deter them from the like abominations (see ver. 48, and xvi. 41).

For they had executed judgment] See ver. 24.

Ver. 11.] Jerusalem was so far from taking warning by the judgments inflicted upon Samaria, that she advanced to greater degrees of idolatry (see ver. 14, xvi. 47, 51, Jer. iii. 8, and the notes upon those places).

Ver. 12.] Compare ver. 1. The king of Judah, Ahaz, entered into a confederacy with the king of Assyria, hoping for relief from his power and the bravery of his army, and serving his idols to that end (see 2 Kings xvi. 7, 11, 2 Chron. xviii. 16, 23).

Ver. 13. They took both one way.] Both of them were like common harlots, impudent in their idolatries, and irreclaimable (compare Jer. iii. 13).

Ver. 14.] These were probably the pictures of those deified heroes whom the Chaldeans worshipped as gods: such were Bel, Nebo, and Merodach, mentioned Isa. xli. 1, Jer. l. 2.

Ver. 15. Girded with girdles upon their loins.] A girdle was a mark of dignity, and worn as such by princes and men in authority (see 1 Sam. xviii. 4, Isa. xxii. 21).

In dyed attire upon their heads,] The Chaldeans, and afterward the Persians, wore a sort of turbans upon their heads, with different degrees of ornaments, according to their different qualities.

Ver. 16.] These images pleased her so much, that she sent to Babylon to learn the manner how their idols were to be worshipped (see ver. 40, 41, and xvi. 17). This probably relates to those times when a correspondence was maintained between the cities of Babylon and Jerusalem, after that Nebuchadnezzar had conquered Judea, and made it a tributary kingdom, in the beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim (see 2 Kings xxiv. 1, Dan. i. 1, 2, and the notes upon Jer. xxii. 19).

Ver. 17. The Babylonians came to her into the bed of love,] The metaphor of representing idolatry by the inordinate lust of adultery is still carried on.

Her mind was alienated from them.] She quickly bed of love, and they defiled her with their whoredom, and she was polluted with them, and her mind was alienated from them.

18 So she discovered her whoredoms, and discovered her nakedness: then my mind was alienated from her, like as my mind was alienated from her sister.

19 Yet she multiplied her whoredoms, in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the land of Egypt.

20 For she doted upon their paramours, whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.

21 Thus thou calledst to remembrance the lewdness of thy youth, in bruising thy teats by the Egyptians for the paps of thy youth.

22 ¶ Therefore, O Aholibah, thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will raise up thy lovers against thee, from whom thy mind is alienated, and I will bring them against thee on every side;

23 The Babylonians, and all the Chaldeans, Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa, and all the Assygrew weary of these too, as lewd women are of their former gallants, and look out for new ones. She broke her league and covenant with them, as St. Jerome very well expresses the sense; meaning that covenant which Jehoiakim made with Nebuchadnezzar, to be his tributary (compare ver. 16, 22, 23): and was afterward renewed by Zedekiah (see xvii. 15).

Ver. 18. So she discovered her whoredoms.] The sense might better be expressed, "After she had discovered," &c. the sense being still continued with the foregoing verse.

Then my mind was alienated from her,] As she, by her idolatries, had broken all the bonds of duty and allegiance whereby she was engaged to me, a sin often compared to a wife's disloyalty towards her husband: so I withdrew my love and affection from her, and resolved to give her a bill of divorce, as the prophet Jeremy expresses it, and not own her any more as mine, as I had cast off her sister Samaria (compare Jer. iii. 8, vi. 8, Hos. ii. 2).

Ver. 19.] Though she was fond of new idolatries, she did not forget her old ones, even those which she had learned in Egypt (see ver. 3).

Ver. 20. She doted upon their paramours,] Upon the idols of Egypt, and the impure rites which accompany their idolatrous worship (see the notes upon xvi. 26). This may relate to the time when Zedekiah entered into a new confederacy with Egypt (see ver. 21, and xvii. 15): which made the people fond of admitting the Egyptian idolatries.

Ver. 22. I will raise up thy lovers against thee, from whom thy mind is alienated.] I will execute my judgments upon thee by those very Babylonians, whose alliance and idolatries thou hast been so fond of (see ver. 9): but since hast broken the league thou madest with them, contracting a new one with Egypt, and thereby hast provoked them to revenge thy perfidiousness (see ver. 17).

Ver. 23. The Babylonians, and all the Chaldeans, Pekod, &c.] The inhabitants of the several provinces of the Babylonish monarchy. Pekod is mentioned as a province of Babylon, Jer. l. 21. St. Jerome upon the place understands these three words, Pekod, Shoa, and Koa, in an appellative sense, to denote so many titles or degrees of honour, as much as to say, governors, princes, and great men. In which sense the two former words, Pekod (or Pakud) rians with them: all of them desirable young men, captains and rulers, great lords and renowned, all of them riding upon horses.

24 And they shall come against thee with chariots, wagons, and wheels, and with an assembly of people, which shall set against thee buckler and shield and helmet round about: and I will set judgment before them, and they shall judge thee according to their judgments.

25 And I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall deal furiously with thee: they shall take away thy nose and thine ears; and thy remnant shall fall by the sword: they shall take thy sons and thy daughters; and thy residue shall be devoured by the fire.

26 They shall also strip thee out of thy clothes, and take away thy fair jewels.

27 Thus will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee, and thy whoredom brought from the land of Egypt: so that thou shalt not lift up thine eyes unto them, nor remember Egypt any more.

28 For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will deliver thee into the hand of them whom thou hatest, into the hand of them from whom thy mind is alienated:

and Shoa, are confessedly taken in scripture; and Koa is supposed to be derived from the verb kaang, which signifies printing marks in the flesh (Lev. xix. 28), and it was the custom of great men to distinguish themselves from their inferiors by such marks or prints (see Dr. Spencer, De Legib. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 14, sect. 1).

All of them desirable young men,] as their riches and bravery made them appear amiable in your eyes, when you first courted their alliance (ver. 12), so they shall appear in the same splendid equipage, when they come to invade your country, and to besiege your city; but then their gallant appearance shall strike a terror and consternation into you.

Ver. 24. They shall come against thee with chariots, &c.] A like description of warlike preparations may be seen xvi. 10, Jer. xlvii. 3, Nah. iii. 2, 3. Chariots are mentioned both by sacred and profane writers, as of principal use in the ancient way of fighting.

I will set judgment before them, &c.] I will deliver thee into their power, as the ministers of my justice, who shall make thy punishments bear a correspondence with thy guilt (see ver. 45).

Ver. 25. I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall deal furiously with thee:] They shall punish thee with that fury, with which a man in the rage of jealousy shall treat a wife that hath been unfaithful to him (compare xvi. 38).

They shall take away thy nose, &c.] As husbands, in that case, render those women deformed, whose beauty hath been too pleasing to strangers; so shall the Chaldeans deface all the glories and ornaments of Jerusalem; and after they have slain and carried captive its inhabitants, shall set the city on fire, and reduce it to a heap of ashes (compare xvi. 41).

Ver. 26.] See ibid. ver. 37, 39.

Ver. 27. Thus will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee,] These severe judgments shall effectually deter thee from idolatry, and make thee abhor the least approaches towards it (see xxii. 15). Accordingly we find, that, after the captivity, the Jews never returned to their former idolatrous practices.

Thy whoredom brought from—Egypt:] Where 29 And they shall deal with thee hatefully, and shall take away all thy labour, and shall leave thee naked and bare: and the nakedness of thy whoredoms shall be discovered, both thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

30 I will do these things unto thee, because thou hast gone a whoring after the heathen, and because thou art polluted with their idols.

31 Thou hast walked in the way of thy sister; therefore will I give her cup into thine hand.

32 Thus saith the Lord God; Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large: thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision; it containeth much.

33 Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation, with the cup of thy sister Samaria.

34 Thou shalt even drink it and suck it out, and thou shalt break the sherds thereof, and pluck off thine own breasts: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

35 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast forgotten me, and cast me behind thy back, therefore bear thou also thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

36 ¶ The Lord said moreover unto me; Son thou didst first learn idolatry, and ever since hast had an inclination towards it (see ver. 3, 19).

Thou shalt not lift up thine eyes] See xviii. 6.

Ver. 28.] The Chaldeans, that were thy lovers formerly (ver. 22); but since thou hast broken thy league and friendship with them, thy love is turned to hatred (see ver. 17).

Ver. 29. They shall deal with thee hatefully,] As thou hast requited their love with hatred, so shall they deal with thee; their hatred against thee shall be greater than their former love towards thee, which was the conclusion of Ammon's unlawful love to his sister (2 Sam. xiii. 15). This shall prompt them to take a full revenge upon thy perfidiousness, to consume all the fruits of thy labours, and to take away all the wealth thou hast gathered by thine industry.

Shall leave thee naked] See note on xvi. 37.

Ver. 31—33.] God's judgments are often compared to a cup of intoxicating liquors, because they astonish men, and bereave them of common judgment and discretion, and likewise expose them to the scorn and contempt of their enemies (see Jer. xxv. 15, &c., xlviii. 26, Hab. ii. 16).

Ver. 34. Thou shalt even drink it and suck it out,] The sorest and heaviest of God's judgments shall fall to thy share; like those that drink a potion off to the bottom, where the most nauseous part of it is settled (see Ps. lxxv. 8, Jer. li. 17).

Thou shalt break the sherds thereof and pluck off thine own breasts:] Thou shalt behave thyself as drunken people do, who first throw away, or break in pieces, the cup, and then are angry with themselves as the cause of their own misfortunes. The text mentions her breasts, as the parts which had a principal share in her guilt, according to the allegorical description here given of her idolatries (see ver. 3, 21).

Ver. 35.] Because thou hast not only forsaken my worship, but hast shown the utmost contempt and aversion towards me (see the note upon viii. 16), thou shalt deservedly bear the punishment due to thine idolatries (compare ver. 17, 19, 30, 49).

Ver. 36.] See note on xx. 4.

of man, wilt thou judge Aholah and Aholibah? yea, declare unto them their abominations;

37 That they have committed adultery, and blood is in their hands, and with their idols have they committed adultery, and have also caused their sons, whom they bare unto me, to pass for them through the fire, to devour them.

38 Moreover this they have done unto me: they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my sabbaths.

39 For when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and, lo, thus have they done in the midst of mine house.

40 And furthermore, that ye have sent for men to come from far, unto whom a messenger was sent; and, lo, they came: for whom thou didst wash thyself, paintedst thy eyes, and deckedst thyself with ornaments,

Ver. 37.] They have committed adultery with their idols, as it follows, and have slain their children in sacrifice to them (see xvi. 21).

Ver. 38. They have defiled my sanctuary, &c.] By coming within the precincts of it, polluted with idolatry (see the following verse, and xxii. 8).

Ver. 39.] The words may be expounded of their setting up idols in the very temple, and worshipping them there (see 2 Kings xxi. 4).

Ver. 40. Ye have sent for men to come from far, &c.] See ver. 16. Their courting the alliances of foreign nations, by complying with their idolatries, is set forth under the representation of the several arts which harlots use to recommend themselves to new lovers (compare Isa. lvii. 7, 9, Hos. ii. 13).

For whom thou didst wash thyself,] A custom generally practised by women before the time of their nuptials (see Ruth iii. 3).

Paintedst thy eyes,] Or, "thy face," as the phrase is translated 2 Kings ix. 30 (see note upon Jer. iv. 30).

Ver. 41. And satest upon a stately bed, and a table prepared before it.] The expressions denote their sitting down with idolaters and partaking of their sacrifices: the words altar and table are used promiscuously in the prophets (see Mal. i. 7), because all sacrifices were feasts made of offerings dedicated to God's service: so that he was properly the entertainer, and those that did partake of the sacrifices were his guests, that did eat at his table, in token of their being in covenant and friendship with him. What was consumed upon the altar was God's mess or portion, and is therefore called the "bread of God" (see xlv. 7, Lev. xxi. 6), and the "food of the Lord" (Lev. iii. 11). The remainder of the sacrifices his guests were entertained with, either by themselves, as in peace-offerings, or else by their proxies the priests, as in sin-offerings (see Mr. Mede's discourse of the Christian sacrifice, chap. 7). The Jews, as well as the Romans, lying upon beds or couches at their meals (see Isa. lvii. 7). So did other eastern nations (see Esther i. 6).

Thou hast set mine incense] See xvi. 18.

Ver. 42. A voice of a multitude being at ease was with her:] All sorts of expressions of joy were heard at these meetings: such as music and dancing, which usually accompanied idolatrous festivals (see Exod. xxxii. 6, 18, 19).

Sabeans] The Sabeans. The word is translated drunkards in the margin: the word saba in the Hebrew, signifies to drink to excess, from whence comes 41 And satest upon a stately bed, and a table prepared before it, whereupon thou hast set mine incense and mine oil.

42 And a voice of a multitude being at ease was with her: and with the men of the common sort were brought Sabeans from the wilderness, which put bracelets upon their hands, and beautiful crowns upon their heads.

43 Then said I unto her that was old in adulteries, Will they now commit whoredoms with her, and she with them?

44 Yet they went in unto her, as they go in unto a woman that playeth the harlot: so went they in unto Aholah and unto Aholibah, the lewd women.

45 ¶ And the righteous men, they shall judge them after the manner of adulteresses, and after the manner of women that shed blood; because they are adulteresses, and blood is in their hands.

the participle seba'im, drunkards, which comes very near in sound to the word Sabaim in the text. Strabo, in his tenth book of Geography, p. 471, speaking of the rites of Bacchus, mentions the word Σάβι as used among others in the Bacchanal processions: which he supposes may have been derived, as well as several of their musical instruments, from the Barbarians, by which the Greeks denote the eastern countries. To the same purpose we find in Hesychius, Σάβος, Βακχία. The prophet persists in comparing the idolatries of the Jews to the practices of lewd women, who prostitute themselves to all comers, even those of the meanest condition. Such were the Sabeans that came from the wilderness: i. e. from Arabia, called the Desert, where dwelt the posterity of Seba, mentioned Gen. x. 7. These were probably some of those idolatrous people dwelling in the wilderness, whom Jeremiah mentions, ix. 26, who polled the corners of their heads in honour of some idol whom they worshipped (see the note upon that place).

Which put bracelets upon their hands, and beautiful crowns upon their heads.] i. e. Upon the hands and heads of these two lewd women, Aholah and Aholibah (see ver. 45). Bracelets and crowns were ornaments proper to brides (see xvi. 11, 12); and were likewise presented by lovers to their mistresses. Crowns were likewise worn at public festivals, and times of rejoicing (see Isa. xxxv. 10): whereupon the Hebrew phrase is translated here and ch. xvi. by the LXX. Στέφανον κικύρισται, "a crown of rejoicing;" an expression probably taken from hence by St. Paul, 1 Thess. ii. 19.

Ver. 43.] The words import, that it was time for her to leave off her ill courses, that age and experience might sufficiently convince her of the follies of them; but withal they imply, that age and time seldom correct ill habits. The word her is taken collectively in this and the following verse, so as to include both the sisters. So the singular number is used, Ps. xii. 7: "Thou shalt preserve him from this generation for ever;" where our interpreters rightly observe in the margin, that the word him signifies every one of them.

Ver. 44.] Both Samaria and Jerusalem defiled themselves with the idolatries of all the heathen round about them (compare ver. 7, 17).

Ver. 45. The righteous men, they shall judge them] By righteous or just men some understand the Babylonians, who, though a wicked and idolatrous people, were the executioners of God's justice upon a nation 46 For thus saith the Lord God; I will bring up a company upon them, and will give them to be removed and spoiled.

47 And the company shall stone them with stones, and dispatch them with their swords; they shall slay their sons and their daughters, and burn up their houses with fire.

that had sinned against a clearer light and greater convictions. So Nebuchadnezzar and other heathen princes are called God's servants, as being instruments of his providence. But the expression may in a more proper sense be understood of the prophets who foretold the judgments God would inflict upon Samaria and Jerusalem; such as Hosea, Amos, Jeremiah, &c. The prophets are said to execute those judgments which they foretell: so Ezekiel saith of himself, that "he was sent to destroy the city" (xliii. 3); i. e. to prophesy its destruction. To the same sense we read, Hos. vi. 5, "I have hewed them by my prophets, I have slain them by the words of my mouth" (see notes upon Isa. vi. 10, Jer. i. 10, v. 14).

48 Thus will I cause lewdness to cease out of the land, that all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness.

49 And they shall recompense your lewdness upon you, and ye shall bear the sins of your idols: and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

The manner of adulteresses,] See ver. 37, and xvi. 38.

Ver. 46.] This is meant chiefly of the Babylonians, who should plunder and carry away captive a great part of the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

Ver. 47. Shall stone them] See xvi. 40.

They shall slay their sons] See ver. 25.

Ver. 48. Lewdness to cease] See ver. 27.

That all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness,] See notes upon ver. 10, and xvi. 41.

Ver. 49. Ye shall bear the sins of your idols:] Ye shall bear the punishment due to your sins of idolatry. To bear sin, or iniquity, is a noted expression in scripture, signifying the undergoing the punishment due to it (compare ver. 35).

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 AGAIN in the ninth year, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, write thee the name of the day, even of this same day: the king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem this same day.

3 And utter a parable unto the rebellious house, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Set on a pot, set it on, and also pour water into it:

4 Gather the pieces thereof into it, even every good piece, the thigh, and the shoulder; fill it with the choice bones.

5 Take the choice of the flock, and burn also the bones under it, and make it boil well, and let them seethe the bones of it therein.

6 ¶ Wherefore thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the bloody city, to the pot whose scum is therein, and whose seum is not gone out of it! bring it out piece by piece; let no lot fall upon it.

7 For her blood is in the midst of her: she set it upon the top of a rock; she poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust;

8 That it might cause fury to come up to take vengeance; I have set her blood upon the top of a rock, that it should not be covered.

CHAP. XXIV.

ARGUMENT.—By the figure of a boiling pot is shown the destruction of Jerusalem and its inhabitants; and by Ezekiel's being forbidden to mourn for his wife is signified, that the calamities of the Jews shall be so astonishing, as to be beyond all expressions of sorrow.

Ver. 1. In the ninth year,] Of Jehoiachin's captivity (see i. 2).

Ver. 2.] See Jer. lii. 4, 2 Kings xxv. 1.

Ver. 3. Utter a parable unto the rebellious house,] Add this emblem or parable concerning a boiling pot to the rest thou hast delivered to them: though they seem resolved not to give heed to what thou deliverest, either in plain words or figurative expressions (compare xvii. 12, xx. 49).

Set on a pot, &c.] The destruction of Jerusalem is represented by a boiling pot or caldron, both by Jeremiah, l. 13, and by Ezekiel, xi. 3.

Ver. 4. Even every good piece,] Meaning the chief of the citizens, who should be destroyed together with the city (see xi. 3).

Ver. 5. Take the choice of the flock,] This belongs in sense to the former verse; so the LXX. translate the words, joining them with the foregoing sentence; "With the choice bones taken out of the flock."

Burn also the bones under it,] The bones of those who have been unjustly slain in the midst of the city (see xi. 7); whose blood cries for vengeance against it, and kindles God's anger like fire.

Make it boil well,] To denote the city's being set on fire (see ver. 10, 11).

Ver. 6. Woe to the bloody city,] See xi. 6, xvi. 30, xxii. 3, xxiii. 37.

Whose scum is therein,] Whose filthiness is not purged out of it (see ver. 13).

Bring it out piece by piece;] The principal men of the city (see ver. 4) shall be carried out of the city by the Chaldeans, and afterward slain (see xi. 7, 9).

Let no lot fall upon it,] Conquerors used to cast lots what share of the vanquished they would save (see 2 Sam. viii. 2, Joel iii. 3, Nah. iii. 10). Here there will be no use of lots, for all the principal inhabitants shall be slain (see Jer. xxxix. 6).

Ver. 7. She set it upon the top of a rock;] In a presumptuous manner, and with a high hand she shed it, as the Chaldee paraphrase expresses the sense: she was impudent and barefaced in her cruelties: she did not seek to cover or excuse them.

She poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust;] The words allude to the command of the law, Lev. xvii. 13, that they cover the blood of any beast or other living creature which was slain with dust; which precept was not only intended to prevent their eating of blood, but also to give men a sort of horror or aversion to the sight of bloodshed.

9 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the bloody city! I will even make the pile for fire great.

10 Heap on wood, kindle the fire, consume the flesh, and spice it well, and let the bones be burned.

11 Then set it empty upon the coals thereof, that the brass of it may be hot, and may burn, and that the filthiness of it may be molten in it, that the scum of it may be consumed.

12 She hath wearied herself with lies, and her great scum went not forth out of her: her scum shall be in the fire.

13 In thy filthiness is lewdness: because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.

14 I the Lord have spoken it: it shall come to pass, and I will do it; I will not go back, neither will I spare, neither will I repent; according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ Also the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

Ver. 8. I have set her blood upon the top of a rock.] Her punishment shall be as notorious in the sight of the world as her sin was.

Ver. 9, 10.] The inhabitants shall be the materials prepared by their sins to be consumed like fuel in the fire.

Ver. 10. Spice it well.] The expression imports that the Chaldeans shall be as much set upon destroying the city and inhabitants, as hungry people are greedy of devouring meat well spiced and dressed.

Let the bones be burned.] The words denote an utter destruction, that the fire shall be so fierce as to consume the very bones as well as the flesh put into the caldron.

Ver. 11.] After an entire riddance of the inhabitants, the city itself shall be set on fire, and the place and its wickedness be consumed together in the flames.

Ver. 12. She hath wearied herself with lies.] The word teunim, never met with but in this place, is commonly derived from aven, which signifies trouble or vanity, and is a word frequently applied to idols, as particularly when Beth-el is stiled Beth-aven, upon the account of the golden calf there set up, Hos. iv. 15. For these reasons I understand the expression here, "She hath wearied herself with lies," of the people's multiplying their idolatries; idols being elsewhere called lies, and seeking relief sometimes from one idol, sometimes from another, but all in vain, (see xvi. 29, 30, xxiii. 16, 19, 40).

Her great scum went not forth out of her:] All the admonitions I gave her by my prophets, availed nothing to the purging her from her idolatries and other wickedness; so that now the fire must purge and consume her and her sins.

Ver. 13. In thy filthiness is lewdness:] Thou hast shown thyself shameless and incorrigible in thine idolatries (compare xxiii. 29, 35).

Because I have purged thee, &c.] I did what was requisite on my part towards thy conversion, but thou refusedst to comply with those frequent calls and exhortations I gave thee (see note on Jer. xxxi. 18); and therefore my spirit shall not strive with thee any longer, but I will proceed to execute my judgments upon thee.

16 Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke: yet neither shalt thou mourn nor weep, neither shall thy tears run down.

17 Forbear to cry, make no mourning for the dead, bind the tire of thine head upon thee, and put on thy shoes upon thy feet, and cover not thy lips, and eat not the bread of men.

18 So I spake unto the people in the morning: and at even my wife died; and I did in the morning as I was commanded.

19 ¶ And the people said unto me, Wilt thou not tell us what these things are to us, that thou doest so?

20 Then I answered them, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 21 Speak unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will profane my sanctuary, the excellency of your strength, the desire of your eyes, and that which your soul pitieth; and your sons and your daughters whom ye have left shall fall by the sword.

22 And ye shall do as I have done: ye shall not cover your lips, nor eat the bread of men,

23 And your tires shall be upon your heads,

Till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.] See note v. 13, viii. 18.

Ver. 14.] See xxiii. 24.

Ver. 16. The desire of thine eyes] Thy wife, the object of thy love and thy affections (see ver. 18.)

Ver. 17. Bind the tire of thine head upon thee.] Use the ordinary dress upon thine head; whereas in the time of mourning it was customary sometimes to shave the head (see Lev. xiii. 45, Jer. vii. 29, xvi. 6): sometimes to cast dust upon it (see Josh. vii. 6, 1 Sam. iv. 12). The priests were particularly forbid to uncover their heads in the time of mourning (see Lev. x. 6).

Put on thy shoes] Going barefoot was another expression of sorrow (see 2 Sam. xv. 30).

Cover not thy lips.] Covering the lips or face was another token of mourning (see Lev. xiii. 45, Mic. iii. 7, 2 Sam. xv. 30, Jer. xiv. 4).

Eat not the bread of men.] Partake not of the mourning feasts that relations use to prepare for the funerals of their friends (see the note on Jer. xvi. 5, 7). Such were the πένθητα and parentalia among the Greeks and Romans.

Ver. 18.] My wife died in the evening, and the next morning I declared what commands God had laid upon me, not to make any outward show or sign of mourning upon that occasion (compare xxxiii. 22). The evening was the beginning of the day according to the Jews' reckoning (see Gen. i. 5, Lev. xxiii. 32).

Ver. 19. Wilt thou not tell us what these things are to us.] They enquire by way of derision and contempt what these signs mean (compare xii. 9, xvii. 12, xx. 49).

Ver. 21. I will profane my sanctuary.] I will deliver my temple into the hands of the heathen, and they shall profane and destroy it (see vii. 19, 20). That temple wherein you placed your glory, and thought my residence there your greatest protection (compare ver. 25, and see Ps. lxxviii. 61, xcvi. 6, cv. 4, cxxxii. 8).

The desire of your eyes.] "The beauty of holiness," as the temple is often called, whose destruction will affect you with a most tender compassion.

Your sons and your daughters whom ye have left shall fall by the sword.] Whom ye left behind you in and your shoes upon your feet: ye shall not mourn nor weep; but ye shall pine away for your iniquities, and mourn one toward another.

24 Thus Ezekiel is unto you a sign: according to all that he hath done shall ye do: and when this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

25 Also, thou son of man, shall it not be in the day when I take from them their strength, the joy of their glory, the desire of their eyes, the city, when ye were carried captives: or who were left by the famine and pestilence (see v. 12. xxiii. 47).

Ver. 23. Ye shall not mourn nor weep;] These terrible judgments shall strike you with astonishment, and such a grief as is too great to be expressed by words or actions; according to the verse of the poet,

"Curæ leves loquuntur, ingentes stupent."

"Small evils we complain of, greater strike us dumb."

Ye shall pine away for your iniquities,] Ye shall waste away by a lingering grief, and by a silent lamentation over each other's calamities (see iv. 2, 17, Lev. xxvi. 39).

Ver. 24. Ezekiel is unto you a sign:] His actions foreshow you what shall be your condition (compare iv. 3, xii. 6). The holy writers in several places speak of themselves in the third person (see Exod. vi. 26, 1 Sam. xii. 11, Matt. ix. 9). So that this is an argument of very little force, when it is urged against Moses being the author of the Pentateuch.

When this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord] Comparing the prediction with the event, will convince the most obstinate, that the immediate hand of God is in the judgments which are come upon and that whereupon they set their minds, their sons and their daughters.

26 That he that escapeth in that day shall come unto thee, to cause thee to hear it with thine ears?

27 In that day shall thy mouth be opened to him which is escaped, and thou shalt speak, and be no more dumb: and thou shalt be a sign unto them; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

you (see vi. 7, and compare John xiii. 19, xiv. 29, xvi. 4).

Ver. 25.] When I shall take from them all that is dear and valuable to them; their temple, an emblem of my special residence among them, and protection over them, whose beauty and magnificence was their peculiar glory, and the most grateful object of their sight; together with their sons and daughters, whereon they placed their affection (see ver. 21).

Ver. 26.] See xxxiii. 21, 22.

Ver. 27. In that day shall thy mouth be opened to him which is escaped,] From this time to the time when the news comes of the city's being taken, thou shalt not prophesy any more to thine own people; but then will I give thee a new commission to speak (see xxxiii. 22), and that not by signs, as thou dost at present, but with freedom and plainness; the event so exactly answering thy predictions, shall give a new authority to what thou speakest (see iii. 26, xxix. 21, and compare Eph. vi. 19).

Thou shalt be a sign unto them;] They shall then be convinced, by experience, that thou didst foreshow by thy actions and behaviour all that should befall them. And this will likewise convince them of my foreknowledge and providence.

CHAPTER XXV.

1 THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against the Ammonites, and prophesy against them;

3 And say unto the Ammonites, Hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God; Because thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned; and against the land of Israel, when it was desolate; and against the house of Judah, when they went into captivity;

4 Behold, therefore I will deliver thee to the men of the east for a possession, and they shall set their palaces in thee, and make their dwellings in thee: they shall eat thy fruit, and they shall drink thy milk.

CHAP. XXV.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains God's judgments against the Ammonites, Edomites, and Philistines, for their hatred against the Jews, and insulting over them in the time of their distress. Archbishop Usher (in his annals ad A. M. 3419) and Josephus (Antiq. lib. x. cap. 11) place these events five years after the destruction of Jerusalem.

Ver. 2.] See note on vi. 2.

Ver. 3.] The Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites, though related in blood to the Jews, yet bore a constant hatred towards them, which they took all opportunities to show, when the Jews were under any distress, and particularly at the time of their general captivity, and the destruction of their city and temple. For this they are often reproved by the prophets, and threatened with the like or severer judgments, and particularly the Ammonites (see the note on xxi. 28).

Ver. 4. I will deliver thee to the men of the east]

By the "men of the east" must be meant the Chaldeans (see xxi. 19, 20). Ammon is likewise reckoned among these countries, which God foretold by Jeremy should be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon (see Jer. xxv. 21). By the east country is commonly meant Arabia in scripture, as hath been observed in the notes upon Isa. xi. 14, but Syria and Chaldea, and the countries beyond it, are likewise called the east (see Gen. xi. 2, Numb. xxiii. 7, Isa. ii. 6). Chaldea, indeed, lay northward of Judea and the adjacent countries (see l. 4); but withal lying with a point towards the east, the Chaldeans and their confederates may not improperly be reckoned among the men of the east; just as Cyrus is sometimes described as coming from the east, and sometimes from the north (Isa. xli. 25), with respect to his forces, that consisted both of Medes that lay northward, and Persians that lay eastward of Babylon.

Shall drink thy milk.] Milk was the chief sustenance of those people, whose riches consisted chiefly in their stocks of cattle. Hence the Scythians are called

5 And I will make Rabbah a stable for camels, and the Ammonites a couching-place for flocks: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

6 For thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast clapped thine hands, and stamped with the feet, and rejoiced in heart with all thy despite against the land of Israel;

7 Behold, therefore I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and will deliver thee for a spoil to the heathen; and I will cut thee off from the people, and I will cause thee to perish out of the countries: I will destroy thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

8 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; Because that Moab and Seir do say, Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen;

9 Therefore, behold, I will open the side of Moab from the cities, from his cities which are on his frontiers, the glory of the country, Beth-jeshimoth, Baal-meon, and Kiriathaim,

10 Unto the men of the east with the Ammonites, and will give them in possession, that

Galactophagi, by Homer, Iliad. iii. and Galactopota by other writers. The LXX. render the sense very well, "Shall drink or swallow thy fatness:" the word heleb signifying not only milk, but likewise the fattest or choicest parts of any flesh or fruits. So it is used Gen. xlv. 18, "Ye shall eat the fat of the land;" and Ps. lxxx. 16, where our translation reads, "The finest of the wheat," it is in the Hebrew, "The fat of the wheat."

Ver. 5. I will make Rabbah (see xxi. 20) a stable for camels,] Instead of being a city inhabited by men, it shall be a place for cattle, and particularly for camels to feed in, of which that and the neighbouring countries had great store. It is a proverbial expression for utter destruction, to say that grass grows where a town stood (compare Isa. xvii. 2, xxii. 10, xxxii. 14, Zeph. ii. 14, 15).

Ver. 6. Because thou hast clapped thine hands, and stamped with the feet,] Gestures that sometimes signify grief and indignation (see vi. 11): but are likewise used to express our joy and satisfaction (compare Job xxvii. 23, Jer. xlviii. 27, Lam. ii. 15).

With all thy despite] See ver. 3.

Ver. 8. Moab and Seir do say,] Seir is the same with Edom (see xxxv. 2). The prophet joins them together as guilty of the same crime, and then denounces particular judgments against each of them.

Judah is like unto all the heathen,] They are no longer distinguished from their neighbours by the visible protection of the God whom they worship.

Ver. 9. I will open the side of Moab from the cities,] I will make a passage for his enemies to invade his frontier cities, and from thence to possess themselves of the best of his country. Some translate the middle of the verse, "from the cities, even from Ar, his [city] upon his frontiers." Ar was the coast or "border of Moab" (Deut. ii. 18).

The glory of the country,] The best part of all the country of Moab; the Hebrew word is tsbi, frequently spoken of Judea, as being in many respects the glory of all lands (see xx. 6).

Baal-meon,] See Numb. xxxii. 38, Josh. xiii. 20, Jer. xlviii. 25. Baal-meon is called Beth-meon, in that place of Jeremy, and more fully Beth-baal-meon, Josh. xiii. 17, i. e. the house or "temple of the idol Meon," by which Bishop Cumberland understands Menys or Osiris, the great deity of the Egyptians; in the first book and the second chapter the Ammonites may not be remembered among the nations.

11 And I will execute judgments upon Moab; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

12 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; Because that Edom hath dealt against the house of Judah by taking vengeance, and hath greatly offended, and revenged himself upon them;

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will also stretch out mine hand upon Edom, and will cut off man and beast from it; and I will make it desolate from Teman; and they of Dedan shall fall by the sword.

14 And I will lay my vengeance upon Edom by the hand of my people Israel: and they shall do in Edom according to mine anger and according to my fury; and they shall know my vengeance, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; Because the Philistines have dealt by revenge, and have taken vengeance with a spiteful heart, to destroy it for the old hatred; of his treatise concerning Sanchoniathon's Phœnician History.

Ver. 10. Unto the men of the east] See ver. 4.

The Ammonites may not be remembered among the nations,] May make no figure among their neighbours, their strength being entirely broken.

Ver. 12.] The Idumeans, being the posterity of Esau, bare an ancient grudge against the Jews, upon the account of their ancestor's losing his right of primogeniture, and the subduing of Edom by David afterward (2 Sam. viii. 14). Upon both these accounts they took hold of all opportunities of venting their spite towards the Jewish nation, particularly see 2 Chron. xxviii. 17. For this their behaviour, they were in former times reproved by Amos, i. 11, and afterward by Obadiah, ver. 10, and by Ezekiel in this place, and xxxv. 5. The ill will that they showed towards them at the time of their captivity, was very remarkable, as appears by those pathetical words of Ps. cxxxvii. 7, "Remember the children of Edom, O Lord, in the day of Jerusalem; how they said, Down with it, down with it, even to the ground."

Ver. 13. Stretch out mine hand upon Edom,] See xxxv. 7—9, Jer. xlix. 17, 18, Zeph. ii. 9, Mal. i. 3, 4.

I will make it desolate from Teman,] Teman is a noted place in Idumea (see Jer. xlix. 7, Amos i. 12): to which Dedan is joined, ver. 8 (compare Isa. xxi. 13, 14). The Dedanites were originally Arabians, the posterity of Dedan, Abraham's grandson; but they seem afterward to have been incorporated with the Idumeans (see the note upon that place of Jeremiah).

Ver. 14.] The Jews themselves, whom the Edomites have so often insulted, shall be instruments of my vengeance upon Edom, and shall requite the wrongs they have received by subduing Idumea, which they did under the conduct of Judas Maccabæus (see 1 Macc. v. 3, 2 Macc. x. 16, 17; compare Jer. xlix. 2). And afterward the high-priest Hircanus made an entire conquest of this country (see Dr. Prideaux, par. ii. p. 307).

Ver. 15. The Philistines have dealt by revenge,] The Philistines, being borderers upon the Jews, were their ancient enemies from the very time of the judges downward, more particularly in the time of Ahaz (see 2 Chron. xxviii. 18).

Ver. 16. I will stretch out mine hand upon the 16 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will stretch out mine hand upon the Philistines, and I will cut off the Cherethims, and destroy the remnant of the sea-coast.

Philistines,] I will subdue them by Nebuchadnezzar (see ver. xxv. 20, xlvii. 1).

I will cut off the Cherethims] The Cherethims, or Cherethites, are the same with the Philistines, or a tribe of that people (see 1 Sam. xxx. 14, Zeph. ii. 5, and the notes upon Jer. xlvii. 4).

17 And I will execute great vengeance upon them with furious rebukes; and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall lay my vengeance upon them.

Destroy the remnant of the sea-coasts.] The same who are called the remnant of the Philistines; Amos i. 8, "the remnant of Ashdod," Jer. xxv. 20, and "the remnant of the country of Caph-tor," Jer. xlvii. 4 (see notes upon these last two places).

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 AND it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, because that Tyrus hath said against Jerusalem, Aha, she is broken that was the gates of the people: she is turned unto me: I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste:

3 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus, and will cause many nations to come up against thee, as the sea causeth his waves to come up.

4 And they shall destroy the walls of Tyrus, and break down her towers: I will also scrape her dust from her, and make her like the top of a rock.

5 It shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God: and it shall become a spoil to the nations.

6 And her daughters which are in the field shall be slain by the sword; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

CHAP. XXVI.

ARGUMENT.—This and the following chapter, with part of the twenty-eighth, foretell the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, who took it after a thirteen years' siege (as Josephus relates out of Philostratus, and the Phœnicians' Annals: see his Antiq. lib. x. cap. 11, ad fin. lib. i. contr. Appion. p. 1046) and in the thirty-second year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, according to the Babylonish account (see the note on xxix. 17). By reason of which hard service, "every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled," as our prophet speaks, xxix. 18. The same calamity is foretold by Isaiah, chap. xxiii. This siege forced the inhabitants to remove their effects into an island half a mile distant from the shore, where they built another city, called New Tyre. The learned Dr. Prideaux, in his Connex. of Script. Hist. par. i. p. 91, 484, hath observed, that this prophecy of Ezekiel, as well as the former one of Isaiah, was fulfilled in the destruction of old Tyre, a city that stood upon the continent, and which Nebuchadnezzar utterly destroyed; though he grants some expressions in both prophecies are applicable only to the last siege of that city, when it was conquered by Alexander the Great.

Ver. 1. In the eleventh year, in the first day of the month.] The particular month not being named, some supply the word fifth (as the word fourth is supplied, 2 Kings xxv. 3), and understand it of the month following the taking of Jerusalem, at whose desolation Tyre rejoiced (ver. 2). But, as Archbishop Usher observes, ad A. M. 3416, the fifth month belongs to the twelfth year of Jehoiachin's captivity. So we may more probably understand the expression of the first month of the year, as "the year of Evil-merodach's reign" (2 Kings xxv. 27), is rightly understood by our interpreters to be the year "when he began to reign;" so "the tenth day of the month" is necessarily to be understood of the first month, xl. 1 of this prophecy. And the inhabitants of Tyre may very well be supposed to insult over Jerusalem at any part of the time of her siege, which they saw must inevitably end in the taking of that city.

Ver. 2. She is broken that was the gates of the people:] There was a great confluence of people to Jerusalem from all parts at the solemn feasts of the year, as well of Jews as proselytes (see John xiii. 20).

She is turned unto me:] Her wealth is come into my stores (compare Isa. lx. 5).

I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste:] Tyre was a noted market for all sorts of trade: so when Jerusalem was taken and sacked, the spoil of the city was carried thither for sale, and, probably, several of the inhabitants being made captives, were sold there for slaves, a traffic the Tyrians dealt in very much (xxvii. 13). This interpretation may be confirmed by comparing it with Joel iii. 4—6, where the prophet upbraids the Tyrians for making merchandise both of the persons and substance of the Jews, when they came into their hands. To the same purpose we read, Macc. iii. 41, that when "Lysias came with great forces to subdue the Jews, the merchants of the country took silver and gold, and came into the camp, to buy the children of Israel for slaves."

Ver. 3.] The Chaldeans and their confederates (compare Jer. xxxiv. 1, li. 27), whom the prophet compares to the waves of the sea, which come up with an irresistible force (see Jer. li. 42). Armies are elsewhere represented by an inundation, that carries all before it (see Isa. viii. 7, Dan. ix. 26, xi. 22).

Ver. 4, 5.] I will make an entire riddance of her buildings, so that not so much as any dust or rubbish of them shall be left (compare ver. 12), and nothing shall be seen but the rocks upon the sea-shore, in the place where the city formerly stood. Nebuchadnezzar quite demolished old Tyre, and the stones and rubbish of it were afterward made use of by Alexander to carry on a causeway from the continent to the island where New Tyre stood, by which means he took that (see Dr. Prideaux, ubi supra). This latter city is since so decayed, that there are no remains of it left, but a few huts for fishermen to hang out their nets a drying upon the rocks, as it is related by travellers that have been upon the place (see Maundrell's Tra-

7 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, a king of kings, from the north, with horses, and with chariots, and with horsemen, and companies, and much people.

8 He shall slay with the sword thy daughters in the field: and he shall make a fort against thee, and cast a mount against thee, and lift up the buckler against thee.

9 And he shall set engines of war against thy walls, and with his axes he shall break down thy towers.

10 By reason of the abundance of his horses their dust shall cover thee: thy walls shall shake at the noise of the horsemen, and of the wheels, and of the chariots, when he shall enter into thy gates, as men enter into a city wherein is made a breach.

11 With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets: he shall slay the people by the sword, and thy strong garrisons shall go down to the ground.

12 And they shall make a spoil of thy riches, and make a prey of thy merchandise: and they shall break down thy walls, and destroy thy pleasant houses: and they shall lay thy stones and thy timber and thy dust in the midst of the water.

13 And I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease; and the sound of thy harps shall be no more heard.

vels, p. 48, and Huetius, Demonst. Evang. prop. vi. ad finem).

Ver. 6.] By "the daughters of Tyre" are meant the lesser towns which are under her jurisdiction, as the mother-city and seat of the kingdom (compare xvi. 46, and Jer. xlix. 2).

Ver. 7. A king of kings.] Who hath kings for his vassals and tributaries (see xvii. 14, 16, Dan. ii. 37). The kings of Persia affected the same title afterward (see Ezra vii. 12) as the kings of Assyria had done before (see Isa. x. 8, Hos. viii. 10).

Ver. 8, 9.] This expression of a siege properly relates to old Tyre, which stood upon the continent, and was besieged and taken by Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 9.] The word we render axes signifies any instrument used in demolishing buildings (see note on Jer. xxxiii. 4).

Ver. 10—12.] A lively description of the tumult and desolation that attend a conquering army making themselves masters of a great city (compare Nahum ii. 3, 4, 9, iii. 2, 3).

Ver. 11. Thy strong garrisons] Some render the word matseboth, thine images, and understand it of the images of their tutelary gods.

Ver. 12. In the midst of the water.] The sea shall overflow thy ruins (see ver. 19).

Ver. 13.] Great cities are full of all kinds of gaiety and luxury; this shall be turned into a melancholy silence (compare Isa. xiv. 11, xxiii. 7, 16, Jer. vii. 34, xxv. 10).

Ver. 14.] This part of the prophecy was fulfilled upon New Tyre, whose inhabitants were quite destroyed by Alexander when he took the city, and afterward the city itself became desolate (see ver. 5).

Ver. 15.] All those that are upon the sea-coast near thee shall be frightened at the news of thy destruction (compare xxvii. 28, xxxi. 16, Jer. xlix. 21).

Ver. 16, 17. All the princes of the sea, &c.] All

14 And I will make thee like the top of a rock; thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon; thou shalt be built no more: for I the Lord have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God to Tyrus; Shall not the isles shake at the sound of thy fall, when the wounded cry; when the slaughter is made in the midst of thee?

16 Then all the princes of the sea shall come down from their thrones, and lay away their robes, and put off their brodered garments: they shall clothe themselves with trembling; they shall sit upon the ground, and shall tremble at every moment, and be astonished at thee.

17 And they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and say to thee, How art thou destroyed, that wast inhabited of seafaring men, the renowned city, which wast strong in the sea, she and her inhabitants, which cause their terror to be on all that haunt it!

18 Now shall the isles tremble in the day of thy fall; yea, the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure.

19 For thus saith the Lord God; When I shall make thee a desolate city, like the cities that are not inhabited; when I shall bring up the deep upon thee, and great waters shall cover thee;

20 When I shall bring thee down with them that descend into the pit, with the people of old time, and shall set thee in the low parts of the earth, in places desolate of old, with them that go the princes and rich merchants of Sidon, Carthage, and other maritime cities, that maintained a trade with Tyre, and got great wealth by that means; they "whose merchants are princes," as Isaiah speaks of the merchants of Tyre, xxiii. 8 (compare ver. 2, 6, 10 of that chapter): they shall express a deep sense and concern for her misfortunes (compare xxvii. 30—32, xxxii. 10. Rev. xviii. 11, 17, 19).

Shall come down from their thrones, and lay away their robes.] Such was the behaviour of the king of Nineveh at the time of his solemn humiliation (Jonah iii. 6).

They shall clothe themselves with trembling;] They shall put on the habit of mourners, and sit upon the ground in a disconsolate condition (see Job ii. 13, compare vii. 17).

Ver. 17.] Tyre is called "the strength of the sea," Isa. xxiii. 4, being strong at sea, both by its situation and the strength of its naval forces, upon which account it was formidable to all that had any trading upon the sea.

Ver. 18. Now shall the isles tremble in the day of thy fall;] See ver. 15. St. Jerome translates it, "Now shall the ships tremble," &c. i. e. all seafaring men (compare xxvii. 29, 30, Isa. xxiii. 14).

The isles—shall be troubled at thy departure.] When thy people shall be carried captive (see Isa. xxiii. 27).

Ver. 19.] Thy walls being demolished, the sea shall come up and cover thy ruins (see ver. 12), or else the prophet compares the destruction of Tyre to a shipwreck (see xxiii. 26).

Ver. 20. When I shall bring thee down, &c.] When thou shalt be "thrust down into hell," as our Saviour speaks concerning Capernaum, Luke x. 15, and brought to utter desolation, like cities which have been long ago buried in ruins and oblivion (compare xxxii. 18, 24).

And I shall set glory in the land of the living;]

down to the pit, that thou be not inhabited; and I shall set glory in the land of the living;

21 I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more: though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, saith the Lord God.

Compare this and the following verse with xxxv. 14. When I shall restore other cities conquered by the king of Babylon, to that flourishing condition they formerly enjoyed among the inhabitants of this world; so the "land of the living" signifies, xxxii. 23, 26, 27, 32. The word tebi is in many places appropriated to Judea, as being in several respects the glory of all lands (xx. 6), but is sometimes applied to other countries (see xxv. 9). Some expositors understand it here of Judea, to this sense; That when God should return the captivity of the Jews, and restore them to those marks of his grace and favour, which distinguished them from all other nations, and made them the nearest resemblance of heaven that could be found upon earth: yet, even then, as it follows—

Ver. 21. I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more.] Thou shalt be left in utter ruins and desolation, and a terrible example of my vengeance. The word balaloth, which our interpreters translate terrors, is generally joined with words importing utter destruction, and so the LXX. understood it here, and in other places of this prophecy (see xxvii. 36, xxviii. 19, and compare Ps. lxxiii. 19, Isa. xvii. 14).

Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again.] An expression denoting utter destruction (see Ps. xxxvii. 36, and compare ver. 5, 14).

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Now, thou son of man, take up a lamentation for Tyrus;

3 And say unto Tyrus, O thou that art situate at the entry of the sea, which art a merchant of the people for many isles, Thus saith the Lord God; O Tyrus, thou hast said, I am of perfect beauty.

4 Thy borders are in the midst of the seas, thy builders have perfected thy beauty.

5 They have made all thy ship boards of fir trees of Senir: they have taken cedars from Lebanon to make masts for thee.

6 Of the oaks of Bashan have they made thine oars; the company of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory, brought out of the isles of Chittim.

7 Fine linen with broidered work from Egypt was that which thou spreadest forth to be thy sail; blue and purple from the isles of Elishah was that which covered thee.

CHAP. XXVII.

ARGUMENT.—The same subject is continued, where the prophet, setting forth the great trade and riches of Tyre, foretells the irrecoverable fall thereof.

Ver. 2. Take up a lamentation for Tyrus;] This alludes to the mournful ditties used at funerals, wherein the præfixæ, or mourning women, recounted every thing that was valuable or praiseworthy belonging to the deceased, and then lamented his loss (see the notes upon Jer. ix. 17, 18). In like manner, those that traded with Tyre should mourn over her, and bewail the loss of her riches and greatness (compare xxvi. 16, 17, and see ver. 32).

Ver. 3. Thou that art situate at the entry of the sea,] A sea-port, fitted by situation for carrying on trade with many countries (see Isa. xxiii. 1).

Thou hast said, I am of perfect beauty.] Thou hast said in the pride of thy heart (see xxviii. 2). The strength of my navy and fortresses are every way complete and beautiful (see ver. 4, 11): and I am furnished with all accommodations that can make me considerable in the eyes of the world (see ver. 10, 11, and xxviii. 12).

Ver. 4. Thy borders are in the midst of the seas,] Taking the words in a strict sense, they are a description of New Tyre, which stood in an island (compare xxvi. 5). The Tyrians are called the inhabitants of the island, Isa. xxiii. 2. But in the Hebrew phrase all places are called islands which lie upon the sea-coast (see the note on Isa. xi. 11).

Thy builders have perfected thy beauty.] The following verses show, that the words are chiefly to be understood of the builders of their ships, wherein the chief strength and glory of the Tyrians was placed.

Ver. 5.] The decks of thy ships were made of fir, fetched from mount Hermon, called anciently Shenir (see Deut. iii. 9).

Ver. 6. The Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory.] The Assyrians have made the seats for the rowers of ivory, in a very costly manner. This is the sense of the verse, if we follow the common reading: but Bochart, not without reason, supposes, that the word bath-ashurim is pointed wrong, and should be read bith-ashurim, and then the sentence must be translated, "They have made thy seats of ivory inclosed in box," the expression being parallel to that of Virgil, Æn. x.

— "Quale per artem
Inclusum buxo aut Orycia terebintho Luctet ebur."

This sense the Chaldee follows.

The isles of Chittim.] The "isles of Chittim" are the countries lying upon the coast of the Mediterranean sea (see Jer. ii. 10).

Ver. 7. Fine linen with broidered work from Egypt] Fine linen was one of the principal commodities of Egypt (see 1 Kings x. 28, Prov. vii. 16, Isa. xix. 9): and was a habit used by persons of the best quality (see Gen. xli. 42, Esther viii. 15): which shows to what an excess of vanity the Tyrians were come, to use such costly manufactures for sails to their ships. Suetonius, in his life of Caligula, cap. 37, reckons this among several instances of that emperor's extravagance, that he furnished his pleasure-boats with costly sails, and other expensive ornaments.

Blue and purple from the isles of Elishah] Blue and purple are elsewhere reckoned among those colours which set off the richest attire (see Exod. xxv. 4, Jer. x. 9). The common clothing of the Tyrians was of these kinds, which were brought from the islands of the Egean sea, particularly Coës, famed 8 The inhabitants of Zidon and Arvad were thy mariners: thy wise men, O Tyrus, that were in thee, were thy pilots.

9 The ancients of Gebal and the wise men thereof were in thee thy calkers: all the ships of the sea with their mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise.

10 They of Persia and of Lud and of Phut were in thine army, thy men of war: they hanged the shield and helmet in thee; they set forth thy comeliness.

11 The men of Arvad with thine army were upon thy walls round about, and the Gammadias were in thy towers: they hanged their shields upon thy walls round about; they have made thy beauty perfect.

12 Tarshish was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of all kind of riches; with silver, iron, tin, and lead, they traded in thy fairs.

13 Javan, Tubal, and Meshech, they were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market.

14 They of the house of Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses and horsemen and mules.

15 The men of Dedan were thy merchants; many isles were the merchandise of thine hand: they brought thee for a present horns of ivory and ebony.

for purple among heathen authors. Elishah denotes the countries upon the coast of Greece; a part of Peloponnesus retains the name of Elis among the Greek writers.

Ver. 8.] Thou madest use of the people of other cities and countries, to undergo the servile office of being mariners or rowers, whilst thy own citizens pretended to the skill of steering thy ships, and professed the art of being pilots. Zidon was a famous seaport town, the mother of Tyre (see the note on Isa. xxiii. 12); and Arvad, the same with Arpad or Arphad (2 Kings xvii. 33, Isa. x. 9, Jer. xlix. 23), called Aradus by the Greek and Latin authors, was an island and town in the neighbourhood of Tyre.

Ver. 9. The ancients of Gebal—thy calkers.] Thou employedst the inhabitants of Gebal for calking thy ships, as being remarkably skillful in that trade; Gebal was a province of Phœnicia near Tyre (see Ps. lxxxiii. 8, 1 Kings v. 18). The LXX. interpreters suppose it the same with the city Byblos, with whom agree Eusebius and St. Jerome, De Locis Hebraicis. So the Septuagint render the word in the forementioned text, 1 Kings v. 18. Dr. Grabe, indeed, does there, by way of emendation, read Γιββων in the text, and place Βιβλόν, the reading of the Alexandrian MS. in the margin; but that learned person did not then remember, that that very word was translated in the same manner in this place of Ezekiel.

Ver. 10. They of Persia and of Lud and of Phut] Thy citizens being all given to trading, thou madest use of foreign soldiers for thine army when thy city was besieged. Lud and Phut are two nations elsewhere mentioned together (see xxx. 5, Jer. xli. 9). Our interpreters understand by them in these two places, the people of Libya and Lydia. But Phut and Lubim being mentioned as distinct people, Nah. iii. 9, Phut probably signifies some part of Africa near Egypt; and Lud, or Ludim, the Abyssines. These people, though Africans, are joined with the Persians, xxxviii. 5.

They hanged the shield and helmet in thee;] In thy garrisons, which they kept in time of peace.

Ver. 11. The men of Arvad (see ver. 8) with thine army were upon thy walls] They defended thy walls when they were assaulted by the king of Babylon's army (see note upon xxvi. 8, 9).

The Gammadias were in thy towers.] It is very uncertain what people are here meant by this name. Our learned Mr. Fuller supposes them people of Phœnicia (see his Miscellanies, lib. vi. cap. 3). Ludolphus conjectures they were Africans, in his Comment. in Histor. Æthiop. lib. i. cap. 22. The Chaldee paraphrase takes them to be Cappadocians. The Vulgar Latin renders the word Rygmies; but if we should grant there were such a people as Ludolphus takes a great deal of pains to prove there were, yet they would not be fit to make use of for soldiers.—Gammadias: Dr. Speneer thinks they were images of the tutelary gods, like the lares among the Romans; and were not above a cubit in length (see his additions to the books De Legib. Hebraicis).

They have made thy beauty perfect.] See ver. 3.

Ver. 12. Tarshish was thy merchant] Tarshish probably signifies a port of Spain, called by the Greek and Latin authors Tartessus, situate not far from the place where Cadiz now stands; famous of old for Hercules's pillars, being the utmost boundary of the ancient navigation. It comes from thence to signify any merchant-adventurers who traded in the Mediterranean sea (see the note upon Isa. ii. 16). The commodities here mentioned, which these merchants traded in, being the product of Spain, confirms this exposition.

Ver. 13. Javan, Tubal, and Meshech.] By Javan is to be understood Greece, in which sense Alexander is styled king of Javan or Greece (Dan. viii. 21). So the LXX. translate it here, and in that place of Daniel. And all Greece, except Peloponnesus, was anciently called Jonia. Tubal, and Meshech, are names usually joined together in scripture. Bochart supposes them to be the same with those people afterward called Moschi and Tibareni, whose habitation was near the Euxine sea.

They traded the persons of men] In buying and selling slaves in the markets. The Hebrew reads, "In the souls of men;" the word nephesh, soul, sometimes signifies a slave (compare Numb. xxx. 35, 1 Chron. v. 21, Rev. xviii. 13). In which sense some understand the word, Gen. xii. 15.

Vessels of brass in thy market.] Critics observe that the word nehosheth, commonly translated brass, does likewise signify steel; and so it is rendered by our interpreters, Ps. xviii. 34, "a bow of steel is broken by my arms." And we may very well understand it so here; for the Chalybes, a people so called from their steel manufactures, lived near Pontus, in the neighbourhood of the Moschi and Tibareni; for which reasons steel is called "the northern iron," Jer. xv. 12.

Ver. 14.] By Togarmah, Bochart understands Cappadocia: the LXX. read the word Θυργαμία (Gen. x. 14), which comes near in sound to Trogma, or Trocma, a part of Cappadocia.

Ver. 15. The men of Dedan were thy merchants.] The same learned person distinguisheth this Dedan from that mentioned ver. 20. This latter was of Abraham's posterity, whereas Dedan here spoken of was derived from that Dedan mentioned Gen. x. 7, the son of Raamah, or Rhegma. The posterity of this Dedan is probably placed near the Persian gulf, where there was a city called afterward Rhegma; and so is fitly joined with many islands or countries lying upon the sea-coast, which are usu-

16 Syria was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of the wares of thy making : they occupied in thy fairs with emeralds, purple, and broidered work, and fine linen, and coral, and agate.

17 Judah, and the land of Israel, they were thy merchants : they traded in thy market wheat of Minnith, and Pannag, and honey, and oil, and balm.

18 Damascus was thy merchant in the multitude of the wares of thy making, for the multitude of all riches ; in the wine of Helbon, and white wool.

19 Dan also and Javan going to and fro occu-ally called islands, in the Hebrew phrase (see the note on Isa. xi. 11).

Many isles were the merchandise of thine hand :] Those countries exported thy manufactures, “the wares of thy making,” as they are called in the following verse ; and, by way of return for them, brought thee in ivory, and other rarities from India, whither they traded. They brought these for a present, says our translation, or rather by way of price or return for the commodities exported. The noun eshear commonly signifies a present or gift, but it is near in sound to the word sacar, that signifies a price or reward ; and words of such near affinity are often used in a promiscuous sense (see the note upon Jer. xxiii. 39, xx. 37, xxix. 7, and xxxvi. 15 of this prophecy).

Ver. 16.] The Syrians imported into thy haven precious stones, and all sorts of curious apparel, in lieu of which they carried abroad the wares of thy own making.

Ver. 17. They traded in thy market wheat of Minnith, &c.] These were the commodities which the Jews imported to Tyre, chiefly the necessary provisions for food ; the Tyrians having none of their own growth, the Jews supplied them therewith from their own, or the neighbouring countries (see 1 Kings v. 9, 11, Ezra iii. 7, Acts xii. 20).

Wheat of Minnith.] This was a place belonging to the Ammonites (see Judg. xi. 33), noted for excellent wheat, great quantities of which the Jews brought to Tyre.

Pannag.] A word never elsewhere to be found : supposed by some to be the name of a place ; by others more probably taken for some rich ointment or gum.

Balm.] For which Gilead was famous (see Jer. viii. 22). There were balsam-trees about Jericho too, which Josephus describes, Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 6, and De Bello Jud. lib. v. cap. 4, though some doubt whether that balsam were the same with the balm of Gilead.

Ver. 18. Helbon.] Helbon is supposed the same part of Syria which is called Chalybonitis by Ptolemy. The same place which is now called Aleppo.

White wool.] The word tsachar is never met with but here, and Judg. v. 10, where our translation reads “white asses.” Bochart explains the word here to signify wool of a bright purple colour, from the Arabic use of it. So purpureus in Latin is used for a bright colour in Virgil, Æn. i. “Lumenque juventæ purpureum.” The LXX. and Chaldee render it wool from Miletus, a place famous for that commodity. The wool was dyed purple at Tyre, as appears from Virgil, Georg. lib. iii.

—“Quamvis Milesia magno Vellera mutantur, Tyrios incocta rubores.”

Ver. 19. Dan also and Javan going to and fro] pied in thy fairs : bright iron, cassia, and calamus, were in thy market.

20 Dedan was thy merchant in precious clothes for chariots.

21 Arabia, and all the princes of Kedar, they occupied with thee in lambs, and rams, and goats : in these were thy merchants.

22 The merchants of Sheba and Raamah, they were thy merchants : they occupied in thy fairs with chief of all spices, and with all precious stones, and gold.

23 Haran, and Canneh, and Eden, the merchants of Sheba, Asshur, and Chilmad, were thy merchants.

By Dan St. Jerome understands the town which was afterward called Cæsarea Philippi, belonging to the tribe of Dan, which was near Tyre ; whereas Javan, which likewise traded with Tyre, lay farther off. This is the sense of the words, if we follow the common translation ; but Bochart thinks the words might be better translated, “Dan also and Javan coming from Uzal occupied in thy fairs ;” to distinguish this Javan, which he supposes to be in the southern part of Arabia, from Greece, more commonly called by that name (see ver. 13). In conformity to this interpretation, the copies of the LXX. which we have now, read from Ascl ; though St. Jerome informs us, that the former part of the verse was wanting in the Septuagint, and supplied from Theodotion’s translation.

Bright iron [i. e. steel]—and calamus.] Bochart confirms the foregoing interpretation from hence, that those of Javan are said to deal in aromatic gums, which are known not to grow in Greece, but in Arabia.

Ver. 20.] This is probably to be understood of the posterity of that Dedan, who was Abraham’s grandson (see ver. 15, and xxv. 13).

Ver. 21. Arabia, and all the princes of Kedar, they occupied with thee] The Hebrew reads, “They were the merchants of thy hands ;” i. e. they took off thy manufactures (see ver. 15) in exchange for cattle, in which their substance did chiefly consist (see Isa. lx. 7). Kedar is a country in Arabia, often mentioned in scripture, which received its name from Kedar, Ishmael’s son, who settled there (Gen. xxv. 13).

Ver. 22. The merchants of Sheba and Raamah.] These were people of Arabia Felix, dwelling near the Persian gulf (see ver. 15, and xxiii. 42). They traded in the rich products of their own country, which were spices, precious stones, and gold (compare 1 Kings x. 2, 11, Ps. lxxii. 15, Isa. lx. 6). Bochart places Ophir, so famous for gold, in Arabia Felix (see his Phaleg. lib. xi. cap. 27).

Ver. 23. Haran, and Canneh, and Eden.] Haran is the place where Abraham dwelt when he came out from Ur of the Chaldees (Gen. xi. 31) : called Charræ by the Romans, and noted for the defeat of Crassus. Canneh some suppose to be the same place that is called Calneh, Amos vi. 2, or Calno, Isa. x. 9, a city near Euphrates. Others take it for Ctesiphon, a noted city situate upon the river Tigris. Eden is joined with Haran, 2 Kings xix. 12, as it is here. Huetius supposes Paradise was called the garden of Eden, from the name of the country where it was placed, which was where the two rivers Tigris and Euphrates meet (see his tract De Situ Paradisi, cap. 2, n. 7).

The merchants of Sheba.] There were two Shebas, as there were two Dedans ; one descended from 24 These were thy merchants in all sorts of things, in blue clothes, and brodered work, and in chests of rich apparel, bound with cords, and made of cedar, among thy merchandise.

25 The ships of Tarshish did sing of thee in thy market: and thou wast replenished, and made very glorious in the midst of the seas.

26 ¶ Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters: the east wind hath broken thee in the midst of the seas.

27 Thy riches, and thy fairs, thy merchandise, thy mariners, and thy pilots, thy calkers, and the occupiers of thy merchandise, and all thy men of war, that are in thee, and in all thy company which is in the midst of thee, shall fall into the midst of the seas in the day of thy ruin.

28 The suburbs shall shake at the sound of the cry of thy pilots.

29 And all that handle the oar, the mariners, and all the pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships, they shall stand upon the land;

30 And shall cause their voice to be heard against thee, and shall cry bitterly, and shall cast up dust upon their heads, they shall wallow themselves in the ashes:

31 And they shall make themselves utterly bald for thee, and gird them with sackcloth, and they shall weep for thee with bitterness of heart and bitter wailing.

32 And in their wailing they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and lament over thee, saying, What city is like Tyrus, like the destroyed in the midst of the sea?

33 When thy wares went forth out of the seas, thou filledst many people; thou didst enrich the kings of the earth with the multitude of thy riches and of thy merchandise.

34 In the time when thou shalt be broken by the seas in the depths of the waters, thy merchandise and all thy company in the midst of thee shall fall.

35 All the inhabitants of the isles shall be astonished at thee, and their kings shall be sore afraid, they shall be troubled in their countenance.

36 The merchants among the people shall hiss at thee; thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt be any more.

Raamah (Gen. x. 7), the other from Jockshan, Abraham's son (Gen. xxv. 3). As the twenty-second verse is explained of the former, so the latter may be understood here: they were both inhabitants of Arabia.

Chilmad,] Both the Chaldee and LXX. explain this by Carmania.

Ver. 24. In chests of rich apparel,] The word in the original translated chests, is ginge, which is elsewhere rendered treasuries (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, Esther iii. 9). From which word the Latin gaza is derived.

Bound with cords, and made of cedar,] Carefully packed up in chests of cedar, to give these clothes a fine scent, and preserve them from putrefaction.

Ver. 25. The ships of Tarshish did sing of thee in thy market:] Ships of Tarshish signify sometimes in scripture any trading or merchant ships (see the note on Isa. ii. 16). And here I take in this general sense: the prophet, having already reckoned up the principal countries which traded with Tyre, now adds, in comprehensive terms, that all merchant-adventurers sung or spake great things of her riches, or as the word sharoth may be rendered, "They ruled or governed in thy markets."

In the midst of the seas.] See ver. 4.

Ver. 26. Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters:] The prophet compares the condition of Tyre besieged by the enemy, to a ship overset by the winds, and just ready to sink under water (see the like comparison, Isa. xxxiii. 23). Great numbers are sometimes signified by "great waters" (see Ps. xviii. 16, cxliv. 7, Jer. li. 42).

The east wind hath broken thee] As the violence of the east wind occasions many shipwrecks in the sea (see Ps. xlviii. 7); so the Chaldean army, compared elsewhere to an east wind, shall ruin thy strength and glory, and leave thee like a wreck cast upon the shore (compare xvii. 10, xix. 12).

Ver. 27. Shall fall into the midst of the seas] Shall be as utterly ruined and destroyed, as if they were sunk in a shipwreck (see xxvi. 5, 14, 21): or shall be killed in a sea-fight, while they defend the city (see the following verse, and xxix. 8).

Ver. 28.] The cry of thy wounded seamen shall make the inhabitants of the suburbs shake for fear xxvi. 15).

Ver. 29.] Seafaring men finding no encouragement to follow their employment, now thy traffic is destroyed, shall lay aside their trade, and mourn over thee (compare xxvi. 16).

Ver. 30. Their voice to be heard against thee.] Or rather, "over thee," as the LXX. and Vulgar Latin translate it: in which sense the preposition nat is taken where persons are said to mourn over the dead, or the calamitous (see xxviii. 12, 1 Kings xiii. 30, Hos. x. 5).

Cast up dust upon their heads, &c.] Expressions of the deepest mourning and lamentation (see 1 Sam. iv. 12, Job ii. 12, Jer. vi. 26, Rev. xviii. 19).

Ver. 31. Utterly bald] Another expression of public sorrow (see Jer. xlvii. 5, Micah i. 16).

Ver. 32.] The words allude to the public lamentations made at funerals (see the notes upon Jer. ix. 17, xxii. 18, and compare Rev. xviii. 18).

Ver. 34.] See ver. 26, 27, xxvi. 19, xxix. 8.

Ver. 35.] See xxvi. 15, 16.

Ver. 36. The merchants—shall hiss at thee;] By way of insulting and derision (see 1 Kings ix. 8), as men are apt to despise those in adversity, whom they courted and respected in prosperity. But the Chaldee paraphrase renders it, "They shall be astonished:" and this sense agrees better with the lamentations of the seafaring men mentioned in the foregoing verses.

Thou shalt be a terror, &c.] See xxvi. 21.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, say unto the prince of Tyrus, Thus saith the Lord God; Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas; yet thou art a man, and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God:

3 Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret that they can hide from thee:

4 With thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures:

5 By thy great wisdom and by thy traffick hast thou increased thy riches, and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches:

6 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God;

7 Behold, therefore I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations: and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness.

8 They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas.

9 Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but thou shalt be a man, and not God, in the hand of him that slayeth thee.

10 Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised by the hand of strangers: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

12 Son of man, take up a lamentation upon the king of Tyrus, and say unto him, Thus saith the Lord God; Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty.

13 Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God;

CHAP. XXVIII.

ARGUMENT.—In this chapter the prophet denounces God's judgments against the king of Tyre, for his pride and insolence: he likewise foretells the destruction of Zidon, and that the judgments threatened upon those and other heathen countries, Ammon, Moab, &c. shall in the end turn to the benefit of God's people.

Ver. 2. The prince of Tyrus.] Whose name was Ithobalus, according to the Phœnician annals, extracts out of which may be seen in Josephus, lib. i. Contra. Appion, p. 1046.

I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas;] Some princes have been so extravagant as to affect divine honours: this seems to have been the temper of this vain man. The words are an insolent boast of self-sufficiency, as if he had said, I fear none, nor stand in need of any: I am seated in a place of impregnable strength: the seas surround me, that no enemy can assault me. So they represent the excessive pride and carnal security of this prince, who trusted in his own strength, and forgot his dependence upon God. The same crime was in like manner punished in the king of Egypt (xxix. 3), and afterward in Nebuchadnezzar himself (Dan. iv. 30, 31). So Babylon is represented as ascribing self-sufficiency to herself, and saying in her heart, I am, and there is none else beside me (Isa. xlvii. 10.)

In the midst of the seas:] See xxvii. 4.

Yet thou art a man, and not God.] A weak, mortal man: an unequal match for the king of Babylon's forces (see ver. 9, and Isa. xxxi. 3).

Ver. 3.] The fame of Daniel's wisdom was quickly spread over Chaldaea, upon his being advanced to several posts of honour and dignity by Nebuchadnezzar (see Dan. ii. 48). Queen Nitocris, who was Belshazzar's mother, gives Daniel a great character for his wisdom and other accomplishments (Dan. v. 11, 12). So here the prophet, in an ironical manner, upbraids the vain boasts which the prince of Tyre made of his wisdom, and the policy of those about him, as if it exceeded the endowments of Daniel, so famous, though a young man, for his skill in the several parts of knowledge, and the arts of government. The Phœnicians, of whom the Tyrians were a colony (see the note on Isa. xxiii. 12), valued themselves for their wisdom and ingenuity, as being the inventors of navigation, of letters, and sciences (compare Zech. iv. 2).

Ver. 4.] Thy skill in navigation and trade has increased thy wealth (see ver. 5, and Zech. ix. 3).

Ver. 7. I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations:] The Babylonians, who by their conquests have made themselves terrible to all the countries round about them (see xxx. 11, 12).

They shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom,] They shall deface and destroy everything which thou valuest as ornamental, or useful (compare ver. 12).

Ver. 8.] Thou and thy mariners shall be slain in a sea-fight, or shall be destroyed as those that are swallowed by the sea in a tempest (see xxvi. 15, xxvii. 27, 28, 34).

Ver. 9.] Mortality will certainly convince thee of thy folly in pretending to divinity (compare xxxii. 19). So Plutarch tells us of Alexander, that he vainly affected to be thought Jupiter's son, and next in honour to Bacchus and Hercules: yet when he saw the blood run out of a wound he had received, which at the same time gave him much pain, he confessed that was not such blood as Homer said issued from the immortal gods (lib. ii. De Alexandri Fortuna).

Ver. 10. Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised] Thou shalt die by such a remarkable judgment as God usually inflicts upon notorious offenders: thou shalt come to the same ill end as befalls the other enemies of God and of his truth (compare xxxi. 18, xxxii. 19, 21, 23, 24, &c.). Circumcision being the rite which distinguished God's people from the heathen, uncircumcised is equivalent in sense to wicked or profane. So the Chaldee paraphrase renders it here, "Thou shalt die the death of the wicked," and to the same purpose again, xxxi. 18. In the same sense we are to understand that expression, Lev. xxvi. 41, "If their uncircumcised heart be humbled;" and those of Jeremy, vi. 10, "Their ear is uncircumcised:" and ix. 26, "The house of Israel is uncircumcised in their heart."

Ver. 12. Take up a lamentation] See xxvii. 32.

Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty.] In thine own opinion thou art the every precious stone was thy covering, the sardius, topaz, and the diamond, the beryl, the onyx, and the jasper, the sapphire, the emerald, and the carbuncle, and gold: the workmanship of thy tabrets, and of thy pipes was prepared in thee in the day that thou wast created.

14 Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; and I have set thee so: thou wast upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire.

15 Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created, till iniquity was found in thee.

perfect pattern of wisdom, and all other excellences (compare ver. 7): the expression is taken from vessels and other repositories, which, when they are full, used to be sealed up in order to the preserving what is contained in them (see Deut. xxxii. 4, Job xiv. 17). The LXX. and Vulgar Latin render the former part of the verse, "Thou art the seal of likeness;" i. e. Thou art the image of God, or an exact impression taken from that great copy. The following verse shows that the expression alludes to Adam, when he was first created, and came pure out of the hands of his Maker. And then the following words in this verse are to be translated, "Full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty:" an exact description of the state of innocence. The word tacnith is translated pattern, xliii. 10, of this prophecy, and so it signifies, Exod. xxx. 32, to which sense the Targum there explains it: but our translation renders it composition.

Ver. 13. Thou hast been in Eden, the garden of God;] As thy situation was pleasant, so thou wast plentifully supplied with everything that could contribute to make thy life pleasant and happy. A state of paradise does in common speech denote a condition every way complete and happy (see Isa. li. 3). But this expression, as well as the whole context, alludes to the complete happiness which Adam enjoyed in Paradise before his apostasy and fearful fall.

Every precious stone was thy covering,] Like a great prince or monarch, thy crown was adorned with the choicest jewels, and thou wast arrayed with royal robes, enriched with gold and precious stones of all sorts. The stone probably alludes to the precious stones which were placed in the high-priest's breast-plate, as the next verse alludes to the cherubim over the mercy-seat. Accordingly the LXX. enlarge the number of the stones here mentioned from nine to twelve, and place them in the same order in which they are ranked, Exod. xxviii. 17, &c.

Thy tabrets and—pipes was prepared in thee [or, for thee] in the day that thou wast created.] The highest expressions of joy, such as are the sounding of all sorts of musical instruments, ushered thee into the world, according to the usual practice at the birth of great princes: and ever since thou hast been brought up in the choicest delicacies, which a royal palace or a luxurious city could furnish (see xxvi. 13, Isa. xiv. 11).

Ver. 14. Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth;] Anointing is the ceremony wherewith kings are inaugurated; so the prophet compares the prince of Tyre to a ruling or principal cherub, one of the chief of the angelical order, who attend upon God in heaven, and are represented by the cherubim in the temple overshadowing the mercy-seat. To this sense St. Jerome translates it, "The extended cherub that covereth:" i. e. whose wings were stretch-

16 By the multitude of thy merchandise they have filled the midst of thee with violence, and thou hast sinned: therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God: and I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire.

17 Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness: I will cast thee to the ground, I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee.

18 Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries by the multitude of thine iniquities, by the iniquity of ed out to cover the mercy-seat (see Exod. xxv. 20): reading menushak instead of minshak. The words allude to the high advancement of Satan in heaven before his fall, where he was placed in one of the highest orders of angels, such as were nearest in attending upon the divine majesty. So Isaiah's description of the fall of the king of Babylon does plainly allude to the downfall of Satan out of heaven (Isa. xvi. 12, &c.).

Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God;] The temple is often styled God's holy mountain (see xx. 43); and the temple being the place of God's peculiar residence, is now and then put for heaven itself (see Ps. xi. 4, xviii. 6, Jonah ii. 7). So the phrase denotes, that this prince might be compared to the cherubim overshadowing the mercy-seat, or the angels who stood before the throne of God, typified by the cherubim in the temple; the expression still alluding to the high station of Satan before his apostasy.

Thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire.] Thy dominion was in the upper region of the sky, where hailstones and lightning are formed; or, as Tertullian paraphrases the expression (lib. ii. contr. Marcion. cap. 10). Inter gemmant siderum radios demoratus: "Thou hadst thy abode among glittering stars;" as the angels are sometimes called (see Job. xxxviii. 7, Isa. xiv. 13). [The words may allude to the sparkling stones of Aaron's breast-plate: so they agree with what goes before, ver. 13, 14. See Dr. More's Synopsis Prophet. book ii. ch. 16.]

Ver. 15.] An exact description of the angelical purity in which the devil was created, and in which he continued, till, being lifted up with pride, he fell from his first estate.

Ver. 16.] Thy skill in trading hath degenerated into violence, cheating, and extortion: for which I will degrade thee from the honour of being nearly related to me, as my minister, and the executor of my commands, by which thou didst resemble the dignity of the angelic order (see ver. 14).

Ver. 17. Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty,] Compare ver. 9, 13, xxxi. 10. So the devil was "lifted up with pride" upon the account of his perfections (see 1 Tim. iii. 6).

Thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness:] That height of glory and authority to which I had advanced thee has perverted thy judgment, and made thee abuse thy wisdom to craft and deceit (see ver. 16).

I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee.] I will make thee a spectacle to other princes; expose thee as a miserable object before their eyes; that thou mayest be an example to them to deter them from the like practices (see xvi. 41, xxiii. 48, xxxi. 14).

Ver. 18. Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries, &c.]

thy traffick; therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, it shall devour thee, and I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee.

19 All they that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee: thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt thou be any more.

20 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, set thy face against Zidon, and prophesy against it,

22 And say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Zidon; and I will be glorified in the midst of thee: and they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall have executed judgments in her, and shall be sanctified in her.

23 For I will send into her pestilence, and blood into her streets; and the wounded shall be judged in the midst of her by the sword upon her on every side; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

24 ¶ And there shall be no more a pricking brier unto the house of Israel, nor any grieving thorn of all that are round about them, that despised them; and they shall know that I am the Lord God.

25 Thus saith the Lord God; When I shall have gathered the house of Israel from the people among whom they are scattered, and shall be sanctified in them in the sight of the heathen, then shall they dwell in their land that I have given to my servant Jacob.

26 And they shall dwell safely therein, and shall build houses, and plant vineyards; yea, they shall dwell with confidence, when I have executed judgments upon all those that despise them round about them; and they shall know that I am the Lord their God.

The word mikdash does sometimes signify a palace, in which sense it is probably taken, Amos viii. 13, where our translation renders it the king's chapel. Thus Bishop Patrick understands it, Exod. xxv. 8, where the English reads, "Let them make a sanctuary," but it may probably mean a palace: for God commanded himself to be served and attended upon in the tabernacle, as a king is in his court. The cherubims were his throne, the ark his footstool, the altar his table, and therefore called by that name, xli. 22, Mal. i. 7, the priests his attendants, and the shew-bread and sacrifices his provisions. Thus the word may most probably be taken here to this sense: That since their palaces and stately buildings are filled with the iniquity and injustice which they have practised in their trade and commerce, therefore God will utterly destroy them by Nebuchadnezzar, who reduced the whole city to a heap of ashes and rubbish, which Alexander afterward made use of to make a bank or causeway, by means of which he assaulted the new city of Tyre, and took it (see Dr. Prideaux, par. i. p. 484). If we follow the common translation, it imports a denunciation of God's judgments for filling their idolatrous temples with riches and presents gotten by injustice. So God often punishes the contempt of religion, in general, in those who are mistaken in their own way of worship.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt be a terror.] See xxvi. 21.

Ver. 21. Set thy face against Zidon.] Direct thy face and thy speech towards Zidon (see vi. 2); and foretell its destruction by the king of Babylon (see xxxii. 30, Jer. xxv. 22, xlviii. 4). Tyre and Zidon were neighbours, and partakers of the same fate, both in prosperity and adversity. Zidon was afterward utterly destroyed by Oehus, king of Persia.

Ver. 22. I will be glorified in the midst of thee.] I will make my power and justice known by the judgments I will execute upon thee. In the same sense God saith, Exod. xiv. 17, "I will get me honour upon Pharaoh;" where the word in the original is the same.

And shall be sanctified in her.] God is said to be sanctified in those, for whose preservation or destruction he exerts his power in a remarkable manner (compare ver. 25, and see xx. 41).

Ver. 23.] The pestilence, which often accompanies long sieges, shall destroy her inhabitants as well as the sword (see v. 12, xxxviii. 22).

Ver. 24.] My people shall dwell in their land quietly and securely, when the rest of their ill neighbours are destroyed, who were a continual vexation to them, and as so many thorns in their sides (compare Numb. xxxiii. 55, Josh. xxiii. 13). So "a thorn in the flesh," 2 Cor. xii. 7, signifies a cruel enemy or persecutor, as appears by comparing that place with the context, ver. 9, 10. The following verse shows, that this promise chiefly relates to the general restoration of the Jews, when all the enemies of God's church and truth are vanquished and subdued, often denoted in the prophetic writings, by the names of Edom, Moab, and other neighbouring countries, who upon all occasions showed their spite and ill-will against the Jews (see the note upon xxxviii. 17, and upon Isa. xi. 14, and compare Jer. xii. 14, with this place).

Ver. 25.] This, if we follow the literal sense of the words, is a plain prophecy of the general restoration of the Jews, and their return into their own land, as will appear by comparing the words with the parallel texts in this prophet, viz. xi. 17, xx. 38, 41, xxxiv. 13, xxxvi. 24, xxxvii. 12, 14, 21, 25, xxxix. 27, and the rules laid down concerning the division of the land among the twelve tribes (ch. xlvii., xlviii.) do very much favour this interpretation (compare Isa. lxxv. 9, 10, Jer. xxx. 18, xxxii. 41); in which prediction most of the other prophets agree with him (see the note on Isa. xi. 11).

Sanctified in them] See ver. 22, and xxxvi. 23.

Ver. 26. They shall dwell safely therein.] This denotes outward peace and freedom from the annoyance of enemies (compare xxxvi. 21, xxxviii. 11, Jer. xxxiii. 6).

And shall build houses, and plant vineyards.] Building and planting are commonly joined together (compare Isa. lxxv. 21, Jer. xxxi. 4, 5, Amos ix. 14).

When I have executed judgments upon all those that despise them] See ver. 24. The prophets conclude their threatenings against infidels with gracious promises to God's people; implying, that he will not make an utter destruction of them as of other people, but reserve a remnant, to whom he may fulfill his promises made to their fathers (compare Jer. xli. 27, 28).

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 In the tenth year, in the tenth month, in the twelfth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him, and against all Egypt:

3 Speak, and say, 'Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself.

4 But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales, and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.

5 And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers: thou shalt fall upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered: I have given thee for meat to the beasts of the field and to the fowls of the heaven.

6 And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the LORD, because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.

7 When they took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder: and when they leaned upon thee, thou brakest, and madest all their loins to be at a stand.

8 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

CHAP. XXIX.

ARGUMENT.—In this and the three following chapters, is foretold the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, which came to pass in the thirty-sixth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, which was the twenty-seventh of Jehoiachin's captivity (see ver. 17). This was the same judgment upon Egypt, which was foretold by Jeremiah, xlv. 13, &c.

Ver. 2. Set thy face [see vi. 2] against Pharaoh king of Egypt.] Pharaoh being a common name to all the kings of Egypt, this prince was called Pharaoh-hophra, by way of distinction, by Jeremiah (xlv. 38), and Apries by Herodotus.

Ver. 3. The great dragon] The word tannin signifies any great fish, such as a whale, as it is translated xxxii. 2, where it is applied to the same subject as here (see the note on Isa. xxvii. 1). Bochart, in his Hierozoicon, lib. v. cap. 16, 18, not improbably understands it here of a crocodile (see the following note), a fish in a manner peculiar to the river Nile, to which he likens the king of Egypt, because he valued himself so much upon his dominion over that river. The same learned author observes, that the word Pharaoh signifies a crocodile in the Arabic tongue. The kings of Egypt are elsewhere compared to whales, or some such great fishes, sporting themselves in the waters, and exercising a sort of dominion over the lesser fry (see Ps. lxxiv. 13, 14, Isa. li. 9).

My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself.] The prophet having described this prince as bearing rule over the waters, in pursuance of the same metaphor, speaks of his kingdom as if it were a great river, and he priding himself in having established his government so firmly over it, "that it was not in the power of God himself to dispossess him of it," as Herodotus tells us (lib. ii. cap. 169), he profanely boasted, affecting to be a god, as the prince of Tyre did (xxviii. 2).

Ver. 4. I will put hooks in thy jaws,] In pursuance of the same metaphor, God tells him that he will put a stop to all his vain-glorious designs and boastings: having the same absolute power over him as a fisherman hath over a fish, when he has fastened his hook in his jaws (compare 2 Kings xix. 28).

I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick to thy scales, &c.] Thou shalt send a great number of thy subjects upon an expedition into Libya against the Cyrenians, where his army having ill success, the Egyptians, entertaining an opinion that the army was sent upon this expedition on purpose to be destroyed, thereupon mutinied against him, and set up Amasis to be their king.

I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers,] By this is metaphorically expressed his undertaking a foreign expedition: the expression alludes to the nature of a crocodile, who is not confined to the water, but useth to come upon the land, where he is frequently taken.

Ver. 5. I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness,] Thy army shall be discomfited, and fall in the deserts of Libya and Cyrene: Apries himself did not perish there; but the king and people being like head and body, whatever calamity befalls either part, is common to both. So the king of Assyria is said to be involved in that destruction which consumed his army, Isa. xxx. 38. Apries himself was afterward strangled in his palace at Sais, by Amasis, that overcame him.

Thou shalt not be brought together,] Their bones or carcases shall not be brought together in order for burial (see Jer. viii. 2, xxv. 33).

I have given thee for meat,] See xxxix. 17.

Ver. 6. Because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.] The expression alludes to the canes or reeds that grow on the bank of the river Nile; on which if a man leaned, they broke, and the splinters ran into his hand (compare 2 Kings xviii. 21). The prophets often upbraided the Jews with their vain confidence in Egypt, which would certainly disappoint them (see Isa. xx. 5, 6, xxx. 3, 5, &c. xxxi. 3, Jer. ii. 36).

Ver. 7. When they took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder:] Or, "their arm." The king, who was Zedekiah's confederate, came with a great army to raise the siege of Jerusalem; but durst not engage a battle with the Chaldeans, but in a little time retired again into his own country, treacherously leaving Zedekiah, whom they had engaged to rebel against Nebuchadnezzar; whereby they became the occasion of his own and his people's ruin (see xvii. 15, Jer. xxxvii. 5, 7).

At a stand.] Or, "to shake," as men do when they are tottering and ready to fall. The Hebrew verb hanamadhta signifies properly to stand, but it is probably here taken in the same sense with the verb hamanadhla: words of a near sound being often taken one for the other (see the note on xxviii. 15).

Ver. 8.] See xiv. 17. This is to be understood of Nebuchadnezzar's conquest of Egypt, who, taking 9 And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste; and they shall know that I am the LORD: because he hath said, 'The river is mine, and I have made it.

10 Behold, therefore, I am against thee, and against thy rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia.

11 No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years.

12 And I will make the land of Egypt desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities among the cities that are laid waste shall be desolate forty years: and I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

13 ¶ Yet thus saith the Lord God; At the end of forty years will I gather the Egyptians from the people whither they were scattered:

advantage of Amasis's revolt against Apries, overran that country, and made a prey of the whole kingdom (see ver. 19, and xxxii. 13).

Ver. 9. Because he hath said, The river is mine, &c.] Hophra himself shall be slain, and his country destroyed, for his impiety and insolence (see ver. 3).

Ver. 10. I am against thee and—thy rivers,] Since thou hast opposed me I will set myself against thee, and bring down the strength and glory of thy kingdom, wherein thou magnifiest thyself so much (see note on ver. 3).

From the tower of Syene—unto the border of Ethiopia.] If we follow this translation, we must understand the word Cush, rendered here Ethiopia, of Arabia, as it is often taken (see the note on Jer. xiii. 23): for Syene was the border of Egypt towards Ethiopia (see Pliny's Nat. Hist. lib. v. cap. 9), which lay westward of Egypt, as Arabia did eastward. But the words may be translated thus, "From Migdol to Syene, even to the borders of Ethiopia" (compare xxx. 5, 9). Migdol was a town near the Red sea, mentioned Exod. xiv. 2, Jer. xlv. 1, xlv. 14, so it lay at the entrance of Egypt from Palestine; whereas Syene was at the other end of the country upon the borders of Ethiopia. The parallel text, xxx. 6, confirms this interpretation, where our translation reads, "From the tower of Syene, they shall fall in it by the sword;" but the sense would be much more perfect if we translate it, "From Migdol to Syene," &c.

Ver. 11.] The intestine wars between Apries and Amasis, and the conquest of the whole country by Nebuchadnezzar, will make Egypt a desolation the greatest part of forty years, nor shall it recover its former settlement till those are ended (see xxx. 10, xxxii. 13; compare xxxv. 7).

Ver. 12. I will make the land of Egypt desolate] Many of the Jews which fled into Egypt upon the murder of Gedaliah, were involved in the common destruction of the country and its inhabitants (see Jer. xlv. 27, 28).

In the midst of the countries that are desolate] Egypt shall have its share of calamities with its neighbours, who shall be a prey to Nebuchadnezzar, according to the prophecies of Jeremiah, ch. xxv. xlv., xlv., &c. and of Ezekiel, ch. xxv., &c.

I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations,] Some of them shall flee for refuge into foreign countries, and some shall be carried away captive by the Babylonians (compare Jer. xlv. 19). This captivity of the Egyptians, though not taken notice of by Hero-

14 And I will bring again the captivity of Egypt, and will cause them to return into the land of Pathros, into the land of their habitation; and they shall be there a base kingdom.

15 It shall be the basest of the kingdoms; neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations: for I will diminish them, that they shall no more rule over the nations.

16 And it shall be no more the confidence of the house of Israel, which bringeth their iniquity to remembrance, when they shall look after them; but they shall know that I am the Lord God.

17 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and twentieth year, in the first month, in the first day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus: every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled: yet had he no wages, dotus, is mentioned by Berosus in one of the fragments of history, quoted by Josephus, Antiq. lib. x. cap. 11, and published with notes by Scaliger, at the end of his books De Emendatione Temporum, whose remark upon the place is very observable; viz. "The calamities that befell the Egyptians are passed over by Herodotus, because the Egyptian priests would not inform him of any thing that tended to the disgrace of their nation."

Ver. 14. And will cause them to return into the land of Pathros.] That part of Egypt which is called Thebais, as Bochart proves by several arguments (see his Phaleg, lib. iv. cap. 27).

A base kingdom.] i. e. A tributary kingdom (see xvii. 14).

Ver. 15.] Notwithstanding Amasis's shaking off the Persian yoke, Egypt was not able to keep up its former grandeur, but was entirely conquered by Cambyzes, Cyrus's son, who made it a province to the Persian empire; and upon its revolting from under that government, it was finally subdued by Ochus the Persian emperor, and has been governed by strangers ever since. "For on the failure of the Persian empire, it became subject to the Macedonians, after them to the Romans, after the Romans to the Saracens, then to the Mamelukes, and is now a province of the Turkish empire;" as Dr. Prideaux observes, in his Connex. of Script. Hist. par. i. p. 79.

Ver. 16.] At the same time that the Jews put confidence in Egypt, they distrusted the promises and assistance of God, and forsook him, to comply with the idolatries of their allies; thereby to recommend themselves to their protection (see ver. 7, Isa. lvii. 8, 9, Jer. ii. 18, 26, Hos. xii. 1).

Ver. 17.] The following prophecy is related here, not with respect to the order of time (for there is near seventeen years' distance between the date of the foregoing prophecy and this), but because both prophecies relate to the same subject, viz. the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, which fell out this year: the city of Tyre having been taken by him the year before, after thirteen years' siege. Concerning which event, Dr. Prideaux hath observed, that the chronology of the Phœnician Annals (the extracts of which may be seen in Josephus, lib. i. contr. Appion,) exactly agrees with the time the prophet Ezekiel assigns for the taking of Tyre (see his Con. of Script. Hist. par. i. p. 92, 93).

Ver. 18. Nebuchadrezzar—caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus:] The siege lasted thirteen years, as hath been already observed; till the nor his army, for Tyrus, for the service that he had served against it:

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and he shall take her multitude, and take her spoil, and take her prey; and it shall be the wages for his army.

heads of their soldiers became bald with continual wearing their helmets, and the skin was worn off their shoulders with carrying earth to raise mounts and fortifications against it (see xxvi. 8).

Yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus.] Before the town came to be closely besieged, the inhabitants had removed their effects into an island about half a mile distant from the shore, and there built another city, called New Tyre, which was afterward besieged and taken by Alexander the Great (see the argument to ch. xxvi.); so that there was nobody left there when Nebuchadnezzar's army took the city.

Ver. 19. He shall take her multitude, and take her spoil.] He and his army shall have the advantage of the captives and spoil of Egypt, which they shall utterly pillage and lay waste (see ver. 10, 12, and xxx. 12).

Ver. 20. Because they wrought for me, saith the Lord.] The destruction of cities and countries is a work of God's providence, for the effecting of which he makes use of kings and princes as his instruments. Upon this account he calls Nebuchadnezzar his servant (Jer. xxv. 9), "because he wrought for him," as it is here expressed; i. e. executed his 20 I have given him the land of Egypt for his labour wherewith he served against it, because they wrought for me, saith the Lord God.

21 ¶ In that day will I cause the horn of the house of Israel to bud forth, and I will give thee the opening of the mouth in the midst of them; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

judgments upon Tyre, and the other cities and countries which God delivered into his hand.

Ver. 21. In that day.] This phrase frequently denotes in the prophets not the same time which was last mentioned, but an extraordinary season, remarkable for some signal events of Providence (see the note on Isa. iv. 2). In this sense it is to be understood here.

Will I cause the horn.] The word horn signifies strength, from whence it comes to denote prosperity, or a flourishing condition (see 1 Sam. ii. 1, Job xvi. 15), from whence it is applied to express kingly power and majesty (see Ps. lxxxix. 24, xcii. 10, cxxxii. 17). So here it signifies, that after the destruction of God's and his church's enemies, denoted by Tyre, Egypt, and other oppressors of the Jews (see the note on xxxviii. 17), the kingdom and state of the Jews should again flourish under the Messiah, as it is more clearly foretold, ch. xxxiv., xxxvii. (compare likewise xxxiii. 25, 26).

I will give thee the opening of the mouth in the midst of them.] When thy prophecies are made good by the event, this shall add a new authority to what thou speakest (see xxiv. 27).

CHAPTER XXX.

1 THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Howl ye, Woe worth the day!

3 For the day is near, even the day of the LORD is near; a cloudy day; it shall be the time of the heathen.

4 And the sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain shall be in Ethiopia, when the slain shall fall in Egypt, and they shall take away her multitude, and her foundations shall be broken down.

5 Ethiopia, and Libya, and Lydia, and all the mingled people, and Chub, and the men of the land that is in league, shall fall with them by the sword.

6 Thus saith the LORD; They also that uphold Egypt shall fall; and the pride of her power

CHAP. XXX.

See the Argument of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 2. Howl ye.] The prophet directs his speech to the Egyptians (compare Isa. xiii. 6).

Ver. 3. The day is near, &c.] The time of God's vengeance (see vii. 7, 12).

A cloudy day.] When the calamities that are coming upon Egypt shall make everything look dark and dismal (see ver. 18, xxxii. 7, 8, xxxiv. 12, Joel ii. 2, Amos v. 18).

It shall be the time of the heathen.] Of the punishment of the Egyptians and their allies (see ver. 4, 5, vii. 7, 12). God's judgments upon particular places and nations, are an earnest of that general judgment, when he shall execute judgment upon all the ungodly (see the note upon Isa. xiii. 10).

Ver. 4. Pain shall be in Ethiopia.] See ver. 5, 9. Her foundations shall be broken down.] Her strong forts and citadels (compare Isa. xvi. 7, Jer. l. 15).

Ver. 5. Ethiopia, and Libya, and Lydia.] The names in the Hebrew are Cush, Phut, and Lud; who are mentioned together as the Egyptian allies, Jer. xlvi. 9 (see the note there, and compare Nahum iii. 9). Cush probably signifies Ethiopia here (see xxix. 10), as being joined with Phut and Lud; which were people of Africa. Phut is rendered Libya by our interpreters here, and in that place of Jeremy; but Phut and Lubim were a distinct people, as hath been observed upon xxvii. 10. Phut may denote some part of Africa near Egypt, and Lud probably signifies some part of the Abyssines' country.

All the mingled people.] All their auxiliaries. Compare Jer. l. 37. If we distinguish these from the men of the league which follow, they may mean that mixture of Carians, Ionians, and other nations lying upon the Mediterranean sea, which Apries got together to encounter Amasis, who, together with him, were destroyed (see Dr. Pridcaux, ubi supra; and the note on Jer. xxv. 20).

Chub.] The Cubii are mentioned in Ptolemy as a people of Mareotis, a province of Egypt.

The men of the land that is in league.] The LXX. translate it, "The men of my league," or covenant; i. e. the Jews: many of whom, flying into Egypt, were destroyed there with the Egyptians (see the note on xxix. 12).

shall come down: from the tower of Syene shall they fall in it by the sword, saith the Lord God.

7 And they shall be desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities shall be in the midst of the cities that are wasted.

8 And they shall know that I am the Lord, when I have set a fire in Egypt, and when all her helpers shall be destroyed.

9 In that day shall messengers go forth from me in ships to make the careless Ethiopians afraid, and great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt: for, lo, it cometh.

10 Thus saith the Lord God; I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon.

11 He and his people with him, the terrible of the nations, shall be brought to destroy the land: and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, and fill the land with the slain.

12 And I will make the rivers dry, and sell the land into the hand of the wicked: and I will make the land waste, and all that is therein, by the hand of strangers: I the Lord have spoken it.

13 Thus saith the Lord God; I will also destroy the idols, and I will cause their images to cease out of Noph; and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt: and I will put a fear in the land of Egypt.

14 And I will make Pathros desolate, and will set fire in Zoan, and will execute judgments in No.

15 And I will pour my fury upon Sin, the strength of Egypt; and I will cut off the multitude of No.

16 And I will set fire in Egypt: Sin shall have great pain, and No shall be rent asunder, and Noph shall have distresses daily.

17 The young men of Aven and of Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword: and these cities shall go into captivity.

18 At Tehaphnches also the day shall be dark-

Ver. 6. They also that uphold Egypt shall fall;] The governors of the several provinces, those who are called "the stay of the tribes thereof," Isa. xix. 13, i. e. of the several nomi, or divisions of Egypt.

From the tower of Syene they shall fall in it] The sense would be more complete, if the words were translated, From Migdol to Syene (see the note on xxix. 12).

Ver. 7.] See xxix. 10.

Ver. 8. When I have set a fire] God's judgments are often compared to fire (see xix. 14, xxii. 21, 31, Ps. lxxviii. 63, Jer. vii. 20, Amos i. 4, &c.).

When all her helpers] All her allies and auxiliaries (compare xxxi. 7, xxxii. 21).

Ver. 9. In that day shall messengers go—to make the careless Ethiopians afraid,] The Ethiopians were the confederates of the Egyptians in former times, and sharers with them in their good or ill fortune (see Isa. xviii. 1, 2, xx. 3, 4, and the notes upon those places). The verse may be likewise thus rendered; "In that day shall messengers go from me to the people in the wilderness, to make the careless Ethiopians afraid." The word tziim is translated "the people in the wilderness," Isa. xxiii. 13, and that appellation is particularly given to the Ethiopians, Ps. lxxii. 9, lxxiv. 14, as the LXX. translate the word.

Great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt:] The Egyptians and Ethiopians, being confederates, the ill news of the conquest of Egypt, shall sensibly affect them (compare xxiv. 16, xxxiii. 9, 10, xxvii. 35, Isa. xix. 17, xxiii. 5).

Ver. 11. The terrible of the nations,] See xxviii. 7.

Ver. 12. I will make the rivers dry,] I will destroy the strength of Egypt; the metaphor is taken from the decrease or failing of the Nile, upon whose overflowing all the plenty and prosperity of Egypt depended (compare xix. 3, Isa. xix. 5, 6).

And sell the land] See vii. 24. To sell, signifies here to deliver up, as men do goods that they sell (compare Deut. xxxii. 30, Judg. ii. 14, iv. 9).

Ver. 13. I will also destroy the idols,] Idolatry being one of the principal sins for which God visits the infidel nations, he will take particular vengeance upon the idols, thereby showing how much he is superior to them in power (compare Exod. xii. 12, Isa. xix. 1, Jer. xliii. 12, xlv. 25).

I will cause their images to cease out of Noph;] Noph, or Memphis, was one of the principal cities of Egypt, a seat of their kings, where their sepulchres stood; one of which is still remaining: upon which account it is often mentioned in scripture (see Isa. xix. 3, Jer. ii. 16, xlv. 1, xlv. 14). In Hosea it is called Moph, xi. 6, which comes near in sound to Memphis. This place was famous for the worship of Apis and Osiris: whereupon the prophet, in a particular manner, denounces destruction to the idolatry of that place.

There shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt:] It shall no more have a natural prince of the Egyptian race to rule over it, as formerly, but shall be subject to foreigners (see the note on xxix. 15).

I will put a fear—in Egypt,] Will make them faint-hearted, and not able to defend themselves (compare Isa. xix. 16, Jer. xlvii. 5).

Ver. 14. I will make Pathros desolate,] See xxix. 14.

And will set fire in Zoan,] Zoan, or Tanis, was one of the ancient cities in Egypt (see Numb. xiii. 20) and the metropolis of the kingdom in Moses's time (see Ps. lxxviii. 12, 43).

And will execute judgments in No,] Called "the multitude of No," or Hamon No, in the next verse; and probably the same with the city Thebes, famous for its hundred gates (see the note on Jer. xlv. 25).

Ver. 15. And I will pour my fury upon Sin,] It is generally agreed, that Sin is the same with Pelusium, one of the seven mouths of the Nile, which was commonly called the key of Egypt, as Suidas observes; and therefore was strongly fortified, that no enemy might gain admittance.

I will cut off the multitude of No,] Or Hamon No, as the original reads. The name is generally supposed to be derived from Hamon, who was the Egyptian Jupiter. Mizraim, the son of Ham, was the founder of Egypt, which is called the "land of Ham," Ps. cvi. 22. And this Hamon was probably either Ham himself, or one of his posterity advanced to divine honours. Plutarch informs us, in his book De Iside et Osiride, that Ammon in the Egyptian language is equivalent to Zwē in Greek (p. 354, edit. Francof.).

Ver. 16. I will set fire in Egypt:] See ver. 8.

Ver. 17.] Aven is the same with On, mentioned Gen. xli. 45, in aftertimes called Heliopolis, as our margin explains it here, because of a temple or image there dedicated to the sun (compare Isa. xix. 18, Jer. xliii. 13). The word is so translated by the seventy interpreters, both here and Gen. xli. 45, who were ened, when I shall break there the yokes of Egypt: and the pomp of her strength shall cease in her: as for her, a cloud shall cover her, and her daughters shall go into captivity.

19 Thus will I execute judgments in Egypt: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

20 ¶ And it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first month, in the seventh day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and, lo, it shall not be bound up to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, to make it strong to hold the sword.

22 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and will break his arms, the strong, and that which was broken: and I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand.

very well acquainted with Egypt, and the principal places of it. Phi-beseth was afterward, with very little variation, called Bubastum, and so translated here by the LXX.

Ver. 18. At Tehaphnehes also the day shall be darkened.] Compare ver. 3. Tehaphnehes, elsewhere writ Tahapanes, is supposed to be the same place which was afterward called Daphnæ Pelusiacæ (see the note on Jer. xliii. 7).

When I shall break there the yokes of Egypt:] When I shall set those at liberty that are oppressed by the bondage of Egypt (compare xxxiv. 27).

A cloud shall cover her.] See ver. 3.

Ver. 21. I have broken the arm of Pharaoh] I have broken his strength, so that he will never be able to recover his former power (compare Jer. xlviii. 25). It is usual for the prophets to speak of a thing future as if it were already accomplished (see note on Isa. xxi. 9).

23 And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

24 And I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and put my sword in his hand: but I will break Pharaoh's arms, and he shall groan before him with the groanings of a deadly wounded man.

25 But I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and the arms of Pharaoh shall fall down; and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall put my sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt.

26 And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and disperse them among the countries; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

Ver. 22. And will break his arms,—and that which was broken:] The king of Babylon had before dispossessed the king of Egypt of all his new conquests, from the river of Egypt to the river Euphrates (2 Kings xxiv. 7): so that this part of his strength was already taken away, and never to be recovered; and now God threatens to destroy the remainder of his power, the kingdom of Egypt itself.

I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand.] He shall have no more strength to defend himself, than a man hath to use his sword when his arm is broken.

Ver. 23. I will scatter the Egyptians] See xxix. 13.

Ver. 24. I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon.] The same promise God afterward made to Cyrus, Isa. xlv. 1 (compare Ps. xviii. 39).

He shall groan—with the groanings of a deadly wounded man.] His strength shall perfectly fail, as a man's who is dying of his wounds.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 AND it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the third month, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, and to his multitude; Whom art thou like in thy greatness?

3 ¶ Behold, the Assyrian was a cedar in Le-

CHAP. XXXI.

ARGUMENT.—A continuation of the judgments denounced against Pharaoh and his kingdom: whose pride God humbles by putting him in mind of the dreadful fall of the king of Ninevah, much superior to him in power and greatness, whose ruin the prophet elegantly describes under the metaphor of a fair flourishing tree cut down and withered.

Ver. 2. Whom art thou like in thy greatness?] Thou pridest thyself as if there never was any prince or king that could compare with thee.

Ver. 3. The Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon] By the Assyrian, Archbishop Usher, ad A. M. 3378, and Dr. Prideaux, par. i. p. 47, do most probably understand that king of Assyria, whom some call Chyniladanus, others Saracus. It is of this king of Assyria, the words of the prophet Nahum are to be understood, iii. 18. In like manner Zephaniah joins the destruction of Assyria and the desolation of Nineveh together, ii. 13. Nabopolassar, the king of Babylon, and Cyaxares, the king of Media, called by the names of Nebuchadonozor and Assuerus in Tobit, xiv. 15, joining their forces together against him, besieged Nineveh, took it, and after having slain the king, utterly destroyed that great and famous city; and put an end to that part of the Assyrian empire. Nabopolassar having before possessed himself of the other part, which was properly called the Babylonian empire (see Dr. Prideaux, p. 45). In this remarkable catastrophe, the prophecies of Jonah, Nahum, and Zephaniah, foretelling the destruction of Nineveh, were fulfilled.

The king of Nineveh is compared here to a fair and tall cedar, such as grow in mount Lebanon (see the like comparison, Isa. x. 34, xxxvii. 24, Zech. xi. 2). The greatness of Nebuchadnezzar's power and kingdom, is set forth under the same resemblance, Dan. iv. 10, &c.

His top was among the thick boughs.] He overtopped all the other flourishing trees (compare xvii. 3, xix. 11).

Ver. 4.] As trees flourish by a river side (compare banon with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud, and of an high stature; and his top was among the thick boughs.

4 The waters made him great, the deep set him up on high with her rivers running round about his plants, and sent out her little rivers unto all the trees of the field.

5 Therefore his height was exalted above all the trees of the field, and his boughs were multiplied, and his branches became long because of the multitude of waters, when he shot forth.

6 All the fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs, and under his branches did all the beasts of the field bring forth their young, and under his shadow dwelt all great nations.

7 Thus was he fair in his greatness, in the length of his branches: for his root was by great waters.

8 The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him: the fir-trees were not like his boughs, and the chesnut-trees were not like the branches; nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty.

9 I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches: so that all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied them.

xvii. 5), so the traffic of the several branches of the river Tigris, upon which Nineveh was situate, made that city and kingdom rich and populous, and she imparted her wealth and stores among the neighbouring provinces (compare Nahum ii. 6).

Ver. 5.] He became greater than all the kings about him (compare Dan. iv. 11).

Ver. 6.] Several nations applied to him for protection, and thought themselves and all their concerns safe under his government (compare xvii. 23, Dan. iv. 12).

Ver. 8. The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him:] He overtopped the goodly cedars, called in the Hebrew, "the cedars of God" (Ps. lxxx. 10): such fair ones as might be supposed to have grown in Paradise (compare xxviii. 13).

Ver. 9. So that all the trees of Eden,—envied him.] "All the kings of the east envied him, and his greatness;" as the Chaldee paraphrast expresseth the sense.

Ver. 10. Because thou hast lifted up thyself in height,] Because thy pride hath still increased with thy prosperity (compare xxviii. 17).

Ver. 11. Into the hand of the mighty one of the heathen;] Or, "the mighty one of the nations," as the word gojim is rendered in the next verse. The word El, though commonly spoken of God, yet is sometimes applied to heroes (see xxxii. 21), sometimes to angels, as being mighty in strength, as Ps. lxxxix. 6. So God here saith, he delivered the Assyrians into the hand of Nabopolassar king of Babylon, who joining his forces with Cyaxares king of Media, his confederate, made themselves masters of Nineveh, and the king of Assyria, whose seat it was.

Ver. 12. And strangers.—have cut him off, &c.] Compare xxviii. 7, xxx. 11. The armies of the kings of Babylon and Media shall utterly destroy him and his empire, and leave him without life or strength, like a tree that is cut down, dried up, and withered.

Upon the mountains and in all the valleys his branches are fallen, &c.] As the limbs of such a 10 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast lifted up thyself in height, and he hath shot up his top among the thick boughs, and his heart is lifted up in his height;

11 I have therefore delivered him into the hand of the mighty one of the heathen; he shall surely deal with him: I have driven him out for his wickedness.

12 And strangers, the terrible of the nations, have cut him off, and have left him: upon the mountains and in all the valleys his branches are fallen, and his boughs are broken by all the rivers of the land; and all the people of the earth are gone down from his shadow, and have left him.

13 Upon his ruin shall all the fowls of the heaven remain, and all the beasts of the field shall be upon his branches:

14 To the end that none of all the trees by the waters exalt themselves for their height, neither shoot up their top among the thick boughs, neither their trees stand up in their height, all that drink water: for they are all delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth, in the midst of the children of men, with them that go down to the pit.

15 Thus saith the Lord God; In the day when tree are broken by the fall, and those that rested under its shadow are frightened away, and have forsaken the place: so the Assyrian army lies slain here and there (compare xxxii. 5, xxxv. 8), and those that lived under his protection and government withdrew their obedience from him (compare Dan. iv. 14).

Ver. 13.] As the birds sit upon the boughs of a tree cut down, and the beasts browse upon its branches; so his dominions shall be a prey to the conquerors: or his armies that are slain shall become meat to the birds and beasts (compare xxix. 5, Isa. xviii. 6).

Ver. 14. To the end that none of the trees by the waters exalt themselves, &c.] Thy destruction shall be a warning to other kings and potentates, to deter them from priding themselves in the time of their prosperity (see xxviii. 17).

For they are all delivered unto death.] Whatever distinction there is between them and the inferior sort, death shall make them all equal (see Ps. lxxxii. 7); and particularly to Egypt, and those other countries against which God hath denounced his judgments, the same fate is allotted which this Assyrian monarch has already undergone (see xxxii. 18, &c.).

Ver. 15. In the day] This and the following verse are an elegant description of that consternation that seized the king of Assyria's allies at the suddenness of his downfall: the same metaphor being still pursued.

I caused a mourning: I covered the deep for him.] The sense might better be expressed thus: "I covered the deep with mourning:" for when two verbs are joined together in the Hebrew, one is usually taken in the sense of a noun, or an adverb. The deep that nursed up this fair tree (ver. 4), is described as mourning at its downfall.

The great waters were stayed:] As if the streams had stopped their usual course on purpose to lament his fate.

I caused Lebanon to mourn for him.] The forest of Lebanon, and all the stately trees in it, sympathized he went down to the grave I caused a mourning: I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed: and I caused Lebanon to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field fainted for him.

16 I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit: and all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth.

with his misfortunes; i. e. all his confederates and allies.

Ver. 16. The nations to shake] See xxvi. 15.

When I cast him down to hell [or the grave], &c.] See xxxii. 18, 21, Isa. xiv. 15.

All the trees of Eden,—all that drink water [see ver. 14], shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth.] The deceased princes, confederates to the Assyrians, described here as so many stately trees and cedars, shall feel some mitigation of their calamities, when they see thee brought down as low as themselves (compare xxxii. 31, Isa. xiv. 8—10, a place exactly parallel to this).

Ver. 17. They also went down to hell [or the grave] with him] His allies underwent the same fate with himself, and were cut off in the common destruction (see xxxii. 20, &c.).

That dwell under his shadow in the midst of the heathen.] Or, the nations (see ver. 11), his auxiliaries (see xxx. 8, xxxii. 21), who lived under his protection in several countries and provinces (compare Lam. iv. 20).

17 They also went down into hell with him unto them [that be slain with the sword; and they that were his arm, that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen.

18 ¶ To whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness among the trees of Eden? yet shalt thou be brought down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth: thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised with them [that be slain with the sword. This is Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God.

Ver. 18. To whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness] The prophet now applies himself to the king of Egypt; q. d. Wilt thou still boast thyself, as if no prince were thine equal (see ver. 2)? yet thou shalt undergo the same fate with this fair flourishing cedar, the king of Assyria (see ver. 14, and compare xxxii. 19).

Thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised, &c.] See xxviii. 10, xxxii. 19, 20.

This is Pharaoh and all his multitude,] The judgment that befell the king of Assyria here described, is an exact representation of the destruction that remains for Pharaoh and his people; the word is commonly denotes the same as to signify or represent, especially in prophecies, parables, and such like figurative descriptions (see xxxiv. 31, xxxvii. 11, Gen. xli. 26, Exod. xii. 11, Matt. xiii. 19, xxvi. 26.)

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 AND it came to pass in the twelfth year, in the twelfth month, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, take up a lamentation for Pharaoh king of Egypt, and say unto him, Thou art like a young lion of the nations, and thou art as a whale in the seas: and thou camest forth with thy rivers, and troublest the waters with thy feet, and foulest their rivers.

3 Thus saith the Lord God; I will therefore spread out my net over thee with a company of many people; and they shall bring thee up in my net.

4 Then will I leave thee upon the land, I will cast thee forth upon the open field, and will cause all the fowls of the heaven to remain upon thee, and I will fill the beasts of the whole earth with thee.

5 And I will lay thy flesh upon the mountains, and fill thy valleys with thy height.

6 I will also water with thy blood the land wherein thou swimdest, even to the mountains; and the rivers shall be full of thee.

CHAP. XXXII.

ARGUMENT.—A continuation of the same subject, and a farther description of the lamentable destruction of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar: the prophet illustrating the dreadfulness of his fall by a poetical description of the infernal mansions appointed for tyrants and oppressors, where Pharaoh is to have a place allotted for him.

Ver. 2. Take up a lamentation for Pharaoh] See note on xxii. 2.

Thou art like a young lion of the nations,] Thou art like a beast of prey, devouring far and near (see xix. 3, 6, xxxviii. 13).

Thou art as a whale in the seas:] By the word tannim, we may fitly understand a crocodile, as hath been observed upon xxix. 3, and the description that follows of this creature agrees very well to a crocodile, but cannot be applied to a whale.

Thou camest forth with thy rivers, and troublest the waters] Or, “thou rushedst forth through thy streams and troubledst,” &c. i. e. thou wast the occasion of great commotions and disturbances to all thy neighbours (compare xxxiv. 18).

Ver. 3.] I will bring thine enemies upon thee, who shall encompass thee, and master thee, as a wild beast or monstrous fish that is taken in a net (see xii. 14).

Ver. 4.] Thine armies shall fall in the open field, and become a prey to wild beasts and ravenous birds (compare xxix. 5).

Ver. 5.] The vast bulk of thine armies when they are slain, shall fill both mountains and valleys (see xxxi. 12).

Ver. 6. I will also water with thy blood the land wherein thou swimdest,] The land shall be soaked with thy blood wherein thou bearest rule, just as in the waters the great fish have an absolute power over the lesser fry.

7 And when I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light.

8 All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord God.

9 I will also vex the hearts of many people, when I shall bring thy destruction among the nations, into the countries which thou hast not known.

10 Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them; and they shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life, in the day of thy fall.

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God; The sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon thee.

12 By the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall, the terrible of the nations, all of them: and they shall spoil the pomp of Egypt, and all the multitude thereof shall be destroyed.

13 I will destroy also all the beasts thereof from beside the great waters; neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts trouble them.

14 Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil, saith the Lord God.

15 When I shall make the land of Egypt desolate, and the country shall be destitute of that whereof it was full, when I shall smite all them that dwell therein, then shall they know that I am the Lord.

16 This is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her: the daughters of the nations shall lament her: they shall lament for her, even for Egypt, and for all her multitude, saith the Lord God.

17 ¶ It came to pass also in the twelfth year, in the fifteenth day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, wail for the multitude of Egypt, and east them down, even her, and the daughters of the famous nations, unto the nether parts of the earth, with them that go down into the pit.

19 Whom dost thou pass in beauty? go down, and be thou laid with the uncircumcised.

20 They shall fall in the midst of them that

Even to the mountains;] The mountains shall be wet with it, as well as the lower grounds, ver. 5 (compare Isa. xxxiv. 3).

Ver. 7, 8. I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark;] These metaphors denote the downfall of states and governments; kings and rulers being figuratively expressed by the sun, moon, and stars (compare Isa. xlii. 10, xxxiv. 4, Joel ii. 31, Rev. vi. 12—14). God's judgments upon particular countries being earnest of a general judgment, they are described in such terms as if the whole frame of nature were dissolved.

And set darkness upon thy land,] Every thing shall look dark and dismal (see xxx. 3).

Ver. 9.] When thy exiles shall be dispersed into foreign countries (see xxix. 12), and relate the miserable circumstances of thy destruction, it shall cause grief and consternation in all that hear it (see the following verse).

Ver. 10.] See xxvi. 16, xxvii. 35, xxx. 9.

Ver. 12. The terrible of the nations,] See xxviii. 7.

Ver. 13. I will destroy also all the beasts thereof from beside the great waters;] Or, "that they be no more beside the great waters," as Noldius translates the phrase, p. 635. The horses shall be consumed in the war, and the other cattle that used to feed in the meadows by the side of the Nile (see Gen. xli. 2), shall be destroyed or driven away as a prey (see xxix. 8, 11).

[Neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more,—then I will make their waters deep, &c.] Or, "I will make their waters clear," for so the Hebrew word is taken xxxiv. 18. Following this translation, the words may be interpreted to this sense: There being an entire destruction both of man and beast in Egypt (see xxix. 11), and none passing through it, it shall be like the waters of a river which are never disturbed, but run pure and clear like oil.]

Ibid. and ver. 14. Neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts, &c.] Here is a transition from a proper sense to a metaphorical one: the prophet in the second verse compared the disturbances the Egyptians gave their neighbours to troubling and fouling of waters; in allusion to which metaphor he saith here, that when Egypt is made desolate, and the number, both of men and beasts, diminished by their wars and confusions, then their neighbours will enjoy such quietness, as a river does that smoothly glides along, and never hath its streams fouled or disturbed.

Ver. 16. This is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her:] This is the substance of a lamentation which may be properly used to bewail the calamities of Egypt (see ver. 2).

The daughters of the nations shall lament her:] i. e. The people of the neighbouring countries: so the "daughters of Zion" and of Babylon signify the inhabitants of those cities. The expression alludes to the mourning women, whose profession it was to lament at funerals (see note on Jer. ix. 17).

Ver. 17. Fifteenth day of the month,] Of the twelfth month (see ver. 1). The LXX. understand it of the first month, as that indefinite expression is probably understood, xxvi. 1.

Ver. 18. Wail for—Egypt,] See ver. 2, 16.

Cast them down,—and the daughters of the famous nations,] The prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them; see xliii. 3, where Ezekiel saith, "he was sent to destroy the city;" i. e. to foretell its destruction. In the same sense we are to understand the expression here of casting down Egypt; i. e. foretelling its ruin, together with God's judgments upon other famous kingdoms in that part of the world, which are reckoned up in the following verses, and called here the "daughters of the nations;" concerning which expression see the note on ver. 16.

Unto the nether parts of the earth,] The expressions denote utter destruction, and are parallel to those elsewhere used of being brought down to hell, to the grave, or into silence (compare xxxi. 14, Isa. xiv. 15).

Ver. 19.] What reason hast thou now to prefer thyself before others? since thou shalt undergo the same fate with the worst of them (see the note on xxviii. 10).

Ver. 20. They shall fall in the midst of them that are are slain by the sword: she is delivered to the sword; draw her and all her multitudes.

21 The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell with them that help him: they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword.

22 Asshur is there and all her company: his graves are about him: all of them slain, fallen by the sword:

23 Whose graves are set in the sides of the pit, and her company is round about her grave: all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which caused terror in the land of the living.

24 There is Elam and all her multitude round about her grave, all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which are gone down uncircumcised into the nether parts of the earth, which caused their terror in the land of the living; yet they have borne their shame with them that go down to the pit.

25 They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude: her graves are round about him: all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword: though their terror was caused in the land of the living, yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit: he is put in the midst of them that be slain.

26 There is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude: her graves are round about him: all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword, though they caused their terror in the land of the living.

27 And they shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell with their weapons of war: and they have laid their swords under their heads, but their iniquities shall be upon their bones, though slain by the sword:] They do not "die the common death of all men," as Moses speaks, Numb. xvi. 29, but are cut off by an extraordinary judgment from the hand of God himself.

Draw her and all her multitudes.] Carry her and her people away to the grave, like so many carcases which are buried without any solemnity. The words are spoken to the Babylonians, the executors of God's judgments upon Egypt.

Ver. 21.] Here follows a poetical description of the infernal regions, where the ghosts of deceased tyrants, with their subjects, are represented as coming to meet the king of Egypt and his auxiliaries (see xxx. 8), upon their arrival to the same place. Hell signifies here the state of the dead (compare xxxi. 16, 17, Isa. xiv. 9, &c. and see the notes there).

They are gone down, &c.] These warriors, famous in their time for their exploits, have undergone the same fate with other men of blood, and are gone down to the grave by violent deaths (see ver. 19).

Ver. 22. Asshur is there and all her company:] The Assyrians, both king and people, whose destruction is represented in the foregoing chapter.

His graves are about him:] The Egyptians lie buried in the same place with them. The masculine and feminine genders are promiscuously used in the following verses. The masculine referring to the prince, whose subjects the deceased were; the feminine to the nation or country to which they belonged.

Ver. 23. Whose graves are set in the sides of the pit,] Compare xxvi. 20, Isa. xiv. 15.

Her company is round about her grave:] Like lesser graves placed round the monument of a person of great quality: or the words may import that death has made them equal (compare ver. 24, 25).

All of them slain, &c.] See ver. 20.

Which caused terror in the land of the living.] Though they were a terror while they were alive to their neighbours (see xxvi. 17).

Ver. 24. There is Elam] Which was conquered by Nebuchadnezzar (see Jer. xlix. 34, and the notes there).

Yet they have borne their shame] They have been shamefully subdued, and lost their lives and glory together, as Asshur did before them (ver. 22.)

Ver. 25. They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain] Elam and her people have a place among the deceased princes and potentates. The word bed is used for the grave, Isa. lvii. 2, and may, perhaps, in both places, allude to the costly monuments or sepulchres which used to be erected for persons of great quality. Mittah, a word of the same sense, is used for a bier or coffin, 2 Sam. iii. 31.

Her graves are round about him:] About those of the king of Egypt, and his people.

Ver. 26. There is Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude:] Who are threatened by God with a terrible destruction (see xxxviii. 2, &c.). But they seem to be mentioned here by way of prolepsis, or anticipation, as the critics call it; for the destruction threatened to Meshech and Tubal was not to come to pass till several ages after this prophecy against Egypt was fulfilled, as may be gathered from several expressions in that prophecy. It is usual in the prophets to speak of what is to come, as if it were already past, as hath been observed elsewhere. So the country of Goshen is called "the land of Rameses," Gen. xlvii. 11, which yet had that name from the city Rameses, built in aftertimes by the Israelites (see Exod. i. 11). By the same figure Horeb is called "the mountain of God," Exod. iii. 1. Concerning Meshech and Tubal, see the note on xxvii. 13.

Ver. 27. They shall not lie with the mighty] They shall not lie among those heathen heroes who died a natural death, and are laid in their graves with pomp and magnificence (compare this verse with Isa. xiv. 18, 19).

Which are gone down to hell [or the grave; see ver. 21] with their weapons of war:] The prophet may possibly represent the future state of these tyrants and warriors, according to the popular notions received in the world, and describe their condition in the other life suitably to the character they bore in this. So Virgil describes his heroes in the Elysian fields (Æneid. lib. vi.)—

"Quæ gratia currûm—Armorumque fuit vivis,—sequitur tellure repostos."

They have laid their swords under their heads,] Who were carried to their graves in state, and had their achievements and other ensigns of honour affixed to their monuments for perpetuating their memory. It has been the custom of all ages to adorn the sepulchres of heroes with their swords and other trophies of war (see 1 Macc. xiii. 19). So Virgil describes Misenus's tomb (Æn. vi.)—

"Ingenti mole sepulchrum Imponit, suaque arma viro."

But their iniquities shall be upon their bones,] Their death shall carry in it plain tokens of their sins, and of God's vengeance pursuing them for their cruelty.

they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living,

28 Yea, thou shalt be broken in the midst of the uncircumcised, and shalt lie with them that are slain with the sword:

29 There is Edom, her kings, and all her princes, which with their might are laid by them that were slain with the sword: they shall lie with the uncircumcised, and with them that go down to the pit.

30 There be the princes of the north, all of them, and all the Zidonians, which are gone down with the slain; with their terror they are ashamed of their might; and they lie uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword, and bear their shame with them that go down to the pit.

31 Pharaoh shall see them, and shall be comforted over all his multitude, even Pharaoh and all his army slain by the sword, saith the Lord God.

32 For I have caused my terror in the land of the living; and he shall be laid in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that are slain with the sword, even Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God.

Ver. 28.] See ver. 19.

Ver. 29. There is Edom, &c.] Of whose destruction Ezekiel prophesied, xxv. 12.

Ver. 30. There be the princes of the north, all of them, and all the Zidonians.] By the princes of the north, may probably be understood the Tyrians and their allies (see xxvi. 16), joined here with the Zidonians their near neighbours, as they are put together in this prophecy, ch. xxviii., as sharers in the same destruction. Some by the "princes of the north" understand Meshech, Tubal, and other northern nations: see xxxviii. 6, 15, xxxix. 2, whose destruction is foretold in those chapters.

Ver. 31. Pharaoh shall see them, and shall be comforted] As it affords some relief to calamitous persons to see others in the same condition with themselves (see xxxi. 16.)

Ver. 32.] As these kings and nations have been a terror to the world whilst they were in it (ver. 24, &c.), so I will now be a terror to them; and especially to Pharaoh and his people, in making them a remarkable example of my vengeance.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 AGAIN the word of the LORD came unto me, saying;

2 Son of man, speak to the children of thy people, and say unto them, When I bring the sword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman:

3 If when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet, and warn the people;

4 Then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come, and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head.

5 He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning; his blood shall be upon him. But he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul.

6 But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand.

7 ¶ So thou, O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me.

8 When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

9 Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

10 Therefore, O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel; Thus ye speak, saying, If

CHAP. XXXIII.

ARGUMENT.—The duty of a prophet in warning a people of their sins, is exemplified by that of a watchman; then follows an earnest exhortation to repentance, upon assurance that God will accept it, being for the most part a repetition of what was said before in the eighteenth chapter. Upon the news being brought to the prophet that Jerusalem was destroyed by the Chaldeans, he foretells the utter destruction of Judea, to check the vain confidence of those who still tarried in it, and withal reproves the hypocrisy of those Jews who were of the captivity.

Ver. 2. When I bring my sword] Bring an enemy against a land with armed force (see xiv. 17).

If the people of the land take a man of their coasts,] Or, "from among them," to which sense the word miktse is translated, Gen. xlvii.

Set him for their watchman:] Such watchmen were placed upon the turrets of their city walls, to give notice of the enemies' approach (see 2 Sam. xviii. 24, 25, 2 Kings ix. 17, Isa. xxi. 8).

Ver. 3. When he seeth the sword] When he spies the enemy marching against it (see ver. 2).

Ver. 4. His blood shall be upon his own head.] His destruction is owing to himself (see xviii. 13, Acts xviii. 6).

Ver. 5. He that taketh warning shall deliver his soul.] Shall save his life from the danger that threatens it. In like manner, he that takes warning by the prophet's admonition shall preserve himself from the judgments threatened against sinners (see ver. 10).

Ver. 6. He is taken away in his iniquity;] See iii. 18.

Ver. 7—9.] See iii. 17—19.

Ver. 10. If our transgressions—be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?] Thou hast threatened that we shall "pine away in our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?

11 Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

12 Therefore, thou son of man, say unto the children of thy people, The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression: as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth.

13 When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it.

14 Again, when I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right;

15 If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; he shall surely live, he shall not die.

16 None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him: he hath done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live.

17 ¶ Yet the children of thy people say, The way of the Lord is not equal: but as for them, their way is not equal.

18 When the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, he shall even die thereby.

19 But if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby.

20 ¶ Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal. O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways.

21 ¶ And it came to pass in the twelfth year of our captivity, in the tenth month, in the fifth day of the month, that one that had escaped out of Jerusalem came unto me, saying, The city is smitten.

22 Now the hand of the Lord was upon me in the evening, afore he that was escaped came; and had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning; and my mouth was opened, and I was no more dumb.

23 Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, they that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel speak, saying, Abraham was one, and he inherited the land: but we are many; the land is given us for inheritance.

25 Wherefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Ye eat with the blood, and lift up your eyes toward your idols, and shed blood: and shall ye possess the land?

26 Ye stand upon your sword, ye work abomour sins," xxiv. 23, how then can the promises of life belong to us! The words of persons despairing of God's mercy, and from thence taking encouragement to go on in their sins (see a like instance, Jer. ii. 25).

Ver. 11. Why will ye die.] See note on xviii. 4.

Ver. 12, 13.] See note upon xviii. 26, 27.

Ver. 13. If he trust to his own righteousness.] If he rely upon the good works he hath done, and think the worth of them will overbalance the guilt of his evil deeds. This seems to be the sense of the latter Jews, who lay this down for a certain rule in their Mishna, that "all Israel hath a share in the world to come." [The Mahometans maintain the same opinion. See Relandus, lib. i. De Relig. Mohammed. cap. 6.]

Ver. 15. If the wicked restore the pledge.] See xviii. 7.

Give again that he hath robbed.] It is a necessary condition of obtaining pardon, that men make restitution of what they have unjustly gotten from others. The law was express to this purpose, Lev. vi. 5, where the offender is required to add a fifth part to the principal, and "give it to him to whom it appertaineth;" to the same purpose is that received rule among the Christian casuists taken from St. Augustine, epist. 54. Non dimittitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum; "The sin is not forgiven, unless what is taken away be restored."

Walk in the statutes of life.] See note on xx. 11.

Ver. 16.] See note on xviii. 22.

Ver. 21.] The news of the taking and burning of Jerusalem was brought to that part of the Babylonish dominions where the Jewish captives were, in something above a year and four months after this calamity happened (see Jer. lii. 12).

Ver. 22. The hand of the Lord was upon me] I felt a sensible impulse of the prophetic spirit (see i. 3).

And had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning.] God has given me commission to speak in his name unto the people, which I had not done before near the space of three years (compare xxiv. 1). And the destruction of the city, which I had so often foretold, being now brought to pass (which at that time you would not believe, see xi. 3, xii. 22), gave an indisputable authority and credit to my words (see note on xxiv. 27).

Ver. 24. They that inhabit those wastes of the land] They that are left behind in the land that is now wasted with fire and sword (see ver. 27, and xxxvi. 4).

Abraham was one, and he inherited the land.] If Abraham, being but a single person, with his family, had the whole country of Judea given to him (see Gen. xiii. 15), there is much greater reason to conclude that God will preserve the possession of it to us, who are a numerous part of Abraham's posterity. These men spake after the vain manner of the Jews, who fondly presume that they have a right in all the promises made to Abraham (see Matt. iii. 8, John viii. 33, Rom. ix. 7). The title of one is elsewhere given to Abraham, as being singled out from the rest of his family to be the original or head of the Jewish nation (see Isa. li. 2, Mal. ii. 15, Heb. xi. 12).

Ver. 25. Ye eat with the blood.] Which was forbidden several times in the law, as being a rite the heathens used in the sacrifices they offered to idols (whose worship is reproved in the very next words), as Dr. Spencer proves at large, De Legib. Hebraic. lib. ii. cap. 11, who brings many arguments to show that the Hebrew phrase na! hadam, should be translated "near the blood;" in allusion to the idolatrous ination, and ye defile every one his neighbour's wife: and shall ye possess the land?

27 Say thou thus unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; As I live, surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and him that is in the open field will I give to the beasts to be devoured, and they that be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence.

28 For I will lay the land most desolate, and the pomp of her strength shall cease; and the mountains of Israel shall be desolate, that none shall pass through.

29 Then shall they know that I am the Lord, when I have laid the land most desolate because of all their abominations which they have committed.

30 ¶ Also, thou son of man, the children of rite of pouring the blood of the slain beast into a vessel or pit, and then eating part of the sacrifice just by it.

Lift up your eyes toward your idols,] See xviii. 6.

And shed blood.: See ix. 9, xxii. 6, 9.

Ver. 26. Ye stand upon your sword,] You make your "strength the law of justice," according to the character given of ungodly men, Wisd. ii. 11. Dr. Spencer, in the forecited place, thinks that the expression alludes to a custom of the heathens, who put the blood of their sacrifices into a vessel or pit, in order to call up and consult evil spirits, and then stood with their swords drawn to keep the demons off from doing them any harm.

Ye defile—his neighbour's wife;] See Wisd. ii. 6, xxii. 11.

Ver. 27. They that are in the wastes (see ver. 24) shall fall by the sword,] The three judgments here mentioned, together with famine, are often threatened as the last and finishing strokes of God's vengeance upon the Jewish nation (see v. 12, 17, vi. 12, xiv. 21, Jer. xv. 3).

They that be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence.] Compare Judg. vi. 2. The caves here mentioned were a sort of strong-holds formed by nature in the rocks, or cut out under the tops of mountains: they were so large, that men might secure themselves, their families and their goods, in them. So David is said to "abide in strong-holds, and remain in a mountain in the wilderness of Ziph," 1 Sam. xxiii. 14. Such was the cave of Adullam, where David had his residence for some time, and was there resorted to by his relations (1 Sam. xxii. 1), and at another time by his principal officers (2 Sam. xxiii. 15). [Such a cave is mentioned by Dio, called Ceria, belonging to the Getæ, whither they fled, and carried their movables, for fear of Crassus: lib. li. ad fin.]

Ver. 28. I will lay the land most desolate,] See Jer. xlv. 2, 6, 22, and xxxvi. 34, 35 of this prophecy.

The pomp of her strength shall cease;] All that riches and magnificence wherein they pleased themselves, as that which gave them strength and reputation in the eyes of the world (see vii. 24): or the phrase may denote the beauty and glory of the temple, which they looked upon as their chiefest strength and protection (see xxiv. 21).

The mountains—shall be desolate,] See vi. 2.

Ver. 29. That I am the Lord,] See vi. 7.

Ver. 30. The children of thy people (those of the captivity) still are talking against thee, &c.] Or rather "of thee" as the LXX. rightly render it; "for thy people still are talking against thee by the walls and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord.

31 And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness.

32 And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not.

33 And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come,) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.

with their mouth they shewed much love," as it follows in the next verse.

By the walls and in the doors] Both in their public places of concourse, and in their private meetings.

Come—and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord.] These were such as "drew nigh to God with their mouths, but their hearts were far from him:" as Isaiah describes their hypocrisy, xxix. 13.

Ver. 31. They come unto thee as the people cometh,] Or, as disciples flock to their teachers. So the Chaldee paraphrase explains it.

They sit before thee as my people.] See viii. 1.

For with their mouths they shew much love.] "They make loves," or "jest," as our margin reads out of the Hebrew; which some interpreters understand, as if they ridiculed the prophet's words, or turned them into burlesque, so the Vulgar Latin renders it, In canticum oris sui vertunt. But by comparing this with the following verse, where the same word nagabin is spoken of a song or musical tune, we may rather understand the phrase to this sense, That they were delighted with the prophet's harmonious voice, or taking eloquence, but would not make the proper use of what he said for the correcting their evil manners.

Ver. 32.] They come to hear thee for their entertainment, not for their edification, as many go to hear famed and eloquent preachers. St. Augustine tells us, that he himself was such an auditor of St. Ambrose, before he was converted (Confess. lib. v. cap. 13). Studiöse audiebam disputantem in populo, non attentione qua debui, sed tanquam explorator facundiæ ejus, utrum conveniret famæ suæ:—Verbis ejus suspendebam intentus, rerum autem incuriosus et contemptor astabam. "I heard him diligently when he discoursed in the congregation, but not with that application of mind which I ought to have done; but I came rather out of curiosity to know whether his eloquence was answerable to that opinion the world had of him. I was very attentive to his style, and charmed with the sweetness of his delivery, but had little value or concern for the subjects he treated of."

Ver. 33. Lo, it will come, &c.] Or rather, "lo, it is come;" for so the same phrase is translated, vi. 2, 6, 10, the verb being in the present tense. When you see my prophecies concerning the destruction of Jerusalem actually brought to pass, as it appears they are at this time (see ver. 21), then you will be convinced of the truth of my mission, and of your own inexcusable crime in despising my predictions (see xxiv. 27).

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds; Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flocks?

3 Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with wool, ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock.

4 The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.

5 And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd: and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered.

6 My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them.

7 ¶ Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

8 As I live, saith the Lord God, surely because my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds search for my flock, but the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not my flock;

9 Therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

10 Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them.

CHAP. XXXIV.

ARGUMENT.—God reproves the ill conduct of the governors of the Jewish nation, both civil and ecclesiastical; and promises a general restoration of his people, and their happy condition under the government of the Messias, their king.

Ver. 2. Prophesy against the shepherds] The word “shepherd,” in the prophetic writings, comprehends both civil and ecclesiastical governors (see the notes upon Isa. lvi. 11, Jer. ii. 8, xxiii. 1): princes being called shepherds of their people, as well as those who have the immediate care of their souls (see Ps. lxxviii. 71, 72). To the same sense Homer calls Agamemnon, παιμὼν λαῶν, “the shepherd of the people.” And as the threatenings here denounced, extend to all sorts of governors; so the several sins of the princes, priests, and prophets are reproved, xxii. 25, &c. (compare likewise xlv. 8, 9).

Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that feed themselves!] That regard their own profit and advantage, not the good of the people committed to their charge. Plato, in the first book of his Commonwealth, describing the office of a magistrate, saith, “He should look upon himself as sustaining the office of a shepherd, that makes it his chief business to take care of his flock; not as if he were going to a feast to fill himself and satiate his appetite, or to a market to make what gain he can to himself.” Eusebius, in his twelfth book De Preparatione Evangelica, cap. 44, hath transcribed the whole passage as an exact parallel to this place of Ezekiel.

Ver. 3. Ye eat the fat.] Or, “the milk,” as the LXX. render it. The Hebrew words, haleb, milk, and heleb, fat, differ only in their points; so that the ancient versions take them promiscuously one for the other (see xxv. 4).

Ye kill them that are fed:] Them that are fat ye design for the slaughter, wherewith to feed yourselves (see Zech. x. 5), i. e. they took away the lives of the wealthy and substantial, that they might enrich themselves with their estates (see xxii. 25, 27).

Ver. 4. The diseased have ye not strengthened.] Ye have not applied proper remedies to the wants and necessities of the people committed to your charge.

The magistrates have not taken care to relieve the needy, and defend the oppressed. The priests and the prophets have not been diligent in giving the people proper instructions, in reducing those that are in error, or in comforting the disconsolate.

Neither have ye bound up that which was broken.] Ye have not given ease to the afflicted and miserable. A metaphor taken from surgeons binding up wounds (compare Isa. lxi. 1).

Neither have ye brought again that which was driven away.] Or, “which was gone astray,” as the word niddakuh is translated, Deut. xxi. 1. Ye have not sought by good instructions to reduce those that have been seduced into error; or to reclaim those that are ready to be lost and perish in their sins (compare Matt. ix. 36, xviii. 11).

With force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.] You have tried to reduce them to their duty by the rough methods of cruelty and compulsion, not by the gentle way of reason and argument. In like manner the methods of instruction and good example are particularly recommended to the pastors of the Christian church, 1 Pet. v. 3, 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25.

Ver. 5.] By reason of these neglects of the governors, the whole frame of the government is dissolved, and my people are scattered here and there: some are fled for refuge into foreign countries (see Jer. xl. 11) others are carried captives by their enemies, who, as so many beasts of prey, have spoiled and devoured them (compare Isa. lvi. 9, Jer. xii. 9).

Ver. 6. My sheep wandered through all the mountains.] As sheep, when there is nobody to look after them, wander from one mountain and hill to another; so my people have been forced to leave their habitations, and fly to any place where they might hope for protection (compare vii. 16, and see the note upon Jer. xiii. 16).

None did search or seek after them.] Their rulers took no care of my people while they had power and authority: and now I have displaced them for their misdemeanours, and there is nobody left whose office it is to take any farther care of my people (see ver. 10).

Ver. 10. I will require my flock at their hand, &c.] I will require a severe account of their kings and princes, their priests and prophets, of the damage my people have sustained through their ill-management;

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out.

12 As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day.

13 And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country.

14 I will feed them in a good pasture, and upon the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be: there they shall lie in a good fold, and in a fat pasture shall they feed upon the mountains of Israel.

15 I will feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord God.

16 I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick: but I will destroy the fat and the strong; I will feed them with judgment.

17 And as for you, O my flock, thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I judge between cattle and cattle, between the rams and the he goats.

18 Seemeth it a small thing unto you to have eaten up the good pasture, but ye must tread down with your feet the residue of your pastures? and to have drunk of the deep waters, but ye must foul the residue with your feet?

19 And as for my flock, they eat that which ye have trodden with your feet; and they drink that which ye have fouled with your feet.

20 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God unto them; Behold, I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle and between the lean cattle.

21 Because ye have thrust with side and with shoulder, and pushed all the diseased with your horns, till ye have scattered them abroad;

22 Therefore will I save my flock, and they shall no more be a prey; and I will judge between cattle and cattle.

23 And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd.

24 And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them; I the Lord have spoken it.

25 And I will make with them a covenant of and I will deprive them of that honour and pre-eminence which they have made such ill use of, as I have already displaced Zedekiah, and the princes, priests, and others, that were in authority under him.

Ver. 12. So will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver out of all places] I will bring them home from their several dispersions, whither they have been driven in the dark and dismal time of the destruction of their country, and their own captivity (compare xxx. 3).

Ver. 13.] This prophecy may in some degree have been fulfilled in the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity: but seems still to look farther, even to the general restoration of the whole nation; which most of the prophets foretell shall come to pass in the latter days (compare xi. 17, xx. 41, xxviii. 25, xxxvi. 24, xxxvii. 21, xxxviii. 8, xxxix. 27).

Ver. 14. Upon the high mountains] See vi. 2.

There shall they lie in a good fold] The expressions denote plenty and security (compare Isa. lvi. 10, Jer. xxxiii. 12, Hos. ii. 18, Zeph. iii. 13).

Ver. 16. I will seek that which was lost] The Messias, whom I will set over them (see ver. 23), shall faithfully discharge all the offices of a shepherd towards them, which their former pastors have neglected, ver. 4 (compare Isa. xl. 11, lxi. 1, Matt. xv. 24, xviii. 11, John x. 11).

I will destroy the fat and the strong] Those that oppress and domineer over the weak (see ver. 20, 21, compare xxxix. 18, Amos iv. 1).

I will feed them with judgment] Or, with discretion; i. e. I will deal with each of them according to their deserts, and make a distinction between the fat and lean cattle (see ver. 18, 20).

Ver. 17. Between cattle and cattle, between the rams and the he goats] The Hebrew runs thus, 'Between the small cattle, and the cattle of rams and he goats;' between the weak and the strong cattle, i. e. between the rich and the poor, as the Chaldee paraphrase explains the sense upon ver. 20.

Ver. 18.] This reproof may fitly be applied to those great persons who take no care that the poor may enjoy the benefit of their superfluities; but rather let them be thrown away and perish, than they will be at the trouble of seeing them disposed of for the good of those that want.

Ver. 21. Thrust with side and with shoulder] In pursuance of this comparison, the oppressors of the weak are commonly styled in scripture by the names of oxen, bullocks, rams, and he-goats (see Ps. xxii. 12, lxviii. 31, Dan. viii. 3, 5).

Ver. 23. I will set up one shepherd over them—even my servant David] The Messias is often described under the character of a shepherd, both in the Old and New Testament (see the note on ver. 16). And the title may be applied to him with respect to his office of king, as well as that of priest and prophet (see the note on ver. 2). He is elsewhere styled by the name of David, as being the person in whom all the promises made to David were fulfilled (see Isa. lv. 3, 4, Jer. xxx. 9, Hos. iii. 5). [The expression may likewise allude to David's first employment, which was that of a shepherd.]

He shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd] This prophecy was remarkably fulfilled when Christ, by the preaching of the gospel, "gathered in one the children of God which were scattered abroad" (John xi. 52, Eph. i. 10), among whom were many of "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. x. 6). But it will receive a farther completion at the general conversion of the Jews, when "the time will come that they shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Matt. xxiii. 37). And this signal event will usher in or complete the "fullness of the gentiles" (see Rom. xi. 12, 15, 25, 32).

Ver. 24. I the Lord will be their God] I will renew my covenant with them, and receive them again into my protection (see ver. 30, xxxvii. 27, Lev. xvi. 12, and notes upon Jer. xxx. 22).

My servant David] See note on xxxvii. 22.

Ver. 25. I will make with them a covenant of peace] As I will be at peace with them, so I will give them the blessings of outward peace, and will protect them peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land: and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods.

26 And I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing.

27 And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and shall know that I am the LORD, when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hand of those that served themselves of them.

from the annoyance of all their enemies, from persecution and outward violence (see Jer. xxiii. 6).

And will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land:] This may be meant of freedom from persecution by infidels and strangers (compare ver. 28). Such a security is elsewhere expressed by "making a covenant for them with the beasts of the field" (see Lev. xxvi. 6, Job v. 23, Isa. xxxv. 9, Hos. ii. 18). The words are likewise capable of a literal interpretation, importing, that as God had threatened after the desolation of the land, wild beasts should overrun it, and devour the few inhabitants that were left (see v. 17, xxxiii. 27): so upon the repeopleing of the country, those ravagers should forsake it.

Ver. 26. I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing:] I will there give remarkable instances of my favour, and the happiness which accompanies it (see Gen. xii. 2, Isa. xix. 24, Zech. viii. 13). God's hill is the same with his "holy mountain," xx. 40.

Showers of blessing:] Such as shall produce all sorts of plenty (compare Mal. iii. 10).

Ver. 27. The tree of the field shall yield her fruit:] The spiritual blessings of the gospel are sometimes described under the emblems of fruitfulness and plenty (see the notes on Isa. iv. 2, xxxv. 2, lxx. 10, Jer. xxxi. 12).

28 And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beast of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid.

29 And I will raise up for them a plant of renown, and they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more.

30 Thus shall they know that I the LORD their God am with them, and that they, even the house of Israel, are my people, saith the Lord God.

31 And ye my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord God.

When I have broken the bands of their yoke,] The same expression which is used concerning the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt (Lev. xxvi. 13, Jer. ii. 20). Their final restoration being represented as the greater deliverance of the two (see Jer. xxiii. 7, 8).

And delivered them] See Jer. xxv. 14.

Ver. 28. They shall no more be a prey] See ver 25.

They shall dwell safely,] See Jer. xxxiii. 6.

Ver. 29. A plant of renown,] The Messiah is often described under the name of the branch; and the rod or shoot growing of the stem of Jesse (see Isa. iv. 2, xi. 1, liii. 2, Jer. xxii. 5, Zech. iii. 8, vi. 12).

No more consumed with hunger] But shall be blessed with plenty of all things (see ver. 26, 27, and xxxvi. 29).

Neither bear the shame of the heathen] By whom they were reproached, as if their God had cast them off (see xxxvi. 3, 6, 15).

Ver. 30.] See ver. 24.

Ver. 31.] These words, at the conclusion of the chapter, explain the metaphor which runs through the whole: that what was said of a flock and its shepherds, is to be understood of men and their governors; and especially of God's people, whom he takes care of, as a shepherd does of his flock (see xxxvi. 38, Ps. lxxxi. 2).

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 MOREOVER the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against mount Seir, and prophesy against it,

3 And say unto it, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee, and I will stretch out mine hand against thee, and I will make thee most desolate.

4 I will lay thy cities waste, and thou shalt be desolate, and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

5 Because thou hast had a perpetual hatred, and hast shed the blood of the children of Israel by the force of the sword in the time of their calamity, in the time that their iniquity had an end:

6 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, I will prepare thee unto blood, and blood shall pursue thee: sith thou hast not hated blood, even blood shall pursue thee.

7 Thus will I make mount Seir most desolate, and cut off from it him that passeth out and him that returneth.

8 And I will fill his mountains with his slain

CHAP. XXXV.

ARGUMENT.—The prophet renews his former denunciations of judgments upon the Edomites (see xxv. 12), as a just punishment for their insulting over the calamities of the Jews.

Ver. 2. Mount Seir,] See vi. 2. Mount Seir is the same with Idumea (see Deut. ii. 5).

Ver. 4. I will lay thy cities waste,] See ver. 9.

Ver. 5. A perpetual hatred,] See xxv. 12.

Their iniquity had an end:] When their iniquity received its just doom (see vii. 6, xxi. 25, 29).

Ver. 6. Sith thou hast not hated blood, even blood shall pursue thee,] Since thou hast loved cruelty, and taken delight in shedding blood, vengeance shall pursue thee, and thou shalt fall into the hands of those that will be as eager to shed thine. The phrase, "Thou hast not hated blood," is spoken by the figure called litotes by the rhetoricians, when men: in thy hills, and in thy valleys, and in all thy rivers, shall they fall that are slain with the sword.

9 I will make thee perpetual desolations, and thy cities shall not return: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

10 Because thou hast said, These two nations and these two countries shall be mine, and we will possess it; whereas the LORD was there:

11 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, I will even do according to thine anger, and according to thine envy which thou hast used out of thy hatred against them; and I will make myself known among them, when I have judged thee.

the words imply more than they express (see the note on Jer. vii. 31.)

Ver. 7. Cut off from it him that passeth out and him that returneth.] No travellers shall go forward or backward in it with safety (see xxix. 11, compare Judg. v. 6, 2 Chron. xv. 5).

Ver. 8.] Every part of the country shall be filled with the carcasses of those that are slain (compare xxxii. 4, 5).

Ver. 9.] See xxv. 13, Jer. xlix. 17, 18, Mal. i. 3. Dr. Prideaux, Script. Hist. par. ii. p. 299, informs us, that the Nabatheans, having driven the Edomites out of their ancient habitations in the time of the Babylonish captivity, they settled themselves in the southern part of Judea, where they were afterward conquered by Hyrcanus, and obliged to embrace the Jewish religion, and so became at length incorporated with that nation (see ibid. p. 307).

Ver. 10. These two nations shall be mine.] They settled themselves in part of the country, and hoped to have got possession of the whole in time (see note upon the foregoing verse). The Ammonites had the same design, as appears from Jer. xlix. 1.

12 And thou shalt know that I am the LORD, and that I have heard all thy blasphemies which thou hast spoken against the mountains of Israel, saying, They are laid desolate, they are given us to consume.

13 Thus with your mouth ye have boasted against me, and have multiplied your words against me: I have heard them.

14. Thus saith the Lord God; When the whole earth rejoiceth, I will make thee desolate.

15 As thou didst rejoice at the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate, so will I do unto thee: thou shalt be desolate, O mount Seir, and all Idumea, even all of it: and they shall know that I am the LORD.

Whereas the Lord was there:] They did not believe that God had placed his name there, had chosen it for a place of his peculiar residence, and would never quite relinquish his property in it (see xlviii. 35).

Ver. 11. I will make myself known among them.] I will make my people see that I have not quite cast them off, by my avenging their quarrel upon thee.

Ver. 12. That I am the Lord.] See vi. 7. They are laid desolate.] See note on ver. 10.

Ver. 13. Ye have boasted against me.] As if I were not able to make good my promises towards the Jews, or to assert my right in Judea (see ver. 10).

Ver. 14.] When I shall restore other countries, conquered by the king of Babylon, to their former posterity, thou shalt lie waste and desolate. The Edomites never recovered their country, after the Nabatheans had expelled them out of it (see Dr. Prideaux, in the place above cited).

Ver. 15. All Idumea.] The expression is like that of Isaiah, "whole Palestina," Isa. xiv. 29, i. e. all the several tribes and divisions of it.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 ALSO, thou son of man, prophesy unto the mountains of Israel, and say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the LORD:

2 Thus saith the Lord God; Because the enemy hath said against you, Aha, even the ancient high places are ours in possession:

3 Therefore prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Because they have made you desolate, and swallowed you up on every side, that ye might be a possession unto the residue of the heathen, and ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are an infamy of the people:

4 Therefore, ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, to the desolate wastes, and to the cities that are forsaken, which became a prey and derision to the residue of the heathen that are round about.

5 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Surely

CHAP. XXXVI.

ARGUMENT.—This and the following chapter contain a prediction of the general restoration both of Israel and Judah, a subject often spoken of by this prophet: of which the return of the two tribes from Babylon may be thought an earnest.

Ver. 1.] See the following verse.

Ver. 2.] The Idumeans have made their boasts (see ver. 5, xxxv. 10) that they should become masters of the mountainous parts of Judea, where the ancient fortresses were placed which commanded all the rest of the country. To the same sense we are to understand the expression of "treading upon the high places of the earth," Deut. xxxii. 13, i. e. taking possession of the fortresses or passes which command the rest of the country.

Ver. 3. Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers.] Your calamities have made you become a proverb, a by-word, and a reproach among the heathen round about you, according to the threatenings of the prophets denounced against you (see Deut. xxviii. 37, 1 Kings ix. 7, 8, Ps. lxxix. 4, Jer. xviii. 16, Lam. ii. 15, Dan. ix. 16).

Ver. 4. To the residue of the heathen] To these heathens that are left, after the general desolations threatened upon the neighbouring countries, Moab, Edom, Ammon, &c. (compare ver. 36, Jer. xxv. 20, xlvii. 4).

in the fire of my jealousy have I spoken against the residue of the heathen, and against all Idumea, which have appointed my land into their possession with the joy of all their heart, with despiteful minds, to cast it out for a prey.

6 Prophecy therefore concerning the land of Israel, and say unto the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy and in my fury, because ye have borne the shame of the heathen:

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I have lifted up mine hand, Surely the heathen that are about you, they shall bear their shame.

8 ¶ But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come.

9 For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown:

10 And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded:

11 And I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

12 Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men.

13 Thus saith the Lord God; Because they say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations;

14 Therefore thou shalt devour men no more, neither bereave thy nations any more, saith the Lord God.

15 Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord God.

16 ¶ Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

17 Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their own way and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman.

18 Wherefore I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it:

19 And I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: according to their way and according to their doings I judged them.

20 And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said to them, These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land.

Ver. 5. In the fire of my jealousy] In that fervent zeal and concern that I have for my own honour, which is blasphemed among the heathen (see xxxv. 12, 13, compare xxxviii. 19, xxxix. 25).

Which have appointed my land] See xxxv. 12.

Ver. 6.] See xxxiv. 29, xxxv. 12, 13.

Ver. 7. I have lifted up mine hand.] I have solemnly sworn (see xx. 5, &c.).

Ver. 8. For they are at hand to come.] This may have an immediate aspect upon the Jews' return from Babylon, when they were restored to the possession of their own country. If we suppose the words to relate to the general restoration of the nation, the longest distance of time that the things of this world can extend to, is but as a moment in respect of eternity (compare Heb. x. 37, Phil. iv. 5).

Ver. 10. The wastes shall be builded.] Compare ver. 33. This may likewise have been in some measure fulfilled at their return from Babylon (compare Isa. lviii. 12, lxi. 4).

Ver. 11. I will multiply upon you man and beast.] As God in his judgments threatens to cut off man and beast from a land (see xiv. 17); so here he promises to replenish it with both (compare Jer. xxxi. 27, xxxiii. 12).

And will do better unto you than at your beginnings.] In bestowing upon you the blessings of the gospel; the promises of which were made first to the Jews and to their children (Acts ii. 39). The words may likewise imply, that God would give them a more lasting and secure possession of their land than ever they had before (see the following verses.)

Ver. 12. Men to walk upon you.] O mountains or land of Israel (ver. 8).

Ver. 13. Thou land devourest up men.] The neighbouring people raised this ill character upon the land of Judea, because of the severe judgments of the sword, famine, and pestilence, which had destroyed the greatest part of the inhabitants. The expression alludes to that evil report which the spies brought upon it (Numb. xiii. 32), that it was "a land that did eat up its inhabitants;" as if the air had been unwholesome, or the country always afflicted by some judgment from heaven.

Ver. 14.] Thou shalt be free from the strokes of heaven, and from the annoyance of enemies on earth.

Ver. 15.] See ver. 6, and xxxiv. 29.

Neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more.] The Chaldee, and some other ancient versions, translate the words, "Neither shalt thou bereave thy people [or nations] any more;" as if the word, in the original, were shaecal, the same which is used in the sense of bereaving in the foregoing verses; whereas here the present copies read cashal, which signifies to fall. But it hath before been observed, that words in the Hebrew, which are near in sound, often have an affinity in their signification (see note on xxvii. 15).

Ver. 17. As the uncleanness of a removed woman.] As such a person was under a legal pollution, and forbidden to come within the courts of the temple, or attend upon God's worship there: so the defilements the Jews had contracted by their idolatries, and other heinous sins, rendered them unqualified to be my people, or to offer up any religious service to me.

Ver. 18.] Murder and idolatry, two sins of the first magnitude, are often joined together in the catalogue of national sins recited in this prophecy; meaning particularly, the blood of their children, which they offered to their idols (see xvi. 36, 38, xxxiii. 37).

Ver. 19. I scattered them] See v. 12.

Ver. 20. When they said to them, &c.] Or, "When it was said unto them:" verbs of the third person 21 ¶ But I had pity for mine holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went.

22 Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went.

23 And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes.

24 For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land.

25 ¶ Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you.

26 A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away being often taken impersonally. By their evil practices they brought a scandal upon my name, and gave occasion to the heathen to say, See what profligate wretches these are who call themselves by the name of God's people, whom he hath justly expelled out of their country which he had given them. The Chaldee paraphrase understands the words to this sense: "If these are God's people, why does he suffer them to be turned out of the land which he made the place of his own especial residence! why does he not continue to protect them?" But the former sense agrees better with the scope of the text, and with St. Paul's application of it to the Jews of his own time, Rom. ii. 24, and with what follows, ver. 31.

Ver. 21. I had pity for mine holy name,] "I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted among the heathen," as the prophet speaks, xx. 9.

Ver. 22. I do not this for your sakes,] The promises I make in your favour in the following verses, are not owing to any desert of yours, but purely to vindicate my own honour (see ver. 32, and compare Dent. ix. 5, Ps. cvi. 8).

Ver. 23. I will sanctify my great name, &c.] I will give illustrious proofs of my power and goodness, and vindicate my honour from the reproaches with which it has been blasphemed among the heathen, upon the occasion of your evil doings.

The heathen shall know that I am the Lord,] The return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity was taken notice of by the heathens, as a signal instance of God's providence towards them (see Ps. cxvi. 2); and their general conversion will be a much more remarkable proof of my fulfilling the promises made to their fathers; so that the heathens themselves will be forced to take notice of it (see xxxvii. 23). It will be an effectual argument to convince infidels that your nation, and the rest of the true Israelites, are the only church of God, and professors of his truth (see Zech. viii. 23).

When I shall be sanctified in you] When I shall "sanctify my name," as it is expressed in the former part of the verse, and make my power and goodness known to the world (see the notes on xx. 41, xxviii. 22).

the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh.

27 And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

28 And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

29 I will also save you from all your uncleanness: and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you.

30 And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen.

31 Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities, and for your abominations.

32 Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel.

Ver. 24.] See xxxiv. 13, xxxvii. 21, xxxix. 25.

Ver. 25. I will sprinkle clean water upon you,] The expression alludes to those legal purifications which were made by sprinkling water upon the unclean person (see Numb. viii. 7, xix. 13); and denotes the sacrament of baptism, by which true believers are cleansed from their former sins, and inwardly sanctified (see Acts ii. 38, xxii. 16, Titus iii. 5, and compare Jer. xxxiii. 8). St. Paul may probably allude to this text, when he exhorts the Hebrew converts "to draw nigh to God, having their hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and their bodies washed with pure water" (Heb. x. 22).

From all your idols, will I cleanse you.] When the prophets foretell the general conversion of the Jews, they usually mention their detestation of their former idolatries, as a necessary preparation towards it (see Isa. i. 29, xvii. 7, 8, Jer. iii. 22, 23, &c. Zech. xiii. 1, 2). Some account of this circumstance of their conversion hath been given in the note upon Isa. lxxv. 7, and upon the forementioned chapter of Jeremiah.

Ver. 26, 27.] See xi. 19. This promise will be fulfilled, when the heart of this people, shall "turn to the Lord, and the veil shall be taken from it," as St. Paul informs us, 2 Cor. iii. 16 (compare Jer. xxxi. 33, 34).

Ver. 28. Ye shall dwell in the land] See xxviii. 25.

Ye shall be my people,] See xi. 20.

Ver. 29. I will also save you from all your uncleanness:] I will take away the guilt of them, and deliver you from the punishments due to them (see Matt. i. 21).

Ibid. and ver. 30.] See xxxiv. 27, 29.

Ver. 31. Then shall ye remember your own evil ways,] See note upon xvi. 61.

Shall loathe yourselves] See vi. 9.

Ver. 32.] The prophet repeats what he said, ver. 22, on purpose to check all vain presumption in the Jews, and confidence of their own intrinsic worth or merit: a fault they have been very prone to in all ages.

Ver. 33.] See ver. 10.

Ver. 34. Whereas it lay desolate] As Moses had threatened, Dent. xxix. 23, 28.

33 Thus saith the Lord God; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded.

34 And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by.

35 And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited.

36 Then the heathen that are left round about

Ver. 35.] See xxviii. 13, Isa. li. 3.

Ver. 36.] The heathen nations that are near you (see ver. 4), shall be convinced that the restoring the Jews to their former state must be the immediate hand of God, who will certainly, in due time, fulfil what is here foretold (see xxxvii. 14).

Ver. 37.] God, in his anger, tells the Jews, that he "will not be inquired of by them" (xiv. 3, xx. 3, 31), intimating, that during their continuance in idolatry and other wickedness, they ought not to address themselves to him, nor expect any favourable answer to their requests; but now, upon their repentance and reconciliation, he tells them, that he "will be inquired of by them;" i. e. he will dispose their hearts to apply themselves to him by prayer, and will answer the petitions they make to him for the fulfilling these his promises (see Ps. x. 17, and compare Jer. xxix. 13).

37 Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock.

38 As the holy flock, as the flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts; so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

pose their hearts to apply themselves to him by prayer, and will answer the petitions they make to him for the fulfilling these his promises (see Ps. x. 17, and compare Jer. xxix. 13).

Ver. 38. As the holy flock—in her solemn feasts;] The sheep and lambs, designed for the sacrifices which were offered at the three solemn feasts, were both very numerous, and likewise of the best in their kind. The epithet of holy, and most holy, is often applied to sacrifices in the Levitical law, as being wholly dedicated to God, and set apart for his worship (see Lev. vi. 25, 29, Numb. xviii. 9).

So shall the waste cities] See xxxiv. 31.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 THE hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the spirit of the Lord, and set me down in the midst of the valley which was full of bones,

2 And caused me to pass by them round about: and, behold, there were very many in the open valley; and, lo, they were very dry.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest.

4 Again he said unto me, Prophecy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord.

5 Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live:

6 And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

7 So I prophesied as I was commanded: and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone.

8 And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above: but there was no breath in them.

9 Then said he unto me, Prophecy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.

CHAP. XXXVII.

ARGUMENT.—Under the figure of a resurrection of dry bones, is foretold the general restoration of the Jews from their several dispersions; and by the joining of two sticks, is represented the uniting of Israel and Judah into one kingdom.

Ver. 1. The hand of the Lord was upon me,] See note upon i. 3.

Carried me out in the spirit of the Lord,] Or, "by the spirit of the Lord" (compare iii. 14, viii. 3, xi. 24). This was performed either by a local translation of the prophet, or else by way of vision and lively representation (see the note upon viii. 3).

Ver. 3. O Lord God, thou knowest.] This is only an act of thy power and good pleasure. Raising the dead to life again is peculiarly ascribed to God, as being properly the work of omnipotence, and a sort of new creation (see Deut. xxxii. 39, I Sam. ii. 6, John v. 21, Rom. iv. 17, 2 Cor. i. 9).

Ver. 4. O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord.] A prophetic and lively representation of that voice of the Son of God, which "all that are in the graves shall hear" at the last day, "and shall come forth out of them" (John v. 28, 29).

Ver. 5. I will cause breath] The "breath of life," as it is expressed, Gen. ii. 7 (compare Ps. civ. 30).

Ver. 7. As I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking.] Such a noise, or commotion, as we may suppose the bones of a human body would make upon their meeting together again, after having been severed one from another.

Ver. 9. Prophecy unto the wind,] Or rather, "to the breath," meaning that vital principle which unites body and soul together, and is mentioned as distinct from the four winds in the following words.

Come from the four winds, O breath.] The words figuratively represent the restoration of the Jewish nation from the several countries whither they were dispersed over the world, expressed by their being 10 So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

11 ¶ Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts.

12 Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel.

13 And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, 14 And shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it, and performed it, saith the Lord.

15 ¶ The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

16 Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the "scattered towards all winds," (v. 10, xii. 14, xvii. 21).

Ver. 10. An exceeding great army.] To signify the great numbers they will amount to, when they return from their several dispersions, and unite into one body. They are elsewhere styled "a remnant," but that is in comparison of the whole nation (see notes upon Isa. iv. 2, x. 22, xxvii. 12, 13).

Ver. 11. These bones are the whole house of Israel.] They represent the forlorn and desperate condition to which the whole nation is reduced.

Ver. 12. I will open your graves, and cause you to come up] I will reunite you into one body or nation, who now lie scattered and dispersed as the bones in a charnel-house (compare ver. 21). In their state of dispersion and captivity they are called "the dead Israelites," in Baruch, iii. 4. And their restoration is described as a resurrection by Isaiah (xxvi. 19), at which time their bones are said to flourish, or to be restored to their former strength and vigour, in the same prophet, lxvi. 14. In like manner St. Paul expresses their conversion, and the general restoration which shall accompany it, by "life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15.

And bring you into the land of Israel.] See ver. 25, and note upon xxviii. 25.

Ver. 14. And shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live.] That principle of life expressed by breath or spirit, ver. 9, not excluding that new spirit of grace, which God will at that time plentifully bestow upon them (see xi. 19, xxxvi. 26, 27). The principle of grace is often spoken of as a higher principle of life, and the earnest of our heavenly happiness (see Rom. viii. 11, 1 Cor. vi. 17, xv. 45).

Ver. 16. Take thee one stick,] i. e. One rod; the expression alludes to Numb. xvii. 2, where Moses is commanded to take twelve rods, one for each tribe, and to write the name of the tribe upon the rod.

For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions.] Not only the tribe of Benjamin, but many of the other tribes joined themselves to the tribe of Judah, and kept close to the law of God, and the worship of his temple (see 2 Chron. xi. 12, 16, xv. 9, xxx. 11, 18).

For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions:

17 And join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand.

18 ¶ And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not shew us what thou meanest by these?

19 Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

20 ¶ And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes.

21 And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land:

22 And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one house of Israel] Upon Reuben's forfeiting his birth-right, that privilege was conferred upon the sons of Joseph, of whom Ephraim had the precedence (see Gen. xlviii. 20, 1 Chron. v. 1): which made him be reckoned the head of the ten tribes: Samaria, the seat of that kingdom, being likewise situate in the tribe of Ephraim: upon these accounts the name of Ephraim signifies in the prophets the whole kingdom of Israel, as distinct from that of Judah; and particularly in the prophet Hosea, v. 3, 5, &c. (see likewise Jer. xxxi. 6, 18).

Ver. 17. Join them one to another into one stick;] A rod or sceptre is an emblem of power (see Ps. cx. 2); so the joining these two rods or sticks together, denotes uniting the two kingdoms under one prince or governor (see ver. 22).

Ver. 18. Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these?] Ezekiel foretold many things by signs, and the Jews were very inquisitive into the meaning of them; though sometimes their curiosity proceeded rather from a secret contempt of the prophet and his predictions, than a real desire of information (see xii. 9, xvii. 12, xx. 49, xxiv. 19).

Ver. 19. Which is in the hand of Ephraim,] Of which he is the head (see ver. 16).

They shall be one in mine hand.] I will make them one nation, and appoint one king to rule over them, the Messiah (see ver. 22).

Ver. 20.] Thou shalt place the sticks or rods thus joined together before their eyes, as a visible token or pledge of the truth of what I enjoin thee to speak to them in the following words.

Ver. 21.] See xx. 34, xxxiv. 13, xxxvi. 24, xxxix. 25.

Ver. 22. I will make them one nation] They shall not be divided any more into separate kingdoms; the consequence of which was their setting up separate ways of worship, and espousing separate interests (compare Isa. xi. 13). It has been already observed, that the prophecies which foretell of the general restoration of the Jews, join Judah and Israel together, as equal sharers in that blessing.

One king shall be king to them all:] The Messiah, who is that one shepherd and prince that shall rule over them all as one nation (see xxxiv. 23, 24, com-king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all:

23 Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of all their dwelling-places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.

24 And David my servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them.

25 And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your pared with Luke i. 32, 33). The Messiah is described as king of the Jews in most of the prophecies of the Old Testament, beginning with that of Gen. xlix. 10, concerning Shiloh. From David's time he is commonly spoken of as the person in whom the promises relating to the perpetuity of David's kingdom were to be accomplished. This was a truth unanimously owned by the Jews (see John i. 49); to which our Saviour bore testimony before Pontius Pilate, when the question being put to him, Art thou a king? he made answer, Thou sayest [the truth], for I am a king: thus those words should be translated, for St. Paul alluding to them, calls them a good confession, 1 Tim. vi. 13. The same truth Pontius Pilate himself asserted in that inscription which he providentially ordered to be written upon the cross (see John xix. 19, 22): so that the chief priests impiously renounced their own avowed principles, when they told Pilate that they had no king but Cæsar (ibid. ver. 15).

Ver. 23. Neither shall they defile themselves any more] See note upon xxxvi. 25.

Nor with their detestable things.] Or, "abominations," as the word shikkuts is elsewhere translated, and commonly applied to idols (see xx. 7, 2 Kings xxiii. 13, Dan. ix. 27).

Nor with any of their transgressions.] This expression comprehends in it, their being touched with a hearty compunction for their great sin of rejecting and crucifying the Messiah, their king and Saviour (see Zech. xii. 10).

And will cleanse them.] See xxxvi. 20, 25, 28.

Ver. 24. David—shall be king] See xxxiv. 23.

fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever: and my servant David shall be their prince for ever.

26 Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore.

27 My tabernacle shall also be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

28 And the heathen shall know that I the LORD do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore.

Walk in my judgments.] See xxxvi. 27.

Ver. 25.] A promise often repeated in this prophecy (see ver. 12, 21, and the note on xxviii. 25).

Ver. 26.] See xxxiv. 25. The words may likewise be understood in a spiritual sense, that God will be reconciled to them through Christ, and admit them into that covenant of peace, of which he is the mediator, and therefore is called "our peace," Eph. ii. 14. And then the following words, "It shall be an everlasting covenant with them," may fitly be explained of the gospel, being such a covenant as shall never be abolished, or give way to any new dispensation (compare Isa. lv. 3, Jer. xxxii. 40).

Ibid. and ver. 27.] God's placing first his tabernacle, and then his temple among the Jews, was a pledge and token of his presence among them, and protection over them (see Lev. xxvi. 11, 12, and the note upon xi. 16 of this prophecy). And here he promises new and more valuable tokens of his presence among them, by the graces of his Holy Spirit, and the efficacy of his word and sacraments (compare 2 Cor. vi. 16): and perhaps will vouchsafe them some extraordinary appearance of the divine majesty (see xliii. 4, 5, 7, Zech. ii. 5).

I will be their God, &c.] See xi. 20.

Ver. 28.] The conversion of the Jewish nation, and their being restored to their former state of favour and acceptance with God, will be a work of providence taken notice of by the heathens themselves, who shall join themselves to the Jews, as the church of God and temple of truth (see xxxvi. 23).

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1 AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

CHAP. XXXVIII.

ARGUMENT.—The prophecy contained in this and the following chapter concerning Israel's victory over Gog and Magog, without question relates to the latter ages of the world, when the whole house of Israel shall return into their own land (xxxix. 25, 26). And the expressions we meet with in this chapter (ver. 8, 16), that this should come to pass in the latter days, and after many days, or a considerable number of years, and that God had of old prophesied concerning this transaction: these and other circumstances of this prophesy, are a proof that the event was to happen a great while after the several predictions of the prophets concerning it. So that this must be looked upon as one of those obscure prophecies of scripture, the fulfilling whereof will best explain their meaning.

Ver. 2. Set thy face (see vi. 2) against Gog, the land of Magog.] Or, "of the land of Magog." Magog was the son of Japheth (Gen. x. 2), from whence the Scythians are generally supposed to be derived. The Mogul Tartars, a people of the Scythian race, are still called so by the Arabian writers, as Dr. Hyde informs us, in his epistle, De Mensuris Synensibus, hold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal :

4 And I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thine army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armour, even a great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords :

5 Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them ; all of them with shield and helmet :

6 Gomer, and all his bands ; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands ; and many people with thee.

By Gog and Magog may most probably here be meant the Turks, who were originally natives of Tartary, called Turcheston by the eastern writers ; and whose language is derived from that of the Tartars. The land of Canaan hath been, for several years, in the possession of the Turks : several texts in Ezekiel foretell the Jews' settlement in that country again ; and some of the expressions in this and the following chapter intimate, that the people called here by the name of Gog, and their allies, will attempt to recover it again out of the hands of the Jews, its rightful owners : this may probably occasion the war and victory here spoken of. But this is what cannot be positively affirmed ; only thus much one may venture to say, that since the whole strength of Europe was so unsuccessful in their attempts to recover that land out of the hands of the infidels in the holy war, it looks as if God hath reserved that work to some farther time of his own appointment, when that country should be the scene of some extraordinary event of providence. We may farther observe, that the second woe, mentioned Rev. ix. 12, xi. 14, is by many learned men understood of the Turkish empire : and in consequence of that interpretation, the putting an end to that tyranny, will be an introduction to some extraordinary changes in the Christian part of the world.

The chief prince of Meshech and Tubal.] The king or head of all those northern nations which lie upon the Euxine sea (see the notes upon xxvii. 13). The Turk is called "the king of the north" in Daniel, xi. 40, as several commentators interpret that place. The LXX. interpreters take the word Rosh, commonly translated chief, for a proper name ; so they render the sentence thus, "The prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal." Rosh, taken as a proper name, signifies those inhabitants of Scythia, from whence the Russians derive their name and original.

Ver. 4. I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws.] I will disappoint all thy designs, and turn thee about as easily as a fisherman masters a great fish, when he hath once fastened the hook into his jaws (see xxix. 4).

And I will bring thee forth.] The sense would be plainer, if the words were thus translated, "After I have brought thee forth," &c. In which sense the copulative vau is sometimes used (see Noldius's Concordance, p. 291).

Horses and horsemen.] See ver. 15.

Ver. 5. Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them ;] Their allies, Ethiopia and Libya, are called Cush and Phut in the Hebrew, and are joined together as allies, xxx. 5 (see note there). Persians are joined in like manner with Africans, xxvii. 10.

All of them with shield and helmet.] So the Libyans, or people of Phut, are described, Jer. xlv. 9, as "handling the shield ;" i. e. being remarkable for their great and large shields, as Xenophon relates of them (Cyropæd. lib. vi.).

7 Be thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them.

8 ¶ After many days thou shalt be visited : in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste : but it is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them.

9 Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee.

Ver. 6. Gomer, and all his bands ; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters.] Gomer is joined with Magog, Gen. x. 2, and probably signifies Gatalia, Phrygia, and Bithynia, which, with Cappadocia, denoted by Togarmah, comprehends all the northern parts of Asia Minor, which border upon the Euxine sea (see the meaning of Togarmah explained in the note upon xxvii. 14).

Many people with thee.] Those of Cilicia, Pamphilia, and other nations inhabiting Asia Minor.

Ver. 7. Be thou prepared.] The prophet ironically encourages Gog to make all warlike preparations, and muster all his forces together, that God may gain the greater honour by their signal defeat (see ver. 16, and compare Jer. xlv. 2, 3, 14, li. 12).

Be thou a guard unto them.] Let them rely upon thy prowess and conduct as their leader.

Ver. 8. After many days thou shalt be visited.] This judgment shall be inflicted by God upon thee (compare Isa. xxix. 6), after a succession of many generations : "In the latter years," or days, as it follows here, and ver. 16, i. e. towards the end of the world (compare Dan. viii. 26) particularly the expression of "latter days," or years, is used to denote the times of the general restoration of the Jewish nation (see Deut. iv. 30, Jer. xxx. 24, Hos. iii. 5).

Thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword.] The land is put for the people of the land, who are said to be "brought back from the sword," as they are elsewhere styled a remnant ; i. e. those that should survive after the hardships they had suffered in their several dispersions, and the judgments that should fall upon the disobedient, in their return home (see the notes upon xx. 34, 38, and upon Isa. iv. 2). And perhaps those words of Jeremiah xxxi. 2, may be best explained to this sense, "The people that were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness." The whole chapter relates to the general conversion and restoration of the Jews ; and the prophet speaks in that verse of the favours God would show to those that should escape the severe judgments that should destroy the disobedient in their passage home to their own country, called the desert, or wilderness, by Isaiah, xl. 3, and by Ezekiel, "the wilderness of the people," or nations, xx. 35 (see notes upon that place).

Gathered out of many people.] See xxxiv. 13.

Against the mountains of Israel, [see xxxvi. 1, 4] which have been always waste.] Or rather, "altogether waste," as the LXX. rightly translate it.

And they shall dwell safely all of them.] Or, "And they have dwelt safely all of them ;" the future tense being often put for the preter-perfect. The sense is, that after the return of the people of Israel into their own country, and their having lived there for some time in peace and safety, this enemy will think to take advantage of their security, and fall upon them unexpectedly (compare ver. 11).

10 Thus saith the Lord God; It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought:

11 And thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwall'd villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates, 12 To take a spoil, and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land.

13 Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey?

Ver. 9. Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm,] A comparison elsewhere made use of to express the devastations which attend a destroying army (see xlii. 11, Isa. xxviii. 2).

Thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land,] Thou shalt overspread the land like a dark cloud, which makes every thing look melancholy and dismal (see xxx. 3, Jer. iv. 13).

Ver. 11. To the land of unwall'd villages;] A description of a people that live securely without any apprehension of danger (compare Jer. xlix. 31).

To them that—dwell safely,] According to the promise often repeated in the prophet, that “in those days Israel should dwell safely, and none should make them afraid” (see xxxiv. 28, Jer. xxiii. 6, and note there).

Ver. 12. To turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited,] Judea is described as a country that lay desolate before the Jews' return into it (see xxxvi. 34, 35). After it had been for some time reinhabited, Gog and his associates designed to fall upon it with all their forces; in that sense “to turn the hand” is taken, Isa. i. 25 (see note there).

In the midst of the land,] “In the navel of the land,” as the Hebrew reads, i. e. in Jerusalem, because that stood near the middle of the holy land, and likewise was situate upon a rising ground, which the Hebrew metaphorically expresses by the navel (see Judg. ix. 37).

Ver. 13. Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish,] These were people that dealt much in trade: the two former dwelling in the east, the latter often sailing from the Spanish coasts into the eastern parts: they are mentioned xxvii. 12, 15, 20, 22, as having commerce with Tyre, which bordered upon Judea. Those merchants, as soon as they heard of this intended invasion, came into Gog's camp as to a market, to buy both persons and goods which should come into the conqueror's power (see note upon xxvi. 2).

With all the young lions thereof,] The Targum understands it of their kings, i. e. their chief merchants, who are described as so many princes, Isa. xxiii. 8, and are called lions, because of the injustice and oppression they too commonly practised in their commerce (see xxviii. 16). But the LXX. translate the word kephirim, towns or villages; in which sense it is taken, Neh. vi. 2, and in other places.

Ver. 14. In that day] At that remarkable time, when God shall bring again the captivity of Israel and Judah, so often spoken of by the prophets (see the note upon Isa. iv. 2).

When my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it?] As soon as the news of their to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?

14 ¶ Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus saith the Lord God; In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it?

15 And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army:

16 And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes.

17 Thus saith the Lord God; Art thou he of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants being settled in their own country comes to thy knowledge, thou wilt certainly make preparations to invade them.

Ver. 15. Out of the north parts,] See ver. 6.

All of them riding upon horses, &c.] The character here given of this people, may properly be applied to the Turks, the chief strength of whose armies consists in their cavalry, and the great numbers of them which they bring into the field, as the writers of the Turkish history observe; compare Rev. ix. 16, which place several interpreters expound of the Turks. We may not improbably apply those words of the prophet Zechariah to the event here spoken of, xii. 4, “I will smite every horse with astonishment, and his rider with madness; and will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah.”

Ver. 16. As a cloud to cover the land;] See ver. 9.

That the heathen may know me,] This signal victory over Gog and his associates, shall be a means of bringing infidels to give glory unto me (compare xxxix. 21, and see the note upon xxxvi. 23).

Ver. 17. Art thou he?] The words would be more significant if they were translated “Art thou not he?” A sense which he, the particle of interrogation, often imports (see note upon xx. 4).

Of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants—which prophesied in those days many years] Or, and years. The prophet is speaking here of some terrible enemy to God's people, who shall be subdued by the immediate hand of heaven, which victory should make way for glorious times of peace and prosperity. This enemy is said to be foretold “of old by the prophets;” and is therefore probably described under the names of such nations as were the chief enemies to the Jews in the particular times of each prophet. Such we may suppose the Assyrian to be, spoken of by Isaiah, xiv. 24, 25, and by Micah, v. 5. The same enemy may probably be intended under the figure of Tyre (see the note upon xxviii. 24); of Egypt (see note upon xxix. 21, and compare Isa. xi. 15 with Zech. x. 11); of Moab (see Isa. xxi. 10); of Edom (see Isa. xxxiv. 6, lxiii. 1, Joel iii. 20, Obad. ver. 18, 19); and under the name of Leviathan, Isa. xxvii. 1. To these we may add those prophecies which speak of some great and general destruction of God's enemies before the day of judgment, or consummation of all things. Such are Ps. cx. 5, 6, Isa. xxvi. 20, 21, xxxiv. 1, &c., lxvi. 16, Jer. xxx. 7, 10, Joel iii. 9, 14, Obad. ver. 15, &c., Zech. xii. 1, xiv. 1, &c. Zechariah lived, indeed, after Ezekiel's time, but a great while before the fulfilling of this prophecy. The expressions here used, of “old time,” and “which prophesied in those days [and] years,” plainly imply, that the prophets of Israel, when prophesied in those days many years that I would bring thee against them?

18 And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face.

19 For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel;

20 So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground.

21 And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God: every man's sword shall be against his brother.

22 And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone.

23 Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the LORD.

there was to be a succession of many ages between the publishing those prophecies and this event foretold by them; and therefore seem to look beyond the times of Antiochus Epiphanes, to which some expositors apply this place of Ezekiel (see note xxxix. 9).

Ver. 18. My fury shall come up in my face.] An expression taken from human passions, which cause the blood to fly up into the face. So Isaiah describes Almighty God as "burning with anger, his lips being full of indignation, and his tongue as a consuming fire," xxx. 27 (see note upon that place).

Ver. 19. For in my jealousy.] See xxxvi. 5, xxxix. 25.

In that day there shall be a great shaking] Great changes and alterations in kingdoms and governments are expressed in Scripture by "shaking of heaven and earth, the sea and the dry land" (see Hag. ii. 6, 7, 21, 22, Heb. xii. 26); and by earthquakes (Rev. vi. 12, xi. 13, xvi. 8).

Ver. 20. So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, &c.] Every part of the creation shall bear its share of this calamity, as if there were a convulsion of the whole frame of nature (compare Jer. iv. 24, &c. Hos. iv. 3). The prophets often describe God's judgments upon particular countries or persons as if it were a dissolution of the whole world, because his particular judgments are an earnest of the general judgment (see his notes upon Isa. xiii. 10).

The mountains shall be thrown down, &c.] These expressions may probably be meant of walls, towers, and other fortifications, which are dismantled and demolished in the time of war (compare Jer. li. 25).

Ver. 21. I will call for a sword against him] I will appoint a sword to destroy him (compare xiv. 17). God's decrees are expressed by his speaking the word, and giving out his command. So he is said to "call for a dearth upon the land of Canaan," Ps. cv. 16.

Throughout all my mountains,] See ver. 8.

Every man's sword shall be against his brother.] God often destroys his enemies by intestine quarrels among themselves, and making them executioners of his judgments upon each other (see 2 Chron. xx. 23, Judg. vii. 22, 1 Sam. xiv. 20).

Ver. 22. I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood;] Or, "I will plead with him" (see xx. 35). God pleads with men by his judgments, which are a manifest token of the vengeance due to their sins (see Isa. lxvi. 16, Jer. xxv. 31). Pestilence is joined with blood here, as it is v. 17, xiv. 19, xxviii. 23.

And I will rain upon him—an overflowing rain, and great hailstones.] God shall as plainly show himself in the destruction of these his enemies, as when he consumed Sodom and Gomorrah by fire and brimstone from heaven (Gen. xix. 24), and discomfited the armies of the Canaanites and Philistines by tempests of thunder and hail (see Josh. x. 10, 1 Sam. vii. 10, compare Ps. xi. 6, Isa. xxix. 6, xxx. 30, and see xiii. 11 of this prophecy).

Ver. 23. Thus will I magnify myself,] Compare ver. 16, and see note upon xxxvi. 23.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

I THEREFORE, thou son of man, prophesy against Gog, and say, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal:

2 And I will turn thee back, and leave but the sixth part of thee, and will cause thee to come up from the north parts, and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel:

3 And I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand, and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand.

4 Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee: I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field to be devoured.

5 Thou shalt fall upon the open field: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

CHAP. XXXIX.

See the Argument of the foregoing chapter.

Ver. 1. O Gog, the chief prince] See xxxviii. 2.

Ver. 2. I will turn thee back.] See ibid. ver. 4.

And leave but the sixth part of thee,] So the word shishsha, or shissah, as it is read with a different termination, signifies, xlv. 13. Others render it,

"I will strike thee with six plagues," viz. those mentioned xxxviii. 22.

And will cause thee to come up from the north parts, &c.] The words may be better translated, "After I have caused thee to come up from the north parts, and have brought thee upon the mountains of Israel:" see a like construction, xxxviii. 4.

Ver. 3. I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand,] "There shall be no might in thy hand," as Moses 6 And I will send a fire on Magog, and among them that dwell carelessly in the isles : and they shall know that I am the Lord.

7 So will I make my holy name known in the midst of my people Israel ; and I will not let them pollute my holy name any more : and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, the Holy One in Israel.

8 ¶ Behold, it is come, and it is done, saith the Lord God ; this is the day whereof I have spoken.

9 And they that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth, and shall set on fire and burn the weapons, both the shields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, and the handstaves, and the spears, and they shall burn them with fire seven years :

10 So that they shall take no wood out of the field, neither cut down any out of the forests ; for they shall burn the weapons with fire : and they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God.

threatens the Israelites, Deut. xxviii. 32. Thou shalt not be able to use thy weapons to any purpose.

Ver. 4.] See ver. 17, and xxxiii. 27.

Ver. 6. I will send a fire on Magog.] I will consume him by fire and brimstone out of heaven (see xxxviii. 22). Fire doth likewise signify the fiercest of God's judgments (see note upon xxx. 8).

Among them that dwell carelessly in the isles :] The inhabitants of the sea-coast which dwell securely, and think no harm can come upon them. The expression relates to the "merchants of Tarsish," and others mentioned xxxviii. 13. All countries lying upon the sea-coast are called islands in the Hebrew language.

Ver. 7. So will I make my holy name known.] See ver. 21, and xxxviii. 16, 23.

I will not let them pollute my holy name any more :] The words in the Hebrew run thus, "I will not pollute my holy name any more ;" i. e. I will not suffer it to be polluted, as the verbs active often signify only permission (see the note upon xiv. 9). The sense is, I will not suffer my name to be dishonoured any more, nor let it be said among the heathen, that I was not able to rescue my people out of the hand of their enemies.

Ver. 8. It is come, and it is done,] The time appointed for this great destruction is come, and it is the last and finishing stroke of God's justice upon the enemies of his church and truth (compare Rev. xvi. 17, xxi. 6).

This is the day whereof I have spoken.] "By my servants the prophets," xxxviii. 17.

Ver. 9. And shall set on fire and burn the weapons, &c.] In token of an entire conquest, and that such a lasting peace should ensue that there should be no more need of warlike preparations (compare Ps. xlv. 9).

Seven years :] The burning the weapons of war must be the consequent of a complete victory : so that the "seven years" here mentioned cannot be meant, as some would understand them, of those terrible conflicts which the Jews had with Antiochus Epiphanes, from the 143d or 145th year of the æra Seleucidarum (according to the different computations of the beginning of that persecution ; see 1 Macc. i. 20, 29), to the 151st year of the same era, when Nicanor was slain (1 Macc. vii. 1, 43). Nor is that true which this opinion supposes, viz. that Nicanor's death put an end to the troubles of the Jews ;

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel, the valley of the passengers on the east of the sea : and it shall stop the noses of the passengers : and there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude : and they shall call it The valley of Hamon-gog.

12 And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them, that they may cleanse the land.

13 Yea, all the people of the land shall bury them ; and it shall be to them a renown the day that I shall be glorified, saith the Lord God.

14 And they shall sever out men of continual employment, passing through the land to bury with the passengers those that remain upon the face of the earth, to cleanse it : after the end of seven months shall they search.

15 And the passengers that pass through the land, when any seeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it, till the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog.

for after that "there was great affliction in Israel, the like whereof had not been since the time that a prophet had not been seen among them," as the same writer informs us, 1 Macc. ix. 27. So that this passage of Ezekiel's prophecy must necessarily be expounded of some other event.

Ver. 10. So that they shall take no wood out of the field,] The quantity of these weapons will afford sufficient fuel for all that time.

They shall spoil those that spoiled them,] The same measure they dealt to others, shall be measured out to them again (compare Isa. xiv. 2, xxxiii. 1, Rev. xiii. 10, xviii. 6).

Ver. 11. The valley of the passengers on the east of the sea :] i. e. The sea of Gennezareth, as the Chaldee paraphrast explains it. In the Hebrew language all lakes are called by the name of seas. The same is called the eastern sea (xlvii. 18), to distinguish it from the Mediterranean, called the "great sea westward," Josh. xxiii. 4. The valley near this sea or lake is called "the valley of the passengers," because it was a great road by which the merchants and traders from Syria and other eastern countries went into Egypt.

It shall stop the noses of the passengers ;] Or, "the passengers shall stop their noses," viz. to avoid the smell of so many carcases : the transitive is often taken in a passive or impersonal sense, as hath been observed upon Isa. xlv. 18.

Ver. 13. All the people of the land shall bury them ;] See note on the following verse.

It shall be to them a renown the day that I shall be glorified,] Or, "the day that I shall be glorified, shall be to them [a day] of renown ;" i. e. a remarkable day of joy and gladness (see ver. 21, 22).

Ver. 14. To bury with the passengers those that remain] The latter part of the sentence may more clearly be translated thus, "even buriers with the passengers, [to bury] those that remain," &c. For the passengers or searchers are distinguished from those whose office it is to bury the dead, in the following verse.

After the end of seven months shall they search.] All the people shall be employed seven months in burying the dead (ver. 13), and after they are ended, particular persons appointed for that purpose, shall make a clear riddance.

Ver. 15. Then shall he set up a sign by it,] A stone or some other mark of distinction, that men may 16 And also the name of the city shall be Hamonah. Thus shall they cleanse the land.

17 ¶ And, thou, son of man, thus saith the Lord God; Speak unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field, Assemble yourselves, and come; gather yourselves on every side to my sacrifice that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh, and drink blood.

18 Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth, of rams, of lambs, and of goats, of bullocks, all of them fatlings of Bashan.

19 And ye shall eat fat till ye be full, and drink blood till ye be drunken, of my sacrifice which I have sacrificed for you.

20 Thus ye shall be filled at my table with horses and chariots, with mighty men, and with all men of war, saith the Lord God.

21 And I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them.

22 So the house of Israel shall know that I am the LORD their God from that day and forward.

23 ¶ And the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity: because they trespassed against me, therefore hid I my face from them, and gave them into the hand of their enemies: so fell they all by the sword.

24 According to their uncleanness and according to their transgressions have I done unto them, and hid my face from them.

25 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name;

26 After that they have borne their shame, and all their trespasses whereby they have trespassed against me, when they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid.

27 When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies' lands, and am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations;

28 Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen: but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there.

29 Neither will I hide my face any more from them: for I have poured out my spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God.

avoid passing over them (see the Excerpta out of Dr. Pocock's Miscellany Notes, in the Synopsis upon Luke xi. 44).

Ver. 16. And also the name of the city shall be Hamonah.] This is probably meant of a city that should be afterward built near this valley, and called Hamonah, signifying a multitude, to perpetuate the memory of such a transaction.

Ver. 17. Speak unto every feathered fowl, &c.] It was the custom for persons that offered sacrifice to invite their friends to the feast that was made of the remainder (see Gen. xxxiv. 54, 1 Sam. ix. 13). So here the prophet, by God's command, invites the beasts and fowls to partake of the sacrifice of his enemies' slain.

Gather yourselves—to my sacrifice.] The slaughter of God's enemies is called a sacrifice, because it is offered up as an atonement to the divine justice (compare this verse with Isa. xxxiv. 6, Zeph. i. 7, Rev. xix. 17).

Upon the mountains of Israel.] Where this great army was to be destroyed (see ver. 4).

Ver. 18. Of rams, of lambs.] Of all ranks and kinds, who shall be brought like beasts to the slaughter (compare Ps. lxxviii. 31, Isa. xxxiv. 6, Jer. l. 27, li. 40).

Fatlings of Bashan.] See Deut. xxxii. 14.

Ver. 19. And drink blood till ye be drunken.] Or be filled, or satiated: for so the Hebrew ravah usually signifies (see Cant. v. 1, Jer. xxxi. 14, 25, Hag. i. 6): and the Greek verb Μεθύω is taken in the same sense, John ii. 10, and so I conceive it should be understood, 1 Cor. xi. 21, where the apostle, reproving the abuse of their love-feasts, saith, "One is hungry, and another drinks," or fills himself to the full.

Ver. 20. At my table.] The feast made upon the peace-offerings, or sacrifices of thanksgiving, is properly called "the table of the Lord" (see Mal. i. 12). From whence the expression is applied to the feast of the Lord's supper, 1 Cor. x. 21.

Ver. 21. I will set my glory.] See xxxviii. 16, 23.

Ver. 22.] Both by my acts of mercy in returning their captivity (see ver. 28, 29), and by my judgments executed upon their enemies.

Ver. 23, 24.] They were not carried away by their enemies, because I wanted power to rescue them, but as a just punishment of their sins (see xxxvi. 18—20).

Ver. 25. Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob.] See xxxiv. 13, xxxvi. 24, xxxvii. 21.

And have mercy upon—Israel.] See xx. 40.

Ver. 26. After that they have borne their shame, &c.] The shame and reproach due to their sins (see Dan. ix. 16).

When they dwell safely in their land.] By their sins abusing those gracious promises of peace and safety which I had given them (see Lev. xxvi. 5, 6).

Ver. 27. Sanctified in them.] See xxxvi. 23.

Ver. 28.] See ver. 22, and xxxiv. 30.

Ver. 29. Neither will I hide my face any more from them.] I will never withdraw my favour or protection from them (see Isa. liv. 8).

I have poured out my spirit upon the house of Israel.] There will be a new effusion of God's Spirit upon the Jews, in order to their conversion: see Isa. lix. 20, 21, a place applied by St. Paul to this very purpose, Rom. xi. 26, 27 (compare likewise Zech. xii. 10, and xi. 19, xxxvi. 27 of this prophecy).

CHAPTER XL.

I IN the five and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after

CHAP. XL.

ARGUMENT.—The general Argument to the following chapter.

God having forsaken the city and temple of Jerusalem, and given them up to destruction, for the idolatries and other sins committed there : in this and the following chapters, he sheweth to the prophet, in vision, the model or plan of another temple, of the same dimensions with that built by Solomon ; as Villalpandus, and other learned men, with great probability, suppose. David had the pattern of that temple, which Solomon was to build, revealed to him by God (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 19) : as Moses had the model of the tabernacle represented to him by a vision, while he was in the mount (Exod. xxv. 40). And here the plan of Solomon's temple is again discovered to Ezekiel, who, foretelling the destruction of this temple by the Chaldeans, shows how highly it was valued by the Jews when he calls it, "the excellency of their strength," and "the desire of their eyes" (xxiv. 21). They looked upon it as the honour, glory, and safeguard of their nation. This lying in ruins at the time of this vision, the Jews had need of being comforted, instructed, and humbled upon that occasion ; they would not have cared for the thoughts of returning home, were there no promise made of restoring the temple, as well as their commonwealth ; the temple being the pledge of God's presence among them. Moses's ritual law would soon have been adapted to the manners of the gentiles, where they lived, if the expectations of a new temple, to which most of its rites were fitted, had not restrained their propensity to idolatry ; and they would have been dispirited beyond measure, as they were afterward, upon sight of their second temple, if the prophet had plainly foretold, that their new temple should fall short of the glory of the old one : they were therefore to be encouraged to the observation of their law, with the hopes of returning to rebuild their temple, which should be finished after the plan of that of Solomon.

We cannot suppose any exact model of Solomon's temple remaining, which might be transmitted to those that returned from the captivity ; for it was above seventy years from the destruction of the first temple to the finishing of the second, in the sixth year of Darius (Ezra vi. 15). During which interval, the ancient priests must be all dead ; and those that were younger could have but confused and very imperfect ideas of it. To direct them, therefore, in the dimensions, parts, order and rules of their new temple, is one reason why Ezekiel is so particular in the description of the old. And, no doubt, but Zerubbabel's temple was accordingly conformable to that of Solomon, in figure, disposition of parts, and order of the whole fabric and service. If in state or magnificence there was some variety, that is to be imputed to the necessity of their circumstances, and doth not imply any essential alteration.

However, the building being found inferior to the model here prescribed, the first discovery of which was a sensible mortification to the ancient men that had seen the first temple (Ezra iii. 12), it was natural for the Jews of former ages, that studied the style of prophecy, to conclude, as many of the Jewish writers of later times have done, that Ezekiel's temple had a farther view, and the chief intent and design of it was that to be fulfilled under the Messias. Whatever was august and illustrious in the prophetic figures, and not literally fulfilled in or near their own times, those things were justly thought to belong to the days of the Messias ; but as for minor circumstances, there is no more necessity of giving them a place in the spiritual application of a prophecy, than in the explication of a parable. The temple, and the temple-worship, was a proper figure of Christ's church, and of the spiritual worship to be instituted by him : and the notions of the Jews were to be raised by degrees to a farther and higher meaning, hereafter to be completed, without destroying their obligations to the statutes and ordinances God enjoined for the present.

There was the more reason for Ezekiel's keeping to the figure of Solomon's temple, in speaking of the times of the Messias, because Solomon was a type of the Messias chiefly in this respect, that he was to build a house for the name and worship of God, according to Nathan's prophecy concerning him (2 Sam. vii. 13, 14), several parts of which prophecy are applied to Christ in the New Testament (see Heb. i. 5, Luke i. 32) ; this exposition of that place receives a farther confirmation from hence, that other prophets foretell the same thing concerning the Messias. Beside those passages in Ezekiel which are under our present consideration, Zechary after him prophesied that "the man whose name is the BRANCH shall build the temple of the Lord ; and bear the glory, and sit and rule upon his throne, and shall be a priest upon his throne, and the counsel of peace shall be between them both ;" i. e. between the kingdom and the priesthood ; the same person shall be both king and priest, and his offices shall not interfere with, or obstruct each other (Zech. vi. 12, 13).

The New Testament copies the style of the old ; St. Paul, in his Epistles, calls the Christian church by the name of the house or "temple of God" (see 1 Cor. iii. 16, 2 Cor. vi. 16, Eph. ii. 20, &c., 1 Tim. iii. 15, Heb. iii. 6). In pursuance of the same metaphor he tells us, that "antichrist shall sit in the temple of God," meaning the Christian church (2 Thess. ii. 4). And St. John in the Revelation not only describes the heavenly sanctuary by representations taken from the Jewish temple (Rev. xi. 19, xiv. 17, xv. 5, 8), but likewise transcribes several of Ezekiel's expressions (Rev. iv. 2, 3, 6, xi. 1, 2, xxi. 12, &c., xxii. 1, 2), and borrows his allusions from the state of the temple, as it was built by Solomon, not as it stood in our Saviour's time ; as if the former had a more immediate reference to the times of the gospel. Thus, Rev. iv. 1, &c. the throne of God is represented like that over the ark, where the Shechinah or divine glory sat, encompassed with four cherubims [see the note upon ver. 6 of the first chapter], and with the seats of four-and-twenty elders, alluding to the heads of so many priestly courses. All these ornaments were proper to the first temple, as it was finished by Solomon ; whereas in the second temple there was no proper ark, no throne encompassed by cheru-

2 In the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel, and set me upon a very high mountain, by which was as the frame of a city on the south.

3 And he brought me thither, and, behold, there was a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed; and he stood in the gate.

4 And the man said unto me, Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, bims, no visible glory; and but four of the four-and-twenty courses of the priests returned from Babylon (see Ezra ii. 36, 39).

Upon the whole we may conclude that the general scope of Ezekiel's temple is, by giving a promise of restoring Solomon's, to preserve the Jews from defiling themselves with idolatry during their captivity; and when the time of that should be expired, to encourage them to go home, and rebuild their temple, and observe the laws and ordinances prescribed by Moses, for performing God's worship there, which yet was never to be equal to Solomon's in every respect, before the Messiah should come, who should supply its deficiencies, and whose church should resemble Solomon's temple in symmetry and beauty, in firmness and duration, in a regular, orderly, and decent worship of the true God, and in the manifestation of the divine presence, at first by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, and ever since by the inward assistances, comforts, and protection of the same Spirit.

The fortieth chapter contains a description of the two outward courts, with the chambers thereto belonging, together with the porch of the temple.

Ver. 1. Five and twentieth year,] See i. 2.

In the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month,] i. e. The first month, called here the "beginning of the year," which in the ecclesiastical computation was the month Nisan. The word month, likewise taken indefinitely, signifies the first month, xxvi. 1.

In the fourteenth year after that the city was smitten,] Zedekiah's reign commenced from Jehoaichin's captivity, in the eleventh year of whose reign the city was destroyed (Jer. lii. 5, 6). So the fourteenth year after the destruction of the city must be coincident with the twenty-fifth of Jehoiachin's captivity.

The hand of the Lord was upon me,] See i. 3.

Ver. 2. In the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel,] See note upon viii. 3.

Set me upon a very high mountain,] The expression points out mount Moriah, whereon the temple was built, which is here called "a very high mountain;" because it represents the seat of the Christian church, foretold by the prophets that it should be "established upon the top of the mountains" (see Isa. ii. 1, Mic. iv. 1, compared with Rev. xxi. 10).

By which was as the frame of a city on the south,] Mount Moriah lay southward of the hill of Zion, or the city of David, though both of them lay northward in respect of the lower part of the city, which from the times of Solomon was most commonly called by the name of Jerusalem (see Ps. xlviii. 2, Isa. xiv. 13, and Dr. Lightfoot's Geographical Description of Jerusalem, ch. 22). So the words describe the situation of the temple on the south side of mount Zion: which with all its courts, buildings, and walls encompassing the courts, and the whole area, or holy mountain (see xlii. 20), resembled a and set thine heart upon all that I shall shew thee; for to the intent that I might shew them unto thee art thou brought hither: declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel.

5 And behold a wall on the outside of the house round about, and in the man's hand a measuring reed of six cubits long by the cubit and an hand breadth: so he measured the breadth of the building, one reed; and the height, one reed.

6 ¶ Then came he unto the gate which looketh city for bigness. So Tacitus (lib. v. Hist.) describes the temple built as like a citadel for strength and largeness.

Or we may suppose that the prophet being brought by the Spirit from Chaldea into the land of Israel, which lay southward of Babylon (see i. 4), might see placed just before his eyes a representation of the city and temple, standing upon an eminence, both in respect of their natural situation, and that the prophet might take a better view of them: for it appears from xlviii. 15, &c. that he had a view of the holy city which was to be restored, as well as of the temple.

Ver. 3. There was a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass,] Or burnished or polished brass, as we read i. 7, Dan. x. 6, that is, of a bright or flaming colour. This seems to be an inferior angel, because he is distinguished from the divine glory, or the Logos appearing in the Shechinah, xliii. 6 (compare ix. 3).

With a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed;] The use of the line was to measure the land of Israel, and of the reed, to take the dimensions of the buildings in and about the temple; as also to set out several portions of land belonging to the sanctuary and city, to the prince and people (see xlv. 1, &c. xlvii. 3, &c.).

He stood in the gate,] Probably the north gate, being the first entrance the prophet may be supposed to have arrived to, as he came from Chaldea, which lay northward of Judea (see the note upon ver. 2).

Ver. 4. Son of man,] See note upon ii. 1.

Behold with thine eyes—declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel,] Compare xliii. 10, xlv. 5. The temple now represented, was partly designed to assure the people that their temple should be restored, and to serve them partly as a model, by which they should rebuild it at their return from captivity. The Jewish writers do confirm this opinion, when they tell us, "That the children of the captivity, who returned from Babylon, followed the platform of that temple, which Ezekiel described, as far as their circumstances would allow" (see Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple, ch. 10).

Ver. 5. A wall on the outside of the house round about,] A wall went round the whole compass or square of the holy mountain whereon the temple was situate, to separate the holy ground from that which was profane (see xlii. 20).

In the man's hand a measuring reed of six cubits long by the cubit and an hand breadth:] The prophet explains what sort of cubit he means in the following delineation of the temple; viz. such a one as consists of six hand-breadths, or one hand-breadth over the cubit used in Chaldea, where he now lived (compare xli. 8, xliii. 13.) This is the measure of a scripture cubit, generally agreed to be equivalent to eighteen inches, or a foot and a half of our measure (see Bishop Cumberland, of Scripture Weights and Measures, p. 36, &c.).

He measured the breadth—and the height, one reed.]

eth toward the east, and went up the stairs thereof, and measured the threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad; and the other threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad.

7 And every little chamber was one reed long, and one reed broad; and between the little chambers were five cubits; and the threshold of the gate by the porch of the gate within was one reed.

8 He measured also the porch of the gate within, one reed.

9 Then measured he the porch of the gate, eight cubits; and the posts thereof, two cubits; and the porch of the gate was inward.

10 And the little chambers of the gate eastward were three on this side, and three on that side; they three were of one measure: and the posts had one measure on this side and on that side.

11 And he measured the breadth of the entry of the gate, ten cubits; and the length of the gate, thirteen cubits.

12 The space also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and the space was one cubit on that side: and the little chambers were six cubits on this side, and six cubits on that side.

13 He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits, door against door.

14 He made also posts of threescore cubits, even unto the post of the court round about the gate.

The breadth or thickness of the wall was equal to the height of it.

Ver. 6. Then came he unto the gate which looketh toward the east.] The temple being placed toward the west part of the holy mountain, as the sanctuary was at the west end of the temple (see the note upon viii. 16), this was the first gate that led to it. This gate opened into the first court, or the court of the people (see ver. 19), and is called the king's gate, 1 Chron. ix. 18, as being built by king Solomon.

Went up the stairs] Which consisted of seven steps, as the Septuagint expressly mentioned (compare ver. 22, 26).

And measured the [one] threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad, &c.] He went up the stairs, that he might more easily measure the upper lintel, as well as the lower threshold. The word saph, translated threshold, signifies the lintel, or upper part of the door-case, as well as the threshold properly so called, or lower part of it. The plural sippim comprehends both: see xli. 16, Isa. vi. 4, and the Septuagint translate it there ὀρίθρῳ, the lintel. Some understand the word here of the two side-posts, in which sense it is used, Amos ix. 1.

Ver. 7. Every little chamber was one reed long and one reed broad;] Along the wall of the porch were chambers, three on each side, ver. 10. These the angel measured, and they were of equal dimensions, each one reed square, with a passage of five cubits breadth between them.

The threshold of the gate by the porch of the gate within was one reed.] The inward threshold at the farther end of the porch looking into the first court, was of the same size with the outward one, ver. 6, (compare ver. 15).

Ver. 8. He measured also] Or, "He even measured" &c., for the words seem to be a repetition of what was said in the latter part of the seventh verse; so the Vulgar Latin understood it, and therefore omits the whole verse; and the Septuagint in the Alexandrian copy, published by Dr. Grabe, join the two verses in sense together (see the like repetitions, ver. 11, 12, 16, xli. 11).

Ver. 9.] This was a portico beyond the little chambers, which looked inward, i. e. into the first court; it was eight cubits wide, and the two side-posts were two cubits thick, which made up the ten cubits mentioned ver. 11. The word acl, translated post, is the same in sense with mczuzah (xlv. 19), which properly signifies the side-post that supports the lintel (see Exod. xii. 22).

Ver. 10. The little chambers of the gate eastward] Or, "The little chambers of the eastern gate," which he has been hitherto describing; and the form of which is here repeated. These rooms were for the use of the porters that took care of the several gates that led to the temple (see 1 Chron. ix. 18, 23, 24, xxvi. 12, 13, 18).

The posts had one measure on this side and on that side.] The side-posts, or fronts of the doors, belonging to each row of chambers, were of the same size.

Ver. 11. The breadth of the entry] See ver. 9.

The length of the gate thirteen cubits.] By "the length of the gate," Villalpandus understands the height, which he supposes to have been two reeds, or twelve cubits and a half high; for he reckons every reed to consist of six ordinary cubits, and a fourth part over, which, in the common computation of full numbers for fractions, may be called thirteen cubits. Bern. L'Amy, in his book De Tabernaculo Fœderis, explains the expression of the breadth of the walls on each side of the gate, which he supposes to be six cubits and a half: and so the LXX. interpreters may be thought to understand the words, who translate the Hebrew oreb by Εἶπος, breadth.

Ver. 12. The space also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and—on that side:] There was a border, or a rail, which enclosed a cubit's space before each chamber.

The little chambers were six cubits] See ver. 7.

Ver. 13. He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits.] Measuring the arch of the gate from north to south, it was in breadth five and twenty cubits; which L'Amy thus computes,—the breadth of the gate ten cubits, the breadth of both the side-walls thirteen cubits, and two cubits for the space or border on each of the side chambers: ver. 12.

Door against door.] The door to each chamber exactly answered the door on the opposite side.

Ver. 14. He made also posts of threescore cubits.] The angel described or made a delineation of the height of the columns or pillars, which were to support the rooms or stories over the arch of the gate, and these were in height sixty cubits: the whole building being divided into three stories, like those described xliii. 6. The height of each story is thus computed by Villalpandus (par. ii. lib. v. cap. 16). That the pillars of the lower story were twenty cubits high; those of the second fifteen; and the uppermost twelve; the remainder being allowed for floors and the roof. The word posts in this verse signifies pillars (compare xlii. 6).

Even unto the post of the court round about the gate.] Villalpandus, and several interpreters, suppose there is an ellipsis in the words, which they

15 And from the face of the gate of the entrance unto the face of the porch of the inner gate were fifty cubits.

16 And there were narrow windows to the little chambers, and to their posts within the gate round about, and likewise to the arches: and windows were round about inward: and upon each post were palm trees.

thus supply: "And there was one measure" to the pillars of the court, and of the gate round about: which makes the sense run plain and easy: compare xli. 9, where there is the same ellipsis.

Ver. 15.] The whole length of the porch, from the outward front (compare xli. 21, 25), unto the inner side, which looks into the first court (ver. 17), was fifty cubits: which may be thus computed: twelve cubits for the thickness of the wall at each end (ver. 6), eighteen for the three chambers on each side (ver. 7), and ten cubits for the spaces between the chambers: allowing the same space between the chambers on each side, and the two walls (ibid.). Villalpandus observes the just proportion between the breadth and length of the gate; the length being double to the breadth (ver. 13). The same he tells us was observed between the breadth of the cloisters of the outward court, which was fifty cubits; and the contents of the whole area, which was a hundred (see the note on ver. 18).

Ver. 16. And there were narrow windows to the little chambers.] Every one of these little chambers (ver. 7) had a narrow window to it, towards the inside of the gate, where the passage was; and so there was over the side-posts or fronts, placed at the entrance of every chamber. By narrow or closed windows, some understand windows with lattice-work, to let in the light: but the phrase seems equivalent to that which is more fully expressed, 1 Kings vi. 4, by "open and narrow windows;" i. e. as the margin of our bibles doth very well explain it, "broad within" [to disperse the light] and "narrow without."

Likewise to the arches.] By windows to the arches, Villalpandus understands the stone itself wrought into figures of net-work, and made in the shape of a lattice. The word translated arches, doth likewise signify a porch, or entrance, and so the Vulgar Latin here translates it; and then the sense is, that there were windows over every door: compare ver. 31, 34, with ver. 37, where the same sense is expressed in the two former verses, by arches, aelamo in the Hebrew; and in the latter, by posts, or fronts, aelau.

Windows were round about] A repetition of what was said in the former part of the verse (see ver. 10).

Upon each post were palm trees.] A palm tree was carved upon the chapter of each side-post, or front (see ver. 26).

Ver. 17. Then brought he me into the outward court.] There were two courts belonging to Solomon's temple; the outward for the people, the inward for the priests. It is probable, that Solomon built only the inner court (see 1 Kings vi. 26, compared with viii. 64); and that the outer court was built after his time, whereupon it is called "the new court," 2 Chron. xx. 5. After which time, there is particular mention of the "two courts of the house of the Lord," 2 Kings xxi. 5. A third court, called "the court of the gentiles," was afterward added by Herod, when he rebuilt the temple.

The "great court," mentioned 2 Chron. iv. 9, as distinct from the court of the priests, Dr. Lightfoot explains of the holy mountain, or area, where the 17 Then brought he me into the outward court, and, lo, there were chambers, and a pavement made for the court round about: thirty chambers were upon the pavement.

18 And the pavement by the side of the gates over against the length of the gates was the lower pavement.

19 Then he measured the breadth from the temple stood, which Solomon enclosed with a wall, and separated it from common ground; so that text, 1 Kings vii. 12, "The great court round about was with three rows of hewed stones," &c. is to be understood only of this enclosure, according to his opinion (see his Description of the Temple, ch. 10, 18).

There were chambers.] These chambers were over the cloister, and supported by it (see ver. 14, and xlii. 8). They might be for the use of the priests; and likewise to be store-houses for tithes and offerings (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 12).

Thirty chambers were upon the pavement.] The number of them Villalpandus thus divides:—towards the east and west, seven on a side, answering one another; on the north and south sides, eight a-piece, abating one chamber, both on the east and west side, for the thickness of the walls or arches which supported those two gates, which he supposes to be higher than the north and south gates.

Ver. 18. The pavement by the side of the gates over against [or equal to] the length of the gates was the lower pavement.] The breadth of this pavement, that lay on the side of the gate, was equal to the length of the whole porch or gate, which was fifty cubits, ver. 15. This will plainly appear, if we consider, that the area of the outward court contained a hundred cubits, ver. 19. So the porticoes, or cloisters, cutting the area in right angles, by the gate placed in the middle of the court, the pavement belonging to each side of the gate, or cloister, must be just half that dimension, viz. fifty cubits. The word gates, in the plural number, seems to be used for the singular, as it implies the whole building, consisting of upper rooms, as well as the lower passage (see the note upon ver. 14). The word teummah, which our translation renders over against, often signifies equal, answerable, or the same proportion (see Noldius, p. 525); and so it is used i. 20, iii. 8, xlv. 7, xlviii. 13, &c. This was called the lower pavement, in respect of the several ascents which were still to go up, the nearer you came to the temple (see Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple, ch. 20). Villalpandus explains the lower pavement by way of distinction to the upper rooms, or chambers, placed over them, for the use of the priests, or as store-rooms for the service of the temple.

Ver. 19. He measured the breadth from the forefront of the lower gate unto the forefront of the inner court without, an hundred cubits eastward] That is, unto the hither side of the gate which faced the inner court. He measured the whole space of ground between the west front of the lower gate to the front of the upper gate, which leads into the eastern inner court, and found it a hundred cubits; the same was the space between the south front and north front: so the court was exactly square (see ver. 23, 27, 47). The expression is elliptical; as if he had said, there were a hundred cubits from west to east, and from north to south. There were two gates belonging to the porch, or passage, that led to the inner court; the first was eastward, looking towards the outer court, which is here meant; the other looked westward into the inner court. The gate at the east end forefront of the lower gate unto the forefront of the inner court without, an hundred cubits eastward and northward.

20 ¶ And the gate of the outward court that looked toward the north, he measured the length thereof, and the breadth thereof.

21 And the little chambers thereof were three on this side and three on that side; and the posts thereof and the arches thereof were after the measure of the first gate: the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

22 And their windows, and their arches, and their palm trees, were after the measure of the gate that looketh toward the east; and they went up into it by seven steps; and the arches thereof were before them.

23 And the gate of the inner court was over against the gate toward the north, and toward the east; and he measured from gate to gate an hundred cubits.

24 ¶ After that he brought me toward the south, and behold a gate toward the south: and he measured the posts thereof and the arches thereof according to these measures.

of the outer court is called the lower gate, for the same reason as the pavement is called the lower pavement, ver. 18, because there was still an ascent, as you went from one court to the other. The expression of the "inner gate without," is explained in the note upon xlii. 2.

Northward.] The Septuagint join this word to the following verse, and render the sentence thus; "And he brought me to the north, and behold the gate looking to the north in the outer court."

Vallapandus explains the nineteenth verse to this sense; that the outward court consisted of seven squares, a hundred cubits each; the first placed directly before the court of the priests, and of the same dimensions with it; the others extended on the north and south sides of the outer court, and likewise commensurate with the sides both of the inner court and of the temple, each of which contained one hundred cubits. By which description it must contain a square of three hundred cubits on the east part, and two hundred cubits both on the north and south side (consult Vallapandus's Delineation of the Temple).

Ver. 20, 21.] The whole model was the same with that of the east gate (see ver. 9, 10, 13, 15, 16).

Ver. 22. By seven steps;] See ver. 6.

The arches thereof were before them.] Or, at the entrance of them. The Septuagint render the word lipni, "before them," as if it meant the same with el penemith, within, or inward (xliii. 4). This sense is followed by most expositors, to denote that the arches were within, or at the top of the stairs; but the phrase may probably mean the same with nal penchem, "suitable to them;" i. e. to those of the east gate (see the following note).

Ver. 23.] The words might be translated more plainly thus; "And the gate of the inner court was proportionable," or answerable, "to the gate that was towards the north and towards the east." The expression is elliptical, as that of ver. 19, and the full import of it is, that the north gate of the inner court did exactly answer this north gate of the outer court, described ver. 20, 22. And in like manner the east gate of the inner court answered the east gate of the outward court. The word neged, translated "over 25 And there were windows in it and in the arches thereof round about, like those windows: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

26 And there were seven steps to go up to it, and the arches thereof were before them: and it had palm trees, one on this side, and another on that side, upon the posts thereof.

27 And there was a gate in the inner court toward the south: and he measured from gate to gate toward the south an hundred cubits.

28 And he brought me to the inner court by the south gate: and he measured the south gate according to these measures;

29 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to these measures: and there were windows in it and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

30 And the arches round about were five and twenty cubits long, and five cubits broad.

31 And the arches thereof were toward the utter court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof: and the going up to it had eight steps.

against," signifies here suitable, or proportionable; in which sense it is used xli. 16, Gen. ii. 18, "I will make him a help, kenegdho, suitable to him:" so an equivalent expression nal penchem, "before them," is used in describing the house which Solomon built, 1 Kings vii. 6, where our margin expresses the sense very properly "The porch was according to them;" i. e. answerable to them, or of the same proportion with them (see the note upon xli. 4). So the Greek preposition κατάνυτοι may most probably be understood, Rom. iv. 17, κατάνυτοι ὡς ἐπίσταται Θεῷ, not before, but "like unto him whom he believed," even God; to this sense, that Abraham is a father of many nations, in like manner as the God in whom he believed, is the Father of gentiles as well as Jews; as it is said in the foregoing chapter, ver. 29.

Ver. 24—26.] The twenty-third verse is to be read in a parenthesis, where the prophet having shown the exact correspondence between the gates of both courts, he proceeds in the three following verses to describe the south gate of the outer court, by the same dimensions he had before given of the east and north gate. He takes no notice of the western gate of the outer court, because it joined to the eastern gate of the inner court, which he describes ver. 32.

Ver. 27. There was a gate in the inner court toward the south:] The south gate in the inner court was exactly parallel to the south gate in the outer (see ver. 23).

From gate to gate] See ver. 19, 23, 47.

Ver. 27, 28.] Vallapandus, and those of his opinion, who maintain, that the outer court enclosed the inner on the east, north, and south sides, explain these words to this sense, that the prophet was conducted from the south gate of the outer court (ver. 24) to the south gate of the inner court, which was over against it, and so into the inner court itself.

Ver. 28, 29.] After he had measured the inner court, he took the dimensions of the south gate itself, and the chambers thereto belonging, and found them of the same dimensions with the former.

Ver. 30.] Length is here taken for height, as before, ver. 11. The words express the dimensions of 32 ¶ And he brought me into the inner court toward the east: and he measured the gate according to these measures.

33 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, were according to these measures: and there were windows therein and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

34 And the arches thereof were toward the outward court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

35 ¶ And he brought me to the north gate, and measured it according to these measures;

36 The little chambers thereof, the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, and the windows to it round about: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

37 And the posts thereof were toward the outer court; and palm trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

38 And the chambers and the entries thereof those arches, which were between the several little chambers, between each of which there was the space of five cubits (ver. 7).

Ver. 31. The arches thereof were toward the outer court; Or, "were like [those of] the outer court;" for the preposition el is sometimes taken in this sense (see Noldius, p. 63). If we understand it according to the common interpretation, that the arches or fronts (see the note on ver. 16) of the inner court looked towards the outer, it is a confirmation of Villalpandus's opinion, that the outer court surrounded the inner (see note upon ver. 19).

The going up to it had eight steps.] Whereas in the outer court the ascent had but seven (ver. 22, 26). The fifteen psalms, from the hundred and twentieth forward, called "Songs of Degrees," or Ascents, are supposed to have been sung upon some of these steps, or ascents.

Ver. 32—37.] The east and north gate had the same dimensions with the south gate, described ver. 28, 29, 31.

Ver. 34. The arches thereof] What is expressed here by arches, is signified by posts, or fronts, ver. 37 (see notes upon ver. 10, 16).

Ver. 38.] The chambers mentioned ver. 36, were near the entrance of the north gate, where they washed the legs and entrails of the burnt-offering, and marble tables were placed there for that purpose. See Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple, ch. 35. According to this exposition, the word gates stands for the singular number, as ver. 18. But that learned author observes in the same chapter, that they washed the sacrifices on the south side of the court of the priests, as well as on the north side, when the sacrifices were more numerous than the north side could well contain; so he understands the word gates as comprehending both north and south gates; and confirms this interpretation from the placing of the lavers, which were designed for that use, and were set five on the right side of the house, and five on the left (1 Kings vii. 39).

Ver. 39, 40.] Those expositors, who by the word gates in the foregoing verse understand both the north and south gates, render the sense of these two verses perspicuously thus: "In the porch of one gate (viz. that on the south) were two tables on this were by the posts of the gates, where they washed the burnt-offering.

39 ¶ And in the porch of the gate were two tables on this side, and two tables on that side, to slay thereon the burnt-offering and the sin-offering and the trespass-offering.

40 And at the side without, as one goeth up to the entry of the north gate, were two tables; and on the other side, which was at the porch of the gate, were two tables.

41 Four tables were on this side, and four tables on that side, by the side of the gate; eight tables, whereupon they slew their sacrifices.

42 And the four tables were of hewn stone for the burnt-offering, of a cubit and an half long, and a cubit and an half broad, and one cubit high: whereupon also they laid the instruments wherewith they slew the burnt-offering and the sacrifice.

43 And within were hooks, an hand broad, fastened round about: and upon the tables was the flesh of the offering.

44 ¶ And without the inner gate were the chambers of the singers in the inner court, which side, and two tables on that side, &c. And at the outer side of the step of the entry of the north gate were two tables:" which interpretation agrees very well with what follows, ver. 41, "Four tables were on this side, and four tables on that side." But they that understand these verses to be only a description of the north gate (on which side of the altar the sacrifices were commonly killed), suppose that two tables were on each side, as you came into the porch of that gate, and two on each side of the inner part of the gate that looked towards the altar.

Ver. 39. The sin-offering and the trespass-offering.] It is no easy matter to ascertain the difference between a sin-offering and a trespass-offering. Dr. Outram (lib. i. cap. 13, De Sacrificiis) is of opinion, that a trespass-offering implied an injury done to another, as well as a breach of God's law. Dr. Lightfoot hath accurately related the sense of the Jewish writers upon this subject, in his Temple Service, ch. 8, sect. 2, 3.

Ver. 43. Within were hooks, an hand broad, fastened round about:] Within the gate or entrance on the north side of the inner court, were iron hooks, for the hanging up of the beasts that were to be sacrificed, in order to the flaying off their skins (see Dr. Lightfoot's Description of the Temple, ch. 35).

Upon the tables was the flesh of the offering.] Or, they laid "the flesh of the offering." Upon those marble tables the priests laid the flesh of the slain beasts, and there cut it in pieces, and fitted it for laying upon the altar (see Lev. i. 6).

Ver. 44. Without the inner gate were the chambers of the singers in the inner court.] On the farther side of the inner gate, as you come into the inner court (compare ver. 40), were the chambers of the singers, who constantly attended upon the service of the temple (see 1 Chron. vi. 31, 32).

Which was at the side of the north gate; and their prospect was toward the south:] These chambers were placed at the north-east corner of the inner court, and so had their prospect towards the south.

One at the side of the east gate having the prospect toward the north.] They had likewise chambers on the south-east corner of that court, which had the was at the side of the north gate; and their prospect was toward the south: one at the side of the east gate having the prospect toward the north.

45 And he said unto me, This chamber, whose prospect is toward the south, is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the house.

46 And the chamber whose prospect is toward the north is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the altar: these are the sons of Zadok among the sons of Levi, which come near to the Lord to minister unto him.

47 So he measured the court, an hundred cubits long, and an hundred cubits broad, four-square; and the altar that was before the house.

48 ¶ And he brought me to the porch of the house, and measured each post of the porch, five cubits on this side, and five cubits on that side: and the breadth of the gate was three cubits on this side, and three cubits on that side.

49 The length of the porch was twenty cubits, and the breadth eleven cubits; and he brought me by the steps whereby they went up to it; and there were pillars by the posts, one on this side, and another on that side.

prospect towards the north. The copies which the Septuagint followed, read this verse to a clearer and better sense thus: "And he brought me into the inner court, and, behold, there were two chambers; one on the side of the north gate, looking towards the south; and the other on the side of the south gate, looking towards the north."

Ver. 45. This chamber, whose prospect is toward the south, is for the priests.] The word chamber may stand for chambers in the plural (as side-chamber doth, xli. 5, 9), and signify a row of buildings on the north side of the inner court, distinct from the chambers of the singers (ver. 44), and designed for the use of the priests, who were in constant attendance, according to their courses, upon the service of the temple (see Numb. xviii. 5, 1 Chron. vi. 49, 2 Chron. xxiii. 11).

The keepers of the charge of the house.] They took care of the holy vessels, and kept constant watch and ward (as the word mishmereth properly signifies) about the temple (see 1 Chron. ix. 23, Ps. cxxxiv. 1). The word priests may include Levites under it, as Levites elsewhere comprehends priests (see xliv. 10, xlviii. 11).

Ver. 46. The chamber whose prospect is toward the north is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the altar.] Another row of chambers on the south side of the inner court is for the descendants of the family of Aaron, whose office it is to attend upon the service of the altar, and keep the fire burning thereon perpetually (Lev. vi. 12, 13).

These are the sons of Zadok among the sons of Levi.] To the eldest house of the sons of Aaron the high-priesthood belonged; so that office of right belonged to Zadok, though the family of Ithamar usurped it for some time, from Eli, who was high-priest in Samuel's time, to Abiathar, whom Solomon dispossessed, and restored the high-priesthood to the right line, by placing Zadok in his room (1 Kings ii. 27, 35). The family of Zadok is only taken notice of in this vision, it may be for this reason, because they kept close to the worship of God, when the priest of Ithamar's line forsook it, and fell into idolatry (see xliv. 15). And the eldest son of Zadok's family having an unquestionable title to the high-priesthood (see Numb. xxv. 13), upon that account was an eminent type of the Messiah, the eternal high-priest (see Numb. xxxv. 25, 28).

Ver. 47. He measured the court.] The inner court was of the same dimensions with the outer (see ver. 19, 23, 27).

The altar that was before the house.] Or rather, "and the altar was before the house;" i. e. stood in the inner court just before the porch that opened into the temple. The altar was now measured; the measure of it being described afterward, xliii. 13, &c.

Ver. 46. And measured each post of the porch.] By the posts are meant the side-posts or columns on each side of the door of entrance (see ver. 9). These were measured to be five cubits thick, both on the north and south sides.

The breadth of the gate was three cubits.] By the "breadth of the gate," Villalpandus understands the space of the wall on each side, from the entrance itself to the two corners (compare xli. 3); which, supposing with the text here to take up six cubits, and the entrance of the porch to be fourteen cubits, both those dimensions make up the length of the porch to be twenty cubits, from north to south, according to the measure set down in the following verse. This interpretation is countenanced by the Septuagint, who translate the latter part of the verse thus: "And the breadth of the gate fourteen cubits; and the sides of the gate of the porch three cubits on this side, and three cubits on that side."

Ver. 49. The length of the porch was twenty cubits.] The same length with the porch of Solomon's temple, 1 Kings vi. 3, which being there said to be of the same measure with the breadth of the house, must be understood of its dimensions from north to south.

The breadth eleven cubits.] The porch in Solomon's temple was but ten cubits in breadth (1 Kings vi. 3): the length of such buildings being commonly double to the breadth (see ver. 13, 15, 21, 25, 33, and 36, of this chapter, and xli. 2). Some copies of the LXX. read "ten cubits;" and L'Amey conjectures that was the ancient reading in the Hebrew. St. Jerome, upon the place, suspects there might be a mistake in the Hebrew copy, though the emendation he offers doth not at all render the sense clearer.

Villalpandus supposes the breadth of the porch to be ten cubits and a half (see note on ver. 11); which, putting an entire number in the room of a fraction, may be accounted eleven.

He brought me by the steps whereby they went up to it.] The ascent was by eight steps, according to the Vulgar Latin; the same number which belonged to the several entrances into the inner court (see ver. 31, 34, 37). The copies of the LXX. read ten steps.

There were pillars by the posts.] By the side-posts of the door, or entrance (see ver. 48); like those erected in Solomon's temple, called Jachin and Boas, 1 Kings vii. 21, which were set up "before the temple," as it is expressed 2 Chron. iii. 17.

CHAPTER XLI.

1 AFTERWARD he brought me to the temple, and measured the posts, six cubits broad on the one side, and six cubits broad on the other side, which was the breadth of the tabernacle.

2 And the breadth of the door was ten cubits; and the sides of the door were five cubits on the one side, and five cubits on the other side: and he measured the length thereof, forty cubits: and the breadth, twenty cubits.

3 Then went he inward, and measured the post of the door, two cubits; and the door, six cubits; and the breadth of the door, seven cubits.

CHAP. XLI.

ARGUMENT.—This chapter contains a description of the measures, parts, chambers, and ornaments, of the temple itself.

Ver. 1.] By the posts are meant the piers or door-cases on each side of the entrance (see xl. 9, 48): these were six cubits thick on the north and south sides. Rockob, translated breadth, sometimes signifies thickness (see ver. 9, 12, of this chapter, and xl. 5): the same thickness had the upper lintel over the door; for so Villalpandus rightly explains the Hebrew word ohel, which we render tabernacle. That word sometimes signifies a covering, and so it is rendered by our translators, Exod. xxvi. 7, and is to be understood in the same sense, Exod. xxxvi. 14, where our English reads, “For a tent over the tabernacle;” but it should be translated, “For a covering over the tabernacle;” to which sense the LXX. translate it in both places. In this signification it may not be unfitly applied to the upper lintel, which is a kind of covering to the door; and thus it is generally understood by the rabbins upon this place.

Ver. 2. The breadth of the door was ten cubits;] The entrance itself being ten cubits broad, and the wall on each side five cubits, makes the breadth of the house itself to be just twenty cubits, as it is expressed in the latter part of the verse, which was the same in Solomon’s temple, 1 Kings vi. 2.

He measured the length thereof, forty cubits;] The length of the first sanctuary, as distinct from the inward, or the holiest of all, which was twenty cubits in length (ver. 4), and made the whole structure sixty cubits long; wherein it agreed with Solomon’s temple, 1 Kings vi. 2, 17.

Ver. 3.] From the outward sanctuary he went forward towards the holiest of all, and measured the thickness of the partition-wall, called the “veil of the temple,” Matt. xxvii. 51, to be two cubits, the entrance itself six cubits, and the breadth of the wall on each side of the door seven cubits: compare xl. 48, where “the breadth of the gate” is taken in the same sense: the breadth of the wall, thus computed, making up fourteen cubits, and being added to the breadth of the entrance itself, makes up twenty cubits; the breadth of the inner sanctuary, as it is set down in the following verse.

And measured the post of the door, two cubits;] Maimonides, in Beth-habekirah, saith, that in the first temple there was a wall between the sanctuary and most holy place of the thickness of a cubit: but in the second temple, instead of a wall there were two veils made, one towards the most holy place, and the other towards the outward sanctuary, leaving a space between them of the thickness of a cu-

4 So he measured the length thereof, twenty cubits; and the breadth, twenty cubits, before the temple: and he said unto me, This is the most holy place.

5 After he measured the wall of the house, six cubits; and the breadth of every side-chamber, four cubits, round about the house on every side.

6 And the side-chambers were three, one over another, and thirty in order; and they entered into the wall which was of the house for the side-chambers round about, that they might have bit, where the wall was supposed to stand in Solomon’s temple.

Ver. 4. So he measured the length thereof, twenty cubits;] It was an exact cube of the same dimensions in length, breadth, and height (see 1 Kings vi. 20).

Before the temple;] The words should rather be rendered, “According to the [breadth of] the temple.” The Hebrew word el-pene, before, is promiscuously used with nal-pene, which signifies “of the same size,” or proportion (see the note on xl. 23); and so it is used 2 Chron. iii. 8, where the text, speaking of this subject, runs thus in the Hebrew, “He made the most holy house, the length thereof before the face of the breadth of the house;” where our translation very properly expresses the same sense, “According to the breadth of the house.” In the same sense the phrase is used, 1 Kings vi. 3. So the sense here is, that the breadth of the inner sanctuary was equal to the breadth of the outer part of the temple, which is said to be twenty cubits, ver. 2.

Ver. 5. After he measured the wall of the house, six cubits;] The thickness of the wall from the foundation, the first story of the side-chambers (see ver. 8).

The breadth of every side chamber, four cubits;] The side chambers upon the lowermost floor were five cubits in breadth (1 Kings vi. 6). Therefore Villalpandus understands these words of the thickness of the buttresses, which supported those side-chambers.

Ver. 6. The side chambers were three;] They were three stories high (see 1 Kings vi. 6).

Thirty in order;] As in Solomon’s temple, according to Josephus’s description of it (Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 3, sect. 2), and built “round about the house on every side;” as it is expressed in the foregoing verse; to which the text in the first book of Kings agrees, vi. 5. The Talmudists increase the number to eight-and-thirty, placing fifteen on the north side, fifteen on the south, and eight on the west side of the temple (see Cod. Middoth. cap. 4). The supernumerary chambers being probably added in latter times.

They entered into the wall which was—for the side chambers round about;] At five cubits’ height from the ground, the wall or the buttresses which supported these outward chambers (see ver. 5), abated of their thickness one cubit, and there was a rest or ledge of one cubit’s breadth, on which the ends of each story were fastened (see 1 Kings vi. 6, 10).

But they had not hold in the wall of the house;] They were not fastened into the main wall of the house, but rested on the outside of the wall, where it grew narrower; which is meant by migrenoth, the “narrowest rests,” or rebatelements, which we read 1 Kings vi. 6.

hold, but they had not hold in the wall of the house.

7 And there was an enlarging, and a winding about still upward to the side chambers: for the winding about of the house went still upward round about the house: therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so increased from the lowest chamber to the highest by the midst.

8 I saw also the height of the house round about: the foundations of the side chambers were a full reed of six great cubits.

9 The thickness of the wall, which was for the side chamber without, was five cubits: and that which was left was the place of the side chambers that were within.

10 And between the chambers was the wide-

Ver. 7.] So much of breadth was added to the side-chambers, as was taken out of the thickness of the wall; so that the middle story was one cubit larger, and the uppermost story two cubits larger, than the lower rooms. And winding stairs, which enlarged as the rooms did, went up between each two chambers from the bottom to the top; and there were two doors at the top of each pair of stairs, one door opening into one room, the other into that over against it (see 1 Kings vi. 8). The Talmudists add, that these winding stairs were continued from one side of the temple to the other, beginning at the north-east side, and by these they went into the upper room which was over the sanctuary (see Cod. Middoth. cap. 4. sect. 5).

Ver. 8. The height of the house] By the house is meant these chambers three stories high; in which sense the word beth, house, is used, ver. 9.

The foundations of the side chambers were a full reed of six great cubits.] By the "foundations of the side-chambers," Villalpandus understands those rests or buttresses which supported them, which were at six cubits' distance from each other. Bernard L'Amy supposes this verse to contain a description of the second story of these side chambers, which were six cubits broad, being one cubit wider than the lower rooms (see the note on ver. 7.) Concerning the size of these cubits, see the note upon xl. 5. They are called "great cubits," because they are larger than the cubit used in Chaldea, as was there observed.

Ver. 9. The thickness of the wall, which was for the side chamber without, was five cubits:] This is to be understood, not of the veil of the temple, which was six cubits thick (ver. 5), but of the outward wall that enclosed these side-chambers. Side-chamber in the singular number is used for the plural, as in ver. 5, and xlii. 1. So door is used for doors, ver. 16, 20; post for posts, ver. 21; chamber, xlii. 1, for chambers, ver. 4.

That which was left [or the void space] was the place of the side chambers that were within.] Or, that belonged to the house, or temple. This void space was of the same measure; viz. five cubits (compare ver. 11). So the sense is supplied by Villalpandus and Noldius, n. 889 (compare xl. 14). The space of five cubits was allowed for the lower chambers, though the upper stories were wider by reason of the rebatement of the wall (see ver. 7, and 1 Kings vi. 6). Others understand this space of five cubits to be allowed for a walk before the chambers, or a passage from one chamber to another (see ver. 11).

Ver. 10.] The chambers, called leshacoth in the ness of twenty cubits round about the house on every side.

11 And the doors of the side chambers were toward the place that was left, one door toward the north, and another door toward the south: and the breadth of the place that was left was five cubits round about.

12 Now the building that was before the separate place at the end toward the west was seventy cubits broad; and the wall of the building was five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof ninety cubits.

13 So he measured the house, an hundred cubits long; and the separate place, and the building, with the walls thereof, an hundred cubits long;

14 Also the breadth of the face of the house,

Hebrew, are to be distinguished from the side-chambers mentioned in the foregoing verses; they mean, probably, the chambers of the inner court, described xl. 44, 45. Between these and the temple was left a space of twenty cubits. The temple stood in an area of a hundred cubits square (ver. 14), and was seventy cubits wide (ver. 12); to which adding the five cubits on either side, mentioned ver. 9, and the twenty cubits on this verse, makes up just a hundred cubits.

Ver. 11. The doors of the side chambers were toward the place that was left,] Or, "towards the void space:" the doors of the lower rooms opened into this void space before the chambers (ver. 9). Or it may be understood of the two doors on the north and south sides, which opened on the top of the staircase into the upper rooms (see ver. 7).

The breadth—was five cubits] See ver. 9.

Ver. 12. The building that was before the separate place at the end toward the west was seventy cubits broad:] Bernard L'Amy seems to give the clearest account of this difficult place (lib. vi. cap. 11, n. 2). He understands this word binian, translated building, of a wall or enclosure, as it is used, xl. 5, which ran along the outside of the priests' court, commensurate with the breadth of the western side of the temple, which was seventy cubits from north to south, and extended in length, from east to west, ninety cubits; ten cubits shorter than the whole area itself (see the following verse), and enclosing a void space of five cubits' breadth, which lay between the side-chambers and the enclosure; so he explains those words, "The wall of the building was five cubits thick round about" (compare xlii. 10). Which void space he understands by "the separate place," in this verse, and the place which was left, ver. 11.

Seventy cubits broad:] This was the breadth of the temple at the west end, and the buildings adjoining to it, which the above mentioned author thus computes: the breadth of the oracle twenty cubits; the thickness of the side-walls six cubits on each side; the side-chambers six cubits on each side (see the note upon ver. 8); thickness of the out-walls of those chambers five cubits on each side; a walk or gallery of five cubits before those chambers (see the note on ver. 9), and the utmost wall enclosing the whole building, five cubits. Those that differ from him, as to some of those particulars, make up the sum of seventy cubits, by making an allowance for the stairs, and for conveyances to carry off the water.

Ver. 13.] The whole temple, with the porch and walls, was in length a hundred cubits, from east to and of the separate place toward the east, an hundred cubits.

15 And he measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it, and the galleries thereof on the one side and on the other side, an hundred cubits, with the inner temple, and the porches of the court;

16 The door-posts, and the narrow windows, and the galleries round about on their three stories, over against the door, ceiled with wood round about, and from the ground up to the windows, and the windows were covered;

17 To that above the door, even unto the inner house, and without, and by all the wall round about within and without, by measure.

west, which may be thus computed: the thickness of the wall of the east porch five cubits: the passage through the porch eleven cubits; the wall between the porch and the temple six cubits; the outward sanctuary forty cubits: the partition-wall two cubits; the holiest of all twenty cubits; the thickness of the west wall six cubits; the side-chambers at the west end of the holy place five cubits; and outer wall of those chambers five cubits.

Ver. 14.] The whole front of the house eastward was a hundred cubits, which some expositors thus compute: the breadth of the temple twenty cubits; the thickness of the outward walls twelve cubits; the side-chambers eight cubits (of these dimensions they explain the latter part of the fifth verse of this chapter); the walls of those chambers five cubits on each side; the breadth of the void space five cubits on each side; and the twenty cubits round about the house (ver. 10). Others compute the sum a different way, by making different allowances for the outward buildings, and the several passages from one part of the temple to the other.

Ver. 15. He measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it. Noldius translates this sentence more clearly thus: "And he measured the length of the building which was before the separate place, [and] that which was behind it," or opposite to it; by which he understands the north and south porches: the east and west sides having been measured before, ver. 12, 14 (see his Concordance, p. 104). The phrase el-pene, translated here "over against," is rendered before in our English version, xlv. 4.

The galleries thereof on the one side and on the other side, an hundred cubits, with [or and] the inner temple. As the temple, and the area wherein it stood, made a square of a hundred cubits; so the courts and buildings thereto belonging were of the same dimensions (see xl. 19, 47). By the galleries are meant the side-chambers, described ver. 6, 7 (compare the following verse).

With the inner temple. Called the "inner house," ver. 17, and xlii. 15, to distinguish it from the courts and buildings which were about it.

Ver. 16. The door posts, and the narrow windows. He measured likewise the thickness of the walls on each side of the porch (see xl. 48), and the thickness of the door-cases, at the entrance into the temple xli. 1), as also the narrow windows belonging to the three stories of chambers, which were placed on the outside of the temple (see ver. 6, and xl. 16).

Over against the door, ceiled with wood round about. Or, answerable to which was "the door ceiled with wood." The doors of the little chambers exactly answered one another, as those belonging

18 And it was made with cherubims and palm trees, so that a palm tree was between a cherub and a cherub; and every cherub had two faces;

19 So that the face of a man was toward the palm tree on the one side, and the face of a young lion toward the palm tree on the other side: it was made through all the house round about.

20 From the ground unto above the door were cherubims and palm trees made, and on the wall of the temple.

21 The posts of the temple were squared, and the face of the sanctuary; the appearance of the one as the appearance of the other.

22 The altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits; and the corto the porch did, xl. 13. The word neged, "over against," signifies likewise answerable, or proportionable (see note on xl. 23). Door signifies every door (see note upon ver. 9).

From the ground up to the windows.] He measured from the ground up to the windows of the temple, which were placed above the side-chambers.

The windows were covered.] Either because the side-chambers jutting out beyond the main wall of the temple, hindered their being seen in the inner court; or else they were covered on the inside with curtains drawn before them.

Ver. 17.] This verse may best be explained by joining it to what went before, to this sense: that the windows were made in exact proportion, both over the porch and through every part of the temple, and the buildings adjoining to it. The inner house may mean only the first or outward sanctuary in this verse, as it is distinguished from the porch and outer buildings, expressed by the word without (compare ver. 15): for it is generally supposed that there were no windows in the inner sanctuary. But Villalpandus explains the words "even unto the inner house," in an exclusive sense, as if he had said, As far as the inner house; and by the "walls round about," understands the north and south walls of the temple (Par. ii. lib. iv. cap. 34).

Ver. 18.] On the inside of the house the walls were adorned with carved work of cherubims and palm-trees, as Solomon's temple was, 1 Kings vi. 29. The cherubims and palm-trees were placed alternately; and, according to the different way of counting them, you might reckon a palm-tree placed between two cherubims, or a cherubim placed between two palm-trees.

Ibid. and ver. 19.] The cherubims had four faces or appearances (see l. 10): but only two of these appeared in the carved work; the two other faces, viz. that of an ox and an eagle, being supposed to be hid in the plain or surface of the wall.

Ver. 20. Unto above the door] "Up to the windows," as it is expressed, ver. 16, "up to the ceiling," as the Septuagint explain it.

Ver. 21. The face of the sanctuary;] i. e. The entrance into the inner sanctuary (compare xl. 15). The lintels, or door-posts, both of the temple and inner sanctuary, were not arched, but square, with a flat beam or upper lintel laid upon the top of the side-posts; compare 1 Kings vi. 33, where the margin translates the word rebingim, four-square.

Ver. 22. The altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits;] The Septuagint add, by way of explication, "And the breadth thereof two cubits;" that it might be four-square, as Moses's altar of incense was, Exod. xxx. 2. The altar here ners thereof, and the length thereof, and the walls thereof, were of wood: and he said unto me, This is the table that is before the LORD.

described is a cubit higher, and double the breadth to that of Moses, which is supposed to be agreeable to the dimensions of the altar made by Solomon, who did not exactly observe the proportions prescribed to Moses, in making the cherubims and the other furniture of the temple: God having given a new model to David of all the parts and ornaments of the temple (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 12, 19). This altar was made of wood, but overlaid with gold (Exod. xxx. 3), and therefore is called the golden altar, 1 Kings vii. 48, Rev. viii. 3.

The corners, &c. were of wood:] The corners are the same with the horns mentioned Exod. xxx. 2, being made out of the four posts which supported each corner of the altar. The surface or top of it is called the length, and the sides the walls.

This is the table that is before the Lord.] Compare xlv. 16. The words altar and table are used promiscuously, as hath been observed upon xxiii. 41. Incense was an emblem of the prayers of the saints (see Ps. cxii. 2, Rev. viii. 3, 4); which are the spiritual sacrifices of those that worship God "in spirit and in truth" (see Hos. xiv. 2). This table or altar is said to be before the Lord, i. e. in the place of his peculiar presence (compare Exod. xxx. 8). In the same sense the burnt-offering is said to be made "at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord," i. e. in the place dedicated to his worship, Exod. xxix. 42, and the lamp is said to "burn before the Lord," xxvii. 21, though the candlestick stood in the outward sanctuary.

Ver. 23.] Each of them had a double or a folding door (see 1 Kings vi. 31, 34).

Ver. 24. The doors had two leaves apiece.] The two doors being exceeding large, that of the outward sanctuary ten cubits broad, and that of the inner six (see ver. 2, 3), and of a height proportionable; each of them had two leaves, that they might be more easily opened, and each leaf had a wicket in it (compare 1 Kings vi. 34).

Ver. 25. On the doors of the temple.] On the doors both of the outward and inward sanctuary (compare 1 Kings vi. 32, 34).

And there were thick planks upon the face of the porch without.] There was a wainscot-work of boards fastened to the end of the great beams, which came out beyond the wall of the porch: these were laid so as to make a frieze-work over the entrance into the eastern porch.

Ver. 26. Narrow windows] Compare xl. 16.

Thick planks.] The sense would be plainer, if we translate it, "And [upon] the thick planks;" i. e. the figures of palm-trees were carved upon that wainscot, which was described in the foregoing verse.

CHAP. XLII.

ARGUMENT.—A description of the priests' chambers, and their use, and the dimensions of the holy mountain whereon the temple stood.

Ver. 1. Then he brought me forth into the utter court, &c.] The angel now brings the prophet out of the inner court by the north gate, into some chamber or building, which looked towards the south side of the temple, and faced the wall or enclosure that encompassed the north side of the inner court and temple, mentioned xli. 12, 15. Some suppose this to be a building distinct from all the parts of the temple hitherto described.

The words of the seventh and ninth verses imply, that it was a distinct building from the outer court.

Into the chamber that was over against the separate place, and—before the building.] Or, "Before the separate place, and before the building:" for the preposition neged is used in both parts of the sentence. Chamber is put for chambers (see ver. 4, and xli. 9).

Ver. 2.] This north door faced one of the cloisters, whose length was a hundred cubits, and its breadth fifty; which was the proportion of all the cloisters (see the note upon xl. 15). Noldius translates the words to this sense, "Unto the place whose length was a hundred cubits towards the north door." He supposes these buildings to be distinct from any hitherto described, and adds, that the Jews profess their ignorance how they were situate; because there was nothing in the second temple that answered to them (see his Concordance, n. 390).

Ver. 3. Over against the twenty cubits which were for [or, which belonged to] the inner court, and over against the pavement which was for [or, belonged to] the utter court.] One side of these buildings looked upon the void space about the temple, which contained twenty cubits, mentioned xli. 10, and the other side was towards the pavement belonging to the outer court, described xl. 17.

Was gallery against gallery.] Like those mentioned xli. 16.

Ver. 4. Before the chambers was a walk of ten cubits breadth inward, a way of one cubit; and their doors toward the north.

5 Now the upper chambers were shorter: for the galleries were higher than these, than the lower, and than the middlemost of the building.

6 For they were in three stories, but had not pillars as the pillars of the courts: therefore the building was straitened more than the lowest and the middlemost from the ground.

7 And the wall that was without over against the chambers, toward the utter court on the forepart of the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits.

8 For the length of the chambers that were in the utter court was fifty cubits: and, lo, before the temple were an hundred cubits.

9 And from under these chambers was the entry on the east side, as one goeth into them from the utter court.

10 The chambers were in the thickness of the wall of the court toward the east, over against cubits breadth inward,] There was a walk or cloister of ten cubits' breadth, running along the inside of the wall, which divided the buildings into two rooms; one half of which looked into the outer court, the other into the inner (see xli. 19).

A way of one cubit;] This some understand of an entrance at each end of the cloister.

Their doors toward the north.] See ver. 1, 2.

Ver. 5.] The marginal reading in the Hebrew is to be preferred, the sense of which is, "For the galleries did abate of these," i. e. of the lower and middlemost parts of the building; the reason of which is assigned in the next verse.

Ver. 6.] The two upper stories had balconies standing out of them, the breadth of which was taken out of the rooms themselves, and made them so much the narrower, because the weight of the balconies was not supported by pillars, as the rooms over the cloisters of the outward court were, but only by the wall. This is L'Amy's exposition of the words.

Ver. 7.] The wall that enclosed these buildings was commensurate with the breadth of one of the cloisters of the outer court, which was fifty cubits broad (see ver. 2).

Ver. 8. The length of the chambers—was fifty cubits:] The chambers that were built over the cloisters were in length fifty cubits. What is called length here, is expressed by breadth, ver. 2, as that is opposed to the length of the outer court, which was a hundred cubits (see the following words).

Before the temple were an hundred cubits.] The words imply that the angel conducted the prophet from these north chambers to those on the south side (see ver. 11, 13); so that crossing over the space of ground that fronted the east side of the temple, they took notice of its dimensions, which they had before measured, and found to be a hundred cubits (see xli. 14). The LXX. with a small alteration of the Hebrew text, and reading, probably, hennah for hinneh, and haelle col for haecal, translate the sentence thus: "The one side was opposite to, or answered the other, and in all were a hundred cubits;" meaning that the chambers, on the north and south sides, contained each of them fifty cubits.

Ver. 9.] The entry into these south chambers was by a pair of stairs at the east corner of the outer court. Compare this verse with ch. xli. 19, and with the description Dr. Lightfoot gives of the stairs the separate place, and over against the building.

11 And the way before them was like the appearance of the chambers which were toward the north, as long as they, and as broad as they: and all their goings out were both according to their fashions, and according to their doors.

12 And according to the doors of the chambers that were toward the south was a door in the head of the way, even the way directly before the wall toward the east, as one entereth into them.

13 ¶ Then said he unto me, The north chambers and the south chambers, which are before the separate place, they be holy chambers, where the priests that approach unto the Lord shall eat the most holy things: there shall they lay the most holy things, and the meat-offering, and the sin-offering, and the trespass-offering; for the place is holy.

14 When the priests enter therein, then shall that went up into the chamber about the temple, ch. xii. though his description belongs to the temple, as it was in our Saviour's time.

Ver. 10. The chambers were in the thickness of the wall] Or rather, "in the breadth of the wall;" i. e. in the breadth of ground which that wall enclosed; so those words, xli. 12, "The wall of building was five cubits thick round about," are explained by some of a space of ground five cubits broad, enclosed by that wall (see note there).

Over against the separate place.] Or, "before the separate place, and before the building" (see ver. 1, 13). The expressions denote, that these south chambers had the same situation, with respect to the temple, as the north chambers had, spoken of ver. 1.

Ver. 11.] Such a way led to these chambers, as is described leading to the chambers on the north side, ver. 4. The proportions of both were the same; and the windows, doors, and passages belonging to these were exactly uniform with those on the north side.

Ver. 12. According to the doors of the chambers that were toward the south] The sense would be plainer, if the words were thus translated, "And such were the doors of the chambers towards the south" [as those towards the north]. In which sense the affix ke is used in the foregoing verse.

[There was] a door in the head of the way.]) Like that described ver. 9.

Ver. 13. The north—and the south chambers,] Which were described in the foregoing part of the chapter (see ver. 8, 10—12).

They be holy chambers, where the priests—shall eat the most holy things:] The shew-bread, the remainder of the meat-offering, sin-offering, and trespass-offering, are expressly called the most holy things, Lev. vi. 14, 17, xxiv. 9, Numb. xviii. 9, and are distinguished from the holy things, such as are peace-offerings, first-fruits, and tithes, Lev. xxi. 22. These were to be eaten within the precincts of the temple, by the direction of the same laws.

There shall they lay the most holy things,] These rooms were likewise set apart for laying up the remainder of the sacrifices, till they were eaten by the priests and their families (see Lev. x. 13, xxii. 13).

Concerning the difference between the sin-offering and the trespass-offering, see note upon xl. 39.

Ver. 14. When the priests entered therein,] Within the inner court, xli. 17.

they not go out of the holy place into the utter court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy; and shall put on other garments, and shall approach to those things which are for the people.

15 Now when he had made an end of measuring the inner house, he brought me forth toward the gate whose prospect is toward the east, and measured it round about.

16 He measured the east side with the measuring reed, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

Shall they not go out of the holy place into the utter court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister;] They shall not go into the court of the people in their priestly vestments, but shall lay them up in some of these chambers: the priestly garments were only to be used in the time of their ministration, as appears from Exod. xxix. 43, and is farther confirmed from this verse, and xlv. 19. Josephus asserts the same, De Bello Jud. lib. vi. cap. 15.

The Christian church followed the practice of the Jewish, in this as well as in many other customs; the testimony of St. Jerome, in his Commentary upon xlv. 19 of this prophecy, plainly proves, that the clergy of that age wore a distinct habit from the laity, at the time of their performing the public offices of religion: "Religio divina alterum habitum habet in ministerio, alterum in usu viteque communi." And that this was the practice of the earlier ages of the church, may be probably concluded from the testimony of Polycrates, a writer of the next age to the apostles, who tells us, that St. John wore an ornament upon his head resembling the mitre, with a plate upon it, which was worn by the Jewish high-priest (see Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. v. cap. 24). And in the next age, Pontius, the writer of St. Cyprian's life and martyrdom, acquaints us, that the bishop's seat in the church used to be covered with white; "Sedile erat fortuito linteo stratum, ut et sub ictu passionis episcopatus honore frueretur:" and it can hardly be imagined, there should be a peculiar dress for the bishop's seat, and none for the bishop himself.

And shall approach to those things which are for the people.] The words should rather be thus translated, "And shall come into the court belonging to the people;" the outer court, mentioned at the beginning of the verse.

Ver. 15. The inner house,] The "inner house" denotes the temple, as it is distinguished from the courts about it (compare xli. 15).

He brought me forth toward the gate] The gate that opened into the first court (see xl. 6).

Ver. 16.] This and the following verses contain the measures of the holy mountain, or area, upon which the temple stood, which is described to be an exact square, consisting of five hundred reeds in measure on each side of it. We may observe, that the "heavenly Jerusalem," represented to St. John, Rev. xxi. 16, is likewise described as four-square, that figure being an emblem of solidity. And Ezekiel's vision, as well as St. John's, is designed in its mystical sense, to represent the regularity and 17 He measured the north side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

18 He measured the south side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

19 ¶ He turned about to the west side, and measured five hundred reeds with the measuring reed.

20 He measured it by the four sides: it had a wall round about, five hundred reeds long, and five hundred broad, to make a separation between the sanctuary and the profane place.

strength of Christ's church and kingdom (compare with this verse xl. 47, xli. 13, 14, xlv. 2, xlviii. 20).

Capellus is of opinion, that instead of "five hundred reeds," we ought to read "five hundred cubits:" he supposeth the word ammoth, cubits, wanting in the present reading of the text, to have been rejected as spurious by the correctors of the Hebrew copies, by reason of its affinity with meoth, a hundred; and the word kanim, reeds, substituted in its place. This emendation he justifies from the authority of the Septuagint, who read cubits both in the seventeenth and twentieth verses; which reading St. Jerome acknowledges to have been in the Greek copies in his time. He confirms it likewise from the parallel text, xlv. 2, which he thinks, according to the rules of grammar, should be expounded of cubits. And he farther argues, that the Jews themselves formerly understood this text of cubits; because they are generally of opinion, that the temple stood in an area or square, containing five hundred cubits on every side (see Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple, ch. 2); whereas, according to the present reading, the whole compass of the area will amount to three miles and a half, according to the same author's computation; which is more than half the circuit of the whole city of Jerusalem in its most flourishing condition (see the Excerpta out of Capellus's Triplex Delinatio Templi, in the first volume of the Polyglot Bible).

Whereas the angel is said to measure the east side of this square round about: and so of the other three sides: we need not from hence conclude, that the whole compass of the ground was measured four times over; for the phrase round about often signifies, in this prophecy, only from side to side, or from one end to another (see xl. 14, xli. 16). The words therefore only import, that the angel continued measuring from one side to the other, till he had gone over the whole compass of the area.

Ver. 20. It had a wall round about,] To defend it from being invaded or profaned (compare Rev. xxi. 17). The wall was five hundred cubits every way (see ver. 16), as it composed the length and breadth of the temple, and its courts; see the same expression, xl. 47.

To make a separation between the sanctuary and the profane place.] By the sanctuary is here meant the whole compass of ground which was the precincts of the temple, elsewhere called the "holy mountain" (see xliii. 12). In comparison of which, Jerusalem itself, though upon several accounts styled "the holy city," was esteemed but as profane ground (see xlviii. 15).

CHAPTER XLIII.

1 AFTERWARD he brought me to the gate, even the gate that looketh toward the east:

2 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east: and his voice was like a noise of many waters: and the earth shined with his glory.

3 And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city: and the visions were like the vision that I saw by the river Chebar; and I fell upon my face.

4 And the glory of the LORD came into the house by the way of the gate whose prospect is toward the east.

CHAP. XLIII.

ARGUMENT.—The glory of the Lord is represented as returning to the temple, where God promises to fix his residence, if the people repent, and forsake those sins which made him depart from them. Then the measures of the altar, and the ordinances relating to it, are set down.

Ver. 1.] The eastern gate of the priests' court, which was just before the temple (compare ver. 4, and xlv. 1, xlv. 1).

Ver. 2. Behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east:] The word behold is an expression of joy and admiration: as if the prophet had said, "Behold a wonderful and joyful sight!" The glory of that God, who calls himself the God of Israel, as choosing to dwell among them, and to give evident tokens of his presence among them, and protection over them. This glory, which had departed from this place for so long a time, now returned to it, and fixed its residence there. The glory of the Lord, when it forsook the temple, is described as departing from the eastern gate of it (x. 19). Afterward it is represented as quite forsaking the city, and removing to a mountain on the east side of the city (xi. 23), and now it returns by the same way it departed.

His voice was like a noise of many waters:] Great and terrible (compare i. 24, Rev. i. 15) either to signify the dreadfulfulness of God's judgments, or the efficacy of his commands, who calls things into being by speaking the word.

The earth shined with his glory.] The rays of his glory, like the sunbeams, enlightened the earth (compare x. 4, Isa. vi. 3, Hab. iii. 4).

Ver. 3.] See ix. 3, 5. The prophets are said to do those things which they foretell shall come to pass (see notes upon xiii. 19, xxiii. 54, Jer. i. 10).

Ver. 4.] See ver. 1, 2, and xlv. 2.

Ver. 5. So the spirit took me up.] See iii. 12, 14, viii. 3, xxxvii. 1, xl. 2.

Brought me into the inner court;] Carried me from the gate that enters into it, into the middle of it, just before the temple.

The glory of the Lord filled the house.] That glory, or symbol of the divine presence, which I saw coming from the east (ver. 13), entered into the temple, and settled there, as it did when it was finished by Solomon (1 Kings viii. 10, 11).

Ver. 6. I heard him speaking] With a great and mighty voice (ver. 2).

The man stood by me.] See xl. 3.

Ver. 7. The place of my throne, and the place of 5 So the spirit took me up, and brought me into the inner court; and, behold, the glory of the LORD filled the house.

6 And I heard him speaking unto me out of the house; and the man stood by me.

7 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom, nor by the carcases of their kings in their high places.

8 In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds, and their post by my posts, and the wall between me and them, they have even defiled the soles of my feet.] The sense would be plainer, if the beginning of the verse were thus rendered, "This is the place of my throne," &c. The cherubims were God's throne, from whence he is said to dwell or "sit between the cherubims," and the ark was his footstool (see Ps. xcix. 1, 5).

Where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever.] He means the promise formerly made with relation to the tabernacle and temple (see Ps. lxxviii. 16, cxxxii. 14); which is to be understood as those were, under the condition of their obedience (see ver. 9); and to be eminently fulfilled in Christ, in whom all the promises of the Old Testament are to have their final accomplishment. Zechariah prophesies of the Messiah (vi. 13), that he should build "the temple of the Lord," and "bear the glory:" i. e. as the spiritual sense of these prophecies is explained in the New Testament, He shall build the Christian church; in him "shall all the fulness of the godhead dwell bodily," and really, not in types and figures (see Heb. iii. 3, Matt. xvi. 18, John i. 14, Col. ii. 9). To the same sense we may explain the prophecy of Haggai, ii. 7, "The glory of the latter house shall be greater than that of the former." There was no visible Shechinah, or glory, appeared in the second temple, till the Lord, "whom they expected, came to his temple" (Mal. iii. 1); i. e. till the Messiah, who was "the brightness of his Father's glory," appeared there, and made it an illustrious figure of that true church, or temple of believers, where he would continue his presence for ever (see 2 Cor. vi. 16).

No more defile,—by their whoredom.] By idolatry, often described in scripture, and particularly by this prophet, under the metaphor of fornication (see ch. xvi., xxiii.). The captivity had that good effect upon the Jews, that they scarce ever afterward relapsed into idolatry. The entire destruction of idolatry is likewise often mentioned as a blessing reserved for "the latter days," when the Jews shall be converted, and "the fulness of the gentiles" come into the church (see note upon Isa. i. 30).

Nor by the carcases of their kings in their high places.] Idols are called carcases, because they are without life and motion, and likewise upon the account of their being hateful and loathsome in the sight of God (see Lev. xxvi. 30, Jer. xvi. 18). They are called "the carcases of kings;" because they were set up, and the worship of them encouraged, by the idolatrous kings of Judah, who erected high places for that purpose near Jerusalem, in the very sight and view of the temple (see 2 Kings xxiii. 13). By this means the temple itself was defiled by those that my holy name by their abominations that they have committed: wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger.

9 Now let them put away their whoredom, and the carcases of their kings, far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

10 ¶ Thou son of man, shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the pattern.

11 And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, shew them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write came directly from the worship of idols, to attend upon God's service in the temple (see ch. xxiii. of this prophecy, 38, 39).

Ver. 8. In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds,] Their kings still advanced to greater degrees of idolatry, in setting up altars and images for their idols in the temple itself, and the courts before it (see v. 11, viii. 6, 15, 2 Kings xvi. 14, xxi. 4, 5, 7).

And the wall between me and them,] The margin gives a plainer sense, "For there was but a wall between me and them."

Ver. 9.] See note upon ver. 7.

Ver. 10, 11. Shew the house to the house of Israel, &c.] The words, if understood as spoken to the Jews of that age, imply, that the house here described, with the whole platform of it, and the ordinances relating to it, might be a model for them to imitate, as far as they were able, when they should return to their own country, and rebuild their temple (see the general preface before ch. xl.). The same draught or description, when duly considered, would be a proper inducement to make them sensible of their former deviations from God's worship, and touched with deep remorse for those sins, which provoked him to deprive them of the honour of his residence among them, and the benefit of his ordinances (see ver. 7, 8). But we may probably suppose, that the words may have a farther view, and import, that the model of God's temple, here set forth, is but a pattern of heavenly things, as Moses's was, Exod. xxv. 40, and a type of that pure church "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone;" which we may hope God will, in due time, every where restore. And in the mean season, it is the duty of all good Christians, according to their abilities, to inform themselves and others, what is the pattern, form, and fashion, of this true church of God, in order to reform all those deviations which have been made from it.

Let them measure the pattern.] In order to build their new temple by it, when they shall return from captivity, as far as their abilities will reach (see the general preface before the fortieth chapter). For the same purpose the prophet is commanded to write it in their sight, in the following words.

Ver. 11. And if they be ashamed] Or, "And that they may be ashamed:" so the particle im is often used (see Noldius, p. 90).

Ver. 12. Upon the top of the mountain] Whereupon the temple stood (see xl. 2).

The whole limit—shall be most holy.] See xlii. 20.

Ver. 13. The cubit is a cubit and an hand breadth;] See xl. 5.

The bottom shall be a cubit.] The bottom signifies the basis or foundation (see ver. 14); this shall be a it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them.

12 This is the law of the house: Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house.

13 ¶ And these are the measures of the altar after the cubits: The cubit is a cubit and an hand breadth; even the bottom shall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit, and the border thereof by the edge thereof round about shall be a span: and this shall be the higher place of the altar.

14 And from the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle shall be two cubits and the cubit in height, and a cubit over in breadth; the parts above the lower settle being contracted, and growing narrower by the breadth of a cubit (see the following verse). This lower ledge or settle about the altar had a border of the height of a span, or half a cubit (see ver. 17), to keep the blood that was poured out at the foot of the altar from running upon the pavement; but it was conveyed away into two holes at the south-west corner of the altar, and so into a sink or common-sewer under ground.

This shall be the higher place of the altar.] The Hebrew reads, "The back of the altar;" which imports, that this basis was the protuberance of the altar, or the widest part of it; the Hebrew word gab, signifying any part that sticks out, and is used for the eye-brows, the protuberance of a hill, or such like eminence.

Ver. 14. From the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle shall be two cubits.] The altar was made narrower as it came nearer to the top; these narrowings or in-benchings are called here settles. The word is azarah in the Hebrew, which is elsewhere used for a court; because the priests trod upon these settles, as they and the people did in the courts before the temple. From the foundation to the lower of the two settles here mentioned, the text saith, was to be two cubits; which seems to contradict the words in the verse before, "the bottom shall be a cubit." This difference in expression Dr. Lightfoot thus reconciles, in his Description of the Temple, ch. 34, that the foundation, as it lay flat upon the ground, was but a cubit high; but then there arose a slope of another cubit's height, which was thicker than the compass of the altar just above it; so that from the ground to the top of the rising was two cubits: and thus he reconciles the description here given with that of the Talmud, which reckons five cubits from the lower settle to the higher; whereas the prophet counts but four in the following words.

The breadth one cubit;] The breadth of this lower settle, or border, was one cubit, which made that part of the altar which was above it narrower, by a cubit on every side of the square, than that part which was nearer the foundation.

From the lesser settle even to the greater settle shall be four cubits, and the breadth one cubit.] Dr. Lightfoot, in the same place, assigns this reason, why the upper settle is here called the greater, because the upper settle, though it was less in compass (being narrower by two cubits on every side of the square), yet was larger in breadth; the lower settle rising with a leaning slope, as was observed before, which took up a considerable part of its breadth, and made the walk upon it not so large as that upon the upper.

Ver. 15. So the altar shall be four cubits;] i. e. From the upper settle, which makes the altar ten breadth one cubit; and from the lesser settle even to the greater settle shall be four cubits, and the breadth one cubit.

15 So the altar shall be four cubits; and from the altar and upward shall be four horns.

16 And the altar shall be twelve cubits long, twelve broad, square in the four squares thereof.

17 And the settle shall be fourteen cubits long and fourteen broad in the four squares thereof; and the border about it shall be half a cubit; and the bottom thereof shall be a cubit about; and his stairs shall look toward the east.

18 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, thus saith the Lord God; These are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they shall make it, to offer burnt-offerings thereon, and to sprinkle blood thereon.

19 And thou shalt give to the priests the Levites that be of the seed of Zadok, which approach unto me, to minister unto me, saith the Lord God, a young bullock for a sin-offering.

20 And thou shalt take of the blood thereof, and put it on the four horns of it, and on the four corners of the settle, and upon the border round about: thus shalt thou cleanse and purge it.

21 Thou shalt take the bullock also of the sin-offering, and he shall burn it in the appointed place of the house, without the sanctuary.

22 And on the second day thou shalt offer a kid of the goats without blemish for a sin-offering; and they shall cleanse the altar, as they did cleanse it with the bullock.

23 When thou hast made an end of cleansing it, thou shalt offer a young bullock without blemish, and a ram out of the flock without blemish.

24 And thou shalt offer them before the Lord, cubits high, the same height with that made by Solomon, 2 Chron. iv. 1. The fourteenth verse reckons six cubits to the upper settle, and here are four cubits added to the top of the altar. The dimensions of the altar are the same in the Talmud, as Dr. Lightfoot observes in the place above cited; who farther remarks, out of the Jewish writers, that within two cubits of the top, or the place where the hearth was, there was another narrowing, or bench, of a cubit's breadth, where the priests stood to officiate.

The altar is twice mentioned in this verse under two different names; the first harel, that is, "the mountain of God," being so called, as some rabbins think, in opposition to the idolatrous altar built upon high places; the second ariel, that is, "the lion of God," having that name given to it, because it devoured and consumed the sacrifices offered upon it (see Isa. xxix. 1).

From the altar and upward shall be four horns.] To be added at each corner, as was Moses's altar, Exod. xxvii. 2. These were squares of a cubit on each side, and hollow in the middle; and into these cavities some of the blood of the sacrifices was put (see ver. 20). They arose from the uppermost bench, where the priest stood to officiate.

Ver. 16.] The upper part of it shall be an exact square, reckoning from the second settle, which is properly called the altar, and distinguished from the bottom or foundation (see ver. 15).

Ver. 17. The settle shall be fourteen cubits long and fourteen broad.] This is to be understood of the lower settle, which was two cubits wider than the upper part of the altar, as appears by the description already given.

Half a cubit;] Or "a span," as it is expressed, ver. 13.

The bottom thereof shall be a cubit about;] A cubit wider than the lower settle (see ver. 13).

His stairs shall look toward the east.] God forbade his priests to go up by steps to his altar, Exod. xx. 26, which is usually expounded, that he would not have his altar set upon a great ascent, in imitation of the heathen high places; yet Solomon's altar was ten cubits high (2 Chron. iv. 1), which necessarily required some ascent for the priests to go, that they might officiate on the top of it: and in this place there is express mention of stairs to go up to the altar here described, being of the same height with Solomon's. The Jews tell us, that since the law prohibited stairs or steps, the ascent to the altar was by a gentle rising, which they call kibbesh, of thirty-two cubits in length, and sixteen in breadth: the landing-place being upon the upper bench or walk, next the hearth or top; of which mention hath been already made in the notes upon ver. 16. See Dr. Lightfoot in the forecited place, and Dr. Prideaux's Connex. of Scrip. His. par. i. where there is a draught of the altar, and the ascent to it, which very much helps to explain the description here given of it.

This ascent is directed to be placed at the east side of the altar, that they, who went up, should look towards the west, and upon the temple, and should turn their backs to the rising sun, in opposition to the rites of those idolaters who worshipped the rising sun (see note upon viii. 16).

Ver. 18. To sprinkle blood] See Lev. i. 5, iii. 8.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt give to the priests the Levites] See notes on xl. 45, xlv. 15.

A young bullock for a sin-offering.] To consecrate the new altar therewith, and the persons who were to offer sacrifice upon it (compare xlv. 18, 19, Exod. xxix. 10, 12, and ver. 36).

Ver. 20. Four corners of the settle,] The word settle may signify both the settles, as the singular number elsewhere stands for the plural (see note upon xli. 9).

Ver. 21. He shall burn it] Or rather, "It shall be burnt," as the LXX. rightly express the sense; the verb transitive being often used for the impersonal (see the note upon Isa. xlv. 18).

In the appointed place] In some place appointed for that purpose, within the precincts of the holy mountain. The temple itself is called the inner house, xli. 15, xlii. 15, to distinguish it from the outer courts and precincts thereof. The body of the bullock, whose blood was to sanctify the altar, was to be "burnt without the camp," by the order of the law, Exod. xxix. 14.

This was the first day's sacrifice; the ceremony of consecration being to last seven days (see ver. 26).

Ver. 22.] This is over and above the sacrifices of consecration, prescribed Exod. xxix. 1. Some other rites are prescribed in the following ordinances, that differ a little from those ordained by Moses (see note upon xlv. 4).

Ver. 23. A ram out of the flock] Called the "ram of consecration," Exod. xxix. 31, Lev. viii. 22. These sacrifices were to be repeated every one of the seven days of the consecration (see ver. 25).

Ver. 24. The priest shall cast salt upon them,] Every sacrifice was to be salted with salt (Lev. ii. 13).

and the priests shall cast salt upon them, and they shall offer them up for a burnt-offering unto the Lord.

25 Seven days shalt thou prepare every day a goat for a sin-offering: they shall also prepare a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock, without blemish.

Ver. 26. Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it;] Seven days were appointed for the performing the ceremonies of purifying the altar, and consecrating the priests (see Exod. xxix. 35, Lev. viii. 34).

They shall consecrate themselves.] The expression in the Hebrew is, "They shall fill their hands;"

26 Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall consecrate themselves.

27 And when these days are expired, it shall be, that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt-offerings upon the altar, and your peace-offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord God.

the phrase being taken from that ceremony used in consecrating a priest, of filling his hands with part of the sacrifice then offered (see Exod. xxix. 24).

Ver. 27. The eighth day,] See Lev. ix. 1.

Your peace-offerings;] The margin reads "thank-offerings," because they were offerings of thanksgivings for mercies received.

CHAPTER XLIV.

1 THEN he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary which looketh toward the east; and it was shut.

2 Then said the Lord unto me; This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the Lord, the God of Israel, hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut.

3 It is for the prince; the prince, he shall sit in it to eat bread before the Lord; he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same.

CHAP. XLIV.

ARGUMENT.—The chapter begins with a description of the glory of God returned into the temple; then follows a reproof of the people for suffering idolatrous priests to profane the temple by ministering there; and ordinances are set down relating to the deportment of God's true priests, and the maintenance due to them.

Ver. 1. He brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary] From the altar to the gate belonging to the court of the priests that leadeth to the outward court of the temple (compare ver. 27, and xlv. 1). All the courts were reckoned holy ground, and called sometimes by the name of the temple (see John viii. 20, Acts xxi. 28).

It was shut.] After that day the glory of the Lord had entered that way (xliii. 4); to signify that the divine presence would never forsake the temple any more.

Ver. 2. This shall be shut, it shall not be opened,] It shall not stand open continually, as it formerly did, but only at certain seasons (see ver. 3, and xlv. 1); and that out of respect to the divine glory, which made its entrance into the temple that way, where it had now taken up its fixed residence (see xliii. 7), not to depart any more by the east gate of the temple, as it formerly did (see note on xliii. 4).

Because the Lord,—hath entered in by it,] That is, the glory of the Lord, as it is expressed xliii. 2, 4. The glory of God is himself, and is often called by the name of the Lord, or the God of Israel (see Exod. xxiv. 10, Isa. vi. 1, 5).

Ver. 3. It is for the prince;] Solomon placed his seat at the entrance into the inner court before the altar of the Lord (2 Chron. vi. 13), and here the prince seems to have had his place in aftertimes, 4 ¶ Then brought he me the way of the north gate before the house: and I looked, and, behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord: and I fell upon my face.

5 And the Lord said unto me, Son of man, mark well, and behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears all that I say unto thee concerning all the ordinances of the house of the Lord, and all the laws thereof; and mark well the entering in of the house, with every going forth of the sanctuary.

6 And thou shalt say to the rebellious, even to whenever he came to worship at the temple (see 2 Chron. xxiii. 13, xxxiv. 31). Not far from which place a seat was placed for the high-priest, as may be gathered from Eli's seat, mentioned 1 Sam. ii. 9, and from whence the high-priest pronounced the blessing after the service was ended (see Eccles. 1. 20, and Lightfoot's Temple Service, ch. 36). Some understand by the prince, the high-priest; which title does very properly belong to the Messias, who is both king and priest, and hath the style of prince given him, xxxiv. 23. But in the parallel place to this (xlv. 2, 3, 8, 9), the word prince is opposed to the people: and other ordinances are there laid down, which cannot be fitly applied to the Messias. For which reason, I conceive the word must be taken here in its usual sense, to denote the chief governors of the Jews, such as were Zerubbabel and Nehemiah after the captivity.

He shall sit in it to eat bread] To eat part of the peace-offerings which are to be provided at his charge (see xlv. 2). Bread stands for all sorts of entertainments (see Gen. xliii. 31); and particularly for a religious feast made of the remainder of a sacrifice (Gen. xxxi. 54).

By the way of the porch] See xlv. 8.

Ver. 4. Then brought he me the way of the north gate] The east gate being shut, ver. 1.

The glory of the Lord filled the house] There was no door into the house on that side, but I could see the brightness of the divine glory shining through the windows (see xliii. 3, 5).

I fell upon my face.] See i. 28.

Ver. 5. Behold with thine eyes,] See xl. 4, xliii. 2. Mark well the entering in of the house,] The word laws is here to be repeated, to this sense, That the prophet should admonish the people of the laws relating to the admitting certain persons into the temple, or the courts of it, and suffer none that are un-the house of Israel. Thus saith the Lord God; O ye house of Israel, let it suffice you of all your abominations, 7 In that ye have brought into my sanctuary strangers, uncircumcised in heart, and uncircumcised in flesh, to be in my sanctuary, to pollute it, even my house, when ye offer my bread, the fat and the blood, and they have broken my covenant because of all your abominations.

8 And ye have not kept the charge of mine holy things: but ye have set keepers of my charge in my sanctuary for yourselves.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; No stranger, uncircumcised in heart, nor uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary, of any stranger that is among the children of Israel.

10 And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols; they shall even bear their iniquity.

qualified to attend upon God's service there (see the following verses).

Ver. 6. Say to the rebellious,—house] See ii. 5.

Let it suffice you of all your abominations.] Let the time past be sufficient for you to have provoked me with your abominations (see xlv. 9, compare 1 Pet. iv. 3). We find the same expression, Numb. xvi. 3, where our translation reads, “ye take too much upon you:” but the phrase may more properly be translated, “Let it suffice you” [to have usurped an authority hitherto].

Ver. 7. In that ye have brought into my sanctuary strangers, &c.] In setting up idols within the precincts of mine own house, and appointing idolatrous priests to officiate there (see xliii. 8).

When ye offer my bread, the fat and the blood.] At the same time that ye offer my sacrifices upon the altar. Or the words may imply, that they suffer heathens to offer at God's altar, expressly against the law, Lev. xxii. 27.

By bread may be understood the meat-offerings made of flour, which accompanied the other sacrifices: although everything offered upon the altar is properly called the “bread of God” (see note upon xxiii. 41). The fat and blood of every sacrifice were peculiarly appropriated to God (see Lev. iii. 16, xvii. 11).

They have broken my covenant] Idolatry was a direct breach of that covenant God had entered into with the Jews, that he “would be their God, and they his people,” Lev. xxvii. 12. Upon which account it is so often represented under the metaphor of adultery and fornication: being a breach of that covenant which is usually described under the notion of a marriage-contract (see the note upon xvi. 8).

Ver. 8.] You have not observed the laws I gave you, for taking care of the things relating to my house and worship; but have appointed such persons to officiate there, as best suited with your own inclinations (see the note upon xl. 45).

Ver. 9. No stranger,—shall enter into my sanctuary.] To offer any sacrifice or oblation there (see ver. 7); nor be suffered to go beyond the precincts appointed for proselytes.

Ver. 10. The Levites that are gone away far from me.] The same who are called the priests the Levites, ver. 15, i. e. the sons of Levi, who are priests. Many of these departed from attending upon God's service, and fell into idolatry; first, in the general apostasy of the ten tribes. afterward under Ahaz, 11 Yet they shall be ministers in my sanctuary, having charge at the gates of the house, and ministering to the house: they shall slay the burnt-offering and the sacrifice for the people, and they shall stand before them to minister unto them.

12 Because they ministered unto them before their idols, and caused the house of Israel to fall into iniquity; therefore have I lifted up mine hand against them, saith the Lord God, and they shall bear their iniquity.

13 And they shall not come near unto me, to do the office of a priest unto me, nor to come near to any of my holy things, in the most holy place: but they shall bear their shame, and their abominations which they have committed.

14 But I will make them keepers of the charge of the house, for all the service thereof, and for all that shall be done therein.

15 ¶ But the priests the Levites, the sons of and other wicked kings of Judah (see 2 Kings xxiii. 9): these shall bear the punishment due to their iniquity, and shall be degraded from attending upon the higher offices belonging to the priesthood, and thrust down to meaner services (see ver. 13). It is not likely that any of those priests who had been defiled with idolatry in former times, lived to see the restoration of God's worship in the temple after the captivity: so the punishment here allotted to them, either relates to their posterity, God having particularly threatened to punish the sin of idolatry to “the third and fourth generation,” Exod. xx. 5; or else the ordinances here prescribed are standing rules, that were to be perpetually observed, whenever this case should happen.

The discipline of the Christian church was still more severe: for whoever of the clergy had committed idolatry in the times of persecution, was forever deprived of his function; and even for lesser crimes they were degraded from a higher to a lower station; as the learned Mr. Bingham, in his Eccl. Antiq. book xvii. ch. 3, hath showed in several instances.

Ver. 11. Having charge at the gates of the house.] Performing the office of porters, an inferior station belonging to the Levites (see 1 Chron. xxvi. 1).

They shall slay the burnt-offering] Kill the beasts appointed for the daily burnt-offering and other sacrifices, and flay their skins, which was an office usually performed by the Levites (see 2 Chron. xxxv. 11).

They shall stand before them] They shall be servants to the people in undergoing the most servile offices belonging to the temple; whereas it is the proper office of a priest to be God's immediate minister (see Deut. x. 8, xvii. 12).

Ver. 12. Caused the house of Israel to fall into iniquity;] They led the people into idolatry, by giving them an ill example.

Have I lifted up mine hand against them,] I have solemnly sworn that I will punish them for this their sin (see note on xx. 6).

Ver. 13.] They shall not offer sacrifice at my altar, or come into the temple, to perform any part of the priestly office there. So Josiah discharged the priests that had been guilty of idolatry, from attending upon the service of the altar (2 Kings xxiii. 9).

Ver. 14.] They shall perform the servile offices belonging to my temple and worship (see 1 Chron. xxiii. 28, 32).

Ver. 15. But the priests the Levites.] The sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my sanctuary when the children of Israel went astray from me, they shall come near to me to minister unto me, and they shall stand before me to offer unto me the fat and the blood, saith the Lord God :

16 They shall enter into my sanctuary, and they shall come near to my table, to minister unto me, and they shall keep my charge.

17 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that when they enter in at the gates of the inner court, they shall be clothed with linen garments ; and no wool shall come upon them, whiles they minister in the gates of the inner court, and within.

18 They shall have linen bounnets upon their heads, and shall have linen breeches upon their loins ; they shall not gird themselves with any thing that causeth sweat.

19 And when they go forth into the utter court, even into the utter court to the people, they shall put off their garments wherein they ministered, and lay them in the holy chambers, and they shall put on other garments ; and they shall not sanctify the people with their garments.

20 Neither shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long ; they shall only poll their heads.

21 Neither shall any priest drink wine, when they enter into the inner court.

22 Neither shall they take for their wives a widow, nor her that is put away : but they shall take maidens of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow that had a priest before.

23 And they shall teach my people the difference between the holy and profane, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean.

24 And in controversy they shall stand in judgment ; and they shall judge it according to Levi, who are priests (compare Deut. xvii. 9, xviii. 1, xxiv. 8).

The sons of Zadok,] See xl. 46, xliii. 19.

To offer unto me the fat and the blood,] See ver. 7.

Ver. 16.] The foregoing verse expresses their ministering at the altar, and offering sacrifice there : this denotes attendance upon God's service within the temple : the principal part of which was burning incense there upon the altar placed in the temple for that purpose : which mystically implied the offering up the prayers of the people to God. This altar of incense is called here the table of the Lord, as it is xli. 22 (see the note there).

Ver. 17. At the gates of the inner court,] The court just before the temple, where the altar of burnt-offering stood, ver. 27 of this chapter.

They shall be clothed with linen garments ;] The ephod, breeches, mitre, and girdle, which was the habit of the ordinary priests, were all of fine linen, contrived for "glory and beauty" (Exod. xxix. 40), fine linen being the habit of persons of the greatest quality (see note upon xxvii. 7).

And within.] Or, "in the house," or temple itself, as Noldius translates the word bayetha, n. 829.

Ver. 18. With any thing that causeth sweat,] With a woollen girdle, which may make them sweat, during their laborious services about the altar, and make their garments smell offensively. But the Chaldee paraphrase renders it thus : "They shall not be girt about their loins, but be girt upon (or about) their heart ; i. e. they shall not wear girdles about their middle, or under their arm-pits, either of which may cause them to sweat, but shall wear them about their breasts. So St. John describes our Lord appearing in the habit of a high-priest, and "girt about the paps with a golden girdle," Rev. i. 13.

Ver. 19. When they go forth] See note on xlii. 14. They shall not sanctify the people with their garments,] By the rules of the law, things immediately dedicated to God's service did convey some degree of holiness to common things that touched them ; so the altar "sanctified the gift" that was laid upon it (see Lev. vi. 27, Matt. xxiii. 13). Thus some sort of holiness might be derived to the garments of the people by touching those of a priest : which God would have prevented, to keep up an exact difference between the holy and profane (ver. 23).

Ver. 20. Neither shall they shave their heads,] This prescription is implied in those words of the law, Lev. xxi. 5, especially according to the translation of the Septuagint, who render the sentence,

"Thou shalt not shave thyself with baldness [to make baldness] upon thy head for the dead." They, indeed, understand it as an expression of mourning for the dead, which agrees with the sense of the parallel texts, Lev. xix. 27, 28, Deut. xiv. 1. But the words in the original contain a general prohibition, and consequently include the times of mourning as well as other seasons. St. Jerome upon the place does with great probability suppose, that the Jewish priests were forbid to shave their heads, thereby to distinguish them from several of the heathen priests, particularly the Egyptian priests of Isis and Serapis, who had their heads shaved and uncovered ; which were funeral rites, and therefore proper to be used in the worship of the heathen gods, who were no better than dead men (see Baruch vi. 31). Learned men have observed, that many other Jewish laws were made in opposition to the funeral rites observed in the heathen worship.

Nor suffer their locks to grow long :] It is the opinion of Dr. Spencer (Leg. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 25), and Schindler, that this law is likewise taken out of the same chapter of Leviticus, at the tenth verse ; where our translation renders the original, "He shall not uncover his head." But the Chaldee paraphrase translates the words, "He shall not nourish the hair of his head," which sense several interpreters follow, letting the hair grow long and neglected being a sign of mourning, as well as shaving it close to the head.

Ver. 21.] During the time of their ministration, (see ver. 17). This law is likewise taken from Lev. x. 9, 10. And the reason of the prohibition is there given that they might "put a difference between holy and unholy, between clean and unclean ;" i. e. that they might be able exactly to determine the cases relating to legal uncleanness : many of which had a great deal of niceness in them, by reason of the variety of circumstances (compare ver. 23 of this chapter).

Ver. 22.] This law we find in Lev. xxi. 13, 14. But it is there spoken of the high-priest only, here it is applied to all the priests in general.

Ver. 24. And in controversy they shall stand in judgment ;] The priests were to determine all controversies relating to the law, as well the judicial as the ceremonial part of it, which were brought before them (see Deut. xvii. 8, 9), and the "people were to seek the law at their mouths" (Mal. ii. 7), i. e. to inquire of them what was the purport and my judgments: and they shall keep my laws and my statutes in all mine assemblies; and they shall hallow my sabbaths.

25 And they shall come at no dead person to defile themselves: but for father, or for mother, or for son, or for daughter, for brother, or for sister that hath had no husband they may defile themselves.

26 And after he is cleansed, they shall reckon unto him seven days.

27 And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary, unto the inner court, to minister in the sanctuary, he shall offer his sin-offering, saith the Lord God.

meaning of it, and to stand to their determination. And when the supreme judicial power was placed in the Sanhedrin, the majority of that court consisted chiefly of such as had the chief stations among the priests (see Acts iv. 5, 6).

They shall keep my laws—in all mine assemblies;] As well upon the solemn festivals, and the assemblies proper to them (see Exod. xii. 16), as on the ordinary sabbaths.

They shall hallow my sabbaths.] Whereas the priests before the captivity profaned them, and neglected to perform the divine worship prescribed upon them (see xxii. 26).

Ver. 25. They shall come at no dead person to defile themselves:] Whosoever touched a dead body became legally unclean (Numb. xix. 11), and thereby was unqualified to attend upon God's worship in the temple (see Lev. xxii. 3), upon which account the priests were forbidden to contract such a defilement, unless for their nearest relations (Lev. xxi. 1—3), which prohibition is here renewed.

Ver. 26.] His uncleanness continued for seven days by the forecited law (Numb. xix. 11), and the priests were to reckon to him seven days more, before he was to be admitted into the sanctuary.

Ver. 27.] Unto the inner court,] See ver. 17.

He shall offer his sin-offering,] He shall offer a young bullock for a sin-offering (see Lev. iv. 13).

Ver. 28.] Their ministry in my sanctuary, mentioned in the foregoing verse, and the perquisites thereto belonging, shall be to them instead of lands and cities, of which they shall not have any share, as the other tribes (see Deut. x. 9, Josh. xiii. 14); excepting the portion allotted to them in the beginning of the following chapter.

Ver. 29. They shall eat the meat-offering,] They shall have their share of it, after God's part hath been consumed upon the altar (see Lev. vi. 18, 29, vii. 6).

Every dedicated thing—shall be theirs.] Whosoever men dedicate to God, the use of it shall accrue to the priests: if it be a living creature, it shall be 28 And it shall be unto them for an inheritance: I am their inheritance: and ye shall give them no possession in Israel: I am their possession.

29 They shall eat the meat-offering, and the sin-offering, and the trespass-offering; and every dedicated thing in Israel shall be theirs.

30 And the first of all the first-fruits of all things, and every oblation of all, of every sort of your oblations, shall be the priest's: ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, that he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house.

31 The priest shall not eat of any thing that is dead of itself, or torn, whether it be fowl or beast.

killed, and the priest shall have the benefit of it: if it be a piece of land, it shall belong to the priests (see Lev. xxvii. 27, 28, Numb. xviii. 14).

Ver. 30. The first of all the first-fruits of all things, and every oblation] The words translated "first-fruits" and "oblations," are in the Hebrew biccurim and trumah. The former imports the first ripe, or best of the fruits, while they were growing in the fields (compare Exod. xxiii. 19, with Numb. xviii. 12); the latter denotes an oblation out of the product of the ground, after it was made fit for use: as out of the corn, after it was thrashed and laid in heaps in the floor or granary: and so of oil and wine, after they were pressed and fitted for spending. These oblations are by some authors, particularly by Mr. Selden in his Treatise of Tithes, ch. 2, esteemed to amount to the sixtieth part of the whole produce. Schindler rates the biccurim at the lowest proportion to be the sixtieth part, and computes the trumah at the fiftieth. Dr. Comber supposes the biccurim to amount to a hundredth part, and the trumah as a medium to be the fiftieth (see his Treatise of Tithes, par. i. ch. 2, and notes on xlv. 13).

Ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough,] The first dough that you bake of the new corn every year shall belong to the priests, in the same proportion to be observed here, as in other first-fruits, viz. a sixtieth part (see Numb. xv. 20.)

That he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house.] That the priest, whose office it is to bless the people in God's name (see Numb. vi. 23, Deut. x. 8), may procure a blessing upon thee from him, according to the promise he hath made of blessing those with an extraordinary degree of plenty, who conscientiously pay their tithes and offerings, as grateful acknowledgments to God, the giver of all good things (see 2 Chron. xxxi. 10, Prov. iii. 9, 10, Mal. iii. 10; compare Deut. xxvi. 13—15).

Ver. 31.] A command given to all the Jews, Exod. xxii. 31, and more particularly to the priests, Lev. xxii. 8.

CHAPTER XLV.

1 MOREOVER, when ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye shall offer an oblation unto the LORD, an holy portion of the land: the length shall be the length of five and twenty

CHAP. XLV.

ARGUMENT.—The several portions of land appointed for the sanctuary, the city, and the prince; together with ordinances concerning the provisions for the ordinary and extraordinary sacrifices.

Ver. 1. When ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye shall offer an oblation] The land was divided by lot in the first division of it under Joshua, and is appointed to be divided so in the partition of it, as it here follows (see xlvii. 14, 22): a particular share of which was to be God's portion, as an acknowledg-thousand reeds, and the breadth shall be ten thousand. This shall be holy in all the borders thereof round about.

2 Of this there shall be for the sanctuary five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth, square round about; and fifty cubits round about for the suburbs thereof.

3 And of this measure shalt thou measure the length of five and twenty thousand, and the breadth of ten thousand: and in it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place.

4 The holy portion of the land shall be for the priests, the ministers of the sanctuary, which shall come near to minister unto the Lord: and it shall be a place for their houses, and an holy place for the sanctuary.

ment of his sovereign dominion (see Lev. xxv. 23); it is therefore here called trumah, or oblation; which word properly signifies the offering made to God out of the first-fruits, and other increase of the ground (see xlv. 30, Numb. xviii. 24, &c.); because this was a sort of first-fruits of the land, or soil itself (xlviii. 14).

The length shall be—five and twenty thousand reeds, and the breadth shall be ten thousand.] The Hebrew doth not express either reeds or cubits: our translation supplies the word reeds, but many interpreters expound the place of cubits, which sense they think is plainly determined by ver. 3, where it is said, “Of this measure (viz. the cubit measure mentioned ver. 2), shalt thou measure the length of five and twenty thousand,” &c. According to this measure, the portion here set apart, will be almost seven miles square, whereas if we measure by reeds it will arise to six times as much, and can only be understood in a mystical sense.

Ver 2. Five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth.] If we understand these dimensions of cubits, it exactly agrees with the opinion of the Jews, that the temple stood in an area of five hundred cubits square (see Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple, ch. 2). A square figure is the emblem of solidity (see note on xlii. 20).

Fifty cubits round about for the suburbs.] This likewise bears a suitable proportion to the content of a square of five hundred cubits.

Ver. 3. Of this measure.] See note upon ver. 1.

In it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place.] Both the outward sanctuary and the inward oracle, or holiest of all, together with the courts adjoining, shall be placed in the centre or middle of it (see xlviii. 10).

Ver. 4. It shall be a place for their houses.] The priests were divided into four-and-twenty courses (1 Chron. xxiv.), who performed the public worship by turns; so the houses were for them to live in, who were not in their course of waiting.

An holy place for the sanctuary.] See xlviii. 10.

Ver. 5. And the five and twenty thousand of length.] The French translation renders the sense plainer thus, “There shall be other five-and-twenty thousand,” &c. (see xlviii. 13). This appears to be the true sense of the place, because else there will be wanting ten thousand in breadth to make an exact square of twenty-five thousand (see the following verse). The Levites, being very numerous (they were reckoned thirty-eight thousand in David’s time, see 1 Chron. xxiii. 3), had as large a piece of ground allotted to them as belonged to the temple, and the whole priestly order. The word other is, upon a like occasion, supplied by our interpreters, xlviii. 8.

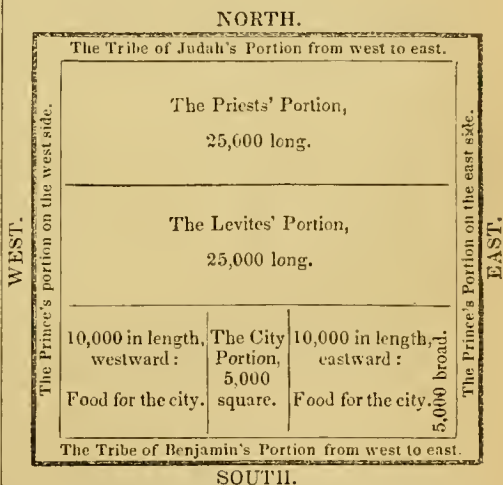

5 And the five and twenty thousand of length, and the ten thousand of breadth, shall also the Levites, the ministers of the house, have for themselves, for a possession for twenty chambers.

6 ¶ And ye shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad, and five and twenty thousand long, over against the oblation of the holy portion: it shall be for the whole house of Israel.

7 ¶ And a portion shall be for the prince on the one side and on the other side of the oblation of the holy portion, and of the possession of the city, before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the possession of the city, from the west side westward, and from the east side eastward:

For twenty chambers.] Most commentators understand this of several rows of chambers, or ranges of buildings. The LXX. read, Πόλεις κατοικίαν, “cities to inhabit:” such cities as were allotted to them by Moses, Numb. xxxv. 2. The copies of the Septuagint followed probably read, Narim lashebetki, instead of the present reading, Nesharim leshebethi, 5 and 5 being easily put one for another. [These twenty chambers with apartments and storehouses, were for the use of the Levites. See 1 Chron. ix. 26, 33, 2 Chron. xxxi. 11, 12, Neh. x. 38, 39.]

Ver. 6. Ye shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad, and five-and-twenty thousand long, over against (or, by the side of; see xlviii. 15) the oblation of the holy portion:] Thus must run parallel in length with the holy portion, though but half its breadth: by which means these three portions made an exact square (see xlviii. 20), as you may see in the following draught.

It shall be for the whole house of Israel.] The capital city, to which all the tribes shall resort upon the solemn festivals, and shall have twelve gates, according to the number of the tribes of Israel (xlviii. 31).

Ver. 7. A portion shall be for the prince on the one side, &c.] One half of the prince's portion was to lie on the west side of the three portions laid out for the priests and sanctuary, the Levites and the city; and the other half lay on the east of it, and it lay parallel to them in breadth, from north to south.

The length shall be over against one of the portions, and the length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border.

8 In the land shall be his possession in Israel: and my princes shall no more oppress my people; and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel according to their tribes.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel: remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice, take away your exactions from my people, saith the Lord God.

10 Ye shall have just balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath.

11 The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure, that the bath may contain the tenth part from the west border unto the east] I think the words may be translated more plainly thus: "And the length shall be answerable to every one of these portions, both on the west border and the east;" i. e. it shall run parallel with them, both on the east and west side. The word leummah, translated over against, signifies likewise parallel, or answerable, as it hath been observed upon xl. 18. The word echad, one, signifies each one or every one, and is understood so in this text by Noldius, p. 785, and the phrase, "from the west border to the east," is equivalent to that expression which often occurs in the sacred text, "from small to great," which is very properly rendered, "both small and great."

Ver. 8. In the land shall be his possession in Israel] Or, "this shall be his possession of land in Israel: for the particle la, in laaretz, is sometimes the note of the genitive case; particularly the eighteenth and nineteenth verses of this chapter. Or, "As for land, this shall be his possession in Israel."

My princes shall no more oppress my people] As they formerly did: for which they are severely reprov'd (see xix. 6, 7, xxi. 27, Jer. xxii. 17).

Ver. 9. Let it suffice you] This is a reproof of the oppressions of the former kings, and their chief officers (see note upon xlv. 6).

O princes of Israel] This is to be understood of such princes as the Jews afterward had of the Assmonean race; for there were no more princes to reign of the tribe of Judah till Christ came (see xxi. 27).

Ver. 10.] Ye shall take care that there be no deceit in private trade: ye shall provide just measures both for buying and selling, both dry things and liquid (see the following verse).

Ver. 11. The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure] The ephah was the measure of dry things, as the bath was of liquid: the homer was about ten bushels, which amounts to about eighty gallons in liquid things.

The ephah the tenth part of an homer] We must distinguish the word homer or chomer, writ with a cheth in the Hebrew, and omer, writ with an ain. The ephah is said here to be the tenth part of a homer, whereas the "omer is but the tenth part of an ephah," Exod. xvi. 36.

Ver. 12. The shekel shall be twenty gerahs] This is made the standard of the shekel (Exod. xxx. 13), which confutes the common opinion, that the weights of the sanctuary were double to those of common use. Bishop Cumberland computes a gerah to be equivalent to an Attic obolus, consisting of almost eleven grains of silver. The shekel is usually valued at two shillings and sixpence of our money; but the same learned author supposes it to be in value but two shillings and four-pence farthing of our money and a little over (see his treatise of Scripture Weights and Measures, p. 104, &c.).

12 And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs: twenty shekels, five-and-twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.

13 This is the oblation that ye shall offer; the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of wheat, and ye shall give the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of barley:

14 Concerning the ordinance of oil, the bath of oil, ye shall offer the tenth part of a bath out of the cor, which is an homer of ten baths; for ten baths are an homer:

15 And one lamb out of the flock, out of two hundred, out of the fat pastures of Israel; for ney and a little over (see his treatise of Scripture Weights and Measures, p. 104, &c.).

Twenty shekels,—shall be your maneh.] Maneh is the same with the Greek μνα and the Latin mina, being both derived from it. A maneh, or mina, consists of sixty shekels, i. e. thirty ounces of silver (see ibid. p. 122); which, reckoning every shekel at two shillings and sixpence value, amounts to seven pounds ten shillings. The dividing the maneh into twenty, twenty-five, and fifteen shekels, supposes there were coins of these several values, which taken altogether, are to be of the same weight with the mina.

Ver. 13. This is the oblation that ye shall offer] The Hebrew word, translated oblation is trumah: which is always distinguished from the biccurim, or first-fruits, and signifies the portion belonging to the Levites out of the fruits of the earth when they were gathered in (see xlv. 30). For which reason, St. Jerome, upon the place, supposes the following words to express the proportion the people ought to pay the Levites out of the increase of their ground; which, by their rabbies, was determined to amount to at least a sixtieth part; in which determination they probably followed the rule laid down in this verse (compare ver. 11). This sense is likewise favoured by the Chaldee paraphrase: after which separation, a tenth part was to be paid out of the remainder. The portions allotted to the priests and Levites were not intended only for their own maintenance, but likewise to make a constant provision for those sacrifices, both ordinary and extraordinary, which were appointed by the law (see Mal. iii. 10).

Ver. 14. Concerning the ordinance of oil, a bath of oil] Or, "concerning the ordinance of oil, even the bath of oil." The cor, and the homer, are mentioned as containing the same quantity; so a bath is the tenth part of a cor, as an ephah is the tenth part of a homer; and the tenth part of a bath of oil is the hundredth part of a cor, which amounts to about six pints of our measure, according to Bishop Cumberland, p. 137.

Ver. 15. One lamb out of the flock, out of two hundred] This offering is enjoined, besides setting apart the first-born for the use of the priests and Levites (Numb. xviii. 14), for making provision for the daily burnt-offering (Numb. xxxviii. 3), and for burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, or sacrifices of thanksgiving, that were to be made upon proper occasions (see xlviii. 27).

Out of the fat pastures of Israel] This implies, that these lambs were to be of the best and fattest of their kind (see Mal. i. 8, 14), as all other tithes and things dedicated to God were to be (see Numb. xviii. 12).

a meat-offering, and for a burnt-offering, and for peace-offerings, to make reconciliation for them, saith the Lord God.

16 All the people of the land shall give this oblation for the prince in Israel.

17 And it shall be the prince's part to give burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and drink-offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel: he shall prepare the sin-offering, and the meat-offering, and the burnt-offering, and the peace-offerings, to make reconciliation for the house of Israel.

18 Thus saith the Lord God; In the first month, in the first day of the month, thou shalt take a young bullock without blemish, and cleanse the sanctuary:

19 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering, and put it upon the posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the settle of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court.

For a meat-offering.] These words relate to the thirteenth and fourteenth verses. The meat-offering, which might be more properly translated the bread-offering, being made with fine flour mingled with oil (Lev. ii. 5, 6).

To make reconciliation for them.] This effect is ascribed to the burnt-offerings, as well as to those which are properly sacrificed for sin (see Lev. i. 4).

Ver. 16. For the prince] The marginal reading is, "with the prince," which makes the plain sense; i. e. the prince shall join with the people in making these oblations; whereas those that follow, in the next verse, are to be at the sole charge of the prince.

Ver. 17. In the new moons.] Or, "even in the new moons," as the particle vau often signifies. Meat-offerings and drink-offerings were always joined with burnt-offerings (see Numb. xxviii. 5, 7). The particular sacrifices which the prince was to provide upon the sabbaths, and other festivals, are specified, xlv. 4, 11.

He shall prepare the sin-offering.] i. e. Provide it. Concerning the sin-offering, see xl. 39.

To make reconciliation] See ver. 15.

Ver. 18. Take a young bullock—and cleanse the sanctuary:] The words are directed to the prince, who is commanded, on the first day of the new year (which, according to the ecclesiastical computation, began with the month Nisan, and answers to our tenth of March; see Exod. xii. 2.) to provide a bullock for a burnt-offering, to cleanse the temple from any defilement it may have contracted, by the people's offering their sacrifices, or coming into any of the courts belonging to it, while they were under any legal pollution (see Lev. xvi. 19).

Without blemish.] Whatever was offered to God was to be perfect, without blemish, and the very best in its kind (see note upon ver. 15, and Lev. xxii. 20).

Ver. 19. The priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering.] Of the bullock which was offered for a sin-offering (see xliii. 19). The office of the priest is here distinguished from that of the prince: the prince was to provide the sacrifices, and the priest was to offer them.

20 And so thou shalt do the seventh day of the month for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye reconcile the house.

21 In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten.

22 And upon that day shall the prince prepare for himself and for all the people of the land a bullock for a sin-offering.

23 And seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt-offering to the Lord, seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish daily the seven days; and a kid of the goats daily for a sin-offering.

24 And he shall prepare a meat-offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil for an ephah.

25 In the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, shall he do the like in the feast of the seven days, according to the sin-offering, according to the burnt-offering, and according to the meat-offering, and according to the oil.

Put it upon the posts] Upon the lintels, or the door-posts of the house (see xli. 21).

Upon the four corners] See xliii. 14, 20.

Upon posts of the gate] See xlv. 1.

Ver. 20. For every one that erreth.] There were particular sacrifices appointed for sins of ignorance, whether of private persons, or of the whole congregation (see Lev. iv. 13, 27).

So shall ye reconcile the house.] Cleanse it from any pollution it may have contracted through the ignorance of any of the common people (see ver. 18).

Ver. 22.] See ver. 17.

Ver. 23. Seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt-offering] Moses, in some places, speaks of the feast of unleavened bread, which lasted seven days, as distinct from the day wherein the passover was to be eaten (see Lev. xxiii. 5, 6); which is agreeable to the injunction of this and the foregoing verse; and the words may be easily reconciled with those texts, which include the whole solemnity within the compass of seven days, by supposing the passover to be eaten early in the evening, on the fourteenth day, "between the two evenings," as the Hebrew text hath it, Exod. xii. 6. Immediately after which ceremony was over, they reckoned the fifteenth day to begin; for they reckoned their days from one evening to another (see Lev. xxiii. 32).

Seven bullocks, and seven rams] Seven was a number often used in religious rites: most of the feasts, under the law, continued seven days; and this number of sacrifices seems to be derived from patriarchal institution, because such a custom prevailed where Moses's law was not known (see Numb. xxiii. 1, 2, Job xlii. 8).

A kid of the goats daily for a sin-offering.] This was the sin-offering most commonly prescribed (see Numb. xxviii. 15, 22, 30, xxix. 5, 11, 16, 19, &c.)

Ver. 24. A meat-offering] See ver. 11, 15.

An hin of oil for an ephah.] For each ephah of fine flour. A hin was the sixth part of an ephah or bath; which contains one gallon and two pints, according to Bishop Cumberland, in the forecited place.

Ver. 25. In the seventh month.] When the feast of tabernacles was kept (see Lev. xxiii. 34).

CHAPTER XLVI.

1 Thus saith the Lord God: The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall be shut the six working days; but on the sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened.

2 And the prince shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate without, and shall stand by the post of the gate, and the priests shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate: then he shall go forth; but the gate shall not be shut until the evening.

3 Likewise the people of the land shall worship at the door of this gate before the Lord in the sabbaths and in the new moons.

4 And the burnt-offering that the prince shall offer unto the Lord in the sabbath day shall be six lambs without blemish, and a ram without blemish.

5 And the meat-offering shall be an ephah for a ram, and the meat-offering for the lambs as he shall be able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

6 And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish, and six lambs, and a ram: they shall be without blemish.

7 And he shall prepare a meat-offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs according as his hand shall attain unto, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

8 And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

9 ¶ But when the people of the land shall come before the Lord in the solemn feasts, he that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate; he shall not return by the way of the gate

CHAP. XLVI.

ARGUMENT.—A continuation of the ordinances relating to the worship of the prince and people: and concerning the gifts he shall bestow on his sons and servants. Then follows a description of the courts appointed for boiling and baking any part of the holy oblations.

Ver. 1. The gate of the inner court—shall be shut] See notes upon xlv. 1, 2.

On the sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon] Under the sabbath and new moon, all the other feasts may probably be comprehended (see xlv. 17).

Ver. 2. The prince shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate without.] He shall go through the outer gate of that court, and so pass to the inner gate, where he may see the whole service performed at the altar. Or, “the porch of the gate without” may signify the farthest porch of the gate, with respect to those that are coming towards the temple, which is the same with the innermost, in respect of the temple itself. In this sense the word is taken, xl. 44. The word michuts, or michulsah, signifies both the hither and the farther side, both being relative terms, and applicable to the same place, as persons are going out or coming into the temple. It signifies the hither side, xl. 19, and the farther side, ibid. ver. 44, and in this verse. So the word neber signifies both the farther and hither side of a river (see Noldius, p. 660).

Shall stand by the post of the gate,] i. e. By the entrance of the gate, where there was a seat prepared for him (see the note upon xlv. 3).

Prepare his burnt-offering] Or, “offer his burnt-offering:” for so the verb nasah often signifies, as facio does in Latin.

He shall worship at the threshold of the gate:] By bowing his head, and bowing down his face to the earth, or falling down upon the ground, as the posture of divine worship is elsewhere described (see Gen. xxiv. 26, 52, Exod. xii. 27, 1 Chron. xxix. 20, 2 Chron. xxix. 29, Job. 1, 20).

The gate shall not be shut until the evening.] Because the people were to pay their solemn worship in the same place, as it is prescribed in the following verse.

Ver. 3.] During the continuance of the tabernacle, they that would offer any sacrifice were required to bring it to the “door of the tabernacle of the congregation,” and there “lay their hands upon the head of it” (Lev. i. 3, 4); and under the temple they came to the north or south gate of the inner court, according as the sacrifice was to be slain on the north or south side of the altar, and there presented their sacrifice (see Dr. Lightfoot’s Temple, ch. 34). Here the inner porch of the east gate is assigned for their station, who came to present themselves before the Lord upon the solemn festivals, and they were to come no farther into the inner court.

Ver. 4.] It was the prince’s part to provide sacrifices for the sabbaths and other festivals (see xlv. 17.) This was a new ordinance, whereupon the number of the beasts that were to be offered, and the proportions of the meat and drink-offerings, are different here from those prescribed in the law: as will appear by comparing the fourth, sixth, seventh, and fourteenth verses of this chapter with Numb. xxviii. 9, 11, 12, 15.

Ver. 5. The meat-offering] See xlv. 24.

As he shall be able to give,] The margin reads from the Hebrew, “according to the gift of his hand,” i. e. as much as he shall think sufficient (see the same expression, Deut. xvi. 17).

Ver. 8. He shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate,] See ver. 2. To go in at the eastern gate was the privilege of the prince and the priests only: the people were to enter in by the north or south gates, as it is said in the following verse.

Ver. 9. He that entereth in by—the north gate to worship, shall go out by the way of the south gate;] The words imply the reason why the people were not to come in at the east gate, because there being no passage or thoroughfare out of the temple westward; if they had entered in at the east gate, they must have returned back the same way they came in, which would have been turning their back upon God, and the place of his residence (see the note upon viii. 16). Dr. Spencer mentions this as a rule in the Talmud, that “they who come within the holy mount, should enter in by the way of the right hand, and go out by whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it.

10 And the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth.

11 And in the feasts and in the solemnities the meat-offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

12 Now when the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt-offering or peace-offerings voluntarily unto the LORD, one shall then open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, as he did on the sabbath day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate.

13 Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt-offering unto the LORD of a lamb of the first year without blemish: thou shalt prepare it every morning.

14 And thou shalt prepare a meat-offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat-offering continually by a perpetual ordinance unto the LORD.

15 Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat-offering, and the oil, every morning for a continual burnt-offering.

16 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God: If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, the inheritance thereof shall be his sons'; it shall be their possession by inheritance.

17 But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants, then it shall be his to the year of liberty; after it shall return to the prince: but his inheritance shall be his sons' for them.

18 Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to thrust them out of their possession; but he shall give his sons' inheritance out of his own possession: that my people be not scattered every man from his possession.

19 ¶ After he brought me through the entry, which was at the side of the gate, into the holy chambers of the priests, which looked toward the north: and, behold, there was a place on the two sides westward.

20 Then said he unto me, This is the place where the priests shall boil the trespass-offering and the sin-offering, where they shall bake the meat-offering; that they bear them not out into the utter court, to sanctify the people.

the left:" understanding the right hand of the northern part of the temple, and the left hand of the southern: so he is of opinion that God designed to take away that superstitious distinction between the several gates of the temple, by commanding that every one should go out the opposite way to that by which he came in, whether it were towards the north or south (see lib. iv. De Leg. Hebr. cap. 8).

Ver. 10.] He shall pay the same attendance upon God's worship with the people, since all men are equal in the sight of God.

Ver. 12. When the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt-offering] The foregoing verses gave orders about the sacrifices the prince was enjoined to offer upon solemn days: this gives directions concerning free-will-offerings (concerning which, see Lev. xxii. 18, 21).

One shall then open him the gate] When the service is performed he shall go back the same way (see ver. 8); and the porter shall shut the gate after him, because it may not stand open upon ordinary days (ver. 1).

Ver. 13.] The daily evening sacrifice is generally supposed to be here implied, according to prescription of the law, Numb. xxviii. 3, 4, and both together called by the name of the "daily sacrifice," Dan. viii. 11, 12. The daily oblation seems to have been provided at the joint charge of prince and people (see xlv. 16, 17).

Ver. 14. The sixth part of an ephah] In Numb. xxviii. 5, the proportion required is the "tenth part of an ephah, and the fourth part of a hin of oil."

By a perpetual ordinance] So the law of the passover is called a "perpetual ordinance," Exod. xii. 17, and likewise ordinances about the first-fruits, Lev. xxiii. 14. The Hebrew word olam is used in each of those places: but that does not always denote perpetuity in a strict sense, but only a remarkable period or succession of time; accordingly the Jews themselves divide the duration of the world into three olams, or ages; that before the law, that under the law, and the times of the Messias.

VOL. III.—50

Ver. 17. It shall be his to the year of liberty] So the year of jubilee is called by the name of liberty, Lev. xxv. 10, because it freed both men's persons from the service of their masters, and their estates from any engagements, by which the right of them was transferred from their proper owners.

After it shall return to the prince] Or to his heirs, if he be dead.

But his inheritance shall be his sons' for them] Or, his inheritance shall belong to his sons, it shall be theirs; so as not to be alienated.

Ver. 18. The prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression] As Ahab did, 1 Kings xxi. 16 (compare xlv. 8).

Be not scattered every man from his possession] Lest being turned out of their own, they be forced to wander up and down the country for a livelihood.

Ver. 19. Through the entry] This entry or private passage (see xlii. 9) led to the priests' chambers, which were on the north side of the inner court, and are described, xl. 44, 46.

On the two sides westward] Or, on their sides westward: i. e. there was an enclosure on the west sides of these chambers: if we follow the sense of the English translation, we may suppose a walk or way between these western buildings, which divided them into two rows, or equal parts (see ch. xlii. 4).

Ver. 20. Where the priests shall boil the trespass-offering and the sin-offering] See xlii. 13, xlv. 29. The flesh of the sacrifices which were to be eaten was to be boiled, except the flesh of the passover (see 2 Chron. xxxv. 13). So it is taken notice of as a piece of daintiness, and an over nice palate in the sons of Eli, that they would not have the flesh which came to their share sodden, but roasted (1 Sam. ii. 15).

Where they shall bake the meat-offering] According to the directions given Lev. ii. 4, 5, 7.

That they bear them not out into the utter court] The flesh of those sacrifices, and the remainder of the meat-offering, was accounted most holy (see Lev. vi. 17, 29, vii. 6): and consequently did convey some holiness to those that touched it (see note on xliv. 19).

21 Then he brought me forth into the utter court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court; and, behold, in every corner of the court there was a court.

22 In the four corners of the court there were courts joined of forty cubits long and thirty broad: these four corners were of one measure.

Ver. 21. The utter court.] The court of the people, mentioned in the foregoing verse.

In every corner of the court there was a court.] At every corner where the side walls met in right angles there was another little court.

Ver. 22.] These little courts were in the shape of an oblong square, joined with inner walls to the outside walls of the greater court. The Hebrew word keturoh, translated joined, is rendered in the margin, "made with chimneys;" which sense very well agrees with the description that follows of the uses for which these courts were designed.

23 And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling-places under the rows round about.

24 Then said he unto me, These are the places of them that boil, where the ministers of the house shall boil the sacrifice of the people.

Ver. 23. Round about in them.] On the inside of these courts.

Ver. 24.] As there was a place in the inner court for boiling the trespass and sin-offering (ver. 19, 20), so these boiling-places might be appointed for boiling the peace-offerings, which were esteemed inferior in holiness to those above mentioned (see the note upon xlii. 13), and therefore, perhaps, were dressed by the Levites, or inferior ministers; whereas the former were boiled by the priests in the court properly belonging to them. Although it must be granted, the priests and Levites are often taken promiscuously in this prophecy (see the note upon xl. 45).

CHAPTER XLVII.

I AFTERWARD he brought me again unto the door of the house; and, behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar.

2 Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate by the way that looketh eastward; and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side.

3 And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters; the waters were to the ancles.

4 Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; the waters were to the

CHAP. XLVII.

ARGUMENT.—The vision of the holy waters issuing out of the temple, and the virtue of them: together with a description of the several bounds of the holy land, which is to be indifferently shared between the Israelites and the proselytes that sojourned among them.

Ver. 1. Unto the door of the house.] The door of the temple, which is described, xli. 2.

Waters issued out from under the threshold—eastward.] There was a great quantity of water necessary for the uses of the temple, for washing the bodies of those that officiated, as well as the sacrifices which they offered. This was conveyed in pipes under ground from the fountain Etam, as Dr. Lightfoot observes from the rabbins, and from Aristeas, an eye-witness (see his Temple, ch. 23). These waters gave occasion to the vision here related.

The forefront of the house stood toward the east.] The inward sanctuary being placed toward the west (see note upon viii. 16).

From under from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar.] This is spoken with respect to those that come out of the temple, and direct their faces eastward, for then the south side is on a man's right hand. These waters were conveyed, by the right side of the altar, into a room they call the well-room (see Dr. Lightfoot, in the forecited place.)

Ver. 2. Then brought he me out of [or by] the way of the gate northward.] The east gate being shut (see xlv. 1). The prophet in this vision is led to the north gate of the inner court.

Led me about the way without unto the utter gate]

He led me into the outward court, and so on till he came to the outmost north wall that encompassed the whole mountain of the Lord's house (see xlii. 20).

By the way that looketh eastward.] When the prophet was come quite through all the courts, and is on the outside of the outermost, he is directed to come from the north gate towards the east gate.

There ran out waters on the right side.] On the south side (see ver. 1). These were the spare waters not used in the service of the temple, which were conveyed away by the east part of the mountain, and by degrees increased its stream till it became a river, and fell at last into the Dead sea (see ver. 8, 10, and compare Joel iii. 18).

Ver. 3.] The angel described with a line in his hand (xl. 3), went on directly from the east gate before the holy mountain.

Ibid. and ver. 4, 5.] The gradual rise of the waters represented in this vision, denotes the large effusion of the Spirit, which was very remarkable at the first publication of the gospel, and its wonderful increase from small beginnings; and will be so again, when God shall "pour the spirit of grace" upon the Jews, in order to their conversion (Zech. xii. 10, see the note upon Isa. liv. 13). The supplies of grace are often represented in the holy writers under the metaphor of a river, and streams watering the dry and thirsty earth, both cleansing and making fruitful the ground where they pass. The metaphor is probably taken from the river that watered paradise (see Rev. xxii. 1, and compare Isa. xlv. 3, Zech. xiii. 1, xiv. 8, and see the notes upon Isa. xxx. 25).

Ver. 6. Son of man, hast thou seen this?] Hast thou considered or taken notice of this vision now showed unto thee (compare xl. 4)? To see, often signifies knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters were to the loins.

5 Afterward he measured a thousand; and it was a river that I could not pass over: for the waters were risen, waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over.

6 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen this? Then he brought me, and caused me to return to the brink of the river.

7 Now when I had returned, behold, at the bank of the river were very many trees on the one side and on the other.

8 Then said he unto me, These waters issue out toward the east country, and go down into the desert, and go into the sea: which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed.

9 And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed; and every thing shall live whither the river cometh.

10 And it shall come to pass, that the fishers shall stand upon it from En-gedi even unto Englain; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many.

11 But the miry places thereof and the marshes thereof shall not be healed; they shall be given to salt.

12 And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary: and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine.

13 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; This shall be to take notice of what we see; on the contrary, they are said to "have eyes, and see not," who do not observe what is placed before their eyes.

Caused me to return to the brink of the river,] He made me go along by the river side.

Ver. 7.] The words allude to the trees planted in paradise, and designed for man's food in the state of innocence, and especially to the tree of life which grew there (see ver. 12, and compare Rev. xxii. 2).
